[8] The ṢSS says that this place is 'above the Cavity of Brahmā'. As this is a common way of referring to the End of the Twelve, I take this to be the location. Śrīśaila, for example, which is inwardly located in the End of the Twelve, is also said to be 'above the Cavity of Brahmā' (brahmarandhrasya ūrdhve tu śrīśailaṁ yatra parvatam [k kh: -te] || ṢSS 19/63cd).
[9] ŚM (3/16b) reads: Mahādhvaja.
[10] KMT (2/44c) and ŚM (3/16c) read: Ekavīra.

Guardians[1]	Locations
1. Caturbhuja	little finger	right hand
2. Gaṇādhyakṣa	ring finger	right hand
3. Gajavaktra	middle finger	right hand
4. Mahotkaṭa	forefinger	right hand
5. Airāvatya[2]	thumb	right hand
6. Vināyaka[3]	thumb	left hand

I. Jālandhara

The inhabitants of Jālandhara

The venerable god Kuṇḍaleśvara has a divine form. He has three eyes and six arms. Divine, he is adorned with a diadem and earrings. Skull, trident and ascetic's staff are on the left side. The weapons in (his) hands on the right are a noose, javelin and thunderbolt.[4]

The goddess (Karālavadanā) has many ornaments and is adorned with many jewels. She wears a garland made of divine jewels that hangs down to the soles of (her) feet. Replete with all (good) characteristics, she is beautiful in all (her) limbs. She has three eyes and four arms. (With one hand she makes) a boon bestowing (gesture), she (also) holds a javelin, noose and jar. The goddess is adorned with many garlands. Replete with all (good) characteristics, she is adorned with every ornament. As is the goddess so are all who reside in (this) sacred seat.[5]

---

[1] These six are called 'servants' or 'devotees' (praticāraka) in KMT 2/45cd, 2/57ab.
[2] KMT (2/45c) and ŚM (3/20c) read: Airāvata.
[3] KMT (2/45c) reads: Vināyakṣa and ŚM (3/20c) MS Kh reads: Mahāvaktra.
[4] divyarūpadharaṁ [kh: -dharo] devaṁ [kh: deva] śrīmān kuṇḍaleśvaram [kh: -śvara] |
trinetraṁ ṣaḍbhujaṁ divyaṁ mukuṭakuṇḍalabhūṣitam [g: makuṭaiḥ] ||
kādyaṁ triśūlakhaṭvāṅgaṁ [kh: -khaṭāṁṅgaṁ; g: khaṭvāṁga] vāmabhāge virājate [g: -jite] |
aṅkuśaṁ śaktivajraṁ ca dakṣiṇe ca [kh g: na] karāyudhāḥ [g: -yudhā] || ŚM 3/49-50.
[5] *nānālaṅkārasaṁpannā [g: -ra * pannā] nānāratnavibhūṣitā [g: nāṁnā- -tāṁ]* |
divyaratnamayī [kh: mayā] mālā [g: mālāṁ] āpādatalalambinī [kh: -lamvitā] ||
sarvalakṣaṇasaṁpūrṇā sarvāvayavasundarī [kh:-sundarāḥ] |
trinetrā caturbhujā devī varadā śaktipālinī [g: -pāṇinī] ||
pāśakambudharā [kh: māsa-] devī nānāsragdāmamaṇḍitā [kh: śragdā-] |
*sarvalakṣaṇasaṁpūrṇā [kh: sarvalakṣa * saṁ-] sarvābharaṇabhūṣitā* ||
yathā devī tathā sarve pīṭham āśṛtya [kh: āśritya; g: āsṛtya] saṁsthitāḥ [kh g: -tā] |
ŚM 3/51-54ab.

Diagram 9. The Yantra of Jālandhara
The sacred seat is Jālandhara. The goddess (there) has authority over the principle of Water. A triangle, in three parts (prakāra), a hexagram, three girdles, a divine (lotus) with twenty-four petals and a beautiful square. It has four doors and is adorned with secondary doors. It is (brilliant) like blue lightning and pulses like waves on water. It illumines the surface of the sky with (its) divine pillars made of diamond.[1]

---

[1] pīṭhaṁ jālandharaṁ devī [kh: devi] āpatattvādhikāriṇī [kh: -kārīṇī] |
trirasraṁ triprakārasthaṁ [kh: triprakāraṁ ca] ṣaḍasraṁ ca trimekhalam ||
caturviṁśadalaṁ [g: -halaṁ] divyaṁ caturasraṁ suśobhanam |
caturdvārasamopetam upadvāropaśobhitam [g: -petaṁ upadvāropi] ||
nīlajīmūtasaṁkāśaṁ jalakallolalālasam [g: lālaśaṁ] |
stambhair vajramayair divyaiḥ [g: vajrastambhamayair divyai] dyotayantaṁ nabhastalam || [kh: line missing] ŚM 3/46-48.

There are ten sons and ten daughters in this seat, thus four petals of the lotus are not accounted for. As in the previous seat, there are two secondary doors with the six guardians stationed at these and the four main ones.

Daughters	Locations (pura)
1. Mālā	heat
2. Śivā	burning
3. Durgā	cooking
4. Pāvanī	lustre
5. Harṣaṇī	digestion
6. Carcikā[1]	'touched and not touched'
7. Suprabhā[2]	splendour
8. Prabhā	brightness
9. Caṇḍā	brilliancy
10. Rugminī[3]	light

Sons	Śaktis	Locations	Letters
1. Śakuni	Cāmuṇḍā	third eye	Ca
2. Sumati[4]	Vajriṇī	mouth	Ba
3. Nanda	Kaṅkaṭā	upper teeth	Ka
4. Gopāla	Kālikā	upper teeth	Kha
5. Pitāmaha	Śivā	lower teeth	Ga
6. Pallava	Ghoraghoṣikā	lower teeth	Gha
7. Meghanirghoṣa[5]	Khirvarā	front teeth	Ṅa
8. Śikhivaktra	Māyā	tongue	I
9. Mahādhvaja	Vāgeśī	voice	A
10. Kālakūṭa	Nārāyaṇi	Suṣumṇā	Ṇa

Guardians[6]	Locations
1. Meghavarṇa[7]	forefinger	left hand
2. Bṛhatkukṣi	middle finger	left hand
3. Ekadaṁṣṭra[8]	ring finger	left hand
4. Gaṇeśvara[1]	little finger	left hand

[1] KMT (2/58c) reads: Jayā; ŚM (3/42c) reads: Barbarā.
[2] ŚM (ibid.) reads: Vasudhā.
[3] ŚM (3/42d): Bhīṣaṇī; MS Kh of the ŚM: Rukmiṇī.
[4] ṢSS reads: Sumata.
[5] ŚM (3/40c) reads: Meghanāda.
[6] These six guardians are Gaṇeśvaras i.e. Gaṇeśas.
[7] ŚM (3/44a) reads: Ekadaṁṣṭra.
[8] ŚM (3/44b) reads: Gaṇeśa.

5. Vighnarāja[2]	little toe	right foot
6. Mahānanda[3]	anāmikā

I. Pūrṇagiri

The inhabitants of Pūrṇagiri

> Caṇḍākṣī was consecrated on the excellent mountain (called), Pūrṇaśaila. (This) great goddess is fierce[4] and is brilliant like millions of lightning flashes. She has four arms, one face and three eyes. She is Śivā who is Parā. She is adorned with jewelled earrings and crown. She holds a javelin and goad in the left (hand) and a jar and maṇḍala in the right. A necklace made of many jewels looks beautiful on her neck. She is beautiful in all (her) limbs and is fully endowed with all (good) characteristics. She has large round breasts and has many ornaments. There are three (beautiful) wrinkles in the middle of (her) body (around the navel). Slightly fat, (her body is) adorned with rows of (beautiful) hairs. She is the one who resides in the sacred seat Pūrṇa. All (those) surrounding (her) are like the goddess.[5]

---

[1] KMT (2/61b) reads: Gaṇeśa and ŚM (ibid.) reads: Bahuvighnarāṭ.
[2] KMT (2/61b) reads: vighnarāṭ and ŚM (3/44c) reads: Mahānāda.
[3] ŚM (ibid.) reads: Ekavīra.
[4] ŚM (3/69c) MS G reads candrarūpā instead of caṇḍarūpā. This is a common scribal error. It is so pervasive that Caṇḍaghaṇṭā, one of the Nine Durgās worshipped in Benares, is generally known as Candragaṇṭā – a name that makes no sense. In this case the variant does make sense and may be acceptable. Her form may well be the Moon (candrarūpā) in consonance with the lunar character of this sacred seat, which is identified with the Full Moon.
[5] abhiṣiktā ca [g: śca] caṇḍākṣī pūrṇaśaile nagottame [g: nayottame] |
caṇḍarūpā [g: caṁdra-] mahādevī vidyutkoṭisamaprabhā ||
caturbhujaikavadanā trinetrā [kh: -netrāṁ] ca śivā parā [kh: parāṁ] | kuṇḍalai [kh g: -lair] ratnasaṁkāśair [kh: -saṁkāsau] makuṭai ratnabhūṣitaiḥ [kh, g: -tai] || śaktyaṅkuśadharā [g: śaktākuśadhvarā] vāme dakṣiṇe [kh: dakṣiṇā-] kambumaṇḍale |
nānāratnakṛtā mālā kaṇṭhasthā ca virājate ||
sarvalakṣaṇasaṁpūrṇā [kh: -śaṁpūrṇā] sarvāvayavasundarī |
nānābharaṇasaṁyuktā pīnavṛttapayodharā [kh: -dharāḥ] ||
trivalī aṅgamadhyasthā [kh g: taraṅga-] romarājīvabhūṣitā |
kiñcillambodarā [g: kiṁcilaṁ-] devī pūrṇapīṭhe vyavasthitā [g: -sthitāḥ] ||
yathā devyā [k: devī] tathā sarve parivṛtya samantataḥ | ŚM 3/69cd-74ab.

Diagram 10. The Yantra of Pūrṇagiri
(This place is) the Full Moon and, divine, it is located in the principle of Fire (tejasa). Round and complete, in the middle of it is a triangle. Above, it is divided in two. A square is outside it. O beloved, one should draw four doors outside the square. The venerable (mahodaya) seat Pūrṇa has two secondary doors.[1]

---

[1] pūrṇacandramayaṁ divyaṁ tejastattve [g: tejatatve] vyavasthitam ||
vṛttākāraṁ [kh: g: -kāra] susaṁpūrṇaṁ tryasraṁ [kh: tisraṁ; g: trisraṁ] vai tasya madhyataḥ |
tadūrdhve [g: tatorddhe] ca dvidhābhinnaṁ tadbāhye [kh: tasya vāhye; g: tasya vāhya] caturasrakam ||
caturasrasya [g: caturasya tu] bāhye [kh: vāhya] tu caturdvāraṁ likhet priye |
upadvāradvayopetaṁ [g: -raṁ; kh g: -dvayopetā] pūrṇapīṭhaṁ [g: -pīṭhe] mahodayam ||
ŚM 3/74cd-76.

Here there are twelve sons and twelve daughters along with six guardians. Presumably, along with the two subsidiary doors, there are four main doors to this Yantra as there are to the others. Clearly, the guardians are at the doors but it is hard to locate the twenty-four sons and daughters.

Daughters	ŚM[1]	Locations (pura)
1. Haṁsāvalī	Sundarī	motion
2. Sutārā	Manmathā	sainyaka (?)
3. Harṣā	Bhīmā	phlegm
4. Vāṇī	Anaṅgā	tears
5. Śubhākṣī[2]	Vāyuvegikā	semen
6. Mahānandā	Rkṣakarṇā	marrow
7. Sunandā	Kulā	fat
8. Koṭarākṣī	Caṇḍā	blood
9. Viśvākṣī[3]	Dīrghāsyā	urine
10. Yaśovatī	Dīrghanāsikā	perspiration
11. Viśālākṣī	Vidyujjihvā	'stream'
12. Sundarī	Karālī	nectar

Sons	ŚM	Śaktis	Locations (siṁhāsana)	Letters
1. Vāli	Rudra	Mohinī }	ear ornaments	U
2. Nanda	Caṇḍa	Prajñā }		Ū
3. Daśagrīva	Mahākāla	Śikhivāhinī	throat	Va
4. Hayagrīva	Jambhaka	Lāmā }	arms	Ḍha
5. Haya	Vikaṭa	Vināyakī }		Ḍa
6. Sugrīva	Utkaṭa	Kapālinyā	skull (left hand)	Ṭa
7. Gopati	Sunanda	Pūrṇimā	hands	Ṭha
8. Bhīṣmaka	Gopati	Jhaṅkarī	fingers (right hand)	Jha
9. Śikhaṇḍin	Bhīma	Kurdanī	fingers (left hand)	Ña
10. Khaṇḍala	Gomukha	Dīpanī	shaft of the trident	Ra
11. Śukra	Nandi	Jayantī	trident	Ja
12. Caṇḍa[4]	Vardhana	Bhīṣaṇī	right shoulder	Bha

[1] ŚM 3/65cd-66. The names of the goddess's daughters, sons and guardians of this sacred seat differ substantially in the ŚM from those in the KMT and the ṢSS and so have been listed separately.
[2] KMT (2/76d) reads: Sulocanā.
[3] KMT (2/77b) reads: Vṛkānanā.
[4] KMT (2/79c) reads: Caṇḍādhipa.

Guardians	ŚM	Locations
1. Āmoda	Heramba	madhyamikā	right foot
2. Pramoda	Heruka	tarjanī	right foot
3. Durmukha[1]	Ghaṇṭa	big toe	right foot
4. Sumukha	Ghaṇṭakarṇa	big toe	left foot
5. Vighnakartṛ[2]		tarjanī	left foot
6. Vighneśa[3]	Śikhidhvaja[4]	madhyamikā	left foot

II. Kāmarūpa

The inhabitants of Kāmarūpa

> The Supreme Goddess (Parameśvarī) (resides) to the north of lake Nīla in the Mahocchūṣma forest and has authority over the sacred seat of Kāma.[5] She is dark blue (śyāmā) like the petal of a blue lotus, her lips are (red like a) bimba fruit and her smile is beautiful. She has one face, three eyes, two arms and her form is passion (kāma). She makes gestures of granting boons and freedom from fear. She is adorned with many anklets, a beautiful diadem and (her) ears are adorned with earrings. A brilliant jewel necklace adorns (her) neck and a necklace of pearls hangs down to the sole of her feet. She has a narrow waist, (fine) hips and large, round breasts. Replete with all (good) characteristics, she smiles. She possesses all the ornaments and all (beautiful) limbs. She bestows all accomplishments and the fruit of all sexual desires (kāma). She is mounted on the seat of the principle of the Wind and she reveals the (nature of the) Wind. All the daughters, sons and guardians are as is the goddess.[6]

---

[1] The order of this and the following guardian has been reversed with respect to the KMT.
[2] KMT (2/81a) reads: Avighna.
[3] KMT (2/81a) reads: Vighnakartā.
[4] There are six guardians in this seat. The ŚM (3/67ab) appears to list only five. Perhaps Śikhi(n) and Dhvaja should be treated as two separate entries.
[5] The goddess Ucchuṣmā becomes Kāmeśvarī according to the KMT. This is her name in the ṢSS. We may assume, therefore, that the Supreme Goddess of this seat, which the ŚM describes in the following passage, is Kāmeśvarī whose 'form is passion'.
[6] nīlasyottaradigbhāge [kh: nīlasyāntaradigbhāge; g: -bhogo] hradasya [g: hṛdayasya] parameśvarī |
mahocchuṣmavanāntasthā [k kh: -chūṣmācanāntasthā] kāmapīṭhādhikāriṇī ||
nīlotpaladalaśyāmā bimboṣṭhī cāruhāsinī |
ekavaktrā trinetrā ca dvibhujā kāmarūpiṇī ||
varadābhayahastā ca nānākeyūramaṇḍitā [g: maṁditā] |

Diagram 11. The Yantra of Kāmarūpa
> The very sacred seat of Kāma is square all around. In the middle is a divine triangle that (shines) like heated gold. Spherical (golākāra) and very powerful, it flows with divine nectar. O beloved, it has four (main) doors and two secondary ones. (It has) a lotus of three petals, a divine one of eight and a lotus of sixteen (petals).[1]

---

mukuṭena [g: mukuṭena] vicitreṇa karṇau kuṇḍalabhūṣitau [g: -bhūṣitaiḥ] ||
ratnamālā sutejāḍhyā kaṇṭhasthā ca virājate |
muktāphalamayī mālā āpādatalalambinī [g: -lāvatā] ||
madhye [g: madhya] kṣāmā nitambāḍhyā [g: -vādyā] pīnavṛttapayodharā [g: -dharāḥ] |
sarvalakṣaṇasaṁpūrṇā [g: -lakṣala-] īṣatprahasitānanā [g: īṣata-] ||
sarvābharaṇasaṁpannā [g: -sapannā] sarvāvayavasaṁyutā |
sarvasiddhipradāyinyā [kh: -yinyaḥ; g: -yitvaṁ] sarvakāmaphalapradā ||
vāyutattvāsanārūḍhā [kh: -tatvasamārūḍhā] vāyubhedaprakāśikā [kh g: -prakāśakā] |
yathā devyā [kh: devī] tathā sarve putrāputrīsapālakāḥ || ŚM 3/91-97.

[1] kāmapīṭhaṁ mahādivyaṁ caturasraṁ samantataḥ |
madhye [g: madhya] śṛṅgāṭakaṁ divyaṁ taptakāñcanasannibham ||
sravantam [kh g: śra-] amṛtaṁ divyaṁ golākāraṁ sutejasam |
caturdvārasamopetam upadvāradvayaṁ priye ||
tridalaṁ [g: triḍalaṁ] paṅkajaṁ divyam aṣṭau ṣoḍaśapaṅkajam | ŚM 3/98-100ab.

The goddess of Kāmarūpa has thirteen sons, thirteen daughters and seven guardians making thirty-three in all. These may correspond to the 4 + 2 doors and 3 + 8 + 16 petals of the lotuses which also make thirty-three. However their distribution is uncertain. In all the three previous seats the guardians are six and so could correspond to the four main and two secondary doors. Here they are seven.

Daughters	Locations (pura)
1. Prabhā	quivering
2. Prasūti	turning around
3. Śāntā[1]	contraction
4. Bhānumatyā[2]	stretching out
5. Śrībalā	cutting off
6. Hāriṇī[3]	jumping
7. Hariṇī[4]	running
8. Śālinī[5]	yawning
9. Kandukī[6]	laughing
10. Muktāvalī	chattering
11. Gautamī	shaking
12. Kauśikī	panting
13. Śukodarī[7]	sighing

Sons	Śaktis	Locations (siṁhāsana)	Letters
1. Bhānu	Vayuvegā	left shoulder	Ya
2. Anantahetu[8]	Pāvanyā	heart	Pa
3. Surāja	Lambikā	belly	Ṣa
4. Sundara	Saṁhārī	navel	KṢa
5. Arjuna[9]	Chagalī	right breast	La
6. Bhīma[10]	Pūtanā	left breast	Cha
7. Droṇaka[11]	Āmoṭī	milk	Ā
8. Bhaṣmaka[12]	Parmātmī	paramātma	Sa
9. Antaka[13]	Ambikā	breath	Ha
10. Ketudhvaja	Icchā	back of the hands	AḤ

[1] KMT (2/94c) reads: Śāntābhā and the ṢSS reads: Śaṁsā.
[2] KMT (2/94d) reads: Bhānuvatyā and ŚM (3/87b) MS Kh reads: Bhānumatī and MS G: Bhānuvatī.
[3] KMT (2/95a) reads: Hārī and the ŚM (3/87c) reads: Hariṇī.
[4] ŚM (ibid.) reads: Hāriṇī.
[5] ṢSS reads: Mālinī.
[6] ŚM (3/87d) reads: Kaṇḍukī.
[7] KMT (2/96a) reads: Śākodarī and the ŚM (3/88a) reads: Koṭarāmukhī.
[8] ŚM (3/85a) reads: Ananta.
[9] KMT (2/97a) reads: Mahāvaktrārjuna and the ŚM (3/85c) reads: Śiva.
[10] ŚM (3/85c) reads: Arjuna.
[11] ŚM (ibid.) reads: Indra.
[12] ŚM (3/85d) reads: Bhīma.
[13] ŚM (ibid.) reads: Droṇaka.

11. Viśālākṣa	Mahākālī	buttocks	Ma
12. Kalyāṇa	Kusumāyudhā	genitals	Śa
13. Caturvaktra	Śukrā	ovarian fluid	AṀ

Guardians	Locations
1. Lampaṭa	anāmikā	left foot
2. Ghaṇṭakarṇa	little toe
3. Sthūladanta	shutting of the eyes
4. Gajānana	opening of the eyes
5. Bṛhatkukṣi	exhaling
6. Sunanda[1]	inhaling
7. Mahotkaṭa[2]	retention of the breath

III. Mātaṅga

Mātaṅga is (the name of this) great seat and Mātaṅgī is the leader of the seat. (Her) body is black (kṛṣṇa) and colour is black. The body (of the seat) is red and form red.[3]

Daughters	Locations (pura)
1. Hārikā[4]	moon
2. Hārī	seeing
3. Gandhārī	smell
4. Vīrā[5]	Cavity of Brahmā
5. Nakhī	heart
6. Jvālinī	crest
7. Sumukhī	navel
8. Piṅgalā[6]	penis
9. Sukeśī[7]	Cavity of Brahmā

---

[1] KMT (2/99b) and the ŚM (3/89c) read: Surānanda.
[2] KMT (2/99b) reads: Baloṭkaṭa.
[3] mātaṅgaṁ ca mahāpīṭhaṁ mātaṅgī pīṭhanāyikā |
kṛṣṇāṅgī kṛṣṇavarṇā [-varṇāṁ] ca raktāṅgāruṇavigraham [kh: raktāṁgdharunavigrahe] || ŚM 3/114. This verse is not found in MS G.
[4] Even though the ŚM (3/112ab) states that there are only nine daughters in this seat, it adds Śākinī before this entry.
[5] ŚM (3/111b) reads: Pecikā.
[6] KMT (2/108d) reads: Piṅgalī and ŚM (3/11d) reads: Piṅgākṣī.
[7] The KMT (ibid.) and ŚM (3/111d) read: Sukeśinī.

Sons	Śaktis	Locations	Letters
1. Śrīphala[1]	Tārā	thighs	Ta
2. Kaśmala	Jñānaśakti	knee	E
3. Caṇḍa	Kriyā	knee	Ai
4. Caṇḍāla	Sāvitrī	shank	Au
5. Ceṭaka	Gāyatrī	shank	O
6. Mātaṅga	Dahanī	right foot	Da
7. Bāhuka[2]	Phetkārī	left foot	Pha
8. Vīra[3]	* * *	* * *	*
9. Avyakta	* * *	* * *	*

Guardians	Locations
1. Heramba[4]	yawning
2. Dhūli[5]	hiccups
3. Piśāca	sneezing
4. Kubja	belching
5. Vāmana	coughing

The ŚM extends the account of the sacred seats found in the second chapter of the KMT by adding a number of additional features. They are listed twice – once along with the description of each seat in chapter three and again separately in a brief summary of the 'pervasion' (vyāpti), that is, contents of the seats in chapter four.[6] The first set of entries in the text are four Yoginīs and four corresponding Siddhas for each of four sacred seats. The next set of entries are the sacred trees and the rest in each of the four sacred seats presented in the following table.

---

[1] ŚM (3/110a) MS G reads: Śrīpāla.
[2] ṢSS reads: Bāhuja.
[3] These last two are identified, somewhat forcedly, in the ṢSS with the Lord of the Seat, Mātaṅga, otherwise called Antyaja. The ṢSS says:

Vīra and the one called Avyakta: these are (respectively) Mātaṅga and Antyaja. The Mother is called Kuṇḍalinī, who is contained in the body of him, namely, the one who is called Mātaṅga here. There is no other Mātaṅga. The one who is examined millions and millions of times, that one is known as Antyaja; like him there is no other in this world. ṢSS 4:5/128-130ab (Schoterman's translation).

[4] ṢSS reads: Heraṁbha.
[5] ŚM (3/112c) reads: Culli.
[6] ŚM 4/97cd-119.

34. The Contents of the Seats according to the Śrīmatottara

Pīṭhas	Oḍḍiyāna	Jālandhara[1]	Pūrṇagiri[2]	Kāmarūpa	Mātaṅga
Yoginīs	Raktā[3] Barbarā Caṇḍā Oḍīśī Maṅgalā	*	Pūrṇā Caṇḍākṣī Kamalā Piṅgalā	Ucchuṣmā Kāmākhyā Kāminī Guhyakālikā	Mātaṅgī Bahurūpā Śavarī[4] Kauśikī
Siddhas	Oḍīśa Mitranātha Kevaleśvara Kaṇṭheśa	*	Cakrīśa Bhūtīśa Caṇḍeśa Pūrṇa	Kāmānanda Kaulīśa Mudreśa Kāmakeśvara	Mātaṅga Saṁvara Vīra Candrānanda
Trees	Kadamba	?	Kaṭāha	Ciñcā	Siddhivaṭa
Cremation grounds	Karavīra	?	Viṣahata	Bhūtala[5]	Bhūtida
Guardians (pālaka)	Kambala	Putrāputrī[6]	Agnijihva	Ḍambara	Vaṭuka
Caves	Kadambā	Kadambarī	Śaṅkhinī	Yakṣiṇī	Kaulinī
Maṭhas	Śaṅkhin	Koṅkaṇa	Kolāhala	Siddha	Nāmaka
Mudrās	Triśikhā	Padminī	Kapālinī	Yoni	Khecarī
Vallīs	Āsurī	Devadārī	Viṣṇukrānta	Vāruṇī	Cakriṇī
Dvārapālikās	Mātaṅgī	Ḍumbarā	Jayantī	Jayantikā	Piṅgalā

[1] Probably due to a scribal error, the contents of this seat are not listed in the short version in chapter four of the ŚM and the Yoginīs and Siddhas of this seat are not listed in the long version in chapter three.
[2] The details relating to this seat and Mātaṅga are only listed in the short version.
[3] There are five Yoginīs, it seems, in this seat, not four as in the others.
[4] MSs Kh read: Savarā.
[5] In the long version (ŚM 4/102c) the cremation ground is called Bhūtarava.
[6] In this seat the guardian (pālaka) is female (pālikā).

Appendix III

The Goddess's Maṇḍala according to Chapter Three of the Kumarikākhaṇḍa

The whole maṇḍala is commonly called 'the Hermitage' or 'the maṇḍala of Gesture' (mudrāśrama, mudrāmaṇḍala)

Mudrāpīṭha is in the centre

The Sides

1) Names of the Triangle: The Island of the Moon, The Western House, the House of the Earth, the Teacher's House, the House of Aghora, the Abode of the Churning Bhairava, the Abode of the Gods, the Stone of the Moon, The Temple of the Maṇḍala of Meru, the One-footed, Yogapīṭha, and the City of the Moon

The Centre

2) Bindu – Full Moon – the Abode of Authority, the Energy of Kramamudrā, Manthānabhairavī, Self, Piṅgala, OṀ, the Jewelled Liṅga, Heart of the Maṇḍala, the Moon, Mudrāpīṭha

3) Half Moon – New Moon

Below the Full and New Moon

4) AIṀ: Bhaga, Kaulinī, the Downward-facing Liṅga, the Divine Liṅga, the Lionness, the Tree

5) Navātman: Aghora

A
TH KṢ
H
K Kubjikā's Multiple Identities,

the Emergence and Lineages

of the

Kubjikā Tantras

Volume Two

of the Introduction

to the

Edition and Translation of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa of the

Manthānabhairavatantra

CONTENTS OF VOLUME TWO OF THE INTRODUCTION

Chapter Five: The Early Development of Kaulism and the Emergence of the Kubjikā Tantras

Chapter Six: The Teachers and Lineages of the Kubjikā Tantras

Tables

Figures

Chapter Four

The Goddess Kubjikā
Names, Forms and Multiple Identities

It is a striking fact - and no less so even though it may take years of study to notice – that Kubjikā appears suddenly, seemingly out of nowhere. She appears with her own complex and extensive Tantra whose teachings are framed in their own ancient tradition. However, although she and her Tantra are new, they are linked to a chain of systems that grew with the same suddenness and intensity in the milieu first of the Bhairava and then the Kaula Tantras. Divine forms have a history. Even so, they belong to an eternal dimension which, whether psychological or ontological, can never be fully confined in time. We can discern processes and transitions a 'previous' and an 'after', in the 'biographies' of divine forms but somehow, for reasons that are not just empirical, it is impossible to pin point exact moments in time when they take place. Kubjikā's origin in mythical history occurred in a particular place at some specific moment. Human history is quite different. Here origins are elusive. Even when a deity appears all of a sudden as Kubjikā does.

Kubjikā's sudden appearance is not unique. The emergence of major divine forms - supreme deities - is one of the features of Tantric cults in general. From the inception, first of the Bhairava Tantras, probably around the beginning of the 7^{th} century, and then Kaula Tantras, Great Goddesses like Kubjikā emerge like milestones marking the course of their development. This phenomenon coincides with the immense proliferation of multitudes of minor forms and their spontaneous ordering into pantheons, great and small. These are defined by their collocation in groups, symmetrically arranged in the maṇḍalas of the deities who are the focus of the cult.

In this respect we may contrast Kubjikā with Kālī. Kālī is a very old goddess. She was very probably a type of village or tribal goddess who combined in herself over time and in various places a number of local goddesses who took possession of her followers, caused and cured disease and led them to battle.[1] Although, Kālī is commonly considered to have been originally a tribal goddess, she is also prefigured in some respects by the Vedic goddesses Nairṛti and Rātri (also called Kālarātri), who personify the inauspicious south-western quarter and the dark starry night, respectively. Kālī continues to be identified with the latter. While Nairṛti was probably a Vedic goddess, Kālarātri was probably not originally so.[1] Kālī was well know by the 1st century AD when Aśvaghosa wrote his Buddhacarita. There she appears as Megha Kālī who tempts the young Siddhārtha sitting under the Bodhi tree striving to attain enlightenment.[2] By the fifth century Kālī already developed such a powerful identity that she assists the Great Goddess of the Devīmāhātmya in her battle against demons. By then she had already assimilated several goddesses and continued to have a long history in the Tantras as well as the Purāṇas.

---

[1] Kāḷi of Kerala and the Tamil region is generally considered by scholars to be derived from the tribal deity Koṭṭvai 'a warrior goddess who delights in the blood of battle' (Caldwell 1999: 21; Hardy 1983: 223). See Caldwell 1999: 23 with reference to Kersenboom-Story 1987: 10, 14 and 16.

While it is clear that Kālī and, indeed, many other goddesses we encounter in the Sanskrit sources, have some connection with tribal or popular folk village religion,[3] it would be a mistake to surmise that these divine forms were simply drawn directly from this non-Sanskritic (i.e. extra scriptural) sphere of Indian religious culture. The links we find are largely common paradigms and typologies, rather than direct inputs. Kubjikā is said to be a tribal Śavarī,[4] an outcaste Cāṇḍālinī, sweeper Mātaṅgī and potter woman.[5] However, this does necessarily mean that Kubjikā was originally a goddesses of sweepers and potters. Such identifications are common to most major Kaula goddesses and others like them. They simply indicate, that their cult is similar in some respects to that of such popular goddesses. However, unlike their village counterparts, these goddesses are worshipped with Sankrit mantras and are a part of a developed cosmic order that can be interiorized and is recognisably analogous to those we find in the Sanskrit sources.

Most significantly, the great Kaula goddesses develop in consonance with each other. Kubjikā is the penultimate link in a chain of Great Goddesses who emerge as leaders (nāyikā) of the pantheons of the Bhairava and Kaula Tantras, beginning with Mālinī and ending with the goddess Tripurāsundarī. But although she emerges in the Kaula, which is the most 'extreme' and intensely 'heterodox Tantric' stream of the Śaiva scriptures, features of a Brahminical identity are revealed by the presence of numerous overt and implicit Vedic typologies in her personality and cult. They are clear signs that some, at least, of those who contributed to Kubjikā's 'descent into the world' were familiar with the Vedas and so must have been Brahmins. Although the Kubjikā Tantras consider the Vedas to be a relatively low order of scripture,[6] as the Śaiva Āgamas do in general, nonetheless, they find several occasions to associate Kubjikā with them. Thus, for example, she is praised in the Bhairavīstotra as Gāyatrī, 'the most ancient' goddess who, as such, is the 'mother of the Vedas'.

---

[1] See Encountering Kālī, p. 171.
[2] Ibid., p. 153.
[3] Carcikā is an example discussed below, p. 245 ff..
[4] See KuKh 6/64-65, note 57.
[5] See below, p. 104 ff..
[6] See below, p. 339-340.

More concretely, we notice several features of the goddess Kubjikā that are strikingly similar to another Vedic goddess, that is, Aditi. The solar goddess Aditi is the epitome of motherhood. She is the great womb into which the entire universe has entered[1] of which she is the mother (viśvajani)[2] and cause (janitra).[3] She prefigures in this way all the Great Goddesses but especially Kubjikā who in a very special way is the Womb of Creation – the Yoni. The triangular Yoni, now a universal symbol of the Great Goddess in India, emerges in the final form in which it appears in the literate tradition as an inner projection of sacred places for the first time as the cardinal characteristic of the goddess Kubjikā.[4] Her Yoni is as sacred and fundamental as is Śiva's Liṅga and is, no less than the Liṅga, the sign of her presence and mark of her identity.

The motherhood of Aditi prefigures that of Kubjikā in several specific details. Aditi holds Agni in her womb as a mother holds her son on her lap.[5] In the same way, Saṁvartā (also called Vāḍavāgni), the cosmic fire that heats and ultimately consumes the universe, burns in the middle of Kubjikā's womb-like maṇḍala. From another point of view, Aditi is said to be the womb (yoni) where Soma, the sacrificial plant identified with the Moon,[6] deposits his germ.[7] In this respect also, Aditi, who contains the fertile lunar seed, prefigures Kubjikā who is represented by the Yoni inseminated with the lunar drop (bindu) of Soma praised by the Vedic poets. Many of the great gods of the Vedic pantheon were born from Aditi. The solar Ādityas, in particular, are her sons. Amongst them we find Mitra[8] - the name Kubjikā gives to Bhairava when he receives initiation and is reborn from her.[9] Thus the sources repeatedly refer to Kubjikā as the 'mother of Mitra' and Bhairava calls her his mother.[10] Another of Aditi's sons, who is especially associated with her, is Varuṇa. He governs the western quarter of the sky and so is also linked to Kubjikā, the goddess of the west.[11] Aditi is invoked as the brilliant (jyotiṣmati) giver of light along with her sons, especially with Mitra and Varuṇa, to come to the mortal world[12] and bestow her eternal light.[13]

---

[1] TaitS 1/7/7/1.
[2] ṚV 7/10/4.
[3] AV 6/120/2.
[4] See intro. vol. 1, p. 242 ff..
[5] TaitS 4/1/5/3.
[6] See, for example, AV 11/6/7; ŚB 1/6/4/5.
[7] MS 3/9/1.
[8] ṚV 7/60/5; 8/47/9; 10/36/3.
[9] See below p. 458 ff. where the myth describes Mitra's birth, quite literally from the goddess.
[10] KuKh 5/83cd-84ab. See chapter three of the translation, note 99.
[11] See KuKh 5/66cd-68ab, note 75.
[12] ṚV 1/136/3.
[13] VS 3/33.

Aditi is especially the goddess of the rising sun and so her quarter is the east. But prayers were offered to her at all three junctures of the day – at dawn, noon and sunset[1] - as they are to Kubjikā and other triadic goddesses. Aditi is linked to Diti her sister. She is mother of the demons and is related to the western sky where the sun sets. The two skies – those of the rising and the setting sun - are united by the wide vision of Mitra and Varuṇa. Mounted on their solar chariot there, in the centre, they behold the opposites, Aditi and Diti[2] – light and impending darkness - together. Similarly, Kubjikā spans the 'previous' (pūrva) or 'eastern' (pūrva) and 'subsequent' (paścima) or 'western' (paścima) traditions.

Another feature Kubjikā shares in common with Aditi is the strange enigma of her self-insemination. The lunar Drop that fertilizes Kubjikā's triangular womb is her own vital energy although, outwardly, she also unites with Bhairava. This is why she is 'bent'.[3] She is like Aditi, the very act of giving birth (prajanana).[4] The wife lies below, the husband remains above, and the union of the two results in a son. The entire process is called Aditi. Thus Kramrisch identifies Aditi with her legs upraised (uttānapāda), engaged in sexual union, with Lajjā Gaurī. This is the popular name of a goddess sculpted in a recumbent posture with both legs folded at the knees and stretched apart. The 'bud-like' pudenda is prominently exposed and exaggerated as are the breasts. The figure is nude with a blooming lotus in place of the head. In her two hands she holds blooming lotuses or their stalks. She has a large belly, which may suggest pregnancy.

Finally, we note that Aditi is commonly praised in the Veda for the beauty of her earring (kuṇḍala). This is also a feature of our goddess. The god extols the beauty of the goddess who is adorned with many jewels and the 'fine earrings that play on (her) cheeks'.[5] In Kubjikā's case it is clear that the earrings represent her own coiled condition as Kuṇḍalinī - a name derived from the same adjective from which the word kuṇḍala (lit. 'round') is derived.

Aditi is clearly a solar goddess, whereas Kubjikā is no less clearly lunar although, like Kālī, who is also lunar, she bears many solar characteristics, as well as igneous ones. Nonetheless, the points of contact are quite clear. However, the striking presence of these features of a Vedic goddess in our own should not, of course, be understood to mean that Kubjikā is also one. It is important nonetheless to point out this fact in order to balance the emphasis scholars generally place on the non-Vedic origins of deities like Kubjikā.

---

[1] ṚV 5/69/3.
[2] ṚV 5/62/8.
[3] See intro. vol. 1, p. 70.
[4] ĀA 3/1/6.
[5] KuKh chapter 4, the Mālinīstava, line 114.

Another striking link with the Vedas are the numerous associations we find between Kubjikā and aspects of her cult and Agni, the sacrificial Fire. Both the god and the goddess are identified with Fire and provisions are made to assimilate the three Vedic fires to mantras which allows Vedic Brahmins to maintain their fires as Kubjikā initiates. Although the followers of the Veda are ranked barely one step above the Buddhists and Jains,[1] the Kubjikā Tantras do not want to distance their goddess from the Vedic tradition. A qualified teacher, according to the ŚM,[2] is one who awakens his disciples to the teachings of the Kulāgama. He should also know the Siddhānta and the true import (tattva) of the Vedas. The Kubjikā tradition maintains that the legendary Kaula teachers (yuganātha) were well versed in the Veda.[3] As a Brahmin, Matsyendranātha, the legendary founder of Kaulism,[4] could well have been. Vṛkṣanātha, the First Siddha who brought the Kubjikā cult to Koṅkaṇa is said to have been a Brahmin versed in the four Vedas[5] and initiated many other Vedic Brahmins like himself.[6] The same claim is made for the four Siddhas of the sacred seats. The four Siddhas of the sacred seats each knew one of the Vedas.[7] Not only are the Siddhas Brahmins, the goddess's own Brahminical Vedic identity is highlighted by praising her as descending into the four sacred seats and singing there the four Vedas.[8] These references, however much they may be just idealisations, remind us that many of those who wrote and redacted the Tantras, even the Tantras of schools such as this one, that are as distant from the Vedic ethos as any could be, were also versed, to some degree at least, in the Veda. Indeed, Śaiva ascetics, are not uncommonly praised in inscriptions as learned in both the Śaiva Āgama and the Vedas.

Thus, although the cults, practices, and ethics of the Tantras may be amenable to bi-polar structural analysis, this need not mean that we are dealing with two different or, for that matter, conflicting cultures. Differences, even extremely radical ones, may be found in the same culture. Indeed, it can be easily argued that one of the cardinal features of Hinduism with respect to the major semitic religions is precisely this 'irrational' tolerance of differences within itself. Although individual traditions are usually critical of each other, they not only allow each other to exist, they also find a rationale that allows them to be

---

[1] KuKh 68/109.
[2] ŚM 9/131-4.
[3] KuKh 43/24-5.
[4] See below, p. 321.
[5] YKh (1) 4/280cd-1.
[6] KRU 13/27cd-29, quoted below, p. 489.
[7] KuKh 44/19cd-20.
[8] YKh (1) 15/73-79. See intro. vol. 3, p. 156.

accommodated in some way into their own spirituality, however much at odds their doctrinal views may be.[1] The same is true of praxis as it is of doxis.

However, whatever the texts may say, we must admit that the Vedic connection and other aspects of Kubjikā's cult are more ideal than real. Thus, for example, although Kālī and other Kaula goddesses may have had connections with the outer world prior to their emergence in the Tantras, those that there are in Kubjikā's case certainly post-date them. This fact alerts us that we must view the developments we perceive in our written sources from their own perspective. Most of the Tantras were generated from within the Tantric corpus with very little reference to the outer world, although some connection is often maintained. Even the rich sacred geography of the early Tantras was probably more ideal than real in any specific sense, despite the obvious fact that the sacred sites did exist and had Tantric connections. In this respect, the Tantras are in sharp contrast with the exoteric, public Purāṇas that emerged before the Tantras and developed in parallel with them. These maintained a bridge between the ideal world of the scripture and the 'real' outer world. Indeed, one of their functions is to record the myths that justified and explained the presence of deities in particular places. Another is to register their Māhātmyas. Ostensibly eulogies of sacred places, the Māhātmyas record their sacred geography and the deities who reside there. Conversely, the Tantras of the more esoteric cults, at least, never managed to break away from the interiority of the Word, which made their contact with the outer world distant and vague, although never entirely absent.

Kubjikā is a goddess with immense metaphysical depth, a large varieties of forms, multiple associations with many other divine forms, and an extensive and complex cult. Worshipped in her Tantras along with Bhairava, her consort, she is endowed with all the theological and metaphysical attributes of a Supreme Deity

---

[1] Accommodation does not necessarily mean acceptance, although that is also possible. Gaudīya Vaiṣṇavas, for example, who consider Kṛṣṇa to be superior to Śiva, do not reject Śaivism. They accept that Śiva is a supreme god. He is not 'mortal' like Brahmā or Indra. But they believe that he created false doctrines at the instance of Kṛṣṇa, of whom he is an ardent devotee. He did this in order to mislead sinners who, by ignoring Viṣṇu and Kṛṣṇa, go to hell. Swami Nārāyaṇa Mahārāja of the Bhaktivedānta movement explains (2005: 3):

> Many people had been worshiping the Supreme Lord only to fulfil their selfish purposes, thinking, 'simply by our worship of God, He will be pleased with us and satisfy all our worldly desires'. They worshiped Him only so that He would rapidly arrange for all their needs, not to please him. Lord Kṛṣṇa thought, 'This is very dangerous.' He called Lord Śiva and instructed him, "these false devotees will create great disturbances, so keep them far away from Me. Create a philosophy which teaches, brahma satyaṁ jagad mithyā – the Absolute is true, this world is false. You should preach, "All souls are Śiva; all souls are Brahmā; all are one." . . . So great was Lord Śiva's devotion that even though he was very reluctant to do so and felt great shame he assumed the body of Śamkarācārya and taught Advaita.

and Absolute Being. Kubjikā is also a very secret goddess. Indeed, she is so secret that the extent of her cult was discovered less than forty years ago when manuscripts kept hidden by Newar potentates and initiates in the Kathmandu Valley for centuries, began to be photographed on a large scale. Arguably, Kubjikā has been the best kept secret on the subcontinent and, for that reason, her Newar devotees would say, the most powerful one. Thus, it is not despite her obscurity and isolation from the world, but rather because of it, that Kubjikā is one of the Great Goddesses of Hinduism.

In this chapter we shall try to analyse the genesis of this Great Goddess - how, despite her novelty, she is the result of centuries of development of divine forms in the streams and currents of the Bhairava and Kaula Tantras. We will explore them and observe how Kubjikā incorporates them into her Divine Nature. In this way we will not only learn about her but also about the principles that operate in the theogany of Kaula goddesses like her and, indeed, the one Great Goddess who appears time and again in every single Great Goddess.

In order to do this we shall have to explore numerous goddesses and observe how they relate to each other individually and collectively through their common grounding in the goddess Kubjikā. We observe that the processes of integration and synthesis that operate in the formation of the goddess Kubjikā are also at work in various degrees and in specific modalities in the formation of every Great Goddess and, indeed, Great God. It is because these processes are fundamental features of their theogany that great deities (and also small ones) possess numerous basic common features, even as they maintain their distinct identity. This is how it is with people also. People belong to different races, social groups and have more or less extensive families. Even so, all people are basically similar although no two persons are the same. Just as it is not possible to know one person without understanding how people are in general and, more specifically, to what groups or types that individual may belong, we cannot understand Kubjikā in her complexity without reference to both the individual forms she integrates into her identity, on the one hand, and the basic common archetype of the Great Goddess, on the other.

Every major god and goddess, indeed any great divine being has a range of identities. It is this capacity to be several deities at once both individually and collectively that distinguishes them from the innumerable minor deities and supernatural beings who are confined to their very specific and therefore more tenuous identities. Despite the fundamentally unitary and absolute nature of every Great God or Goddess of Hinduism, each may assume numerous personae. This phenomenon is, as one would expect, particularly accentuated in the case of Tantric deities and those who are worshipped in a Tantric mode.

Kubjikā is formed and develops through two basic processes, one afferent and the other efferent. The former is a process of influx through which the goddess develops by accretion and identification with other goddesses. Although the elements that are brought together in this way are not original, nonetheless their morphology and function in relation to one another creates novelty. The latter is an out-going process, which generates new forms and aspects of the goddess directly. We may analyse the processes at work in the theogany and anatomy of a Great Kaula Goddess exemplified by Kubjikā into the following categories:

1) Basic Identification with the Great Goddess. This fundamental modality certifies Kubjikā's divine status as an absolute, supreme goddess, rather than one goddess amongst many divine beings who attend on a supreme deity. Her status as such is represented in names like Ambā, Bhagavatī, Maheśvarī or simply Parameśvarī and the like.
2) Generic Identification with the Great Kaula Goddess. This modality is broad, as is the previous one, in the sense that it is common to all Kaula goddesses like Kubjikā, but is specific to their Kaula identity. It is apparent when the goddess is called Kaulikī, Bhairavī, Parā, Khecarī and the like.
3) Essential Identification with earlier major Goddesses of which Kubjikā becomes the fundamental form. The foremost amongst these earlier goddesses is Mālinī, the triadic goddess of the Trika Tantras who is herself variously identified with a series of goddess. These include the triad Parā, Parāparā and Parā and Rudraśakti, also called Raudrī or Rudrāṇī. No less essential to her nature is Kubijkā's identification with Kālī, which links her to the Kālīkrama, just as her identification with Mālinī links her to the Trika.
4) Union with the God. Through union with the Bhairava, who is her male counterpart, the goddess assumes the identity of the Goddess who is the original partner of the God. We shall see that Kubjikā's basic form from this point of view is Aghoreśī (also called Aghorā and Aghoreśvarī) who is the consort of Aghora, that is, Svacchandabhairava, particularly in the form of Navātmābhairava.
5) Transformation. In this case, the process of transformation is from the virgin Kālikā into Kubjikā, which is the core of the goddess's myth of origin we have examined in detail in the previous volume. The young, virgin Kālikā is empowered by entering a womb-like Liṅga from which she emerges as the mildly fierce and erotic Kubjikā, who is ready for marriage and union with Bhairava and the transmission of her powerful Command.
6) Assimilation and Incorporation. Goddesses are incorporated directly into Kubjikā's body. These may be major Goddesses, as are those represented by Kubjikā's six faces, and those assimilated into her six limbs (aṅga). The same principle operates with respect to minor forms. These are most commonly exemplified by the Yoginīs and divine beings who embody the letters and syllabic units of mantras of the goddess's sonic form. Examples of the former are the thirty-two Yoginīs who govern the syllables of Kubjikā's Vidyā she embodies. Others of the same type are the Yoginīs and other beings who are related to the mantras and their sonic units that constitute the Kramas that are deposited in the maṇḍala and the worshipper's body to identify them with the goddess.

7) Association. There are goddesses, like Mahantārikā and Tvaritā, who, although identified with Kubjikā, are not an inherently necessary part or aspect of her essential nature. These can be said to be goddesses that have been identified with Kubjikā by assimilation, rather than essential identification.

Now we have outlined the forms of the goddess that develop through the influx of other divine forms, we note briefly those that develop through the reverse, afferent process. These are identifications, permutations and transformations of Kubjikā herself.

1) Early Prototypes. In the earliest stages of Kubjikā's development, she was identified as Khañjinī – the Little Lame Goddess and Laghvikā the Subtle One. These two appear prominently in the earliest Kubjikā Tantra, the Laghvikāmnāya, as names of the goddess but largely fall away in the later literature.[1] Laghvikā virtually disappears. Although Khañjinī does appear, her presence in the later sources seems to be a revival rather than a continuation of her earlier one. This is more apparent in the case of Kulālikā, the young Potter's Daughter. Although the KMT affiliates itself to the tradition (āmnāya) of Kulālikā, Kubjikā is actually never called this in the KMT itself. However, she is represented in this way in later sources.
2) Kubjikā's variant names and forms. While Khañjinī and the others mentioned in the previous entry can be understood to be distinct forms of Kubjikā, this is not the case when she is addressed with various derivative names such as Kukārā, Kujā, Kubjī, Vakrā and others. Even so, these variations also contribute in their own way to the development of Kubjikā's representations.
3) Internally Developed Forms. As the Kubjikā Tantras developed, so did the basic forms of the goddess. These may be major ones, such as Ciñcinī and Saṁvartā. Or they may be minor, such as her characterization as the goddess Koṅkaṇā.

[1] See below, p. 95 ff..

4) Replications. Kubjikā, like all major deities, replicates herself in a variety of aspects, each of which are concretely and totally herself. The most evident example of this phenomenon are her iconic forms associated with the three Transmissions. These are novel although they may be identified with her inherent aspects, which may not be new. Some of them – like Mahantārikā - are goddesses who were originally linked to Kubjikā by association. In this context they are assimilated to her as her direct replicates.

Finally, we notice another important process at work in the development of any Kaula Great Goddess. This has been called Tantric kenotheism.[1] This phenomenon is very common in all Tantric traditions, but is especially evident in relation to female divine forms. It is a kind of democracy based on universal privilege for every single individual. It allows the selection of a deity out of the extending crowd of divine forms and promotes it to higher, even supreme, status. Conversely, as one rises to the fore, others recede. Thus, a deity may be both major and minor, and so embody both universal and specific power. Tantric kenotheism is pluralistic – not just single deities rise and fall in this way, the same principles are applicable to groups of them.

Basic Identification with the Great Goddess

Before we enter into the complex identifications and permutations specific to the goddess Kubjikā we should begin with her most basic and universal identity, which she has in common with the Great Goddess (mahādevī) of Hinduism in general. This identification is evidenced by some of the names with which Kubjikā is addressed. Most of these are Purāṇic, that is, they belong to the common public fund of names for the Great Goddess in general. They reveal Kubjikā's most universal identity as the goddess Śaivites worship in general as Śiva's consort.

The daughter of Himavat betrothed to Bhairava is called Pārvatī in the ŚM. She is rarely, if ever, actually said to be Pārvatī, but she is said to have been Umā, Dakṣa's daughter in a previous incarnation. Thus, here and there, the god addresses the goddess, usually in the vocative, as Umā. Moreover, she is also called Gaurī, which is another common way of calling Pārvatī. Both these names denote particular aspects of the goddess Pārvatī, whereas others, such as Śivā and Śaṁkarī, are generically applied to her.

[1] This is Prof. Sandersons's expression.

Other names are common to deities who are in an intermediate stage between these two types. One is Raudrī or Rudraśakti, which we shall examine latter. Suffice it to say here that the former frequently appears in lists of Yoginīs, even as she maintains an independent and elevated status as Rudra's consort. The same is the case with Bhairavī.

Before we examine the many individual forms that contribute to Kubjikā's identity we begin, by way of introduction, by examining the basic archetype. An archetype is an abstract template on which individual forms are modelled. It is an abstract idea which, although not empirical, is the generic model of particular empirical forms. Thus actualized its existence and nature can be inferred from its empirical representations. The archetype of Deity, which in this case is the Great Goddess, exists in some supra-essential manner in Absolute Being. Periodically, impelled freely by its own intention to do so, the deity 'descends' into empirical representation assuming the form of a Great Goddess or Great God in the world of myth and through that connects with the human world. The earliest substantial theophany of the Great Goddess in India took place with the appearance of Mahiṣāsuramardinī, the Slayer of the (Buffalo) Demon Mahiṣa, who came to be commonly known as Durgā. This took place in the Devīmāhātmya of the Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa[1], which is generally dated around the 5th century CE.

Wrathful forms of the goddess that serve as basic prototypes for the goddesses of the Bhairava and Kaula Tantras are Kālī, Cāmuṇḍā and the angry Durgā – Caṇḍī. Depending on the region, we generally find that one or other is dominant. Thus, for example, Kālī serves this function in Kerala and in the South of India generally, probably from the first centuries CE. Cāmuṇḍā is the prototype in Orissa. Caṇḍī was probably the oldest prototype in Bengal, but was overlaid with Kālī.

The rapid spread of the worship of Caṇḍī throughout the sub-continent from the 5th century onwards was certainly to do with the spiritually elevating message of the Goddess's great power – of how good overcomes evil. In addition her popularity was also aided considerably by the ease with which she could be identified with many local goddesses and so bring them into the Sanskritic fold. The offering of buffaloes to local goddesses is still a common feature of South Indian village religion. Presumably this was also the case in central North India although with the passage of time this practice has much decreased due to the development there of vegetarianism. However, we still find it extensively practiced in Orissa, Nepal and the Himalayan belt in general.

[1] Other important early sources are two famous hymns to Durgā in the Mahābhārata (4/6 and 6/22) and the Āryastava in its suppliment, the Harivaṁśa (3/3). See Banerjea p. 491 and Hazra: Studies in the Upapurāṇas vol. 2, pp. 16-22. This deals with the role of 'non-aryan' – i.e. popular 'folk' - elements in the development of conception of Devī.

Like Kubjikā four or five centuries later, the Great Goddess appears with sudden and tremendous force in the literate tradition. But unlike Kubjikā, she is preceded by representations of a goddess who slays a buffalo demon and has discernable roots in local goddesses, especially one worshipped in the low lying Vindhya mountains close to Varanasi in modern eastern Uttar Pradesh. The figure of the first Great Goddess is paradigmatic in so many respects that reference to her in order to understand the ones that follow is inevitable. Her influence is apparent in many ways in the composite figures of all subsequent Great Goddesses, including Kubjikā. Kubjikā, shares many traits in common with her, but has, in addition, many more. This is largely because Durgā is a Purāṇic goddess who appears in human history before the redaction of the first Tantras whereas Kubjikā is a Kaula goddess who emerges in the Tantras after several centuries of their development. A brief comparative study of the essential features of the goddess Durgā and those common to Kaula goddesses in general and Kubjikā in particular is very instructive. It teaches us much about these goddesses and more about the common and distinctive features of Purāṇic and Tantric cults.

The contrast between the two types is all the more striking as Durgā is often the public, exoteric face of the secret Kaula goddesses.[1] Durgā is not the goddess of a cult to which there is access only by initiation. Even so, she is intimately connected with the esoteric as the public figure of the secret Kaula goddess for whom she acts as her public representative and intermediary in the public domain. Durgā's function in this respect is an extension of her identification with lineage goddesses (kuladevatā), especially of kings and landowners[2] and, by extension, the tutelary goddesses of tribal converts to Brahminical Hinduism.

---

[1] Newar initiates worship their Kaula lineage goddesses (kuladevatā) in secret most extensively during the nine days of the autumn Navarātri festival dedicated to Durgā. In public they read, as Hindus do generally, the Devīmāhātmya and worship Durgā.

[2] In Kerala Kālī functions in the same way. Sharing the generic name 'Bhagavatī' with Durgā, she was the family goddess of the kings and feudal lords of Kerala. Caldwell explains:

> Throughout the medieval period and into the nineteenth century, small traditional kingdoms (or chiefdoms) were centred in the foothills and inland areas where paddy production was most intensive. A feudal social organisation bonded agricultural workers to landowners, who were mostly of the martial Nāyar caste. Temples supported by the wealth of the land were dispersed throughout these political centres. Each royal house was allied by marriage to Brahmin families, whose male members also served as priests in their temples. Bhagavatī became the predominant deity of the martial temple owners, such that each king had his own local installation of the goddess, who was considered to be a tutelary matrilineal ancestor and protectress of his family's personal political interests. Kinship relationships were often imputed to the different Bhagavatīs, perhaps reflecting the actual networks of political alliance through marriage. Propitiation of one's own local Bhagavatī ensured the power and success of the kingdom and its dependents. (Caldwell 1999: 14).

Analogously, the later goddess cults outlined in the scriptural sources, especially those of the Purāṇas, regularly identify the goddess with Durgā. However, this identification is hardly ever made directly in the Bhairavāgamas and Kaula Tantras. This may come as a surprise, especially to those familiar with later Kaula traditions where this identification is basic. The goddess Durgā, commonly also called Caṇḍī or Caṇḍikā (the Little Fierce One) is first and foremost a Purāṇic goddess. Her identification with Kaula goddesses in the later period is thus a measure of the degree in which the Purāṇic perception penetrated the Tantric, reflecting the massive movement in the other direction throughout the development of the Purāṇas, particularly in the later period.

Later Kaula Tantras, that is, those written after the 12th or 13th century, regularly identify the Kaula goddess, Kuleśvarī, with Durgā, who is commonly called in those sources Caṇḍī or Caṇḍikā. However, although the Great Goddess of the DM is present in the early Bhairava and Kaula Tantras, she is not at all prominent and is not, as she was destined to become, the basic form of the Great Kaula Goddess. This is also the situation in the Kubjikā Tantras. Thus Kubjikā is rarely identified with Durgā in the KMT. However, she is addressed as Durgā several times in its expansion, the ŚM, but not at all in the ṢSS.[1] Kubjikā is associated with Durgā in the Mahāmāyāstava of the KMT, where she is identified with Kātyāyanī[2] Ambā, Gandharī (or Gāndhārī)[3] and, especially, as the name suggests, Mahāmāyā. But although this hymn, which we will examine further ahead, systematically and in detail identifies Kubjikā and her retinue with goddesses and aspects normally associated with the Great Goddess of the DM, this link hardly concerns the rest of the KMT. Indeed, the novel names, which appear nowhere else in the KMT, although some are common in the later Kubjikā literature,[4] and the hymn's isolation from the rest of the text, strongly suggest it was not a part of the original redaction of the KMT.

Otherwise, Kubjikā is linked to Durgā in one place in the KMT although this is in an indirect, covert way. That is in the Mālinīstava – the hymn Bhairava intones to evoke the goddess out of the Liṅga. There we find several epithets of [1] Bhairava addresses Kubjikā as Durgā several times in the ŚM, but this is in a general nondescript way. For example ŚM 4/97cd: O Durgā! O wise one! Fair lady! O you who are the mother of the heroes! (sādhu durge varārohe sādhu tvaṁ vīramātare). In ŚM 20/73a, 21/148a, 23/113a, 24/4a, and 25/3c she is addressed in the standard phrase: O Durgā! Wise one! Greatly respected one! (sādhu durge mahābhāgei). Other places where Kubjikā is called Durgā are ŚM 26/3c and 26/139d.

---

[2] KMT 24/134.

[3] KMT 2/108a, 21/31c, 38c var.

[4] For example Nityaklinnā (KMT 24/134c).

the goddess Durgā drawn from the Devīmāhātmya and attributed to Kubjikā.[1] Kaula goddesses are commonly associated indirectly in this way with Durgā.

Another way this identification is indirectly implied is in the characterization of Kaula traditions as those of the lion (siṁhāmnāya).[2] This suggests, amongst other things, that the goddesses of those traditions sit on a lion - a feature which would have been familiar to initiates as a specific characteristic of the goddess Durgā. Indeed, the numerous references to Kubjikā as the goddess who has a lion as a vehicle (siṁhavāhinī) is probably meant to imply this identification. It also serves to indicate that she, like other deities who sit on 'lion seats', is a royal goddess who sits, as kings and queens do, on a 'lion throne'.

In later sources the link is strengthened. Thus in the KRU Kubjikā is portrayed as Durgā in previous incarnations. In the KRU Bhairava tells Kubjikā in the prophetic style of this text of two incarnations. In one of them she kills Mahiṣa and in another the evil king Kaṁsa, both celebrated feats of the goddess Durgā:

> There will be a terrible demon called Mahiṣa who will be the king of the demons. O goddess, you will descend into the world in order to kill him as Durgā and Kātyāyaṇī in a black and brown form. O goddess, (you will be) the means to achieve every goal and you will destroy the suffering of those who bow before you. (This will take place) in the sixth Manvantara of the coming Vārāha Kalpa. O lady of fair vows, in the twenty-eighth of the four Yugas of the seventh (Manvantara) (you will incarnate) in order to kill a certain demon called Kaṁsa. ... In this way, O Mother of Kula, aspects of you will descend into the world with many kinds of tasks to accomplish and with many names.[3]

---

[1] The Mālinīstava is part of chapter four of the KuKh. It is drawn from chapter two of the KMT. The reader is referred to the notes that accompany the translation of this hymn in the first volume of the translation of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa.

[2] See below, p. 335.

[3] mahiṣo [k g: mahiṣā] nāma daityas tu bhaviṣyaty asurādhipaḥ [k g: bhaviṣyati suradviṣaḥ; kh: bhaviṣyati suradvipaḥ] |
vadhārthaṁ tasya taṁ devi avatāraṁ kariṣyati ||
kṛṣṇapiṅgalarūpeṇa durgā kātyāyanīti [kh: -ṇīti] ca |
sarvārthasādhanī devi praṇatārtivināśanī [kh: -sanī; g: -vnāśnī] ||
bhāvivārāhakalpe tu ṣaṣṭhe manvantare gate |
saptame vartamāne tu aṣṭāviṁśe caturyuge [kh: catuyuge] ||
kaṁso [kh: kāṁsā] nāmāsuraḥ kaścid vadhārthaṁ tasya suvrate | [. . .]
evaṁ nānāvidhaiḥ kāyair anekair nāmaparyayaiḥ |
aṁśamātrāvatārās te bhaviṣyanti kulāmbike || KRU 9/28-31ab, 33.

There are substantial differences between Durgā and the Kaula Goddesses, just as there are, as one would expect, many essential common features. Like Durgā, each Great Kaula Goddess is a 'Mother' (Ambā) or, indeed, a young Mother - Ambikā, however much their motherhood may contrast with their other associations. The Kubjikā cult is the 'transmission of the Mother' (avvākrama).[1] Her motherhood is so central to her nature and condition as the 'womb of the universe' (viśvayoni or bhaga) represented by the Triangle in the core of the maṇḍala that she is the Mother even though she remains a pure, young virgin (Kumārikā, Kaumārī and Kanyākumārī). [2] Although she is the Great Goddess of the Great God[3] and is generated from the god in the first moment of creation as the energy of his divine will, she is also his mother.[4]

Durgā and all great Kaula goddesses are 'Bhagavatī'. 'Bhagavatī' is the feminine of the word 'Bhagavat' which is a manner of referring to the Supreme God in general but is most commonly used in the Sanskrit sources with reference to Viṣṇu. Although the goddess is represented as Viṣṇu's Māyā in the DM she is not specifically connected with him. She is called 'Bhagavatī' in a generic sense simply to indicate that she is the Great Goddess (Mahādevī). In North India and Nepal, Bhagavatī is particularly Durgā. Thus, around the Kathmandu Valley, arranged roughly in the four major cardinal directions, there are four 'Bhagavatīs'. These are all the goddess with multiple arms, normally eight, engaged in slaying the buffalo demon.[5] The goddess Durgā worshipped in the temple of Vindhyācala near Varanasi is also Bhagavatī. 'Bhagavatī' may also be a way of referring to other goddesses. In Kerala, for example, Bhagavatī is the regional form of Kālī who is represented by countless village goddesses.[6] Kubjikā is also addressed in this way in her Vidyā.[7]

The Slayer of the Buffalo demon whose origin and exploits are narrated and eulogized in the Devīmāhātmya of the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa is generated from the combined energy (tejas) of the gods. From them she receives her weapons that symbolize her manifold power by virtue of which she can slay with ease demons who oppress them and the world. Kubjikā also embodies the energies of many gods. But that is not all. Kubjikā, like all Kaula goddesses, is also composed of a range of goddesses. Moreover, like the goddess herself, they are often present

---

[1] Concerning the form 'avvā' for 'ambā', see below, p. 278.
[2] Kubjikā is called Kaumārī six times in the KMT. She is never called Kumārī or Kumārikā in the KMT. She is called Kanyākumārī once (KMT 2/34a).
[3] Kubjikā is Maheśānī (KMT 16/16a, 47a), Maheśvarī (16/23c, 17/81d), the Great Goddess who is the consort of the Great God, Maheśāna (ibid. 5/3a), Maheśvara (ibid. 8/68b).
[4] See note to KuKh 5/83cd-84ab.
[5] See Slusser 1982: 308 ffī
[6] See above, n. 37.
[7] See chapters nine and ten of the edition and translation for Kubjikā's Vidyā. For variants and developments of it, see appendix 2, vol. 4 of the translation and edition.

within her in union in some way with their male counterparts. Durgā has no consort, whereas Kaula goddesses invariably have a Bhairava as a partner, although they may be represented alone. This is not infrequently also the case with the goddesses, great and small, they integrate into themselves in accord with the basic Tantric principle that male and female polarities should in some way be found together. Conversely, a great Kaula goddess is a divine form of the energy of the will of the one God, not many gods. She originates from a Bhairava who is, or is destined to become, her consort. He is a supreme absolute being and she, unlike the goddess Durgā, who is resolutely single, abandons her celibate state (brahmacaryā) to unite with him.[1] Yet, like the Great Goddess of the DM, she rises to the status of the supreme deity and even surpasses her male counterpart because by their union it is she who empowers him by restoring herself, his power, to the god. Kubjikā's superior might is established by the god's dependence upon her and her independence from him, not by vanquishing demons the many gods cannot overcome alone. This central feature of her character and theological identity distinguishes Kubjikā as a supreme goddess of a Kaula Tantric tradition. Thus she is largely, but not entirely, unconcerned with battling demons. The goddess Tripurā, who follows after Kubjikā in the chain of the historical development of Kaula goddesses, is similarly free of these concerns. She sits on her throne, the beautiful Queen of the King of the universe – Rājarajeśvarī. Although she is well armed, there is no battle to be won. All has been accomplished. Kālī, on the other hand, who precedes Kubjikā in the chain, is fierce and is engaged in death and destruction and so, inevitably, also war.

Kubjikā's connection with the Purāṇic goddess is not so much with her directly as it is with her attendant host. The goddess of the Purāṇas comes into the world to slay demons. And so her form on occasions needs be fierce and angry. The goddess, who is known to the world and is accessible to all, fights for the world. She mothers by slaying demons. She destroys evil but in so doing graces, transforms and liberates. Her mild form dominates because she is, above all, the mother of the universe. Kubjikā, like her, is also the Mother. Although she inherits the ambiguities of powerful Tantric goddesses, an aspect of her remains untouched by them and she remains the Mother of the Universe.

But even the gentle, loving and chaste Mother who slays Mahiṣa, the buffalo demon, conceals within herself an anger of immense power. Set free by the impertinence of unrepentant evil, full of her energies, it assumes feminine wrathful forms. The energies of the gods emerge out of Durgā as the Seven Mothers whose names they bear and of whom she is the leader. These beings born of the anger of the goddess together with a vast range of other female beings were incorporated either directly or served as the models for the hosts of goddesses who attend on the goddess Kubjikā and other deities of the Bhairava and Kaula Tantras that came to be known as Yoginīs. These Yoginīs, much more than the Great Goddess of the Devīmāhātmya, contributed to the complex character of the goddess Kubjikā and, with their male counterparts, the Bhairavas and Siddhas, populate her extensive pantheon, as they do those of all Kaula goddesses.

[1] See KuKh 3/63-64ab.

These beings are the soldiers in the Kaula goddess's army if, like Durgā, she assumes the role of a goddess of war. The martial powers of the Goddess and the Mothers who fight for her are amplified in the Tantras by the Yoginīs the Mothers generate. Although the Seven Mothers are an important presence and, in the DM, a quintessential part of the Goddess, the Yoginīs, like many other Kaula features that came to be associated with Durgā in the later Tantras and Śākta Purānas, are absent. This is simply because they had not yet developed. Even so, they are well prefigured by the presence of the Mothers, who when Kaulism developed in the ambit of the Bhairava Tantras became the source from which they are generated.

Durgā's ferocity, compared to that of Kālī who issues from her, is attenuated by her beauty and other positive traits that are given greater prominence. Durgā is beautiful but she is not, unlike Kaula goddesses, 'alluring' – except to demons. Moreover, she is fierce only on certain occasions, when she is justifiably angry. Nor is she easily angered and she controls her anger well. Thus she ultimately slays the buffalo demon with detached ease. She does not go into a frenzy as Kālī would. But even so, Durgā is called Caṇḍī 'the Fierce One' and, as a representative model of fierce goddesses, desires animal sacrifice. Indeed, her myth justifies and explains the sacrifice of buffaloes to her as is still done on a lavish scale in Nepal and elsewhere, such as Orissa where the original model has not been reformed. This feature is extended to the offering of a large range of animals and fowl and, notoriously, even to human beings.

Another feature the goddess Durgā has in common with the later Kaula goddess is not found in the DM but soon becomes prominent in the early hymns like the Āryastava. This is her identification as a tribal woman (Śavarī, Pulindī and the like). Just as this aspect of her identity is missing in her first appearance in the DM, there is no reference there to possession by the goddess. In many regions of India Caṇḍī often serves as a common generic identity for the village (and tribal) goddess who takes possession of her chosen devotees. There are also numerous instances of the Great Goddess herself entering people in this way. This takes place especially in her autumn and spring festivals. An example is Nepal. This is not an attribute of her Purāṇic, Brahminical counterpart.

Durgā's metaphysical and theological attributes are not extensively developed in the DM. She is the quintessential energy of deity and as such that of consciousness. She is also Nature - Prakṛti - the 'being' and essence of the physical and ideal universe. The great Kaula goddesses prior to the eleventh century are not directly identified in this way. But they are identified with Mahāmāyā. Durgā is referred to in this way in the DM, but only in one portion of the hymn which leads one to suppose that it is a late interpolation. Subsequently, Durgā came to be commonly identified with Mahāmāyā and so are the great Kaula goddesses. Kubjikā, as Mahāmāyā, can be identified with Durgā, the foremost public representation of the Great Goddess. In fact, Newar initiates stress how Kubjikā is pre-eminent amongst all the great goddesses of Newar Śāktism because she is Mahāmāyā in a more direct, original sense than the other goddesses, even though they are also all identified with Durgā (as Mahiṣāsuramardinī - the Slayer of the Buffalo Demon), who acts as their public exoteric form.

The Goddess as Mahāmāyā

Durgā's identification with Prakṛti is common to the major goddesses of the Purāṇas, especially Vaiṣṇava ones, to which it is systematically applied. Most, if not all, the supreme Vaiṣṇava goddesses embody a triad of metaphysical aspects, namely, Prakṛti, Māyā and Śakti, as do, for example, Rādhā and Lakṣmī.[1] Exploring cosmogonies themes in the Vedas, Upaniṣads and Purāṇas, and their relation these three, Pintchman notes:

The Brahminical tradition subsumes what appears to be a primarily non-Brahminical tendency to elevate female divinities to supreme status by equating unique principles - Śakti, Māyā, and Prakṛti - which are already present in the earlier layers of the Brahminical tradition with the goddesses appropriate to the perspective of the given text. Thus, although the impulse to elevate the feminine principle may be largely non-Brahminical, the means by which it is elevated are borrowed directly from Brahminical orthodoxy.[2]

As the source of the universe (jagadyoni), the goddess is identified with it as Prakṛti.[3] But this is not the Prakṛti of the Sāṁkhya which is a `neuter counterpart' of Puruṣa. She is mother nature. The goddesses who embody Prakṛti reflect its alluring, deluding nature symbolically by their erotic attraction. Moreover, Prakṛti becomes above all the power of consciousness (citkalā) from which the lower principles emanate. As such Prakṛti is equated with Śakti. This development reinforced the process of personifying and feminizing Prakṛti. Moreover, it gave her a special and unique precedence over Puruṣa, the male principle who would be both powerless and

---

[1] Brown 1974: p. 3.
[2] Pintchman 1997: 190-191.
[3] Brown 1974: p. 67.

unconscious without her.[1]

The goddesses of the early Kaula and Bhairava Tantras are generally devoid of any direct, explicit identification with Prakṛti, although the seeds of this identification are sown in various ways. The identification is not made initially as the intention is to stress that the goddess is Śakti who, inwardly, is the power of consciousness of the supreme deity and, outwardly, is Māyā through which the universe is created. The identification with Māyā is primarily to enhance the power of Śakti, rather than suggest that the universe is illusory. Thus, Māyā, in a way, replaces Prakṛti.

After about the 13th century when this identification is made in the later Kaula Tantras, Śiva is identified with the Person (puruṣa), who is not just the individual soul of the Sāṁkhya who goes by the same name, but the divine male counterpart of the goddess identified with Prakṛti. The model is no longer the Siddhānta with its thirty-six principles (tattva) but the original, less elaborated Sāṁkhya model of twenty-four principles with an extra one or two added and other details, according to the particular text and its cult. Although the Kubjikā Tantras rarely identify the goddess with Prakṛti, the shift towards this conception is becoming apparent. Thus, although the Kubjikā Tantras accept the system of thirty-six principles of the Siddhānta Āgamas, they frequently prefer a system of twenty-six principles with Mahāmāyā as the twenty-fifth and Śiva as the twenty-sixth. In this context Kubjikā is not identified with Prakṛti, she appears instead as Mahāmāyā. As such she is the triangular Yoni. In the course of his commentary on the Parātriṁśikā Abhinava quotes a text he calls the Kubjikāmata which describes her as follows: 'Mahāmāyā is above Mayā and (her) form is the bliss of the Triangle'.[2] The sides of this triangle are lined, he says, with all the triads of which he gives the following examples: 1) the Moon, Sun and Fire which are the object of knowledge (grāhya) and the rest; 2) emanation, persistence and withdrawal; 3) Iḍā, Piṅgalā and Suṣumṇā 4) Dharma, Adharma and the mixture (of the two) (śabala).[3] We notice that the three qualities are not amongst the primary examples Abhinava chooses. Is this because he was purposely avoiding any possible association with Prakṛti which in his system is never even remotely identified with Śakti? A change has taken place by the time we reach Maheśvarānanda in whose syncretistic Trika view Prakṛti is identified with Māyā, which is understood to be essentially Śāmbhavīśakti.[4]

These tendencies towards the identifications that emerged in the later schools are also apparent in the Kubjikā Tantras. Kubjikā is rarely identified with

---

[1] Brown 1974: p. 68.
[2] māyopari mahāmāyā trikoṇānandarūpiṇī PTv p. 249.
[3] Ibid.
[4] MM verse 20.

Prakṛti,[1] but when she is her identification with Mahāmāyā is implied.[2] One common link is her identification with Vaiṣṇavī or Vaiṣṇavīśakti who is Mahāmāyā.[3] The triadic nature of the goddess is an evident parallel to the triadic nature of Prakṛti with its three qualities (guṇa). Concretely, the Trika goddesses Parā, Parāparā and Aparā are identified with them[4] and so, by extension, is Kubjikā who embodies them. More essentially, the three qualities of Nature are one of the triads set in the sides of the goddess's Triangle.[5] Moreover, Mahāmāyā is also the Point (bindu) that contains the three qualities. She is also above them and so is, as the following passage from the ŚM explains, 'above the Point'. There she is the one pervasive energy of the goddess. Below it, Māyā's function is to differentiate the cosmic order.

> Māyā above the Point is all-pervasive (vyāpinī) energy. She is the Supreme goddess who is indestructible (abhedyā) and is imperishable and without decay. She pervades (vyāpinī) all living beings (and is within all things) on the lower path beginning with the Self. This is the Māyā of the Six Paths, particularly (the Māyā) which is within the thirty-six principles, once Māyā has divided up the Self within the essential nature (svarūpa) that has been fashioned on the cosmic path (adhvanirmita).[6]

The Mahāmāyāstava

Kubjikā is most directly represented as Mahāmāyā in the KMT through her identification with Mahantārikā, which we shall examine further ahead. An indication of Kubjikā's general identification with Mahāmāyā is the existence of several hymns dedicated to her called Māyāstava.[7] The full name of the hymn that [1] See YKh (2) 16/74, translated in intro. vol. 1, p. 169.

---

[2] See YKh (2) 16/39.
[3] Kubjikā's identification with Vaiṣṇavīśakti may be a result of her intimate connection with the Kālī of the Kālīkrama. There Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī is sometimes paired with Narasiṁha. Moreover, we find numerous forms of Lakṣmīs who are basically forms of of Kālī in the JY.
[4] See below, p. 131.
[5] See diagram in intro. vol. 1, p. 273.
[6] bindūrdhve tu ca yā māyā sā māyā vyāpinī kalā [kh: kulā] ||
sā tu māyā parā devī durbhedyā [k: abhedyā] cākṣayāvyayā [k: cakṣaye vyaye] ||
vyāpinī sarvabhūtānāṁ ātmādau [kh: mātmādau] tv apare 'dhvani [k: tu pariṣṭhitam] ||
māyaiva sā ṣaḍadhvasya [k: nādānte nādamadhyasthe] ṣaṭtriṁśāntā [k: pravicārya] viśeṣataḥ ||
māyā vibhajya cātmānaṁ [k: kiṁ nijacātmānaṁ] svarūpe cādhvanirmite [k: -tam] ||
ŚM 15/106-108ab.
[7] For example, the whole of chapter 19 of the AS is dedicated to a Mahamāyāstava and there is another in KuKh 26/57-91ab. See below, appendix I.

follows is: the Hymn to Mahāmāyā who is the Oneness of Śiva and Śakti.[1] The form is familiar. The goddess is invoked in the vocative and in four or five places in the 26 odd verses the salutation `namas te' is offered to her. Thus, it reminds one of the Devīmāhātmya. She is invoked right at the beginning as Mahāmāyā and the concluding verse, indicating that this is her primary form, as is that of Durgā in the Devīmāhātmya. She is even called `Durgā'. The connection between Durgā, Kātyāyanī and the Mothers made in the DM is mirrored in the hymn by naming them close to one another as aspects of the goddess Kubjikā who thus colonizes them. All the same time she assumes the identity of the major `great goddesses' - Durgā, Kālī, Pārvatī and is the mistress of the most important groups of goddesses. In the same way she takes over the major Vidyās of other systems, particularly the Trika triad.

The same hymn is reproduced in the KuKauM. There it is prefaced by the declaration that the goddess Kubjikā (like all the Great Goddesses) has many names and is many goddesses. This is because she is essentially the goddess who is the one power embodied in all the energies, and hence all the goddesses of every tradition. As Bhairava says:

> O mistress of the gods, due to the various kinds of tasks (karman) (one wishes to accomplish) and the various causes and results, the one goddess Kubjikā is called in various ways. That is indeed the truth. She who is one is the supreme energy. Arisen from Śiva, she bestows Śiva and is the beloved of Śiva.
>
> O goddess, she is Tārā for the Buddhists, Rājñī for the Sauras and Ambikā for the Arhantas. (She is) Lakṣmī who is Viṣṇu's power (vaiṣṇavī). (She is) called Śakti amongst Śaivas and Dūti amongst the Śāktas. (She is) Gāyatrī in the Brāhmaṇī Tantra, and Sarasvatī in the sacred seat (of learning) (pīṭhaka). O beloved, there is (only) one power (śakti) at all times, (whereas her) names are hundreds. She manifests in that form in accord with my will when praised before the Krama.[2]

---

[1] Śivaśaktisamarasamahāmāyāstava.

[2] ekā sānekabhedena kubjikā samudāhṛtā || karmabhedena deveśi kāryakāraṇabhedataḥ |
satyaṁ satyaṁ hi tad asti ekā sā paramā kalā ||
aśivāt tu samutpannā śivadā śivavallabhā |
bauddhe tārā tu sā devi saure rājñī tathaiva hi ||
arhante ambikā nāma lakṣmī vai vaiṣṇavī bhavet |
śaive śaktir iti khyātā śākte vai dūtisaṁjñakā ||
gāyatrī brāhmaṇītantre pīṭhake tu sarasvatī |
ekā śaktiḥ sarvakālaṁ tu nāmāni śataśaḥ priye ||
kramāgre stutipūrvaṁ tu tadrūpotthā mamepsayā | KuKauM 5/186cd-191ab.

Kubjikā is also identified with a series of 'small' goddesses. Indeed, she is entire groups of goddesses. The stava stresses especially that she is the eight Mothers, not referring to them as a group but as individual Mothers each of which are Kubjikā as are the 'small' goddesses of other groups. This unlimited protean power to assume many forms, names, and identities, is what makes Kubjikā a Great Goddess outwardly. Inwardly, and most essentially, Kubjikā's status as the Great Goddess is underscored constantly by her metaphysical identity. This is very striking and constantly recalled, both formally in her visualizations and when the Tantras refer to her in general and, especially, in the hymns dedicated to her. These present Kubjikā as Kuṇḍalinī who is at once Speech, the vital breath and consciousness. We find numerous examples of these three aspects in the following Hymn to Mahāmāyā. These identifications with metaphysical principles, which as the tradition develops become more frequent and extensively elaborated, relate implicitly to the higher states of consciousness experienced by the advanced adepts of her cult. They are a clear example of Kubjikā's greater development with respect to the Kaula goddesses who preceded her. Although these too are equated with metaphysical principles, the richness and complexity of these identifications reaches its acme within the scriptural tradition with the Kubjikā Tantras. The same trend continued with the goddess Tripurā who followed after, but in her case it was largely due to the impact of an exegesis inspired by the Pratyabhijñā based Trika Śaivism of Kashmir. This did take place to a substantial degree within the scriptural tradition (concretely in the Yoginīhṛdaya), but was most prominent in the commentaries and later independent works such as the Kāmakalāvilāsa. Here, then, is the Hymn to Mahāmāyā.

> O Mahāmāyā, I salute you whose body is subtle and who is both supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent), solitary and pure. (You are) Bindumālinī (who wears a garland made of drops of sonic energy) and are called Sound. You are born from the disembodied (transcendent reality), unmoving one! Support of the universe! Great Kuṇḍalinī! Nityā! Established in the core of the Vital Self (haṁsa)! Established in the centre of the Sun, Moon and Fire! All pervasive one! Supreme and inferior one! Established in the form of the letter OṀ! Support of the half of the half of Ha (the subtlest essence of Speech)![1] A hundred times subtler than the tip of a hair! Endless, free of decay and imperishable! Support of the energy of (emission which is called) half of Ha! Established on the stamens of the lotus (of the Heart)! Mahāmāyā called 'Possessing Energies' (sakalā)! Bestower of boons, worshipped by the world! Established in every channel (nāḍī) (of the vital breath)! You who pierces through all the body's vital points (marma)! O goddess who is the thirty-two energies (of the Vidyā), breaks through (the inner Wheels) and resides in the Cavity of Brahmā! The five Great Ghosts (mahāpreta) are Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra, Īśvara and Sadāśiva. They reside at the base of (your) feet (pādamūla). O goddess! Mother of the triple world! Salutations to you who are power.[1]

[1] See intro. vol. 1, p. 352.

(You who are) located in the middle of Iḍā and Piṅgalā shaped (like) a lotus fibre! You who are in the centre of the Point! O goddess! Crooked one! Half Moon! You who look like a snow crystal and reside at the End of the Twelve (finger space)! You are called Umā! O Gaurī, you are in the Heart! You shine with the brilliance of twelve suns! Void! You reside within the Void! You are called the energy of the vital Self (haṁsī) and support the vital breath! O Supreme Goddess, you are called the uvula (lambā) and you move to the right and the left! You are at the tip of the nose and are transcendent! You transport the thread in the centre! You are the line of the Heart! Supreme bliss, residing in the palate and the head! You are rubbed by the uvula of Sound and are endowed with the eight (yogic) qualities! Aroused one! You are gross and subtle! You are the capsule of the Two Dharma and Adharma! You are the cause, effect and the agent! Triple Void whose form is Sound! Supreme one who is both inferior and supreme! Eternal, stable consciousness (caitanya)! O goddess, you bear all the letters and are known as the Secret Principle (guhyatattvā)! Greatly fortunate one! Disembodied! Beyond the ocean of transmigratory existence! Jayā, Vijayā, Jayantī and Aparājitā, you are in the middle of Tumburu's seed-syllable! Salutation to you who free from sin![2]

O goddess! you bind and liberate (from bondage) and reside at the End of the Sixteen! You are Bhrāmaṇī with the trident of power. You are accompanied by the Great Emanations (of Viṣṇu) (mahāvyūha). O Gaurī, You are Bhrāmaṇī[3] and, revolving through (the energies of the letters), transport the machine of Māyā. O goddess! O Krodha and Unmattabhairavī! You are Svacchandabhairavī. You reside in the fifty letters and the Rudras

[1] KMT 24/114-120.
[2] Ibid. 24/121-128.
[3] Bhrāmaṇī is the name of a female demon in the DM.

are said to be with you. You who are called Nectar! O Caṇḍā! You are Ruru. Salutations to you, O Bhairavī of knowledge.[1]

O huge fanged one! Lightning tongue! Frightening star eyes! O mistress of the god of gods, I salute you, O Aghorā of fearsome form! O goddess Umā! Sarasvatī! (You are) Jvālāmukhī (Fire Mouth) and Vegavatī (Powerful One). O goddess who is transported by the vowels (svara) of the Gander! Cow face! Śaktimālinī! O beautiful Kroṣṭukā (Female Jackel)! O Durgā (you are) Kātyāyanī! You who are called Nityaklinnā (Perpetually Wet)! Raktā (Passionate One)! Supreme single syllable (Vidyā).

O goddess, adorned with the Octet of Kula you are Brāhmī, Māheśvarī, Kaumārī, Vaiṣṇavī, Vārāhī, Māhendrī, Cāmuṇḍā whose face is without fear, and Yogeśī.[2]

The Sonic Goddess

Durgā is identified in a generic sense with Speech but, unlike the Kaula goddesses, her body is not made of mantras. Durgā is not represented in the DM by a maṇḍala and no mantras are related to her. She is worshipped by eulogizing her by reciting the DM which extols her glorious enterprises. Nowadays her worship in a Tantric modality with mantras and a maṇḍala is common place but this is done in accord with procedures laid down in supplements (kīlaka) and liturgies (paddhati) linked to the DM, not the DM itself.

Kubjikā, like all Tantric deities possesses two 'differentiated' forms. One is her iconic form and the other sonic. They mirror and sustain each other. No iconic form is complete without its sonic equivalent and vice versa. The morphology of the two aspects similarly run parallel. Just as the goddess has one basic iconic form, so too she has one basic sonic form. Both of them are subject to variation, possess aspects and parts or 'limbs'. The underlying identity of differing iconic forms may be preserved by maintaining the same, or a similar, sonic form. But if both of them change to different iconic and sonic forms, the deity changes into another. The sometimes very complex, internal relationship between the parts of an iconic form is mirrored by the sonic. Conversely, the complex series (krama) of mantras which form the body of the deity express, often more than the icon, the rich and wonderfully varied form of the deity. Projected onto the body of the initiate, the maṇḍala or the deity's icon, share the [1] Ibid. 24/129-131. Note how the goddess is here associated with the eight Bhairavas. Further ahead she is linked to the eight mothers and the directions. As Pārvatī, she also colonizes the `exoteric' forms of the goddess.

---

[2] Ibid. 24/132-136.

same 'body made of mantra' (mantramayatanu, vidyādeha) which is that of the deity. Indeed, when the texts refer to the goddess's 'mūrti' – a word one would normally translate as 'icon' – they generally intend her sonic form as her Vidyā or seed-syllable. But although the two aspects are equivalent, on the whole the sonic takes precedence over the iconic. Visualization and identification with the iconic form of the deity is basic and this is never devoid of its sonic equivalent. Indeed, the sonic aspect is dominant. Sacred sounds first emerge from emptiness and come together to generate the iconic form of the deity.

In abstract terms the goddess is represented as the energy of Sound. She is the Unstruck Sound of consciousness. As the energy of sacred Speech (vacchakti) she is both without phonemic form (asvarā) and yet is the sacred energy of the letters that constitute mantras (varṇaśakti). She is also the energy of the measures of their utterance through the three parts of the body (trimātrā)[1] and the silent, subtle 'half measure' (ardhamātrā) beyond them.[2] She is also concretely the outer forms of the fifty letters and their energy as Mālinī and Mātṛkā. Further out into differentiated manifestation she is her seed-syllable (bīja) and Vidyā.

The body of the goddess is made of the mantras of her Krama. As the cult developed the mantras grew in number as did the Kramas into which they were arranged and the subsidiary 'currents' (ogha) of mantras that accompany them. As a result the goddess's body also grew more complex, enriched with this extending mantric content. Moreover, the goddess at different levels developed progressively more mantric bodies as these levels developed and were compounded. Rising from state to state the mantras projected onto the body of her devotees also grew. We may illustrate this development with two of many examples. Firstly, in the KMT we find one of the oldest 'original' versions of the goddess's body of mantras:

> Then the energy Māyā which is above that is flooded with the nectar of the bliss of (Bhairava's divine) will. She is the goddess Khecarī, (also called) Khageśvarī who consists of the parts (of the energies of the Moon) (avayava) (and so her body is the triangle of the four sacred seats). She is in the lotus (of the Heart), in the centre of the lotus and is both within the vital Self (haṁsa) and transports it. The goddess both possesses and is devoid of differentiated energies (niṣkalā). Her body is made of lightning (vajra) and she is Mind Beyond Mind (manonmanī). She is in the midst of the sequence of the parts (pada) (of her mantras) and she shines with the parts (of her mantras) as her ornaments. She has attained the plane of > the mantras of the Krama and she (bestows) the eight yogic powers with ease. The goddess born of the sixteen syllables accomplishes (all things) with (her) power. She is Mālinī and her body are the Siddhas and she burns densely with the flames of the Three Principles. She is conjoined with Aghoryāṣṭaka and is filled with the Twelve Limbs and is endowed with the Six Limbs. Her body is divine and she is very powerful. She is generated from the body of Asitāṅga. She is Maheśvarī whose body is made of mantras. She is Mālinī, Śabdarāśi, the Triple Vidyā, Aghorikāṣṭaka, the Twelve Limbs and the Six Limbs. This body is Kula. (The mantras called) the Five Jewels are located on (her) forehead, throat, chest, genitals and feet. Her garland is the Twelve Verses. She shines with the Thread of Brahmā that extends from (her) the feet to (her) topknot. The two shoulders of the goddess are Tadgraha. Her face is formed from the five seed-syllables (of the Praṇavas) deposited along with five OṀs.[1]

[1] KuKh 2/40-41.
[2] See YKh (2) 5/151.

The second example is drawn from the KRU, a text that delights in representing the goddess made of mantras.[2] Her body, made of Vidyās, is fit to unite with that of the god, which is made of maṇḍalas. The rites are fruitful only if this union takes place through which Deity - two-in-one, Vidyā and maṇḍala - worships itself in the fullness of immanence.

The following passage is from the First Sūtra (ādisūtra) which describes the origin of the goddess. This is not her upward emergence from the Liṅga as a goddess in anthropomorphic form, it is her descent from the plane of Akula, the transcendental body of the god. Her descent marks the progressive formation of her immanent body made of mantras and the Yoginīs associated with them. Thus her theogony is the manifestation of the entire Krama, with all its subsidiary mantras and the pantheon of which it is the sonic form. This takes place in the human body, through and within which the goddess's body is formed.

The descent takes place in a series of stages. It begins in the transcendental state beyond conception, perception and manifestation. The goddess resides there in the Void of the god's essential nature as the pervasive blissful energy of his pure consciousness. There she is in the tranquil, undifferentiated form of Kuṇḍalinī who, fully elevated (ūrdhva), is 'radiant awakened consciousness'. This is the supreme, transcendental body of the god that is free of his other 'excellent' immanent body, which he shares with the goddess, made of mantra:

---

[1] KMT 17/76cd-84.

[2] See reference from KRU 13/6-7ab, below p. 28-29.

> O goddess, initially I am empty (śūnya) devoid of (my) excellent body and free of thought constructs (kalpanābhāva). Pervasive (I am) bliss, satisfied with the bliss of the contemplation of my own supreme energy. Established in my own (innate) bliss, (I am) called supreme (para) and, free of the spheres of (both) consciousness and its absence, (I am) the primordial agent (of all actions). Neither the one who meditates nor the object of meditation (I am) not the plane of the objects of sense, nor entity (vastu), form or anything else.
>
> O (goddess) called Parā, that (divine) form (rūpa) existed (then before creation). (Whereas) you consist of the qualities (of Nature) and, pervasive, (you) are consciousness (cit) and are called perpetually manifest (udita) bliss. (Both) (immanent) Kula and (transcendental) Akula, (you are) stainless and, without waves and tranquil, (you are) merged in the (very) centre of my supreme (transcendent and hence) inactive body. (You are) the mother of the essence (saṁdoha) of (Kuṇḍalinī), the Great Jewel which, free of impurity (amala), is divine, radiant (sphurat), awakened consciousness (avabodha).[1]

The next stage marks the formation of the goddess's subtle body. This takes place within the god's immanent body which is identified with that of the one who worships him. The goddess in her essential energetic form as Kuṇḍalinī initially descends into the Cavity of Brahmā. In this case this is not the top of the head. It is the Void in the centre of the End of the Twelve at the apex of the subtle body. Also called the Door of Brahmā, it is the passage between disembodied transcendence and the body of immanence through which the energy that connects the two passes from one to the other. Passing through this door the goddess's

---

[1] śūnyo 'haṁ [kh: nyūnyo-; c: sū-] devi pūrvaṁ [g: + yercca] varatanurahitaḥ [gh: -ta] kalpanābhāvamuktaḥ [g: -mukto]
vyāpī [ṅ: vyāpi] cānandarūpī nijaparamakalābhāvanānandatṛptaḥ [kh: -tṛptuḥ; c: missing] | svānandasthaḥ [g: -tha] parākhyaś cidacidaviṣayair varjitaś cādikartā [k, kh, ch, ch: parākhyaścidacidvi-; gh: parātmakhyāścidadviṣayair-] dhyātā dhyeyo [g, gh: -yā] na cānyo na ca [k, kh, ch: *] viṣayapadaṁ [gh: -yadaṁ ca; c: missing] vasturūpādi [c: missing] kiñcit || tadrūpāsīt parākhye [g: -khya] tvam api guṇamayī [g: gumayī] vyāpinī citsvarūpā nityānandoditākhyā akulakulamayī [k, g, ṅ, c, ch: -mayā; kh: akula * * maṣā; gh: -kulamasvā] nirmalā nistaraṅgā | nirvyāpārāsmadīye [kh, c: -pālāsmadīye; g: -dīya] paramaparapade [k: paramaparama] dehamadhye nilīnā [k, kh: nillinā] śāntā divyāvabodhasphuradamalamahāratnasandohamātā [kh, c: -sphudamala-; g: divyā ca vodhasphuradasalamahā-; gh: divyāvavodhaḥ sphura-; ṅ; -maṁtā; ch: divyāvavodhā * * * * * * * * *?sandohamātā] || KRU 13/3-4.

energy travels down along the axis of the subtle body, piercing the Wheels arranged along it until, at the extremity of her descent, she reaches the Root centre at the base of the subtle body.

> After that, once you, Kuṇḍalī, reached the Cavity of Brahmā (in the End of the Twelve), you went to the plane (pada) of the (Full) Moon that floods (the world) with divine nectar and is contained in the centre of (the rays of) the Moonlight (candrikā) (of the New Moon). (Then) having entered the path below that (you reached the glottis which is) called the Lambikā of the Point (of consciousness) (bindu). After the Drop, you enter into (the Wheels of) Purity (viśuddhi), the Heart, the City of Gems (maṇipura) and the Self-supported which is said to be born of the foundation of the Root (centre) (kandanālambaja). (Thus) residing on the plane (in the genital centre where the energies of the body are) churned (mathanapada), (you) have gone forth.[1]

The following stages mark the formation of the body of mantras. This begins with the arousal of Kuṇḍalinī from the Root centre and the spread of her energy throughout the outer 'gross' body. This takes place by the progressive penetration of her energy into the parts of the body where the latent energies of the letters are located. Just as thought and speech is formed by the combination of letters and words impelled by the intentions of the mind, similarly, the energies of the letters combine variously with one another to form the mantras. They do this by the power of the goddess's consciousness that impels the movement of the inner Wheels of energies aroused by her descent through the subtle body.

> Thus (you are) skillful and crooked and (your) condition is that experience (tadanubhavabhavā) (of the Wheels). The garland of fifty letters (fills the body) and by piercing that number of places you are progressively (krameṇa) established in the abode of my body. The energy that contains all the energies is manifest

---

[1] paścād [ṅ, c: paścā] divyāmṛtaughaplavanaśaśipade [k, kh, c, ch: -mṛtogha-; kh, gh: -plavaśaśipade; ṅ; -mṛtoghaplavanasasipada] candrikāmadhyagarbhe [g: -garbha; gh: candrimadhyesugarbha] saṁprāptā brahmarandhre tadadhapathagatā [g: tadanupa-] lambikākhye [kh, gh: ramvi-] ca bindoḥ [kh, g, gh, ch: vindau] | bindoḥ [k: nāsti; gh: viṁdau] paścād viśuddhau hṛdayamaṇipure *kandanālāmbujākhye [k, kh: -nālāṁvajākhye; g: -khya; gh: kaṁda * lāṁvujākhye]*
svādhiṣṭhāne [g: -dhisthāne] niviṣṭā [g: -ṣṭo; gh: -ṣṭhā] mathanapadagatā kuṇḍalī [k, kh: kuṇḍali] tvaṁ prayātā || Ibid. 13/5.

> (sphuṭasakalakalā) by the lords Śrīkaṇṭha and the rest (who govern the energies of the letters), by the practice of the diverse parts (of mantras) (vividhapadacarya), variously divided into (syllables with) short and long (vowels), and the applications (yoga), which are the utterances of thought constructs (kalpanoccāra), of the limbs of the Vidyās and mantras.
>
> (You shine) within the processes of the movements of the Wheels (cakracārakrama) (by these means and) by many transformations (vikāra) of language, (some) in even (numbers of syllables and others in) odd, (and by means of the) sciences (of mantras) marked with Peak seed-syllables, (long) garland (-like mantras) repetitions (of which) conquer the (vital) centres, channels and winds (in the body).[1]

The goddess's body of mantras is her maṇḍala. The centre is the axis of the body along which she rises and descends, piercing the Wheels as she goes. From there she spreads out into the Yoni full of letters, which is her subtle body. Beyond that is the outer gross body. It is represented by the hexagram that houses the Krama. In this case it is formed from six groups of mantras arranged in groups of 4, 5, 6, 5, 4 and 3.[2] The mantras of the Krama are on the sixfold path of emanation[3] which is linked to the group of six Yoginīs (ḍādiṣaṭka)[4] who govern the constituents of the physical body that is, bone, flesh, marrow, fat, sinew and sperm.[5] These are associated with configurations ('wheels') of Yoginīs. In this

---

[1] tasmād dakṣā ca vakrā [k: dakṣāṁ ca vakrā; kh, c: -dakṣīcavakkrā; g: vakṣī ca vaktrā; gh: -kṣāṁ ca cakrā; ch: -dakṣāṁ ca cakrā] tadanubhavabhavā varṇamālāśatārdhā [k, g, gh, c, ch: śatārddhaṁ; kh: latārddhaṁ; ṅ: -satārddha] - *tatsaṁkhyāsthānabhedair mama [k, kh: tatsaṁkhā-; gh: -bhedairmatama; ṅ: -dairma ] tanunilaye saṁsthitāsi krameṇa | *śrīkaṇṭhādyaiś ca [gh: -dyai ?] nāthair vividhapadacaryair hrasvadīrghādibhedair [k, kh: nādair- ; g: nādyairvividhapadacaryarhra-; gh: nātorvividha-; c: ?; ch: -cayairhrasvadīrghādibhedair]
vidyāmantrāṅgayogaiḥ sphuṭasakalakalā [g: sphutasa-] kalpanoccārarūpaiḥ [kh, ch: -rūpai; g: -rūpā; gh, c: -rūpe; ṅ: -rūpau] || 6 || *nānābhāṣāvikāraiḥ [k, kh, c, ch: -rai; gh: -rais; ṅ: -bhā * vikārai] samaviṣamayutaiḥ kūṭamālāṅkacihnair [c: kṛtamālāṁ-]* *vijñānair lakṣanāḍīpavanajayajapaiś [k: -yayavana-; kh: -yavaṁpana-; g, ch: -yapavanajayaiś; kh, ch: -cajapajapajapaiś; gh: -yapavana ca ? paiś; ṅ: -paṁcanejayaiś-; c: ?] cakracārakrameṣu [g, ch: cakravārakrameṣu; kh: -cākrameṣu; gh: cakracārai-; c: ?] | KRU 13/6-7ab.

[2] Concerning the Krama and its parts, see chapter 28 of the KuKh.

[3] Concerning the sixfold path of emanation see intro. vol. 1, p. 460.

[4] See KuKh chapter 63.

[5] See KuKh 63 note 1.

way the goddess's energy permeates the 'inside' of the body she penetrates and transforms it into her own.

> The energy of (immanent) Kula and (transcendental) Akula (operates) within the sacred seats and the rest, in the body (piṇḍabheda), in the pervasive current of the Śrīkrama linked with the (sacred seats) O JĀ PŪ and KĀMA, on the plane of the Pure (vimala) Pentad and within the Sextet of Knowledge (jñānaṣaṭka).
>
> (The same energy operates) within the five called the Jewels that follows after the group of four called the Siddhas, and in the triad that removes all impurity (mala) (consisting of) the six of the sextet, the five of the pentad and the quaternary. (It operates within the six Yoginīs) beginning with Ḍā, within the six paths and the rest present in the passion (madana) of the sequence of the sport (helākrama) that begins with the secret (genital centre) (guhya) and in the sextet of the Wheel of the Yoginī Kamalamatī and the host of Dūtīs beginning with Svabhrā Nityā.[1]

There are three lotuses around the hexagram. The first consists of eight petals that house the eight Mothers and their sites, Yoginīs, forms of bliss and gestures. Beyond that is a lotus with thirty-two petals on which are arranged the syllables of the goddess's Vidyā. Then comes a lotus of sixty-four petals on which are the sixty-four Yoginīs related to the eight Mothers.

> Brāhmī, Vajrā, Tvagaindrī and (the Yoginī) called Ghorikā who is endowed with all the parts (of the Vidyā) (reside) in Prayāga. In the same way, O goddess, the dynamism of your emanated energy (vibhavagati) is present within Devikoṭṭa (as it is) in the current of the teachers, the current of the maṇḍalas, in the host led by Akula and in the group of eight divine blisses and in that of the eight divine gestures, endowed with the innate qualities (of deity) (sahajaguṇa)

---

[1] pīṭhādau piṇḍabhede akulakulakalā [all MSs except g, gh, c: -kulā] vyāpake śrīkramoghe [ch: -gha]
ojāpūkāmayukte [kh, gh: -yuktai; g: -kāprayukte; c: -yayuktai] vimalapadayute [gh: + ge] pañcake jñānaṣaṭke || 7 || ratnākhye pañcarūpe tadanugatigate siddhasaṁjñe [g: siddhisaṁjñe] catuṣke ṣaṭṣaṭke [kh, c: ṣaṭpaṁke; gh: ṣaṭvadyaṁka] pañcapañce sakalamalahare [g:-hale] taccatuṣka traye.api [g: tarccatuṣketrayepi] |
*ḍādye [kh: ādyai; gh, c: ḍādyai] guhyādihelākramamadanagate tatṣaḍadhvādike [kh: tamvadaccodike; g: tatvajaṁghādike; gh: taṁvatavādike; c: ?; ch: * tṣaḍadhvādike] ca svabhrānityādidūtīgaṇakamalamatīyoginīcakraṣaṭke [kh: svatrā-; gh: --gaṇamakaramato-]* ||
Ibid. 13/7cd-8.

> and (accompanied) by the thirty-two, including Caṇḍaka and the rest.[1]

The KRU goes on to enumerate the other sacred sonic modalities the goddess energizes and thus brings to life and renders effective. These include the 'nine times nine' syllables of Navātman that are projected into the Kramamaṇḍala to form the Gurumaṇḍala through which Bhairava is worshipped as the source and essence of the teachers of the Krama.[2] In a previous phase of emanation the goddess penetrated the fifty letters of the Assembly of Sounds embodied in Bhairava in the core Triangle, now she penetrates the fifty letters of Mālinī, his partner and the three Kramas.

> (The same energy is present) in the (group of) eight times eight (Yoginīs) beginning with Cchāyā and in (that of) nine times nine (Lords of Navātman) beginning with Binduka who is the main one (pradhāna), and in (that of) the fifty (energies of Mālinī) beginning with Nādinī, Aṭṭahāsa and the rest associated with the seasons and ages. (It is) in the (first) beginningless divine (Krama and then) in the same way in the Kumāra (Krama) called Yauvana that follows after it, and in that of the Aged that belong to the current of the divine (divya) and human (adivya) Krama (respectively), on the unmoving plane of Dhruva, which is the first division of the teaching.[3] (10)

Finally, the goddess goes to the fifty Islands where the energies of the letters are located along with the sixteen Yoginīs who, as the embodiments of the energies of the vowels, are their aspects. In this way the goddess activates the energy of the Kulas, that is, the families of Yoginīs who embody the letters and

---

[1] brāhmī vajrā tvagaindrī [all MSs: tvagendrī] sakalapadayutā ghorikākhyā prayāge [kh, g, gh: prayoge]
evaṁ saṁketapūrvā [kh, c: saṁkeṭa-] tava vibhavagatir [gh: vibhagarati; c: viBhagavatī] devikoṭṭāntasaṁsthā | gurvoghe [gh: -gho] maṇḍaloghe [g: -laughe] akulamukhagaṇe divyānandāṣṭake ca dvātriṁśaiś [k, kh, g: dvāviṁśaiś-] caṇḍakādyaiḥ sahajaguṇayute divyamudrāṣṭake [kh: -ka] ca ||
Ibid. 13/9.

[2] See intro. vol. 2, appendix 2.

[3] cchāyādye cāṣṭakāṣṭe navanavaguṇite bindukādye [k, kh: -dyai; g: -kādyaiḥ] pradhāne nādinyādye [k, kh, g, gh, ch: nādinyārddhe] śatārdhe [kh: ṇatārddhe] ṛtuyugasahite [k, g: -gabhajite; kh, gh, c: -cajite] aṭṭahāsādike ca | divye 'nādye [kh, c: -nādyai; g: divonādye; gh: divyenādivyai] kumāre [kh, c: kumārai; gh: kumārais] tadanupathagate yauvanākhye ca vṛddhe - divyādivyakramaughe [k, g, gh, c, ch: -kramoghe; kh: divyādi; ch: -divyekramogha] dhruva – acalapade [gh: acarapade] śāsanasyādibhede [kh: -bheda; ch: bhade] || KRU 13/10.

syllables of her body. Each of them is thus empowered to act within their jurisdiction and so the goddess exerts her pervasive, subtle authority throughout her body of mantra, by means of them. Now that it is fully formed and all the energies are active and the Yoginīs that govern them have been empowered, the goddess is ready to return to her transcendental source, the 'Divine Wheel'. She does this by retracing the path by which she descended, moving up through her energized body of mantra. So the god says:

> "O goddess, after having wondered through the Islands, by means of the activity of the energy of (your) many varieties of Kulas and thoughts (kalpanā), (you) have established (your) authority in a subtle form there (within the body), which is the basic state (bhava) of Kula and Akula. Then, after (having done) that, (rising) from the Wheel of the Foundation, (you) enter the divine Wheel by (your) upward motion." And thus, (concludes the Tantra, having firmly established the link with her transcendental source), her nature (the divine) will, and body that of an excellent young woman, she shines with (her) radiant energy (tejas).[1]

In this way, the rite, the sacrificial area, the ritual implements, the offerings, and the officiator participate in the nature of the deity regardless of whether they are externally represented or purely ideal. Here too we notice that the DM is substantially different because there the deity is not represented within the body of her devotee. The homology between the body and the cosmos is very ancient in India. It was already well established in the Vedic religion. However, it was initially most extensively and systematically developed in classical Hinduism in the Tantras. The Upaniṣads teach the presence of the Self in the Heart, the core of the body, where the mind and intellect are located. The theme is developed in the Upaniṣads and later in the Bhagavadgītā in order to integrate the inner presence of the Divine Being in the Heart with the individual soul who also resides there. However, there is no detailed, systematic homology between the body and its parts and the presence there of the deity and its attendants.

Another development is the notion that Kaula goddesses are present in the god and within the human body in the form of their latent spiritual energy. The most common and best known representation of this energy is Kuṇḍalinī. Such

---

[1] dvīpāmnāye [k, c: dīpā-; kh, g, ṅ, ch: dīpāmnāya] bhramitvā [kh: tramitvā]
vividhakulakalāceṣṭayā [k, kh: -kulā-] kalpanābhiḥ
kṛtvā tatrādhikāraṁ [g: -ra] akulakulabhavaṁ sūkṣmarūpeṇa devi |
paścādādhāracakrād uparicaragate [k, kh, g, gh: -cayagate; c: -cakrāndu] divyacakre praviṣṭā [kh: paviṣṭā] tasmād icchāsvarūpā varayuvatitanus tejasā bhāsayantī || Ibid. 13/11.

identifications are not made with the goddess Durgā. Lastly, we note that an iconic corollary of such projections into the body is the development of cosmic forms (viśvarūpa). Another is that there are numerous ways and possibilities for Kubjikā and deities like her to assume multiple forms and possess a much more elaborate iconography than Durgā their Purāṇic predecessor.

The Goddess as Mudrā

Deity is commonly identified with mantra (if male) or Vidyā (if female) in Tantras of all schools and this identification is well known. Less well known is the identification of the goddess with Mudrā. Khecarīmudrā is the name of a Mother.[1] Just as mantras are entities that are known, Mudrās are actions that are performed. Accordingly, the goddess's Mudrā is understood to be the embodiment of her power of action (kriyāśakti) and her Vidyā of her power of knowledge. Both are equally the goddess. Mantra is her body and Mudrā its activity. As the teacher's Command, Mudrā is the deity (kuladevatā), the supreme Vidyā and Yoginī.[2] Self-sustained, she is unsupported by outer things (nirālambā) and, never bound, she bestows liberation.[3] She is the Supreme Goddess (parameśvarī).[4] As Kuṇḍalinī she is the goddess Mahāmudrā who awakens those who are sleeping.[5]

I generally translate the word 'mudrā' as 'gesture' because in the context of ritual performance this is what it is. In a non-technical sense the word 'mudrā' means a seal or a stamp used for making an impression as well as the impression it makes. One could call it an image and its reflection. The common meaning carries over into the technical sense of the term in the Kubjikā Tantras and other traditions. Abhinagupta explains:

> Gesture (mudrā) according to the Devyāyāmala is a reflected image. Mudrā is said to be a reflected image in the sense that it is born of the image or that the image is born from it, which thus becomes an instrument of its production.[6]

A common Tantric didactic etymology of the word mudrā, derives it from the word mud meaning `bliss' and the root rā meaning `giving'. Mudrā is thus a sacred gesture that gives bliss. Abhinava says:

---

[1] KMT 15/6a,10a.
[2] KuKh 4/20cd-21.
[3] KuKh 6/29.
[4] KuKh 39/148.
[5] KuKh 36/40cd-41ab.
[6] TĀ 32/1-2.

> According to the etymology of the word Mudrā, it means that which gives (dā) or bestows bliss (mud), that is, the attainment of the essential nature (of things) and, through the body, the Self. This is why Mudrās are called thus in the scriptures.[1]

Abhinava adds another definition which hints at the identity of Mudrā with the goddess as Śakti. He writes:

> In fact *mudrā*s are energies. They are called (mudrā) because they liberate from transmigration and sever the fetters (of bondage).[2]

Along with these meanings we find another in the following passage the KMT draws from the TS. 'Mu-' of the word 'mudrā' stands for 'mocana' and '-drā' for 'melting' (drāvaṇa). Mudrā 'melts' away bondage and so releases from it. Moreover, Mudrā is Mālinī, the goddess of the Trika with whom Kubjikā is identified:

> Mudrā ('gesture' or 'seal') is said to be power (śakti). It will melt what has been sealed.[3] The `sealed' is what has been hidden by the power of consciousness, which is both inferior and supreme. Gesture is that due to which one does not know (reality). As long as the soul is bound by the impurity of ignorance, he does not know the Supreme Self and Māyā (continues to) function. When the darkness (of ignorance) has been rent asunder and a man sees oneness, then (that same power) is called `supreme' and it brings about liberation from bondage. That supreme power is one and she exists by Śiva's will. She frees from the (influence of malevolent) planets and the like and melts away the currents of the fetters. The energies are called gestures because (they) release (mocana) and melt (drāvaṇa). Flight always (takes place) by the Path of the Skyfarers which is the elevated state (ūrdhvabhāva). (That energy) is called Khecarī - the Skyfarer - because she transports all living being (along this Path). She should be known to be one in the supreme state and is also said to be threefold. Assuming the form of letters, she is will, knowledge and action. Divided into fifty, she is said to be one. Complete in all her limbs and parts she abides in the form of (the alphabet) beginning with Na and ending with Pha having threaded together

---

[1] TĀ 32/3.
[2] TĀ 32/49.
[3] mudrā śaktir iti khyātā mudritaṁ drāvayiṣyati KMT 6/76ab.

> (mālayitvā) the universe. Thus she is called Mālinī. All the mantras are sealed (with this Mudrā). Thus she is called Mudrā and gives immediate realisation. In her parts she is in the form of the Mothers.[1]

Most of chapter six of the KMT, which is drawn from chapter eight of the Tantrasadbhāva, is dedicated to the presentation of the three main gestures, which are the threefold form of the one gesture to which this passage alludes. These are the Gesture of the Lotus (Padmamudrā), the Yoni (Yonimudrā)[2] and the Triple Crest (Triśikhāmudrā). Each has three varieties, thus reinforcing the original triadic reality that these Trika Mudrās reflect. They are displayed three times in their outer form as hand gestures in the course of Trika ritual.[3] The subtle variety relates to the movement of the vital breath. The supreme forms of the Gestures are aspects of the dynamism of the energies of the consciousness within Emptiness, the most essential, transcendental aspect of deity.[4]

These nine are aspects of one Gesture, namely, that of the Skyfaring goddess (khecarīmudrā), because each of these varieties ultimately leads to the liberated condition of Flight (khecaratva). Abhinava, in accord with the Tantras, also maintains that the most important Gesture is that of the Skyfarer (khecarī), although he does not identify it with the goddess as we find in the Kubjikā Tantras.[5] Padoux provides the following summary of Abhinava's complex presentation of this Gesture in the Tantrāloka:

> Khecarimudrā necessitates a particular bodily posture (and hand-gestures), an intense mental concentration on the centres of the subtle body, and a control of breath together with the utterance of a particular sound (that is its mantra aspect). The ascending and descending breaths, prāṇa and apāna, are to be fused into one and directed upwards to the highest cakra, dvadaśānta, with a meditative realisation of different forms of cosmic energy. This ascending movement of

---

[1] KMT 6/75cd-86. See further ahead where mudrā is derived from mātṛ + rudra-.

[2] See note to 6/153cd-154ab.

[3] The TS declares: Triśikhī, Padmamudrā and Yonimudrā, the third. These Mudrās are said to be Bhairava's Yoginīs. The recitor of mantra should display them three times when visualizing (the deities), in the course of (their) adoration (pūjā) and when they are dismissed.

triśikhī padmamudrā ca yonimudrā tṛtīyakā ||
etā mudrāḥ (k, kh, g: mudrā) samākhyātā yoginyo bhairavasya ca |
tridhā pradarśayen mantrī dhyānapūjāvisarjane || TS 2/119cd-120.

[4] Similarly, Abhinavagupta explains that gestures are of four kinds according to whether they are made by the hands, body, speech or mind (TĀ 32/9cd-10ab). By 'body' is meant the subtle body of the vital breaths and by 'mind' the energies of consciousness. The Gestures formed through speech are mantras. Thus the four types are reduced to the same three.

[5] KuKh 40/124.

prāṇa is compared to a trident which forms the axis of the body which, so to speak, carries the adept away up to the level of the pure Essence of Being (sattāmātra). This results in a fusion in supramental space. Simultaneously, all the bodily energies connected with the senses are pervaded by the sun of Śiva's power: thus transformed into Śiva, they illuminate the whole universe. As a result, the adept 'moves in the inner space of consciousness' (khe carati). He realizes that all the deities reside in his body, and enjoys fully the world which he realizes is entirely pervaded by divine energy. Thus he dominates the worlds 'with all their creatures stable or moving and, with the help of the sound Hā, he sees his own Self entering the Selves of others, and those of others entering his own. He roams everywhere, one, resounding, omnipresent, omnipenetrating, permanent.[1]

According to YKh (2), the practice of this Gesture is the inner sacrifice. It is a simpler version of the one described in the TĀ but is essentially the same process, which is the progressive rise of Kuṇḍalinī through the Wheels of the body leading to merger in the Supreme Void.

> Having entered into the Root Wheel in (the genitals which is) the place of birth, he should tarry (there). Having awakened (Kuṇḍalinī) whose form is (like) a sleeping serpent, he should penetrate through (the Wheels) of the Jewel, Unstruck Sound and Purity along with the Glottis (lambikā) at the end. (Then) the energy of Mudrā (maudrī), which is the original chain (that seals) Kubjikā's Void (kuvyoman), should be dissolved away in the abode of the Moon and Sun (where the two breaths emerge). Having entered the Cavity of Brahmā, he should think that it is in the Supreme Void (parākāśa). Then he should practice contemplation and (so) bring the supreme energy (there). O Śambhu, supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent), it shines with ripples, currents and waves within the universe filling it spontaneously right up to the Circle of Birth (janmamaṇḍala). Having (thus) formed the Gesture (in this way) as explained previously and raised the arm, he should extend the left hand.
>
> (This is Kuṇḍalinī who, straightened, is called) the Great Stick and is well known as Alekhyā (Indescribable). This is the gesture of the Bhairavas, gods and Siddhas (as it is of) the teachers, their apprentices (putraka), yogis and the companies of Yoginīs and heroes. The immortal gods and Gandharvas, the demons and snakes are all astonished to see it and bow on the earth (before it). That is the Gesture of the Skyfarer, it is the Transmental without blemish.[1]

---

[1] Padoux 1985: 74 with reference to TĀ 32/29-30.

The practice and experience of Gesture in this, and similar forms, is so central to the teachings of the Kubjikā Tantras that it is identified with the Command of the Tradition (anvayājñā) that represents the entire content of the transmission. Accordingly, the goddess's Kramamaṇḍala, the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala, is also commonly called Mudrāmaṇḍala[2] and occasionally Mudrāpīṭha.[3] Thus Mudrā is Saṁvartā, that is, the goddess herself who is the energy of the fire that consumes the worlds at the end of an aeon (kalpa) and burns in the centre of the maṇḍala.[4]

Again, this expression reminds us of a system of classification of the Śaiva Tantras which, as I have explained in a previous publication, serves as a means to link them to the Kaula Tantras.[5] From this perspective, the Tantras are divided into four groups associated with the sacred seats (pīṭha) of Mudrā, Maṇḍala, Mantra and Vidyā. The last of these is the most extensive and includes important Tantras such as the Brahmayāmala and the Jayadrathayāmala. The prestige of this group probably induced the redactors of the later Kubjikā Tantras to associate them with this pīṭha. Thus the colophons of the KuKh and the ŚM state that they have been 'brought (down to earth) in the Great Seat of Knowledge (vidyāpīṭha)'. This link is unknown to the KMT, the colophons of which simply state that it has been `brought down onto the Island of the Moon'. Instead the KMT declares that

---

[1] ākramya mūlacakraṁ tu janmasthāne vilambayet |
saṁbodhya buddhitattvena prasuptabhujagākṛtim [kh: prasuptā-; k, kh: -kṛtiḥ] ||
maṇi - anāhata - śuddhisālambikāntaṁ [k, kh: suddhi-] vidārayet |
kuvyomādyargalā [k, kh: kuṁvyodyādyargalā] maudrī śaśisūryapure [k, kh: -pare] layet ||
brahmarandhraṁ samāśritya [k, kh: -sṛtya] parākāśe vicintayet |
paścād dhyānaṁ prakurvīta [k, kh: prakūrvīta] ānayet paramāṁ [k, kh: paramā] kalām [k, kh: kalā] ||
āvalyūrmitarāṅgābhā [k, kh: avantyumitaraṁgābhā] viśvasyāntā [k, kh: -ntāṁ] parāparā |
pūrayantī svayaṁ śambho yāvad vai janmamaṇḍalam ||
mudrābandhaṁ kṛtaṁ paścād [k, kh: paścā] yāvat pūrvaṁ [k: pūrvva; kh: rpūrvva] nidarśitam |
bāhūrdhve [k, kh: vāhurddhe] tu praviśya [k, kh: pravṛṣṭyā] tu vāmahastaṁ prasārayet ||
tejorūpā mahādaṇḍā alekhyā nāma viśrutā |
bhairavadevasiddhānāṁ [k, kh: bhairavā deva siddhāśca] putrakācāryayoginām ||
yoginīvīrasaṅghānāṁ eṣā mudrā sudurlabhā |
amarāsuragandharvāḥ [k, kh: -rvā] piśācoragarākṣasāḥ [k: pisāco- -sā; kh: -sā] ||
vismayaṁ yānti te sarve dṛṣṭvā bhūmau namanti ca |
eṣā [k, kh: etā] sā khecarīmudrā unmanā yā nirāmayā || YKh (2) 19/24-31.

[2] See KuKh 3/164d, 45/41d, 51/23a, 60/17b and 68/49d.

[3] See, for example,. KuKh 3/57.

[4] See KuKh below 3/157-159ab.

[5] See Dyczkowski 1988: 49ff.

the goddess is associated with all four pīṭhas[1] while the KuKh says that 'she conveys the current of the Sacred Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha)[2] and, in one of her visualized forms, she holds it in one of her hands.[3] Thus the JY[4] classifies the KMT as a Tantra belonging to the Mudrāpīṭha and explains that:

> The Gesture that the Tantras of this pīṭha are said to disclose is the Gesture of the Seal of Emptiness (vyomamayī mudrā). It is one's own authentic nature (svasvabhāva) that is self-established and delights in eternal bliss. This seal is `stamped' onto all the relationships between the categories of existence and melts away all bodily bondage. When it descends onto the level of the empirical world where meditation and its object are distinct, it is variously conceived and so assumes countless forms.[5]

Present in the sacred seats in the centre and corners of the triangle from which the transmission of the three lineages proceeds,[6] it is also called Khecarīmudrā.[7] Thus the Gesture of the Transmission (kramamudrā), present in the three lineages, is the teacher in the deepest sense.[8] Mudrā is the scalpel of knowledge that removes the cataract of ignorance.[9] Just as the goddess is Speech and hence all the energies of the letters and mantras, she is also Mudrā. She is mantra and Mudrā in the three lineages.[10] As Mantramudrā, she is the Mother of all the Mothers and comes forth from the Cave,[11] that is, the triangle in centre of the maṇḍala.[12] The power of bliss and Bhairava are in the centre. Around them is the sacred field formed by the threefold gesture.[13]

Each sacred seat has its own Mudrā identified with the goddess who is the mistress of the seat (pīṭheśī).[14] The maṇḍala is the sacred dwelling place of Mudrā (mudrāśrama[15] or mudrācakra[1]) and the residence of the God (parameśvara).[2]

---

[1] KMT 7/6cd-13; see Dyczkowski 1988: 50 and 120.
[2] KuKh 68/13.
[3] KuKh 68/10.
[4] JY ṣaṭka 1 MS K fl. 183a-184a.
[5] Dyczkowski 1988: 119.
[6] KuKh 7/97.
[7] KuKh 8/80.
[8] KuKh 3/11.
[9] KuKh 5/26.
[10] KuKh 3/31cd-33ab.
[11] KuKh 3/33.
[12] trikoṇaṁ guhavāsakam KuKh 3/48d.
[13] KuKh 3/47cd-48ab.
[14] See, for example, KuKh 6/29-30.
[15] KuKh 6/2.

The triangular core is the abode (gṛha) of the Mudrā of the Yoni.[3] As the source of the transmissions (krama), each sacred seat is a Yoni in which the Mudrā which is the Command of the Tradition (anvayājñā) resides.[4] The first of all Mudrās (ādimudrā), it divides into the three sacred seats in the corners of the triangular Yoni[5] and so the maṇḍala is contained within the three Mudrās.[6] Analogously, the goddess of this, the first of all the seats (ādipīṭha), is herself divided, as it were, into three.[7] Just as Mudrā is present in each of the centres of the transmission, the same energizing grace of the Command must be present in mantras for them to be effective. The goddess who is the energy of both mantra and Mudrā, distributes their energy, differentiating them one from another. Accordingly, Mudrā is closely linked to mantra. Thus, for example, six gestures (ṣaḍimudrā) accompany the six limbs of the goddess's Vidyā.[8] When the entire Vidyā is recited, the adept should display the Gesture of the Yoni (yonimudrā).[9] Similarly, five Gestures correspond to the Five Praṇavas[10] that constitute the Vidyā of five syllables (pañcākṣarī). The residence of goddess is a sacred seat (pīṭha). Thus, the Five Praṇavas, energized by the Command in this way are also five sacred seats.[11] In order to be successful, the initiate who seeks liberation should know and practice both.[12] Knowledge of Mudrā is supreme bliss.[13] There is no essential difference between Mudrā displayed at a sacred site, whether externally or in the maṇḍala, and the utterance of a mantra. The three – sacred place, gesture and sound – operate together, powerful with the same energy of grace, that is, the Command.

Referring to the god, the ŚM says that 'he is born from the body of the three channels (nāḍī) and is energized from above with the (energy of) Gesture.'[14] Gesture in this case is the Half Moon, the Point and the other higher levels of Unstruck Sound. The Saṁvartāsūtra, with which the KuKh begins, refers to this as the Gesture of the Void (khamudrā). Thus the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala is called Mudrāmaṇḍala not only because it is the maṇḍala of the goddess Mudrā, but also

---

[1] KuKh 46/19.
[2] KuKh 13/113ab.
[3] KuKh 7/46-47ab.
[4] KuKh 7/93-94ab.
[5] Ibid.
[6] KuKh 30/173cd.
[7] KuKh 8/87.
[8] KuKh 10/34-35.
[9] KuKh 10/36.
[10] KuKh 8/124cd-12.
[11] KuKh 9/20-2.
[12] KuKh 8/127.
[13] KuKh 59/55c.
[14] trināḍipiṇḍasaṁbhūtaṁ mudrayā cordhvadīpitam | ŚM 11/144ab.

because it represents the upper spheres of the development of the energy of Sound. The essence of this maṇḍala is the triangular Yoni of the goddess, the Sacred Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha), which is the triangular letter E consisting of three measures of energies (mātrā). The addition of a 'half measure' (ardhamātrā) converts it into the syllable AIṀ.[1] This energy is Mudrā, that is, the upper, awakened and energizing Kuṇḍalinī. It is also the seed-syllable of the goddess. Thus in their most essential nature as spiritual energy, Mudrā and mantra are one – both equally the goddess.

Kubjikā as Kuleśvarī, the Supreme Goddess of the Kula

Kubjikā is not just the Great or Supreme Goddess – Mahādevī, or Parameśvarī – she is also a Great Kaula Goddess. Her names denote who she is. They indicate her nature. Specific names only she possesses denote her specific nature. Those she shares with other goddesses imply her common identity with them and those she shares in common with all of them serve to establish her grounding in that unique nature that only the Great Goddess possesses. Just as Kubjikā is addressed with the names common to the Great Goddess in general, she is also frequently called by those names that are common to great Kaula goddesses. They are not specific independent goddesses with whom Kubjikā is identified such as Kālī or Mālinī. They are names of the universal Great Goddess of the Kaula and Bhairava Tantras. Although these names are necessarily abstract and generic, thus allowing for universal application, like all the goddesses denoted by them Kubjikā implicitly appropriates them as specifically her own. They suggest that it is Kubjikā who is THE Kaula Goddess. This process is most evident in those names that denote her supreme status in the Kula. These include Kaulinī, Kaulikī (or Kaulikā), Kauleśī (or Kaulīśā), Kaulikeśvarī, Kaulikīśakti, Kulakaulinī and Kuleśvarī.

Throughout our text, it is mostly the goddess who speaks, responding to the questions the god asks her. Her speeches are generally introduced with the standard expression '(the goddess) Vakrā said (vakrovāca)' or sometimes – '(the goddess) Kubjikā said (kubjikovāca)'. In a few places Kaulinī speaks. She is, in other words, the goddess herself, not an emanation or a particular form of her. Accordingly the Gāyatrī of the goddess Kubjikā refers to her as Kulakaulinī and Mahākaulinī.[2]

---

[1] See intro. vol. 1, p. 192 n. 3.

[2] In Newar ritual this mantra is recited when lighting a lamp. It is called the Lamp of Kula (kuladīpa) and is offered to the goddess and to all the deities who accompany her.

The goddess is both Kula itself (kularūpiṇī)[1] and the deity of her Kula (kuladevatā).[2] She is Kulakaulinī and her consort is the Lord of Kula (kulanātha).[3] As the mistress of the Kula, the goddess is frequently called Kaulinī throughout our text. The Divine Triangle of the Yoni is Kula. The goddess who exerts her authority in the centre is appropriately called Kaulinī. To refer to Kubjikā as Kaulinī or Kuleśvarī is to indicate the she is essentially the goddess of all the energies and divine forms that embody them. She is the fundamental identity of all the Kaula goddesses, just as they are all her.

The name and its synonyms, all of which can be prefixed with the honorific 'śrī-', remind us that she is the consort of Kaulīśa and the goddess of the Kula, which is the divine family, the Śrīkula.[4] She is the mistress of the house, the eldest and most senior member (jyeṣṭhā) of the household.[5] She is the deity of the household (kuladevatā) both of the Siddhas and Yoginīs in the human world through which her energy is transmitted and of the family of gods and goddesses configured around and within her. Thus Kaulinī is the mother of all the religions (darśana)[6] in general and in a special way of the Kaula ones, which are the final stage and highest Path to which they all lead. As Kaulinī, Kubjikā is not just one of many Kaula goddesses, she is the original goddess and hence supreme goddess of all the Kaula schools and, indeed, the Supreme Goddess (paramevarī) herself.

Moreover, as the goddess of the Kula, she is its divine power of grace, the Command that descends down into the world and is transmitted from master to disciple.[7] As such she is Kuṇḍalinī, the original form of the deities of each of the lineages. Thus when she descends down into the world and becomes the object of devotion and the dispenser of grace to her devotees, she assumes the form of the goddesses of each of the lineages. At the higher, transcendental level, she is the plane of the knowledge of all the Siddhas[8] in all the lineages. Generated from Kaula, the transcendent Absolute, Kaulinī is the first sprout of creation - the divine, omnipotent will from which both the universe and the teachings develop.[9] As their source Kaulinī is the Divine Triangle of the Yoni[10] and the energy of Kula,[11] the one divine power that is the aggregate - kula - of all the energies of the [1] KuKh 2/39ab. See below, p. 283 ff. concerning the meaning of the word 'kula' and related terms.

---

[2] KuKh 3/19cd.
[3] KuKh 3/50, 3/88cd.
[4] See below, p. 277.
[5] KuKh 4/14-16ab.
[6] See YKh (1) 4/179cd-180 quoted in note to KuKh 30/164cd-166. Concerning the term 'darśana', see below, p. 329 ff..
[7] KuKh 4/23cd-24, 4/17cd-18.
[8] KuKh 24/60.
[9] KuKh 35/76cd ff..
[10] KuKh 3/17.
[11] KuKh 26/50.

god who, as their possessor, transcends them and so is Akula (lit. 'not Kula'). She is the displayed, active form in which the divine energies, deployed in this divine symmetry, act together in harmony to generate the world and the perfect beings through which her liberating energy is transmitted. Moreover, as Kaulinī, she is also the goddess of the centre.[1] There she is symbolically represented by a Point (bindu). This is the Command in which all the energies are gathered together and from where they are emanated. In this aspect she is Akula. As the Command, she is pure spiritual energy that radiates as the three energies of will, knowledge and action, which form the Triangle in the centre of her maṇḍala.[2] In this aspect she is Kula. Then, when she emanates the six energies that form the hexagram that envelopes the central triangle,[3] she is Kaula which means 'belonging to Kula', that is, emanated from it. Accordingly, she is also called Kulakaulinī, the churning Bhairavī[4] who by her inner dynamic nature arouses the forces within herself and, from the centre, places each one in their proper location. Once there, they can act - create or destroy, grace or chastise - within the jurisdiction of their sacred site, in accord with the authority they possess by the grace of Kaulinī's Command. Like them, she exerts her authority in consonance with her location but the jurisdiction of the centre is the entire expanse, not just a part. Thus she declares that she is Kaulinī who possesses authority in the Western House - the Divine Triangle of the Yoni.[5] At the same time she too observes the ordinance of the divine Command and so attains the supreme state - Nirvāṇa - where she unites with Śiva in that mysterious union in which her perfect purity, symbolized by her untainted virginity, remains intact.[6] She is the lunar goddess Kubjikā who is at once both the New and the Full Moon.[7]

Kaulinī is Mālinī, the embodiment of the fifty phonemic energies of the Speech through which all things are generated and destroyed and she governs from the centre.[8] She is also the triple Vidya Parā, Parāparā and Aparā[9] and the Five Praṇavas which are, accordingly, also called Kaulinī or Kaulikī Vidyā.[10] In her formless aspect she is the Samayā Vidyā of thirty-two syllables and its extended version consisting of forty-two syllables produced by adding the Five Praṇavas to the beginning and end of it.[11]

---

[1] KuKh 35/19.
[2] KuKh 3/19.
[3] KuKh 24/48.
[4] KuKh 3/50.
[5] KuKh 3/16.
[6] KuKh 3/63-64ab.
[7] KuKh 24/26.
[8] KuKh 5/48.
[9] KuKh 20/1ff..
[10] KuKh 27/15, 8/108cd-109ab.
[11] KuKh 9/67-68.

Kubjikā, the Skyfaring Khecarī

Kubjikā's identification with Khecarī signifies that she is a supreme Kaula goddess. It is equivalent to calling her Kuleśvarī or the like. This way of understanding the great Kaula goddesses underscores their prominent celestial features and equates them. Thus YKh (1) declares that: '(Kubjikā) is the goddess Khageśvarī, the immortal pure Kālī.'[1] Supreme Deity is invariably understood to be essential, pure and sacred consciousness represented as a transcendental Emptiness variously called Void (śūnya), Sky (vyoman, kha, gagana, viyat) or Space (ākāśa). The goddess is the energy of consciousness embodied in mantra. She is the energy Beyond Mind (unmanī), who is the Void of the Cave of the Yoni.[2] She moves freely in the transcendental Sky of Consciousness as the Bird Goddess who is variously called Khecarī, Khagā, Khageśī, and occasionally Khageśvarī,[3] Gaganeśī and Haṁsī. Paradoxically, she moves most freely in the Void, as Khañjinī, the 'lame' goddess, as the Tantra says:

> Khecarī is in the midst of the Void. Established in the Void she is Khañjinī, (the pure conscious energy that is) free of mind.[4]

Accordingly, the goddess says about herself:

> "(I am) the Skyfaring (Khageśvarī), the goddess of the gods who is pure and without beginning or end. I am Khañjinī who, in the form of Kula, am the energy of consciousness in (all) four Ages. As the essential nature of pure awakened consciousness, (I am) Kuleśvarī in the Void of Consciousness."[5]

The goddess is only occasionally called Khañjinī (lit. 'She Who Walks with a Limp') in the KMT.[6] Even so the KMT takes the trouble to formulate a didactic etymology of her name, which is as follows:

---

[1] sā vai khageśvarī devī amarī śuddhakālikā || YKh (1) 19/39cd.

[2] mantramūrtir bhagākārā [gh: -gaḥkāraḥ] vidyāhaṁ khecarī guhā || YKh (1) 18/6cd.

[3] The goddess is called Khageśvarī only once in the KMT (17/77b) whereas Khecarī more than ten times. The former name is more common in the later sources.

[4] khamadhye [k, gh: -madhya; ṅ: -dhyā] khecarī [k, g, gh, ṅ: khacarā] khasthā khañjanī [ṅ: khañjinī] manavarjitā | YKh (1) 35/76ab.

[5] anādivimalānantā devadevī [k, gh, ṅ: devā-] khageśvarī |
citkalā kularūpeṇa khañjiny ahaṁ [k, gh: khaṁjanyāhaṁ; ṅ: khaṁjamyāgaṁ] caturyuge [k, gh, ṅ: -gā] |
śuddhabodhasvarūpeṇa [k, gh, ṅ: suddha-; g: -rūpena] cidākāśe [gh: -śaṁ] kuleśvarī ||
YKh (1) 34/35cd-36.

[6] See KMT 16/19 and 3/36b,16/15b for Khañjī and 16/20c, 21a,17/30d, 24/102a for Khañjikā.

> I have told you about Khañjinī repeatedly, again and again. Khañjinī, who is in the subtle (reality) within the subtle reality (vastu), is so called because the universe is in the middle of her and she is in the middle of the universe.[1]

The commentary on the ṢSS supplies another such etymology of the goddess's name. This one explains that the goddess is called Khañjikā because she is the Void (kha) from which all manifestation is generated.

> How is it (that the goddess is called) Khañjinī? 'Kha' is space (ākāśa) and like that 'ji' gives birth (janayati), that is, generates. When she is within the emanation and withdrawal etc. of the universe she is Khañjī. This is (the meaning of the name) Khañjikā.[2]

Kubjikā is so intimately identified with the Skyfaring goddess that her tradition is called the Khecarīkula. The lineage of the deity's tradition is the most excellent Skyfaring goddess herself.[3] Her motion through the Void is the liberated state. It is the flow of the Divine Current (divyaugha) of the Transmental, the Transmission of the Skyfarers (khecarīkrama) in its eighteen phases: [4]

> That movement is skyfaring and that skyfaring is praised by (all great) Kaula adepts (vīra). (Indeed,) that is undoubtedly liberation – this is the Supreme Goddess's Command and, as the division of the sequence of eighteen, it is deity called Khañjinī, the skyfaring goddess (Khageśvarī) who (is present in the body) from the feet upwards and is always merged in the (liberated state) beyond the Fourth.[5]

---

[1] KMT 16/20 = ṢSS 25/46.

[2] khañjinī tu katham || khaṁ ākāśaṁ tadvat ji iti janayati utpādayati || viśvasya sṛṣṭisaṁhārādau tadā khañjī || iti khañjikā ||

[3] śaṁbhoḥ [ṅ: -bho] śrīkramasantatiḥ [k, kh, gh: -tī; ṅ: śrīkamasaṁtatī] paratarā nāthakrame [k, kh, gh: - kreme] khecarī [k, kh, gh: khacarā; ṅ: -rā] | YKh (1) 26/11c.

[4] The eighteen forms of the Divine Current are described in chapter 57 of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa, to which the reader is referred.

[5] sā gatiḥ [k, g, gh, ṅ: khagati] khegatiś caiva khagatir vīravanditā [k: śvagatirvīra-; g: khagati-; gh: śvagativīra-; ṅ: sva-] ||
sā muktir [gh: mūrti] nātra saṁdeha ity ājñā pārameśvarī |
daśāṣṭakramabhedena [ṅ: deśāṣṭa-] khañjinī [g: jaṁjijī] nāma devatā ||
turyātīte sadā līnā āpādādikhageśvarī | YKh (1) 34/111cd-113ab.

Khecarī is sometimes coupled with Bhūcarī. Both are aspects of the one Transmental energy. As the Skyfarer, she moves in transcendental Emptiness;[1] as the Yoginī who moves on the Earth (bhūcarī) she pervades and flows through the sphere of immanence. Thus she is also the Supreme Energy that resides in the body.[2] There is essentially only one Goddess Khecarī, but she has countless energies that move through the same Void and so are also called Khecarīs. Their companions are the liberated souls, the Skyfarers.[3] As the congregation of energies in the Void, they form the Khecarīcakra, experienced in the summit of the End of the Twelve. In the centre of the Wheel, Khecarī is Kuṇḍalinī who is Unstruck Sound.[4] This is the 'eternal plane' of the Lord, his abode (sthāna), the maṇḍala established within him and within the Void.[5]

The goddess in all the sacred seats is Kubjikā and is clearly stated to be so in most cases in chapter six of our text. In Oḍḍiyāna, she is called Khecarī or Khageśī,[6] the consort of Bhairava, Khageśa, the Mistress and Lord of the Skyfarers. Oḍḍiyāna is the first sacred seat and hence the one closest to the supreme transcendental state of Voidness, which is the Sky in which the Skyfarers fly. Thus it is particularly connected with the Flight of the liberated state.[7]

Kubjikā, the Supreme Bhairavī

Kubjikā, like all Kaula goddess, is the consort of a Bhairava. Although she may also be represented without him, she is understood to be such and so is referred to generically, like all Kaula goddesses, as Bhairavī.[8] As Bhairavī she is not just the wife of the god duly married to him, she is also his Kaula partner. The [1] Phreṁ! Very free and playful (sucañcalā), she is seen moving in the Void. One should contemplate the skyfaring (khecarī) Kubjikā in the middle of the Void.

---

phreṁ gagane dṛśyate sā tu gamyamānā sucañcalā ||
kubjikāṁ [k, kh: -kā] khecarīṁ [k, kh: -rī] madhye gagane [kh: gagaṇe] bhāvayet sadā |
YKh (2) 20/10cd-11ab.

[2] khecarīś ca parāśaktir mālinī dehavāsikā [all MSs: vāsakaṁ] | YKh (1) 29/49ab.

[3] One should know her to be Vakrikā, who is surrounded by the Skyfarers.

vakrikā nāma sā jñeyā khecaraiḥ [g: khecara; YKh 2: śivatejaja] pariveṣṭitā [k: -ta; gh: -veṣṭhita; ṅ: -taḥ; 2: samudbhavā] || YKh (1) 34/21cd = YKh (2) 20/10ab.

[4] *tvam ekā [ṅ: tvāmeke] khecarīcakre anackākārakuṇḍalī [k, gh: ānakvākāra-; ṅ: ana * rkarakuṇḍalī]* | YKh (1) 26/31ab.

[5] khamadhye khecarīśasya khagīśasthaṁ [k, g, gh: khaśīśasthaṁ] ca maṇḍalam ||
sthānaṁ [g: sthāna] ca saṁpuṭaṁ [gh: -ṭa] tasya jñātvā [k, gh, ṅ: kṛtā] ca [gh: va] śāśvataṁ [k, g, gh: sāśvataṁ; ṅ: sāsvataṁ] padam | YKh (1) 31/93cd-94ab.

[6] KuKh 6/29-31.

[7] See KMT 2/40 quoted in intro. 1, p. 81, note 3.

[8] See, for example, KuKh 68/6.

Krama belongs to Bhairava accompanied by Bhairavī.[1] The Yoginīs who reside in the sacred sites of the eight Mothers, identified as aspects of Kubjikā, are called Bhairavīs for the same reason, that is, because they are each consorts of a Bhairava who resides there.[2] 'Śakti', 'Dūti' and 'Bhairavī' are all ways of referring to the consort engaged with her partner in Kaula ritual.

Like Kuleśvarī, Bhairavī is a common generic name for a Kaula goddess. But in this case also Kubjikā is not just one Bhairavī out of many, Bhairavī is so much a part of Kubjikā's essential identity that in the ŚM it is as Bhairavī that Bhairava praises her to evoke her out of the Liṅga.[3]

Each one of Kubjikā's many names represents a goddess she has incorporated into herself. Each name denotes a different form and with it a separate identity. The many names are not just names, each one IS that goddess. At the same time, they are all the one goddess. Thus, in the following passage, which exemplifies many others like it, the one goddess is not just addressed with many names, she is contemplated as many goddesses:

> (She is) the Vidyā who bears Bhairava's form (mūrtikā). The energy of Kālī in the Age of Strife, she is Kaulinī come forth from the divine in Hara's teaching. On the Krama path she should be praised as Umā and Carcikā. She is Khecarī marked with Śrīnātha, to whom the gods bow (suranutā). She is the mistress of the wheel (cakreśvarī), Vakrikā within the couple (yugmānte) (of Śiva and Śakti) and the supreme energy.[4]

Each goddess with which Kubjikā is identified possesses the same basic metaphysical and theological attributes as the others. They are the supreme energy (parā kalā) that contains all the energies. They are Speech, Unstruck Sound and the energies of the letters. They relate to the inner vital breath which, at the lower level, is the individual soul and Bhairava, the universal Self, at the higher. As such Bhairava is Haṁsa and the goddess is his energy, Haṁsī. Combining both aspects, Speech and Breath, each Great Kaula Goddess is Kuṇḍalinī. In terms of their relation to the Absolute Being they are all the Transmental (unmanī) which is the Command, the energy of consciousness, the pure cosmogenetic will and Śāmbhavī (the energy

---

[1] KuKh 7/5cd-7.

[2] See KuKh 16/16 ff..

[3] See intro. vol. 1, p. 34 ff. where the Bhairavīstotra is translated in full.

[4] vidyā bhairavamūrtikā kaliyuge [k, kh, gh: kaliryege] kālīkalā kaulinī divyotthā [k, kh, gh: divyotā; ṅ: vivyātā] haraśāsane [ṅ: hata-] kramapathe stutyā [k: stuṣyā; ṅ: puṣpā] umā carcikā |
śrīnāthāṅkitakhecarī [k, kh, gh: -nāthākita-] suranutā cakreśvarī vakrikā [ṅ: carcikā] yugmānte ca parā kalā YKh (1) 26/30abc.

of the supreme Śāmbhava state), each is the goddess of Emptiness – Khecarī and the Supreme Goddess (Parameśvarī, Mahādevī) who is the leader (nāyikā) who governs the Kula – Kuleśvarī. As the consort of the god, they are Bhairavī. Thus Kubjikā is Bhairavī who is the power of Speech, which is the Transmental energy (unmanīśakti) of mantra through which the world is created, sustained and destroyed. She is the energy of OṀ,[1] Śāmbhavī who sits with Bhairava in the centre of the triangle.[2]

Bhairava's name is derived from three roots - bhṛ, ram and vam in the sense of filling or sustaining, sporting and emitting, respectively.[3] Bhairavī's name is derived in a similar way in the Kubjikā sources.

> Bhairavī is the energy (kalā) Kaulinī who, without having emerged out (of herself) (anāśritā), is the pervasion (of consciousness) in Kula. Assuming the form of Bhairava, she emits (vamate) (the fruits of actions) one has earnt in the past. O Bhairava, she sports (ramet) in the eighteen forms (of the Divine Current of the Transmental) and so she is (called) Bhairavī.[4]

In the following three references her name is related only to the first of these roots. She is Bhairavī because she is full (bharitā) of her lunar energies and the Void:

> O mother of Mitra! I salute the venerable (goddess) called Kujā, the lord and goddess who, full (of her energies) (bharitā), is the ferocious (ugrā) Bhairavī who travels to the plane at the extremity of (the energy of the) New Moon (amā).

> Bhairavī is the full (bharitā) energy (of the Moon), the power Śāmbhavī (who, emerging) from the (very) root, is supreme, subtle and gross. She is the tranquil (nistaraṅgā) Mind Beyond Mind, the certain (indefinable) Transmental energy of consciousness that, stainless, is consciousness.[5]

---

[1] KuKh 60/6.
[2] KuKh 3/39.
[3] See KuKh 2/42-43 and notes.
[4] KuKh 57/79cd-80.
[5] āmūlāc chāmbhavī [g: ?] śaktiḥ [k g: śakti] bhairavī bharitā [k: bharatā] kalā |
*parā [g: + sūkṣma su] sūkṣmā susthūlā [k, g: * * ] ca nistaraṅgā [g: nistaṅgā] manonmanī [k: manotmī(?)] |
unmanā citakalā [g: citkalā] kācit cinmayā tu nirañjanā | YKh (1) 43/84-85ab.

> Known, Śāmbhavī is the goddess Supreme who is the mother of the divine and mortal current of Siddhas. She is Śivā, who (both) tranquil (and yet) active (udyatā), has come forth, full of the Void (khabharitā), in the middle of my body.[1]

Bhairavī is a generic name, as is the male equivalent, Bhairava. Her full name is adapted from that of her Bhairava. For example, when he is Manthānabhairava, she is Manthānabhairavī:

> And in its centre, in the great abode (mahatpura) of the Churning (Bhairava), is authority. (There) the energy of the divisions is the Churning Bhairavī who is Kulakaulinī.[2]
>
> She is the goddess Vakrā who, facing downwards,[3] is well established in the form of a Liṅga.[4] And the Self resides in (the centre), the heart (of the maṇḍala) and is the lord (nāyaka) Piṅgala who is white.[5]

Most specifically Kubjikā is the Bhairavī of Navātmābhairava, who is a form of Svacchandabhairava to whom we now turn.

---

[1] niṣkrāntā tanumadhye me [k, kh, gh: -madhyamoṁ; ṅ: -madhya mā] khabharitā [ṅ: khasaritā] śāntā śivā sodyatā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: sādyatā]
*devyā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: divyā] divyādivyasiddhaughajananī [k, kh, gh: divya adivya oghajananī; ṅ: divya adivya * dyajanī] jñātā [k, kh, gh: jñātvā; ṅ: tvā ] parā śāmbhavī | YKh (1) 26/24ab.

[2] The 'divisions' of the Command are those of the Krama (see KuKh vol. 6, appendix 8). Kubjikā, the Churning Bhairavī is the Command and these are her 'divisions' (bheda). Presumably, they also include the parts of the Triangle and what they represent. The couple in the centre - authority and the energy of the Command - are here identified as Manthānabhairava and Manthānabhairavī. The power-holder is the authority in the centre who possesses and directs the power of the Command that spreads from him into the triangular field and its parts, which collectively constitute the Kula. The goddess is accordingly called the Kaulinī (lit. 'woman of a good family') of the Kula (lit. 'the family') of the Western House represented by the Triangle.

[3] Cf. KuKh 7/43cd-44ab.

[4] See ibid. 3/13-14ab and note.

[5] Ibid. 3/50-51. It is strange that Piṅgala, whose name literally means, 'brown' or 'tawny' should be said to be white. Perhaps the Piṅgala meant here is the fifth, and highest, of the five forms of Bhairava called the Five Siddhas. They each generate and govern one of the gross elements. Piṅgala is the lord of Space (ākāśa) (see ibid. 25/41-45ab and 46/35-37). According to one account Piṅgala is the First Siddha who descends into the world and generates the others who teach from the main sacred seats (ibid. 46/42cd-49ab). Thus Piṅgala is Bhairava himself as the First Teacher in the maṇḍala, the consort of the naked sky goddess (nagnavāsā) (cf. ibid. 3/44) who is called Piṅgalā (ibid. 15/18ab).

Aghorā the Consort of Svacchandabhairava

Tantric systems develop by a process of accretion from the systems that preceded them. It is therefore possible to arrange them roughly in chronological order and discern remnants of earlier systems and even pre-Tantric strata in them. Although breaks and distinctions between traditions are evident, there is always a no less evident continuity between them. The reason for this is simple. New Tantric systems are constructed by the initiates of earlier ones. As we go from one to the other and each one evolves, we retrace their history rising, as it were, from lower, earlier systems to higher, later ones. Viewed by initiates from the inside, this journey through time is marked by the rungs of the ladder of initiation they ascend to gain access to their own school, which for them is the highest.

This continuity and change is variously discernable, according to the perspective from which it is viewed. One of the most natural and simple ways to link one tradition to another is, as with human beings - marriage. United the couple absorb, in various ways and degrees, each other's qualities and attributes. The goddess is the feminine form of the god just as he is her masculine counterpart. She is Khecarī, he is Khecara. He is Haṁsa, she is Haṁsī. He is Kuleśvara and she is Kuleśvarī. He is Bhairava and she is Bhairavī. In this case most specifically, she is Kubjikā and he is Kubjeśvara.[1]

As the Kaula cults evolve and new ones develop first in the Bhairava Tantras and then independently, the male polarity shrinks in consonance with the growth of the female one. This development relates to the entire pantheon, not just the central couple. The configurations of divine forms in the main maṇḍala and subsidiary ones and their gender, whether solitary males, couples or solitary females reflects the gender and gender relationship of the centre. The Bhairava Tantras are distinguished from the Siddhānta Āgamas as a whole (although there are important exceptions) by their markedly extensive development of the feminine. Thus they are the original homes of what is loosely termed Śākta Tantrism to which the Tantras refer as Kaula traditions (kulāmnāya), practice (kulācāra) or, in the later sources, Kaula 'religion' or 'code of conduct' (kuladharma). A cardinal feature of these traditions, in all their varied forms, is the proliferation of Yoginīs. The Great Kaula Goddesses are all Yoginīs and from them, emanate countless Yoginīs, just as the Mothers emanate from Durgā's body.

---

[1] See, for example, the hymn addressed to Bhairava at the beginning of the ŚM where it is clear that many of the metaphysical attributes of the god also belong to the goddess.

In YKh (1) we read concerning the goddess: Assuming Bhairava's form, free of (the maṇḍala) consisting of six parts, she plays.

bhairavaṁ rūpam ādāya ramate [k, gh, ṅ: vasate; g: vamate] ṣaṭpurojjhitam [k, gh: yabhagajitaṁ; g: ṣutpurojitaṁ; ṅ: yebhagajitaṁ] || YKh (1) 36/80cd.

As the cults developed, the Yoginīs came to be progressively systematically associated with the Mothers in 'families' – Kula – governed by them and, to varying degrees, the Bhairavas who are their consorts.

We can observe the earliest phase of these developments in the Brahmayāmala (which may be as early as the eighth or even seventh century) where we already find a well formed Yoginī cult. There the main deity is Kāpālīśa Bhairava but he is already deeply embedded in the feminine. This is outwardly evidenced by the Yoginīs who emanate from his body arranged in the eight directions around him and inwardly by his mantra which is dedicated to Caṇḍākāpālinī, his consort. By the time we reach the cult of Śrīvidyā that emerges in South India perhaps in the late 11th century after that of the goddess Kubjikā (which probably emerged in the 9th or 10th century), we find the Great Kaula Goddess and Yoginī, Kāmeśvarī / Tripurasundarī virtually alone in the centre of her maṇḍala, the Śrīcakra. There she is surrounded entirely by female attendants. Her partner is barely present in the centre and she is almost invariably portrayed alone. He would have disappeared totally were it not for the necessity of the male polarity which the union of opposites - the central axiom of all Tantric cults - requires.

We observe another example in the Mahānaya phase of development of the Kālīkrama in Kashmir. There the central deity is Kālasaṁkarṣinī, a form of Kālī also called Kṛṣā (the Thin One). As the Yoginī, she is Maṅgalā. In the centre of a maṇḍala consisting of Sixty-four Yoginīs, accompanied by as many Siddhas, she consumes the Bhairava of Time, her consort. So he is her partner just for the time it takes for her to devour him![1]

One could say that the situation in the Kubjikā Tantras is more balanced although, as we would expect, the goddess gets most of the attention. Most often Bhairava appears in relation to her, rather than independently. But despite his secondary position with respect to the goddess in the Kubjikā Tantras, Bhairava remains a powerful presence. This is especially the case in the early phase of their development. He remains important throughout because, while Kubjikā is the First Deity (ādidevatā), he is the First Teacher (ādinātha), although the texts make it clear that he enjoys this position of authority (adhikāra) by virtue of the empowerment he receives by the goddess's Command. The Kubjikā sources refer to him as Navātmābhairava,[2] a name derived from his seed-syllable which consists of nine letters. Although the texts never tell us this directly, he is a form of Svacchandabhairava, a fact which is clearly evidenced by this seed-syllable they share in common.

---

[1] See MP (2) p. 6.
[2] The visualized form of Navātmābhairava is described below on p. 425 ff.. Concerning Navātmābhairava as the first teacher see p. 423 ff..

The cult of Svacchandabhairava and the Tantra that bears his name has been influential in many of the Śaiva Siddhāntas, so much so that the SvT was given pride of place in the canons of the Siddhānta Āgamas as the primary Tantra of the so-called right current of Śaivism.[1] It has also had a strong influence on most, if not all, the major schools that evolved within the fold of the Bhairava Tantras including the Kulāgama, their direct development. The five-headed Svacchandabhairava is a permutation of the mild Siddhānta Sadāśiva fit to be worshipped in the Bhairava Tantras, as are the other deities there, with alcohol and meat, offerings that are unsuitable for Sadāśiva. As his alias, Aghora ('Not Fierce') suggests, Svacchanda is a mild form of Bhairava. As such he serves as a bridge between the benign Sadāśiva ('Always Auspicious') of the Siddhānta Āgamas who is largely worshipped in a Liṅga and the fierce Bhairavas and goddesses of the cults of the Bhairava and subsequent Kaula Tantras. Indeed, Svacchandabhairava is the basic form of Bhairava for the cults of the Bhairava Tantras as a whole, adapting to them in accord with their form. Moreover, as Aghora, he is present in later Śaiva traditions in many ways just as we find him all over the subcontinent - wherever, that is, Āgamic Śaivism spread. Modern Śaivites from Kashmir venerate him as Bahurūpa. 11th century manuscripts of his Tantra are preserved in Nepal where in the Kathmandu Valley, he is still venerated by the Newars although he has no temples of his own.[2] South Indian Siddhāntins draw from the SvT to construct their Śaiva liturgies. Svacchandabhairava's mantra is important in all the Śaivāgamas ranging from the Siddhānta[3] through to the Kaula Tantras. It is still an important mantra nowadays. The Nāga sannyasins of the Jūnā Ākhāra of the Nāga Daśanāmī order, for example, still receive this mantra in the course of their initiation. Kīnarāmis also devoutly repeat the Aghora mantra. In this and other ways Svacchandabhairava continues to be an esoteric presence woven into the rich fabric of contemporary Śaiva cults in modern India, just as he was in the past.

The roots of Svacchandabhairava's cult can be traced to the pre-āgamic Pāśupatas. The Pāśupatasūtra, which may be as early as the 4th century AD, is

---

[1] The Kāraṇāgama (1/26/58b ff.) declares: One should know that Śaivism is of four kinds. Śaiva, Pāśupata, Soma and Lākula - these are said to be the four types. Pure Śaiva (śuddhaśaivaka) is of three kinds - Left (vāma), Right (dakṣiṇa) and Siddhānta. The Śaiva of the Left is the first discipline (ādiśāstra) that is, the Tantra of the root descent (of the Śaiva scriptures into the world). The Śaiva of the Right is said to be the scriptures (śāstra) Svacchanda and the rest. The (twenty-eight) Tantras beginning with Kāmika are said to be the Siddhāntas.

[2] The absence of temples to Svacchandabhairava is a notable feature of his cult. Although the god is a Bhairava, his cult is essentially a Siddhāntin one. Even so, the esoteric character of Bhairava cults is maintained.

[3] The mantra is given in full, broken up into *pāda*s in SvT 1/41-43 (See below, p. 55, note 3). It is also found in a slightly variant form, for example, in the Rauravāgama of the Siddhānta (see ibid vol. 1, p. 26, note 20). There it is called the Bhairavamahāmantra from which eight more mantras are derived, each of which evoke a part of Aghora. They are used to construct Śiva's body.

our earliest textual source of the Pāśupata cult. There the cult is centered on Rudra who is Paśupati - the Lord of the Creatures. He has five aspects, the mantras of which are drawn from the Taittarīyāraṇyaka[1] and recorded in the PāSū.[2] These five later developed in the Siddhānta Āgamas as the five faces of Sadāśiva, one of which is Aghora, who was identified with Svacchandabhairava and retained his mantra.[3]

This development must have taken place close to the beginning of the formation of the first Śaiva Tantras. The SvT belongs to the Bhairava current of Śaiva Āgamic scripture, it is not a Siddhānta Āgama. According to the dominant system of classification of the scriptures of the Bhairava current, it belongs to the Mantrapīṭha. We have notices of other Bhairava Tantras belonging to this pīṭha ('collection'), but this is the only one that has survived.[4] A many layered text, its final form is systematic and compact, despite its size. It presents, for example, in an orderly and lucid manner the rites of initiation of which an essential part is a clear and detailed exposition of the Six Paths. Thus, although a Bhairava Tantra, it follows the model of the Siddhāntas, to which it also contributes. The deity of the Mantrapīṭha is Bhairava and so it differs from the Siddhāntas. The Mantrapīṭha also differs from the Tantras of the Vidyāpīṭha of the Bhairava current in two most evident ways. One is the Bhairava of the former strongly dominates his consort. The system is clearly Śaiva. The second difference is a corollary of the first. Feminine forms play a secondary role in the system. They are little more than names of energies of the god. The Vidyāpīṭha, on the contrary is full of powerful feminine forms called Yoginīs. These are of many types and, set in countless configurations, they breed an immense variety of supreme goddesses.

The absence of these Yoginī cults and the sacred geography, which in the course of their development, came to accompany them is a sign that the SvT preceded the Tantras of the Vidyāpīṭha. The SvT does contain a section dealing with the secret signs and gestures (chommaka) adepts and Yoginīs make when they meet each other in the course of pilgrimage to their sacred sites. However, this topic, which is typical of the later Yoginī oriented Tantric traditions, is certainly an interpolation. Otherwise, the rest of the SvT is blissfully oblivious of the Yoginī cults, as it is of the Kaula Tantras. Thus, it may well predate at least

---

[1] TaiĀr 10/45.

[2] See PāSū 3/21-26.

[3] See above, p. 51, note 3.

[4] Referring to itself SvT (1/5cd) says that it 'the great Tantra of the four *pīṭha*s, the arising of the fruit of the group of four.' By way of explanation, Kṣemarāja quotes the Sarvavīratantra which ennumerates the four pīṭhas of the scriptures (Mudrā-, Maṇḍala-, Mantra- and Vidyā-) (see intro. vol. 1, p. 576) and a verse that lists the four Tantras of the Mantrapīṭha, namely, Caṇḍa, Krodha, Unmatta and Svacchandabhairava Tantras. SvT vol. 1, p. 4-5.

those Siddhāntāgamas which admit the existence of the Kaula Tantras.[1] But this is hard to assess as references to the Kaula Tantras, as a group, in some the Siddhāntāgamas, at least, are probably later interpolations.

The SvT knows nothing of the sacred sites dear to the later Śaiva traditions, its sacred geography is not made up of sacred seats (pīṭha) or 'meeting grounds' (saṁdoha) or the like, as we find in the Bhairava and Kaula Tantras. Instead, the few sacred sites that are mentioned are called tīrthas – 'fords' or 'bathing places', as they are in the Purāṇas. They are:

1) Mahendra, 2) Malaya, 3) Sahya, 4) Pāriyātra, 5) Arbuda, 6) Vindhya, 7) Śrīparvata, 8) Kaullaśaila, 9) the banks of the rivers Gaṅgā and Yamunā, 10) Kurukṣetra, 11) Gaṅgādvāra, 12) Prayāga, 13) Brahmāvarta, 14) Antarvedi, and 15) Narmadā.[2]

The first eight entries read like one of the many variants of the group of seven Kula mountains we commonly find in the Purāṇas.[3] We are familiar with them also in the sacred geography of the Kubjikā Tantras where sacred mountains appear to be the immediate precursors of the sacred seats (pīṭha) and their related subcategories, which are the sacred sites of the later Bhairava and Kaula Tantras. The sacred mountains are part of a stereotyped group and so do not tell us anything specific about the spread of the Svacchanda cult. The remaining places are distributed along the Gangetic plane from Haridwar (= Gaṅgādvāra) to Bihar (of which Magadha is a part). It extends down as far as the Narmadā which figures in such sacred geographies as the boundary between the north and central and southern India below. This, may well have been the earliest area of spread of the cult. At least it gives us an indication of the area (albeit considerable) where it was probably redacted. The heart of this area is a region called Āryavarta which the SvT recommends as the best place a teacher can come from.[4] Note also that the crude form of this geography places the SvT in a period prior to the

---

[1] The Kāmikāgama is traditionally put at the head of the list of the Siddhāntāgamas as a sign of its special prestige and antiquity. Even so, we find in the first chapter the following reference to the types of Śaivāgama which includes also the Kaula Tantras:

gāruḍaṁ bhūtatantraṁ ca bhairavaṁ vāmatantrakam |
kāpālaṁ pañcarātraṁ ca lākulī kulaśāstrakam ||
tantraṁ pāśupataṁ cānyat . . . . | Kāmikāgama 1/114-115a.

This reference is quoted in the introduction of the edition by N. R. Bhat of the Ajitāgama (1964: 1).

[2] SvT 9/36cd-39.

[3] See Mani 1984: 438.

[4] SvT 1/13.

Tantrasadbhāva (which draws several, extensive passages from the SvT) and other Tantras in which it is systematically developed.

Let us return now to our Goddess. As we journey through and around her, we see more and more clearly that she is most intimately a Trika goddess. Externally, we might say, she appears to be a transformation of Kālī. Inwardly, the nature which reveals itself as her most authentic identity is Mālinī, that is, the Goddess Parā of the Trika Tantras beginning with the SYM through to the TS and then finally to the KMT. As the goddess evolves, she travels through Tantric systems, carrying with her the associations and links formed previously. One of the earliest of these is the close association the Trika goddess has with Aghora, who appears in the Trika tradition as a source of the teachings. At the beginning of the Mālinīvijayottaratantra, which presents itself as a condensed version of the Siddhayogeśvarīmata, the oldest and foremost Trika scripture, the god declares to the goddess that he will impart the teachings of the SYM he learnt from Aghora, 'the supreme soul'.[1]

The triadic goddess Mālinī of the SYM is called Aghoreśī.[2] Thus, at this early stage the seed has already been sown that is destined to sprout as Kubjikā, the goddess Aghorā (or Aghorāmukhī), whose consort, Navātmābhairava, is essentially Aghora, Svacchandabhairava. The continuing influence of the SvT on the later Trika is evident. The TS draws long passages from it. There Svacchandabhairava's Navanābhamaṇḍala formed from the letters of Navātman, his seed-syllable mantra, serves as the core of a maṇḍala of the sixty-four Yoginīs. These, along with their Bhairavas, are worshipped on eight petals of a lotus that surround it in groups of eight, each linked to one of the eight Mothers. Thus, this important feature of Svacchandabhairava's cult has served as the nucleus for the worship of Yoginīs, which is a typical feature of Kaula traditions.

The SvT was well known in Kashmir when monistic Śaivism was developing there from the middle of the ninth century onwards. Kṣemarāja, Abhinava's closest disciple, wrote a commentary on it in the eleventh century. He declares that he was impelled to do so in order to correct the mistakes of an earlier commentator who commented on it from a dualist perspective. Abhinava draws from it extensively as a source for the cosmology of his Anuttaratrikakula.[3] He could not have failed to appreciate the importance of the SvT as a source for the scriptures of the Trika and related systems he considered to be the most elevated. Indeed, the MVT, his most respected scriptural source, largely draws its cosmology from the SvT. Thus Abhinava elaborates his Anuttaratrikakula in the

---

[1] MVT 1/13-14ab.

[2] SYM 2/54.

[3] Chapter eight of the TĀ deals with the world systems (bhuvana). Almost all of it is drawn wholesale from the SvT.

way the systems in the original scriptures were constructed, that is, by integration with others.

In the same way, Svacchandabhairava is already integrated into the earliest teachings of the Kubjikā Tantras. The KMT dedicates two whole chapters to him as Aghora and, especially as Śikhāsvacchanda who, along with his consort, is Kubjikā's Topknot (śikhā), the second of her six limbs.[1] In the later tradition, he is prominently apparent as Navātmābhairava, Kubjikā's consort. However, the KMT presents the seed-syllable Navātman only as the sonic form of the First Teacher. The KMT hardly refers to Navātman as Kubjikā's consort although, he is only implicitly related to Kubjikā. Kubjikā is addressed in her Vidyā 'Aghorāmukhī' - 'She whose face is Aghorā'.[2] Moreover, although Aghora's mantra is quite different from the goddess's Vidyā, it seems to be more than a coincidence that they are both thirty-two syllables long.[3]

The place of Svacchanda and his Tantra grew in importance in the course of the development of the Kubjikā cult. Entire chapters of the SvT came to be incorporated into the Kubjikā Tantras.[4] By the time we get to the Ambāmatasaṁhitā, which is one of the late Kubjikā Tantras, the SvT is considered to be so important that we read there that - > amongst the (Tantras of) the left, right, Siddhānta, the Nityātantra, Yāmala and the independent (Kaula) tradition the Svacchanda (Tantra) is the leader of the Tantras.[5]

---

[1] See KuKh vol. 2, appendix 3.

[2] The goddess's Vidyā according to the KMT (7/21-23) is:

NAMO BHAGAVATī ŚRĪKUBJIKĀYAI HRĀṀ HRĪṀ HRAUṀ ṆA ÑA ṆA NA ME AGHORĀMUKHI CHĀṀ CHĪṀ KIṆI KIṆI VICCE

We will have occasion to examine several variants of this Vidyā in chapters 9 of our text. See KuKh vol. 2, appendix 2.

[3] Svacchandabhairava's mantra according to SvT 1/43 is:

AGHOREBHYO'THA GHOREBHYO GHORAGHORATAREBHYAŚ CA SARVATAḤ SARVEBHYO NAMAS TE RUDRARŪPEBHYAḤ

It is extracted in its 'differentiated' (sakala) form (with an extra syllable) in the KuKauM (KuKauM 13/11cd-15). One could well suppose that the thirty-two gods who govern the syllables of Svacchanda's mantra couple with the thirty-two goddesses of the syllables of the goddess's Vidyā.

[4] For example, chapters 9, 14, 15 and most of chapter 13 of the Svacchandabhairavatantra are incorporated into the KuKauM.

[5] vāmadakṣiṇasiddhānte nityātantre [-taṁtra] ca yāmale |
anvaye ca svatantre ca svacchandaṁ tantranāyakam [mantra-] || AS 20/30.

Once made this statement, the AS goes on, as one would expect, to extol the excellence of the MBT, the scripture of 24,000 verses. But even then, in order to strengthen this claim, it seems, it

The later Kubjikā Tantras associate the goddess's tradition so closely with Svacchanda, that the City of the Moon, the core maṇḍala of the goddess, is said to be the abode of Aghora[1] and the western transmission is that of Bahurūpa, which is another name of the god.[2] Indeed, it is due to the liturgy of Bahurūpa (bahurūpakrama) that the goddess became the deity of Kula.[3] One wonders what this liturgy may be, whether it is, concretely, an empowering rite or just an inner process that derives its power from the god. Whatever it may be, one of the major rites of initiation does, in actual fact, draw extensively from the SvT. This is the Consecration of the Sixteenfold Command, which is described in the Ṭīkā.[4]

The KMT emphasizes the contribution of the 'previous' Kaula tradition founded by Matsyendranātha (pūrvāmnāya). In addition the MBT, especially the KuKh, stresses the importance of Svacchandabhairava and the teachings associated with him. In his Kaula permutation he assumes the status of a Kaula deity by becoming the consort of the goddess. Before he received initiation from the goddess, he was Sadāśiva with five faces who 'was awakened by the Kaulika Command'.[5] As her consort, he is Rudra with five faces.[6] Thus the god of the Siddhānta in the Navātman form of Svacchandabhairava is elevated by the goddess to the fullness of his status as the god who wields authority not just in the lower Siddhānta Āgamas but also in the higher Kula Tantras. Just as Aghora becomes Kubjeśvara in this way, so Kubjikā becomes Aghoreśvarī or Aghorā,[7] the consort of Aghora.[8] The goddess is not just externally identified with arrogates to itself the name 'Lalita' which commonly prefixes the name of the SvT in old manuscripts:

---

O god, (the scripture) called Twenty-four Thousand and named Lalita has come forth sealed from your mouth, O Maheśvara. Thus they are all, that is, Svacchanda and the others of many kinds, devoid (of power). The death they generate cannot be controlled without that tradition.

caturviṁśasahasrākhyaṁ [-khye] lalitaṁ nāmanāmataḥ |
kīlitaṁ mukhaniṣkrāntaṁ [-niḥkrāntaṁ] tava deva maheśvara ||
tena riktāś [riktā] ca te sarve svacchandādi anekaśaḥ [ranekaśaḥ] | na teṣāṁ kālakalanā sādhyā [sadyas] taṁ anvayaṁ [anvaya] vinā || AS 20/31-2.

[1] KuKh 3/60.
[2] KuKh 3/62.
[3] This is one intrepretation of KuKh 3/19cd. The same line appears as YKh (1) 26/31cd. According to a variant reading, she is on the plane of the Neuter (see also KuKh 3/62), which is the Śāmbhava plane (see KuKh 3/157cd-9).
[4] See KuKh vol. 8 appendix 1 where the Consecration of the Sixteenfold Command described in the Ṭīkā is presented in detail.
[5] KuKh 3/108.
[6] KuKh 3/65cd-6ab.
[7] See for example KuKh 5/76cd-7ab and KuKh 10/13.
[8] KuKh 3/158.

Aghoreśvarī. Aghoreśvarī[1] is part of the goddess's inner identity. The union with Bhairava transforms her. Aghoreśvarī is part of the transformed identity the goddess attains by her stay in the Liṅga. Thus when she emerges out of it, she is said to be 'sustained by the knowledge of Aghora'.[2] But even though the goddess draws support from Svacchandabhairava, her Command is superior to his power. Thus the Liṅga in the centre of the maṇḍala, which marks the location of the First Seat where the teachings were first made manifest in the world, is said to be terrible (ghora) and above Aghora.[3]

The god and the goddess are commonly portrayed in union as their seed-syllables - Navātman (HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ) and Vāgbhava (AIṀ). They are written in the centre of the maṇḍala and recited together. The emergence of the goddess out of the god and her merger back into him is represented sonically by the recitation of the syllables one after another. It may also, conversely, represent the god's emergence from the goddess. The image then is that of the cosmic Tree growing out of the Yoni. The Tree is Navātman, which with its wide base and elongated stem, looks like an inverted tree.[4] The Yoni is the triangular syllable AIṀ. It is the 'shade' (chāyā) of the Tree, which represents its power. Thus the goddess's seed-syllable comes first and that of the god follows after. Otherwise he would be powerless.

The god and goddess share in varying ways and degrees each other's characteristics. The male polarity may be so strongly dominant, that the female is reduced to little more than a reflection of it with few changes or additions.[5] When the two originally belong to different traditions, the differences are more striking, even so they must possess basic common characteristics. The visualized forms of Kubjikā portray her adorned with snakes and scorpions, as is Svacchandabhairava. Just as she is similar to him, he is similar to her. Thus, he possesses powerful lunar qualities, just as the goddess does. Svacchanda's uppermost face, which is that of Īśāna, is the face of emanation that 'nourishes the entire universe with its moon rays as it rains in a great torrent a stream of nectar-like (bliss)'.[6] Indeed, Svacchanda's entire form is 'that of the Moon'.[7] He is described as follows in the ŚM.[8]

---

[1] See line 35 of the Mālinīstava in chapter four of the KuKh and note to KuKh 3/156-158ab.

[2] KuKh 5/78cd-79ab.

[3] KuKh 3/53.

[4] See KuKh vol. 4, note 15.

[5] Svacchandabhairava consumes sin and suffering and destroys disease. His original consort - Vyādhibhakṣiṇī - Eater of Disease - simply embodies these qualities and powers. See KuKh vol. 2 appendix 3.

[6] See below.

[7] KMT 9/10.

[8] Svacchandabhairava's visualized form is described in the SvT 9/2-10. See KuKh vol. 2 appendix 3, where this passage is quoted with a drawing. There are two descriptions of Svacchandabhairava

O goddess, Svacchanda is in the middle, within the abode of the triangle. Very powerful, he has five faces with three times five flaming eyes. He has ten arms and, very fierce, is adorned with many garlands, ornaments, necklaces and anklets. He has beautiful (divya) matted hair and the half moon is his crest jewel. O beloved, the face in the east is white like cow's milk, it shines brilliant white. Generating great energy, contemplate it thus. One should think that the northern face is like the young rising sun, the form of a pomegranate flower and (red) like a Bandhūka.[1]

O beautiful lady, this, the western one, is yellow like vermillion mixed with musk. Divine, it generates great energy. (The southern face) is somewhat fierce with large sharp teeth and long red eyes. It is blue like a blue lotus and blue collyrium. Beautiful and fierce, he wears a gem and a snake and his hair is brown. He is called Aghora, contemplating (him) he bestows success in every enterprise.[2]

Īśāna is the upper face. Both supreme and inferior, its nature is creation. (White) like snow, jasmine and the moon, it is stainless in the KuKauM. One is found in the beginning of chapter 13 (which is chapter 85 according to the colophons). Another visualization is described in the beginning of chapter 14, the first 108 verses of which are drawn from chapter 9 of the SvT. The rest of that chapter consists of chapters 14 and 15 of the SvT.

---

[1] svacchandaṁ madhyato devi śṛṁgāṭapurasaṁsthitam ||
pañcavaktraṁ mahātejaḥ [kh g: -tejaṁ] tripañcanayanojjvalam |
daśabāhuṁ mahābhīmaṁ nānāsragdāmamaṇḍitam ||
nānābharaṇasaṁyuktaṁ hāranūpuramaṇḍitam |
jaṭājūṭadharaṁ divyaṁ candrārddhakṛtaśekharaṁ [g: -śeṣaraṁ] ||
gokṣiradhavalaṁ divyaṁ [kh: dīvyaṁ] phenābhaṁ śuklavarcasam |
pūrvvavaktredṛśaṁ [g: vaktra] dhyāyenmahādīptikaraṁ priye ||
dāḍimīkusumākāraṁ [kh: dāḍimi-] bandhūkapuṣpasannibhaṁ [g: saṁnvitaṁ] |
taruṇādityasaṁkāśaṁ [kh: -śaṁkāsaṁ] vāmavaktraṁ vicintayet || ŚM 12/92cd-96.

[2] pītābhaṁ pītasaṁkāśaṁ kuṁkumābhaṁ sarocanam |
mahādīptikaraṁ divyaṁ [g: divya] paścimedaṁ tu sundari ||
daṁṣṭrakarālaṁ [k: daṁṣṭrā-; kh: daṣṭrākarāla; g: draṣṭākarālaṁ] raudraṁ ca kiñcid raktāyatekṣaṇam |
nīlotpalanibhaṁ [k: -dala] śyāmaṁ nīlāñjanasamaprabhaṁ [kh: -prabhāṁ] ||
maṇisarpakṛtāṭopaṁ piṁgakeśaṁ subhīṣaṇam |
aghoram iti vikhyātaṁ dhyātaṁ [k: dhyānaṁ] sarvārthasiddhidam || Ibid. 12/97-99.

Svacchandabhairava
according to the Śrīmatottara like pure crystal. It nourishes the entire universe with its moon rays as it rains in a great torrent a stream of nectar-like (bliss). Contemplating Īśāna (in this way) one attains (all eight) yogic powers.[1]

O fair lady, my attributes - trident, dagger, sword, the king of the snakes, and rosary – adorn the right (arms). O beloved, a skull, double-headed drum, javelin, noose and goad – (these) are my divine, brilliant and very auspicious weapons that (are held) in the left (hands). The king of snakes (hangs) on the shoulder and a garland of skulls hangs (from the neck). There is a necklace of scorpions around the throat and the ears are adorned with snakes.

He sits on a great lotus and is adorned with a belt on his hips. He is adorned with small bells and a garland of gems. There are anklets on his feet and they are well adorned with necklaces of pearls. He sits on Ananta as a seat and is like heated gold. On Ananta's seat are seventy billion mantras. He is beautiful, divine, (white) like the stars, snow and the moon.[2]

---

[1] īśānam ūrdhvavaktraṁ [k: īśānaṁ pūrva-; kh: īśānāmūrddhva-] tu [g: ca] sṛṣṭirūpaṁ [g: śṛṣṭi-] parāparam |
himakundendusaṁkāśaṁ [kh: -kuṇḍendu-] śuddhasphaṭikanirmalam ||
āpyāyantaṁ [kh: āpyāyanaṁ] jagatsarvaṁ candrāṁśunikareṇa [kh: -kiraṇena] tu |
varṣantaṁ sumahaughena [kh: samaho-; g: sumaho-] dhārāṁ [k kh g: dhārā] pīyuṣasannibhām [k: -sannibhaṁ; kh: saṁnibhaṁ; g: peyūṣasaṁnnibhaṁ] ||
īśānaṁ [kh: īśāna; g: īśāne] dhyāyamānaṁ [kh: mūrddhavaktraṁ] tu aṇimādiguṇān [kh: guṇaṁ; g: guṇāṁ] labhet | Ibid. 12/100-102ab.

[2] triśulaṁ kartarī khaḍgaṁ nāgarājākṣasūtrakam || dakṣiṇena varārohe virājanty āyudhāni me [kh: te] | kapālaṁ ḍamaruṁ [kh: ḍamarukaṁ] śaktiḥ [k: śaktiṁ] pāśāṁkuśadharaṁ priye ||
vāmena [k g: vāme te] āyudhā [kh: āyudhāṁ] divyā [kh: divyāṁ] dīpyamānāḥ suśobhanāḥ [k: suśobhane; g: suśobhanaṁ] |
sarparājakṛtaṁ [kh g: sarparājaṁ] skandhe kādyamālā [k: varṇamālaiva; g: vaḍamālāna] pralambitā [k g: sundari] ||
kaṇṭhe vṛścikahāraṁ [kh: -mālabhiḥ; g: viśvika-] vai karṇau gonāsamaṇḍitau [kh: ghoṇa-; g: ghautta-] |
mahāpadmāsanāsīnaṁ [g: -nāṁ] kaṭimekhalamaṇḍitam ||
kṣudraghaṇṭhikaśobhāḍhyaṁ [kh: -śobhāḍhanaṁ; g: -sobhāḍhyaṁ] ratnamālāvibhūṣitam [kh: -vibhūṣitā] |
pādau [kh: pādā] nūpurasaṁyuktau [kh: -saṁyuktai; g: -saṁyukto] muktāmālāsvalaṁkṛtau [kh: mukta-; g: muktamālasvalaṁ-] ||
anantāsanasamāsīnaṁ [kh: -saṁsīnaṁ; g: -māṁsīnaṁ] taptahāṭakasannibhaṁ [g: -hātaka-] |
saptakoṭis tu mantrāṇāṁ anantāsanasaṁsthitāḥ [k: -saṁsthitaḥ; kh, g: -taṁ] ||
tārāhimanibhaṁ divyaṁ śaśāṁkam iva śobhate [kh: śobhite; g: śobhitaḥ] | ŚM 12/102cd-108ab.

Recollecting Aghora as Kujeśvara and his mantra when eating, the food is filled with his nourishing lunar nectar.[1] He sits in the midst of his thirty-two Dūtis, who embody the energies of the syllables of his mantra and exude lunar nectar.[2] This is the perfectly 'full maṇḍala called Aghora'. The KMT teaches:

> He should think that nectar is flowing from there in all directions. The body that has been satisfied (apyāyita) with that becomes pure that very moment. Then, after having performed the mental fire sacrifice, he attains siddhi upon contemplating the full maṇḍala called Aghora. He is Aṣṭākapāla, who pervades the principles and is devoid of letters. (Aghora's) form is the Moon and one should think of him in the calix of the lotus. The principle there is the Great Sound (mahānāda) called the letter Ha. O goddess, it is endowed with the six categories (padārtha) and is attained by means of the Nine. It dissolves into Viṣṇu and he into Rudra, who should be known to be Time, the all-consuming fire. He merges into Māyā who is said to be Viṣṇu. O Kubjī, it is the pure power that devours time. O Kuleśvarī, once the bridge has been penetrated, Viṣṇu becomes Śiva. He attains the plane of the Fourth state which is the Transmental state. O austere one, this is the abode of Aghora, the god of the gods. One should attain that, the supreme Nirvāṇa. He is said to be Kubjīśa. He is Dhruva and Vasudeva, who is said to be 'unborn' (ajāta). One should generate power there constantly and be constantly attached there (to that supreme state).[3]
>
> (In this way) O goddess, one is not stained by (even) great and fearsome sins and is not under the control of death or suffers from old age. (One gets) the fruit of (going to) all the sacred bathing places and is initiated in all the sacrificial rites. Having generated the

---

[1] The KMT explains how this should be done:

> While he eats the adept should think that the mantra that he has deposited with all its limbs (onto the body) and is established in Bhairava's form, is in (his) plate. Having done so, as he eats, he should contemplate the full moon (and so) he eats the nectar that is in the full moon, encapsulated above and below (by this mantra). (Doing this) the adept may wonder constantly (as he pleases). He obtains all that is most excellent and the success (siddhi) he desires having placed Kujeśvara, who is in the middle of the lunar orb and is blessed with freedom (svacchandagati), in (his) heart. He should think (of him) as having entered that (Moon) and, the end of the end, supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent), think (how he and the god are) mutually (related) until he reaches the Cavity of Brahmā. KMT 8/101-105.

[2] The names of the thirty-two energies of Aghora are listed in KMT 9/3cd-6 and ŚM 12/109cd-112.

[3] KMT 9/8-16.

> Sound of the Heart with (one's) mind, one attains the plane born of Nirvāṇa. Laying hold of the nectar with (one's) mind, one reaches the place of the uvula (ghaṇṭikā) and eats the nectar that comes from that at the base of the tongue filling his mouth with it, O Kujeśvarī, by means of (the mantra of) Svacchanda.[1]

Another link Aghora has with Kubjikā is the divine Fire that is their common nature. Bhairava is the Self in the centre of the maṇḍala. As such he is the divine Fire that radiates pure energy. Thus, like Fire, he is called Bahurūpa – Many Forms:

> Aghora is said to be Time and Aghora is said to be Viṣṇu. I am Aghora, O great goddess, and you, fair lady, are Aghorā. Fire has many forms (bahurūpa), he is the fierce destroyer of death. He is Śiva, the supreme Brahman, Nirvāṇa and Sadāśiva. He is supreme and eternal, there is nothing greater than this.[2]

Thus, according to the KMT, once Aghora has been experienced as the source of life-giving nectar, he is contemplated as the Fire in the midst of the five elements. This is his form as the Self, which from Upaniṣadic times has been experienced as the Flame that burns in the heart:

> Then, once he has (thus) milked the disembodied cow (of plenty) and pervaded the principle by means of Īśvara, he should think of Aghora, the principle of the Self in the midst of the five (*praṇava*s). He is the fire that burns with water and, one, abides fivefold. He pervades the triple world and (so) those who know the Brahman offer sacrifice by means of him. He who knows his Topknot (śikhā) is said to be (a true Brahmin), one who possesses the sacrificial fire. This fire attains the face of god (devamukha). It is the omnipresent Aghora. O goddess, it is the (most excellent) face amongst the faces (of the god) and is praised in (all) the triple world. O fair lady, there is no fire offering or meal without it. O Kujeśvarī, the god is pure Fire and is of many forms (bahurūpa).[3]

---

[1] KMT 9/17-20ab.

[2] aghoraṁ kālam ity uktaṁ aghoraṁ [kh: -ro] viṣṇur ucyate ||
aghoro 'haṁ [g: aghorā] maheśāni aghorā tvaṁ varānane |
bahurūpadharo hy agniḥ pracaṇḍaḥ [k g: pracaṁḍa] kāla-m-antakaḥ [g: kāla antakaḥ] ||
sa [g: su] śivaḥ [kh: śiva] paramaṁ [k g: paramo] brahma nirvāṇaṁ ca sadāśivaḥ [k kh: -śivaṁ] |
sa eva [g: eṣa] paramo nityaḥ [kh g: nityaṁ] asmāt parataro nahi || ŚM 11/216cd-218.

[3] KMT 9/20cd-24.

Svacchandabhairava is not only the goddess's consort. He is also her Top Knot (śikhā). In this aspect he is Śikhāsvacchanda, who is also called Juṣṭacaṇḍeśvara and Viśveśvarakujeśvara.[1] The choice of this limb is appropriate, not only because it is the highest part of the goddess. The śikhā - is not only the topknot, which is one meaning of the word, it is also the flame - śikhā - of Kuṇḍalinī who emerges out of the Cavity of Brahmā, flaming upwards into the transcendental Emptiness of the god. The Topknot is especially associated with the Mantrapīṭha of the south[2] which is the seat of scripture to which Svacchanda belongs.

Rudraśakti and Raudrī

After having examined the major goddesses with which Kubjikā is outwardly identified, we turn to her major internal identifications. These are the goddesses who substantially and directly contribute to her identity. They are the two goddesses from whom Kubjikā developed directly. One is Kālī and the other is the goddess of the Trika. As do all major goddesses, both of them possess multiple aspects and forms. Kālī appears primarily as the virgin Kālikā and the all-consuming Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī. This component of Kubjikā's identity sustains and underscores her nature as a goddess of Time. In a special way, it relates to her identity with the Moon of which Kālī is the dark New Moon and Kubjikā herself the bright Full Moon.

The goddess of the Trika is present in varying degrees and forms in all the great cults of the early Bhairava and Kaula Tantras since she first made her grand descent into the world in the Siddhayogeśvarīmata. She is especially present in the cult of the goddess Kubjikā who is so closely related to her that one could say that Kubjikā is, in her own distinctive way, a Trika goddess. Practically all that is not new and original in Kubjikā's basic identity is derived from Kālī and the main forms of the Trika goddess. The latter are the goddess Parā, and her triadic emanation as Parā, Parāparā and Aparā, along with Mālinī, Siddhayogeśvarī and Rudraśakti, who is also called Raudrī. Parā, Mālinī, and Siddhayogeśvarī are represented by three of Kubjikā's six heads.[3] The Trika goddess is thus visibly represented as half of Kubjikā's 'external' form. We have seen that her fundamental 'inner' form, the Yoni, is even more extensively derived from the Trika Yoni identified with Mālinī in the TS.[4] Underscoring their close relationship, the Triangle of the Yoni, the goddess's most intimate and emblematic part and the core of her being and maṇḍala,

---

[1] KMT 8/17-25ab. Śikhāsvacchanda is described along with the other five limbs of the goddess in KuKh vol. 2, appendix 3.
[2] KRU 10/14.
[3] See below, p. 192 ff. concerning Kubjikā's six faces.
[4] See intro. vol. 1, p. 283 ff..

is identified with the Trident which is the focus of the Trika maṇḍala.[1] Moreover, although her Vidyā is, of course, distinctly her own, Kubjikā's body and her ornaments are largely made of Trika mantras.

Along with Mālinī and Parā, Rudraśakti appears frequently in the Trika Tantras as the Trika goddess. She is the spiritual energy that operates in manifold ways in the world and in her devotees; the embodiment of the goddess's power to grace and, when necessary, to punish. Thus, she is naturally identified with Kubjikā who embodies the Command, which is the energy of grace.

It is not surprising that the Great Goddess of the Bhairava and Kaula Tantras, the Bhairavī of Bhairava, be identified with Raudrī the consort of Rudra. This association is as natural as the one between Rudra and Bhairava. The Vedic Rudra is represented as a tribal hunter who lives in the wilds of the forest. Ambivalently both menacing and benevolent, he is an evident precursor of Bhairava. He was worshipped by the Pāśupatas and is an important deity of the early Siddhāntas.

The Vedic Rudra has no consort, whereas Raudrī, his companion in the Śaiva Āgamas, has a special importance of her own. This is because of her multiple applications. She is the original Śakti, not one amongst many, and she becomes many energies, many Yoginīs. Her capacity to assume multiple, replicate forms is derived from Rudra who is represented in the well known Vedic hymn, the Śatarudrīya, as possessing a unique power to do this. There Rudra is first praised alone. Then the hymn goes on to laud the countless millions of Rudras who are derived from the one Rudra and are present everywhere in the world. The goddess, who is Rudra's energy, is, like him, within all things, filling all the directions in as many ways as there are powers, immense and minute, that operate in everything and in every place. The same model is applied centuries later to the multitudes of Yoginīs who pervade the worlds. Ultimately derived from one Yoginī who replicates systematically in all directions, they can be understood to be the female equivalents of the countless multitudes (koṭigaṇa) of Rudras.[2]

In the following passage from the Śatarudrīya, Rudra is the hunter whose thousands of arrows symbolize his powers. Master of them, he can remedy the harm they cause.To the mighty Rudra we address these our hymns of praise, to the Lord of Heroes with braided-hair, that there may be prosperity for our men and cattle, that every (creature) in this village may be well nourished and healthy.

> O Rudra, with that auspicious form of thine, which is propitious and ever-healing, which is propitious [in that it] heals [all] diseases, be gracious to us that we may live.

[1] trikoṇaṁ triśūlamanākhyaṁ KMT ṭippaṇī fl. 54b.

[2] Cf. KMT 6/87-96ab.

> May the missile of Rudra miss us, may the great malevolence of [Rudra], the Impetuous One depart from us. Loosen thy strong [bow that it may not harm our] nobles and be gracious to our children and descendents. [. . .]
>
> O bright red-scatterer, reverence to thee, O glorious one, may thy thousand arrows strike down someone else other than us.[1]

First, the devotee implores Rudra to loosen his arrows elsewhere. Then he invokes his countless forms to do the same: 'The bows of the countless thousands of Rudras who are in the earth, we loosen at a thousand leagues.'[2] They are also in the 'great ocean of the atmosphere', in the sky, in the nether regions, they live in trees and are the colour of sprouting grass, they protect roads, provide nourishment, fight for life, frequent fords, they are in food, and they dwell in the regions.[3] Then the hymn refers to them as groups of ten, like the fingers of the hand, each group set in one of the ten directions. Each Rudra replicates in all the directions of each of the directions. Through these forms he protects and chastises. He maintains the cosmic order and disrupts it as he chooses by sending diseases, plagues and natural calamities. Thus, as the cause of disease, he is also the greatest healer.

The Rudras set in the directions continue to be a part of the cosmology of the Siddhāntāgamas. The attainment of the World of Rudra, which is called Dhruva, appears at times as the highest goal. The countless liberated souls are called Rudras even in the relatively late Kashmiri Śaiva texts.[4] They accept the earlier Siddhānta notion that the sole difference between liberated souls and Śiva is that their liberated condition has a beginning (ādimukti), whereas Śiva's liberated state does not (anādimukti).

Rudraśakti, identified with the supreme goddess, is an abiding presence in the cults of the Vidyāpīṭha, although with varying degrees of prominence. She does not appear independently much in the Brahmayāmala. Instead, she is one of an important group of Yoginīs. A primary set of Yoginīs in the BY is a group of eight that surrounds Kāpāliśā Bhairava. Eight energies arise from them that are arranged in the primary and secondary directions. The first group of four includes Raudrī along with Vāma, Jyeṣṭhā and Kālī.[5]

---

[1] Śatarudrīya of the Vājesaneyasaṁhitā chapter 16, verses 48 to 50 and 72.
[2] Śatarudrīya 54.
[3] Śatarudrīya 55-63.
[4] See first introductory verse of the Śivasūtravimarśinī.
[5] After describing the eight Yoginīs that are emitted from Bhairava's body (BY 32/3-13ab), the BY continues:

> Again, their eight energies have arisen. O fair faced one, (they are) Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā, Raudrī and Kālī. And (there is) Kalavikaraṇī, Balavikaraṇī, and the most excellent one called Balapramathanī

The Tantrasadbhāva, substituting Ambikā for Kālī, presents what became a classic formulation of this group of energies in the ambit of the Kaula traditions as the energies of the letter A. It represents Unstruck Sound which is the source of all the energies of emanation and destruction epitomized in the movement of the breath. This group was considered so important for a redactor of the KuKh that he chose to insert into it the entire chapter of the Tantrasadbhāva where it is expounded. In the following reference we observe the basic three-in-one relationship between these energies. Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā and Raudrī correspond to the Triad with Ambikā as Māyā (in the outer world) and Kuṇḍalinī (inwardly) as their ground and essential unity:

> It is said that exhalation is (brought about) by Vāmā. Inhalation is said (to be brought about) by Jyeṣṭhā. It is taught that the retention of the breath (is brought about) by Raudrī, while Ambikā is established in one's own essential nature.
>
> Vāmā is said to be Iḍā, while Jyeṣṭhā is considered to be Piṅgalā. Again, Raudrī is within Suṣumṇā and is said to be located in the equinox (viṣuva).
>
> Māyā is said to be (Kuṇḍalinī) the sleeping snake whose (coiled) form (is circular like) an earring (kuṇḍala).[1]

Again:

> Thus, she who is the conscious nature of the Self is called Kuṇḍalī. O handsome one, the individual soul is led up and down by her. She is Kuṇḍalī who, turned towards the left, is also said to be Māyā.

---

is the seventh. Damanī (the controller) of all living beings is said to be the eighth. Manonmanī is another and is said to be the ninth. O Mahāyamā, the supreme (energies) that have arisen from them, pleasing like the petals of a blue lotus endowed with beauty and youth, are established having pervaded the twenty-four worlds.

āsāṁ caiva samutpannāḥ [k: -nnā] punar aṣṭakalās tathā [k: puna ṣṭa-; k, kh: - kalāntathā]* ||
vāmā jyeṣṭā tathā raudrī kālī caiva varānane |
kalavikaraṇī [k: -śī] tathā caiva balavikaraṇī tathā ||
balapramathanī khyātā saptamā varavarṇinī |
damanī sarvabhūtānām aṣṭamā parikīrtitā [k, kh: -tāḥ] |
manonmanī tathā cānyā navamā parikīrtitā ||
āsāṁ caiva samutpannā paramā yā mahāyame |
nīlotpaladalaprakhyā rūpasampannayauvanāḥ [k: -sevanna- -nā] ||
bhuvanāni caturviṁśad [k, kh: -vinsad] vyāpya [k, kh: vyāpyā] etāḥ [k, kh: eṣā] pratiṣṭhitāḥ |
BY 32/13cd-17ab.

[1] KuKh 40/132cd-134ab and 40/19; cf. KuKh 4, Mālinīstava line 3.

> Jyeṣṭhā is the second (energy). She is said to be like a straight line. Her form is (extremely subtle) like a lotus fibre and is said to be on the path of emanation.
>
> Raudrī's form is (triangular like) that of a water chestnut and she is said to be an obstructing (force) (nirodhikā).
>
> (Again), your Quaternity is said to be within the three (powers of) will, knowledge and action. Such, indeed, is Śiva's energy, that comes and goes in this way. One (energy) drags (the breath) upwards and a second (energy) (pulls) the breath downwards. O dear one, the energy of Unstruck Sound (anacka) arises in the form of the union (yoga) of (their) repeated (movement).[1]

Amongst these four, Raudrī is especially important. Although she is called the energy that obstructs (nirodhikā) the fettered soul, not allowing him to make progress, for advanced Yogis, Raudrī is the energy that brings about the transmental state (unmana).[2] This is how Kubjikā, who is the energy of the Transmental, operates. Raudrī is said to be the shape of a water-chestnut. This is a common simile for the Goddess's Triangle. Indeed, the 'energy of the Yoni' is directly identified with Rudra's energy, which is understood to be the source of the three energies that line the sides of the Triangle.[3]

Rudraśakti appears in the SYM repeatedly as the fundamental identity of the goddess Siddhayogeśvarī, the triadic goddess who is at once Parā, Parāparā and Aparā. She is the source of all the Yoginīs[4] and, as such, is the Supreme Goddess of the Trika. The Power of Rudra is Yogeśvarī who controls the basic triad of energies called Auspicious (Aghorā), Terrible (Ghorā) and More Terrible than the Terrible (Ghoratarā). These are the energies, divided into three basic types, of the Rudras who possess the bodies and minds of people, either throwing them down or elevating them to higher states. The SYM says: 'Thus, ruled by the

---

[1] KuKh 40/20-24.

[2] One should know that Kuṇḍalī is located in the mind and is said to be the waking state. Raudrī is impelled by Jyeṣṭhā. Raudrī brings about the transmental (unmana) state. O Great God, she is said to be asleep and has dissolved away at the extremity of the Transmental. Again, Ambikā is beyond mind. She is in the abode of the Fourth State. KuKh 40/138-139 .

[3] CMSS 1/5.

[4] The source of all mighty (mahābalāḥ) Yoginīs in their manifested form (prathitāḥ) is called the Power of Rudra, O Fair Faced One. SYM 2/21.

With reference to the goddess identified with the Power of Rudra, the SYM declares: (By the various sub-divisions (parāparavibhāgena) [of her forms one can obtain] all the Yoginīs. All of them are empowered by her, and they succeed, being endowed with great strength. She is the source of all the Yoginīs, she is praised in all the Tantras. SYM 2/32-33. Translation of this and all the following passages of the SYM are by Törzsök (1999).

Power of Rudra, they govern this world.'[1] The Power of Rudra is essentially Mālinī 'the goddess made up of all the letters and adorned with all the vowels.'[2] This Alphabet Goddess (mātṛkā) is 'the supreme source of female mantras according to the Doctrine of the Yoginīs (siddhayogeśvarīmata)'. From her come the most important Tantras that originate from the mouths of Yoginīs.[3] Moreover, she generates the three Vidyās of the Trika: Parā, Parāparā and Aparā. Thus the KuKh, like the SYM, first presents the layout of the letters in Mālinī's body and then extracts the syllables of the Three Vidyās from them.[4]

Raudrī maintains this elevated status in the later Trika Tantras also. Bhairava in the Tantrasadbhāva reminds the goddess that Rudraśakti is her true identity.[5] In the public domain she is Pārvatī; for the initiate she is the energy of the seven Mothers who, combined with one another, become the forty-nine states (bhāva) corresponding to the letters. The TS describes her briefly as follows:

> She is beautiful and has beautiful breasts. She has two arms and three eyes and is endowed with all the ornaments. She is adorned with matted hair and a crown. She holds a skull in her left hand that is filled with nectar. Adorned with necklace and anklets, one should think of her as devoted to eating and drinking.[6]

This identification underscores once again the close relationship between Kubjikā and the goddess of the Trika. One of the reasons for this is that Raudrī is that aspect of the supreme energy to which is attributed in a special way the inspiration to seek initiation. This doctrine is also part of the Trika teachings of the MVT:

> Such (a teacher) is continuously penetrated by Rudra's power. The signs one can see in him in the course of this penetration are of various kinds. The first of these is very firm devotion for Rudra. The second is the realisation of mantras, which gives immediate signs of attainment. The third is, according to the tradition, dominion over all the creatures. The fourth is success in all

[1] SYM 2/31.
[2] SYM 3/6. The Power of Rudra is 'the goddess of all the letters' ibid. 3/19.
[3] SYM 29/14-15.
[4] See chapter 3 of the SYM and chapters 18 and 19 of the KuKh.
[5] TS 14/5.
[6] surūpā [g: -pāṁ] sustanā [g: -nāṁ] caiva dvibhujā [g: -jāṁ] ca trilocanā [g: -nāṁ] |
sarvālaṁkārasaṁpannā [g: -pannāṁ] jaṭāmakuṭamaṇḍitā [g: -tāṁ] ||
kapālaṁ vāmahastastham amṛtākhyena pūritam |
khānapānaratā dhyeyā hārakeyūrabhūṣitā [g: -tāḥ] || TS 10/10-11.

> the goals undertaken. The fifth is the gift of poetry which, with all its ornaments, is pleasing. In him, finally, arises spontaneously (akasmāt) (a perfect) knowledge of all the scriptures.[1]

The function of Rudra's power is central to the eschatology of the Trika. It is by virtue of this power that a person is a true teacher who can transmit the same power to his disciples and initiate them. In other words, Rudra's power, with all the supernatural signs of empowerment that it evidences, is the Trika's understanding of the nature of the energy of grace (anugraha) that descends from the Supreme Deity (śaktipāta). As the SYM explains:

> One will see the signs of supernatural behaviour in the preceptor because he is possessed by the Power of Rudra. Then the mantra can be taken from him. Since he is possessed by the Power of Rudra, the high-souled master instantaneously acquires the power which effects the proofs [of possession] immediately.[2]

The SYM goes on to list the same five signs of possession noted above in the passage from the MVT and goes on to conclude that:

> These are the five signs of the preceptor. If he is endowed with the above mentioned qualities, if he knows everything about initiation, the levels [of the body and the universe to be purified in the course of initiation] and how to draw the secret maṇḍala, he bestows grace upon people. Since he is possessed by the Power of Rudra, he can grant what the devotee desires. The person in whom this possession by the Power of Rudra is seen, is called the guru, who is my equal and who can show the [hidden] vigour of mantras, O beloved One.[3]

The Kubjikā Tantras elaborate further on how Rudra's energy functions. According to the KuKh, Raudrī is the intense form of the Command. She is the energy that pierces the Wheels (cakra) in the body. Her progress through them is marked by the signs of attainment (pratyaya), such as the shaking of the body and the rest, that characterize Kaula initiation. Thus, Kubjikā, who is the Command, is frequently identified with this goddess throughout the KuKh and other Kubjikā Tantras.[4] This is what she is called when her most detailed visualized forms are

[1] MVT 2/13-16 quoted in TĀ 13/214-215.
[2] SYM 2/4-5.
[3] SYM 2/9-11.
[4] Kubjikā is addressed as Rudrā in KRU 1/72cd.

described.[1] In short, as the embodiment of the Command – the energy of grace – Kubjikā is Rudraśakti, the energy of the supreme goddess of the Trika.

Saṁvartā

'Rudra', the Vedas proclaim, 'is indeed Agni' the sacred Fire.[2] The association is maintained in the Tantras and Purāṇas where Rudra appears as Kālāgnirudra – the Rudra of the Fire of Time and as Bhairava, who is also the sacred Fire. He naturally shares his association with Fire with the goddess. The Vedic Agni is both male and female. As the burning coal placed in the firepit, he is the male seed that inseminates it and Speech, with which the pit is identified. Again, as the womb-like recipient of oblations, particularly the seed-like Soma, Agni is feminine. This dual gender is paralleled by Agni's two functions of consuming and generating the world through the sacrificial rite of which the Fire is the core. It is but natural that both the god and the goddess of the Tantras be identified with Fire. Kubjikā, like the god, is red and blue and is Fire.[3] Moreover, they are both identified with Time. This association is also very ancient. Offerings to the Fire are made at the three times of day. The fire wanes at night and, stoked early morning, waxes again at the beginning of a new day.

As the sacred power of Fire, Kubjikā is Saṁvartā, also called Saṁvartāgni or Vāḍavāgni - the Fire of the Mare's Mouth and Kālāgni - the Fire of Time. This is the fire that burns at the bottom the cosmic ocean and, at the end of a cosmic age, consumes the universe. As the Fire of Death, it can be invoked in mantras for black rites to remove (uccāṭana), destroy and 'dry up' enemies.[4] In accord with its negative aspect, it may also be the name of a demon.[1]

---

[1] See below, p. 174 ff., YKh (1) 19/24, YKh (1) 19/31cd (= KuKh 68/2) and KnT fl 11a.
[2] rudro vai agniḥ TaiS 2/2/10/4; see Kramrisch 1981: 15-16.
[3] KuKh 5/30; see intro. vol. 1, p. 43 ff.
[4] According to the Tantrasadbhāva:

Vaḍavāmukha, very powerful and impelled by the Wind, removes (his enemies) forcefully and arises like the Fire of Time. Applied by the adept (sādhaka) (he) certainly dries up, destroys, kills, removes, uproots families and whatever else is required when applied by an adept. I will tell you (the mantra of) Vaḍavāmukha, listen now to how it is:

OṀ Bho! Bho! Vaḍavāmukha! Great Fire! Devour! Devour all living beings! Remove! Remove! Destroy! Destroy! Dry up! Dry up! Remove! Remove! HŪṀ PHAṬ PHAṬ

vāyunā preritaṁ caiva uccāṭaṁ [g: ?] kurute bhṛśam ||
vaḍavāmukhaṁ mahātejaḥ kālāgnir iva-m-utthitam |
śoṣaṇaṁ dhvaṁsanaṁ caiva māraṇoccāṭanaṁ tathā ||
kulocchedanam [k, g: -cchādanam] evaṁ tu yac cānyaṁ pratisaṁsthitam [k, g: travi-] |
kurute nātra sandehaḥ prayuktaṁ [g: ?] sādhakena tu ||
vaḍavāmukhaṁ pravakṣyāmi tacchṛṇuṣvādhunā yathā | [g: ?]

These negative connotations, although well known to other schools, are virtually absent in the Kubjikā Tantras. The Kramamaṇḍala of this school takes its name from this form of the goddess who, as the power of bliss (ānandaśakti), resides in the centre of it.[2] The triangular Yoni in the centre, replete with the pleroma of phonemic and mantric energies through which the universe and the teachings are emitted and withdrawn is also known as the Ocean of the Yoni (yonyārṇava)[3] or Kula (kulārṇava). Thus the goddess in the Bindu in the centre within it, is aptly identified with the fire at the bottom of the cosmic ocean. She is the Doomsday Fire (saṁvartā / vāḍavāgni) that burns in the middle of her maṇḍala which, drawing its name from the Fire in the centre, is called the Maṇḍala of the Doomsday Fire. In this fire the 'Great Sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava' is offered through which the world and the tradition is created. In the yogic body it is in the End of the Twelve. The ṢSS explains:

> (She is the principle called) the Doomsday Fire (vaḍava). Above the Trident, it is the triple principle and is located within power (kalā). The Doomsday Fire is the Wheel of Fire in the centre of (the reality) within the triangle. The Trident consists of the three energies (tejas) and is the Circle of Moon, Sun, and Fire. The denote the principle of the Self, Vidyā, and Śiva. Power (kalā) is said to be Kuṇḍalinī. All of this is within that and its purity (śuci) is beyond doubt. This is the body of Kuleśvara. How can that which contains that within itself (be considered) to have a supreme (transcendent) or inferior (immanent nature)? Assuming the form of (the goddess's) Peak seed-syllable (kūṭabhūta) (AIṀ), it is in the centre (of the Circle) (as the) `crooked' (energy) (kuṭilinī) of the two, (Sun and Moon). Reaching (this state) (gatā), she is the will (icchā) of the Supreme Goddess spread out and divided into many configurations of energy (anaikakulodbhinnā). And so you are called Kubjikā, the supreme (goddess) in all things.[4]

---

oṁ bho bho vaḍavāmukha mahānala sarvasattvān grasa grasa uccāṭaya uccāṭaya vidhvaṁsaya vidhvaṁsaya śoṣaya śoṣaya uccāṭaya uccāṭaya hūṁ phaṭ phaṭ namaḥ | [g: ?] TS 20/121cd-124ab.

[1] According to the TS 'the Vetāla, Vaḍavāmukha has a large body and the neck of a camel'. uṣṭragrīvo mahākāyo vetālo vaḍavāmukhaḥ | TS 10/44ab.

[2] See note to KuKh 1/1a.

[3] Note the spelling.

[4] vaḍavākhyaṁ [k kh: -khya] triśūlordhvaṁ [k: -śūlordhva] tritattvaṁ[k kh: -tatvas] tu kalāntagam |
vāḍavaṁ agnicakraṁ tu trikoṇāntasya madhyagam ||
tejastrīṇi triśūlaṁ tu somasūryāgnimaṇḍalam |
ete ātmā ca vidyākhyaśivatattvasya vācakāḥ ||
kalā kuṇḍalinī proktā etat sarvaṁ tadantagam |

Commentary: Kubjikā is the crooked (energy) (kuṭilībhūtā) of those two (the Sun and the Moon). Her form is that of the Mare's Mouth (vāḍavāsya), that is, the Fire which is above the three energies. The three energies are Nivṛtti, Pratiṣṭhā, and Vidyā. What is above there is the form of the (energy) Śānti as well as that of triple principle, namely, Ātmā, Vidyā, and Śiva, and OṀ (praṇava) or else the syllable AIṀ. (Her body is) at the end of power and is beyond words (anirdeśya). (She also consists of) the sixteen energies, that is, the sixteen vowels.

> (Her body is) both manifest and unmanifest. Kauleśvarī, who possesses such a body, cannot be conceived to be either supreme (transcendent) or inferior (immanent). This is because she is the energy of the submarine fire (vāḍavīkalā) in as much as she pervades the Wheel of Fire and withdraws it.
>
> Or else, (one can say that) she is crooked in all circumstances (sarvatra) and (as such) is the Peak seed-syllable AIṀ. Or else (one can say that) she is in a state of oneness (aikyabhūtā) or, she pervades everywhere (sarvagati) in (her) contracted state (saṁkocavṛtti). She who possesses (all these states and forms of being) is Kubjikā. The universe, consisting of the three abodes, is merged and develops within her residence. This is the description of Kubjikā.[1]
>
> In the form of the Doomsday Fire, she sits on the trident seat. She is on the head of the Lord of the Skeleton, on top of the six realities. She has four arms, one face, holds a rosary and makes a fear dispelling gesture. In another (hand), she holds a book indicating her omniscience and (makes a) boon bestowing (gesture).[2] Divine, she niḥsaṁdigdhaḥ [k kh: -digdhaṁ] śucis [k kh: śuciṁ] tasya etat kauleśvaraṁ tanu [k kh: tanum] ||

---

yasyodaragataṁ tac ca tasyāḥ kim aparaṁ param |
kūṭabhūtaṁ tu madhyasthaṁ [k kh: -sthe] yasyāḥ kuṭilinī tayoḥ ||
gatānaikakulodbhinnā iccheyaṁ pārameśvarī |
tena te kubjikā proktā parā sarveṣu vastuṣu || ṢSS 25/50-54.

[1] vyākhyā – tayor dvayoḥ yā kuṭilībhūtā bhavati sā kubjikā || tasyā rūpaṁ vāḍavāsyam iti agnirūpam iti trikalordhvagam || trikalā nivṛttiḥ pratiṣṭhā vidyā || tatrordhvagaṁ śāntirūpeṇa vartate || tathā tritattvarūpam ātmavidyāśivātmakaṁ praṇavarūpaṁ aiṁkārarūpaṁ vā || tathā kalāntagam [k kh: -raṁ] tathānirdeśyam [kh: -śya] || *kalāḥ [-lā; kh: * ] ṣoḍaśa [kh: deśyadaśa] a ā i ī u ū ṛ Ṛ ḷ Ḷ e ai o au aṁ aḥ [k kh: + ca] iti || avyaktarūpaṁ vyaktarūpaṁ ca iti īdṛgvidhaṁ tanurūpaṁ yasyāḥ kauleśvaryāḥ tasyā aparas tathā para iti kalpanā nāsti yataḥ sā [k: sa] vāḍavīkalā agnicakrasya yāvat vyāpikā [k kh: vyāpakā] tathā saṁhāriṇī ca ||
athavā sarvatra kuṭilībhūtā atha kūṭabhūtā iti aikyabhūtā iti vā sarvagatiḥ saṁkocavṛttyā vā yasyāḥ sā kubjikā || asyā āyanāntare [k: āyantare; kh: abhyantare] dhāmatrayamayaṁ viśvaṁ līnaṁ varddhati ca || iti kubjikāvyāvarṇanam || See Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 177.

[2] The commentary points out that this, the gross form of the goddess, is that of Sarasvatī.

> belongs to the sequence beyond the five and her form is sustained by the maṇḍala. The body of the venerable Lord of Kula extends for eight hundred and forty million (leagues) in the Circle of the Lotus above the (ocean of) nectar.[1]

The Vedic god Agni has three abodes. One is on earth. Another is in the sky as lightning and the third is the fire of the gods in heaven. It may seem strange at first that Fire should be in heaven but in fact most myths about fire attribute its origin to heaven, possibly because it was originally obtained from lightning.[2] The sky is commonly equated to a sea in the Vedas. Thus the fire below the sea in which the cosmic egg floats corresponds to the one in heaven. The symbolism of the Kubjikā Tantras allows the equation between these two fires to be made easily. The Ocean of the Yoni at the End of Twelve is the core of the highest inner form of the goddess's maṇḍala which is located there. Thus, she who is the Doomsday Fire that burns at the bottom of the ocean is also the goddess in the Supreme Void who burns there as the power of bliss in the very core of the portal that connects the transcendent with the sphere of manifestation that pours out through it. We are reminded of the two aspects of the Vedic Fire. One is the fire of the cremation pyre that consumes the body of the dead and, by extension, the macrocosm. From another perspective, Agni makes the sacrifice possible through which the world is created and so, in a sense, proceeds from him. Analogously, the goddess of the Kālīkrama is the fire of destruction, whereas that of the Kubjikā Tantras is the fire of creation. This female Fire is Kubjikā who is crooked like the flames of fire. She is also called 'kujā' because she crackles and 'sounds' (kūjate) as fire does.[3]

Kubjikā's association with fire is also related to an interesting careover from the Vedic fire altar. The sacrificial hearth is the womb - yoni - into which the fertilizing fire is placed. We have seen that one of the moments Kubjikā is 'crooked' is when she is supine, her legs bent back, uniting with the god. This is exactly how the Vedic Indians intended the main fire altar of the sacrifice to be. Dange (2000: 1) explains:

---

[1] vāḍavānalarūpeṇa [kuma: vaḍavā-] triśūlāsanasaṁsthitā ||
kaṅkāleśvaramūrdhnisthā ṣaṭpadārthoparisthitā [k, kh: - tām] |
caturbhujaikavadanā akṣasūtrakarābhayā [kuma: cākṣa-] ||
sarvajñānāvabodhena pustakānyavarapradā [k: pustakanye- -pradāṁ] |
*pañcamordhvakrame [k: paṁco * rddha-; kh: pañcakordhva-; kuma: -kramo] devyā [k, kh: divyā] maṇḍalodbhṛtavigrahā [k, kh: maṇḍalatrita-]* ||
caturāśīpramāṇena [kuma: caturāśīti-] koṭīnām amṛtordhvataḥ | ṢSS 25/131cd-134ab.

[2] See Staal 2001: vol. 1 p. 84.

[3] Residing in the bent (flames) of the Vaḍavā fire, (her) nature bliss, she crackles. For this reason she is Kubjikā, the subtle Khañjikā who is the Jewel (called Kuṇḍalinī). KMT 17/30.

The Yoga of the Doomsday Fire is treated extensively in chapter 17 of the KMT.

Saṁvartā

The common shape of the Vedic sacrificial altar is said to be like a woman in the act of embracing the Āhānīya fireplace. Her two shoulders are said to be the aṁśau of the altar, which are the two corners of the eastern side. This side is smaller than the western one, the corners of which are said to be the buttocks, śroṇī. To make the likeness to a woman even more clear, the altar is described as contracted in the middle which would give the idea of a beautiful woman with contracted belly. . . the woman in this pose has her legs contracted and folded under he buttocks; they are concealed under her buttocks with knees folded.

It is possible that these parallels are simply coincidences, but they are so many that it is unlikely. We began this chapter by pointing out a number of common features shared by Kubjikā and Aditi who may therefore well be, in part at least, her Vedic prototype. In this context we find more evidence that amongst those who filled out Kubjikā's classical (one could say śāstrika) identity, were Vedic Brahmins.

Mahāntārikā

Some major goddesses are linked to Kubjikā by association, rather than direct inherence or fundamental identity. But even though these goddesses emerge in parallel with Kubjikā, she is so closely linked with them that Kubjikā assumes their identity in a specific way, not generically as she does, one could say, with every goddess. This is the case with Mahāntārikā and Tvaritā whom we shall examine next.

There are several variant forms of the name of the goddess Mahāntārikā - the Great Saviouress. The most common one in the KMT is Mahāntārī, which appears as many as ten times.[1] The form Mahāntārikā is also found in the KMT, but only once,[2] others are Mahantārikā, Mahattārikā, or Mahantāryā found in other Kubjikā sources. The ṢSS explains that 'she who is called Mahāntārī saves from the great ocean (of transmigration)'.[3] The commentary elaborates: 'she who saves (tārayati) from the great (mahān) plane (of existence), that is, from the world of transmigration, is Mahāntārī.'[4] Schoterman suggests that she is: 'probably the same deity which features in the [Buddhist] Sādhanāmālā[5] as Mahattārī, an aspect of Green Tārā'.[6] Tārā also means 'star'. A goddess by that name related to the

[1] KMT 7/30, 39; 17/20c, 22b, 51d; 19/18c, 24b, 30a; 24/67c, and 100d.
[2] See, for example, KMT 24/67c.
[3] mahāntārī tu yā proktā mahadarṇavatāriṇī ṢSS 28/95ab.
[4] yā [k: yadā; kh: padā] mahānpādāt saṁsārāt tārayati sā [k kh: nāsti] mahāntārī | Cf. KMT 17/20ab: mahāsaṁsāra-m-ambodhes tārayntī vyavasthitā. Quoted below in Dhyāna of goddess of the Lineage of the Youth.
[5] Sādhanāmālā no. 90.
[6] De Mallmann 1975: 10; 369.

stars is mentioned in Subandhu's play Vāsavadatta[1] which dates to the fourth century CE. From early times she is a goddess of wayfarers, especially merchants, and navigators who cross the seas guided by the position of the stars. Thus the KMT declares that Mahāntarikā helps her devotees cross over 'the ocean of Mahāmāyā'.[2]

Mahantārikā may be identified entirely with Kubjikā. Accordingly, the goddess is at times addressed directly as Mahāntārikā.[3] Mahāntārikā is one of the forms Kubjikā assumes to preside over one of her transmissions (krama). As such she is the Transmental who resides at the extreme limit of Śiva's transcendental plane.[4] Mahāntārikā may also be just a member of Kubjikā's retinue. For example, Five Mahāntārīs form the fifth of the six groups that make up the Krama of Twenty-eight (aṣṭaviṁśatikrama) described in the ṢSS.[5] She is also incorporated into Kubjikā's iconic body as her third eye, the fifth of her six limbs.[6] As a form of Kubjikā she is identified with Kubjikā's Weapon.[7] Mahāntārikā may also be just an aspect of Kubjikā. In the later evolution of the system in the MBT in which Kubjikā's lunar nature is extensively developed, Mahāntārikā is identified with the Full Moon. In this context Kubjikā's Samayā Vidyā, which consists of thirty-two syllables[8] is recited in the reverse order with the Five Praṇavas in the beginning in the forward order and in the reverse order at the end, is said to be the Vidyā of Mahāntārikā. It is the Vidyā of the Full Moon, whereas the Samayā Vidyā in the forward order without the Praṇavas is the New Moon.[9] The dark skinned Kubjikā is the goddess of the New Moon,[10] Mahantārikā is her radiance. Thus, identified with the Full Moon, the Vidyā is called Moonlight.[11] Mahāntārikā is also an independent goddess. As such she has a specific Vidyā of her own.[12]

---

[1] See Beyer 1978: 7-8, also Bhattacharyya 1999: 190.
[2] KMT 19/18. Section in chapter 19 of KMT refers repeatedly to Mahāmāyā in relation to Mahāntārikā who saves from Māyā – by helping the fettered soul to 'cross over it' (tārayatī).
[3] See line 37 of the Mālinīstava.
[4] ṢSS 28/193ab.
[5] ṢSS 26/30cd-31.

This is said to be the Command of the Aged (vṛddhājñā) of the group of six belonging to the sequence of withdrawal.

[6] KuKh 10/29. Schoterman 1977: 936.
[7] As the form of Kubjikā who presides over the Lineage of the Youth, she is the Weapon (astra) of Kubjikā's Vidyā. But this may be a different mantra as it is said to consist of twenty-five syllables not twenty-three. See below (p. 153) where the passage from the KMT (17/18-24ab) in which this form is described is quoted.
[8] KuKh 9/30 ff..
[9] KuKh 9/58cd-59.
[10] KuKh 7/35cd-36ab.
[11] KuKh 30/66.
[12] A long exposition of the Vidyā and form of this goddess with her limbs and faces is presented in ṢSS 28/96 ff.. The commentary on this passage is reproduced in the Ṭīkā (MS K fl. 30b-31b). This

The KMT identifies Mahāntārikā with Kubjikā as a whole, but more specifically, she is the form of Kubjikā who presides over the lineage of the Youth.[1] As the lunar associations of the goddess are not well developed in the KMT,[2] it makes no reference to Mahāntārikā's relation to the Moon. Instead, Mahāntārikā, like Kubjikā, is extensively linked to the divine Fire that burns in the centre of the maṇḍala at the summit of the universe beyond Māyā and 'above the six parts', i.e. the Six Wheels in the subtle body. As such, like Kubjikā, she is the inward moving energy of consciousness and Mahāmāyā who is consciousness itself.[3] The adept who recites her Vidyā acquires the magical power of Mahāmāyā.[4] He acquires numerous magical powers, especially the capacity to foretell the future and, when he attains the plane of the Skyfarers, he is liberated.

Chapter nineteen of the KMT begins with an exposition of the state called Form (rūpa). This is manifest in twenty-one spheres (cakra) of 'millions' (koṭi) of energies arranged along the axis of the head starting with the throat, up through the eyebrows and beyond.[5] Māyā ends at the throat centre and so, presumably, these Wheels constitute the 'ocean of Mahāmāyā', from which Mahāntārī saves her devotees. Mahāntārikā is the consort of Akuleśvara. Called Nirodhin – the One Who Blocks the Way – he is the Lord of the twenty-first Wheel of Form and she is his energy – Nirodhinī. They reside above the sphere of Being, that is, phenomenal existence – on the plane of Non-being, which in the passage below is called the Great Knot. In relation to the lineage of teachers, the Great God is Ṣaṣṭhīśāna, the First Teacher – Ādinātha. In the usual sequence of ascent through the stages of the energies of Sound, Nirodhikā is the energy above that of the Half form of Mahāntārikā's Vidyā consists of twenty-three syllables (varṇa) and is extracted from a grid called Yonigahvara (see ṢSS 28/132ab ff.). It is as follows:

---

HRĪṀ ḌKHPHRĀṀ RIṀGAṬĪ RKHPHRĪṀ PIṀGAṬĪ LKHPHRŪṀ KUṬU KKHPHḶṀ KUṬU SKHPHḺṀ KAṆḌAYA HKHPHRAĪṀ SVĀHĀ YKHPHRAUṀ

A short form of her Vidyā is extracted in the ŚM (published GS 10/69-75ab). The fifteen syllable form of the Mahāntaryā Vidyā is presented in reverse in KMT 19/28. It is: RIṀGAṬĪ PIṀGAṬĪ KUḌU KUḌU KAṆḌĀYAI SVĀHĀ.

[1] KMT 17/18-24ab. Mahāntārikā's visualized form as the goddess of the Transmission of the Youth (yauvanakrama) is described below, see p. 153 ff..

[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 356.

[3] KuKh 9/26-29.

[4] ṢSS 28/187.

[5] They are: 1) Candrabhānu 2) Vāruṇa 3) Daṇḍapāṇika 4) Prāṇarūpa 5) Haṁsarūpa 6) Ātmavadrūpa 7) Śaktipūrvaka 8) Brahmarūpam 9) Keśava 10) Rudra 11) Candra 12) Bhāskara 13) Īśvara, between the eyebrows 14-15) the two hunchbacked (kubjikātmakau) dwarfs called Vāmana who are on the 'crooked' eyebrows 16-17) Two at the end of the eyebrows who are within 'the crooked ears' (karṇakubjāntara). They are shaped like conches and bestow Sāṁkhya Yoga. 18) Ananta 19) Piṅgala 20) Sakalīśāna 21) Nirodhin. KMT 19/4-12ab.

Moon which blocks the way to the ascent of consciousness to the higher stages. However, if one penetrates beyond it, the same power sustains the higher states preventing a fall back into the lower ones. Māyā operates in two ways. Māyā deceives and binds the person who does not know that her true nature is the power of the Supreme Deity. But if she is known correctly, she functions as the Pure Knowledge (śuddhavidyā) which elevates and liberates by revealing the true nature of the Deity. Thus Kubjikā in this aspect is Mahāmāyā, who has the magical power to bind and restrain (nigraha) or grace (anugraha).

Notice that here, at the level of Form, the couple is seated on the Doomsday Fire. We shall see further ahead that in the KMT Mahāntarikā appears as the aspect of Kubjikā who governs the Transmission of the Youth.[1] In that context she is related to the Pada level, which pTs that of Form. There she is alone within the Doomsday Fire.

> (Nirodhin) established on the transcendental plane devoid of phenomenal being (abhāvapada) is seated on the Doomsday Fire contemplating each Wheel individually in accord with its own essential nature. In the form of Akuleśvara, he is powerful with consciousness (vijñāna). He bears the form that suits him most (as he pleases). (The yogi) who does not belong to a lineage and is on some other plane does not reach the plane of omniscience with this practice. The fruit one obtains accords with the type of pervasion that one who is established within it has attained. The Great God (mahādeva) shines within the (universal) cause (kāraṇa) burning with the rays (of consciousness). By the Yoga of constant practice one reaches that plane in three years.[2]
>
> (The goddess) who blocks (nirodhinī) the realities (padārtha) (conducive to liberation) abides on the plane of the Great Knot. She saves when she is known and throws down (the fettered) when unknown. When she is known she saves from the terrible ocean of Mahāmāyā[3] and (so) is called Mahāntārī and is above all forms. Not known, her form (rūpa) is present in (all that is) gross, subtle and very subtle. They do not see the form which is (her) attribute (that is her own true nature) (guṇaṁ rūpaṁ) as long as she does not enter them (saṁkramet). She is the mother who is worshipped and contemplated in the aforesaid Kramamaṇḍala that extends for eight koṭis and burns upwards with (its divine) qualities for three koṭis.

---

[1] KMT 17/18-24ab. The passage is is translated below, p. 153.
[2] KMT 19/12cd-16.
[3] See above, p. 78.

Established there, uttered and contemplated, (she) gives fruit. If she is worshipped with Vaṭa and Indī flowers, one attains all the forms.[1]

The goddess's form that possesses all (divine) qualities has been explained previously. However, if it is not uttered (the yogi's body is as powerless) as the gross body. But, O goddess, if it is uttered, (the goddess's energy) burns with the awakened rays (of consciousness). Like a snake struck with a stick, she causes one to fall (just) by (her) look. Such is this powerful one (mahāvīryā), Mahāntārī who possesses great strength when struck repeatedly by the stick of the Vidyā in the Wheel of Emanation.

(At the summit of the Six Wheels) she is above the Six Parts. She has six faces and a large belly, twelve arms and fearsome eyes. She is in the Vajra and holds a Vajra. She is in the midst of the Kula of the Six Yoginīs.[2]Along with Ṣaṣṭhīśāna (the Lord of the Six) she is established in the line of Siddhas along with the Stick of the Vidyā. Hidden elsewhere in the (Śaiva and Kaula) teaching (śāsana), she is the mistress of the Kula of the Yoginīs. Listen to the utterance of her (Vidyā).[3] [. . .]

A person who is intent on worshipping the goddess, meditating on her, repeating her Vidyā and making offerings to the fire, achieves all that is gross up to the end of Mahāmāyā. Whatever form he thinks of comes into being by his will. Free of Mahāmāyā, the yogi operates the qualities (and powers) (guṇa) of Māyā. Endowed with the qualities within the five gross elements, the yogi possesses the quality of Earth when moving on the earth. Within (anything liquid that has) the form of Water, he is the Lord of Water. On the path of Fire he is fiery. He is the Lord of the Air who possesses Air, and in Space, he is the Lord of Space. After 15 years, the omniscient (yogi) attains the attribute of the Lord. Worshipping the lineage of the current with garlands of Vaṭa and Indīvara flowers he attains the totality of form, gross, subtle and beyond the senses.[4]

Once (the adept) has penetrated above Māyā by the grace of her (Vidyā), he reaches the Triple Energy (of will, knowledge and action). Mahāmāyā is located there. Her form is subtle and is present in the extremely subtle (reality). Within the Skyfarer she has many forms. Subtle and more subtle, she is the Supreme (Parā) (goddess)

---

[1] KMT 19/17-21.

[2] The Six Yoginīs are projected into the corners of the surrounding hexagram, concerning them see chapter 63 of the KuKh.

[3] KMT 19/22-27. See above, p. 77, note 5 for Mahāntārikā's fifteen syllable Vidyā.

[4] KMT 19/33-37.

> who is subtler than the subtle. She is seen as one does a mirage by the teaching that comes from the teacher's Command. She resides at the last level (pada) of the God Akula. She is pure Mālinī. By practicing that, one becomes omniscient.[1]

'Form' is understood in three ways. One higher and two lower. The higher one is the 'quality of form' of the goddess who, penetrating into the adept, empowers him to see her at the highest levels, beyond Māyā. It is 'the goddess's form that possesses all divine qualities'; it is the form which is her divine attribute (guṇaṁ rūpaṁ) and most essential nature. Mahāntārikā is Mahāmāyā, whose energy, the Divine Command, is aroused by the intense utterance of her Vidyā, in the core of the goddess's maṇḍala. Transmitted with the sudden force of powerful snake venom into the vital core of the devotee's being it empowers him to have mastery over all that is 'gross right up to Mahāmāyā'[2] and all that has form in all the Five Gross elements and beyond, namely, 'the totality of form, gross, subtle and beyond the senses'.[3] Thus whatever he desires or thinks of that has form comes into being or is destroyed, as he wishes.

In a third sense 'form' is a generic term for the visionary forms that serve to prognosticate diseases and other troubles or positive conditions in the teacher and his disciples from the shadow of the body and other objects and imaginary forms seen in the sky, sheets of water or elsewhere. The Tantra lists a series of them. The devotee of Mahāntarikā, empowered by the goddess's Vidyā, knows the past, present and future by virtue of the mastery he has over this third kind of 'form'.

In her most elevated aspect Mahantārī is the supremely potent, inner aspect of Kubjikā as Kuṇḍalinī, the female serpent. Struck by the stick of the vital breath, she rises within the Kramamaṇḍala, the Wheel of Emanation, and, worshipped there as a form of Kubjikā, induces yogic trance in her devotee by the power of her gaze (avalokana).[4] Notice that Mahāmāyā resides in the abode of the 'Triple Energy' above the Doomsday Fire. We are reminded of the Trika Trident above the Cavity of Brahmā described in a passage of the Tantrāloka inspired, no doubt, by a Trika Tantra (perhaps the Triśirobhairava?).[5] That also consists of the three energies of will, knowledge and action, and is attained by striking the serpent Kuṇḍalinī with the 'stick of the vital breath'.[6]

---

[1] Ibid. 19/38-40.
[2] sthūlaṁ saṁsādhayet sarvaṁ mahāmāyāntakāvadhim || KMT 19/33cd.
[3] sādhayen nikhilaṁ rūpaṁ sthūlasūkṣmam atīndriyam || KMT 19/37cd.
[4] ṢSS 28/105ff..
[5] Concerning the (essentially Trika) Trident in the centre of the Wheel of the Skyfarers as taught in the KMT, see intro. vol. 1, p. 402 ff..
[6] From chapter 5 of the Tantrāloka:

An important feature of this goddess, which represents her inner activity, are her seven faces. These are not mentioned in the KMT, however, they are treated extensively in the ṢSS, which also supplies added details of Mahāntārikā's Vidyā, its parts and applications. These faces are quite different from those of Kubjikā's form with six faces. Even so, the extra seventh face suggests that she represents a higher aspect of the goddess, although one would suppose her to be a secondary form. The uppermost one is the Face of the Unborn (ajavaktra). Below that are the five faces of Sadāśiva arranged in the directions, namely, Īśāna (above), Tatpuruṣa (east), Aghora (south), Vāmadeva (north), and Sadyojāta (west), with Śakti below. The lower six faces are the deities of the Six Wheels (cakra) in the god's body and the six parts of the Sequence of Twenty-eight. They are arranged in the corners of the hexagram around the core of the Kramamaṇḍala. Seated on this, her adamantine lotus throne (vajrapadmāsana), the goddess is worshipped in the center, accompanied by Ṣaṣṭheśāna, the Lord of the Six, her seventh face towering above the others as the manifestation of emptiness (śūnyāvabhāsa), which is pure consciousness.[1]

This form of Kubjikā as Mahāntārikā is, essentially, a female counterpart of the Siddhānta Sadāsiva. Although Śakti is the only female amongst them, she is assigned a symbolically significant place as the extra 'lower face' (adhovaktra). This is not at all less than the others, on the contrary, it is their foundation and the source of their energy. The uppermost face, above Sadāśiva's upper head, is the place of the Void from which the teachings emanate. This, the Unborn Face (ajavaktra), is that of the Teacher (guruvaktra). Here the First Teacher is called Ṣaṣṭhanātha, the Lord of the Six. In a different context, the ṢSS expounds how Kubjikā's seven faces

---

By applying the stick of the vital breath (to arouse Kuṇḍalinī) the wise (yogi) should find rest in the Abode of Nectar, namely the glottis (lambikā) hanging from the lotus (between the eyebrows) and the square (below the Central Abode, which is the Cavity of Brahmā at the top of the head) when the previous (downward flowing breath of prāṇa) and the subsequent (upward flowing breath of apāna) have been equalized. Once he reaches the plane of the Trident (above the Cavity of Brahmā), which is the union of the three psychic nerves, the powers of will, knowledge and action being in a state of balanced equality, he should enter therein.

Thus (the yogi) should make repeated use (of the flow of consciousness) which, garland-like, is the ladder (whose rungs are) the Point between the eyebrows, the Sound, the End of Sound and Power which, one, expanding and free of restriction, is in a state of perpetual unfolding. There, on the plane of the Upper Kuṇḍalinī, is emission, beautiful with the noble pulsation (of consciousness). The (yogi) should rest there, on the plane of the Belly of the Fish.

Just as the female donkey or mare entering (at the moment of orgasm) into her own abode, the temple of bliss, made of contraction and expansion, delights in her heart, so (the yogi) should penetrate the Bhairava couple, expanding and contracting, full of the aggregate of phenomena (bhāvavrata) destroyed and created again and again. TĀ 5/54cd-60ab.

[1] See ṢSS 28/105 ff and commentary. The details of the deposition of her six limbs (aṇganyāsa) and seven faces (vaktranyāsa) are presented in chapter 28 of the ṢSS and in folio 31a-31b of the Ṭīkā which is drawn from the commentary on ṢSS 28.

correspond to those of the first Kula teacher – Matsyendranātha – and his six disciples.[1]

One may safely assume that the goddess's six male faces implicitly correspond to the Six Yoginīs. Several features link Mahāntārikā to them. The close relationship she has with them explains, it seems, her appearance because she too is one of them. Thus the texts prescribe that she can be worshipped in the middle of the Six Yoginīs projected onto the corners of the hexagram. In this way she assumes the role of Yākṣiṇī, the seventh Yoginī. Moreover, her Vidyā contains seven seed-syllables that are related to the seven Yoginīs.[2] Each seed-syllable begins with the initial letter of the Yoginī and, together with syllables that precede it, is incorporated into the mantra of one of the goddess's seven faces. Thus, effectively, her faces are those of the seven Yoginīs who govern the seven vital constituents (dhātu) of the body. Thus the texts declare that the energies of the faces are like them and prescribe that the bodily constituents should be offered to them.

> He who worships (the goddess) thus, along with (the goddesses) associated with the seven bodily constituents (dhātu), should offer a pill (guṭikā) in libation that contains the seven bodily constituents. (The pill) should be made from the limbs of a hero (vīra) by striking (them) with weapons.[3]

Out of the seven bodily constituents, the most essential one, in order to satisfy this awesome goddess, is flesh. And this should be human flesh. The way this is obtained and offered is described in the ṢSS as follows.

> Looking like a mad man, the yogi goes to a frightening (place). His hair is disheveled and, naked, he observes a vow of silence. (There) he should repeat (the Vidyā of) the goddess (mentally) a hundred thousand times and he should make a million (ayuta) offerings to the fire. (He should offer) human flesh

---

[1] See intro. vol. 2, p. 311 ff..
[2] See note 3 to KuKh 63/2.
[3] evaṁ prapūjayed tāṁ tu [k kh: yastu] saptadhātugatānvitām [k kh: -tā] | saptadhātusamāyuktāṁ [k kh: -yuktā] guṭikāṁ [k kh: -kā] tāṁ [k: yā; kh: yāt] pratarpayet || śastrāhatais tu sā kāryā vīrasya aṅgasamudbhavā [k kh:-vāḥ] | ṢSS 28/181-182ab.

A 'vīra' is a 'hero', that is, a particularly brave soldier. A 'vīra' is also a Kaula adept. Probably the former is meant. This and the following passage suggest that the human flesh offered to the goddess is obtained from the bodies of enemy soldiers slain in battle or executed prisoners.

(mahāpala) with clarified butter and bdellium (guggula) during the dark lunar fortnight.

O mistress of the gods, the human flesh comes from the Creeper (latā), the Vine (vallī), and the Vehicle (vimāna). One should know that (the flesh of one) who has died by being dragged along (the ground) by bulls is called the Creeper. The Vine (is human flesh) that has been extracted (from a human corpse). The Vehicle (is the flesh of one) who has been torn apart by a spear (śūla).[1] (These three are, respectively,) the inferior, middling and the best.

One should take (flesh) that has not already been offered and make the fire offering with that. O fair lady, at the end of the offering to the fire on the night of (the fourteenth of) the dark lunar fortnight, he sees the goddess and the fearsome hoard of witches (ḍāmarīgaṇa). O mistress of the goddess, (if) they are pleased they offer (him the power) to become small at will (aṇima) and the other (yogic powers).

Thus, O goddess, such is the mighty Mahantārī. By uttering (her Vidyā, she) destroys (dhvanti)[2] mountains. What to say (if the yogi is) angry with others?[3]

Juṣṭacaṇḍālinī, is another form of Kubjikā who, like this one, presides over one of the transmissions (krama) and is associated with magic and black rites.[4] She too is invoked to magically harm and slay enemies. However, as in this case,

---

[1] The first and third are ways in which criminals were executed. All three types could be obtained from the corpses of soldiers.

[2] The regular form is dhvantī.

[3] bhīṣaṇaṁ ca tato gatvā yogī unmattarūpadhṛk |
muktakeśaḥ khadigvāso [k kh: -sā] maunacaryāvratānvitaḥ ||
lakṣam āvartayed devīm ayutaṁ [k kh: ayuktaṁ] caiva homayet |
mahāpalājyasaṁyuktaṁ [kh: -yuktāṁ] kṛṣṇapakṣe saguggulam ||
mahāpalaṁ ca deveśi latāvallīvimānagam |
vṛṣair ākṛṣ.yamāṇas tu yas tu pañcatvam āgataḥ ||
latā caiva tu sā jñeyā vallī coddhṛtakā [kh: -kāṁ] smṛtā [k: smṛtaṁ; kh: smṛtāṁ] |
śūlabhinnaṁ vimānaṁ tu laghu madhyaṁ tathottamam [k kh: tato-] ||
anucchiṣṭaṁ tu tad grāhyaṁ homaṁ [k kh: homas-] tena prakārayet |
*homānte ca varārohe kṛṣṇabhūtagate dine [k kh: * ] ||
rātrau tu paśyate devīṁ bhīṣaṇaṁ ḍāmarīgaṇaṁ |
tās tu tuṣṭās tu [k kh: rūṣṭāstu] deveśi prayacchanty aṇimādikam ||
etadvidhā tato [k kh: nato] devi mahantārī mahābalā |
*uccārād [k kh: -rā] dhvanti śailān [k kh: -lās] tu kruddhas tv anyeṣu kā kathā [k: * ] ||
ṢSS 28/186-192.

[4] See KuKh vol. 2, appendix 3.

Kubjikā reforms and elevates the magical, apotropeic and healing functions of lower goddesses she incorporates into herself and with which she is identified. She is Mahāmāyā – the most elevated form, and ultimate source, of all magical power. The 'small' Māyā of the 'little goddesses' of villages and countryside that gives and removes disease is transformed by its journey into the Sanskrit Tantras into the Great Māyā that causes and removes bondage.

Tvaritā

Kubjikā is already identified with Tvaritā in the earliest sources. It is hard at first sight to understand why the KMT should take the trouble to do so as Tvaritā is not a major form of Kubjikā in the KMT, nor did she become so in the later Kubjikā corpus. Nonetheless, Tvaritā is so strongly associated with Kubjikā that the Agnipurāṇa describes her along with Kubjikā as one of her forms. Although not a major goddess, Tvaritā is not an unimportant one. She continues to be worshipped, although generally in association with other goddesses. She is one of the sixteen Nityās worshipped in Śrīcakra and appears regularly in later Kaula Tantras such as the Śaktisaṁgamatantra and Tantric compendiums. One early one is the Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati, which is also simply called Tantrapaddhati. Compiled in Kerala in the 11th century by Īśānaśiva, it is still one of the most popular Tantric liturgical works there. The Tantrapaddhati[1] presents Tvaritā as Gaurī, that is, as Pārvatī, Śiva's consort, in the form of a tribal woman – Śavarī, an identification in common with Kubjikā and, indeed, a host of other goddesses. Her origin is grafted onto the well known story of the penance Arjuna observed in a Himalayan forest in order to acquire the Pāśupata Weapon from Śiva. Pleased by his penance, Śiva appeared before him in the garb of a tribal hunter accompanied by the goddess who assumed a similar form as Tvaritā, the tribal Śavarī.[2] Worship of Pārvatī in the form of a Śavarī, the text assures us, gives accomplishment[3] and the chanting of Tvaritā's mantra brings prosperity.[4]

Although the KMT identifies Tvaritā with Kubjikā, she does not play a significant role in the Kubjikā Tantras. Tvaritā is not mentioned at all in the KuKh and she is simply the fourth of the sixty-four Yoginīs worshipped in the ŚM.[5] However, she is not just a minor goddess in Kubjikā's pantheon. The Ś*rīmatasārasaṁgraha* groups her together with Khañjī, Kubjī, Laghvī and

---

[1] Tantrapaddhati chapter 22.

[2] śaṅkareṇa vijayasya tapobhis toṣitena varadena vanānte |
yā kirātavapuṣā saha gaurī svāgatā jayati sā tvaritākhyā || Tantrapaddhati chapter 22.

[3] pārvatī śavarīveṣā dhyeyā lakṣeṇa siddhidā |

[4] Unni 1987: 43-44.

[5] The invocatory mantras of the sixty-four Yoginīs are listed just after ŚM 28/57ab.

Pañcamī.[1] Although this group appears amongst several others and the Tantra does not elaborate on it, Tvaritā is implicitly understood to be on the same level as Kubjikā of which the first three are common alternative names. Similarly, Tvaritā appears in YKh (1) as one of seven forms of Kubjikā, along with Khañjinī, Klinnā, Mīnā, Garbhasamudbhavā, Vakrikā and Aryā, who reside within the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala as aspects of the leader of the transmission (kramanāyikā)[2] where they are worshipped in the hexagram with Khañjinī in the centre. Tvaritā is less prominent in the liturgy of the SKh. There she appears as just one out of thirteen energies (kalā) of the goddess's fifth face, Mahālakṣmī,[3] and as one of the eight attendant Yoginīs of the Mother Vārāhī.[4] Similarly, according to YKh (1), Tvaritā is one of the Yoginīs associated with the goddess's northern face.[5] Tvaritā is the third of a group of Nine Nityās worshipped in a lotus in the eight directions with Tripurabhairavī in the centre.[6] She is also identified with Tripurabhairavī directly in the course of a description of her iconic form in the KuKauM.[7] In the same text she is said to be the Nityā Siddhā who is identified with Tripurā.[8] She appears along with her and other aspects of Kubjikā in a group of eight corresponding to the eight Mothers who guard the directions in the eight towns the protect and in which they reside.[9]

---

[1] khañjī kubjī ca laghvī ca tvaritā pañcamīti ca ǁ ŚMS (1) 2/14cd.

[2] *khañjinī [k, gh: -janā; ṅ: -nā] tvaritā klinnā [k, gh, ṅ: * ] mīnā [g: mānā] garbhasamudbhavā [ṅ: gata-] ǀ vakrikā [g: vakriyā] tv aryavikhyātā [k, ṅ: tvaya-; gh: laya-] saptadhā sā [k, g: ca] varārcitā ǁ saṁvartāmaṇḍalānte tu sthitā sā [g: nāsti] kramanāyikā [g: kriminAyikā] ǀ
YKh (1) 35/101-102ab.

[3] SKh MS G fl. 44b.

[4] ibid. MS G fl. 72a.

[5] YKh (1) chapter 37. See note to KuKh 29/48 where this passage is quoted

[6] Concerning the Nine Nityās see below, p. 217-218.

[7] KuKauM 3/79.

[8] See chapter four of the KuKauM is dedicated to this aspect.

[9] (You are) Kubjikā, Tvaritā, Khañjī, Nityā, Vāgeśvarī, Tripurā, Vajriṇī, Tvaritā and Śāvarī. (You are) the eight, Prayāgā, Varuṇā, Kolā, Aṭṭahāsā, Jayantikā, Caritrā, Ekāmrakā, and Devīkoṭa. Salutations to you Kālī, Umā, Devī and Devadūtī. O Mahocchuṣmā, Mahāśāntā! salutation to you who are power.

kubjikā tvaritā khaṅjī nityā vāgeśvarī tathā ǁ *tripurā vajriṇī caiva [gh: cai *] tvaritā [ṅ: tripurā] śāvarī tathā [gh: ta (?)] ǀ [g: ?]
prayāgā varuṇā [kh: vāruṇā] kolā [gh: koṇanā] aṭṭahāsā jayantikā ǁ *caritraikāmrakā [kh: -kāmukā] caiva devīkoṭaṁ [gh: * *(?)] tu [gh: *(?)] cāṣṭadhā [gh: * (?) dhā] ǀ *tathā kālī hy umā [gh: * (?)mā; ṅ: umā] devī devadūtī namo 'stu te [g: ?]* ǁ [ṅ: + rudrakālī mahāmāye carmamuṇḍā bhayāvahe ǀ*]* *mahocchuṣme [kh: mahochuṣme; gh: maho * *(?); ṅ: mahosūkṣme(?)] mahāśānte [gh: * * * *(?); ṅ: mahāsānte] namas te [gh: (?)maste;] śaktirūpiṇī ǀ [g: ?] KuKauM 5/212cd-215ab.

Tvaritā is also identified as Pratyaṅgirā, a form of Kālī.[1] An indirect link with her and Kālī is also made in the Kālīkrama Tantra, the Kramasadbhāva, from which most of chapter fifteen of the KuKauM is drawn. There Narasiṁha takes the place of Bhairava and Tvaritā of Kālī (as Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī), his consort. We are told that Viṣṇu can assume two forms. One is that of the fierce Narasiṁha. The other is like a child. His power is the goddess Tvaritā. In her undifferentiated (niṣkala) form, she resides in the body of Viṣṇu as the subtle flame of Kuṇḍalinī. In her gross form she emerges out of it as Tvaritā and thus rid of her fierce, virile energy, the god sheds his violent aspect to assume that of a child. The Tantra links Tvaritā, the consort of Narasiṁha, to Kubjikā. Tvaritā, we are told, is Kubjikā, when she is worshipped along with Śiva.[2]

In contrast to the minor roles Tvaritā plays in the Kubjikā corpus in general, in the KMT she is worshipped in the centre of the Wheel of the Skyfaring Yoginīs (khecarīcakra) at the end of an ascending series of Wheels in the body.[3] Heilijgers-Seelen, who has studied these configurations in detail, explains that apart from the goddess's many 'different forms',[4] she has three names, which should not be considered to be those of separate forms. These are - Khañjinī (She Who Limps), Kubjinī (Hunch-backed) and Tvaritā (the Speedy One). Referring to the eight energies that constitute the Circle of Fire (vahnimaṇḍala), the KMT says:

> They are born from Asitāṅga's body, characterized by activity and are both supreme and inferior. They emit the manifold creation, rapidly (tvarita) and persist in subtlety (lāghava).[5]

Hearing the word 'tvarita' i.e. 'rapidly', the goddess asks why the goddess is called Tvaritā (the Speedy One). Bhairava replies:

---

[1] cintāmaṇir iva siddhā tvaritā pratyaṅgirā hy eṣā || KuKauM 3/310cd.

[2] The sacrifice of Tvaritā is on the fourteenth (of the dark fortnight). The Tvaritā of Śiva is Kubjī, and she also belongs to Narasiṁha. . . . In Tvaritā's sacrifice, one becomes the equal of Tvaritā, in Śiva's sacrifice, Śiva and Narasiṁha in that of Narasiṁha.

tathā tu tvaritāyāṁ tu yāgaṁ caiva caturdaśī [k: -rddaśī] ||
śivasya tvaritā kubjī [k: bjabjī] nṛsiṁhasya tathaiva hi | [. . .]
tvaritāyajane cātra tvaritāsamatāṁ vrajet ||
śivayāge śivatvaṁ [ṅ: śivastvaṁ] hi nṛsiṁhe nārasiṁhakam |

KuKauM 15/524cd-525ab, 526cd-527ab.

[3] These Five Wheels are described in chapters 14 to 16 of the KMT that have been translated and researched in detail by Heilijgers-Seelen.

[4] Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 150. Heilijgers-Seelen (1994: 168 ff.) discusses the nature of the 'different forms' in which the goddess manifests on the basis of the account in the KMT.

[5] KMT 16/14.

> As you move quicker than the length of time (as subtle) as the hundredth part of a hair split a thousand times, you are called Tvaritā who destroys all suffering.[1]

Similarly YKh (1) refers to Kubjikā as Tvaritā because she moves with great speed:

> By means of the path of the teachings of the master, Śiva's energy is in the abode of Kula. By means of the three triple modalities, she moves along the three paths (of the Triangle). (She is) Kālī, Katyāyinī, Kākī, Kulālī and Siddhayoginī and moves facing downwards in the Wheel of the Void Beyond the Fourth. She moves spontaneously very quickly (tvarita) solely by means of the inconceivable pulse (spanda) (of her own energy). Thus she is called Tvaritā (the Speedy One), the Yoginī of the Śrīkula born of the Self.[2]

According to the KuKauM another reason why she is called the 'Speedy One' is because the victims of the Wheel of Restraint (nigrahacakra) associated with her 'quickly (tvarita) go to the abode of death'.[3] Conversely, one who has been bitten by a snake but is enveloped in Tvaritā's protective cage of mantras, when struck with a stick or crushed rice is thrown at him, quickly becomes well.[4] None of these magical dimensions of Tvaritā's Vidyā are mentioned in the KMT which, like the KuKh, compared to most other Kubjikā Tantras is singularly devoid of magical concerns. Indeed, nothing more is said in the KMT about Tvaritā except that she is Kubjikā who sits with the god Asitāṅga in the centre of the Wheel of the Skyfarers at the summit of the Triangle in the middle of the three Wheels of the Sun, Moon and Fire in the End of the Twelve.

---

[1] KMT 18/19ab.

[2] gurūpadeśamārgeṇa śaivī [k, gh: ṣevi; g: yedi ?; ṅ: yevi] śaktiḥ [k, g, gh: śakti; ṅ: śaṁti] kulālaye |
trivalītaraṅgabhaṅgībhis [k: -bhi; gh: trivalītaragabhagībhi-] tribhis tripathagāminī ||
kālī katyāyinī [k, gh, ṅ: kalāyinī; g: katyayinī] kākī [k, gh: kālī] kulālī siddhayoginī |
khecakre carate [k, gh, ṅ: tarate] sā tu turyātīte adhomukhī [g: -mukha] ||
acintyaspandamātreṇa [g: acintyaspadamātre] prayāti tvaritaṁ [g: nāsti; gh: -ta] svayam |
tena sā tvaritā nāma ātmajā [k, g, gh, ṅ: -ja] śrīkulayoginī || YKh (1) 35/77-79.

[3] KuKauM 3/213-214ab.

[4] daṇḍena tāḍito vātha cūrṇākair vāpi tāḍitāḥ |
śīghraṁ svasthaḥ prajāyeta tūrṇavidyāprabhāvataḥ || KuKauM 3/292.

The ṢSS supplies Tvaritā's Vidyā in code,[1] the seed-syllable of the goddess (which is KṢRAUṀ) and tells us how many syllables of her Vidyā belong to each of the six limbs.[2] Moreover, the ṢSS tells us that her Nine-syllable Vidyā occupies the centre of the Wheel of the Skyfarers along with Navātman.[3] This essential detail, omitted in the KMT, appears in the ṢSS like the revelation of the secret form of the goddess who here, in this, the most elevated part of the ascent, is accompanied by the god at the very frontier of the Supreme and is called Without Name (Anāmā).

Chapter three of the KuKauM is dedicated to Tvaritā.[4] There she is portrayed in her original form as a goddess who possesses many magical powers which she dispenses to her devotees whom she protects from misfortunes. In particular, Tvaritā, the tribal Śāvarī, controls and subdues snakes. Her power to remove the venom that causes those who have been bitten by snakes to faint and die extends to the poison of the spiritual illusion that binds and prevents the attainment of the powers, magical and yogic (siddhi), that could otherwise be acquired by means of the body.[5] But first and foremost, Tvaritā is a snake goddess and many links are evident between Tvaritā and snakes in the description of her in the KuKauM which is as follows.

> Tvaritā is without compare and bestows all accomplishments. She is dark blue (śyāmā) and her form is that of a (tribal) Śāvarī. She has big, upraised breasts and has two snakes as earrings and two as (her) anklets. She is the three-eyed goddess Tripurā who bestows boons and freedom from fear. Or else, she has eighteen arms and one should think (of her when engaged) in magical rites (kāmyabheda). She wears golden clothes and is adorned with a peacock banner. She sits on a lion throne, bestows boons and holds a peacock parasol. She has a peacock bangle (kaṭaka) and is adorned with a garland of wild

---

[1] Tvaritā's Vidyā here is: HRĪṀ KHECACCHEKṢĪ HRĪṀ KṢEṀ HRŪṀ PHAKHAHRĪṀ (comm: HPHHRĪṀ). Note with Heilijgers-Seelen that the initials of the names of Tvaritā's retinue coincide with the syllables of this mantra.

[2] ṢSS 25/40-2.

[3] navākṣarī tv iyaṁ vidyā navātmanā [k kh: -tmāna] samanvitā |
khecarīcakramadhyasthā krīḍate [k kh: krīḍaṁte] satataṁ priye || ṢSS 25/44.

[4] It is quite likely that this chapter of the KuKauM, like several others, has been drawn from another Tantra belonging to a different school. Kubjikā is not mentioned even once throughout it.

[5] *idānīṁ śrotum icchāmi nāgānāṁ [k: -nā; g: -naṁ] damanīṁ tathā [k: * * * * *; ṅ: * * * bhuyā]* || [kh gh: these lines missing] tvaritā sāvarākhyātā [ṅ: -cākhyātā] yena bhrāntir vinaśyati [g ṅ: -syati] |
yena siddhir manuṣyāṇāṁ dehenānena jāyate || KuKauM 3/1cd-2.

> flowers (vanamālā). She is adorned with a beautiful peacock diadem.[1]

This goddess is also described in the Agnipurāṇa. As in the KuKauM, three forms of Tvaritā are mentioned there.[2] One has eighteen arms,[3] another is said to have either two or eight arms,[4] but is not described. The eighteen-armed form described in the AP is essentially the same as the one in the KuKauM. The only difference is that, according to the KuKauM, Tvaritā is sitting, whereas according to the AP she stands with her right foot on a lion and left on a pedestal. There are three important features of this goddess that are common to most of her visualized forms. She is a tribal woman (śāvarī) and she is adorned with snakes. Thirdly, she is associated with peacocks who are their enemies. The latter feature, which underscores the special power she has over snakes, is particularly striking in the visualization described in the KuKauM.

Another form of Tvaritā is described in the Tantrarāja. In this form Tvaritā has four arms. She is not explicitly said to be a Śāvarī, but her leaf clothing suggests it. The rest - her association with snakes and the peacock - is the same.

---

[1] *tvaritā [kh g gh: catvāritā] yā [g: ] anaupamyā [k ṅ: manaupamyaṁ; kh gh: ataupamyaṁ; yataupamyāṁ] sarvasiddhipradāyikā [k kh g ṅ: -kaṁ] ||
śyāmā [g: samā] śāvarirūpeṇa [k g: sāvara-; ṅ: sācara-] pīnonnatapayodharā [k: -rā; kh: pīnontanupayodharāḥ; g: pīnonnatupayodharāḥ; ṅ: pīnonatapayodharāḥ] |
nāgau [g: nāgo; ṅ: nāsau] dvau [ṅ: tau] kuṇḍalau tasyāḥ [k kh g gh ṅ: tasyā] keyūrau [kh: keyūrai; gh: keyuro; ṅ: keyūre] dvau vyavasthitau [ṅ: -to] ||
trinetrā tripurā devī [k: deviṁ; kh g gh ṅ: devi] varadābhayasaṁyutā [k kh gh ṅ: -taṁ] |
aṣṭādaśabhujā [ṅ: aṣṭhadaṁśaṁbhubhujāṁ] vātha kāmyabhedeṣu [kh g gh: kāmyobhedeṣu; ṅ: kāsyobhedeṣu] cintayet ||
suvarṇaparidhānā [g: suparṇa-; ṅ: -paridhānaṁ] tu mayūradhvajaśobhitā [ṅ: māyūra-] |
siṁhāsanasthā varadā māyūracchatradhāriṇī ||
mayūrakaṭakopetā vanamālā vibhūṣitā [g: -ṣitāḥ] |
mukuṭena [g: makuṭena; ṅ: muktātana] vicitreṇa māyūreṇa [all MSs: mayūreṇa] virājate ||
KuKauM 3/77cd-81.

[2] Mallmann 1963: 160 ff..

[3] According to the AP (310/1 ff.) in the right hands Tvaritā holds a thunderbolt, vase (kuṇḍa), sword, disc, mace, spear, arrow, javelin and makes a boon bestowing gesture. In the left hands she holds a bow, fetter, arrow, bell, makes a threatening gesture with the index finger and holds a conch and a hook, makes a fear dispelling gesture and, in the last hand, holds a thunderbolt.

[4] AP 314/1-3.

Tvaritā (1)

(Tvaritā's) form is auspicious. (She is) in the first flush of youth and her complexion is dark. She has three eyes and four hands and her beautiful lotus-like face smiles gently. She is clad in new leaves. She is well adorned and has a chain around her waist and anklets with eight fierce and great serpents of four kinds belonging to the four castes, Vipra, Kṣatriya, Veśya and Śudra. (She wears) a crystal crown on her head with a crest made of peacock's feathers. Her arms are adorned with bangles made of beautiful peacock's tail feathers (and she has) an umbrella and banner (made of them). Strings of Guñjā berries are around her throat and on (her) breasts, which are smeared with red (sandal). Smiling gently she holds in her four hands a noose and goad and makes the gesture (mudrā) of granting boons and dispelling fear.[1]

The KuKauM supplies two Vidyās of this goddess. One is the Tvaritā Gayatrī.[2] Another consists of twelve syllables. The nine-syllable Vidyā taught in the ṢSS[3] probably relates to the two or eight armed form of the goddess mentioned in the AP, but is not described in either the KuKauM or the ṢSS. The AP refers to two possible forms of Tvaritā who should be visualized along with nine attendants. They embody the syllables of her Vidyā that are the initials of their names. The same nine are listed in the Tantrarāja as the attendants of Tvaritā.[4] They are worshipped on the eight petals of a lotus as the energies of the letters of Tvaritā's mantra (mantrārṇaśakti). In the AP they are simply listed with a reference to their locations. The KuKauM adds Jayā and Vijayā as two attendants and a servant and describes them briefly as follows:

1) Huṁravā (She who makes the sound Huṁ) has the form of a lightning flash and, auspicious, holds a thunderbolt weapon (vajrāyudha). 2) Khecarī (the Skyfaring Goddess) has the form of fire and is adorned with a javelin as a weapon. 3) Caṇḍā (the Fierce One) holds a staff. She is black (kṛṣṇa) and points (threateningly) at (both) gods and demons. 4) Chedinī (the Piercing One) is blue. She holds a sword and club (kheṭaka). 5) Dakṣā (Skillful) is dark blue (śyāmā) and, auspicious, holds a snake and noose. 6) Strī is yellow

---

[1] Intro. to TR p. 30 from TR 14/6-10.
[2] The Tvaritā Gayatrī is: OṀ TVARITĀVIDYĀ VIDMAHE TŪRṆAVIDYĀ CA DHĪMAHI TAN NO DEVĪ PRACODAYĀT.
[3] navākṣarā bhaved vidyā ṢSS 25/28c.
[4] TR 14/15-16.

Tvaritā (2)

> and has a flag as (her) attribute. 7) Huṁkārī (She who makes the sound Huṁ) has a club and is black. 8) Kṣemakārī (Forgiving One) is fierce at first (but then becomes gracious). She is naked, has three eyes and three nets (pañjara). She rises up holding the earth and is intent (protsantī) on devouring the universe. 9) Pheṭkārī holds a bow. She is Kaulikā and is placed in the middle.
>
> Jayā and Vijayā are adorned with golden staffs. The servant is a barbarian (barabara). He is black and (his) head is shaved. He holds a club. Fashion (this) auspicious image (pratimā) of many forms in this way on a cloth or on a stone or make it from plaster or (draw) a picture (of it). It is especially beneficial when one worships, visualizes (the deity) or repeats (her) mantra.[1]

Tvaritā is primarily portrayed in the KuKauM as a goddess who protects from nefarious beings, negative planetary influences, enemies and poison, especially snakebite. She is a powerful apotropeic deity who responds forcefully and with great speed to the violence of an aggressor. However, when pleased, she is no less speedy in dispensing her grace. Thus she is appropriately called the Speedy One.

---

[1] huṁravā [kh: kuravā; g: huṁvavā; ṅ: huṁkāra] taḍidākārā [ṅ: vātaṭhi-] vajrāyudhadharā [ṅ: -varā] śubhā |
khecarī [ṅ: khecare] vahnirūpā [kh: -rūpān; gh: ?] tu śaktyāyudhavibhūṣitā [gh: ?; ṅ: -yuva-] ||
caṇḍā daṇḍadharā kṛṣṇā [kh: kṛtsnā] tarjayantī surāsurān [ṅ: parāsarān] | chedanī [ṅ: ccheda] nīlavarṇābhā [kh: missing] khaḍgakheṭakadhāriṇī || [gh: ?]
*dakṣā [k: dakṣe; kh: dakṣī; ṅ: dakṣīna] tu [ṅ: *] śyāmavarṇābhā [ṅ: syāmavarṇṇāmavarṇṇābhā] nāgapāśadharā [ṅ: nāgayādharā] śubhā [ṅ: * ] |
strī [ṅ: śubhāstī] ca [kh g ṅ: va; gh: vaṁ] dhvajāyudhā [kh: dhvajāyutā; ṅ: dhvajāpradhāyāṁ] pītā [ṅ: tā] huṁkārī [ṅ: huṁkārāṁ] gadayāsitā [g ṅ: madayāsitā] ||
kṣemakārī puraḥ [k ṅ: puna; gh: purā] raudrā [kh gh ṅ: raudro] nagnā tryakṣā [kh: yakṣān; g gh: tryakṣān; ṅ: tryakṣās] tripañjarā [kh g ṅ: ti-] |
sā jātā [k, kh: sajātu; g ṅ: sajān] bhūmihastā tu protsantī [kh g: prochantī; gh: procchaṁtī; ṅ: procchaṁtīn] grasituṁ [ṅ: siruku] jagat [ṅ: gatā] ||
phaṭkārī [k kh g gh: phakārī; ṅ: phetkārī] dhanuhastā [gh: dhanuhastāṁ] tu kaulikā [k kh g gh ṅ: kulikā] madhyayojitā |
jayā ca vijayā caiva hemadaṇḍavibhūṣitā || kiṁkaro barbaro [kh: vedhare] muṇḍī [kh: tuṁḍī] lakuṭī kṛṣṇabhāsuraḥ [k: -sura; ṅ: -surāṁ] | [gh: ?]
evaṁ paṭe 'tha [k: pāṭetha; kh g: -pa; ṅ: padeṣva] pāṣāṇe [kh: vāthāgai; g: vāṣāṇe; ṅ: vārṣāṇe] lipyajāṁ [kh g: lippyajā; ṅ: lipyajā] citrajāṁ [kh g ṅ: citrajā] tathā || [gh: ?]
nānārūpakasaṁyuktāṁ [kh g gh ṅ: -yuktā] kārayet [ṅ: kālayen] pratimāṁ śubhām [g: subhāṁ] |
dhyānakāle 'tha [g gh: -kāletha] vā jāpye pūjāyāṁ ca viśiṣyate [g: viśeṣataḥ] || KuKauM 3/82-88.

Tvaritā's association with snakes is probably the link that connects her with Kubjikā. Kubjikā, like Tvaritā is adorned with snakes[1] and as Kuṇḍalinī is the Queen of Snakes (nāgarajñī). Modelled, it seems, originally on the type of village goddess who is invoked to remedy snake bites – which in the case of highly venomous snakes needs to be very speedy – she is elevated to the status of Kubjikā, a Great Goddess. As such she quickly remedies the poison of spiritual bondage by the powerful infusion of energy that leads through trance – like one swooning from poison – to the liberating experience of the pervasive presence of the supreme goddess.

Kubjikā

Now we have had a look at the main goddesses who are associated with Kubjikā and are part of her identity, we turn to Kubjikā herself. We have already had occasion to discuss how and why Kubjikā - the Little Humped Back One - is bent over when examining the myth of her origin in the first chapter of this introduction. We may simply recapitulate here. She appears in the myth of her origin confined in the Liṅga, immersed in contemplation. A symbol of the Point in the centre of the maṇḍala, she abides there 'bent over' within it in her unmanifest, potential state. When she emerges from it, like a sprout from a seed, she is slightly bent over. Kuṇḍalinī, as the energy of the Liṅga, emerges the same way from it. Again, she bends forward feeling 'shame', like a bashful young woman, when Bhairava sees her emerging from the Liṅga because she knows that she will engage in Kaula union with him.[2] She is also 'bent over' when engaged in union with Bhairava.

Analogously, she is the 'bent over' in her maṇḍala as the triangular Yoni. She is also 'bent over' by being 'confined in her seed-syllable[3] or mounted on the triangular Vāgbhava (AIṀ)[4] which, along with and Single-syllable Vidyā (HSKHPHREṀ), is her seed-syllable. Her 'crooked' and 'bent' form symbolizes

---

[1] See below, p. 171. Note that Kubjikā is adorned, like Tvaritā, with snakes belonging to the four castes.

[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 45 ff. with reference to KMT 2/9-11ab. Mukundarāja puts it this way: That energy (Kubjikā) is the young Kaula consort (dūtikā) (as beautiful as a) celestial nymph (apsaras). (She is) Indrāṇī, the young energy Māyā who is completely full (of all the energies). In her nature as Kuṇḍalinī, she is Vakrikā, that is, round. She is 'crooked' (vakrā) because (hearing) the story (of her origin) in the Tantra she feels shame before (her) Lord. These and others are many meanings (of Kubjikā's name).

sā śaktiḥ [śaktā] dūtikāpsarā | indrāṇī pratipūrṇaśaktikā māyā | kuṇḍalinīrūpāyāṁ vakrikā vartulā | nāthaṁ prati tantrakathane lajjitā vakrā ity ādayo bahavaś cārthakāḥ | SaṁP

[3] Comm. ṢSS 25/47cd-49.

[4] See intro. vol. 1, p. 303.

the spiritual power of the goddess within the body. She is the ‘crooked’ (kuṭilā, vakrā) or ‘coiled’ (vartulā, kuṇḍalākārā) Kuṇḍalinī. The goddess abides in the supreme state as the pure energy of transcendental emptiness. In the subtle state it flows out as the power of the will that deploys itself as the configurations into which it differentiates itself. Finally, in the gross spheres of reality, her energy is within the physical and subtle body as the vital breath that vitalizes it. Thus: ‘just as someone with a big body who moves in a small house must enter it with (his) body bent, so the Great Goddess (who resides in the confined space of the microcosm) has a bent body.’[1] Conjoined with the ‘crooked’ vital breath she is present in the body of all living beings[2] and so is ‘crooked’ herself.

The name 'Kujā' or, indeed, 'Kubjikā' itself became progressively prominent with the development of the goddess's cult in the texts. The earlier names - Laghvikā ('Subtle One') and Khañjikā ('Little Lame One') - that dominate the early prototype of the KMT, the Laghvikāmnāya, largely receded into obscurity already by the time the KMT is redacted, although they linger more in some manuscripts than others.[3] The name Laghvikāmnāya continues to appear in the colophons in the place of Kulālikāmnāya[4] but the goddess is hardly ever called by this name.[5] A residue of the importance of the earlier name, Khañjikā, is apparent in the KMT, which explains how this name accords with the goddess’s nature, even so the KMT rarely calls her this.[6]

There are a surprising number of variant forms of the goddess’s name already in the KMT. The most basic one is Kubjikā which appears there twenty-one times. Others include Kubjinī (eight times in the KMT), Kubjī (17 times), Kubjīśānī, Kubjeśī, Kubjeśvarī.[7] We also find several direct derivates of this name that have been given to aspects or parts of the goddess. Kamalakubjikā is Kubjikā’s Heart, the first of her six limbs.[8] As Karṇakubjā,[9] the ‘Bent One of the Ear’, she resides in that part of the body. Guhyakubjikā[10] and Vajrakubjī are two

---

[1] ṢSS 25/48-49 quoted in intro. vol. 1, p. 301.

[2] ṢSS 47/46cd-47, quoted in intro. vol. 1, 40-41.

[3] See intro. vol. 3, p. 312 ff..

[4] A significant residual trace of the name is found in variant readings of the colophons of the KMT for Kulālikāmnāya (< > Laghvikāmnāya). Not uncommonly some MSs read Laghvikā for Kubjikā. For example, amongst those used for the published edition this variant is found in the colophons of chapters 9, 10, 13, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 23 and 25.

[5] Laghvikā apears twice as the name of the goddess in the KMT (7/39 and 17/51b) and once as Laghvinī (243/101a).

[6] The name Khañjikā appears four times in the KMT (16/20c, 21a, 17/30d, and 24/102a var), Khañjinī once (ibid. 16/19c), and Khañjī twice (ibid. 3/36b and 16/15b). See intro. vol. 1, p. 302-303 and notes with reference to KMT 16/19cd-20 (= ṢSS 25/45cd-46).

[7] These three names appear in KMT 7/3a), 17/51b and 16/88b, respectively.

[8] KMT 7/39.

[9] KMT 11/19d, 26b, 19/10d.

[10] KMT 10/29.

of her aspects. One of her forms is Nagnakubjikā – the Naked Kubjikā.[1] The male equivalents are not as varied. We find Kubjīśa, Kubjeśvara and, rarely, Kubjīśāna.

There are also a number of variants of the name 'Kujā'. These include: Kujā,[2] Kujāmbikā,[3] Śrīkujāmbikā,[4] Kujeśī,[5] and Kujeśvarī.[6] The goddess's name is also given to her scripture – the Kujīmata.[7] The common male equivalents are simply Kujeśa, Kujeśāna, and Kujeśvara. Typical of the general presumption of some kind of non-sanskritic origin of deities like Kubjikā, it has been suggested that 'kujā' may be a word of Munda origin and therefore, in some way, also the goddess. But this is not at all likely. Kubjikā's origins can be sufficiently well understood solely by reference to the Tantras. The texts, for their part, explain the name as meaning the goddess who is 'born' (jā) from the earth (ku). Another derives this name from the root 'kūj' to 'make a sound'.[8] The first etymology teaches that Kubjikā is a goddess or Yoginī who roams the earth (bhūcarī). The other that she, like other Tantric deities, is one with her mantra and so 'resounds' with it.

In one place in the KMT[9] Kubjikā is called Kuṭilā – the Crooked One - but the name Vakrā and variants, which mean the same, do not appear in the KMT and the oldest versions of its expansions, the ṢSS and the ŚM.[10] However, Vakrā / Vakrikā is a very common name in the MBT. There Vakrā is the 'crooked' (kuṭilā) Kuṇḍalinī, the goddess of the tradition. Thus, the MBT refers to itself as the Vakrikāmata,[11] Vakrikāgama[12] and Vakrikāmnāya.[13] Indeed, it is Vakrā who is speaking. Śrīnātha commonly addresses her this way.[14] The tradition is called the

---

[1] KMT 17/16d.
[2] KMT 17/125b var.
[3] Ibid. 19/61d.
[4] Ibid. 18/43.
[5] Ibid. 3/31d.
[6] Ibid. 8/23d and 15/58b.
[7] Ibid. 18/113b. It is also called Kubjinīmata in the KMT in three places.
[8] See KMT 17/29cd-30 quoted in intro. vol. 1, p. 303-4.
[9] KMT 21/93d.
[10] In a few place Vakrā replaces Kubjikā in some MSs (kubjikovāca > vakrovāca). Vakrādevī appears in a few Krama mantras presented in chapter 23 of the ŚM, but this certainly not an original part of the ŚM.
[11] eṣā caitanyamūrtis tu [2: etac caitanyaśaktis tu] parākhyā [2: k, kh: pareṣā] vakrikāmate [k, kh, gh: vakrikāsaha; ṅ: vakrikāhara] || YKh (1) 16/98cd.
[12] japasaṁkhyāvidhānaṁ tu saṁprāptaṁ vakrikāgame | YKh (1) 18/45ab.
[13] divyaṁ vakrikāmnāyaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: ca-] saṁsṛṣṭaṁ [k, kh, gh: saṁsūṣṭaṁ] khañjinīmatam || YKh (1) 12/2cd.
[14] kathayasva [gh: -sve] prasādena yadi tuṣṭāsi vakrike | YKh (1) 3/140ab, 3/164ab, 3/271cd, 24/1cd.

Vakrāmnāya[1] because she is the source of it.[2] She is also called Vakrikāvvā, Vakradevī,[3] Vakrāśakti, and Vakriṇī.[4] She is 'the mistress of the gods whose form is crooked'.[5] She is crooked because she is especially associated with the triangular Yoni that returns perpetually back on itself and so is 'the crooked Mother without end whose limbs are crooked.'[6]

The Goddess called 'Ku' (Kukārā, Kunāmā)

In later sources, not the KMT or the ŚM,[7] the goddess is occasionally called Kunāmā[8] or Kunāmikā[9] i.e '(she whose) name is Ku' and, more often, Kukārā - '(she who is denoted by) the syllable Ku'.[10] This is an abbreviation of the goddess's name. Similarly, the goddess Maṅgalā, the supreme deity and first teacher (ādiguru) of the Kālīkrama in Kashmir, is called the 'venerable goddess letter Ma' Śrīmakāradevī.[11] Another common example in the Kubjikā sources and elsewhere is the expression 'Ḍādi' literally 'beginning with Ḍā' with reference to the goddess Ḍākinī.

Although this name is nondescript and could theoretically be used in any instance to denote our goddess,[12] we find that the sources prefer to name the

---

[1] napuṁsakapadaṁ kiṁ tu vakrāmnāyaṁ [k, kh: vaktrāmrāyaṁ; gh: vaktrāmāyaṁ] kathaṁ bhavet || YKh (1) 3/180cd.

[2] kulāc chrīpaścimaṁ [k, gh: kulāśrīpaścimaṁ] veśmaṁ sarvaṁ yatra pralīyate |
sṛjate siṁharūpeṇa vakrikākhyāpy adhomukhī [k, kh, gh: -pyadhaumukhī] || YKh (1) 4/185 cd.

[3] YKh (1) 14/5d, KuKh 8/4d and 36/105a, respectively.

[4] This form of the goddess's name appears only once in the MBT, in YKh (1) 26/3b.

[5] deveśī vakrarūpā YKh (1) 15/79b.

[6] vakrāṅgasaṁyutā [ṅ: vaktrāṅgaṁ-] vakrā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: vaktrā; 2: vakrānantā purānandā] mātā [k, kh, gh: śrotrā; ṅ: śrotā] śrīkaṇṭhakaulikī [gh: śrīkaṁtha-; 2: -kaulinī] | [2: kh: ?]
YKh (1) 16/8a.

[7] The names Kukārā and Kunāmā do not appear in the KMT except in the extra lines of MSs EFG (app 3, I, 4c) after KMT 17/60 (kunāmā samayā proktā) in MS AB this extra line begins samayākhyā kukārākhyā. These names are unknown in the ŚM.

[8] Kunāmā is the one who awakes all the Siddhas and the imperishable.
*bodhanī [ṅ: * dhanī] sarvasiddhānāṁ kunāmā [k, gh, ṅ: kulāmā] cākṣarasya ca* |
YKh (1) 32/88ab.

[9] dvitīyā kathitā caryā kāmarūpā kunāmikā | KuKh 16/6ab.

[10] śivaśaktiprasādena [kh, g: -śaktiḥ] śrīkukārāṁ [kh, g: -kukārāntaṁ] namāmy ahaṁ ||
KnT 3/302cd.

[11] MP (1) p. 5.

[12] For example: The Supreme Goddess who (sits on a) corpse (preta) abides as the goddess called Kukārā.

pretasyopari [k kh: + āsanarūpa] parameśvarī kukārākhyā [k kh: -kṣā] devī sthitā | Ṭ MS K fl. 13a, Also: And she is the goddess called Kukārā (sā ca devī kukārākhyā YKh (1) 28/63ab) goddess this way in just a few of her aspects. One is her sonic form. As the sonic goddess she is: 'Without waves, the eternal power, she is Kukārā, the deity of the letters'[1] who consists of all the letters.[2] She is, by the same token, the Vidyā[3] which is her Command:[4]

> The Vidyā is the goddess called Kukārā, she wears a garland of thirty-two syllables. [. . .] Beginning with Bha and ending with Ca, this solar (Vidyā) is the excellent means. Your Five Praṇavas are at the beginning and those too have come forth in the end (of the Vidyā). The Great Goddess, the Goddess Flame (Śikhā devī), resides in the three seed-syllables (kūṭa) on the three corners of the Triangle. Said to be Kukārā's Command, there she is the mistress of the Wheel, the leader (nāyikā) of the Siddhas. She has come through the sequence of Meru and is adorned with the fifty letters. Beginning with Nectar (amṛta) (the letter A) and ending with Ha, having pervaded Meru, she is well arranged.[5]

---

[1] nistaraṅgā [g: nistaraṅgatā] sadā [k: śatā; g: nāsti] śaktiḥ [k: śakti] kukārākṣaradevatā [k: kakārakṣara-; g: -devatāḥ] || YKh (1) 32/81cd.

[2] She, Kukārā, is said to be Khañjī, the mistress of the Wheel, the leader of the Siddhas. She has come through the transmission of Meru and she consists of the fifty letters' kukārā [k, kh: kakārā] sā [kh: (?)] smṛtā [kh: (?)] khañjī cakreśī siddhanāyikā ||
sā ca merukramāyātā pañcāśākṣararūpiṇī | YKh (2) 14/13cd-14ab.

[3] The one called the venerable Ciñciṇīśa who, born in one's own body, is the subtle exertion (īśadyatana) (that impells the body and mind). And how else is he? One should worship him along with the Vidyā called Kukārā.

svaśarīrasaṁbhūtaṁ śrīciñciṇīśābhidhānaṁ īśadyatanarūpam [k: yatanā-; kh: yatatā-] | anyac ca kīdṛśam | *kukārākhyayā vidyayā [k kh: vidyā] samanvitaṁ [kh: sa * nvitaṁ] pūjayet* |
Ṭ MS K fl. 174a.

[4] It is said to be the (mantra consisting of) thirty-two (syllables). The Command of Kukārā has emerged (in this form).

dvāviṁśākṣaram ity uktaṁ kukārājñā [k: -rākṣa] vinirgatā || ibid. 16/66cd.

[5] vidyā devyā kukārākhyā [kh: vidyādevī -divī ca] dvātriṁśākṣaramālinī [k: dvātriśākhyaṁramālinī] | [. . .]
bhakārādicakārāntaṁ [k: -rāṁtā] saureyaṁ [k: saukaraṁ] karaṇottamam [k: karsalamuttamaṁ; kh: karaṇaṁ śubhaṁ] |
ādau te praṇavāḥ [k: praṇavā] pañca ante [k: ate] te 'pi visarpitāḥ [k: -tā] ||
śṛṅgatrayatrikūṭasthā [k: śṛṁgatrayaṁtrakūṭasthāṁ] śikhā devī maheśvarī | [kh: śṛṅgatrayatrikūṭasthā saptakhaṇḍasamanvitā -kandha- ||]
kukārājñā smṛtā [k: smṛtāṁ] tatra [k: taṁtta; kh: kukārā kakārā sā smṛtā khañjī] cakreśī siddhanāyikā [k: -nāyīkā] ||
sā ca merukramāyātā pañcāśākṣarabhūṣitā [kh: -] |
amṛtādihakārāntā [k: -rthaṁ] meruṁ vyāpya vyavasthitā [k: sya-] || YKh (1) 16/2ab, 10-12.

Although Kukārā and Kunāmā are abbreviations of the name Kubjikā or Kujā, they imply a close relationship between the goddess and Kuṇḍalinī whose name also begins with 'Ku' and so may be abbreviated in the same way.[1] All the great Kaula goddesses are Kuṇḍalinī within the body of each living being, mirroring in miniature the form in which she abides within the god himself. Even so, Kubjikā who is 'bent over', i.e. coiled as is Kuṇḍalinī in the body, is identified with her in a special way in the minds of her devotees. As Kuṇḍalinī, Kukārā is both Unstruck Sound, in keeping with her sonic identity, as the seventeenth, vitalizing energy of the Moon:

> The meaning is that she is the sixteen vowels within the Sixteen-spoked (Wheel). (Her) form is Unstruck Sound in the middle of the sixteen energies of the Moon and is the seventeenth (energy) called Kukārā who is Kuṇḍalinī.[2]

The supreme lunar energy is the divine Lunar Light, the Lamp of Kula that illumines all the deities and energies.[3] She is the Light of the three lights of Sun, Fire and Moon. Within them she illumines them, even as she is the womb (bhaga) of emanation:

> In the midst of the Sun, Moon and Fire, is the supreme energy called Kukārā. O mistress of the gods, she resides in the foundation. Emanation takes place there.[4]

This is her subtle form, just as Kukārā is her short 'subtle' name:[5]

---

[1] The New Moon (amā) is the venerable Mother, the goddess Kukārā who is said to be Kuṇḍalī.

*amā śrī - ambikā [k: gnī-] devī kukārā [k: kaṁṭhikāṁ; g: kukā ] kuṇḍalī [k: kṣaṁḍalī] smṛtā [k: smṛtāṁ] | YKh (1) 43/37cd.

[2] ṣoḍaśāre ṣoḍaśasvarā [k: -ra; kh: -śvara] | ṣoḍaśacandrakalāmadhye anackarūpā [anaccha-] saptadaśamī [k kh: saptā-] kukārākhyā kuṇḍalinīrūpā ity arthaḥ | Ṭ MS K fl. 27b-28a.

[3] She is called the Yoni (bhaga). She is the Lamp of Kula and (her) form is the Moon. These supreme energies in the form of moon rays are associated with Kunāmā.

bhagākhyā kuladīpā ca candrarūpā [g: vahurūpā] ca mitriṇī |
kunāmāsahitā hy etāḥ jyotsnārūpāḥ [k kh g: -rūpā] parākalāḥ || KRU 3/29.

[4] sūryasomāgnimadhye tu kukārākhyā parā kalā ||
ādhārasthā ca deveśi tatra sṛṣṭiḥ pravartate | ṢSS 21/20cd-21ab.

[5] She is in the midst of the Transmission of the Aged, which is the third (transmission) in a subtle form or as the Subtle One in the form of Kukāra (i.e. Kuṇḍalinī) tṛtīyasya vṛddhakramasya madhyasthā laghurūpā kukārarūpā sukṣmā vā | Ṭ MS K fl. 7b.

> Think of the one called Kukārā, brilliant as millions of lightning flashes and form like a series of garlands of flames, to be filling the Void with nectar.[1]

All three aspects are drawn together in the definition of her name. Thus 1) she is 'bent over', present in a reduced, subtle, or 'contracted' form in the body. 2) She is present in the conjunction of the vital breath and the body which she brings about. 3) She is the Sound that resounds in the Void through which the universe of sounds is created.[2]

Amarikā

Amarikā – the Immortal One - is not a very common name of the goddess or of her tradition in the Kubjikā sources. It appears to have gained popularity late in the development of the Kubjikā corpus.[3] It is unknown in the KMT and the ŚM. However, Amarikā does appear once in the ṢSS as one of a series of Vidyās. There we read:

> She is the Vidyā of twenty syllables well known as Amarikā. She destroys the magical devices (yantra) of others and (is used) to catch the wicked, remove fever, paralyse speech, the mouth and armies. She is the goddess Amarikā present in the intense union with the Yoginīs (haṭhamelaka).[4]

As in other cases,[5] the goddess develops in the later literature from a 'low' one concerned with black magic and protection to Kubjikā herself, the Great Goddess. Amarikā contains the aggregate of the energies of the fifty letters. Thus the beings who govern them all belong to the one clan (gotra) of the goddess

---

[1] vidyutkoṭisahasraprabhāṁ [k kh: -bhā] tathā jvālāmālāvalirūpāṁ [k: -valitarūpā; kh: -valitaṁ rūpāṁ] kukārākhyāṁ [kh: kukālākhyāṁ] āpūryamāṇāṁ ca [kh: -mānāṁ vaścaṁ] khaṁ cintayet amṛtena | Ṭ MS K fl. 13a.

[2] See ṢSS 47/46cd-47 quoted in intro. vol. 1, 40-41.

[3] It is worth noting in passing that the development of a new name or some other feature of the teachings can serve as indications to ascertain the relative dating of the texts or parts of them in the Kubjikā corpus.

[4] eṣā viṁśākṣarī vidyāmarikā nāma viśrutā |
duṣṭagrahe [k, kh: -ha] jvarocchede parayantravidāriṇī ||
vācāstambhe mukhastambhe sainyastambhe tathaiva ca |
eṣā amarikā devī yoginīhaṭamelake || ṢSS 30/56-57.

[5] Cf. above, p. 94.

Amarikā. The clan is the Transmission of Amarikā (the Imperishable Goddess).[1] Amarikā is the goddess of this 'clan', that is, the aggregate of sonic energies. Contained in the Ocean of the Yoni, their fluid energy flows and combines in countless ways. This activity is embodied in the goddess Amarikā.[2] Ultimately, the play of the energies of the Void, Amarikā is the name of the tradition which expounds the Emptiness within the Goddess and the liberation attained by realising it.[3]

Anāmā

Anāmā is a common name for Anākhyā in the texts of the Kālīkrama. Like many other names, this one is also a name of the Kubjikā tradition and its scripture. However, it is not found in the KMT except as part of the name of an earlier authoritative scripture from which the KMT claims to be derived.[4] The word appears once in the ŚM as an adjective, not as a proper name.[5] It is not common also in the later sources, except in YKh (1) where it has undergone a number of developments. Here we have an example, it seems, of how a single individual or group contributes its own insights to a system.

'Anāma' may simply mean in a non-technical sense that something is so subtle that it cannot be properly explained and therefore named like 'the inner Vow that has no name'.[6] In a deeper sense, 'Anāma' denotes the ultimate transcendental reality, which is the source of manifestation and all that can be described and named but is itself beyond description and so is the Nameless, just as it is the Unwriteable (alekhya).[7] It may be abstract Mahākaula free of all the polarities.[8] So it can apply to the god[1] as well as to the goddess.[2] In either case,

---

[1] KuKh 62/61ab = YKh (1) 30/68ab. This is the only place in YKh (1) where this name of the goddess appears. See note to KuKh 17/36cd-37.

[2] In the KuKh (62/81) we read: Amarikā (the Immortal Goddess) is the supreme activity of the entire ocean (of the Yoni). By abandoning all duality man attains the Heart (of the deity).

[3] Liberation is indeed (to be found) in the tradition (āmnāya) of (the goddess) Amarikā (the Immortal One) and in the venerable Vakrikāmata. KuKh 68/49.

The tradition of (the goddess) Amarikā (the Immortal) is the Void and its emptiness is within (the goddess) Kujā. Ibid. 68/79.

[4] This is a collection of the essence (of the teaching), the excellent teaching of the goddess with no name (anāmāmata) whose (name) should not be uttered. If (one does) utter it (by mistake in public), one should repeat (the goddess's Vidyā) a hundred million times. KMT 25/207 (= ṢSS 50/86cd-87ab).

[5] The teacher of the universe is all-pervasive, unmanifest and without name.

anāmaṁ ca nirābhāsaṁ sarvavyāpī jagadguruḥ [kh g: -guruṁ] | ŚM 4/236ab.

[6] KuKh 14/8ab.

[7] KuKh 36/92.

[8] Mahākaula is the Nameless free of being and non-being.

astināstivinirmuktaṁ mahākaulam anāmikam | YKh (1) 4/21ab.

whether god or goddess, as 'No Name' they are the highest plane of being, the supreme reality, the ultimate and final place of merger of all things and so cannot be characterized, compared or named as either god or goddess or even as the highest energy or divine form, as these too dissolve away there.[3] At the end of the Nameless (anāmānte) one attains the Command (ājñāsiddhi) which is liberation.[4] This is the goal and climax of the purifying ascent of energy that takes place in the course of initiation. Anāmā is not only transcendental, she is also positive energy. Anāmā is the name of the goddess in her inner aspect as Kuṇḍalinī identified with the lunar energy Amā.[5] In that context 'Anāmā' means 'she who is called A (= Amā)'.[6] Anāmā is Amā who is Bhairava's divine will. It is the source of Amā and where it ultimately dissolves away. She is the subtle and completely full consciousness who discerns the true nature of phenomena and then dissolves away into the Bliss of Stillness (nirānanda).[7]

The goddess is 'the Nameless (anāmā), the energy which is consciousness (who resides) in the maṇḍala of the Nameless (anāmamaṇḍala).'[8] Anāmā is in the supreme abode contemplating the three energies of infinite will, knowledge and action.[9] Leading the goddess, who is the supreme power, upward to the end of the

---

[1] Above is the one who is called Nameless. He pervades (all things) and is the head (of the universe).
ūrdhve [k, gh: kurddhe] anāmakaṁ nāma vyāpakaṁ mūrdham eva [k, gh: mūrddhnimeva] ca ||
YKh (1) 1/136d.

O god, Anāmaka, is Kula, the Lord (nātha) and Kuleśvara.
anāmakaṁ kulaṁ deva yatra nāthaṁ kuleśvaram | YKh (1) 4/31ab.
The imperishable is Bhairava. He is the Great Lord who is Nameless.
akṣaraṁ [gh: -ra] bhairavo [k, g: -vaṁ; gh: -va] nāma anāmakamahāprabhuḥ || ibid. 33/34cd.

[2] Anāmā is established by the Path of the Left and is the sixfold deity.
saṁsthitā vāmamārgeṇa anāmā ṣaḍidevatā [g: -tāḥ] | YKh (1) 31/11ab.

[3] The energy of the New Moon (amā) merges into the Half Measure and the Half Measure into the plane of Anāma.
amā līyati [k, kh, gh: līpati] mātrārdhe [k, kh, gh: mātrāddhai] mātrārdhānāmake pade ||
YKh (1) 4/30cd.

[4] When the end of the Nameless has been attained the accomplishment of the Command (is realised) in the Kulakrama. KuKh 7/49-50ab.

[5] See note to KuKh 2/35cd-36ab.

[6] The only reference to Anāmā in the CMSS defines her in this way:

Anāmā is the (goddess) called the letter A. She is Vāgbhava (AIṀ) who is most evidently Khecarī.

anāmāvarṇanāmā [k: -nāmaman; kh g: anāmāvarṇanāman; gh: anāmāvarṇanāmaman] tu vāgbhavaṁ [g: vāgbhedaṁ] khecarī sphuṭam | CMSS 1/35ab.

[7] KuKh 24/25-26.

[8] KuKh 13/138.

[9] KuKh 3/123ab.

Nameless (anāmanta), the adept is consecrated there.[1] Anāma is the highest maṇḍala. It is the seventh Wheel beyond the series of six Wheels. The goddess Khecarī resides there. The adept who reaches this level attains the state Beyond the Fourth and, identified with Bhairava, attains the accomplishment of flight (khecaratvasiddhi) by uniting with the energy of the goddess who moves in the expanse of pure, transcendental consciousness – the Nameless maṇḍala.[2] She is Anāmā in the Lord's maṇḍala.[3] She is Khecarī in the middle of Anāmacakra,[4] which is both the internal and the external maṇḍala of the goddess.[5]

Anāma is the highest in the series of stages of ascent.[6] Just as it is at the end of the ascent, it is also at the beginning of the descent into emanation. The plane of Anāma is supreme. The divine will which is the supreme energy of the god through which the universe is created arises from there. Indeed, it is the plane on which the goddess resides constantly at every stage of her ascent, emergence and merger:

> In the middle of (suṣumṇā) the Stick of the Cavity of the Void, she is established on the plane of the Nameless. She is the supreme energy who has arisen as Bhairava's will and pulsates (lulantī).[7]

Anāmā is Śakti, the Transmental which is Unstruck Sound and the bliss of the vital breath.[8] Crooked and the form of an earring, she is the Yoni, the supreme Kujā. She is the wishgranting gem of those who are awake.

---

[1] KuKh 13/135-136.
[2] See KuKh 3/120cd-121ab.
[3] kuṭilā [ṅ: kuṁ] kuṇḍalākārā sā hi [k, g, gh, ṅ: vi] yoniḥ [k, g, gh: noni] parā [k, gh: ṣarā] kujā | *cintāmaṇiḥ [g: -maṇi] prabuddhānāṁ anāmā nāthamaṇḍale [k, gh: buddhamaṇḍale; ṅ: * dhvamaṁḍale]* || YKh (1) 35/72.
[4] KuKh 3/114.
[5] It is clear from the following injunction that Anāmāmaṇḍala is a name of the outer maṇḍala of the goddess:

> Full of mantra (the sacrificial jar) is placed in the Anāmāmaṇḍala fashioned (previously).

sthāpyate mantrapūrṇaṁ tu anāmāmaṇḍale kṛte | YKh (2) 18/61ab.
[6] The Stable (plane) is merged in the Immobile and the Immobile in the Nameless dhruvaṁ tu acale [k, kh, gh: acalai] līnaṁ acalaṁ tu anāmake || YKh (1) 3/290cd.
[7] *kharaṇḍadaṇḍamadhyasthā [k, gh: taraṁturaṁḍa-; g: ta-; ṅ: taraṁḍaraṁḍa-] anāmapadam [k: manāma-; gh: manāmaya * m; ṅ: manāmayadam] āśritā* ||
bhairavecchā samutpannā lulantī [gh: tulaṁti] paramā kalā | YKh (1) 34/123cd-124ab.
[8] Anāmā is Śakti who is the leader of the divisions (of the teachings) and she is considered to be supreme.
bhedānāṁ nāyakī śaktir anāmā [g: śaktiraṇāmā] ca parā [k, gh, ṅ: pura; g: purā] matā [k, gh: satā] | YKh (1) 32/87ab.

Kulālikā

The recension of the KMT that has come down to us is called 'the tradition or teaching (āmnāya) of Kulālikā – the Potter Girl'. Struck by this name, scholars have suggested that Kubjikā was originally the goddess of potters. Thus, according to Schoterman: 'kulāla is a proper name that belongs to some non-Aryan tribe whose main occupation was the production of pottery [. . .] It seems therefore acceptable that Kulālikā was some local goddess, probably of the Kulāla tribe, who was identified with Devī in Tantric circles.' Or else, Kulālikā, may have been a goddess worshipped as a spiritual patron of a guild or caste. This view presupposes that Kulālikā is one of the intimate aspects and forms of the goddess Kubjikā. Indeed, that it is her original form. But this possibility finds little support in the sources. Although the name appears regularly in the colophons at the end of the chapters of the KMT, it is found only once in the KMT itself[1] and receives scant attention in the Kubjikā corpus in general. She is mentioned only once in our text.[2] The most extensive presentation of Kubjikā as the Potter Woman is found in a hymn dedicated to her in YKh (1), extracts of which are cited below. But one wonders whether in this case and others, it was not the references in the colophons of the KMT that inspired references to the goddess Kulālikā subsequently.

Like all Kaula goddesses, one of the many ways Kubjikā appears is as a woman of low caste or a tribal. We have seen that she is Mātaṅgī – the Sweeper – in the sacred seat of Trisrota and this is the form in which she governs one of her lineages.[3] As the outcaste sweeper Juṣṭacaṇḍālī, who handles impure substances, she governs another.[4] In one place she is said to belong to the oil-pressers' caste.[5] The projection of a low caste goddess into the supreme maṇḍala reverses the normal order by placing the lowest in the highest place. In the same way the fettered, spiritually ignorant condition of the one who worships her is reversed by Unstruck Sound, the bliss of the vital breath, she is called Anāmā and her form is No-mind.

---

anackā [k, gh: anaktā; g: anandā; ṅ: anamkā] samīrānandā [k, gh: nagirānaṁgā; g: na śirāmaṅgā; ṅ: naśirānaṁgā] anāmākhyāmanākṛtiḥ [gh: -ti] ǁ YKh (1) 34/118cd.

[1] See KMT 17/60.

[2] See KuKh 24/35.

[3] See below, p. 174 ff..

[4] See below, p. 166.

[5] As the goddess herself says:

O god, the current (of the lineage) (ugha) is the Teacher's House, that is, the Kramamaṇḍala of the Oilpresser Girl (tailikā). KuKh 6/172cd-173ab.

the manifestation of the maṇḍala in its true form, which generates spontaneous and instantaneous insight (sadyajñāna) into the ultimate nature of reality.

As Kulālikā, Kubjikā is both the highest deity and a young woman of low caste. In her the opposites meet and extremes fuse. For this to be possible the goddess must be both. The polarities must remain; otherwise they cannot fuse. Along with the supreme forms, there must also be inferior ones. She must be both the Great Goddess of the Great Mata and the Little Goddess of the Potter Woman's Family, the Kulālīkula. She is both great and small. Although she is the Mistress of the Wheel (cakreśī), the small Kulālikā is also just one of the sixty-four Yoginīs.[1] Although she is the entire Vidyā, she is also just one of the thirty-two Bhairavīs who are the consorts of the Bhairavas[2] presiding over the sonic energies of the thirty-two syllables of her Vidyā. Along with her extensive and rich metaphysical attributes Kubjikā possesses the features and attributes of a multitude of goddesses and many types of feminine divine and semi-divine beings collectively called Yoginīs. Unlike her divine attributes as the Supreme Being, these are not abstract qualities. They must necessarily be concrete 'outer' features. They do not relate as much to her inner nature as they do to her outer form, her persona.

Presiding over spheres of manifestation and states of being, the goddess's forms are low caste and tribal. Within the Beginningless Purity, she is Mātaṅgī, the impure Sweeper. As Pulindikā, the illiterate tribal girl, she is omniscient. She is the wild, untouchable tribal Śavarī in the state of union (yoga) and as Campakā, the 'small' patron goddess of the city of Campa, she is called 'accomplished' (siddhasaṁjñā).[3] According to the Tradition of the Potter Girl (kulālikāmnāya), these four are her forms in the four yogic states that cover the expanse of the deity's experience in which the liberated participate.

The Eight Mothers, who are emanations and hence forms of the goddess, are all represented by low caste women who reside in their own sacred sites. Amongst them is Rajakī - the goddess of dyers and pigment makers. She resides

---

[1] KuKh 16/89.

[2] The thirty-two Bhairavīs (also called Dūtis) who embody the syllables of the goddess's Vidyā according to YKh (1) (9/125-128ab) are as follows:

Revatī, Ajitā, Ghoṇā, Ambikā, Baṇā, Suprabhā, Kapilā, Piṅgakeśā, Madhyā, Tejā, Mahāyajñā, Kālī, Kālarātrī, Kalā, Āsī, Sudāruṇā, Bhelākṣī, Guhyakālī, Vipadā, Ananā, Taruṇī, Tāruṇī, Tārā, Vijayā, Caṇḍikā, Raktā, Caṇḍī, Karālī, Mahātejā, Nirmāyā, Kulālikā, and Ārambhā.

Notice that like Kulālikā, there are other Yoginīs in this group who are also worshipped independently as the Great Goddess (for example, Ambikā, Kālī, Kālarātrī, Guhyakālī, Tārā, Caṇḍikā, Raktā, and Caṇḍī). Moreover, several also appear in other groups.

[3] KMT 17/59-60.

in the town of Caritra of the Mother (mātṛkā) Indrāṇī.[1] The Revatīkalpa of the Kāśyapasaṁhitā which, according to V. S. Agrawal, was written in the transition period between Kuṣāna and Gupta times, that is, in the second or third century CE, is an unparalleled record of the goddesses worshipped in the society of the time. In one place we find a list of minor goddesses worshipped by members of various castes and professions. Amongst them we find both the goddess of the oil-pressers and dyers along with Kulālī - the goddess of potters or clay-workers.

Some manuscripts read Cakrikā[2] in place of Vakrikā. This may not be a copyist's error. Cakrikā is the woman who spins the potter's wheel (cakra), a job which women, as well as men, have traditionally done for centuries.[3] Cakriṇī, a variant of the name Cakrikā, appears in the JY[4] as an additional ninth Mother in the centre of the usual group of eight. She is Kuṇḍalinī - the Mistress of the Wheels - who, makes the inner Wheels of the body spin as she rises through them. She appears in YKh (1) as the eighth of the series of Yoginīs who, in the form of low caste women, reside in the sacred sites of the Mothers externally and within the body.[5] They gather there and at crossroads, cremation grounds and other such places where they divine the future and communicate their desires to Kaula Heroes by means of secret gestures (choma).[6]

Just as Kubjikā is the female potter, Bhairava declares: "I am indeed the one potter!"[7] The goddess shares in the god's nature. Kulālī is the pervasive Akulā who governs the Kula and all the Kaula teachings (kulakaula).[8] As Kulālikā, Kubjikā is the goddess of the 'previous' or 'eastern' Kaula tradition (the pūrvāmnāya) founded by Matsyendranātha. She has five faces and, seated on a ghost (preta), she is yellow, the colour of the magical act of control (vaśīkaraṇa). She is mild, sober (dhīrā) and tranquil (saumya). Here, Kubjikā appears as the girl (bālikā) Kulālikā. Her youth symbolizes her first appearance as the young, divine

---

[1] See KuKh 16/10, 14.

[2] See notes to the Sanskrit text of KuKh 2/17.

[3] See Kosambi 1992: 45.

[4] TĀ 29/67 quoting from the Mādhavakula, that is, the fourth ṣaṭka of the JY.

[5] There is said to be a cavity in Brahmā's place conceived to be (as subtle) as the hundredth part of the tip of a hair. (The wise) know that to be Devikoṭa. The goddess (there) is in the form of a wheel. The goddess Cakriṇī resides there. She is Kaulinī and (her) nature is Void (kha). She is stainless, supreme and pure and is conceived to be (ever) rotating (āvartasthitikalpitā).

brahmasthāne [k, kh: -sthāne] mataṁ randhraṁ [k, kh, gh: raṁdhaṁ] bālāgraśatakalpitam |
*cakrarūpā tu sā devyā devikoṭaṁ tu taṁ [k, kh: ] viduḥ [k, kh, gh: binduḥ] ||
tatrasthā cakriṇī devī khasvarūpā tu kaulinī |
nirmalā paramā śuddhā āvartasthitakalpitā [k, gh: āvartaśalakatthitaṁkalpitā; kh: āvartaśalakalpitaṁkalpitā] || YKh (1) 3/25-26.

[6] See KuKh 42/60cd ff.. and appendix 4 to that volume.

[7] KMT 3/94a: aham ekaḥ kulālo vai

[8] KuKh 24/35.

consort. In the 'subsequent' (uttara) or 'northern' (uttara) Tradition, she appears again as Kulālikā but this time as Kālī's inner identity. Empowered by initiation into the Kubjikā Tantras, Kālī is a goddess in her own right. Thus the Tantra declares:

> When angry she destroys, when content she is the means to achieve success (siddhi). Devoted to the practice of heroes (vīracaryā), she is (one with the goddess) Kulālikā in the Western (tradition). Thus, that goddess is passionate (raktā) and initiated into the Western Transmission.[1]

True to her original presence in the colophons of the KMT as the goddess of the tradition, Kulālī is extolled in a hymn to the goddess in YKh (1) as such. Her Bhairava is the 'subtle and venerable' Kulālīśa, 'the greatest of teachers'.[2] He is 'the first of the venerable Kulālīkrama'.[3]

> I salute the venerable Kulālī, the supreme break-through, the awakening to the door of liberation. Her body is the bliss of the divine Command and, on the (transcendental) plane of Akula, she is universal consciousness (sarvabodha). * * * * The whole reality has been

---

[1] See below, p. 367 where the entire passage is translated.

[2] I salute Lord Bhairava, the treasury of many kinds of (divine) qualities, the one cause of (all that is) seen and unseen. In the beginning the pure Kramakula came forth from him and there all things dissolve away. All the endless creation, beginning from the cause up to the fire (that burns the worlds), depends on him. He who has authority over all forms and pure, is the greatest of teachers, is the subtle, venerable Kulālīśa.

ādau yasmāt [g: yammāt] pravṛtaṁ kramakulam amalaṁ līyate yatra sarvaṁ yasyādhīnaṁ samastaṁ niravadhiracanaṁ [g: nāt] kāraṇādyānalāntam | sarvākārādhikāraṁ gurutaram amalaṁ [g: gura-] śrīkulālīśam īśad [g: śrīkulī-] dṛṣṭādṛṣṭaikahetuṁ [g: -dṛṣṭekahetuṁ] vividhaguṇanidhiṁ bhairavendraṁ [g: -vedran] namāmi ||
YKh (1) 39/3.

[3] I salute Lord Bhairava who, in the company of the gods and sages, is one's own free consciousness. He is the quelling of the fear of fettered existence. The first of the venerable Kulālīkrama, he is eternal, inconceivable and without measure. He is universal bliss. Eternal and (only) attainable by Yoga he delights in the sequence of Ha and Sa (of the two breaths). His sole condition that of the cause unconditioned by (its) effect, his glorious power (vibhava) is extensive.

sarvānandasvarūpaṁ sahakramamuditaṁ śāśvataṁ yogagamyaṁ kāryāvasthāvibhedaṁ pravitatavibhavaṁ kāraṇaikavyavasthā | nityācintyāprameyaṁ bhavabhayaśamanaṁ [g: -samanaṁ] śrīkulālīkramādiṁ svacchandasvaprabodhaṁ tridaśamuniyutam bhairavendraṁ [g: bhairaveman] namāmi ||
ibid. 39/4.

attained whose glorious power is unperturbed and from which the mud of fear (āṭaṅka) has been removed.

I salute the conscious nature present on all the planes (of existence), the venerable goddess Kulālī. Mounted on millions of wheels (cakra), (her) plane (of being) is well prepared (praguṇitapadavī) and (her) movement is attracted (ākṛṣṭa) by the foundation (of all that exists). Supreme, she has elevated every soul and removes (all that is) born of illusion. With the mass of the rays (of her divine light), full of the essence of nectar, she nourishes creation.

I salute with (my) head that goddess, the venerable Kulālī who, like the rays of the moon, is the first path of Vṛkṣa Siddha (the First Teacher).[1] Like the (most excellent) quality of nectar, she is the wealth of grace attained - she who is conjoined to the one and sole abode (of the supreme). Residing in the Twelve Knots, she is like the young (dawning) sun of the Twelve Verses,[2] impurity quelled, she is Kuṇḍalinī (kuṇḍalyākārarūpā).

I praise the (goddess) who enjoys (divine bliss) (bhoginī). Her body enjoyment (bhoga), she resides on the supreme plane (of existence) and is attained (only) by knowledge. Her plane is that of Kuṇḍalinī (vasukuṭilapadā) and her one (divine) attribute is compassion (anugrāhyā) * * * Accompanied by eight powerful Siddhas headed by (the Bhairava called) Aghora, (her) light shines a millionfold and, having destroyed (all) darkness, (she) has illumined all reality.[3]

---

[1] Concerning Vṛkṣanātha, here called Vṛkṣa Siddha, see below, p. 474 ff..
[2] Concerning this mantra, see KuKh 3/31-32, note 44.
[3] divyājñānandadehām akulapadagatāṁ sarvabodhasvarūpāṁ
*siddhāmnāya * *(?) prabhavam anuviṣavāṁ śrīmate dvā (?) * * * * nutu kārā* | vidhvastātaṅkapaṅkam akulitavibhavaṁ [g: -paṅkāma- -va] prāptaṁ niḥśeṣatattvaṁ muktidvārāvabodhāṁ [g: -dvānāvavodha] pravighaṭanaparāṁ śrīkulālīṁ namāmi || ādhārākṛṣṭacārāṁ praguṇitapadavīṁ [g: -vī] koṭicakrādhirūḍhāṁ niḥśeṣānām aṇūnāṁ uparikṛtaparāṁ mohajatvaṁ harantīm [g: harantī] | pīyūṣasāragarbhaiḥ [g: pīyūṣāra-] kiraṇaparicayaiḥ [g: kariṇa-] sṛṣṭim apyāyayantīṁ [g: -yantī] devyāṁ [g: devyā] śrīmatkulālīṁ [g: śrīmatakulālī] sakalapadagatāṁ citsvarūpāṁ namāmi || devīṁ śrīmatkulālīṁ śaśikiraṇanibhāṁ vṛkṣasiddhādimārgāṁ [g: vṛkṣaśiddhādi-] samprāptānugrahaśrīṁ [g: -śrīn] amṛtaguṇanibhāṁ [g: -bhā] yāṁ [g: yā] puraikādiyuktām [g: pure-] | ślokānāṁ dvādaśānāṁ taruṇaravinibhāṁ dvādaśagranthisaṁsthāṁ [g: gramthi-] kuṇḍalyākārarūpām praśamitakaluṣāṁ [g: -ṣan] tām parāṁ nāmi mūrdhnā || bhāsvatkoṭiprakāśāṁ [g: bhāśvat- -prakāśā] pratihatatimirāṁ dyotitāśeṣatattvāṁ [g: jyo- -tvā] yuktāṁ siddhair aghoraprabhṛtibhir amalair aṣṭabhiḥ [g: siddhara-] śaktimadbhiḥ | yāṁ [g: yo] kīrtim abhayarāmāṁ [g: -śrībhyarāmā] vasukuṭilapadām anugrāhyaikadharmīṁ [g: -padāyāmanugrāhye dharmī]

Koṅkaṇā

Just as Kulālikā is the patron goddess of a caste or guild, Koṅkaṇā is typical of another category of 'small' goddesses, namely, those who preside over sacred sites, towns, cities, regions and countries. The goddess Koṅkaṇā is the mistress of the sacred seat (pīṭheśvarī) of Koṅkaṇa. Although she has a separate Vidyā of her own,[1] she is also identified with Kubjikā, who is portrayed in the MBT as the goddess of Koṅkaṇa. Unknown in this role in the KMT, Kubjikā's identity as Koṅkaṇā is one of numerous signs of the presence of the Kubjikā cult in the Deccan and the Koṅkaṇa region, along the mid-western coastline of India. In the KMT she appears as the goddess of the Weapon, Kujikā's sixth limb. The Newars, who venerate Kubjikā in a special way, regularly use the mantra of the Koṅkaṇa Weapon (koṅkaṇāstra) in their Kaula rites when a 'weapon mantra' is required for protection or empowerment. The Newars consider it to be so powerful and special, that they also use it in Kaula rites performed for goddesses other than Kubjikā. This practice is consistant with the general, common method in Newar Kaula rites of making use of Kubjikā's energy in some form to empower them. Perhaps at one time it also reminded the Newars, if they knew it, of Kubjikā's land of origin and its special power. This was certainly felt intensely by the redactors of the MBT who identified the part – Kubjikā's Koṅkaṇa Weapon - with the whole of her.

Thus, in the following visualization, drawn from YKh (1), Koṅkaṇā is represented as Parā and Mālinī, the supreme forms of Kubjikā energized by the seventeenth digit of the New Moon which is the essential energy of Kālī, her innermost identity. As the aspect of the goddess who embodies her Weapon, she is supremely fierce and destructive for all the enemies of the tradition who obstruct her devotees and her worship. She is mad with fury and, eating up the worlds, she laughs in her wild frenzy. The embodiment of the all-consuming energy of the goddess, she is more Kālī than Kubjikā. YKh (1) describes her as follows.

> She is the most excellent of the supreme, Parā, the goddess of the Kaula of the Command of Knowledge (jñānājñākaula). (She is) the wish-granting gem of sovereign power (śrī). (Her) weapons are a bow and wheel; she has a sword and an axe, and holds a goad and a noose. She is the unfailing Koṅkaṇā, the Kaula Weapon (who holds a) bow, arrow, club, thunderbolt, and javelin. (She has big) fang-like

---

tāṁ vande jñānagamyāṁ [g: -myam] paramapadagatāṁ [g: -tā] bhoginīṁ [g: -nī] bhogadehām ||
YKh (1) 39/5-8.

[1] See KuKh 23/21-34, note 5 and 8.

teeth. (Her tongue protrudes) licking up and destroying (the worlds) (lelihānā). (Her) face is deformed, her form ferocious (krūra) and (her) gaze is (turned) upwards. Her nature Time, she is in a mad frenzy (unmattā). She laughs loudly and she sits on the (hexagram which is her) thunderbolt lotus seat.

She makes the sound HĀ HĀ HŪṀ and protects the assemblies (cakra) in all (sakala) the Kulakrama. Sixfold (ṣoḍhā), she is the power called Sixfold (Ṣoḍhā)[1] and is the glorious power of the seventeenth (energy of the New Moon).[2] She is the main (goddess) on the paths of the Siddhas. Called the mind (citta), her nature is consciousness and, endowed with the supreme energy, she is (one and) undivided (niṣkalā) in the End of the Sixteen. (She is Mālinī) who (contains all the energies of the letters) beginning with Pha and ending with Na. She is repeatedly separated (vibhinnā) spontaneously (with great force) (sahasā) from the Cavity of the Root (kandarandhra) (and flows) in the current of the Transmission (kramaugha).[3]

---

[1] See KuKh chapter 22.

[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 409, 414, and 425 concerning Kālī as the seventeenth energy of the Moon at the End of the Sixteen.

[3] jñānājñākauladevyā paramaparaparā [g: paramaparaṁ parā] sā tu cintāmaṇiḥ [g: cittāmaṁṇi] śrīḥ [k, g, gh, ṅ: śrī] || śastrā [g: sāśrī] nārācacakrā [g: nārāna-] asiparaśuyutā [k, gh: aśi-; g: aśiparamayutā; ṅ: -parasuyutā] aṅkuśaṁ pāśahastā kaulāstraṁ [g: kaulāstrā] koṁkaṇā vai [g: ya; ṅ: yai] dhanuśaramuśalaṁ vajraśaktis tv amoghā [g: -śaktistramoghā] | daṁṣṭrālā [k, gh, ṅ: daṁṣṭrāṇāṁ] lelihānā [g: lelinā] vikṛtakṛtamukhā [k, gh, ṅ: -tuṣā; g: vikṛtanuṣā] krūrarūpordhvadṛṣṭir- [k, gh: -rūpārddhavṛṣṭir; ṅ: -rūpārddhadṛṣṭir]
*unmattā [g: unmantā] kālarūpā hahahaṭahaṭakā [k, gh: hahahaṭṭahā ; ṅ: haṁhahaṭṭahā] vajrapadmāsanasthā ||

Koṅkaṇā

Ciñcinī the Goddess of the Tree: The Kadamba and the Tamarind

The worship of trees in the Indian subcontinent and, indeed, wherever there have been human beings, is very ancient. The famous hymn in the Atharvaveda to the Cosmic Tree and the identification in the Upaniṣads of the Brahman with this Tree are well known[1] and attest to the importance of tree worship in the popular culture of the early Vedic people and, no doubt, the other inhabitants of the regions to which they spread. The association of the feminine with vegetation and growth is well known throughout the world and is especially well represented in India. An image found on a seal at Mohenjendaro (2500 BCE) of a tree growing up out of the womb of a woman with her legs spread open as if in the act of giving birth, testify to the antiquity of this association.

Trees, forests and groves close to human settlements have been venerated throughout the subcontinent up to the present day as the abodes of deities and a range of supernatural beings.[2] References to these beings, of which the most well known type is the Yakṣa and his mate the Yakṣiṇī, are common in early Buddhist and Jain literature. They are well known to art historians also. The Barhut Stūpa and other early Buddhist monuments abound with their images. The earliest standing statue carved in the round so far recovered is the famous Pārkham's Yakṣa preserved in the museum at Mathura. It was probably made in the third century BCE and may well have stood under a tree.[3] The MhB recommends that those desiring children should worship the goddesses born of trees.[4]

These tree and vegetation spirits who accepted offerings of liquor along with animal and even human sacrifices, were amongst the precursors of the numerous Yoginīs, Bhairavas and Vīras who populate the Bhairava and Kaula Tantras. These too are closely associated with trees to which they are commonly hāhāhū/kāranādā sakalakulakrame sā cakrān [k: sāṁ cākān; g: sā ca kan; gh: -kā; ṅ: sā cākān] pālayantī [k, gh, ṅ: pālayamatī; g: yālayaṁtī] *ṣoḍhā [k, g,gh: khoḍhā; ṅ: kho ] ṣoḍhākhyaśaktir daśasaptamamahā [k, gh: -śakti ; g: ṣoḍhākhya; ṅ: ṣoḍhākhyaṁśakti; g: -daśaptamahā] siddhamārgeṣu mukhyā [k, gh: -yuc muṣpā; ṅ: -ya mukhyā] ǀ cittākhyā [k, gh, ṅ: nāsti] citsvarūpā [ṅ: cita-] paramakalayutā niṣkalā [k, gh, ṅ: niḥkalā] ṣoḍaśānte *phāntā nādyā [k, g, gh, ṅ: nādye] kramaughe [k, gh: kramodye; g: ?] punar api sahasā kandarandhrād [k, ṅ: kaṁdaraṁdhrad; g: ?; gh: kada * raṁdha] vibhinnā [k, ṅ: vibhītā; g: ?; gh: vachibhitā]* ǁ YKh (1) 38/34d-36.

---

[1] See below, p. 119.

[2] Tiwari (1985: 21) points out: 'a distinction may have to be made not only between the concept of the tree itself as divine and the spirit supposed to be residing in it, but also, with respect to the latter, amongst the spirits of the trees in general, of particular trees close to habitation areas, of trees in a grove or forest, and of the spirits of groves and forests as a whole.'

[3] Coomaraswamy 1965: 16-17.

[4] Coomaraswamy 1980:32.

related.[1] Yakṣas still form a part of the goddess's entourage[2] and Kubjikā herself is sometimes identified as one.

In the Kaula and related Tantras, such beings came to be identified with Yoginīs and so the trees they inhabited as Yakṣinīs came to be venerated as Kula trees (kulavṛkṣa) in which Yoginīs reside. The Kaulāvalinirṇaya[3] enjoins that the adept should bow to the Kula and the Lord of Kula when he sees one of these trees and recollect that Yoginīs reside in them. Similarly, after listing thirty-six sacred trees,[4] the ṢSS enjoins:

> According to the Kula teaching (these) are the most excellent Kula trees that give accomplishments and liberation. (They are full of) Yoginīs, Siddhas, Lords of the Heroes and hosts of gods and demons. One should not touch them with one's feet or urinate and defecate on them or have sex etc. below them. One should not cut etc. or burn them. Having worshipped and praised them regularly with their own flowers and shoots, one should always worship the Śrīkrama with devotion with their best fruits and roots.
>
> One should keep the residue of their worship (nirmālya) on one's head and eat (their) fruits. Propitiated, they destroy death and so are said to bestow the accomplishments of the divine Command which gives one the right to have all worldly enjoyments. Indeed, all other trees, flowers, creepers, vines, and grasses should not be damaged, cut, broken or disturbed.[5]

---

[1] See for, example, KuKh 16/33cd-41ab.
[2] See, for example, KuKh 5/84.
[3] See KVN, introduction, p. 4.
[4] According to the ṢSS (41/40cd-43) these trees are: Vaṭa, Aśvattha, Kadamba, Kiṁśuka, Bilva, Ciñciṇī, Tāla, Karañja, Nimba, Devavṛkṣa, Mahādruma, Plakṣa, Dumbara, Mandāra, Pāṭala, Ariṣṭa, Campaka, Aśoka, Bakula, Arka, Śiṁśapa, Vaṭa, Candana, Rudrākṣa, Putraṁjīva, Bhūtajaṭā, Amra, Ḍāḍima, Dhātrī, Dhātaki, Pannaga, Kāñcana, Bījapūraka, and Nārikela.

The trees listed in the KVN include practically all the sacred trees mentioned in the ṢSS. They are: Aśoka, Keśara, Karṇikā, Mango, Tila, Nema, Piyāla, Sindhuvāra, Kadambaka, Manuvaka, Campaka, Śākhī, Śleṣmaka, Karañja, Nimba, Aśvattha, Bilva, Vaṭa, Udambara and Tamarind (ciñcā).
[5] kulavṛkṣottamāḥ siddhimuktidāḥ [k: siddhiḥmuktisaḥ; kh: siddhiḥ-] kulaśāsane |
Yoginīsiddhavīreśadevāsuragaṇānvitāḥ ||
na pādaiḥ saṁspṛśet [k: sa-] tāni viṇmūtraṁ maithunādikam |
adhas tesāṁ na kartavyaṁ tathā ploṣādicchedanam ||
pūjyābhinandyaṁ satataṁ tadgataiḥ [k, kh: tadrathai] puṣpapallavaiḥ |
phalamūlavarair [k: -phalir] bhaktyā śrīkramaṁ cārcayet sadā ||
nirmālyaṁ śirasā dhāryaṁ bhakṣayet tu phalāni ca |
prasādīkṛtya mṛtyughnā yatas te samudāhṛtāḥ ||
sarvādhikārasaṁbhogadivyājñāsiddhidāyikāḥ |
ye cānye vṛkṣagulmāni latāvallitṛṇāni ca ||

Some of the earliest known shrines were built under trees. These gradually developed to become fully formed temples. A clear sign of this process is the presence of sacred trees in the precincts of the great majority of large temples. Some temples, like that of Ekamranātha in Kañci, have a sacred tree right in their centre and may well have grown up around them.[1] The need is so strong for a sacred tree that even when there is little room for one, space is somehow made for it. Such is the case with the Imperishable Banyan - akṣaya vaṭa – that grows in a temple adjacent to Viśvanātha, the main temple of Benares. The sacred seats, like temples, also have sacred trees. Just as sacred trees serve as the nucleus for the development of the temple and contribute to the sanctity of sacred sites, they naturally appear in the maṇḍala which, from this point of view, is both a representation of a temple and a map charged with the power of the sacred sites, deities, guardians and trees represented in it.

Indeed, a tree itself can be a maṇḍala and, in places, the texts do imply Kubjikā's identity with a local goddess who lived in a tree or a stone underneath it. Accordingly, her maṇḍala is the Maṇḍala of the Tree (vṛkṣamaṇḍala). The original maṇḍala is the shade of the tree of which the tree and the stone beneath it are the centre. There, in the centre, Kubjikā is Śilādevī - the Goddess Stone. Interiorized, the Tree Maṇḍala acquires the encompassing enclosures that are built when the deity of a tree or a stone grow in importance. Thus the development of the Tree Maṇḍala mirrors the development of the Hindu temple and the local, rural goddess of the Tree becomes the Great Goddess of the temple and the city who is worshipped in her maṇḍala.

---

na dūṣayen na ca [k, kh: cā] bhidyād [k, kh: bhindyā] tu na cchindyād [k, kh: cchindyā] na ca pīḍayet | ṢSS chapter 41/44-49ab.

[1] The myth of the origin of the 'solitary mango tree' - ekāmra - which grows in a courtyard in the centre of Ekāmranātha, one of the main temples of Kanchipuram, explains the great importance of this tree and the earthen Liṅga worshipped underneath it. Hudson narrates:

> Pārvatī once playfully closed Śiva's eyes and threatened the universe, and was born on earth to perform ascetic tapas (penance) at Kanchi where she made a Liṅga of earth, under a four-branched mango tree, which she served. In play, Śiva threatened to dissolve the Liṅga by sending a flood from the Ganges in his hair, but Kāmākṣī's companion Kālī caught it in her skull bowl. When Śiva caused it to overflow from the skull bowl, Pārvatī's brother, Viṣṇu, who had appeared from the fire of Brahmā's sacrifice, appeared in his huge all-encompassing form to stem the flood. When he realised it was Śiva's jest, Viṣṇu asked Śiva finally to bestow the fruit of her tapas on his sister. Kāmākṣī then embraced the earth Liṅga to protect it from the flood and, inflammed by her touch, Śiva appeared to her as the lord of the mango (Ekāmreśvara) and they married. That Śiva-Śakti story neatly ties together the icon of Varadarāja, the huge stucco icon of Trivikrama and Kṛṣṇa, the fierce and peaceful icons of Kāmākṣī, and Ekāmra's ancient mango tree and earth Liṅga. Dennis Hudson in Michell 1993: 30.

The influence of the being who resides in the Tree extends around it in the ideal circle covered by its shade.[1] The transposition of this notion into a schematic representation is quite natural and understandable. Thus the Tantra teaches that:

> In this way the Tradition of the Goddess (devyānvaya) spreads out (under) the solitary tree in the middle of the sacred seat by means of the rays (of its powers).[2]

The two, the tree and its shade, like its flowers and their scent, serve as natural symbols for the relationship between the two aspects of deity - transcendent and immanent, formless and possessing form:

> One should know that the tree is (the aspect of the deity) with parts (sakala) and the shade is its (aspect) without parts (niṣkalā). One should know that the flower (of the tree represents the deity) with parts and its scent its (aspect) without parts (niṣkala). There is nothing higher than that, he who knows that has attained liberation. Once the undifferentiated plane has been attained, that is, the End of the Sixteen, which is the supreme abode, the eternal Śāmbhava (plane) and is liberation, there is nothing higher than this.[3]

The goddess resides within the Tree Maṇḍala over which, in one of her forms, she presides as a Yakṣiṇī, an ancient Indian folk deity of vegetation and the earth:

> She who is Yakṣiṇī is Raudrī whose energy has been stimulated (mathita) (lit. 'churned') and is aroused by the five arrows (of the god of love). Playing in the Circle of Fire, she moves in the hexagram on the first day of the bright fortnight. In the triangle within the maṇḍala she looks beautiful, associated with the six (Yoginīs who surround her). Above time, in front, in the most excellent triple city (of [1] Coomaraswamy 1980: part 2, p. 9.

[2] KuKh 38/21a.
[3] vṛkṣaṁ tu sakalaṁ vidyāt chāyā tasyaiva niṣkalā ||
*puṣpaṁ tu sakalaṁ [kh: sakaṁ (?)] vidyād [k: vidyā] gandhaṁ [k: ṅgaṁdhaṁ] tasyaiva niṣkalam |
tasmāt parataraṁ [k: parāvaraṁ; kh: parāparaṁ] nāsti yas taṁ vetti sa muktibhāk ||
niṣkale ca pade prāpte [k, kh: -pta] ṣoḍaśānte parālaye |
śāmbhave śāsvate mokṣe asmāt parataraṁ na hi || YKh (2) 11/18cd-19 = YKh (1) 27/26cd-28ab.

> the Triangle) her nature (projected out) is divided into the divisions (of the maṇḍala).[1]

Although the KMT has nothing to say about him, in the later literature Vṛkṣanātha - the Lord of the Tree, otherwise known as Ciñciṇīnātha, the Lord of the Tamarind, is the most prominent form Bhairava assumes as the First Siddha and teacher. We will have occasion to talk about him at length further ahead when we come to discuss the lineages of teachers and their origin. In this context we note that Ādinātha - the First Teacher - was from his first appearance in the texts closely associated with the sacred tamarind tree. He was given this name because he 'bent' or 'burst apart' a tamarind tree in Candrapura within which the goddess resided. Thus, although the symbolism of the Tree was already developed in the KMT, the identity of the Tree as specifically a tamarind is linked in a special way to the development of the Kubjikā tradition in Candrapura and the land of Koṅkaṇa. This is made clearly evident in the later sources by the presence of several new symbols relating to that place. One is Candrapura itself, which became the goddess's maṇḍala. Another is the Tamarind Tree and the Siddha whose sonic form, as Bhairava, Kubjikā's consort, is the seed-syllable Navātman, which is the Tree of which he is the Lord. The Tree is also the goddess who is the deity's supreme power.[2] The legend of the First Siddha is an outer representation of an inner process that is taking place within the deity. The Tree that grows out of the Yoni in the centre of the maṇḍala represents the growth and development of the Krama and with it the tradition and the entire universe.

> The Yoni is the Triangle in the Sky, the secret circle. The corners are will, knowledge and action and in the middle is the sequence of (the goddess) Ciñciṇī'.[3]

The Triangle is variously identified with mount Meru, Candrapura and the Island of the Moon. Thus the goddess declares in the KuKh:

> I will make the (tree) called the Tamarind famous. I also pervade Meru and, residing (there), play.[4]

---

[1] *yā sā yakṣiṇī [k: rakṣāni; gh: rakṣā ; ṅ: raktāni] raudrī paramaśivakalā [g: paramathita-] kṣobhitā pañcabāṇaiḥ krīḍantī vahnicakre carati pratipade śuklapakṣe ṣaḍaśre । trikoṇe maṇḍalānte raviśaśimathanāt śobhate [k, gh: sobhave; ṅ: sāṁbhave] ṣaṭprayuktā *kālasyordhve purastāt [k, gh, ṅ: purastā] tripurapuravare [ṅ: tri * rapuravare]* bhedabhinnasvarūpā ॥ YKh (1) 43/1.

[2] See line 119 of the Mālinīstava and KuKh 46/20-26. See also KuKh 14/70cd-71ab and notes there for other interpretations and note to ibid. 17/3.

[3] CMSS 5/15. This verse is quoted in the commentary on TĀ 3/94.

[4] KuKh 17/48.

The sacred tree in which the goddess resides is the Tree of the tradition and its teachings. It is the Tree of Consciousness that grows out of the Divine Current (divyaugha) of the Divine Kaula tradition. This Tree is supreme bliss, its best fruit is the tradition of the Siddhas (siddhaugha) and its branches are the places deposited in the body, the letters, the Rudras, the Siddhas, the various types of sacred places, the divine Cave, the Abyss, the Sky, and the Skyfarer (khecara), each of which is divided into millions of aspects.[1] It is the Tamarind (ciñca) tree that grows from the middle of the Triangle that is 'beloved of the Yoginīs' on the Island of the Moon. As the CMSS says:

> There in the middle (of the Island of the Moon) is the place called the Triangle that is beloved of the Yoginīs. Ciñcinīnātha, who bestows the fruit of all desires, has arisen (there). He is in the middle of the Circle of the Triangle (śṛṅgāṭa) within the heart of its womb.
>
> The root and branches (of the Tamarind) are very extensive and it bears the fruit of the Divine Current. Kaula is the sprout, Kula, the root and it grows in Śiva's Circle. The nectar of bliss arises (from it), which is the nourishment of the juice of one's own nature. It has three extensive branches and its shoots are the Vedas and their limbs. It is strewn with the flowers of the senses and their objects are the most excellent nectar. One experiences supreme repose there devoid of pleasure and pain. Its divine fruit is the joy of consciousness, the most excellent inner manifestation (vibhava).[2]

---

[1] The Kaula Picu Face is the supreme bliss of the Divine Current. The Tree of Consciousness has risen from the middle of that and it has many roots and branches.

divyaughaparamānandaṁ picuvaktraṁ tu kaulikam ||
tanmadhyoditacidvṛkṣaṁ mūlaśākhāsuvistaram | CMSS 1/28cd-29ab.
The form of this tree is decribed up to verse 1/36 of the CMSS.

[2] tatra madhye trikoṇākhyaṁ [k kh gh: trikoṇākṣaṁ] sthānaṁ [k kh gh: sthāna] yoginivallabham ||
śṛṅgāṭamaṇḍalāntasthaṁ [k: śṛṅgātamaṇḍarontasthaṁ; kh: -taḥsthaṁ; gh: śṛṅgāntamaṇḍarā-;] tadgarbhahṛdayāntaram |
uditaṁ ciñcinīnāthaṁ [k kh gh: -nātha; g: ciṇcinīnātha] sarvakāmaphalapradam ||
mūlaśākhāsuvistīrṇaṁ [k kh gh: -sākhā-; g: -sākhyā-] divyaughaphalasaṁbhavam [k g gh: divyogha-] |
kaulāṅkuraṁ [g: kaulāṅkulaṁ] kulaṁ mūlaṁ [sarve: kulonmūlaṁ] utpattiḥ [sarve: utpatti] śivamaṇḍale ||
svasvabhāvarasāpyāyam [all MSs: -rasādhyāya] ānandāmṛtasaṁbhavam [k kh: sānandā-; gh: -va] |
śākhātritayavistīrṇaṁ [k, kh, g: sākhya-; gh: sākhyatritayavistīrṇa] vedavedāṅgapallavam ||
puṣpendriyasamākīrṇaṁ [g: -kīrṇa] viṣayāmṛtam [all MSs: viṣayāmugam] uttamam |
tatra viśrāntiparamaṁ [all MSs: -parasaṁ] sukhaduḥkhavivarjitam ||
cidāmodaphalaṁ [g: cidāmāda-] divyaṁ antavibhavam [g: antar-] uttamam | CMSS 7/4cd-9ab.

In the later Kubjikā Tantras, where this imagery is elaborated, the goddess is frequently called the Lady of the Tamarind (Ciñciṇī or Ciñcā). Under the shade of this tree, which is said to be the pure bliss present within all beings,[1] one attains supreme, liberating rest. The First Siddha is called Vṛkṣanātha (the Lord of the Tree) because he achieved this perfect state of rest (viśrāma) under this Tree when the goddess appeared to him. There, in the shade of the tree, she transmitted the enlightening Command (ājñā) which gave him the authority (adhikāra) that empowered him both to attain this realisation and to transmit the teachings that lead others to it. The ṢSS describes it as follows:

> This is the venerable Tree of Great Bliss.[2] It has many kinds of branches and its shouts are the *śāstra*s. It is beautiful with the sprouts of knowledge (vijñāna) and is rich with the flowers of undivided realisation (jñāna). It bears the fruit which is the manifestation of accomplishment (siddhyodaya). Rich with the juice of mature bliss, (its) true fruit is liberation, contentment and everything else.
>
> This is the Tree of the maṇḍala from which all things are attained. One should worship it in every way at all times with an undisturbed mind.[3] Sacrifice should be offered to it (both) with the Yoga of Stillness (nirācāra) and with rites (sācāra).[4] Thus (one attains) the condition of pervasion having experienced the body (of all types of people from) the twice born to the outcaste (and known them to be one).[5] He sees the Supreme Tree, the Skyfarer born from the maṇḍala. Once contemplated that state of being, one should pay attention to (the Tree) thinking it to be the teacher. (The wise) know that all that is in front of (such a) one is the maṇḍala.[6]

Just as the Tree is the tree of the many traditions, it is also the tree of scripture. The MBT, the scripture of 24,000 verses, is the 'tree of the goddess Kubjikā'.[7] Thus, in the ṢSS we read concerning a certain teaching that: 'all this

---

[1] The tamarind is pure bliss. . . . O god, bliss is pervasive and is present in all beings.
ānandaṁ vimalaṁ ciñcaṁ . . . | ānandaṁ vyāpakaṁ deva sarvabhūteṣv avasthitam ‖ KuKh 17/18acd.

[2] Cf. ṢSS 25/109-110.

[3] Read with ṢSS 25/139b: avyākulamanākulam for KMT 16/92b: vyākulena-m-anena kim.

[4] Read with ṢSS 25/139d: sācāreṇa tu tad yajet instead of KMT 16/92d: sācāreṇa na tad yajet

[5] vyāptibhāvam ato [k, kh: ataṁ] bhuktvā [KMT: matvā; k, kh: bhūtvā] dvijacāṇḍālajāṁ [KMT: bhuktvā-; k, kh: -jā] tanum [k: nanam] | ṢSS 25/140ab = KMT 16/93ab.

[6] KMT 16/89cd-94 = ṢSS 25/136cd-141.

[7] KuKh 69/29cd-30ab.

has been explained there in the Tree, namely, the venerable Kubjīmata of twenty-four thousand verses'.[1]

The Body as a Tree

The Tree of the scripture is the teacher in this direct sense. It is also the teacher and is know through the guidance of the teacher because it is the body, the original maṇḍala that enshrines the deity and every state of consciousness that leads to its realisation. Centuries before the Kubjikā Tantras, the Upaniṣads had already compared the body of a man to a tree rooted in the Brahman. The Bṛhadaraṇyakopaniṣad declares:

> As is a tree of the forest, just so, surely, is man. His hairs are leaves, his skin the outer bark. From his skin blood, sap from the bark, flows forth a stream as from the tree when struck. His pieces of flesh are under-layers of wood. The fibre is muscle-like strong. The bones are the wood within. The marrow is made resembling pith.[2]

The maṇḍala is like a tree for the same reasons that the body is said to be similar to a tree. The maṇḍala, like the body, is progressively (krameṇa) built up by from the Point in the centre as a tree is from the seed. The body is built up and sustained by its seven vital constituents (dhātu). These are the essence of digested food (rasa), blood (rakta), flesh (māṁsa), marrow (medas), bone (asthi), fat (majjā) and semen (śukra). Each one is formed from the preceding one.[3] Thus, as rasa is derived from food, the process concerns the way in which food is assimilated by the body. The idea that the dhātus are produced out of each other is expressed in the following passage of the KMT by comparing the seven dhātus to seven parts of a tree that grow out of each other. The body as the 'final product' of the seven vital constituents is analogous to the fruit of the tree which is the product of the tree's seven parts.[4]

---

[1] caturviṁśatisāhasre śrīmatkubjīmate drume ||
samastaṁ tatra vyākhyātam . . . . | ṢSS 42/69cd-70a.
[2] BṛH 3/9/28, Hume's translation
[3] From the essence of digested food (rasa) comes blood and then flesh. From flesh comes marrow and from marrow arises bone and then fat. From fat comes semen.

rasād raktaṁ tato māṁsaṁ māṁsān medaḥ prajāyate |
medaso 'sthi tato majjā majjñaḥ śukraṁ tu jāyate || Suśrutasaṁhitā, sūtrasthāna 14/10.
[4] Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 65-66.

> Out of the bulb (kanda) the sprout is produced, from the sprout grows the root, from the root are the leaves, the twigs and the branches, and out of them the flowers and the fruits and the rest. The fruit is said to be the body which is produced from the tree of the bodily substances (dhātu). The body (piṇḍa) is produced from the bulb and that is (caught) in the net[1] of auspicious and inauspicious (action).[2]

The body (piṇḍa) that is caught 'in the net of auspicious and inauspicious' action is also the body through which the adept attains the highest state. As such, it is the Body of Kula which is the Tree of Kula known only by those to whom it has been revealed by a true teacher. Thus the ŚM teaches:

> (Only) those who are intent on the master's teaching and take their support from the teacher's mouth, attain the supreme principle which is the Body of Kula, hard to attain. It is the Tree of Kula, the great jewel, whose branches, O beloved, are the principles (of existence). It has grown from the sprout of knowledge and is adorned with the tender leaves that are the vital constituents (dhātu) (of the body). Its flowers are wisdom (vijñāna) and fruits the jewels of knowledge (jñāna). They attain the supreme tree whose teacher is the lamp (that illumines their way).[3]

The Kadamba Tree

Throughout the Kubjikā sources the goddess is related to trees, creepers, buds, blossoms and flowers. Two trees are especially closely related to her. These are the Tamarind (ciñcā) and the Kadamba. In the later Kubjikā Tantras Kubjikā is frequently called Ciñcinī, the Yoginī of the tamarind tree (ciñcā). Although she is never called Kadambinī, she is also closely associated with the Kadamba tree of which she is said to be the mother.[4] In many cases the symbolism of these two

---

[1] The KMT reads –jalāntagam for -jālāntagam for the sake of the metre.

[2] KMT 14/26-27.

[3] gurūpadeśasaṁviṣṭā [k: -stanniṣṭhā; kh: -tanniṣṭhā; g: -nannisthā] guruvaktrāvalambakāḥ [g: -vaktra-] ||
te vindanti [k: vidanti; kh g: viṁdati] paraṁ tattvaṁ kulapiṇḍaṁ sudurlabham |
kulavṛkṣaṁ mahāratnaṁ [g: -rāyaṁ] tattvaśākhāvṛtaṁ [g: -yutaṁ] priye ||
vidyāṅkurasamudbhūtaṁ [k kh: vījāṁkura; g: -rusāmudbhūtaṁ] dhātupallavaśobhitam [g: sevitaṁ] |
vijñānapuṣpasaṁpannaṁ [g: -puṇya-] jñānaratnaphalodayam [g: jñānaṁ-; kh: -mahodayaṁ] ||
te vindanti [k g: vindati] paraṁ vṛkṣaṁ gurur yasya pradīpakam [k kh: pradīpakaḥ] |
ŚM 20/267cd-270ab.

[4] Mālinīstava line 119.

trees coincide. Both trees are closely linked to the goddess's triangle out of which they are said to grow. They both symbolize the Goddess's Tree from which the energy of the Teaching pervades Meru, that is, the triangular Yoni and then pours out into manifestation.[1] There are also differences in the symbolism of the two trees. For one, the identification of the Point in the centre of the maṇḍala with the spherical bud of the Kadamba tree has no parallel in the case of the Tamarind. The Kadamba in places symbolizes the inner triangle.[2] It may also be the Point in the centre. As such it represents the pure current of the teaching.[3]

> The Kadamba (tree) is in (the Point which is) the root of the root (Triangle generated by) the churning of the (two inner breaths), the Sun (of prāṇa) and Moon (of apāna). (The Command) is perpetually established there and (assumes) the form of letter (varṇa) in the hexagram by the movement of experience (anubhavagamana). Its fame (i.e. energy) is the Command of Kula which, in the middle of the Tamarind Tree, saves (the fettered) very quickly.[4]

The Kadamba tree (the nauclea kadamba) has been one of India's sacred trees for many centuries. The dark skinned Yama, the first man to die and become a god according to Vedic mythology, stands playing a flute under a Kadamba tree to attract the souls of the dead. Centuries later the dark skinned Kṛṣṇa is commonly pictured in this way. The KRU represents Matsyendranātha, the founder of Kula Tantrism in this Age in a similar way:

> The Siddha Macchendra along with (his consort) Koṅkaṇāmbā (sat) at the foot of a venerable Kadamba (which grew) in Oḍiyāṇa in the Age of Strife and was graced.[5]

---

[1] Although the following two statements refer to the Kadamba and the Tamarind, they virtually say the same thing:

> The teaching (saṁketa) has as its root the Tree, namely, the Kadambaka in the centre of the Yoni. Meru, the abode of all yogis, is pervaded by it. KuKh 17/30.

> I (says, the goddess) will make the (tree) called the Tamarind famous. I also pervade Meru and, residing (there), play. Ibid. 17/48.

[2] For example, see KuKh 11/22cd-23.

[3] KuKh 27/12.

[4] KuKh 38/25.

[5] kalau [kh: kalo] yuge ca odyāṇe [kh: odyāne] śrīkadambataros tale [g: śrīkadamvararostarā] | macchendro bhavitaḥ [k kh: bhavitā] siddhaḥ koṅkaṇāmbāsamanvitaḥ [k: kuṁkaṇādhvā-; kh: kuṁkaṇāccā-; g: kuṁkaṇāvyā-] || KRU 1/28.

This is an interesting carry-over from an early stratum of the cults of the Bhairava Tantras. The SYM portrays Parā in close association with this tree. She is the first of the three goddesses, along with Parāparā and Aparā, of the Trika, who are extensively incorporated into the cult of the goddess Kubjikā who is regularly identified with Parā. Tripurabhairavī, who is incorporated into Kubjikā as one of her six faces in one of her most common forms, is portrayed in a Kadamba forest.[1] The association with the Kadamba is retained later in the more developed and well-known cult of Tripurasundarī.[2]

The Kadamba and the Tamarind both symbolize the tradition and its growth from the Yoni of the goddess's empowering Command.[3] At times the Kadamba tree is the maṇḍala itself rather than a development of it. To be precise, it is the maṇḍala that has been empowered by the Command of the goddess. The goddess thus fertilizes herself, as it were, to give birth to the cosmic tree. Kṛṣṇa declares in the Bhagavadgītā that he is the aśvattha with its roots in heaven and its branches here below.[4] Similarly, the maṇḍala, empowered with mantra and the goddess's energy, is the Kadamba tree which, blazing with energy, emits its rays of mantric power down into the phenomenal world.[5] But she is not only the source of this tree, she is also born from it. She is the bud of the Kadamba flower. In this form she has engulfed into herself (kadambīkṛta) all the energies of the maṇḍala and the cosmic order that it represents. Thus she contains every potential for growth and unfoldment. When the flower blossoms, she is its radiant energy which, led to the heart, which is the centre of one's being where the Self resides, it completes the cycle. The tradition is nurtured by it and the initiate, filled with the light and the energy of the tree can, like the shaman on his shamanic quest, climb it to the summit of existence.

Accordingly, the tree is said to be in the centre of the maṇḍala and in each of the sacred seats insofar as they too are maṇḍalas, that is, spheres of energy within the encompassing expanse of the maṇḍala that contains them. Thus, in one place we are told that there are three Trees – the Ciñciṇī, the Kadamba and the Bilva (which does not appear in any other context). They grow in the seats in the corners of the Triangle, reflecting the triadic nature of the goddess.[6] Each tree is

---

[1] For example, the form described in chapter 29 of our text (KuKh 29/49).
[2] See, for example, LSNS name 60 (op. cit. 62), where Tripurā is said to reside in a grove of Kadamba trees.
[3] KuKh 17/30.
[4] For a short expressive statement about the cosmic symbolism of the Aśvattha tree, see Bhagavadgītā 15/1-2.
[5] Once having formed the conjunction of the three (energies) and thrown the Command into the maṇḍala, one should think (of it) as the Kadamba (tree), aflame with its rays, facing downwards. O god, once one has (recited the Vidyā) 900,000 times, one controls even the three worlds. KuKh 11/22cd -23.
[6] See KuKh 46/21cd-26 and notes concerning the symbolism of these three trees.

formed from the combined seeds of the god and the goddess united in the Point (bindu) in the centre.[1] In terms of another analogy, this tree is also the Liṅga in the centre of the maṇḍala.[2] The two notions combine well as Liṅgas are often placed under trees.

We have seen that Navātman and Parā are the seed-syllables that represent Bhairava and the goddess, respectively, in the centre of the Triangle.[3] The Kadamba Tree is the seed-syllable (kūṭa) in the centre of the maṇḍala. Like the Liṅga, which is another symbol for the same reality, it is extends along the vertical axis and, as it contains all things and is beyond time and space, it is symbolized by the Point, which in this context is the Kadamba Bud.

Due to its appearance, the seed-syllable Navātman is called the Tree. This Tree grows out of the Point in the centre of the Triangle which coincides with the Point (anusvāra - bindu) that, like all seed-syllable mantras, crown the apex of it. Thus, this Tree reminds us of the Tree of Brahman with its roots in heaven and branches down below. The Wheel of the Skyfarers at the End of the Twelve is likened to a Tree in the KMT. After extracting Navātman (SRHKṢMLVYŪAUṀ) the KMT explains:

> Endowed with supreme bliss, (Navātman) this Peak (seed-syllable) is the lord of the maṇḍala. All that is made of words, along with the moving and immobile universe is contained within it. O goddess, this is the means to attain the goal which is the Great Soul. That is Kuleśvara in the form of the Peak (seed-syllable) of Kuleśvara. There is no success without it. No spiritual discipline (sādhana) on the plane of the Skyfarer.
>
> Once worshipped within the maṇḍala, the maṇḍala is said to fulfill one's desires. Just by worshipping it, one attains the plane of universal pervasion. There are twenty-five branches of this great Tree (corresponding to the principles of existence). It is beautiful with the flowers of the Command. It is garlanded with the fruits of knowledge. Its fruit gives the satisfaction of liberation and is the bliss of perfectly mature sentiments (rasa). It is attained with ease by means of the sacrifice. The maṇḍala of the Mare's Mouth, endowed with the (divine) attributes of the Three Principles (of Śiva, Śakti and the Self) and radiant with (the energies that emerge) from the maṇḍala, is in the middle of the maṇḍala of the Skyfarer.[4]

---

[1] KuKh 7/42cd-43ab.
[2] KuKh 8/76cd-77ab.
[3] KuKh 39/40-41.
[4] KMT 16/61cd-67.

The Bud of the Kadamba

The bud of the Kadamba tree is a pleasing brownish yellow colour. It is perfectly spherical and about one and half inches in diameter. It is covered with fine, short bristles that appear to the eye to be like fine streaks of light that give it a strange, sparkling appearance. Its shape and sacrality makes it a good simile for Bindu. This association is supported by the fanciful derivation of the proper name 'Kadamba' which is said to be related to the noun kadamba- meaning a 'group' or 'aggregate'. Referring to the energy of the Drop produced by the union of Śiva and Śakti, the KRU explains:

> (Everything) was engulfed (kadambīkṛta) in every way by the mass of (its) rays and flames. O goddess, one should know that to be the Kadamba tree (taught) in the Kula teaching.[1]

Here we are only concerned with the symbolism of the bud of this tree, although the symbolism of the bud and its tree coincides in many respects. We come across a few instances of the same metaphor in the earlier texts of other Tantric traditions of which the following are examples. The first two are drawn from the TS, a Trika Tantra, and the second is from the JY, a Bhairava Tantra that teaches the Kālīkrama. Referring to the seed-syllable of power (śaktibīja), the TS says:

> O goddess Umā! one should think of it in the heart. It has the form of a Kadamba bud and is like a fine spray of snow. Once seen that supreme radiant energy (tejas), the knowledge of time arises.[2]

Referring to the practice of grasping the energy in the centres of the subtle body, the TS says:

> (Energy) whose form is that of a Kadamba bud is grasped in the locus of the navel. It should then be contemplated in the fore part of energy as bearing a series of garland-like flames. He who is (thus) between Wind and Fire (i.e. prāṇa and apāna) falls (in a mystic swoon) without a doubt. One should meditate in the navel on (its)

---

[1] raśmijvālāsamūhena [kh: raśi-] kadambī sarvataḥ kṛtaḥ |
sa kadambatarur devi vijñeyaḥ [g: vijñayaḥ] kulaśāsane || KRU 1/80 The entire passage is quoted in vol. 1 of the introduction, p. 143.

[2] *cintayed [g: cintayet] hṛdaye devi karṇikāntargatam ume [kh: -ga * mume]* |
kadambagolakākāraṁ tusāram [kh: tumā-] iva śīkaram ||
taṁ dṛṣṭvā tu paraṁ tejaṁ kālajñānaṁ pravartate | TS 2/5-6ab.

> circular motion, which is hard to behold like a whirling firebrand. Without a doubt, (this act of) grasping is established in a subtle state.[1]

One of the rare places this metaphor appears in the JY relates to the energy of the vital breath (prāṇaśakti). Below we will see that this metaphor is applied in the KuKh with reference to Kuṇḍalinī who is this vital force:

> Called the vital breath, the energy of the vital breath has arisen in the form of a Kadamba bud from the locus of the Root. Its form radiant energy, it is established in the Void.[2]

According to the ŚM the Kadamba bud is the individual Self represented by the Point (bindu) in the Lotus of the Heart:

> The god, possessing a subtle body (puryaṣṭaka), resides in the lotus of the heart. (His) form is that of a Kadamba bud and (shines) like a firefly. O beloved, the great, and divine Self is present there, located in the calix (of the lotus).[3]

The metaphor applies again to the Point (bindu) in the sole reference we find in the ṢSS. This time the Point is the sacred seat Oḍḍiyāṇa in the centre of the triangular maṇḍala and in the body:

> The form of a Kadamba bud and like the foam (on the surface of water) bubbles, Oḍḍiyāṇa is located there, the omnipresent sacred seat within the body.[4]

Although quite common in the MBT,[1] this metaphor is rare in the other Kubjikā texts. It never occurs in the KMT or the ṢSS and does so only once in the

---

[1] grahaṇaṁ nābhideśe [g: ?] tu [g: ?] kadambagolakākṛteḥ [k, kh, g: -kṛtiḥ] ||
śaktyāgre [kh: śajāgre] tu tato bhāvyaṁ [k, kh, g: bhāvya] jvālāmālāvalīdharam |
vāyvagnipuramadhyasthaḥ [kh: vāgvagni-] patate nātra saṁśayaḥ ||
nābhisthaṁ bhramaṇaṁ dhyāyed [kh: dhyāye] durlakṣo 'lātacakravat [kh: -lātacakrakat] |
grahaṇaṁ sūkṣmabhāvasthaṁ [kh: śūnyabhāvāsthaṁ] bhavate nātra saṁśayaḥ || TS 9/269cd-271.

[2] kadambagolakākārā kandasthānāt samutthitā [k: samusthitā] ||
prāṇākhyā prāṇaśaktiḥ sā tejomūrtiḥ kham āśṛtā | JY 2/16/52cd-53ab.

[3] hṛtpadmasaṁsthitaṁ [kh: -padme-; g: -teṁ] devaṁ puryaṣṭakasamanvitam [g: puryeṣṭaka-] |
kadambagolakākāram indragopakasannibham [g: kevalagolakā-; kh: -saṁnnibhaṁ] ||
karṇikāsthaṁ [g: karṇika-] mahādivyam ātmānaṁ [k: -divyaṁ; g: divya; kh g: tatrasthaṁ] tatragaṁ [k g: ca] priye [k: virājate; g: manosthitau] | ŚM 20/64-65ab.

[4] kadambagolakākāraṁ phenabudbudasannibham ||
oḍḍiyāṇaṁ sthitaṁ tatra pīṭhaṁ dehasthaṁ [k kh: -stha] sarvagam | ṢSS 47/13cd-14ab.

ŚM.[2] The KRU is the only other Kubjikā text where the metaphor appears. In the following reference from the KRU, although the flower of the Kadamba apparently replaces the bud, a Bindu is being described and so the spherical bud is meant, not the flower, which has quite a different shape. The passage refers to the energy of the Gesture of the Yoni (yonimudrā):

> O mother of the universe, it resides within (the Wheel of) the Self-supported above the (Wheel of) the Foundation. (There is) a triangular wheel (there) that is very brilliant (mahādīpta) and full of radiant rays. In the middle of that is a great Drop whose form is that of a Kadamba flower. That (Wheel) is said to be the Yoni that causes the path of emanation to flow (pravāhinī).[3]

The following examples, drawn from both recensions of the YKh, illustrate again how the metaphor is applied to Bindu. In the following reference, it is the Bindu at the base of the trunk of the body that contains the energy of the Gesture (mudrā) called Dhruvā (the Fixed One):

> O Śambhu, the liberating Dhruvā of the Western House which, by virtue of (its) vitality (ojas) has thousands of forms, is an aggregate (of energies) in the form of a ball (golaka). It is located in the middle between the anus and the genital organs, within the bud (golaka) of the Kadamba.[4]

---

[1] We will have occasion to observe in detail in the last chapter of this introduction that the YKh is basically a collection of *sūtra*s that were probably written by more than one person at different times. Most of the references are found in just a few sūtras of YKh (1) that, as it happens, have been incorporated into the KuKh. It is not possible to prove that these sūtras were compilled after the others and that, therefore, the metaphor developed later. However, in support of this possibility we notice that it does find its most extensive application in the KuKh which was, as we shall see, compilled after the YKh.

[2] See reference quoted above, p. 125.

[3] ādhārordhve [g: ādhārorddha] jaganmātaḥ [k kh g: -te] svādhiṣṭhānāntare [kh: -sthānāntare] sthitā ||
tryasraṁ cakraṁ [g: cakra] mahādīptaṁ sphuradraśmisamākulaṁ |
tasya madhye mahābinduḥ kadambakusumākṛtiḥ [g: -kṛti] ||
sā ca yoniḥ [kh: yoni; g: yoriḥ] samākhyātā sṛṣṭimārgapravāhinī | KRU 12/19cd-21ab.

[4] gudameḍhrāntamadhyasthā [k, kh, gh: -medrāṁ-; ṅ: gudomedrānta-] kadambagolamadhyagā [k, kh, gh: kadaṁvodamadhyagā; ṅ: kadamvādaramadhyagā] |
golakākāranicayā [k, kh, gh: -ṇicayā] sahasrākārakaujasā [k, kh, gh: sāhasrākārtikojasā; ṅ: -kārtikojasā] ||
sā dhruvā [gh: dhuvā] mokṣaṇī śambho paścimasya gṛhasya ca | YKh (1) 24/89-90ab.

In the following passage, the bud of the Kadamba is the Bindu of the Command in the centre between the eyebrows. The goddess is speaking:

> (The energy called) the Eldest (jyeṣṭhā) consists of the short vowels. (It is the sacred seat of) the syllable OṀ in the sphere of Anger (between the eyebrows). O concentrated, beautiful one! I am (she), one (alone) who is the Command which is the bud of the Kadamba.[1]

The spherical shape of the Kadamba bud can symbolize any of the Points (bindu) in the vital centres of the body. Thus, for example, Haṁsa, a pneumatic representation of the Self as Unstruck Sound in the Wheel of the Heart, is said to have this form there where it shines like a star (tārā).[2] These Points are compact, trans-dimensional centres of pluri-functional energy in a highly potent, latent form. The symbolism of the spherical Kadamba bud thus coincides with that of the coiled form of Kuṇḍalinī. The goddess who is knowledge and consciousness (jñānavijñāna) is Kuṇḍalinī in the form of a Kadamba bud.[3] In the form of the Point (bindu) Kuṇḍalinī pierces through the Wheels.[4] The Points in the centre of each Wheel are thus, in a sense, aspects of the one supreme Point, identified with Kuṇḍalinī, their common nature implicit in the communality of the same symbol applied to all of them. They are like seeds symbolized by the Kadamba bud which contains many seeds, many potencies. Thus the Kadamba tree is the triangular maṇḍala which, facing downwards, pours out the energies that issue forth from it like great tongues of flame into the lower spheres of manifestation.[5] The root of this Tree, in the middle of this triangular womb (yoni) of potencies, is the Kadamba bud.[6]

Another important feature of the Kadamba bud is illustrated in the following reference. Bhairava, distressed by the absence of the goddess is seeking her. In the holy city of Vārāṇasī he has a vision of her:

> Once the god Bhairava had thus seen the great pervasion of the Command, distraught and astonished, the god of the gods fell on the ground in Vārāṇasī, on the beautiful shore of the Ganges.

---

[1] jyeṣṭhā hrasvasvarā oṁkāraḥ [k, kh: -ra] krodhamaṇḍale [k: -la] ||
kadambagolakā ājñā aham ekāgra sundara | YKh (2) 17/24cd-25ab.
[2] KuKh 36/67; cf. ŚM 20/74-75ab quoted above.
[3] KuKh 35/44-45.
[4] KuKh 3/127.
[5] KuKh 11/23.
[6] KuKh 17/30.

> Frightened, the god shook and moved around (swaying in circles) like > the ecliptic (kadamba). [1]

Similarly, the maṇḍala is said to rotate 'like the kadamba' and so is said to be the Kadamba tree.[2] The bud of the Kadamba does not, of course, rotate. But there is another kadamba that does and that is the pole of the eclipitic. As the earth is tilted on its axis, it moves to and fro in a spiral-like – ecliptic - movement as it rotates. The area in which the pole of the ecliptic moves is called 'the sphere of the rotation of the ecliptic' (kadambabhramamaṇḍala) and its spiral, circular motion that of the ecliptic (kadambavṛtti). This then is a mixed metaphor that serves to reconcile the immobile, stillness (nirācāra) of the Tree and the dynamism of the Point (bindu) in the centre of the maṇḍala and the Wheels, which like them is a perpetually rotating sphere. Here then is the core vision of reality as a self-perpetuating process. This is completed by the lunar symbolism projected into the metaphor of the Kadamba bud - the last important element in the complex of symbols that represent this core vision in this and many other ways.

In this perspective, the Kadamba bud is the Full Moon.[3] The Moon is 'full' because it is replete with all the inner energies of consciousness and also because it is formed from the most complete and perfect union of Śiva and Śakti and, with them, all the polarities. This conjunction is also concretely, externally manifest as the fecund mixture of male and female seed (kuṇḍagola).[4] This is offered to the deity in union in the centre of the maṇḍala, both within the body and externally, and so this too is appropriately identified with the Kadamba bud.

Kubjikā - the Triadic Goddess

Each Great Goddess is a manifold of many goddesses. They are parts of her body, her limbs, faces, inner centres and the like, represented by their mantras and seed-syllables, individually or in groups. In some cases the deity in its entirety assumes the identity of another. As the New Moon, the goddess is Kālī and as the Full Moon, Gaurī. She is entirely both. In this case there is no contradiction as she alternates, as it were, between one aspect and the other, just as the New and Full Moon change, as it were, into one other.

Just as Kubjikā may become other goddesses, a goddess may become Kubjikā or some part of her. Kālikā becomes Kubjikā when she emerges from the

---

[1] YKh (2) 16/23cd-25ab, quoted in intro. vol. 1, p. 161-162.
[2] KuKh 6/10; cf. 6/127cd-128ab.
[3] KMT 16/61cd-67.
[4] KuKh 7/42cd-43ab.

Liṅga. But even when a transformation has taken place, the former identity is not dropped. For Kubjikā to be Kālī, Kālī cannot loose her identity. Thus we are reminded repeatedly that Kubjikā who creates is Kālī who devours and consumes.

The goddess may also replicate to become other goddesses. The result is the same – there is one goddess who is at the same time, many. However, in this case her multiple forms are not within her, as parts or aspects, or as one of her identities: they are outside her. Her triadic nature is especially like this. Kubjikā's triadic identity is, like many other features, derived from her essential character as a Trika goddess. The expanded depth and extension of the details of Kubjikā's theological and metaphysical identity is reflected in the development of the Three Goddesses and their functions. Nonetheless, they remain an essential representation of Kubjikā's fundamental identity. Thus Kubjikā herself proclaims that this triadic nature is her most intimate inner identity as Kuṇḍalinī – 'the sleeping serpent' - when she says:

> I am that sleeping serpent and, as is proper, (my) form is (both) divine (divya) and human (adivya). (I am) the Bliss of Stillness, incomparable, Anāmā, who is Parāparā. (I am) Aparā the energy Kaulinī and Parā who, devoid of (phenomenal) character-istics, is imperceptible. I am that goddess Kubjikā. I am the crooked (goddess). I am the one with the lion's look and I am the one whose vehicle is Śiva.[1]

A preliminary survey of the very many Newar liturgical tracts indicates that the Newars do not engage directly in Trika liturgies. The presence of Trika deities and elements of Trika ritual in Newar liturgies is largely due to the powerful influence Kubjikā's cult has on them. Śrīvidyā rites which the Newars also perform, incorporate Trika elements, however the cult of the Three Goddesses is not prominent in the Śrīvidyā liturgy. If the worship of the Trika Triad, which is an important element in the liturgies of most of the cults of the early Bhairava and Kaula Tantras, continues, however tenuously, to exist nowadays, it is largely due to the influence of Kubjikā's cult within Newar Kaulism. Thus a brief comparison, of the three goddesses described in the original Trika sources and those in the Kubjikā Tantras is both instructive and significant.

The Trika Tantras prescribe the worship of the Three Goddesses – Parā, Parāparā and Aparā - on the prongs of Śiva's Trident, in a maṇḍala drawn ideally

---

[1] prasuptāhir ahaṁ [k, kh: -di ahaṁ] samyak divyādivyasvarūpiṇī [k, kh: -ṇi] | nirānandā niraupamyā anāmā ca parāparā [k: paraparā] ||
aparā kaulinī [k, kh: -nā] śaktir [k, kh: śakti] nirlakṣālakṣiṇī [k, kh: lakṣaṇī] parā |
ahaṁ sā kubjikā devī ahaṁ sā vakrarūpiṇī ||
siṁhāvalokanī [k, kh: -lokinī] cāhaṁ ahaṁ sā śivavāhinī | YKh (2) 27/1-3ab.

in a cremation ground. The Trident is replaced in the Kubjikā Tantras by the Triangle of the Yoni.[1] Kubjikā's sixfold nature (ṣaṭprakāra) is so regularly stressed in the texts that it is, effectively, her distinguishing characteristic. In this aspect she embodies the sixfold Krama, which is most specifically her own.[2] Although less frequently, she is also referred to as threefold with reference to her triadic aspect as the Yoni. In a way one could say that the threefold Trika goddess develops into the sixfold Kubjikā who retains her original triadic nature and more basic form as the Yoni. The 'churning' (i.e. profound contemplation) that brings about emanation and the development of the threefold goddess to the sixfold one within the maṇḍala also marks the development of the original Trika goddess into her last and final (paścima) form as Kubjikā – cum – Kuṇḍalinī.

The second recension of the Yogakhaṇḍa begins with the following verses. Perhaps these were intended to be the introductory verses praising the deity (maṅgalācaraṇa) that normally come at the beginning of a text.[3] As if to stress that Kubjikā, the goddess praised at the beginning of her Tantra, is the triadic goddess of the Trika, she is not named directly but is presented in her triple aspect as the supreme Triad of goddesses, Parā, Parāparā and Aparā, who govern the 'three principles' (tattvatritaya) of the Trika. Collectively they are the goddesses of the Yoni who embody three aspects of the radiant energy of the consciousness which is the Light of the Void the Yoni enshrines:

> I salute that (goddess) called Parā who is the supreme will (parecchā), subtle and unchanging, called Supreme (Parā), Middling (Parāparā), and Inferior (Aparā). Hard to perceive, she can be realized (only) by means of awakened consciousness (bodha). She is the Pure Plane and devoid of the qualities (of Nature) (guṇa), she is the Void (kha). Eternal bliss, (all the beings in) the ten directions bow (to her). She who is supreme and well know is on the plane of the three paths (i.e. the Yoni) in the beginning, middle, and end (of all things). [. . .]
>
> (Whereas) she who is the Mother (of the universe) is the supreme Light seen within the heart. There, in the middle (of the heart)

[1] See above, p. 64, note 1.

[2] Mantras denote deities more specifically than any other element of their identity. The root mantra of a major deity may occasionally contain invocations to other deities, but usually does not. When it does, this not detract from the specific and specifying character of the mantra which denotes its own deity in a unique and special way. Although the Krama consists of a series of mantras that invoke various beings, it is no less specifically the Krama of the goddess as is her main (samaya) Vidyā.

[3] It may also be the case that the beginning of this recension of the YKh has been lost and that the it simply happens to begin this way. Either way, these verses are found at the beginning chapter 12 of YKh (1) and may well have been placed there with that intention when the chapter they introduce was redacted in the form of an independent sūtra.

> one can see (her), the primordial energy, the Transmental (manonmanī). Devoid of all the principles of existence (tattva), she is incomparable and without form. Abiding there, in the centre, one can see the goddess (Kuṇḍalinī) whose form is coiled (kuṇḍalākṛti). Kubjikā is that supreme goddess (parā devī), the first (ādibhūtā) (of all things) in the universe. [. . .] Full of the Three Principles, she has issued forth in countless modalities.[1]

The Triadic Goddess of the Trika

The Three Goddesses described in the following passages from the Siddhayogeśvarīmata, seated on the prongs of Śiva's Trident are white, red and yellow-black. They represent, as their colours suggest, the three qualities (guṇa) of Nature (prakṛti) which the one goddess, Mālinī, embodies. Mālinī sits on the middle prong of the Trika Trident. Above her, in her topknot, is an eight-petalled lotus within which is seated the goddess Parā. She is beautiful and brilliant white, 'like the best crystal and she pours nectar everywhere . . . (She) promotes welfare and bestows success.'[2] The SYM describes Parā as follows:

> One should visualize Parā with her own form, sitting on a lotus in the air, with the book of all knowledge in her left hand, O Beautiful One, and holding a beautiful, heavenly rosary of crystal in her right hand. One is to visualize a garland on her neck, a garland of heavenly beauty, made up with beads which are round like the buds of the Kadamba tree and which shine forth like fire. This garland reaches down to her feet and is as spotless as crystal all over. One should then visualize her as pouring out the divine nectar of

---

[1] yā sūkṣmā nirvikārā aparaparaparā yā parākhyā parecchā [k: paresthā; kh: parecha] durlakṣā bodhagamyā [k: ṅgurlaṁkṣā-; kh: -durbodhā -dūrvoma] vimalapadamayī [kh: paramaśivamayīr] nirguṇā khasvarūpā [k: svasūrūpā] | nityānandasvarūpā daśadiśanamitā [k: daśadiśeramitā; kh: stutigaṇanamitā] yā parā suprasiddhā [kh: vakrikākhyā]
ādau madhyāvasāne [k: madhyavasāne] tripathapadagatā [k: -tāṁ; kh: trividhagatiyutā] tāṁ parākhyāṁ namāmi | [. . .]
yā [k: ṣaṇ] mātā [k: māsā] sā parā jyotiḥ dṛśyate [k: paśyaṁti] sā [k: sauṁ] hṛdantare [k: ravadaṁtare] | [kh: yā [+ mātā] sā parā jyotir icchāśaktisvarūpiṇī jyotiḥśchāśakti- || ]
dṛśyate [k: paśyaṁte] tatra madhyasthā śaktir ādyā [kh: parā ādyā] manonmanī |
sarvatattvavihīnā sā anaupamyā nirākṛtiḥ | [. . .]
tatra madhye [k: madhya] sthitā devī dṛśyate kuṇḍalākṛtiḥ |
kubjikā sā parā [kh: vakrarūpadharā] devī ādibhūtā carācare |
tattvatritayasaṁpūrṇā bhedānekair visarpitā |

YKh (2) 1/1, 9cd-11, 15ab = YKh (1) 12/1, 10ab-12ab, 14ab.

[2] SYM 6/26-27.

> immortality[1] in the middle of the Kadamba grove. One should see her pouring forth the nectar of all knowledge in great floods and one should see this nectar enter one's own mouth, and that one's Self has the same form. After this, the best of sādhakas should visualize that this nectar comes out of his mouth as the flow of Śāstras. If one has done this visualization, he will be able to produce fascinating ornate poetry within a month. He will be a teacher of all doctrines; and after six months, he will produce Śāstras himself.[2]

According to the SYM Parāparā is worshipped on the right prong of the Trident. There we read that she is red

> . . . as blazing fire, wearing a garland of skulls glowing with three eyes. She sits with trident and skull-staff in her hands on [Sadāśiva] the 'Great Transcended'. Her tongue [flickers in and out] like lightning. She is gross-bodied and is adorned with great serpents. Her mouth yawns wide and has huge fangs. Ferocious, with her brows knitted in rage, wearing a sacred thread in the form of a huge snake, adorned with a string of human corpses round her neck, with the [severed] lotus hands of a human corpse as beautiful ear-rings, her voice like the thunder of the clouds at the world's end, she seems to swallow space itself.[3]

---

[1] Commonly, the great gods and goddesses of the Tantras, mounted on the summit of the cosmic body, stream down lunar nectar. Many of the major goddesses do so, including Parā, Kālī, Kubjikā and Tripurā. Amongst the gods, well known examples are Mṛtyuñjaya and Svacchandabhairava. The descent of lunar nectar marks the fruitful culmination of Śaiva initiation, whether that of the mild Siddhānta or the intensely energetic intiations of the Bhairava and Kaula Tantras.

The release of this nectar at the climax of the rise of Kuṇḍalinī is common to the representations of her rise in every school. Thus the later yogic Nātha tradition, free of its original sectarian roots in the cults of the Bhairava and Kaula Tantras, developed forms of essentialized, abstract forms of Yoga, the practice of which culminated in the drinking of this nectar.

[2] SYM 12/4-10. Edition and translation by Törzsök (1999: xxii). This visualization is part of the kavitvasādhāna of the goddess Parā. Notice how closely it coincides with the practices described in the Kubjikā sources to attain Mastery of Speech (vācāsiddhi) (see intro. vol. 1, p. 214-21 and 604). Such practices and their goals, no less than iconic forms, mantras and ritual procedures, are carried over from one tradition to another, threading together their history.

[3] SYM 20-22 translation by Törzsök who follows Sanderson 1990: 51.

Parā of the Siddhayogeśvarīmata

Parāparā and Aparā of the Siddhayogeśvarīmata

Aparā, 'the destroyer of the pains of the humble' is seated on the left prong of the Trident. She looks the same as Parāparā except that she is yellow-black.

The Triadic Goddess of the Kubjikā Tantras

The Three Goddesses are described in the KMT. As usual, the ŚM and the ṢSS largely repeat the KMT and supplement it by inserting additional details, some of which we will note as we go along. It appears at first sight that Parā and Parāparā have been confused in the KMT. The white Parā and red Parāparā of the SYM have exchanged places. The ṢSS follows the KMT in this. However, the commentator shows signs of having noticed the mistake. The ŚM is similarly confused, in places rectifying the mistake in others leaving it as it is. Anyway, it is likely that the mistake that has occurred in the KMT is due to a scribal error or a misunderstood reading. This is the first goddess of the three to be described. There is no reason why the redactor of the KMT should begin with the second one.[1] In order to prevent further confusion, we shall simply make the correction, at least in the presentation.

The three Parā, Parāparā and Aparā act together in the Triangle of the Gesture of the Yoni of which they are the aspects. As such they are aspects of the Skyfaring goddess, Khecarī. So we read in the ŚM:

> The Yoni is in the centre of the genital area (guda). It is made of three lines (daṇḍa) and three encompassing circles. The god Brahmā is in the first. Viṣṇu is said to be in the second and Rudra is in the third. (Thus the energy of the Yoni) is said to consist of three paths (tripathā) (corresponding to three goddesses).
>
> The first goddess is Parā. The second one is said to be Aparā and the third, Parāparā. (Thus the Yoni) is sustained (adhiṣṭhitā) by the three energies. (The energy of the Yoni is) below, above and in the middle. She emerges out from within emission (visarga) and is located in motion (cāra) and within the one whose form is immobile. Always

[1] The misunderstanding or error is found in the opening line of the description of the visualized form of the goddess. This reads (KMT 6/30cd):

cakramadhye ca sañcintya suśuklāṁ ca parāparām |

This line can be translated in two ways of which I have chosen the second:
1) Contemplate Parāparā who is beautifully white in the middle of the Wheel.
2) Contemplate (the goddess) who is both supreme and immanent (parāparā) beautifully white in the middle of the Wheel.

moving, she resides in the immobile.[1] She moves as motion (cararūpeṇa) and so she is Khecarī (the Skyfarer who is the goddess) Parā.

(Again), she is Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā, and Raudrī. As Viśvī she is (the energy) in the middle of them. The god in the centre of her is the Supreme Lord Sādākhya. O fair lady, the multiform emanation (of the universe)[2] emerges from his will. She who is without letter (avarṇā) (the letter A) and is also (all) the letters emanates, as the Mother (of the alphabet) (mātṛ), (the entire universe).[3]

Parā

Contemplate (the goddess) who is both supreme and immanent (parāparā) beautifully white in the middle of the Wheel. She holds a book and makes the Gesture of Knowledge. Along with a necklace of crystal, she is adorned with all the ornaments. A garland hangs from (her) neck and she is adorned with a radiant halo. She has two arms and one face. Her light is like that of ten million moons. She utters in a great stream the countless scriptures.

Intent in this way on (her) visualization (dhyāna), he becomes the Lord of Speech directly apparent. He speaks in Sanskrit and Prākṛt and utters the profound (secret of) the Vedas and Siddhānta according to the texts and (their) meaning. O beloved, this happens by practicing in the middle of the Sacred Seats or by means of them.[4]

---

[1] MS K: Moving in the Void, she resides in the immobile

[2] MS Kh: energy

[3] gudamadhyagatā [g: gudu-; kh g: -madhye-] yonis tridaṇḍā [kh: -daṇḍaṁ] ca trimekhalā [k kh: -laṁ; g: -lāṁ] ||
prathame [g: prathamaṁ] brahmadaivatyaṁ [g: -devatyaṁ] dvitīye [g: dvitīyaṁ] viṣṇur ucyate |
tṛtīye rudradaivatyaṁ [g: -devatyaṁ] tena sā tripathā [g: triyathā] smṛtā ||
parā ca prathamā devī [g: devi] dvitīyā cāparā [g: caparā] smṛtā |
parāparā tṛtīyā ca śaktitraya-m-adhiṣṭhitā [g: -trayaradhisthitā] ||
adhordhvamadhyasaṁsthā ca [g: adhorddhemadhyasaṁsthānaṁ] visargāntavisarpiṇī [k kh: visarggāntar-] |
cārasthācārarūpasthā [g: -madhyasthā] cañcalācalavartinī [k: khacarācaravarttinī] ||
carate cararūpeṇa [kh: caila-] tena sā khecarī parā |
*vāmā jyeṣṭhā tathā raudrī viśvī [k: vibhṛtābhyāṁ; kh: visvī; g: visthī] tāsāṁ [k: * ; g: tasyā] ca [k: tu] madhyagā ||
tasyā [k g: tasya] madhyagataṁ devaṁ [g: devī] sādākhyaṁ parameśvaram |
tasyecchānirgatā sṛṣṭir [kh: śaktir-] nānārūpā ca sundari [kh, g: -rī] ||
sṛjate mātṛrūpeṇa avarṇā varṇarūpiṇī | ŚM 8/110ab-104cd.

[4] KMT 6/30cd-35ab.

The KMT presents an alternative form of Parā as Nityā. Red and passionate, she is similar to Kāmeśvarī. Although this characterization relates to Parā, it applies to her three forms (mūrti). In the KuKauM we find that the goddess Nityā[1] is identified as Parāparā confirming that she has been confused in the KMT with Parā.[2] Parā (= Parāparā) is described in the KMT, in accord with her nature as the Trika goddess, in association with a series of triads that are linked to her via her three forms[3] and a series of five triangles on which she sits.[4] The KMT continues:

---

[1] See below, p. 230 ff. concerning the goddess Nityā.

[2] Referring to the goddess Nityā, the KuKauM says:

One must worship the secret goddess Parāparā, who is the delight of Kula, according to Kula practice (kulācāra) with flowers, incense, and offerings of water, flowers and the like along with incense.

parāparāṁ devīṁ [k, g ṅ: devī] suguptāṁ [k, g gh ṅ: suguptā] kulanandinīṁ [ṅ: paranandīnī] || arghapuṣpādibhirdhūpaiḥ kulācāreṇa pūjayet [gh: (?)] | KuKauM 4/35cd-36ab.

[3] These three, supreme, subtle and gross correspond to the supreme, middle and lower energies. They span the triple cosmic and transcendental reality divided into Śāmbhava, Śākta and Āṇava and the three principles (tattva) of Śiva, Vidyā, and Ātmā into which the 36 principles are divided. The triple iconic form (trimūrti) of the goddess is conceived in this and in many other ways. She is on three paths: left, right, and middle. These correspond to the three channels in the body, namely, Iḍā, Piṅgalā, and Suṣumṇā. In the outer world they are the three celestial luminaries - the Moon, Sun, and Fire, respectively.[3] Her three iconic forms (mūrti) correspond to the three qualities, sattva, rajas, and tamas, respectively. The three aspects (bheda) are the three goddesses 1) Nityaklinnā 2) Suraktā and 3) Madadravā. They are located in the following three places in the body: 1) the genitals 2) the heart and 3) the Cavity of Brahmā. These groups, listed in this context in the ṢSS (11/128cd-132ab), can be tabulated as follows:

1. Table of Triads

Nityā	Nityaklinnā	Suraktā	Madadravā
Energy	Lower	Middling	Supreme
Quality	Tamas	Rajas	Sattva
Command	Āṇava	Śākta	Śāmbhava
Principle	Ātmā	Vidyā	Śāmbhava
State	Gross	Subtle	Supreme
Location	Genitals	Heart	Cavity of Brahmā
Path	Left	Right	Middle
Channel	Iḍā	Piṅgalā	Suṣumṇā.
Luminary	Moon	Sun	Fire

[4] These triangles are the Five Causes, that is, the Five Brahmās or Praṇavas. They are: 1) the Five Praṇavas 2) Mālinī 3) Śabdarāśi 4) Trividyā and 5) Tadgraha.

> One should then meditate on (Parā) here in the form of a Nityā. She is brilliant red like red lac and has four faces and four arms.[1] She is endowed with three forms (mūrti) and is of three kinds, established in the three, she is the goddess who moves on the three paths (of the energies of will, knowledge and action) and is the balanced oneness (samatā) of the three channels (nāḍī) (of the vital breath).
>
> O mistress of the gods, there is Nityaklinnā, Madadravā (and Suraktā). They all bear the form of the goddess who has one face and two arms. They all hold a noose and goad and (their) eyes are distraught with passion (mada). (Each one is) young, mad with passion and blissful with wine. (The adept) should recollect the form of the goddess related to this practice (prayoga).
>
> She is Parā and her nature is supreme. She possesses the lustre of a thousand lightning flashes and is (red like a) bandhūka flower and a pomegranate. She is supported by five triangles (containing the Five Praṇavas).

Parāparā

The ŚM describes the visualized form of Parāparā as follows:

> (The adept) should meditate on the goddess Parāparā in the middle of the triangle. (Parāparā) shines with the light of the rising sun and is (red) like a pomegranate flower. She wears red clothes and is adorned with dredlocks and the moon. Three wrinkles and a line of hair (adorn the middle of her body). She is replete with all fine characteristics and has fat upraised breasts. Tranquil and supreme, she has four arms and one face with three eyes. Divine, she holds a noose and a goad and makes gestures of bestowing boons and fearlessness. A garland of wild flowers is tied to her head and she wears a necklace of letters. She is rich with the beauty of all her limbs and is adorned with all the ornaments. She possesses the Five Insignias[2] and the three sacred seats. Having visualized the goddess

---

[1] Although the ṢSS agrees with the KMT that the three goddesses have two arms, they are said to hold four objects, namely, a goad, a noose, a book and a rosary. The commentary on the ṢSS adds that there are two forms. One is white and the other red. The former has two arms and holds a book and a rosary and the latter a book, a rosary, a goad and a noose. The white form is Parāparā, which the commentary is, it seems, somehow trying to align her with Parā, whom the commentator could well have seen had been confused with Parāparā. It seems that according to the ŚM (8/112) this goddess is Parāparā, who is described below.

[2] Concerning the Five Insignias, see intro. vol. 1, p. 519 ff..

> in this way in the middle of the Cavity Brahmā, one should repeat the mantra there encapsulated with the Five Praṇavas.[1]

A feature of the Parāparā Vidyā is her application to black rites. This is mentioned briefly in the KMT but owing to the confusion there between Parā and Parāparā, the KMT attributes this application to Parā. The ṢSS corrects this mistake and relates them to Parāparā,[2] while the ŚM supplies the details of the rites. The SYM teaches at length the application of the Vidyās of the goddesses to black rites performed for some specific worldly purpose (kāmya). However, just as this sphere of the Triadic Goddess's jurisdiction is ignored in the teachings of Anuttaratrikakula Abhinava presents in the Tantrāloka, the Kubjikā Tantras treat it as a minor, secondary concern.

---

[1] śṛṅgāṭapuramadhye tu dhyāyed [g: -ye] devīṁ [g: devī] parāparām [g: -raṁ] |
udayārkaprabhāṁ dīptāṁ [kh: devīṁ] dāḍimīkusumopamām || raktavastraparidhānāṁ [k: -parī-; kh: -naṁ] jaṭājūṭendubhūṣitām |
trivalītaraṅgamadhyasthāṁ romarājīvibhūṣitām [g: -rājitāṁ] ||
sarvalakṣaṇasaṁpūrṇāṁ pīnonnatapayodharām |
caturbhujām ekavaktrāṁ [kh: -jāmeyuhmavakrāṁ] trinetrāṁ ca śivāṁ parām ||
pāśāṅkuśadharāṁ divyāṁ varadām abhayapradām |
vaḍamālā śire baddhā [kh: -vaddhāṁ] varṇahārāvalambinīm [k kh g: -nī] ||
sarvāvayavaśobhāḍhyāṁ [kh: -ḍhyā g: -sobhā-] sarvābharaṇabhūṣitām [g: -tā] ||
mudrāpañcakasaṁyuktāṁ [kh: -saṁyuktā] pīṭhatrayasamanvitām |
evaṁ dhyātvā mahādevīṁ [k: -devi; kh: -devī] brahmarandhrasya madhyagām [g: magāṁ] |
tatra sthāne japaṁ kuryāt pañcapraṇavasaṁputam [g: -saṁyutaṁ] || ŚM 8/113- 118.

[2] The ṢSS explains:

> This Vidyā, when applied, brings about Melting, Arousal, Attraction, Subjugation and all the works of magic from peace to murder. O goddess, in this way the (Triple) Vidyā, in relation to (its) parts (padagatā) and, conjoined with the (appropriate) adjuncts and the qualities, performs many such magical acts (karman).

drāvaṇaṁ kṣobhaṇaṁ caiva ākarṣaṇaṁ [kuma: ākarṣa-] vaśam [k, kh: vaśyam] eva ca |
śāntādimāraṇāntāni kurute sā niyojitā ||
evamādīni karmāṇi upādhiguṇayojitā [k, kh: -taḥ] |
kurute vividhān devi vidyāpadagatā priye || ṢSS 11/145-146.

Parāparā of the Śrīmata

Aparā

Although Aparā's name suggests that she is the immanent, most gross aspect of the triadic goddess, the sources do not describe any iconic form. She is Kuṇḍalinī the pure energy of consciousness seated on the five triangles that generate the essential energies of the five elements:

> (Her sport) is the play of the Great Yoga. (Her) sphere (is all the universe) from Śiva to the earth, (she is the) goddess who abides pervading the circles of the sun and stars.
>
> She is located in the upper face of the triangle in the fore part of the slanting line. (She is) in a coiled form (kuṇḍalākārā) above that (triangle) and is sustained by the power of Passion (kāmaśakti). O fair-faced one, she sits there, on the five triangles.[1]
>
> When moving upwards she is said to be the goddess Aparā as long as she move along when uttered forth. She is said to be Aparā when she arises as Light (jyotiṣ) and Resonance (dhvani) and dissolves away into the End of Sound.[2]

This representation of the triad Parā, Parāparā and Aparā is clearly an advance on how these three goddesses appear for the first time in the SYM. Although they are already associated with the energy of Speech, especially Parā, there we find little of the Yogic, inner dimension that is highlighted here and explained in the commentary as follows:

> Now Aparā will be explained: (Her sport) is the play of the Great Yoga. What is the Great Yoga? This Great Yoga takes place by the checking of the fluctuations of the mind. Through it one perceives the essential nature of (Śiva who is) consciousness. Aparā is [1] KMT 6/38cd-40ab, 40cd-42, 43-44 and 45-46ab.

śṛṅgāṭa-ūrdhvavaktrasthā [k, kh: -sthaṁ; kuma: śṛṅgāṭakaṁ cordhvamukhaṁ] tiryagrekhāgramūlagā [kuma: -gam] |
tasyordhve [kuma: śikhordhva] kuṇḍalākārā [k, kh: -rāṁ] kāmaśaktyāvadhiṣṭhitā [k, kh: -śaktyāvadhisthitam; kuma: kāmaśaktiradhisthitam] ||
pañcaśṛṅgāṭakāsīnā [kh: -nāṁ; kuma: -naṁ] tatra sthitā [k, kh: - sthāṁ; kuma: sthitaṁ ta] tu [kuma: tra] varānane | The readings of ṢSS 11/139-140ab make more sense than the equivalent KMT 6/45-46ab.
[2] The last lines are drawn from the ṢSS. The Sanskrit reads:

uccāre hy aparā [k, kh: triparā] proktā yāvad uccaratāṁ [k, kh: -ritāṁ] vrajet ||
dhvanirūpā yadā sā tu jyotīrūpā samudbhavā |
tadā sā aparā proktā nādānte vilayaṁ gatā || ṢSS 11/140cd-141.

> Illumination (bhāsā) and (her) sphere (is all the universe) from Śiva to the earth. She who pervades the universe from Śiva up to the earth as she does the circle of the sun and the constellations is Aparā. In the same way she is the luminosity (dyotakatva) of the triangle that faces upwards. She is located in the root of the slanted line in the two places. She is the line that is to one side. She is located in the Root which is at the very end. She is the radiant energy (tejas) and illumination of consciousness. As such she is Aparā. In that same form, she is sustained by the power of desire and is shaped like an earring. (Then) she is Aparā.
>
> As before, she, Aparā, is described as the will of the fivefold triangle. By her upward utterance she abandons her crooked form and becomes clearly manifest as straight. Thus, her form (is then) Resonance, Light, the Breath and Letter. She, Aparā, should be dissolved away into the End of Sound.

In brief, Aparā is the immanent energy of the goddess who, as Kuṇḍalinī, pervades the universe. She rises up from her place on top of the upward facing triangle in the Root, at the base of the universe and the body, straightening as she does so, brilliant with Light and Sound, and moves through it impelled by the 'utterance' of consciousness to dissolve away into the supreme state at the End of Sound. Parā is the pure Transmental energy at the summit of Kuṇḍalinī's ascent, the pure conscious nature that attains Śiva.[1]

Kubjikā - the Goddess of the Three Transmissions

The Iconic and Aniconic Forms of the Goddess Kubjikā

Kubjikā is hardly known outside the Kathmandu Valley. Even there, iconic representations are very rare. Although she has been worshipped by Newar

---

[1] The ṢSS says of the goddess Parāparā:

If when established in Śiva Yoga, she reaches the Transmental state, she is then the goddess Parāparā whose nature is consciousness.

Comm: When the Transmental state prevails which is like Śiva, the goddess is Parāparā.

yadā unmanatā [k, kh: -tāṁ] prāptā śivayogasamāśritā |
cidrūpā caiva sā devī tadā saiva [k, kh: caiva] parāparā ||
(vyākhyā): yadā cidrūpatā [k: -tām; kh: -tayā; g: -tām] unmanatā [k kh g: -tāṁ] prāptā [k kh g: nasti] śivarūpavad [g: -vat] bhavati || tadā parāparā || ṢSS 11/142 and commentary.

As ṢSS confuses Parā with Parāparā, we may understand, as is but natural, that Parā, not Parāparā, is the Transmental.

initiates for centuries, they have done so extremely secretly. Indeed, a measure of her exalted status in the esoteric pantheon of the Newars is the special care they have taken to keep her cult totally secret. Kubjikā is not at all an 'open secret', as is the great majority of esoteric lore. This secrecy naturally extends to her representations, which have been kept so scrupulously hidden that, unlike the other major esoteric deities of the Newars, virtually none have been recovered. All of the few examples we know about are paintings.[1] Examples have been recovered of bronzes of all the other major esoteric Kaula goddesses Newars worship, but there are no notices of cast images of the goddess Kubjikā. As access to the esoteric shrines (āgañ cheṁ āgañ koṭā) of the Newars is impossible for non-initiates, we cannot be sure that none exist. In at least one important āgañ in Kathmandu of the goddess Kubjikā, about which I have been informed, she has no icon.[2] Moreover, according to a reliable source that is also the case in the royal Āgañ in the Malla palace in Bhaktapur. It houses numerous metal images of esoteric deities but Kubjikā is not amongst them. She is painted on the walls but there is no other image.[3] If there are none or very few metal images, it would not be so surprising. Icons are considered to be of secondary importance for the worship of Kaula goddess. They are commonly worshipped in abstract geometrical Yantras drawn for the purpose during the preliminary rites.[4] This is done as a concrete response to the primacy of the aniconic form of the deity. We shall see as we review the representations of Kubjikā described in her Tantras, that her aniconic (niṣkala) aspect is heavily stressed. Moreover, it makes sense that Kubjikā, who figures in the Newar esoteric pantheon as the goddess who empowers all the others, should be worshipped primarily aniconically to accord with her essential nature as the abstract energy of empowerment (*ājñ*ā) on the one hand, and the transcendental metaphysical ground of all divine forms on the other.

---

[1] I have been told that there was, a painting of Kubjikā along with other deities on the wall of the private temple (āgañ cheṁ) in Bhaktapur but that it was removed when it was renovated some thirty years ago. Shah (1997: 133) informs us of the existence of an excellent painting of the goddess made by a certain Tejarāma around 1418 CE. A small, very crude representation of a minor form is depicated in a thurba in the National Museum close to Svayambhu in the Kathmandu Valley. She appears there as the goddess of the paścimāmnāya along with the goddesses of the other āmnāyas. The best known representation is a small image in a Nepalese thyasophu kept at the Bhārat Kalā Bhavan in Banaras Hindu University.

[2] This fine traditional, 17th century āgañ stands in the corner of a large enclosed square in Makhan Tol in Kathmandu. It was built by Navamī Siṁha, the chief minister of Pratāpamalla (1641-1674) who wrote several books on Tantra and was an initiate into Kubjikā's cult. My informant is a direct descendent Navamī Siṁha and is like his distinguished ancestor an initiate and scholar.

[3] I am grateful to Kedār Rāj Rājopādhyāya for this information.

[4] I have been told by Newar initiates that small metal Yantras are fixed in the ground in the centre of the area where the rites take place. The Yantra of the goddess who is the object of worship is drawn on the main one with vermillion powder or other material. It is not unusual for main Yantra to be a Śrīcakra, which thus serves as a base (ādhāra) for the Yantras of the goddesses.

We do hear of Kubjikā's existence outside Nepal, but only rarely. The only place outside Nepal where Kubjikā appears to have maintained a presence, although not an immediately apparent one, is in Gauhati, the ancient Kāmarūpa. There she continues to be worshipped, in some way, it seems, along with the goddess Kāmākhyā to whom she is related. We have noted already that Kāmākhyā's place of origin – the Blue Mountain near Gauhati – is said in the Kālikāpurāṇa to be Kubjikā's sacred seat.[1] Mukundarāja in his commentary on the Mālinīstava echoes this association by identifying Kubjikā as the goddess Mālinī with Kāmākhyā who 'lives on the Blue Mountain'.[2] Enquiry reveals that the local priests are well aware of the existence of 'Kubjā Kumārī' and that they do worship her. Nowadays, it seems, Kubjikā is not considered to be in a special way Kāmākhyā's secret form, even so references to her in the Kālikāpurāṇa suggest that she may well have been at one time.

The iconography of the two, Kubjikā and Kāmākhyā, although quite distinct, is also strikingly similar. Śiva lies prone on a lion. From his navel emerges a lotus with a long stem, reminding us that it is here that according to the early sources Kuṇḍalinī resides. On the blooming lotus sits Kāmākhyā. Like the most common forms of Kubjikā described in her Tantras, she has six heads. As we review the iconic representation of the goddess Kubjikā in the following pages we will see that this form with six faces is the most prominent one. It is the one the KuKh singles out as the main one and to which it dedicates the whole of chapter 29. The Agnipurāṇa, which is the only major Sanskrit source that is not a part of the Kubjikā corpus that refers to her at all extensively, describes her in this form.[3]

Inspired, it seems, by her essential triadic nature as a direct descendent of the goddess of the Trika Tantras, Kubjikā develops a specific triadic form of her own. This triad, in accord with the same logic of the triads of the preceding Trika Tantras is sustained, encompassed and transcended by a fourth element which is the ultimate reality and essential metaphysical nature of all three collectively as well as individually. Cosmogony, theogany and the emanation of the teachings are three aspects of a single process. Three forms of the Transmission proceed from the three forms of the goddess and are governed by them. These are contained within the fourth encompassing Transmission of the Skyfarers (khecarakrama).

---

[1] There the goddess says to Bhairava and Vetāla:

(Now you two) go to the inner sacred seat (antaḥpīṭha) of Kāmarūpa called Nīlācala. This is the secret abode of the (the goddess) Kāmākhyā called the sacred seat of Kubjikā, there the heavenly Ganges (flows) (ākāśagaṅgā). (Bathe there and) sprinkle (yourselves) with its waters, O sons, worship there Mahāmāyā who is the universe. Pleased, the goddess will quickly bestow (her) boons on you. KāPu 76/73–75. See intro. vol. 1, p. 250-251.

[2] Commentary MāSt line 5 in note 57 chapter 4.

[3] See below p. 165, note 3.

This marks the emergence of the polarities of Śiva and Śakti from the primordial, transcendental Void. From this spontaneously emerges, like a sprout from a seed, the divine Will, that is, the energy of the Transmental. This assumes two aspects. One is Śakti, who is the multiform manifestation, and the other is Śiva, who is the 'stainless' (nirañjana), transcendental Absolute. The Transmission of the Skyfarers is generated by their union and from that come the three transmissions and the three forms of the goddess that govern them.[1]

In its earliest representation in the KMT, the triad with its encompassing fourth is linked to a series of Yogic states, which provide little scope for concrete iconic representation. However, the seeds of later developments have been sown. The KMT is primarily concerned with just one Transmission, which it presents systematically and in detail. However, we observe that the three transmissions have already begun to emerge in the presentations drawn from the KMT we will examine first. As the system develops they become more concrete and are filled out with details. The same takes place in parallel with the iconic forms and aspects of the goddess who governs each transmission and is worshipped in it. The final stage is represented by the type of presentation we find in the Kubjikānityāhnikatilaka. There each transmission is clearly linked to a sacred seat, Siddha, goddess and metaphysical principle.[2]

We shall see as we go chronologically through the presentations of the goddess's iconic forms that they become progressively more clearly defined. Moreover, the goddesses of the three transmissions in the earlier presentations are more evidently aspects or permutations of Kubjikā, whereas subsequently they become three distinct goddesses who are worshipped as forms of Kubjikā.

One would expect the first in order of presentation to be that of the Transmission of the Eldest, which as its name suggests, was the first to be transmitted in mythical time. This took place in Oḍḍiyāna, the first place of origin of the Kubjikā teachings, as it is of the other major Kaula traditions, including the Kālīkrama and Śrīvidyā. This is the order in the KnT, but it is not the common one. Every other presentation begins with the Transmission of the Child. This is because the model is derived from the three junctures (sandhyā) of the day – dawn, midday and sunset. The goddess emerges, as it were, out of the Night of the unmanifest, supreme state and progressively ages, step by step, as does the sun through the day, from childhood, to youth and then old age, when she returns to her original condition. So the first Transmision is that of the Child that takes place at dawn and is presided over by the Mother of the Child (bālāvvā). The second takes place at midday and is that of the Youth and the last, that of the Aged, arises at sunset.[3]

---

[1] See KuKh 28/143cd-152.
[2] See below, p. 186.
[3] KuKh 28/150-152.

According to the SKh, at dawn the goddess is red and her form is the Triangle. She is then like a young child. At midday she is a young woman (yuvā) and her form is Kuṇḍalinī. In the evening she is an old hag who is dark blue and red in colour and fierce in appearance.[1] These are her forms in the three lineages (olimūrti).[2] In the following passage in the SKh they are equated with three goddesses:

> Assuming the supreme form, the Transmission arises threefold. In the youngest lineage, the Transmission of the Child, Kujā is Mālinī herself. That great mother is enveloped by the twenty-seven depositions (nyāsa).
>
> The goddess Tripurā is in the midst of the Transmission of the Youth. She is the goddess who resides in the middle lineage and is the bliss of the pulsation (of consciousness) (spandanānanda). She is Kuleśvarī enveloped by the twenty-seven depositions.
>
> In the beginning, the supreme Kubjā in her supreme form is Kālikā. This supreme energy has descended in order to grace the worlds. She came into the mortal world as the division into the three lineages. In the lineage of the eldest, in the Transmission of the Aged (vṛddha) that Kuleśvarī abides in a divine form and is enveloped by the twenty-seven depositions. Once one has learnt the iconic form of the lineages (olimūrti), one should deposit the sequence of the deposition. O lord of the universe, knowing (this) thus, one is then worthy to worship the lineages. He who knows the sacred seats,

---

1 The colour of coral, she is the Triangle (trikoṇā) and her form is subtle. At dawn in the morning I praise the red Mother (raktāmbā), the form of Kubjikā. At midday I praise the youthful Kulakubjikā who, the colour of vermillion water, is Kaulinī whose form is Kuṇḍalinī. Dark blue and red, with three eyes, large teeth and face deformed, at dusk I worship the great Aged One, the Kubjikā of liberation.

śrīdrumākārarūpā [k kh: śrīvidruma-; g: śrīvidrūmākārarūpā] tu trikoṇā [k g: triḥkoṇā] sūkṣmavigrahā |
prabhāte 'hani raktāmbāṁ [k kh: raktāṁvā; g: raktāvā] vande 'haṁ mūrtikubjikām [g: -kā] ||
kuṅkumodakarūpeṇa kuṇḍalyākārakaulinī [k: -kaulikīṁ] |
yuvāṁ [k kh g: yuvā] madhyāhnakāle tu vande 'haṁ kulakubjikām ||
śyāmā raktā [g: rakta] trinetrā ca karālā vikṛtānanā |
sandhyākāle mahāvṛddhāṁ [k g: -vṛddhā] vande 'haṁ mokṣakubjikām [g: -ā] || End of chapter two of the SKh.

2 Many characteristics of Kubjikā, her predecessor, are found in Tripurā, the goddess of Śrīcakra. Amongst them triads are especially prominent. Tripurā also has three forms as a girl, young woman and old hag. But while the first two are well known, the third is hardly mentioned in the sources or worshipped. I am grateful for this personal communication to Dr. S. P. Upādhyāya.

syllables (piṇḍa), practice of the transmission (kramācāra), the line of teachers and the Kulakrama within the body, is the beloved of Kula.[1]

The goddess of each transmission is enveloped by twenty-seven depositions. This is a way of saying that the sonic body of the goddess of each of the transmissions is the transmission – Krama – that is the sequence of mantras – Krama – of which it consists. This accords with the manner in which the Krama is presented in the SKh. There each Krama consists of each of the three Kramas and each of these, in their turn, consists of all three. Thus there are twenty-seven Kramas, the mantras of which the Siddhakhaṇḍa presents systematically in full for the Transmission of the Child. These correspond to a series of twenty-seven projections (nyāsa) of letters and mantras onto the body. As usual, these are deposited on the body to purify it and so prepare it to receive the Kramas inwardly and worship them externally. In this way the adept's body is transformed into that of the goddess of all the Kramas.

This triad could well be associated with the three qualities of Nature (prakṛti). But initially this link is not made. Later, however, Mukundarāja, the author of the Saṁvartārthaprakāśa, does see this connection but shifts the projection onto the three Currents of Teachers (ogha), we shall discuss in the following chapter.[2] Thus he explains that Kubjikā has three forms:

1) In the world of the gods she is in the sattva state and is the white goddess of the Divine Current.
2) In the rājasika state she is in the world of men and, red in colour, she is the woman of the Current of Men.

---

[1] parāmūrtim avaṣṭabhya [k: -mavasthabhya; kh: -mavastasya] tridhābhedakramodayam [k: -dayām] | kanyasolyāṁ bālakrame kujā sā mālinī svayam ||
nyāsaiś ca saptaviṁśaiś ca āvṛtā sā mahāmbikā |
tripurā nāma yā devī kaumārakramamadhyataḥ ||
madhyamolyāṁ [g: -molyā] sthitā devī spandanānandarūpiṇī [kh: spanandanāndarūpiṇī] |
nyāsais tu saptaviṁśais [k kh: saptā-] tu āvṛtā sā kuleśvarī ||
ādau tu pararūpeṇa parā kubjā tu [kh: nu] kālikā | anugrahārthaṁ lokānāṁ avatīrṇā parā [kh: mahā] kalā [g: kalīṁ] || olitrayavibhāgena āgatā martyalokataḥ [k: -naḥ; g: -madhyaṁrtyalokataḥ] |
jyeṣṭha - olyāṁ [g: -olyā] vṛddhakrame saṁsthitā divyarūpataḥ ||
nyāsaiś ca [kh g: tu] saptaviṁśaiś ca [kh: tu] āvṛtā sā kuleśvarī [g: kuje-] |
olimūrttiṁ purā jñātvā paścān nyāsakramaṁ [g: paścā-] nyaset ||
evaṁ jñātvā jagannātha olipūjāraho [g: -viho] bhavet |
pīṭhapiṇḍakramācāraṁ gurupaṅktikulakramam ||
śarīre [kh: -raṁ] yo [kh: yāṁ] vijānāti sa bhavet kulanandanaḥ | SKh 3/4-11ab.

[2] See below, p. 404 ff..

3) In the world of the demons she is in a tāmasika state and, as Nature, she is Māyā, and the Kālī of the Current of Siddhas.[1]

The Visualized Forms of the Goddesses of the Transmissions

An important aspect of these visualizations is the attention that is paid to the goddess's essentially formless, aniconic nature. In the earliest representations, which are those of the KMT, all four aspects are mostly metaphysical states rather than iconic forms of the goddess. In the successive representation, that of the YKh of the MBT, the aniconic and the icon aspects are more clearly distinguished as the undifferentiated (niṣkala) and differentiated (sakala) aspects of the goddess. The latter comprises the goddess in the three transmissions and the former her transcendental, essential nature. Initially, these two levels spill over into each other, as it were, but in the later schemes they are clearly distinguished. Even so, the metaphysical dimension of the goddess's being is never entirely set aside in favour of her 'gross' form. Thus, at the tail end of this development, which is exemplified by the layout in the KnT, the goddesses of the three transmissions are each associated with a progressively higher metaphysical principle.

The sources present a good number of variants of the names and forms of the goddess of the three lineages. However, it is clear that the goddess is always essentially the same one. The YKh (1) in one place makes this quite explicit by identifying the goddesses of the three Transmissions as Khañjinī, Vakrā and Kubjikā, who are everywhere in the sources clearly just three names for the same goddess.[2] But in most cases, the goddess of the three transmission assumes a distinct form and nature for each one. We find several triads. But the texts here and there let us know that these too are differences in name, not substance.[3]

---

[1] vastutas tu devaloke sattvasāmyāvasthayā [sāmyā-] śvetā divyaughā devī |
naraloke rajaḥsāmyāvasthatayā raktā mānavaughā nārī |
daityaloke tamassāmyāvasthayā prakṭirūpayā māyā siddhaughā kālī | SaṁP

[2] In the Transmission of the Child she is said to be subtle and is well-known as Khañjinī. Again, O Kuleśvara, she is the crooked (kuṭilā) Vakrā in the Middle Lineage. (She) is Kubjikā who has six aspects, the deity in the form of an old (woman).

bālakrame smṛtā [ṅ: nmṛtā] sūkṣmā khañjinīnāmaviśrutā ||
tathā sā [ṅ: sa] kuṭilā [ṅ: kuṭikā] vakrā [k, gh: vaktrā] madhyamolyāṁ kuleśvara |
kubjikā ṣaṭprakārā ca vṛddharūpeṇa devatā || YKh (1) 19/65cd-66.

[3] We can draw up the following table of the three forms of the goddess according to the sources we examine in this chapter.

The Four Forms of the Goddess according to the Kubjikāmata

We begin this presentation of the visualized forms of the goddess of the Transmissions with the account in the Kubjikāmata. This is followed by those found in the later Kubjikā sources, arranged in approximately chronological order. First comes the Kularatnoddyota. After that we turn to the Yogakhaṇḍa of the Manthānabhairavatantra from which the Kumārikākhaṇḍa draws its forms of the goddess to conclude with the Kubjikānityāhnikatilaka. All of them describe three or four forms of the goddess, one for each of the transmissions and one beyond.

The goddess is presented in chapter seventeen of the KMT as having four forms, one for each of the Kaula Yogic states. These are, beginning with the highest: Beyond Form (Rūpātīta), Form (Rūpa), Part (Pada) and Body (Piṇḍa). The first is governed by the transcendental aspect of the goddess that does not have an iconic form. We will see that the same division is found in the YKh also. The three 'immanent' forms 'with (manifest) energies' (sakala) are classified, as usual, into gross, subtle and supreme. The transcendental one is simply 'without (manifest) energies' (niṣkala). The four are related to the four sacred seats which are the last group of four in the Transmission of Twenty-eight (aṣṭaviṁśatikrama) and serve as the receptacles of these four states. Collectively, they are the Śāmbhavakrama, which encompasses the other three transmissions in the supreme realisation of the fourth Kaula state, called Beyond Form (Rūpātīta). At this level, the goddess is the collective metaphysical nature of all the states and so has no outer form. She sits above the Doomsday Fire (vaḍavānala) that burns in the core of reality symbolized by the centre of her maṇḍala, the Yoni. In the corners she burns in the same sacred Fire in the other three states of Yoga in the midst of the three Transmissions (krama). Thus the KMT presents her as the quintessential goddess of the Kula who is beyond time and is independent of it and yet takes her support from it, even as she dominates it. Thus at this level Kubjikā, the supreme Goddess of the Kula – Kuleśvarī, is Kālī who generates and annuls time. The KMT teaches:

---

2. Table of the Forms of the Goddess of the Three Transmissions

Lineage	KMT	SKh / KnT	YKh	YKh (1) 21
Child	Naked Kubjikā	Mālinī	Khañjī	Raktā
Youth	Mahāntārikā	Tripurā	Vakrā	Klinnā
Aged	Khañjikā	Kālī	Kubjikā	Nityā

> One should worship the Śāmbhava Transmission, which is omniscient and endowed with universal pervasion, in the supreme place, that is, Kulākula (the immanent and transcendent reality) with the flowers of the Command by means of the Yoga that includes (the states) Beyond Form and the rest along with the Yoga of the Doomsday Fire[1] according to the teaching that has come from the Abyss (gahvara).
>
> The supreme goddess is present there, her form sustained by the maṇḍala. In the centre, her nature is supreme. Tranquil, she (sits) on the head of Time. Beyond the (differentiated) energies (of manifestation), she is the energy of (all the) energies. She is Kuleśvarī, (the goddess) who destroys and generates time.[2] Beyond the Doomsday Fire she shines brightly, radiant (with countless) qualities like a thousand suns. Beyond Form, she is Kuleśvarī.[3]

Nagnā Kubjī: the Goddess of the Lineage of the Child

The other three forms of the goddess are related to the three transmissions individually. Although she is represented iconically at this level, her iconic forms are not clearly defined. One reason for this is probably that at this early stage of the Kubjikā system, this development had not yet taken place, just as the contents of the three transmissions had not yet been defined. Another, more essential, reason is that the focus of attention is on the goddess as an embodiment of a Yogic state, that is, an aspect or level of attainment. What is of concern is her metaphysical depth rather than her outer form. Even so, the scantiness of the iconic details are probably also due to the rudimentary development of the notion of the three transmissions and of Kubjikā's iconic form in general. The three are just forms of Kubjikā, not separate goddesses as we find in later developments.

The first form of the goddess is Nagnā Kubjī – the Naked Kubjikā of the Transmission of the Child. One would expect her to be gentle, instead she is said

---

[1] Concerning the Doomsday Fire, see intro. vol. 1, 21 and 29 and the Yoga of the Doomsday Fire, intro. 1, 302; intro. 2, 154, 452 n. 3.

[2] The KMT reads kambalīyaṁ – 'she is this kambalī'– which makes no sense. Possibly this reading is simply a scribal corruption. The reading accepted by the commentary of the ṢSS (26/20cd) where this passage is reproduced is 'kābhaleyam'. Although this reading also makes no sense, the commentator squeezes meaning out of it by fancifully dividing it up as follows:

> 'kā' this is time. Its 'bha' is sustenance (bharaṇa) and 'la' merger. In this way, she whose nature is time brings about the emanation and withdrawal of time.

kā [k, kh: ka] iti kālaṁ tasya bha iti bharaṇaṁ la iti layanam || evaṁ kālasya yāvat kālarūpiṇī sṛṣṭisaṁhāraṁ karoti || Comm. on ṢSS 26/20cd.

[3] KMT 17/10cd-14.

to be 'extremely fierce and frightening'. One would have thought that this form would be more appropriate for the Transmission of the Aged which is generally governed by a fierce goddess. The second form is Mahantārikā who induces trance and possession. She destroys her devotee's enemies and detractors. The third one is Khañjī 'the One Who Limps'. She is also the goddess of the Transmission of the Aged according to the YKh. There she is called Śāmbhavī, Kubjikā's highest aspect and supreme iconic form (parāmūrti).[1] The goddess of this Transmission is the embodiment of emptiness and is 'very fierce'. Thus in most of the later visualizations she is generally identified with Kālī. As the Aged One, she limps as would an old woman. She also 'limps' because, as Kuṇḍalinī, she moves step by step through the Wheels of the subtle body. Her identity as Kuṇḍalinī, the energy of the vital breath, is implied in the KMT that declares that she controls it, frees from bondage and removes sin, all of which are visualized burning in the Doomsday Fire. This is the blazing energy of AIṀ, the goddess's seed-syllable, her Triangular Yoni. The three transmissions originate from here, generated by the descent of the goddess from the supreme plane of Kuleśvarī.[2] The KMT describes the Naked Kubjikā as follows:

> Form (rūpa) is the Transmission of the Sacred Seats (pīṭhakrama). (There) the goddess (shines with the) lustre of a blue cloud and collyrium. She has twelve arms and six faces. She is accompanied by six energies: Barbarā (the Barbarian), Ālakā (the Lock of Hair), Bṛhadodarā (Big Belly), Lamboṣṭhī (Long Lips), Stabdhākṣī (Fixed Gaze), and Viraladvijā (Few Teeth). The Naked (nagnā) Kubjikā, established in Form, is in the midst of the Transmission of the Child. Aflame with the Doomsday Fire, she is extremely fierce and frightening. The bestower of the divine Command, she can be approached (only) by means of the master's teaching.[3]

---

[1] See below, p. 180, with reference to YKh (1) 19/59ab.

[2] We can summerize the main features of the forms of the goddess of each of the transmissions in the following table.

3. Table of the Forms of the Goddess of the Transmissions according to the Kubjikāmata

Transmission	State	Goddess	Arms	Faces	Colour
	Rūpātīta	Kuleśvarī	-	-	-
Child	Rūpa	Nagna Kubjī	12	6	Blue
Youth	Pada	Mahāntārī	4	1
Aged	Piṇḍa	Khañjī	4	1

[3] KMT 17/15-17.

We notice that the form of the Goddess in this lineage has already developed two basic features that recur in later representations: her complexion is dark and she has six faces. Here it is not specified to which goddesses they belong as they are in later representations of the goddess of the Lineage of the Child. Perhaps at this stage the syncretism implicit in the later single form was not intended, just that between the three forms one with another. The number six fits with the goddess's general sixfold nature, which is most evident in the six parts (that is, groups of mantras) that make up her transmission (krama). Embodied in her transmission, she is most evidently 'sixfold' (ṣaṭprakarā) when the six parts are projected into her hexagonal maṇḍala. These, along with the standard set of six limbs of her Vidyā and her six faces, most effectively project her, part by part, around the triangular core of her maṇḍala and the Point in the centre where she resides undivided. But while these geometric amplifications of the goddess's body are elaborated extensively in the later literature, they are discernable in the KMT only as prototypes. Just as the goddess's maṇḍala has yet to become fully explicit, so too the goddess's iconic features are not fully formed. By identifying the six faces with those of six goddess, as the later sources do, and projecting them into the hexagram, they emanate from Kubjikā and envelop her even as they make her manifest in the fullness of her six aspects. At this stage she is simply accompanied by six Yoginīs. We are not told that they correspond to her faces. The only recognizable one amongst them is Barbarā who in the later literature is one of the six Yoginīs associated with the six limbs of the goddess's Vidyā.[1]

Kubjikā is said to be naked occasionally in the texts[2] but she is not commonly visualized naked. Perhaps we should associate this form with the naked, celibate (brahmacāriṇī) goddess Mitranātha, the founder of the Transmission of the Child, sees sitting in a fire performing austerities. According to the KRU this is how the goddess appears prior to her entry into the Liṅga.[3] And, it seems, that according to the myth of her origin recounted in the KMT, she is naked when she emerges out of it.[4]

---

[1] Cf. the epithets of the goddess of the Transmission of the Aged, described in YKh (1):

vikarālā mahāraudrā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -drāṁ] mahābhīmā [ṅ: -māṁ] bhayaṁkarī [k, kh, gh: -rāṁ; ṅ: -rīṁ] ||
koṭarākṣī [ṅ: -kṣīṁ] svapīṭhasthā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -sthāṁ] stabdhadṛṣṭiḥ [k, kh: stadhvadṛṣṭiṁ; gh: stadhvadṛṣṭiṁ; ṅ: stadvadṛṣṭiṁ] subhīṣaṇā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -ṇāṁ] | YKh (1) 19/72cd-73ab.

[2] Kubjikā is referred to as 'nagnavāsā' or 'nagnavāsasā' ('clothed in nakedness') no less than eight times in the KuKh. See note to Sanskrit text of KuKh 3/44d.

[3] See intro. vol. 2, p. 467.

[4] See intro. vol. 1, p. 38.

Mahāntārikā: the Goddess of the Lineage of the Youth

Mahāntarikā is the form of the goddess of the Transmission of the Youth. She has four arms and her Vidyā consists of twenty-five syllables, whereas the Vidyās described elsewhere are of fifteen and, most frequently, twenty-three syllables.[1] The visualization stresses that she is a goddess who penetrates and brings about possession. Her intense power, harnessed by the utterance of her Vidyā saves from both the sufferings of transmigration and aggression from enemies. Here then is another of many examples of how the Yoga of the Goddess has a dual function – soteriological and magical. This is because Mahāntārikā is Mahāmāyā who can exert her power to save or to bind. We have seen that as an independent goddess, she is Parā and 'pure Mālinī' and, as in the following description of her as the Kubjikā of this lineage, she sits in the midst of the Doomsday Fire at the summit of existence.[2] The KMT continues:

> In the midst of the Transmission of the Youth (the goddess) has one face and four arms. She holds a book, an ascetic's pot, rosary and makes a boon-bestowing gesture. Within the Doomsday Fire, her expression is serious (saumya) and she is very playful. Penetrating the three worlds, she is penetrated by great bliss. She is engaged in saving (tārayantī) (the fettered) from the great ocean of transmigratory existence. She is Mahāntārikā who has also become great here in the Transmission of the Youth. Taking her support from the scripture of the Vidyā, she destroys the flux of the fetters. Just by uttering (her Vidyā) adamantine clubs and (even) mountains are rent asunder. She is Mahāntārī, the Weapon of the Vidyā of twenty-five (syllables). She is accomplished by the flux of (the energies of the) letters. She is the supreme (goddess) who brings about possession (just) by being uttered (uccārāveśinī). One who lacks devotion, he who is hateful, fixed in (false) doctrine or anyone else (who is against the true teaching) – all (such) are brought low by one who, angered, has this (goddess) in (his) heart. This Supreme Goddess (Parameśvarī) is attained by the Yoga established in Pada.[3]

---

[1] See above, p. 77, note 5.
[2] See above, p. 80-81, reference from KMT 19/38-40.
[3] KMT 17/18-24ab.

Khañjikā: the Goddess of the Lineage of the Aged

As Khañjikā, the goddess of this Transmission is Kubjikā herself for Khañjikā is just another name for Kubjikā.[1] Their complete identity is confirmed by the fact that the Vidyā here is the one of thirty-two syllables which is the basic one (samayā) of the goddess Kubjikā. Khañjī is the 'bent over' goddess (kubjā) Kujā who resonates with the 'indistinct', that is, 'unstruck' sound of the great fire of Saṁvartā with which AIṀ, the goddess's seed-syllable, is ablaze.[2] We shall see that the MBT also teaches that Khañjikā is the goddess of this lineage because she is Kubjikā's supreme form.[3]

> One should penetrate the body (piṇḍa) quickly. Listen now, O Kubjinī, (as I tell you about the goddess) who is established in Piṇḍa (Yoga). She is in the centre of the Transmission of the Aged. She is subtle (laghurūpa) and very brilliant (sutejasā). She has two arms and one face and, established in the Body (piṇḍasthā), her nature is that of (her) consort (pati). She is the goddess who takes the life-breath from the fettered and cuts through the net of (their) fetters. She controls all sins and is the supreme bestower of wisdom. She is as described before at the climax of Form and endowed with (all good) qualities. Endowed with the limbs of the Vidyā, know her to be established in (the Yoga of) Piṇḍa. Endowed with the thirty-two syllables (of the Vidyā), she is enveloped in (its) six limbs. What is said to be the lineage of Karma, bears fruit here in due order. The goddess makes mantras successful. Supreme, she makes (the Yoga of) the Body successful.
>
> (The yogi thus) attains omniscience by the Yoga of the Doomsday Fire. Bearing the form of bliss and established in (AIṀ) the 'bent over' (kubja) (seed-syllable) of the Doomsday Fire, she makes indistinct sounds (kūjate). Thus the subtle Khañjikā (the 'Lame One') in the form of the Jewel (of Kuṇḍalinī)[4] is called Kubjikā.[5]

---

[1] See KMT 3/36.
[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 302-303.
[3] See below, p. 171.
[4] Concerning Kuṇḍalinī as the 'Jewel' in the navel centre – the City of Jewels – see KuKh 13/98cd-99, n. 79.
[5] KMT 17/24cd-30.

The Forms of the Goddess according to the Kularatnoddyota

Chapter eight of the Kularatnoddyota describes the three forms of the goddess, one for each lineage, in two aspects, supreme and gross. These forms are visualized and experienced internally as the goddess rises through the psychic centres (cakra) of the adept's body. Although the text does not tell us so directly, it is clear from the context that the first two are aspects of the goddess in the Transmission of the Child. The supreme aspect of the Goddess is her Formless (amūrta), most essential metaphysical identity. The other aspect – which the Tantra simply calls the 'second one' – is gross in relation to the first one. Even so, it is not an iconic form of the Goddess. It is the 'form' of the goddess present in the Wheels of the body beginning from the lowest one. The last form of the goddess, as she appears in the Transmission of the Aged, represents her in the Wheel of the Command. One would expect the goddess at this higher level to have a more subtle form, but, on the contrary, at this stage she has the complex iconic form which in other sources is normally associated with the Transmission of the Child.

The entire scheme appears at first sight to be upside down with respect to the others we find in the Kubjikā sources. This is because it is based on a different structural principle. As usual, the goddess's form is triadic, but in this case the triad is supreme, subtle and gross, rather than the other way around. The first two forms are those of the Transmission of the Child. The third is that of the Youth and the Aged. However, this scheme is obscured by the compulsion to follow a more basic one in which the goddess has two aspects. In the first, called subtle or supreme, the goddess appears in her essential energetic, abstract nature. The second is the gross, outer iconic form. From the perspective of the first scheme these two are treated together as the gross form with respect to the first two.

The Supreme and Subtle Form of the Goddess of the Transmission of the Child

Neither of the two forms of the goddess in the Transmission of the Child are iconic. The first is her transcendental aspect. But we should not mistake it for the undifferentiated (niṣkala) one. This is the goddess's formless (nirākāra), pervasive presence which is the supreme form of her differentiated (sakala) aspect. The undifferentiated aspect is a contemplative state. It is a perception of non-duality which is understood to be a positive, referable experience and so is, as the text says 'with form' (mūrta) although its 'form' is formlessness. It is the blissful universal presence of the goddess who 'faces in all directions'.

The second form of the goddess is her immanent pervasive presence as Kuṇḍalinī in the Wheels (cakra) of the subtle body. In this transmission Kuṇḍalinī is the more 'gross' of the two forms. In the other two transmissions she is the subtle form in relation to the 'gross' iconic forms of the goddess. In the first transmission Kuṇḍalinī is tranquil and pervasive – mirroring in the body the outer pervasive presence of the goddess in her supreme state. In the second transmission, Kuṇḍalinī is rising and merging into Emptiness. In the Transmission of the Aged Kuṇḍalinī resides in the Wheel of the Command and moves through the body in the flow of the vital breath as Divine Sound (nāda). As the god says to the goddess in the Kularatnoddyota:

> O beloved, one should recollect that you and I are present in the Six Wheels by means of special, individual meditations (dhyāna) beginning with the one without form (nirākāra).
>
> The supreme form (rūpa) is flawless, pervasive and facing everywhere. It can be perceived as the bliss of contemplation (bhāvanā), the mark of which is supreme bliss. Free of the qualities of form and the rest and devoid of limiting adjuncts (upādhi) and meditation (dhyāna) - this, O fair one, is the non-dual vision of you directly apparent (pratyakṣadarśana). This is the supreme meditation (dhyāna) with form (mūrta) whose characteristic is that it is without form (amūrta). You are in this way supreme, subtle, pervasive, and facing in all directions.
>
> The second (form) is called the Coiled One (kuṇḍalā) who resides equally in the (Wheel of the) Foundation and (the other Wheels) above.[1]

The Subtle and Gross Forms of Kubjikā in the Transmission of the Youth

The previous form of Kuṇḍalinī is pervasive and tranquil. This one is dynamic. Fiery and blazing with her immense power, she breaks through the Wheels and merges into the transcendental emptiness beyond the body and

---

[1] cakraṣaṭkagatā [ṅ: -tāt] smaryā [ṅ: maryā] tvaṁ priye sahitā mayā [gh: priye] ||
*nirākārādirūpaiś ca pṛthakdhyānaviśeṣaṇaiḥ [g, c: -ṣanaiḥ; ch: dhyānavi * * ?] |
paraṁ nirāmayaṁ rūpaṁ vyāpakaṁ sarvatomukham [g: sarvatāmukhaṁ] ||
bhāvanānandasaṁvedyaṁ [gh: -bhūtaṁ + vedyaṁ] paramānandalakṣaṇam [g: -rakṣaṇaṁ] |
rūpādiguṇanirmuktaṁ upādhidhyānavarjitam [g: upādidyāna-; ṅ: upāvidhyāna-] ||
advayedaṁ [all MSs: dvitīyedaṁ] varārohe tava pratyakṣadarśanam [gh: -yaṁ] |
etad eva paraṁ dhyānaṁ mūrtaṁ cāmūrtalakṣaṇam ||
tvaṁ tathā paramā sūkṣmā vyāpinī [ṅ: -ṇī] sarvatomukhī [k, g, ch: -mukhā; gh, c: -mukham] |
dvitīyā kuṇḍalākhyā tu ādhārordhvasamāśrayā [kh: ārordhva-; g: ādhārorddhasa-] ||
KRU 8/23cd-27.

becomes one with it. It is subtle because it is connected with the body and supreme because it moves out beyond it into transcendence. The KRU continues:

> You have a third form which is present (in the Transmission of) the Youth (kumāra) and ends with (that of) the Aged (sthavira). You will be in a form that can be contemplated (dheya) by means of this very form. Consisting of great energy (mahātejas) and, inflammed, it blazes with incomparable qualities. O mother of Kula, it illumines the great meditation within the body.
>
> (This form of the goddess) breaks through the Wheels by means of (her) great mass of rays that are to the side, above and below. Issuing forth from the Door of Brahmā, she has become one (samarasīgatā) in the supreme, pure and unsupported Void (vyoman). O Kubjeśī, you should be contemplated in this way residing in the Transmission of the Youth.[1]

The Gross Forms

As we move through the three transmissions, the goddess ages. In her supreme form in the Transmission the Child she is, as it were, still in the womb of the Unmanifest but already within the realm of manifestation as a pure, blissful pervasive presence. In her subtle form in that transmission she is similarly pervasive but now more developed, as it were, in the body as the subtle presence of Kuṇḍalinī. In her subtle form in the Transmission of the Youth she courses through the body and gloriously fresh and youthful bursts out of it to merge into Emptiness. In this transmission the goddess has reached the maturity of a full iconic form blooming with the beauty of youth. She is not concerned with magical control and reprisal of injustice as are her fierce forms. Instead, joyful and

---

[1] tṛtīyā mūrtibhūtāsi kumārasthavirāvadhiḥ [all MSs: -vadhiṁ] |
anenaiva tu rūpeṇa [k, kh, c: rūpena] dhyeyarūpā [g: madhorū-] bhaviṣyasi [g: -ṣyati] || *mahātejomayī [ṅacānye: -yā] dīptā anaupamyaguṇojjvalā [k, ch: āropamyaguṇojvalā; kh: ālopamyaguṇaujvalā; g: anaupamyaguṇojvalā; gh: ālopamyaguṇo ? rāḥ; ṅ: atopamyaguṇojvarā; c: ano-] |
dyotayantī [k, kh, gh, ch: ghātayantī; g: dyātayanti] mahādhyānaṁ śarīrasthaṁ kulāmbike || *mahāraśmisamūhaiś ca [k, kh, c: mahārasmi-; ṅ: mahā * smisamūhaiś caiva]*
tiryagūrdhvamadhogataiḥ [k: tiryagūrdvamadhogataiḥ; kh: tiryagūrdvamadhaugataiḥ; g: tiryagūrddhamadho-; gh: -gate] |
bhedayantī [kh, gh, c: -yanti] ca cakrāṇi [kh, c: vakṣāni; g, gh: vaktrāṇi] brahmadvāravinirgatā [ṅ: vrahmadhāra-] ||
nirāśraye pare [g: parā] vyomni śuddhe samarasīgatā [gh: samarasaṁgatā] |
evaṁ dhyeyāsi [k: dhyeyāśi; kh, c: dheyāsi] kubjeśi [k, kh, ṅ: kubjesi] yuvānakramasaṁsthitā [gh, c: -tam] || KRU 8/28-31.

tranquil, she fulfils all desires and ultimately grants the liberated state of Flight and with it access to the congregation of the liberated Skyfarers in the Void of the Supreme Principle. The form of the goddess in this transmission is not named. Presumably her thirty-two syllable Vidyā is that of Kubjikā, but her attributes indicate that she is a combination of two goddesses. One is Kāmeśvarī, who is suggested by the bow and five arrows she holds. The other is Parā, suggested by the rosary and the book. The KRU continues:

> That (was) the subtle, supreme visualization (dhyāna). (Now) listen to the gross one with limbs. O Kaulinī, I will tell you without doubt (what it is) as you (yourself) know it (to be).
>
> (The gross form has) five faces, ten arms and, pure (svacchā), it has a smiling face. The face of the goddess is completely full (of light and joy) and she shines with (her) beautiful teeth and lips. She has beautiful eyebrows and nose and long eyes. (Her) hair is tied together in a topknot (śikhā). She has beautiful ears, hands and cheeks and is adorned with beautiful earrings (kuṇḍala). She has beautiful arms, throat and heart and her breasts are fat and upraised. The middle part (of her belly) is crinkled with three (charming) folds and she is adorned with a line of hair (that travels down from the navel). Her stomach is thin, navel, deep set and thighs large. (Her) hips and knees are very soft. She has beautiful thighs and red finger (nails) that are very beautiful. She (wears) beautiful cloths, a divine garland and an excellent shawl. (She wears) a necklace made of large gems, bangles on her limbs, anklets and a blazing diadem of rubies (māṇikya). O supreme mistress, adorned with divine rings (on her fingers), she sits on a svastika (as her) seat.[1]

---

[1] etat sūkṣmaṁ paraṁ dhyānaṁ sthūlaṁ [kh: sthūla; ṅ: sthūraṁ] sāvayavaṁ [k: māvayava] śṛṇu | kathayāmi na sandeho yathā jānāsi kaulini ||
pañcavaktrā [k: -vaktrāṁ] daśabhujā [k, g, ṅ, ch: -bhujāṁ] svacchā [gacānye: svacchāṁ] prahasitānanā [k: prasasitānanāṁ; kh: prahasitāṁnanāṁ; g: pradasitānamām; all others: -nām] |
saṁpūrṇavadanā [gānye: -nāṁ] devī [k, ch: devīṁ] cārudantoṣṭhabhāṣiṇī [k, c, ch: -bhāṣiṇīṁ; kh: cārudantoṣabhāṣiṇīṁ; g: cārudantoḥmabhāṣiṇī] ||
*subhrūḥ [ghānye: subhru; gh: su ?] sunāsā [k, kh: sanāsā; gh: -sāṁ; c: sunāmā] dīrghākṣī [k: dīrghāṁkṣīṁ; gh, ṅ: -kṣīṁ] śikhākuñcitamūrdhajā [k, gh: snikhā-; kh, c: sniścā-; k kh: -jāma; g: mnidhyāku~citemūrddhajāṁ; ṅ: siścāścakuṁcitamūrddhajāṁ; ch: -jām] |
sukarṇapāṇigaṇḍā [kh: -pāśiga; g: suvarṇa-; gh: ṣaṭkarṇa-; sarvānye: -gaṁḍāṁ] ca [g, gh: ñca] cārukuṇḍalabhūṣitā [khānye: -tāṁ; kh: -bhūṣitī] ||
subāhukaṇṭhahṛdayā [gaghānye: -yāṁ] pīnnonatapayodharā [all MSs: -rāṁ; ch: pīnonata-] | [gh: missing]
trivalītaraṅgamadhyā [all MSs: -madhyāṁ] tu romarājīvibhūṣitā [ghaṅānye: -tāṁ] || [gh: missing]
kṣāmodarā [gānye: -rāṁ] nimnanābhir bṛhajjaghanamaṇḍalā [k, kh: -bhi bṛhajjaṅghanamaṇḍalāṁ; g: -bhibṛhajjānagha- -lām; gh, ch: -nābhiṁ bṛhajaghana- -lāṁ; ṅ: nimnābhi- -lām; c: -nābhi- -lāṁ] |

She makes boon bestowing and fear dispelling gestures and (holds) a rosary, book, noose, goad, large bow, and five arrows in her hands. She makes the gesture of knowledge and holds a large vessel filled with wine (vāmāmṛta). O great goddess! Delighted with supreme bliss, she causes the entire universe to melt. (This is how) you should be visualized in the Transmission of the Youth (yuvākrama).

O goddess, (this form) bestows all fruits and gives (both) worldly enjoyment and liberation and accomplishes all (one's) goals. She destroys all suffering and drags (away all) disturbance. She bestows tranquillity, fulfillment and accomplishment. She bestows flight (khecara) and the rest as well as the most divine gathering in the circle (of initiates) (cakramelaka). O beloved, she bestows the cosmic form and whatever desire (kāma) and wealth (one may) wish for. You will thus be the object of adoration (pujyā) by means of the Vidyā of thirty-two syllables.[1]

---

*sukumārorujānukā [k: sukāmarorujā * ka; kh, c: sukamārorujāruka; g: kusumārorujānūka; gh: sukamālorujāruka9 ṅ, ch: -ka] sujaṅghā [gh: sujaṅghāṁ] cāruṇāṅgulī [k, kh: caraṇāṁgulīṁ; ṅ, c, ch: -līṁ]* ||
*sunakhā [k, gh, ch: sunakhāṁ; kh: sucakhāṁ; c: suraṣāṁ] ca suveśā [k: suveśāṁ; kh: suceṣāṁ; g, ch: -ṣāṁ; gh: su *? khāṁ; ṅ: -sāṁ; c: sureṣāṁ] ca divyamālā [k, kh, c, ch: -mālyāṁ; gh: * ? mālyāṁ; ṅ: -mālyā] varacchadā [all MSs: varacchadāṁ] |
mahāratnāvalīhārakaṭakāṅgadanūpurā [k, kh, c, ch: -rāṁ; g: -hāla- -rām; gh: -kāṇḍadanupurāṁ; ṅ: -varīhāra- -rāṁ] ||
jvalanmukuṭamāṇikyā [k, kh: -sya; g, ṅ, c, ch: -ṇikya] divyaiś caivāṅgulīyakaiḥ [kakhānye: divyaiścaivāṅgu-]|
śobhitā [k, kh, c, ch: -tāṁ; ṅ: sobhitāṁ] parameśāni [ṅ: -sāni] svastikāsanasaṁsthitā [k, kh, g, ṅ, gh, c, ch: -tāṁ] || KRU 8/32-38.

[1] varadābhayahastā [k, kh: -hastāś; all others: -hastāñ] ca sākṣasūtrakapustikā [g: -trasupustakāṁ; all others: -kāṁ] |
pāśāṅkuśamahācāpabāṇapañcakarā [kh, c: -karaṁ; other MSs: -karāṁ] tathā ||
jñānamudrā mahāpātraṁ [sarve: -tra] vāmāmṛtaprapūritam [kh, c: vāmārita-; gh: vāmāritaprapūritām] |
dhārayantī [ṅ: -yanti] mahādevi [g: rmahā-; ṅ: -devī] paramānandananditā [k, kh, c, ch: -tāṁ; g: -ndamanditām; gh: -nandinīṁ; ṅ: -taṁ] ||
drāvayantī [g, gh: -ntīñ] jagat sarvaṁ [g: sarvatvaṁ] dhyātavyā tvaṁ [g:] yuvākrame [k, kh, ch: -kramam]* |
aśeṣaphaladā [k, kh, gh: -dāṁ] devi [ṅ: devī] bhuktimuktiprasādhanī [gh: -nīm] ||
sarvārthasādhanī caiva [gh: cāva] aśeṣārtivināśinī |
kṣobhākṛṣṭikarī śāntipuṣṭidā siddhidā tathā ||
khecarādimahādivyacakramelakadāyinī |
yathāvāñchitakāmārthaviśvarūpatvadā [gh: -viśvaṁrūpa-] priye ||
bhaviṣyasi tathā pūjyā dvātriṁśākṣaravidyayā | KRU 8/39-44ab.

Kubjikā of the Transmission of the Youth

The Subtle Form of the Goddess of the Transmission of the Aged

The aspect of Kuṇḍalinī, which is the subtle form of the previous transmission, blazes through the Wheels, rising beyond them. The form in this transmission is lower and so remains within the body. Therefore, it is a 'subtle' form (mūrti) of the goddess, rather than supreme. Nonetheless, Kuṇḍalinī is in the most elevated part of the subtle body within the physical body. This is the Wheel of the Command that enshrines the Transmental which is the goddess's essential nature and serves as the vehicle that leads beyond into the Supreme State. The Command as Kuṇḍalinī resides there in the form of the blissful and powerful Divine Sound (nāda) that pervades the whole of the body through the movement of the Divine Breath (haṁsa). Grounded in her transcendental (niṣkala) nature she moves in her immanent (sakala) aspect through the body. Thus this, the 'subtle' form of the goddess at the 'grossest' level, the third transmission, is immanent with a touch of transcendence. The KRU continues:

> (Now) listen, O goddess, to how you should be contemplated (dhyātavyā) in the Transmission of the Aged. Residing in the Wheel you bear a form (mūrti) according to the distinction between gross and subtle. Residing in the middle of the Wheel of the Command, (you) burn with radiant rays (of energy). Inflammed, (you) possess garlands of flames and, of the nature of Sound, (you are) without fault (nirāmayā). Seated within the movement of Haṁsa (the vital breath), (you) possess manifest energies (sakalā) (while) residing in the unmanifest (niṣkalā). (You are) satisfied with the bliss of the Command and have made the Wheel of the Command (your) seat as (you) fill (everything) all around with the resounding sounds (nināda) of Sound (nāda) and Resonance (dhvani). (You) fill (the body) from the soles of the feet up to the end of the head with the powerful sounds (of mantras).[1]

---

[1] yathā [gh: tathā] vṛddhakrame [g: vṛddhaṁkrame; gh: -maṁ] devi dhyātavyāsi tathā śṛṇu ||
sthūlasūkṣmavibhāgena [k: sthala-] cakrasthā mūrtidhāriṇī |
ājñācakrasya madhyasthā [gh: + vi] visphuratkiraṇojjvalā [k, kh, g, ch: -jvalā; gh: viśphurātkanakojvalā; ṅ: -jvarā] ||
jvālāmālākulā [ṅ: jvārāmārākurā] dīptā nādarūpā nirāmayā |
haṁsacārāntamāsīnā [g: -sīnāṁ] sakalā niṣkalāśrayā [kh, c: niṣkarāmayā; g: niskalā-; gh: niḥkalāmalā] ||
ājñānandena [kh: -nadana] saṁtṛptā [gh: saṁdīptā] ājñācakrakṛtāsanā |
nādadhvanininādaiś ca pūrayantī [g: pūjayantī] samantataḥ ||
āpādatalamūrdhāntaṁ [k: -mūrdhnāntaṁ; kh: -mūdhnātra; g, gh: -lamūrddhānta; c: -mūrddhajāṁ] pūrayantī mahatsvanaiḥ [kh: madasvataiḥ; gh, c: madasvanaiḥ] | KRU 8/44cd-48ab.

Kubjikā of the Transmission of the Aged

The Gross Form of the Goddess of the Transmission of the Aged

The Aged One is the Old Hag. She wears the Five Insignias[1] of a Kāpālika as do other forms of Kubjikā. She is a black, emaciated Cāmuṇḍā type of Kālī, who is engaged in devouring the universe. Even so, her six faces, the snakes that adorn her and, especially, her 'slightly bent' back unmistakably characterize her as Kubjikā. Notice that even in this, the most 'gross' of all her forms, her inner condition, which is 'penetrated by the bliss of the Command' is not ignored.

> That, O goddess, is said to be the subtle (form), now listen to the gross one. She possesses every limb and is endowed with a visualized form (dhyāna) whose (basic) reality (artha) is clear. She is (black) like sliced collyrium and hair is brown and (tied in the) foreign (barbara) (style). The eyes are stern. Showing (her) teeth (daṁṣṭrālī), they (are as if) burning. The eyebrows are brown and the goddess bears the Five Insignias (pañcamudrā) and shines with the skull that decorates (her). The great conch (she holds) makes her proud and the beauty (rūpa) of her crown enhances her beauty. (She is) adorned with a garland of severed heads that extends from the soles of the feet up to (her) neck. She drips with the blood that flows (from the heads) and is fatigued by the weight of her (dangling) rocking hair. Very fierce, she destroys (the universe) by licking (it up). She has big teeth (karāla) and a thin stomach. She has long (dangling) breasts and a large chest. Her furious form is (lean) without flesh. She has six faces and twelve arms and her back is slightly bent.[2]

---

[1] The form described in chapter 29 of the KuKh also bears the insignia. However, there she is the goddess of the Transmission of the Child.

[2] *sūkṣmam etat samākhyātaṁ sthūlaṁ [gh: ? laṁ] devi ataḥ śṛṇu ||
sarvāvayavasaṁpannā [k, kh, g, ṅ, ch: -nnaṁ; gh: -saṁpūrṇaṁ] sphuṭārthadhyānasaṁyutā [k: sphuṭārthaṁ -taṁ; kh, ch: sphūṭārthaṁ dhyānasaṁyutaṁ; g, gh, ṅ, c: -yutam] |
bhinnāñjanasamaprakhyā [all MSs: -khyāṁ] piṅgabarbaramūrdhajā [all MSs except Ch: -jāṁ] ||
koṭarākṣī [k, c: -rāṁkṣī; gh, ṅ, ch: -kṣīṁ] jvaladdvijā [k, c: ujvaladvijāṁ; kh: ukṣaladvijāṁ; g: jvalajjihvā; gh: jvalajihvāṁ; ṅ: jvaladvijāṁ] daṁṣṭrālī [g, c: daṣṭrālī] piṅgalabhruvā [kh: piṅgabhrūvāṁ; g: -bhrūvā; others: -vāṁ] |
pañcamudrādharā [k, g: -dharāṁ] devī [k, ch: devīṁ; gh: devi] kapālābharaṇojjvalā [all MSs: -ṇojvalāṁ] ||
*mahāśaṅkhakṛtāṭopā [k, kh, g, ṅ: -pa; c: -kṛtāṭṭopa] kirīṭīrūpaśobhitā [all MSs: -tāṁ; ṅ: -rū * sobhi-]* | [gh: ?]
āpādatalakaṇṭhāntamuṇḍamālāvibhūṣitā [k, kh: -ntaṁ; ṅ, ch: -tāṁ; g, c: -ntaṁmuṇḍa- -tām] ||
*sravadrudhiraniṣyandā [k, ṅ, c: śravadrudhiranisyanda; kh: śravajradhiranisyanda; g: -nispanda; gh: sravajradharaniṣpaṁdā; ch: śravadru ?nispaṁda] lulatkeśabharālasā [ṅ: -bhalālasāṁ; other MSs: -sāṁ] |

She holds a skull, dagger, javelin and ascetic's staff. Fierce, she holds a knife, a great noose and sword. (She also holds) a thunderbolt, spear, bow, arrows and double-headed drum. Her neck is adorned with the great lord of snakes. She wears a snake as a sacred thread and (her) girdle is tied with that also. She is adorned with the thousand-headed lord of the snakes (who is) on (her) head. Snakes are (her) anklets and bangles. Her topknot (śikhā) has the form of a burning fire and scorpions are (her) rings. She makes the Great Sound (of mantra) and, very powerful, she makes (the worlds) tremble. She is powerfully penetrated by the bliss of the Command and, wearing a human skin as a shawl and (human) skin (as clothing), she resides in the sequence of the eighty-one (syllable mantra).[1] O fair one, such is the visualized form (dhyāna) there will be in the aged state. The Vidyā here is Mahāmāyā[2] whose form is sixteen syllables.[3]

---

lelihānā [all MSs: -nāṁ] mahāraudrā [k, g, gh, ch: -raudrāṁ] karālā [k, kh, c, ch: -lāṁ; gh: karābhyāṁlāṁ; ṅ: kalālaṁ] nimnatodarā [k, kh: nimno-; c: nimnano-; all MSs: -rāṁ] ||
lambastanī [k, gh, ṅ, c: -nīṁ; kh: nimbastanīṁ] bṛhadvakṣā [sarve: -kṣāṁ] nirmāṁsā [g: nirmā-; ch: ?; sarve: -sāṁ] vikaṭākṛtiḥ [g, gh: -kṛtiṁ; ṅ: -kṛti] |
ṣaḍvaktrā [all MSs except G: ṣaṭvaktrāṁ] dvādaśabhujā [all MSs: -jāṁ] kiñcinnamitakandharā [ṅ: kiṁcinamitakandha-; all MSs: -rāṁ] || [gh: missing from here to 56] KRU 8/48cd-53.

[1] The mantra of eighty-one syllables (ekāśiti) is that of the goddess's consort. He may be Śiva, whose mantra is called Vyomavyāpin and is well known in the Siddhānta Āgamas. More likely it is Svacchandabhairava's mantra of eighty-one syllables, which is derived from the nine letters of his seed-sllable Navātman. The goddess 'resides' in the sequence of the syllables of the god's mantra, by combining the syllables of her Vidyā with it. Thus the goddess unites with the god.

[2] I suppose that the Vidyā of Mahāmāyā is the Samayā Vidyā, the thirty-two syllables of which are grouped in pairs. See KuKh 9/28 ff..

[3] kapālakartṛkāhastā [all MSs: -hastāṁ] śūlakhaṭvāṅgadhāriṇī [k, g, ch: -dhāriṇīṁ; ṅ: -ṇi] |
kaṭṭārikakarā [all MSs: -karāṁ] raudrā [all MSs: raudrāṁ] mahāpāśāsidhāriṇī [kh: -pāśāsi-; ṅ: -pāsāni-; ch: -pāsāsid-; others: -ṇīṁ] ||
vajraṁ [all except MS G: vajra] śaktirdhanurbāṇaṁ [kh: śakti- -śa; ch: śakti-; others: śakti- -ṇa] anyad [k, kh: anyaṁ; ṅ: śakhaṇḍa] ḍamarukaṁ [k, kh: ṭṭamarukaṁ] tathā |
mahāphaṇīndrahāreṇa [k, kh: -phalīndra-; ṅ: -na] kaṇṭhadeśopaśobhitā [k, kh: -deso-; g, ṅ, c, ch: -tām] ||
nāgayajñopavītī [kh, g, c: -vītāṁ] ca tenaiva [g, gh, ṅ, c: -vā] baddhamekhalā [anye: -lāṁ; ṅ: -rām] | [ch: ?]
*sahasraśirasā [ṅ, ch: -sirasā] mūrdhni [k, kh: mūrdhn; g, ṅ, c, ch: mūrddhni; gh: mūrddhna] pannagendreṇa [kh: pannagendrala; gh: -gendre ; c: pannagaindrala] bhūṣitā [all MSs: -tāṁ] ||
nāganūpurakeyūragonāsakṛtakaṅkaṇā [k: -goṇāsa- -ṇāṁ; kh: gauśāsa- -ṇāṁ; g: nāganūpurakeyūragoṇāsakṛtakaṁkaṇām; gh, c, ch: -goṇāsakṛtakaṁkaṇāṁ; ṅ: -ṇaṁ] |
jvaladvahniśikhākārā vṛścikair aṅgulīyakam [k, kh, g, c, ch: -kām; gh: -kārāṁ vṛścikair aṁlīyakāṁ; ṅ: -sikhākālavṛścikailaṁgulīyakāṁ] ||
unnadantī [k: unnadatīṁ; kh, c: unnadatī; gh: -tīṁ] mahārāvaṁ [k, kh, c: -rāvāṁ; g: madārāvaṁ] prakampantī [k, g: prakampantīṁ; gh: prakalpaṁtī] mahābalā [all MSs: -lāṁ] |
ājñānandamahāviṣṭā [g, gh, c, ch: -ṣṭāṁ] naracarmottarīyakā [all MSs: -kāṁ] ||

The Four Forms of Kubjikā according to the Yogakhaṇḍa of the Manthānabhairavatantra

The following descriptions of the goddess are drawn from the Dhyānasūtra of the Yogakhaṇḍa of the Manthānabhairavatantra. It is divided into four sub-sections, each of which are also sūtras that describe the goddess's four forms. The three forms corresponding to the three transmissions are now fully developed icons and their association with Yogic states is no longer a primary feature. Two of them are essentially, apart from a few details, the same as we find in the KuKh. Indeed, the passages describing their forms in the KuKh are drawn wholesale from the YKh. However, they are not described together and no mention is made of their association with the transmissions. Chapter 29 of the KuKh is dedicated to the goddess of the Transmission of the Child. The other is Ciñciṇī, the Sweeper (mātaṅginī), who presides over the Transmission of the Youth and is described at the beginning of chapter 68 of the KuKh.[1]

Although the KuKh is well aware of the three forms of the goddess and does not ignore them, it prefers to concentrate on the first one. This is the goddess of the Transmission of the present Age, that is, the Transmission of the Child. The KuKh stresses her association with Kāmarūpa, the seat where the teachings are revealed in this Age. She is identified specifically with Kāmeśvarī, the goddess of the 'sacred seat of Passion'.[2] The universe is pervaded by desire (icchā) and is born of passion (kāma). Accordingly, this is the form that, more than any other, is associated with the Yoni and hence with the most essential nature and creative activity of the goddess.

As the goddess of the Transmission of this Age, this form is generally considered to be the most important, or at least the most characteristic one. Thus, it is this one we find described in the Agnipurāṇa[3] in a passage drawn from a

---

tathā tvacaparīdhānā [all MSs: tacca-; sarve: -nāṁ] ekāśītikrame [g: mekāśītikrame] sthitā [all MSs: -tāṁ] |
evaṁ [gh: ekaṁ] dhyānaṁ varārohe vṛddhabhāve [g: vṛrddha-] bhaviṣyati || vidyā [all MSs: vidyāṁ] cātra [ṅ: catra] mahāmāyā [all except G and Gh: -māyāṁ] ṣoḍaśākṣaravigrahā [gh: -kṣaraviyuktā?; ṅ: -ham; others: -hāṁ] | KRU 8/54-60ab.

[1] KuKh 68/1-24ab = YKh (1) 19/34-57cd.

[2] KuKh 29/4-5.

[3] All of chapter 144 of the AP is dedicated to Kubjikā. There her visualized form is described as follows:

(She) is dark blue like the leaf of a blue lotus. She has six faces and six aspects (ṣaṭprakārikā). She is the energy of consciousness and has eighteen eyes and twelve arms. She is seated comfortably on a lion throne (siṁhāsana) and is on top of a lotus and a ghost (pretapadma). She is rich with millions of Kulas. (The snake) Karkoṭa is (her) girdle. Takṣaka is above (him) and so on the throat (of the goddess). Vāsuki is (her) necklace. Kulika is on her two ears. (The snake) Kūrma is (her) earring. Padma and Mahāpadma are (her) eyebrows. In the left (row of hands she Kubjikā Tantra. Indeed, the wording is so close that it is possible that the AP drew it from some version of the YKh. However, there are a few important omissions. The names of the deities of the goddess's six faces are not mentioned, although the colours are in most cases the same. The few significant differences or additions have been noted in the notes. The text is virtually the same as the one we find in the KuKh, which drew it from the YKh. The same is the case with the following form. We reproduce the passage here so we may conveniently observe them together in their original context.

As these two forms are those of the goddess related to the Transmission of the Child and the Middle One, we may safely suppose that the third one described in the KuKh presides over the Transmission of the Aged.[1] In this form, according to the KuKh, Kubjikā is Juṣṭacaṇḍālinī, a woman of the lowest caste. Like the previous form, she too is a sweeper and rude barbarian (barbarā).[2] Although, she is aged (jarjarā), dark blue, red and crooked, unlike the Aged Kubjikā of YKh (1), who is shockingly fierce, she is slim and 'very beautiful'.[3] She dances 'mad with ecstasy' in a circle of fire representing her identity as the Doomsday Fire.[4]

Although the Kubjikā Tantras describe the iconic forms of deities, they do not prescribe how they should be made or drawn. The forms of the deities, it seems, are just visualized mentally. The abstract figure of the maṇḍala, into which the Krama is projected, is the only visible form of the deity. The Nepalese Newars, who produce and worship an immense number of iconic forms, worship their Kula goddesses in a Yantra. The highest forms are aniconic. Visual representation somehow 'degrades' the Kaula Goddess. However, her form is not visualized just to replace the missing outer icon with a mental one. It serves, holds) a snake, skull, rosary, ascetic's staff, conch and book. In the right (row of hands she holds) a trident, mirror, sword, a jewel necklace, goad and a bow. The upper (-most) face of the goddess is white (śveta). The other upper (face) is also white (śveta). The eastern face is yellow (pāṇḍura) and angry. The southern one is black (kṛṣṇa). The northern one (is white) like snow, a jasmine flower and the moon. Brahmā is on the soles of (her) feet. Viṣṇu is on the shanks (of her legs). Rudra is in (her) heart and Īśvara in (her) throat. Sadāśiva is on her forehead and Śiva is located above him. Kubjikā should be visualized thus, vibrantly inebrated (āghūrṇitā), in the course of (all) rituals, including the rite of adoration and the rest. AP 144/30cd-37.

---

[1] This form is described in a sūtra which has been inserted into the text (Ibid. 49/41cd-42). One wonders why the redactor of the KuKh did not draw it from the YKh (1). Is this because it is an original sūtra of the KuKh?

[2] Ibid. 49/27cd-29, 36.

[3] Ibid. 49/38cd-40ab.

[4] The KuKh says that Juṣṭacaṇḍālī should be visualized in the form of the Doomsday Fire (49/24cd-25ab). Could this be the basic identity of this form of Kubjikā?

Juṣṭacaṇḍālinī

above all, to prepare the officiator to perform the rite. The form of the goddess in the Lineage of the Child, which is the most important one in the KuKh, is presented at the culmination of a long exposition of the main mantras and Vidyās (chapters 18 to 27) and then the Kramas themselves (chapter 28). The devotee is directed to think that the goddess is the 'subtle Transmental energy within the worlds'[1] and so is essentially pervasive and formless. Even so, he should not start to worship the Krama unless the goddess has been clearly visualized first.[2] In the same way, the KuKh stresses that the second form should be visualized within one's own body in order to worship the Krama. As our text says:

> One who does not have (knowledge of) the visualized form of (the goddess) Kujā and is without (access) to Kujā's tradition is a fettered and impure soul. The Vidyā and the Kramamaṇḍala – all is useless and the hereafter is uncertain for such a one wherever he may worship the Transmission. As long as one does not worship (and serve) the Kula, how can one (experience) pervasion within (this), the Śāmbhava Kula?[3]

Similarly, the third form is associated with the inner, mental sacrifice (antaryāga).[4] Merged initially in the Great Void of the one transcendental reality, the goddess flows through the Cavity of Brahmā and rains down a torrent of nectar into the body.[5] Her form is described just before the worship of the Transmission (kramārcana)[6] in order to induce this purifying flow of nectar.

Kubjikā of the Transmission of the Child according to the Dhyānasūtra

The goddess of the Transmission of the Child is represented here by the seed-syllable of the supreme goddess Parā and so is, in some way, identified with her. Moreover, she is associated with the Triple (trika) Vidyā, Parā, Parāparā and Aparā.[7] Thus, although she is specifically the goddess of the Transmission of the Child, she is also the goddess of the three sacred seats and hence all the three transmissions. In this way, the three forms of the goddess implicitly correspond to the three Vidyās and align her with the goddess of the Trika.

---

[1] KuKh 29/58.
[2] KuKh 29/60.
[3] KuKh 68/22-24ab.
[4] KuKh 49/1.
[5] Ibid. 49/36-38ab.
[6] Ibid. 49/44 ff..
[7] See chapter 20 of the KuKh for an exposition of the Triple Vidyā.

However, the YKh presents the third form of the goddess, who governs the Transmission of the Aged, as her supreme form (parāmūrti). But if the three forms of the goddess correspond to the three Vidyās one would suppose her to be Aparā. The text solves this problem by positing that all three forms 'descend' into the three transmissions, which is quite reasonable as each form of the goddess includes the others. However, it is possible that this inconsistency has arisen because the three forms were originally conceived separately and subsequently juxtaposed. Let us see what the YKh says:

> (Kubjikā's) iconic form is threefold (according to whether it is) in (the transmission) of the Child, Middle One or the Aged. O Śaṁkara, you are (my) devotee, I will tell you. The one syllabled (Vidyā) is called Parā. It is the plane (bhūmikā) of knowledge of the Siddhas. It is the Yoga Vidyā, the great Vidyā which is in the heart of the Rudras. It is the Rudra part (khaṇḍa) which is that of the Rudras and it is in consonance with the knowledge of Parā.[1] It said to be the main Vidyā (samayā) in Kāmākhyā, while the goddess of the sacred seat is in Pūrṇaka. The one called Yoga is in (the sacred seat called) Oṁkāra in the maṇḍala of the three seals (mudrā).[2]

---

[1] Possibly Rudrakhaṇḍa here refers to the first part of the Trikhaṇḍā Vidyā which is divided, as its name suggests, into three parts (khaṇḍa). As the KRU says:

> There, one (part) is the Rudrakhaṇḍa, the second is Mātṛkhaṇḍa, while one should know the third to be the excellent Cāmuṇḍākhaṇḍa. (This Vidyā) is called `Trikhaṇḍā' because (it is formed) by the union of (these) three parts. It accomplishes every purpose and is taught everywhere.

tatraikaṁ rudrakhaṇḍaṁ tu mātṛkhaṇḍaṁ [k: -khanda] dvitīyakam |
tṛtīyaṁ caiva vijñeyaṁ [kh: -ya] cāmuṇḍākhaṇḍam [kh:-khandam] uttamam ||
khaṇḍatrayasamāyogāt trikhaṇḍā [kh: trikhandā] parigīyate [k: -ve] | sarvārthasādhanī hy eṣā [g: eṣāṁ] sarvatrāpi praśasyate [kh: prasacyate] || KRU 5/24-25.

This mantra is mentioned again in the description of this form of the goddess as the Vidyā of 292 syllables which serves to replenish the goddess's store of life-giving nectar. Also called the Bṛhatsamayā Vidyā, it is considered to be the extended or 'great' – bṛhat - form of the goddess's Samayā Vidyā and so is also called 'Bṛhatsamayā'. If I have understood correctly, it appears that the text is implying that just as the goddess of this Transmission is the first of the three parts of the triple Vidyā, she is also the first part of Trikhaṇḍā which is thus 'in consonance with the knowledge of Parā'. This would mean that the other two forms of the goddess correspond to the other two parts. But note that although the goddess of the second transmission is identified with Trikhaṇḍā, there is no mention of the Vidyā in relation to the third form.

[2] 'Mudrā' (lit. 'seal' or '(ritual) gesture') in this context simply means 'goddess'. The maṇḍala of the three seals is thus the goddess's core, triangular maṇḍala. See above, p. 33 ff..

The descent (to earth), associated with the three Vidyās, of the lineages (oli) takes place in each Age in this Clan (gotra) and in that of Amarī[1] and the others in the teaching. O god, Parā, the one syllable Vidyā, has been explained previously, (even so) I will explain that properly (and) the very subtle, imperishable goal.[2]

She is said to be a short vowel at the beginning and appears to be slightly bent (unnatā).[3] She is dark blue like the petal of a blue lotus and is covered with the ashes of heroes.[4] She has six faces and aspects (prakāra). As the power of consciousness, she moves within. She sees with her eighteen round eyes. She has twelve arms and is adorned with many garlands. She sits on a ghost as her throne (pretasiṁhāsana) and is adorned with many ornaments. She is mounted on the Kula teaching of thousands of millions of Kulas. The teaching concerning her body (piṇḍavidhāna) is said to be hard to acquire even by the gods.[5]

---

[1] Concerning the goddess Amarī (also called Amarikā) and her clan, see above, p. 100 ff..

[2] *bāle madhye ca [ṅ: ] vṛddhe ca [ṅ: ya] mūrtibhedaṁ tridhā sthitam || tat [k, kh: taṁ; gh: ta] te 'haṁ [ṅ: vehaṁ] kathayiṣyāmi [kh: kathā-] tava bhaktasya śaṁkara |
ekākṣarā parā proktā siddhānāṁ jñānabhūmikā ||
*yogavidyā mahāvidyā rudrāṇāṁ hṛdaye sthitā [k, kh, gh: hṛdaye * tā]* |
rudrakhaṇḍaṁ [k, kh: rudraiṁ khaṁḍaṁ; gh: rudraikhaḍaṁ; ṅ: -khaṁḍe] tu rudrāṇāṁ parājñānānuvartinī [k, gh: -varṇinī; ṅ: -jñānātu-] ||
kāmākhye [k, kh, gh: -khya; ṅ: kāmākṣe] samayā [k, kh, gh: samāyā] proktā pīṭhadevī tu [ṅ: ca] pūrṇake [gh: pūrvake] |
*yogasaṁjñā [ṅ: yogi-] ca oṁkāre [k, gh: ḍaṁkāra; kh: ḍaṁkā ; ṅ: -ra] mudrātritayamaṇḍale ||
*vidyātritayasaṁyuktaṁ avatāraṁ yuge [k, gh: juge] yuge [k, gh: juge; kh: yu ] |
ulīnāṁ [k, kh, gh: ūlinā] gotravarge 'smin [gh: -smi] amaryādiṣu śāsane [k, kh, gh: sāsane; ṅ: māgane] ||
parā ekākṣarā [gh: yakā-] deva [ṅ: veda] pūrvam eva nidarśitā [k: -tāṁ; kh: nirdarśitā] |
tāṁ [k, kh, gh: tātā] pravakṣyāmy ahaṁ [k, kh, gh: -aṁhaṁ] samyak [k, kh, gh: samyaku] susūkṣmaṁ [ṅ: suśukṣmāṁ] lakṣam avyayam [k, kh, gh: adhyayaṁ] || YKh (1) 19/2cd-7.

[3] The Parā Vidyā is HSAUṀ (see KuKh 20/23 ff.). Presumably, it is with reference to the shape of the written syllable, that it is said to be 'bent'. In Devanagarī, it does indeed look bent.

[4] The description of the goddess in AP 144/30cd-37 begins from here.

[5] ādau hrasvasvarā proktā dṛśyate kiñcidunnatā [ṅ: -duttamā] |
nīlotpaladalaśyāmā [k, kh, gh: -māṁ] vīrabhasmāvaguṇṭhitā [k, kh, gh: -tāṁ; ṅ: vīrabhasmasamaprabhā] ||
ṣaḍvaktrā [k, kh, gh: ṣaṭvaktrā] ṣaṭprakārā [ṅ: + ca] cicchaktyāntaracāriṇī [k, kh, gh: cichaktyaṁtara-; ṅ: cichaktyā ca svāriṇī] |
netrair aṣṭādaśair yuktā [kh: -daśaiyuktā; ṅ: -yukta] vartulaiś cāvalokinī [k: -valākinī; gh: vatulaiścāvalākinī; ṅ: vittalaiścavalākinī] ||
dvādaśaiś ca [ṅ: dvādaśai ca + tur] bhujair [ṅ: bhujai] yuktā nānāsragdāmamaṇḍitā |
pretasiṁhāsanāsīnā [k, kh, gh: -nāṁ] nānābharaṇabhūṣitā [k, kh, gh: -tāṁ] ||
kulakoṭisahasrasya ārūḍhā kulaśāsane [k, kh, gh: -sāsana] |
*tasyāḥ [k, kh, gh: tasyā; ṅ: sa ] piṇḍavidhānoktaṁ [gh: -nokta] devānām api durlabham ||

(The snake) Ananta is always at her feet adorning her anklets. The snake Kārkoṭa, tied on (her) zone, adorns (her) hips. Takṣaka is (her) diadem (avataṁsa), Vāsuki the necklace on (her) neck. Kulika is said to be (hanging) on (her) ears and (she) is adorned with Kūrma as (her) earrings. Padma and Mahāpadma are on her eyebrows and all (of her) arms (bāhudaṇḍa) are adorned with thousands of snakes. (She holds) a skull, a rosary, the five immortal substances, an ascetic's staff, the Kādi scripture (kādyāgama), conch (śaṁkhapāla), and the great nectar[1] which is filled constantly with (the recitation of her Trikhaṇḍā Vidyā) consisting of 292 syllables.[2] The garland of vowels on her head rains down a stream of nectar. The garland of letters that (hangs from) the neck of the goddess (reaches) the soles (of her) feet. The necklace around her neck, made of fifty scorpions, looks beautiful.[3]

The Faces of the Goddess

The face of the goddess Parā is on top of the heads and shines auspiciously. It is white as milk, beautiful and shines like

---

YKh (1) 19/8-11.

[1] Part of the text appears to be missing here. The AP supplies the full compliment of objects the goddess holds in her twelve hands. In the left (row of hands she holds) a snake, skull, rosary, ascetic's staff, conch and book. In the right (row of hands she holds) a trident, mirror, sword, a jewel necklace, gaud and a bow.

[2] Concerning the Trikhaṇḍā Vidyā, see KuKh 23/1, note 1 and the goddess below p. 202-205.

[3] anantaṁ [k, kh: anaṁta; ṅ: ayanta] pādayor [k, gh: pādapādayo; kh: pādayo-] nityaṁ nūpuroparimaṇḍitam [k, kh, gh: rūpuropari-; ṅ: nūpuropari-] |
kārkoṭaṁ [ṅ: kakīṭā] mekhalābandhaṁ [ṅ: -lāvaṁvaṁ] kaṭideśe virājate [k, kh, gh: vinājate] ||
takṣakaś cāvataṁsaś [k, gh: cavāṁtaś; kh: vavāṁtaṁ; ṅ: -copavīnaṁ] ca kaṇṭhe hāras tu [k, kh, gh: kaṁṭhahāra ca] vāsukiḥ [k, kh, gh: vāstakiḥ; ṅ: -kī] |
kulikaṁ karṇayoḥ [ṅ: kaṇayo] proktaṁ kūrmakuṇḍalamaṇḍitam [k, gh: -maṇḍala-; kh: kūrmaṁ-; ṅ: ku-] ||
bhrūdaṇḍe [ṅ: krūdaṁḍe] saṁsthitaṁ [ṅ: -te] padmaṁ mahāpadmaṁ tathaiva ca |
bāhudaṇḍaṁ [k, ṅ: -daṁḍe] tu sakalaṁ sahasraphaṇimaṇḍitam [k, gh: sahasre-] ||
kapālaṁ cākṣasūtraṁ [ṅ: cakṣu-] ca amarīdravyapañcakam |
khaṭvāṅgaṁ kādyāgamaṁ [k, kh, gh: kādya-; ṅ: kādyagama + naṁ] śaṁkhapālaṁ [ṅ: -la] mahāmṛtam ||
dviśatair dvinavatyāyāḥ [k, kh: -tai dvyānavatyāyāḥ; gh: -tai dyānavatyāyāḥ; ṅ: dviśanordvānavatpāyāḥ] pūritaṁ ca nirantaram |
svaramālā śire tasyāḥ pīyūṣaughapravarṣaṇī [k, kh, gh: pīyuṣodyapra- -ṇīṁ; ṅ: pīyūṣodya-] ||
*varṇamālā gale [k, kh, gh: male] devyā yāvat [k, kh, gh: vyāvat] pādatalaṁ [k, kh, gh: -le; ṅ: pāda * le] sthitā [k, gh: sthatā]* |
vṛścikaiś ca [kh: + ca] gale hāraṁ śatārdhena [ṅ: sātedvani] virājate || YKh (1) 19/12-17.

millions of moons. It exudes a current of nectar and is endowed with the eighteenth energy (of the Moon).[1]

The second one is the upper face. It is the Void (gagana) called Mālinī. It is white and is venerated, part by part, by (both) the gods and demons.

The third one is the eastern face. White,[2] it is distraught with anger. Attended by Siddhas and Yoginīs, it is called Siddhayogeśvarī.

The fourth one is Kālikā's face. It is black and frightening. It is called Mahākālī and brings about the destruction of all things.

The fifth is the northern face. It is (red) like a pomegranate flower and is endowed with Mahālakṣmī.[3]

The sixth is said to be the western face. It is Umābhagavatī. One should think (her) face to be light blue (īṣat śyāmam).[4]

Raudrī has a divine (beautiful) form and wears a divine earring. Brahmā is at her two feet and Viṣṇu is said to be on her shanks. Rudra lives in her heart, Īśvara in the circle of (her) throat.[5]

Sadāśiva is on (her) forehead and Śiva is above him. The Moon, Sun, and Fire are in the eyes, along with the stars and circle of constellations. Heaven is said to be of eight kinds and the seat is on a ghost. The Earth principle is on the shanks and Water is in (her) navel. Fire is in the middle of (her) heart. Know that Wind is in (her) throat. Space is on (her) forehead – everything is located there. Such is Vakrikā's characteristic form (lakṣa) – brilliant like billions of

---

[1] See intro. vol. 1, p. 349-351.

[2] According to the AP this face is yellow (pāṇḍura).

[3] According to the AP this face is white.

[4] parādevīmukhaṁ pūrvamūrdhnisthaṁ [kh, gh, ṅ: pūrvvaṁ-; k, kh, gh: -mūrtisthaṁ] rājate śubham |
gokṣīradhavalaṁ [ṅ: gokṣīravavalaṁ] kāntaṁ [ṅ: kāśaṁ] candrakoṭisamaprabham ||
śravantam amṛtaughaṁ [k, gh: -dyaṁ; ṅ: -mṛtoghaṁ] tu kalām aṣṭādaśīyutam |
dvitīyaṁ ūrdhvavaktraṁ [ṅ: dūrddhacandraṁ] tu gaganaṁ nāma mālinī ||
śvetarūpaṁ vibhāgena surāsuranamaskṛtam [ṅ: -namastute] |
tṛtīyaṁ pūrvavaktraṁ tu pāṇḍuraṁ [kh: pāṁdruraṁ; ṅ: pāduraṁ] krodhavihvalam ||
siddhayogeśvarīkhyātaṁ [k, gh: -rikhyātaṁ; ṅ: -yogīśvarīkhyātaṁ] siddhayoginisevitam |
caturthaṁ [ṅ: caturtha] kālikāvaktraṁ kṛṣṇarūpaṁ [k, kh, gh: kṛṣṇārūpaṁ] bhayaṁkaram ||
mahākālīsamākhyātaṁ sarvasaṁhārakārakam |
pañcamaṁ cottaraṁ [k, gh: cāntaraṁ] vaktraṁ dāḍimīkusumaprabham ||
mahālakṣmīsamopetaṁ ṣaṣṭhaṁ [k, kh, gh: ṣaṣṭaṁ] paścimam ucyate |
umābhagavatī śyāmaṁ [k, kh, gh: syāmaṁ] īṣaṭ [gh: iṣaṭ] vaktraṁ vicintayet [ṅ: viviyena] ||
YKh (1) 19/18-23.

[5] The passage in the AP ends with: 'Kubjikā should be visualized thus, vibrantly inebrated (āghūrṇitā), in the course of (all) rituals, including the rite of adoration and the rest'.

lightning flashes and shining like a garland of flames - one should think that it is filling (all things).[1]

She is the subtle Transmental, (her) empowered (sakalā) (aspect) in the world. The Goddess of the gods, who is the teacher of the universe, has arisen in the Age of Strife. She resides in the sky, in the mortal world and in the lower world of Hāṭakeśvara.[2] Present in the lineage (of teachers) she bestows the Command in Koṅkaṇa. O Śambhu, once know this, the goddess's form, one should commence the sacrifice.[3]

---

[1] divyarūpadharā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -ro] raudrī divyakuṇḍaladhāriṇī ǀ brahmā [ṅ: vrahma] pādayuge [ṅ: padayuge] tasyāḥ [k, kh, gh: tasya; ṅ: tasyā] jaṅghane [k, kh, gh, ṅ: jaghane] viṣṇurucyate ǁ *hṛdaye [gh: hṛdaya] vasate rudraḥ [k, kh, gh: rudrau; ṅ: rudra] īśvaraḥ kaṇṭhamaṇḍale [ṅ: kaṁ * -]* ǀ *sadāsivaṁ [ṅ: daśāśivaṁ] lalāṭasthaṁ śivaṁ tasyoparisthitam [k, gh: taśyo-; kh: taśyopari * taṁ]* ǁ *candrārkānalanetreṣu [ṅ: -netre ] tārair nakṣatramaṇḍalam [ṅ: -le] ǀ svargaṁ [kh: śvargaṁ; gh, ṅ: svarga] cāṣṭavidhaṁ [k, kh, gh: -vidhvaṁ] proktaṁ pretasyopari [k, gh: pratasyaupari; kh: pretasyau-] āsanam [ṅ: āśanaṁ] ǁ jaṅghane [k, kh, gh, ṅ: jaghane] pārthivaṁ tattvaṁ āpo [k, gh: āpā] nābhyāṁ vyavasthitam [k, kh, gh: nāsti] ǀ tejo hṛdayamadhye tu vāyuḥ [ṅ: vāyu] kaṇṭhe vijānataḥ ǁ [This and the following line are missing in MSs K, Kh, and Gh] ākāśaṁ ca lalāṭe tu tatra sarvaṁ [ṅ: sarva] vyavasthitam ǀ taḍitkoṭisahasrābhaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -bhāṁ] jvālāmālāsamaprabham [k, kh, gh: nāsti; ṅ: -bhāṁ] ǁ īdṛśaṁ [k, kh, gh: -śāṁ] vakrikālakṣaṁ [ṅ: catrikālakṣaṁ] āpūryantaṁ [k: -yetaṁ; gh: -tuṁ; ṅ: āyuryanta] vicintayet ǀ YKh (1) 19/24-29ab.

[2] According to the SvT (10/116), Hāṭaka governs Sauvarṇa, the eighth and lowest hell in which he resides. The other hells are 1) Ābhāsa 2) Varatāla 3) Śarkara 4) Gabhastimat 5) Mahātala 6) Sutala 7) Rasātala (ibid 10/96-97ab). According to the Rauravāgama, Śrīkaṇṭha (as Hāṭakeśvara) reigns over each of the worlds and forcefully bestows (haṭhataḥ) various forms of yogic accomplishment (siddhi) (TĀ 8/30cd-32ab). Hāṭaka keeps the doors of hell shut to prevent those who are sent there from escaping. By his grace they are opened for some to allow them to pass into another world and attain the accomplishments (siddhi) that can be had there. Abhinava explains:

Those who observe vows (vratin) but have behaved in a manner prohibited by the scriptures and so are sinful (vikarmastha), those who, though initiated, have fallen from the rule (samaya) and have failed to perform the rites of expiation (prāyaścitta), those who are adherents and (yet) detractors (duṣaka) of the left-hand path (vāmācāra), those who live on the sacrificial offerings (dravya) to the gods and fire, those who, though adherents of higher doctrines, practice the mantras of lower doctrines such as those of Garuḍa and the like - all these in their various kinds, are slaves in the presence of the all-pervasive Lord Hāṭaka. TĀ 8/32cd-35ab.

[3] eṣā [kh: e ā] sā unmanā sūkṣmā sakalā bhuvanāntare ǁ uditā [ṅ: -tār] kalikāle tu devadevī jagadguruḥ [k, kh, gh: -ru; ṅ: jagatpate] ǀ ākāśe [ṅ: -śa] martyaloke tu [ṅ: ca] pātāle hāṭakeśvare ǁ saṁsthitā ulivarge [k, kh, ṅ: ūli-] tu [ṅ: ṣu] ājñāṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: ājñā] dadati koṅkaṇe [k, kh, gh: koṁkaṇai] ǀ [ṅ: +

Vakrā Ciñciṇī, the Sweeper: Kubjikā's form in the Middle Lineage[1]

The second form of the goddess presides over the Lineage of the Youth.[2] She is Ciñciṇī, 'the goddess Kujā with six faces'. She is identified with the usual goddesses to which Kubjikā is most closely related, namely – Raudrī, Trikhaṇḍā, Mālinī and Tripurabhairavī. Kālī, is most prominently embodied in her directly and so she is 'supremely horrific' and 'burns dark blue, red and scarlet'.[3] Her dark complexion is also related to her low caste status. She is Mātaṅginī – the Sweeper and Śavarī – the Tribal Woman.

> (One should think of the goddess as) having six aspects, with an immense body and form made of light. She is clothed in Yoga. (She is) everything without exception and she is clothed (in that). As Unstruck Sound, (she is) every state of being. (She is) Ciñciṇī (the Tamarind), supremely horrific as she burns dark blue, red and scarlet.[4] (She is) the Sweeper (mātaṅginī) of the Kula, Raudrī, the goddess Kujā with six faces.
>
> She shines with (her) twelve eyes, greedy for the (inebriation and) pleasure of wine. Her face is the Yoni, her form is the Yoni and (as the Hexagram) she possesses six Yonis. She is in the middle of the Yoni (bhaga)[5] and, terrible, she has been encapsulated within the Yoni. She is the goddess Full Moon who is completely full and has been encapsulated by both the five. A treasury of the thirty-two syllables, she is Kubjikā, the mistress of Kula.

These verses refer cryptically to the goddess's geometric form, which is the core of her maṇḍala. This, as we have seen in the previous chapter, consists of a downward facing triangle set within a hexagram. The Triangle is the Yoni and the six Yonis she possesses are the triangles formed by the surrounding hexagram.

śrīmanta cātmanāthasya ājñāmatamukhasthitām |
aliṅgitām ekavīrā vīreśvaraiva tādṛśaḥ | dhyānasūtram idaṁ jñātvā paścāt kuryāt kramārccanaṁ] devyāmūrtim imāṁ śambho jñātvā yajanam ārabhet || [ṅ: missing] YKh (1) 19/29cd-31.

[1] This sūtra extends from YKh (1) 19/30cd to 19/57. It is also found in KuKh 68/1-24ab. The colophon of this sūtra in the YKh (1) says: This is the sūtra of the visualization of the form of the goddess of the venerable middle lineage. It is part of the Yogakhaṇḍa. iti śrīmadhyamolidevyāmūrtidhyānasūtraṁ yogakhaṇḍe ||

[2] She appears at the beginning of chapter sixty-eight of the KuKh (verses 1 to 24).

[3] KuKh 68/2.

[4] These are the colours of the goddess when she appears out of the Liṅga. See KuKh 5/30 and notes.

[5] See KuKh 3/45.

When the goddess has six faces, she is said to have eighteen eyes, three for each face. Here, the twelve eyes have a different meaning. They are the twelve corners of the hexagram. The goddess is in the middle of the central Yoni in the form of the Point (bindu) that represents her undifferentiated state as the energy of bliss (ānandaśakti), the Transmental Command. Expanding out from the centre the divine beings that attend on the goddess who reside in her 'twelve eyes' delight in it.

The Thirty-two syllable Samayā Vidyā is the sonic form of the goddess of the New Moon.[1] As the goddess Full Moon she is 'encapsulated by both the five'. Just as goddess in her geometric form is 'encapsulated' by the Yoni, in her sonic form as the Vidyā she is 'encapsulated' by the Five Praṇavas. These are uttered in the forward and reverse order at the beginning and end of it, while the Vidyā itself is uttered in reverse.[2] This is the form of the Vidyā of forty-two syllables, which is in the centre of the Triangle.[3]

> (The goddess) pervades the circle of the sky with the eighty-four (types of) deposition (of mantras). Indeed, she is the goddess Khageśvarī (the Skyfarer). Immortal, (she is) the pure (form of) Kālikā. She is the goddess Bhairavī and Trikhaṇḍā;[4] she is the most excellent (goddess) Tripurā. Established on the path of the Mālinī Kula, she is (the goddess) Kujā. She is the light of the lamp of Kula, Barbarā (the tribal woman) of many forms.[5] (She is) the mother of Rudra,[6] the mother of the Siddhas and the mother of the great Bhairava. She is the mother of the heroes, the mother of yogis and the mother of the sacred seats in (all) the worlds.
>
> Endowed with the six parts, she is terrible. In her eighteen hands (she holds) a trident, dagger, sword, an arrow, (she makes a) frightening (gesture), (holds) a noose, small double-headed drum and a club pleasing to a Kaula. Nor are (only) these things (found) on the path of the right or the left. (She also holds) a skull bowl, an ascetic's staff, a rosary of gems, a bow, the Sacred Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha), an elephant goad, a club, and a book-rest. One should

[1] See KuKh 9/62cd-64 and note 51.
[2] See KuKh 9/58cd-59.
[3] See KuKh 7/35cd-36ab and 7/47cd-48.
[4] Concerning the Trikhaṇḍā Vidyā, see KuKh 23/1, note 1 and the goddess below p. 202-205.
[5] The six faces or aspects of this form of the goddess are thus: 1) Khageśvarī 2) Kālikā 3) Bhairavī 4) Trikhaṇḍā (Mālinī) 5) Tripurā 6) Barbarā.
[6] See note 99 to KuKh 3/64cd-65ab.

Ciñciṇī

think of (her thus) in these eighteen divine positions as having (this) form.[1]

She has the (Five Praṇavas that serve as her) five feet and, without clothes, she is clothed in nakedness.[2] (Her) eyes (are red like) the Bimba (fruit). Her face is turned downwards and she wears a snake as (her) sacred thread. Or (imagine her as wearing) sacred threads made of (human) tongues and that she is adorned with the Five Insignias (of a Kāpālika). Endowed with twelve sets of dreadlocks, she transports (the teaching) uttered (udgira) in the Sacred Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha).[3]

(To her) head is fastened the rosary of the vowels and she wears a necklace of letters. She is adorned with the divine sky (of consciousness) and twelve hundred million warlocks. A jewelled necklace clasps (her) neck and she is adorned with divine gems. (She is) the Supreme Goddess, sprinkled with great flowers (of many) kinds.

She is delighted with the fragrance of liquor along with (that of) sandalwood, musk and camphor. The sweet smelling directions are (her apparel) and her clothes are fragrant with fine incense. (She is) the Supreme Goddess swathed in clothes of great (value) and is (adorned with) divine gems. Beyond (the sphere of) energies and omnipresent, she is above all (others).

The goddess Kujā has six aspects and her form is the supreme syllable.[4] (She who) is the forty-two syllable (Vidyā) is the (divine) Command which bears this kind of form. By nature her form is that of a hunch-backed woman (kubjā) and, within the various forms of the Vidyā, she is mother Kujā. She is the great (goddess) Kujā who resides on the Island of the Moon in Śrīkaṇṭha's grace. One should break through Kujā, the target, by means of the threefold path.[5] Having first known (this) visualization in this way, one should practice it within one's own body.

One should perform the worship of the transmission (krama), repetition of mantra and Yoga by means of this body, as one

[1] Only sixteen weapons - eight on each side - are listed here although she is said to have eighteen hands. See chapter 14 of the KuKh for the 'inner' equivalents of these weapons.

[2] Although the text here clearly says that the goddess is naked, further ahead she is described as well-dressed.

[3] See the note to KuKh 2/14 and 3/55cd-6ab. Also above, p. 37.

[4] The 'supreme syllable' is Vāgbhava (AIṀ), the goddess's seed-syllable mantra.

[5] The threefold path is that of the three main channels of the vital breath - Iḍā, Piṅgalā and Suṣumṇā. See KuKh 14/61-62ab.

> contemplates the end of (all) the planes (of existence), beyond that inner mental organ. (Anyone) anywhere who does not possess (knowledge of) the visualized form of (the goddess) Kujā and does not have (access) to the tradition of (the goddess) Kujā (but nonetheless) worships the transmission, is a fettered and impure soul.[1] For such a one, the Vidyā relating to the Maṇḍala of the Transmission of the Doomsday Fire[2] is useless and the hereafter (for him) is uncertain. As long as one does not worship (and serve) the Kula, how can he have (the experience of) pervasion within (this), the Śāmbhava Kula?[3]

Khañjī: The Goddess's Supreme Form

The three forms of the goddess are intimately related as aspects of the goddess's triune nature which is at once supreme, middling / subtle and inferior / gross. Even so, each is 'complete' and represents in its own way the goddess's total being in all spheres. Each is supreme. Nonetheless, this form of the goddess represents her supreme state, beyond the gross and subtle represented by the previous two forms. However, like the other two, it is still within the sphere of her differentiated (sakala) aspect. The undifferentiated (niṣkalā) aspect of the goddess is purely transcendental. This one is both transcendent and immanent. The first form, which governs the Transmission of the Child, is, like this one, the Transmental. But 'residing in the sky, in the mortal world and in the lower world', it is purely immanent. She resides in the three seats and hence the three Transmissions, as does this, the Supreme Form (parāmūrti), but does not rise beyond them. The Supreme Form is immanent, and so is all three forms when the transmissions 'have arisen in the triple world' and she 'rests on the Kula'. As the Transmental Kuṇḍalinī, she pours out of her transcendent state 'beyond the Void and beyond the Non-Void' by the 'force of the mind' to assume the immanent condition of universal pervasion filling the 'triple world' with her supreme, blissful nectar. Thus flowing from one polarity to the other, unmanifest transcendence and the manifest immanence, she is both without contradiction. In her differentiated (sakala) aspect she is Khañjinī, Śāmbhavī, the deity of the Transmission, the goddess Parā.[4] Although she is 'the deity of the transmission (kramadevatā),' in her undifferentiated (niṣkala) aspect, there is no externally manifest transmission and she has no name.

---

[1] Cf. YKh (1) 20/27ab.

[2] Externally this is the Goddess's Saṁvartāmaṇḍala. Internally it is Khecarīcakra situated at the End of the Twelve.

[3] KuKh 68/4-24ab.

[4] The colophon at the end of this passage declares that 'this is the sūtra concerning the visualization of the form of the Supreme Goddess (parādevī)' (parādevyāmūrtidhyānasūtra).

Now I will tell (you) another visualized form (dhyāna) that is praised by the gods; by just recollecting it peoples' fetters are severed. O Maheśvara, I will tell (you) that supreme iconic form (paramūrti).

Śāmbhavī, the supreme (goddess) Khañjī is ever active (nityoditā) and without defect. Disembodied (akāyā), she is both devoid (of manifestation) (hīnā) and full (of it). She is (both) (articulate speech) with vowels (sasvarā) and (unmanifest speech) without vowels (svaravarjitā). (She is) unmanifest (nirābhāsā), formless, without (phenomenal) appearance (nirlakṣā) and (yet) in the field of appearance (lakṣagocarā). O Lord of the gods, she who is auspicious and supreme is attained by the teacher's grace (prasāda). The crooked (Kuṇḍalinī), the mulch cow of passion, she is the supreme energy who oozes (nectar). She is light (perfectly white like) cow's milk, snow or a jasmine flower and, full of the supreme nectar, she fills all the triple world with (all that) moves and is immobile. O sinless one, (she is) the Transmental, who by the force of the mind (manovega), abides having pervaded the universe. Unmanifest she has manifestly arisen and is obtained by word of mouth (transmitted by the masters). She is Siddhā, the great Khañjī, who is beyond the Void and beyond the Non-Void. She is the deity of the transmission (kramadevatā).[1]

---

[1] athānyam aparaṁ [k, gh: athānyaṁm aparaṁ; kh: athānyaṁm apara; ṅ: athānya paramaṁ] vakṣye [k, kh, gh: vakṣe] dhyānaṁ tridaśavanditam [k, gh, ṅ: -tāṁ; kh: tridaśaṁvaditāṁ] |
yena smaritamātreṇa [k, kh, gh: -mātrena] pāśacchedaṁ [kh: -chaudaṁ] bhaven nṛṇāṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: bhave-] ||
tad ahaṁ saṁpravakṣyāmi parāmūrtiṁ [k, kh: -mūrti; gh: paramūrti; ṅ: purāmūrti] maheśvara [ṅ: -rāṁ] |
śāmbhavī [sarve: -vā] paramā khañjī nityoditā [k, kh, gh: dityaudita; ṅ: -dita] anāmayā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: manāmayā] ||
akāyā hīnapūrṇā [ṅ: pūrṇahīnā] sā sasvarā [kh: saśvarā; gh: nasvarā] svaravarjitā |
*nirābhāsā nirākārā nirlakṣā [ṅ: nirlajjā] lakṣagocarā [ṅ: -goca ] ||
guruprasādād [k, kh, gh: -do] deveśa labhyate sā parā śubhā [k, kh, gh: śubhāṁ] |
anaṅgadhenukuṭilā [ṅ: anantavai tu kuṭilā] sravantī [sarve: śra-] paramā kalā ||
gokṣīrahimakundābhā [ṅ: -kundāṁ bhā] paramāmṛtanirbharā [k, gh: -niptarā; kh: -nirptarā] |
*pūrayantī jagat [k, kh, gh: tsagat] sarvaṁ [gh: sarva] trailokyaṁ [k, kh, gh: triloṣṭaṁ] sacarācaram [kh: sa * racaraṁ]* ||
*unmanā manavegena [k: manuvegena; kh: manavege ] vyāpya viśvaṁ sthitānagha |
avyaktā vyaktam utpannā [ṅ: vyaktarūpeṇa + mutpannā] vaktrād [k, kh, gh: vaktrā] vaktre tu [all MSs: vaktreṣu] labhyate ||
yā sā siddhā mahākhañjī [gh: māha-] śūnyāśūnyam atītagā [k, kh, gh: sūnyā-; ṅ: -nabhītagā] |
tasya bhedās trayo [k, kh, gh: trajo] jātās [k, kh, gh: yātās] trailokye [ṅ: -kya] kramadevatā ||
YKh (1) 19/58-64.

The subtle form of the goddess is Kuṇḍalinī. Her names in the three transmissions – Khañjinī, Vakrā and Kubjikā – all imply her identity as Kuṇḍalinī. Here, this form of the goddess has two aspects. One is the Command that is embodied in the three Siddhas who received the Transmission from the goddess and propagated it from their sacred seats into the world. The other is Anackā – the Unstruck Sound that moves through the central channel of Suṣumṇā carrying the individual soul up with it to merge it into the supreme reality at the supreme extremity of its rise.

> Her three divisions have arisen in the triple world. The goddess's Command abides in the triple Transmission as O (Oḍḍīśa), ṢA (Ṣaṣṭhīśa) and MI (Mitreśa). In the Transmission of the Child she is considered to be subtle and is called Khañjinī. O Kuleśvara, in the same way, she is the crooked (kuṭilā) Vakrā in the Middle Lineage. Kubjikā, who has six aspects (ṣaṭprakarā) is (also) the deity in an aged form.
>
> Resting on the Kula, she has three natures and six limbs and faces.[1] Profoundly tranquil (saumyā) and very terrible (bhīmā), she sits on the Great Ghost (mahāpreta) who is her seat. She has great snakes as her ornaments and is adorned with large earrings. Her topknot is adorned with a great Moon and the Sun is above it. She is called Anackā (Unstruck Sound) and has a copious and good menses (supuṣpāḍhyā). (As Kuṇḍalinī) she transports (the individual soul) along the path of Suṣumṇā. Endless, she is at the extreme end of the Endless. Stainless (nirañjanā), she is free of defects.[2]

The transcendent aspect is pure white. Tranquil and blissful it pervades and gives bliss. The immanent is, on the contrary, the black, fierce, voracious Kālī. They are opposites; even so, they contain each other. Thus, just as

---

[1] Concerning the six limbs and faces of the goddess see KuKh 10, note 9 and 11.

[2] o-ṣa-mitrasvarūpeṇa [k, kh, gh: ūṣamitre-; ṅ: upamitrisva-] devyājñā trikrame [k, kh, gh: triḥ -] sthitā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: sthitāṁ] |
bālakrame smṛtā [ṅ: nmṛtā] sūkṣmā khañjinīnāmaviśrutā ||
tathā sā [ṅ: sa] kuṭilā [ṅ: kuṭikā] vakrā [k, gh: vaktrā] madhyamolyāṁ kuleśvara |
kubjikā ṣaṭprakārā ca vṛddharūpeṇa devatā ||
trisvarūpā kulālambī ṣaḍaṅgavaktrasaṁyutā |
mahāsaumyā mahābhīmā mahāpretāsanasthitā || mahānāgābharaṇaiś [gh: mahāṁ-] ca mahākuṇḍalamaṇḍitā [kh: -maṇḍetā] |
mahācandrārdhaśikharā sūryeṇopari [k, kh, gh: sūryaṇopari] bhūṣitā [ṅ: sthitā] ||
anackākhyā [k, kh, gh: anaṁkvākhyā; ṅ: anankākhyā] supuṣpāḍhyā [ṅ: puṣpādyā] suṣumṇāmārgavāhinī |
anantānantaparyantā [k, kh: -taryaṁtā; gh: -nantaryatā; ṅ: -tāṁ] nirañjanā [k, gh: nirajana; kh: -na; ṅ: nirāṁjana] nirāmayā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -yāṁ] || YKh (1) 19/65-69.

immanence is a part of the transcendental aspect we have just examined, the two are also represented in Kālī's immanence by the combination of two opposite aspects of her nature. Thus, she is 'tranquil' (saumya), although she is 'terrible' (bhīmā) and Unstruck Sound - Anacakā, although she 'roars with the Great Sound' and Stainless - Nirañjanā, although she 'chews on human flesh and drinks blood, excrement and urine'. Although she is the goddess 'in aged form', she has 'a copious and good menses' (supuṣpāḍhyā). Thus, the goddess at both levels, immanent and transcendent, is a union of opposites.

> She has eighteen eyes and great arms, above and below. She is illumined by great jewels and her beautiful light is like heated gold. The mantra on her head is divided into twenty-seven divisions and twenty-seven depositions (nyāsa).[1] The goddess of the gods, she is the mistress of the hosts (of the god's attendants). She is comfortably seated on a lion throne and shines beautifully, dark blue and red.
>
> Very fierce, she has fangs and, very terrible, she is frightening. Her gaze severe (koṭarākṣī) and fixed (stabdhadṛṣṭi), she resides in her own sacred seat and is horrific. She, the mother of Kula, roars with the Great Sound. She is the Kālī of the great Bhairava. Her lips are (red like the) Bimba (fruit) and she is greedy for blood. She chews on human flesh (mahāmāṁsa) and drinks blood, excrement and urine. Placing her vessel in her hand, sealed with the Gesture of Space (vyomamudrā), She is the goddess (Nityā) in the Wheel of the Sky (khecakra) playing (there) with the Skyfarers within Emptiness (khamadhya). Her face the Void (kha), she resides in the Void surrounded by accomplished yogis. Possessing a divine form, she wanders constantly in the six sacred seats and plays (there). Thus the great Śāmbhava form (lakṣa) of Kujā has been described.[2]

---

[1] Apparently, the mantra meant here is the total aggrgate of the mantras that constitute the transmission. The KMT favours a transmission of twenty-eight mantras (aṣṭaviṁśatikrama), whereas the MBT prefers one of twenty-seven (saptaviṁśatikrama). We have seen already that, according to the Siddhakhaṇḍa, the goddess of the three Transmissions is swathed in twenty-seven depositions (see above, p. 147).

[2] netrair aṣṭādaśair [k, gh: netrer aṣṭādaśai; kh: -daśai; ṅ: netrer aṣṭādaśa] yuktā [ṅ: yuktāṁ] ūrdhvādhaś [k, kh, gh, ṅ: dorddaṁḍaiś] ca mahābhujā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -jān] |
mahāratnapradīptābhā [k, kh, gh: -bhāṁ; ṅ: -dīpābhāṁ] taptakāñcanasuprabhā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -bhāṁ] ||
saptāviṁśatibhir bhedair bheditā [k, kh, gh: -bheditaṁ] mantramūrdhani |
saptāviṁśatibhir nyāsair [k, kh, gh: -nyāsai; ṅ: -bhinyāsair] devadevī gaṇeśvarī || siṁhāsanasukhāsīnā [k, kh, gh: -na; ṅ: -mukhīśītāṁ] śyāmā [k, kh, gh: syāmā] raktā [ṅ: raktāṁ] subhāsurā [k, kh, gh: -rāṁ; ṅ: -raṁ] |
vikarālā mahāraudrā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -drāṁ] mahābhīmā [ṅ: -māṁ] bhayaṁkarī [k, kh, gh: -rāṁ; ṅ: -rīṁ] ||

The Unmanifest (niṣkala) Transcendent

In order to safeguard the essentially unitary identity of the deity, it is understood to possess two aspects relating to its dual nature. One is internal and 'undifferentiated' (niṣkala) the other is external, multiple and 'differentiated' (sakala). It seems surprising at first that the former can also be worshipped in an aniconic form but not so if we consider that this is treated as the 'basic' unitary form of the deity and the latter as the one that can assume multiple aspects. Kubjikā possesses in this way, just as every other Great Goddess does, a composite identity. As we read in the ŚM:

> O fair lady, thus Śrīnātha sports in the Circle of the Void (śūnyamaṇḍala) and (so does) Kubjikā, the mother of the Kula who is Kuṇḍalī by name. She is the will, the goddess who is Mind Beyond Mind (manonmanī) and whose form is the Point (bindurūpā). That energy is said to be innate (sahajā) and is (the state of) oneness with Śiva.
>
> Applied on the plane of mantra and visualization (dhyāna), she who is undifferentiated (niṣkalā) is differentiated (sakalā). When she abides in the differentiated (aspect), she abides as mantra. Undifferentiated, she is devoid of mantra. When she abides in an iconic form, she is gross and she is subtle when present in the aniconic (amūrta) (aspect). Linked to the planes of mantra and iconic form, she is action impelled on the plane of visualization.[1]

---

koṭarākṣī [ṅ: -kṣīṁ] svapīṭhasthā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -sthāṁ] stabdhadṛṣṭiḥ [k, kh: stadhvadṛṣṭiṁ; gh: stadhvadṛṣṭiṁ; ṅ: stadvadṛṣṭiṁ] subhīṣaṇā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -ṇāṁ] |
*mahānādena garjantī [k, kh: gerjaṁtīṁ; gh: gerjaṁtī] rāvayantī [ṅ: rāva * ntī] kulāmbikā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -kāṁ]* ||
mahābhairavakī [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -kaṁ] kālī [k, kh, gh: kālīṁ] bimboṣṭā [k, gh: viṁvoṣkāṁ; kh: vivoṣkāṁ; ṅ: viṁvoṣṭīṁ] raktalālasā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -sāṁ] |
*carvayantī [k, gh, ṅ: carcayaṁtī] mahāmāṁsaṁ pivantī raktavinmūtram [k, kh, gh: raktauṣṭaraṁ; ṅ: rakto * ṣṭaraṁ]* ||
svapātraṁ [ṅ: kha-] ca kare kṛtvā vyomamudrāsumudritam [k, kh, gh: vyomamudrāṁsamudritāṁ; ṅ: -samudritāṁ] |
khecakre saṁsthitā nityā [k, kh, gh: nityāṁ] khecaraiḥ saha krīḍate ||
khamadhye khamukhā khasthā [k, kh: khaṣṭā; gh: khaṣṭa] āvṛtā [k, kh, gh: mādṛtaṁ; ṅ: māvṛtāṁ] siddhayogibhiḥ [k, kh: siddhi-; gh: -bhi] |
ṣaṭpīṭhe [k: ṣaṭapīṭhai; kh: ṣaṭpīṭhai] bhramate [gh: bhramatye] nityaṁ divyarūpā ca krīḍate ||
*lakṣam evaṁ kujākhyātaṁ mahāśāṁbhavaśāṁbhavam [k, kh, gh: * * * mahāśāmbhavaṁ]* |
YKh (1) 19/70-77ab.

[1] śrīnāthas tu tato [kh: mato; g: śrīnāthaṁ himavato] bhadre krīḍate [g: krīḍaṁte] śūnyamaṇḍale [g: sunya-] ||
kubjikā kulamātā ca [kh: tu] kuṇḍalīnāma [g: kuṇḍalā] nāmataḥ |

Logic requires that there should be a complete break between immanence and transcendence. The first is the realm of the finite, the other of the infinite. It should not be possible for them to extend into each other, or even make contact. Reason strictly applied, as happens, for example, in the sophistry of Advaita Vedānta is simply ignored. The Tantras are concerned with experience, not logic, and transcendence is experienced even though it is an experience of negation. Immanence is a condition of affirmation. Although pervasive, Deity has locations. Although infinite, it has specific forms. The world – macrocosmic universe and microcosmic body – is experienced as the radiant energy of deity which serves as the receptacle of infinite being, and both are affirmed in and through numerous details. Immanence is experienced and attained by affirmation and inclusion to the point of the logically impossible conjunction of opposites.

Transcendence, on the contrary, is inaccessible. There is no point of entrance or exit. It can never be found, never known, never attained as one would a finite reality. It is experienced through negation. But this is not the total, abstract negation of pure nothingness or unconditioned relativity. Negation is functional. It cannot negate itself so totally that it is no longer negation. Negation is the negative of the positive pole. It is reverse affirmation and is graded in terms of its objects. Perfect transcendence is the ultimate level of negation. It is, as the Tantra says, 'beyond the beyond', that is, beyond the ultimate limit of measurable extension into which immanence tapers out through an ascending series of negations.

Immanence defines the objects of negation. It affirms that which is to be abandoned by denial. Immanence generates the universe of ultimate principles, the great realities that sustain and are the most essential nature of all particulars. They are the symbols, concepts, forms, and relationships worked out in the Tantra's universe of discourse which explains how things are in such a way that they become the details of a universe that serves as a receptacle for the transcendent within, and causeway to the transcendent beyond. These are enumerated on the path to transcendence as milestones that, as we travel, are to be abandoned, one by one. So this is the first aspect - ontological transcendence. It is transcendence of the body that is all things, along with the physical and subtle body, the sonic body, and the series of gods to reach the Lord of Kula, Śiva, who, although beyond predication, is the goal, not an object of negation. The second aspect is soteriological transcendence. This takes place by systematic negation of icchārūpadharā devī bindurūpā manonmanī ||

---

sā śaktiḥ sahajā proktā śivena saha caikatā |
mantradhyānapade [kh g: mantrā-] yuktā sakalā niṣkalā tu yā ||
sakalasthā tu mantrasthā [kh: -sthāḥ] niṣkalā mantravarjitā [g: -varjitāḥ] |
mūrtirūpā sthitā [kh: sthita] sthūlā sūkṣmā caiva amūrtagā [kh: amūrtijāḥ; g: amurtagāḥ] || mantramūrtipadair yuktā kriyādhyānapaderitā [kh: ritāṁ] | ŚM 2/12cd-16ab.

the means of attainment whether physical, mental, pneumatic, ritualistic or Yogic. The ultimate, fundamental state is beyond all levels and states of attainment. It is about this that Śrīnātha questions the goddess with the words:

> O Nāthā, who abides in the sakala (state) and who in the niṣkala (aspect)? O Umā, tell me the meditation (dhyāna) that takes place in the differentiated (sakala) (state) and the transcendent undifferentiated one (niṣkalātīta).

To which the goddess Vakrā replies:

> Abandon (both) form (rūpa) and the formless. Practice what is beyond form. All this (divine body) is in the form of a container (koṣākāra) (of the supreme state). It is the radiant energy (tejas) which is all things. One who desires the (supreme) good should abandon everything. It is as useless as rotten meat.
>
> O god, there is nothing at all (of deity) in the navel, heart, mouth, and nose, nothing at all between the eyebrows, forehead, in the middle of the palate, or within the uvula, head and eyes. O Maheśvara, O lord of the gods, I am not in the sixty-four wheels or the fifty (letters), nor is there anything within them. There is no Śiva, Viṣṇu, Rudra, Sun, or Śakti. O Lord of Kula, Śiva (both) is and is not (nāsti cāsti).[1]

---

[1] śrīnātha uvāca [k, kh, gh: śrīvakrovāca]
sakale [ṅ: sakalaṁ] kaḥ [ṅ: ka] sthito [ṅ: thito] nāthe niṣkale [k, kh, gh, ṅ: niḥkalaṁ] ko vyavasthitaḥ [k, kh, gh: -tāḥ] ||
*sakale [k, kh, gh: -lai; ṅ: śaka ] niṣkalātīte kiṁ dhyānaṁ kathyatāṁ [ṅ: kathitā] ume [kh: umai; ṅ: yame] | śrīvakrovāca
tyaja rūpam arūpaṁ ca rūpātītaṁ samabhyaset ||
koṣākāram [k, kh, gh: kosakāram; ṅ: kośa-] idaṁ sarvaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: sarvve] tejaḥ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: tejaṁ] sarvaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: sarvva] svarūpataḥ [k, kh, gh: -tā] |
*palālam iva dhānyārthī tyajet [ṅ: -ta] sarvaṁ [ṅ: sarva] nirarthakam [kh: ni * rthakaṁ; ṅ: nara * kaṁ]* ||
na [ṅ: nā] nābhyāṁ [ṅ: nādyāṁ] hṛdaye deva vaktre nāse [k, gh: nānyaṁ; kh: nāṁnaṁ; ṅ: nāsāṁ] na [kh: nāsti] kiñcana |
bhrūvor [k, kh, gh: bhūyor] madhye lalāṭe ca [ṅ: tu] tālumadhye na kiñcana ||
ghaṇṭikānte [ṅ: ghaṁṭikānā] na [ṅ: nā] vā śire [k, gh: strībhi; kh: stībhi; ṅ: stāni] cakṣurante [k, kh: cakṣaraṁte; gh: cakṣarate; ṅ: cakrurate] na kiñcana |
catuḥṣaṣṭistu [ṅ: -ṣaṣṭistra] ye cakrāḥ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: cakrā] pañcāśad [k, kh, gh: -sad] ye [k, kh, gh: ya] maheśvara ||
*teṣu nāstīti deveśa nāhaṁ ca teṣu [k, kh, gh: * se ce; ṅ: śena ca] kiñcana [k, kh, gh: kiṁke ; ṅ: viṁduke] |

> What is the use of a rosary or keeping the eyes closed? If there is concentration (dhāraṇā) or meditation (dhyāna), one does not attain consciousness (saṁvitti). There is no pure light in Iḍā, or in Piṅgalā, or Suṣumṇā, although (all these places) are said to be means to attainment. (This reality) is said to be `without support' (niralamba) and it cannot be grasped even by the gods. Thus, it is beyond Form (rūpa) and Part (pada) and its sphere (of existence) (gocara) is beyond the beyond (atītātīta). It is not an object of meditation. It is not involved in concentration, meditation or Yoga. There is no exhalation, no inhalation or retention of the breath. It is free of in-breathing and out-breathing and it has no form (lakṣa) or characterizing feature (lakṣaṇa). It resides in the teacher's lotus mouth - it cannot be obtained otherwise (except from there).[1]

The Three Forms of the Goddess according to the Kubjikānityāhnikatilaka

Three forms of the goddess, one for each of the transmissions, are also described by Muktaka in his Kubjikānityāhnikatilaka,[2] which is probably the earliest known liturgical manual of the Kubjikā tradition.[3] According to the KnT[4] Kubjikā is the goddess Kālī who manifests in three forms as the goddesses of the three lineages. They are the goddesses of the SKh. This is the most fully developed presentation we find in the sources. The three forms of the goddess are distinct goddesses in their own right. In accord with the KMT, that relates the

---

*na śivo na ca [gh: + de] vai viṣṇur na [k: viṣṇuṁ na; kh: viṣṇu na; gh: viṣṇuṁ naṁ] rudro [kh: rudror; ṅ: ru ] na divākaraḥ ||
na śaktir [k, kh, gh, ṅ: śakti] na śivaś ceti nāsti cāsti kuleśvara | YKh (1) 19/77cd-83ab.

[1] *akṣamālā [ṅ: -lāṁ] ca kiṁ kāryaṁ kiṁ vā netre [ṅ: nai ] nimīlite [ṅ: ramīlite] ||
na dhāraṇā na ca [ṅ: va] dhyānaṁ saṁvittiḥ [k, kh, gh: saṁviṁti; ṅ: saṁcintya] prāpyate na ca |
na jyotivimalo [k, kh, gh: -le] deva iḍāyāṁ [ṅ: -yā] na [k, kh, gh: ta] ca piṅgalām ||
suṣumṇāyāṁ na deveśa kintu [k: kimu; kh: vikimu; gh: kima] ākhyātāḥ [k, kh, gh: akṣanti; ṅ: ākhyāta] sādhakāḥ |
*nirālambaṁ [kh: niṁrā-] samākhyātaṁ agrāhyaṁ [k, kh: agrāhṛṁ; gh: agrā ?] tridaśair api ||
tasmād rūpapadātītaṁ [gh: -ta] atītātītagocaram [ṅ: abhītātīta-] |
na dhyeyaṁ [k, kh: vyeyaṁ; gh: vyayaṁ] dhāraṇā tasya na [k, kh, gh, ṅ: ma] dhyānaṁ [k, kh, gh: -na] yogam eva [gh: yogamem eva] ca || 86 ||
recakaṁ pūrakaṁ nāsti na [kh: + na] cāpi sthirakumbhakam |
*ucchvāsasvāsanirmuktaṁ [k, kh, gh: uchāsochāsanirmuktaṁ; ṅ: usochāsavi * muktaṁ] lakṣalakṣaṇavarjitam* ||
guruvaktrāmbujāvasthaṁ [ṅ: -vujavasthaṁ] anyathā tu na [k, kh, gh: ma] labhyate [ṅ: labhate] |
YKh (1) 19/83cd-88ab.

[2] MS K fl. 23b.
[3] See intro. vol. 3, p. 404 ff..
[4] See Schoterman 1982: 36.

transmissions to yogic states, the goddesses are understood to be iconic embodiments (mūrti) of the energies and states of the highest reaches of Sound. Moreover, the implicit link, between the transmissions, the sacred seats and the Siddhas there who teach them, is explicitly stated to make the presentation complete and systematic. We may tabulate the correspondences as follows:

4. Table of the Goddesses of the Three Transmissions according to the Kubjikānityāhnikatilaka

Lineage	Sacred Seat	Siddha	Energy	Goddess
Eldest	Oḍiyāna	Oḍḍīśa	Vyāpinī	Kālī
Middle One	Pūrṇagiri	Ṣaṣṭha	Samanā	Tripurā
Child	Kāmarūpa	Caryānanda	Manonmanā	Mālinī

Although Muktaka presents this coherent, systematic picture of the triads, when he comes to a description of the goddesses of the lineages it is set aside. He prefers to develop one form, which is that of the goddess who presides over the Tradition of the Child (bāloli). It is basically the same as the form of the goddess of this transmission described in YKh (1) and chapter twenty-nine of the KuKh and the Ṭīkā that draw from it. The other two goddesses are only cursorily described, probably because there is no special use for them as Muktaka describes the rites of only this Krama. Thus Muktaka underscores that this is the main form of the goddess which, as YKh (1) says, 'bestows the Command in Koṅkaṇa', a detail Muktaka omits possibly because he was not from that place. However, unlike YKh (1), which refers to the goddess generically as Parā, Muktaka calls her Kubjikā directly several times as well as Parā and Raudrī. Although basically the same form, there are several important differences in details. The colours of the faces are not the same nor are the attributes she holds and not all of them are named. Another important detail is added to the description here, namely, that the goddess is bent. The three forms are as follows:

> (Kubjikā) is the colour of (dark) blue collyrium. She is bent over (kubjīrūpā) and has a large belly. She has six faces and twelve arms. She is adorned with snakes, bones and gems. Raudrī (i.e. Kubjikā) wears a garland of severed heads and has a fierce gaping mouth with protruding teeth. The goddess has eighteen eyes and (her) hair is tied up in the barbarian (barabara) style.[1]

---

[1] nīlāñjanasamaprakhyā kubjīrūpā [k kh: kuvji-] mahodarā || ṣaḍvaktrā dvādaśabhujā sarpāsthiratnacarcitā |
muṇḍamālādharā [kh: -dharī] raudrī daṁṣṭrā [kh: daṣṭrā] karālakānanā [k: kalāli-] ||

Kubjikā of the Transmission of the Child with Navātmabhairava

She wears a tiger skin and a cloak of lion skin. Her limbs are adorned with divine ornaments and she laughs loudly. Her western face is yellow and the one in the north is dark blue. (The one) in the south is black. The eastern one, displayed in front, is red while the one born in the north-east (i.e. above) is (white) as crystal. The uppermost face, worshipped as Parā,[1] (shines) like a thousand suns. Śambhu has said that all the faces have fierce gaping mouths with protruding teeth.[2]

(Now) I will tell (you about) the great weapons of that (goddess) Kubjikā. Know (the ones that are in) the right (hands) and (the ones) in the left, along with (their) application (prayoga). In the right (hands she holds) a trident, wheel, thunderbolt, goad, arrow and dagger. One should place (her on) a blue lotus with a star (satāraka). Then on the left (side her hands hold) a severed head, an ascetic's staff, bell, book and bow. It is said that (she holds) a skull in (the lower) left (hand) and sits on a ghost as her throne.[3]

---

aṣṭādaśākṣakā [k kh: -daśāṁvakā] devī barbarordhvaśiroruhā | The text of this dhyāna is taken from fl. 11a to 11b of MS K of the KnT.

[1]

5. Comparative Table of the Colour of Six Faces of the Goddess

Direction	Colour YKh (1)	Colour KnT
West	Light blue	Yellow
North	Red	Dark blue
South	Black	Black
East	White	Red
Upper	White	White
Uppermost	White - brilliant like many moons	Brilliant like many suns

[2] vyāghracarmaparīdhānā siṁhacarmottarīyakā [k: -carmmāturīyakā; kh: -carmmotratīyakā] ||
divyābharaṇabhūṣāṅgī aṭṭāṭṭahāsyahāsinī [k: -hāsanī] |
tasyāḥ pītaṁ jalaṁ [kh: jala] vaktram uttaraṁ śyamasannibham ||
dakṣiṇe kṛṣṇavarṇaṁ ca yat saṁmukhaṁ [k kh: -khāt] pradarśitam |
pūrvavaktraṁ [kh: ūrddha-] bhaved raktam īśajaṁ sphaṭikopamam ||
sahasrasūryasaṅkāśamūrdhvavaktraṁ [kh: -vaktra] parārcitam [k kh: -te] |
[3]sarvadaṁṣṭrākarālāni [kh: sarvvedaṣṭrā - -nī] vaktrāṇy [kh: vaktrāny] uktāni śambhunā |
astrāṇy asyāḥ [kh: -syā] pravakṣyāmi [kh: pravakṣāmi] kubjikāyā mahānti ca || dakṣiṇe ca prayogeṇa vāme caiva vijānatha |
triśūlacakravajrāṇi [kh: triśūra-] aṅkuśaḥ śarakartṛke ||
dakṣiṇe vāmato dadyān nīlotpalaṁ satārakam |
anyac [k kh: anyañ] ca muṇḍakhaṭvāṅgaṁ ghaṇṭāpustadhanus tathā [k: ghaṁṭāyuste; kh: ghaṁṭāyuṭesta] ||
kapālaṁ vāmake proktaṁ siṁhāsanaśavāsanī [k: -savāsanīṁ; kh: -śavāsanā] |

(One) attains (ultimate) reality by means of the trident and Māyā is destroyed by means of the wheel. All diseases are destroyed by the thunderbolt while the goad is considered to be (the means to attract and) control (ākarṣaṇa). The enemy is destroyed by the arrow. The dagger is the avoidance of obstacles. Wealth (lakṣmī) is acquired by means of the severed head and the eight yogic powers by the ascetic's staff.[1]

A correct knowledge of mantra arises by means of the bell and a correct understanding of the scriptures from the book. Control (of others is acquired) by means of the bow and the great accomplishment of (all) the weapons in the Mahāmata by means of the skull.[2]

Brahmā is at the soles of her feet. Viṣṇu is said to be on the shank. Rudra lives in the heart and Īśvara in the circle of the throat. Sadāśiva is on her forehead and Śiva is above him. The eyes are the Moon, Fire and Sun and the circle of the sky (that surrounds her) is (full of) stars.

The lotus, which is the eightfold creation, should be imagined on the ghost. The Earth principle is in (the Wheel) of the Self-supported. One should think that Water is in (her) navel and Fire in the centre of the heart. One should imagine that Wind is in (her) throat and Space on (her) forehead. All (the elements) are located in these (places). Thousands of millions of Kulas are part of the Kula tradition (śāsana). The teaching (vicāra) concerning (the goddess's) body is hard to acquire even by the gods.[3]

---

[1] tattvaprāptir bhavec chūlāt [kh: -prāpti-; k kh: -lā] cakrāt māyākṣayo bhavet [kh: bhaveḍa] ||
vajrāt [kh: vajrā] sarvaroganāśaś [k: -nāśuś] cāṅkuśākarṣaṇaṁ matam [kh: mata] |
śarāc chatruvināśaṁ ca kartari [kh: karttṛ] vighnavarjanam ||
*lakṣmīlābhaṁ [k kh: -lābha] tu [k kh: ] muṇḍāc ca [k: utpated; kh: utpane ca] khaṭvāṅgād aṣṭasiddhayaḥ [kh: -siddhaye] |

[2] yāvanmantrārthavetṛtvaṁ [k: -mantrotha-] ghaṇṭātaḥ saṁprajāyate ||
yāvac chāstrārthabodhatvaṁ [k: - yāvacchālārtha] pustāc cāpārthato [k: pārdatā] vaśaḥ | kapālāc ca mahāsiddhir astrāṇāṁ [k: mahāsiddhi nestrāṇāñ] ca mahāmate ||

[3] brahmā pādatale tasyā jaṅghane [kh: jaghane] viṣṇur ucyate |
hṛdaye [kh: hṛtaye] vasate [k: vamate; kh: vaśate] rudra īśvaraḥ kaṇṭhamaṇḍale ||
sadāśivo [kh: śadā-] lalāṭe 'syā [kh: lalāṭasyāḥ] śivas tasyopari sthitaḥ [k: śivaṁ- -taṁ] |
candrārkāgnayo netre [k: netraṁ] satārā-ṛkṣamaṇḍalaṁ [k: maṇḍale] ||
sargam [k: svargam] aṣṭavidhaṁ padmaṁ [k: padme; kh: padmeṁ] pretasyopari [kh: pretasyāpari] kalpayet [kh: karppayeḍa] |
svādhiṣṭhāne [k: -ṣṭāne; kh: -sthāne] dharātattvaṁ [k: parā-] toyaṁ nābhau vicintayet [kh: -ḍa] || tejo hṛdayamadhye tu vāyuṁ [k: vāyu] kaṇṭhe prakalpayet [kh: -yeḍa] |
ākāśaṁ ca [kh: ākāśantu] lalāṭe ca teṣu sarve vyavasthitāḥ ||
kulakoṭisahasrāṇi ārūḍhāḥ [k: -ḍhā] kulaśāsane |

(The snake) Ananta is said to be the anklet of her feet. Karkoṭa around (her) waist is said to be (her) belt. Takṣaka is the sacred thread and the necklace around (her) neck is Vāsuki. Kulika, adorned with tortoise earrings, is said to be on (her) ears. Padma and Mahāpadma are on the middle of (her) eyebrows. Thousands of snakes adorn all (her) arms. (She is) adorned with a garland of flames (that surrounds her) and she shines like thousands of lightning flashes. Such is the venerable Kubjikā's form (lakṣa). One should think of it as such until it is complete (āpūrṇa).[1]

In the Transmission of the Youth (the goddess) has one face and four arms. (She makes) fear-dispelling and boon bestowing gestures and (holds) a rosary and water pot.[2]

In the Transmission of the Aged (Kubjikā) has one face and two arms and many forms. The mistress (nāyakī) of the three lineages has thus been described. She should be invoked sitting next to Navātmā (Bhairava).[3]

---

tasyāḥ [kh: tasyā] piṇḍavicāras tu devānām api durlabhaḥ ||

[1] anantaṁ pādayos tasyā nūpuraṁ parikīrtitam |
karkoṭo mekhalābandhe [k: -vande; kh: -mandhe] kaṭibandhaḥ [k: -vanda] prakīrtitaḥ ||
takṣakam upavītaṁ [k: takṣakenopavītan] tu gale hāraṁ [k: hāre] tu vāsukiḥ [kh: vāsukīḥ] |
kulikaṁ karṇayoḥ proktaḥ [kh: proktaṁ] kūrmakuṇḍalamaṇḍitam [k: -kulaṇḍamaṇḍitaṁ] ||
bhrūmadhye saṁsthitaḥ padmo mahāpadmas tathaiva ca |
bāhudaṇḍeṣu sarveṣu sahasraphaṇimaṇḍitam ||
taḍitkoṭisahasrabhaṁ [k: dvari(?)skoṭisahasrābhaṁ] jvālāmālāsamākulam |
īdṛk [kh: idṛcchrī] śrīkubjikālakṣamāpūrṇaṁ tad vicintayet [kh: -yeḍa] ||
iti bālolyām [k: vālābhyām] ||

[2] yuvākrame [k, kh: kramo] yathā - ekavaktrā caturbhujā abhayavaradākṣamālākamaṇḍaludharā [kh: abhaye-] |

[3] vṛddhakrame [k, kh: -kramo] yathā - ekavaktrā dvibhujā [kh: + ca] anekākārarūpā [kh: anekākārūpo] | ity olitrayanāyakī [k: ityoḍitraya-] kathitā navātmotsaṅgagatā āvāhanīyā |
Kubjikā of the Transmission of the Youth

Kubjikā's Six Faces and Limbs

We have seen that Kubjikā's triadic nature is related to her identity as the Triangle that symbolizes her as the Yoni and that her sixfold nature is similarly related to her second expansion as the hexagram that surrounds the triangle in the centre of the maṇḍala. The goddess's multiple iconic forms are similarly arranged in such a way as to coincide with the geometric representations in the maṇḍala in which she is worshipped. Thus starting from the Point in the centre out to the triangle and the hexagram, all the groups of divine forms projected and worshipped there are ultimately the one goddess who replicates herself through the forms generated by her energies deployed in the symmetries of her maṇḍala. She pervades the maṇḍala as Sound, just as she does the universe, by means of her mantras and the energies of the letters and visually by her iconic forms and those of her attendants. Indeed, the goddess is the maṇḍala. It is her body. The development (vikāsa) of the maṇḍala is her unfolding. Forming herself into the maṇḍala, she is the goddess who unfolds (vikāsā). In geometric terms, the fullness of this expansion is her complete (pūrṇa) hexagonal form. When the texts represent the goddess as the source or inner core of reality, she is the triangular Yoni. When they represent the goddess in her most completely manifest form she is 'sixfold' (ṣaṭprakāra). In geometrical terms her 'sixfold' nature is the Hexagram that contains the Krama. In iconic terms, it is represented by the goddess's six faces and limbs.

Initially, in the KMT, Kubjikā's six faces are represented as six energies embodied in as many Yoginīs. In the subsequent Tantras they develop into six Great Goddesses on a par with Kubjikā herself. Kubjikā says in the KuKh that she is sixfold because she is the six goddesses of her faces. Thus the faces are not just parts of the goddess. Each face is a goddess who is Kubjikā in her entirety.[1]

Tantric deities possess a standard set of six limbs into which their mantras are divided. These are: 1) Heart – hṛdaya 2) Head – śiras 3) Topknot – śikhā 4) Armour – kavaca 5) Third Eye – netra 6) Weapon – astra. A simple set of six Yoginīs may correspond to these limbs. When deities have six faces they are commonly worshipped together with their limbs as happens with Kubjikā[2] in her later Tantras. In the KMT, the limbs serve as loci of projections of a series of goddesses. Although their worship is described extensively in three chapters of the KMT, they are considered to be Kubjikā's attendants (dūti), not the entire goddess. Each of them is the deity of a Tantra and governs one of the six wheels

---

[1] By virtue of (my) Void nature (śūnyasvarūpa) I am Parā (the Supreme and my) body is divine. I am that goddess Mālinī. I am that Siddhayoginī. I am that certain (inscrutable) (kācit) (goddess) Kālikā. I am indeed Kulayogeśvarī. I am that goddess Carcikā and I am Kubjikā who is sixfold. KuKh 3/70-71.

[2] See KuKh 10, note 11.

(cakra) in the subtle body. However, they are not associated with Kubjikā's six faces, probably because the form with six faces had not yet become Kubjikā's most basic one. We shall have occasion to outline them elsewhere.[1] In the present context we may note that half of these goddesses coincide with those that came to be associated with the faces. Kālikā, who is the southern face, is the deity of the Heart. Parā (along with Raktacāmuṇḍā), who is the goddess of the uppermost face, is the Eye. Siddhayogeśvarī, who is the eastern face, is the Head. She is Juṣṭacaṇḍālinī who appears in the KuKh as an independent form of Kubjikā who governs the Transmission of the Aged.[2]

The six limbs and faces may be worshipped in the hexagram of Kubjikā's maṇḍala. Kubjikā integrates them in the Point in centre where she is worshipped surrounded by her six aspects. They are installed in the body by depositing (nyāsa) the six parts of the goddess's Vidyā corresponding to her faces and limbs onto it.[3] In this way the worshipper is purified by identifying with the goddess's body, which is a single, composite deity made of divine sonic forms. Thus we can compare three contexts in which the goddess's faces are worshipped. One is the goddess herself in six forms, another as the faces of her iconic form and a third as the six parts of her Vidyā. These three cover what we might call the deity's essential, iconic and sonic representations, respectively.

Variants are a common feature of Tantric texts as they are of all Sanskrit scriptural sources. Although they are in many cases the result of a lack of systematic confrontation of textual sources with one another in the course of their redaction, variants often serve significant functions in a system. They allow for the flexibility that admits nuances in forms and practice that, at times, resonant with meaning, personalize the cult as it develops through its transmission. Thus variants may also indicate changes and developments in a system.[4]

Indeed, in the broadest sense, Tantric systems, their deities and pantheons, are largely built up through variations in the contents of common paradigms. The possibility of generating forms and organising them by projecting their corresponding mantras is literally unlimited. However, these possibilities are confined because the Deity who is the focus of a Tantric system is necessarily understood and worshipped in the context of that system and in accord with it. Thus, as variants of the generic paradigmatic forms we recognise as 'Tantric',

---

[1] See KuKh vol. 4, appendix 3.

[2] See chart at the end of the appendix mentioned in the previous note.

[3] The mantras of the limbs and faces are formed from parts of the goddess's Vidyā and a simple invocation of the goddesses associated with them. See KuKh 10/14 ff. and notes for the details and variant forms of this procedure.

[4] One example in this context is the northern face of the goddess. Generically perceived, she is Kubjikā who is the Yogeśvarī of her Kula (KuKh 3/70-71). She is Lakṣmī or Mahālakṣmī in the iconic form descibed in the YKh and Tripurā in the one described in the KuKh.

specific modalities are established that characterize a particular system and with it the central deities and all the rest that constitutes the system they govern and of which they are the focus. We find numerous fixed schemes; that deities have six limbs, is one such. We also find more specific schemes that may not be common to many forms. The six faces Kubjikā possesses is an example. We also find schemes that are particular to a system which thus serve to specify it. The triadic form of the goddess of the Trika Tantras is an example. The sixfold character (saṭprakāra) of Kubjikā, who is repeatedly declared such in her Tantras, is another. Each system develops the generic Tantric paradigms and the more specific ones it draws from other systems in its own way and, in particular, its own specific, characteristic paradigms. These are concretely represented in the deities, major and minor, their corresponding mantras, and their arrangement in maṇḍalas, iconic forms, projections onto the body, layers of worlds, metaphysical principles, energies and so on.

Thus there are, as one would expect, variants in the presentations of the goddess's sixfold nature, iconic form and Vidyā. For convenience the goddesses six faces chosen in the following account are the ones we find in the iconic form described in chapter 29 of our text, the Kumārikākhaṇḍa.[1]

Uppermost Face - Parā

Parā is Kubjikā's uppermost face symbolizing that the goddess Parā embodies Kubjikā's most elevated undifferentiated, aniconic aspect, her 'void form' (śūnyarūpa). All Great Kaula Goddesses are Parā. Even so, Kubjikā as Parā is especially related to Parā, the Supreme Goddess of the Trika. They are both Mahāmāyā[2] and Kubjikā, like Parā of the Trika, sits on the central prong of the Trika Trident which, in the Kubjikā system, is projected into the middle of the Wheel of the Skyfarers at the End of the Twelve.

---

[1] We may compare the following versions from: A) Kumārikākhaṇḍa - 1) The six faces as forms of Kubjikā (KuKh 3/70-71; variants labelled KuKh b), 2) the faces of the icon (KuKh 29/45-50) and 3) Vidyā (KuKh 10/22-23). B) Yogakhaṇḍa (1) – 1) the faces of the icon (labelled YKh (1) a) and 2) faces of the Vidyā (labelled YKh (1) b) (see notes to KuKh 10/14 ff):

1) Uppermost: Parā (YKh (1) b: Śivonmanī) 2) Upper: Mālinī (YKh (1) b: Amarī) 3) East: Siddhayogeśvarī (YKh (1) b: Siddhavāgeśvarī) 4) South: Kālī 5) North: Tripurā (KuKh b: Kulayogeśvarī; YKh (1) a: Mahālakṣmī and YKh (1) b: Lakṣmī) 6) Umākhecarī (KuKh b: Carcikā; YKh (1) a: Umābhagavatī, YKh (1) b: Umādevī).

[2] KuKh 13/61cd-62.

Upper and Eastern Face – Mālinī and Siddhayogeśvarī

The epithet 'siddhayoginī' or even 'siddhayogeśvarī' can describe any of the Great Kaula Goddesses.[1] Or the word may simply be used in the literal sense to mean an accomplished Yoginī.[2] So there may be some doubt in some cases whether Siddhayogeśvarī, the goddess of the Trika, is meant. However, there are ample references that confirm that she was well known to the Kubjikā Tantras. Her Tantra, the Siddhayogeśvarīmata, which is considered to be the root Trika Tantra,[3] is known to the KuKh[4] and other Kubikā Tantras,[5] as is the Mālinīvijayottara, another important Trika Tantra which is highly respected by the Kubjikā sources.[6]

Kubjikā is identified with Siddhayogeśvarī along with Mālinī, Parā, and Rudraśakti, all forms and names of the main goddess of the Trika, in the Mālinīstava where, like Kubjikā herself in places,[7] she is referred to as a Yoginī. In the equivalent hymn in the ŚM, the Bhairavīstotra, Kubjikā is also identified with Siddhayogeśvarī[8] along with other goddess, just as she is praised as such in other hymns.[9] She is mentioned in a few places in the Kubjikā Tantras in the company of her consort, Triśirobhairava, who lends his name to an important Trika Tantra frequently quoted by Abhinavagupta. For example, according to the AS she is the Yoginī of a mythical place called Mahāviśva where she resides with Triśirobhairava.[10] Thus, like the other Great Goddesses, Siddhayogeśvarī is not only the one Supreme Goddess; she is also one amongst many. Thus she appears regularly as one of the goddesses invoked in mantras that form a part of the main Transmissions (krama). She is also a Yoginī of place. The goddess imparted the knowledge (jñāna) of Siddhayogeśvarī to Ṣaṣṭhanātha in a cave near Kollāpura[11] and she resides in Jālandhara.[12] In the sacred sites she is invoked as the leader of many Yoginīs. The ŚM prescribes a method to invoke Yoginīs that involves the drawing of a maṇḍala in an appropriate place such as a sacred seat or crossroad in [1] Examples of this usage are found in KuKh 24/66cd-67ab and KuKauM 20/383. Törzsök (1999: ii ff.) notes that this is also the case with the proper name Siddhayogeśvarī in her homonymous Tantra.

---

[2] For examples of this usage see KuKh 6/65, 30/11, and 61/8.
[3] See chapter one of the Śrītantrasadbhāva and chapter 36 of the TĀ.
[4] See KuKh 30/156 and 68/27.
[5] See CMSS 7/26, ŚM 14/199, 20/181, AS 28 fol. 117a.
[6] See note to 5/78cd-9ab with reference to 68/126cd-128.
[7] KuKh 4 Mālinīstava, line 10.
[8] ŚM 2 last line of stotra.
[9] See KuKh 5/81cd-82ab and notes to ibid. 5/72cd-73ab and 5/78cd-79ab.
[10] AS 6/81.
[11] AS 8/144-146.
[12] KuKh 6/65 and 61/8.

the centre of which Siddhayogeśvarī is worshipped.[1] She may also appear as just one of the Sixty-four Yoginīs.[2]

As the Great Goddess in the Kubjikā Tantras, she is Kubjikā herself as Siddhayoginī and one of the six goddesses with which she is identified.[3] Siddhayogeśvarī is the goddess's head, the second of her six limbs (aṅga).[4] She is the third of the goddess's six faces, the one facing east (pūrva).[5] One wonders whether the location of this face was not chosen to imply that the goddess's previous (pūrva) face was that of this goddess from whom, amongst others, she developed, integrating them into herself in the process.

Mālinī

Another two of the goddess's faces are closely associated with the Trika Tantras. These are those of the goddess Parā, who enjoys the prestige of being the uppermost face, and Mālinī who is the face just below it. We are reminded of Mālinī in the SYM who sustains Parā in her topknot.[6] Mālinī is known to other earlier Tantric schools, such as that of the BY, but does not yet appear to have assumed this particular role, considered to be especially important both by the Trika Tantras and those of the goddess Kubjikā. In the Brahmayāmala, for example, Mālinī appears several times as just a Yoginī amongst others. But she does also appear there once, at least, as a major goddess.[7] Similarly, in the Jayadrathayāmala Mālinī appears in several instances as one of many Yoginīs. There, moreover, we find that forms of the goddess Kālī may sometimes be secondarily identified as forms of Mālinī. The latter is given various names by

---

[1] ŚM 24/197ff..
[2] AS 12/165 see also AS 8/146, KnT 1/106, ŚM 14/198, 23/204.
[3] KuKh 3/70.
[4] Concerning Kubjikā's six limbs, see KuKh vol. 2 appendix 3.
[5] KuKh 29/47 and ŚM 14/197-198.
[6] See above, p. 131-132.
[7] After describing Parā Māyā, the Brahmayāmala goes on to describe the Aparā form:

I will explain the lower form of Māyā, which is Mālinī. She possesses countless cavities and is (dark brown) like haritāla, a cloud or mud. She is the supreme Vidyā and her form is like a beehive. She is the colour of a red lotus and is beautiful in all the directions of space. She pervades with (her) great vitality (mahaujas) all that is made of Speech.

aparāṁ tu pravakṣyāmi māyārūpāṁ tu mālinīm |
anekakandaropetā [k, kh: anekan- tāṁ] haritālābhrapaṅkavat [k: hatitālābhrapajyavat] ||
madhukośasamākārā vidyā paramarūpinī |
raktotpaladalaprakhyā [k, kh: raktau- - khya] sarvadikṣūpaśobhitā [k, kh: sarvodikṣopaśobhitam] ||
yat kiṁcid vāgmayaṁ sarvaṁ [k, kh: sarva] vyāpayantī [k, kh: -nti] mahaujasā [k, kh: mahājasām] |
BY 32/52-54ab.

prefixing other names to the beginning of her name like Vīryamālinī, for Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī.

While all major Kaula goddesses are identified with Parā, the close identification of Kubjikā with Mālinī is a very specific marker of her roots in the Trika tradition. Mālinī is the goddess identified with Kubjikā, who is mentioned by far the most times in the KMT. Indeed, apart from Kubjikā, Mālinī is the goddess to whom the KMT refers more than any other.[1] At times, Mālinī, is just a direct substitute for the name Kubjikā.[2] The hymn Bhairava intones to evoke her out of the Liṅga is addressed to Mālinī. Kubjikā's identification with Mālinī is so basic that the tradition she establishes is called the Mālinīkula,[3] just as she is Kulamālinī.[4]

As Mālinī, Kubjikā is the triangular Yoni which is the womb of all mantras.[5] She gathers within herself all the energies of the letters arranging them, as it were, in a garland (mālayitvā) and so is called Mālinī ('She who Wears a Garland').[6] As the Goddess of Speech – Vāgīśvarī[7] – Mālinī is the aggregated energies of Speech that develops out of the undifferentiated, non-vocalic Silence (avarṇa) as countless forms of words.[8] Although always one, as the triadic goddess of the Trika, consisting of the energies of will, knowledge and action, she assumes the form of the fifty letters threaded together like the flowers on a garland (mālā). Thus, she pervades the universe of words and all the 70 billions (koṭi) of mantras are 'stamped with her energy'.[9] Thus, she is universal pervasion (sarvavyāptimayī). Just as fragrance pervades scented wood, similarly, Mālinī's energy pervades all mantras and renders them effective. Moreover, she is Mālinī because she is the one energy that emerges from the transcendent in which all the energies are gathered together. She 'destroys impurity' (malanāśinī).[10] Her name

---

[1] There are at least twenty-three direct references to Mālinī in the KMT. The great majority, if not all, are explicit or implicit identifications with Kubjikā.
[2] See, for example, KMT 20/21b: vadate mālinī kas tvaṁ devo 'haṁ kim upāgataḥ |
māṁ tvaṁ kathaṁ na jānāsi devi tvaṁ kena nirmitā || KMT 1/73.
again: vīrāvalīti tena tvaṁ rudraśaktiḥ praśasyase
vadate mālinī kruddhā tvatsvakīyaiḥ śarīrajaiḥ || KMT 1/76.
also: aho devyāḥ prabhāvas tu iti cintā jagatpateḥ
stunoti vividhaiḥ stotrair devo bhuvanamālinīm || KMT 1/80.
[3] See, for example, KuKh 4/33cd-34.
[4] KMT 18/39.
[5] See vol. 1, p. 282 ff..
[6] KMT 4/107cd-108ab.
[7] Mālinīstava line 14.
[8] avarṇā varṇasaṁyogā mālinī sā udāhṛtā ||
padabhedagatā hy ekā asaṅkhyātā varānane | KMT 5/99cd-100ab.
[9] KMT 6/83-85.
[10] jaya tvaṁ mālinī devī nirmale malanāśinī | KMT 2/1ab.

is then derived from the word 'mala' - 'impurity' - rather than 'mālā' – 'garland'. Thus the AS teaches:

> She abides in the beginning in (the energies that) have been gathered together (malayitva) within a subtle measure (of energy) (mātrā), like a grain of wheat. That energy which moves in a slant and, tranquil, breaks through the condition of the mind as (she) matures impurities (mala) by means of knowledge, is Mālinī in the Kula.[1]

Abhinavagupta proposes another Tantric etymology he learnt from his teacher Śambhunātha. This one explains the nature of this energy, how it operates when the letters of the alphabet, 'sustained' by the Rudras, and arranged in the Mālinī sequence, are deposited onto the body. Mālinī is Kuṇḍalinī who rises through the body as the letters are deposited on it. She makes a buzzing sound, like that of a black bee, as she consumes the impurity that sullies and binds the soul. Once activated in this way, this energy is present and operative in mantras.

> Mālinī is sustained (mālitā) by the Rudras[2] and sustains supernatural powers and liberation. The fruits she administers are like a garland (mālā) of flowers and, as such, is worthy of worship. The sound it suggests, which is like that of a bee, is that of reabsorbtion (mā). She has the power to give (rā) and to take (lā) because the semi-vowels Ra and La are interchangeable.[3]

Mālinī is the embodiment of a 'female' form of the alphabet called nādiphānta that begins with the letter Na and ends with Pha and so she is sometimes called Nādiphāntā. Abhinavagupta tells us that several such alphabets of which the letters are 'disarranged' (vyasta) are found in the Tantras, but this is the most important one. It is described in chapter 18 of our text, to which the reader is referred. This alphabet, combined with its projection onto the goddess's body and, by extension, onto that of the adept appears to be a development that originated in the Trika Tantras. The Mālinī alphabet is coupled with the 'male' form, called Śabdarāśi – the Assembly of Sounds, in which the letters are arranged in the normal alphabetical order.

---

[1] malayatve sthitā cādau [nādau] yavamātrāntare tu yā |
yā mātrā tiryagā śāntā [sāntā] manobhāvavibhedinī ||
malānāṁ jñānapākena tena [tenā] sā mālinī kule | AS 5/94-95ab.

[2] Thus in the Mālinīstava (line 13) she is address as 'the one who is worshipped by the garland of Rudras' (rudramālārcite).

[3] TĀ 15/131ab-132.

These two alphabet deities are a basic pair we find in many of the major Bhairava and Kaula Tantras of the early period. Together they serve as the basis of the mantras and Vidyās, especially of the Kaula systems.[1] Mālinī is the energy of the letters that form all mantras. Śabdarāśi is the bare vocalic content – the world of worlds and their meaning – that lives and is an effective universe because it is pervaded by Mālinī, its vital energy.[2] Thus she is Mālinī who is radiant energy and power - Tejomālinī[3] and Śaktimālini.[4] The two – the letters and their energies - go together, they are two aspects of a single reality – the Body of Energy in which the Vidyā resides.[5] In abstract terms, Pure Mālinī (Viśuddhamālinī)[6] is Vyomamālinī – the Mālinī of the Void, who in her infinite expanse nurtures the male (puruṣa), dimensionless Point (bindu).[7] At the supreme summit of ascent in the End of the Twelve, she is the Void in which all diversity dissolves away. Thus Bhairava outlines the goddess's metaphysical identity:

> (Mālinī) is endless, supreme, subtle, omnipresent and both supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent). The supreme energy (kalā), she is the goddess who is consciousness present in the End of the Twelve. She is subtle energy (kalā) and, very subtle, she flows forth as the supreme (life giving) nectar. Her form is (wonderfully diverse) like a peacock's tail and she resides in the Adamantine Wheel (vajracakra). In some places she shines like a network of emeralds, elsewhere she is like (a black) storm cloud. The goddess (Mālinī) resides in the centre of the Void (of the Transcendent) at the end of the merger (of all things) and her form is all things. She who is the supreme goddess resides in the Void and her form is the Void.[8]

---

[1] mālinī śabdarāśiś ca kauliko vidhir uttamaḥ || KMT 4/33cd.
[2] chādayantī samastāṁ tu śabdarāśiṁ tu mālinī | KMT 7/17ab.
praṇavoccārasaṁyuktā vidyā tattvatrayātmikā
śabdamālinimūrtisthā vidyādehaguṇojjvalā || KMT 18/32.
[3] KMT 18/39.
[4] KMT 24/133d.
[5] nādiphāntā varārohe dehaṁ śaktimayaṁ śubham |
siddhapañcāśakopetaṁ mālinyārdhaśatānvitam || KMT 17/110.
[6] KMT 19/40c.
[7] KMT 19/60d. mālinī vyomasaṁsthā ca bindur vyome tathaiva ca |
kulākhyaṁ puruṣaṁ vyome || KMT 19/87ab-88cd.
[8] anantā sā parā sūkṣmā [g: śū-] sarvagā ca parāparā ||
dvādaśāntagatā [kh: ṣoḍaśāntā gatā-; g: dvādaśāntaryatā] devī cidrūpā paramā kalā |
kalā sūkṣmā [g: śū-] susūkṣmā ca sravantī [kh g: śra-] paramāmṛtam [kh: -mṛtā] ||
mayūracandrikākārā vajracakre [g: cakṣurugra] vyavastitā [g: -tāḥ] |
kvacinmarkaṭijālābhā [kh: -markkaṭikājālā-] kvacijjīmūtasaṁnibhāṁ [g: kvacijī-] ||
vyomamadhyagatā [kh: -madhye-] devī layānte [kh: lāyāntaṁ] viśvarūpiṇī |
tathā [g: tasyā] sā [g: ca] paramā devī vyomagā vyomarūpiṇī || ŚM 6/118-121ab.

The visualized iconic form (mūrti) of the goddess Mālinī is as follows:

> She is like the rising sun and is blissful with wine. Very beautiful, she has five faces and is radiant with five time three eyes. She is adorned with beautiful earrings and shines with diadem and crown. She has ten arms adorned with many ornaments. O beloved, (she holds) a bow, javelin, conch, makes the gesture of fearlessness and holds a mirror. (Such) is the divine weapon in her left hands. (She holds) a thunderbolt, arrow, snake, makes a boon bestowing gesture and holds a rosary. O goddess, such is the divine weapon (held) by (her) right (hands).
>
> Three wrinkles (adorn her) middle part and she has large, upraised breasts. She has a necklace and bracelets adorned with jewels and gems. The goddess sits in the adamantine posture on a cot. She wears a garland of vowels on her head and a divine necklace of letters around her neck.[1]

> Mālinī's Heart Vidyā (mālinīhṛdaya) is SHŪAUṀ. It is said to engender universal pervasion and give magical powers. It is located in the middle of the Wheel of the Foundation. The goddess, marked with the sign of the thunderbolt (vajra), is (seated) in the midst of a group of six thunderbolts. The seed-syllable is there, in the middle. It is red like vermilion and lac and shines like the rising sun. When it is visualized together with the victim's name it brings about his control.[2]

---

[1] udayādityasaṁkāśā madirānandananditā ||
pañcavaktrāṁ mahādivyā [g: -devyāṁ] tripañcanayanojjvalā |
divyakuṇḍalaśobhāḍhyā kirīṭamukuṭojjvalā ||
dvipañcakabhujopetā nānālaṅkāramaṇḍitā |
cāpaṁ śaktis tathā kambur [k: kambu; kh, g: -vuṁ] abhayaṁ [g: abhanaṁ] darpaṇaṁ priye || vāmamārge kare [k: re] tasyāḥ[k, kh:-sya; g: vārgakaris tasya] divyāstraṁ ca virājate |
vajraṁ bāṇaṁ tathā sarpaṁ varadaṁ cākṣasūtrakam ||
*dakṣinena [k: * * * *] tathā [k: * thā] devi [g: devī] divyāstraṁ divyarūpiṇam [kh: bhūṣiṇaṁ: g: bhūṣitaṁ]* |
trivalītaraṅgamadhyasthā vṛttonnatapayodharā [kh: vṛtonnata-: g: vṛttenata-] |
hārakeyūraśobhāḍhyā [g: -dyāṁ] maṇiratnavibhūṣitā ||
*vajrāsanagatā [k: -gatāṁ] devī [k: devi; kh g: devī] pretaparyyaṅkasaṁsthitā [k: paryaṅka * sthitām; kh, g: -tāṁ]* |
svaramālā [g: vaḍa-] śire divyā [kh: divyāṁ; g: ramyāṁ] varṇahārāvalambinī [g: -hārāvanaṁvinī] || ŚM 6/131-136.

[2] ŚM folio 56a.

Mālinī

Each Vidyā and its iconic form have two aspects. One is the transcendent, inner metaphysical identity of the goddess, which is the source of liberation. One could identify this as the Brahminical dimension of the deity in its most essential form. The goddess 'with form' (sakalā) the devotee visualizes protects and nourishes, just as she can punish and cause suffering. This is the non-Brahminical dimension of the goddess modeled on the form and activity of her countless sisters scattered throughout every corner of India in villages, towns, out in the fields, under trees, and in mountain caves. In the scriptures, her jurisdiction is extended far beyond the confines of a village or town to cover the entire land and empires of might kings to whom she bestows her magical powers of control and subjugation. Assisted by her attendants, she fights with demons, witches and ghosts, engaging in battles for the kings, great and small, who are her devotees.

She dispenses magical and yogic powers, with the same ease with which she can annul them. Her outer activity is gracing and chastising – giving and taking away. Her devotee attains her supreme vacuous, non-phenomenal form by sharing in the inner state of the goddess – her emptiness and with it her universal pervasive presence in all things (sarvavyāpti), as their essential nature.

The bridge between the two aspects – magical and soteriological – is trance and possession through which village deities – especially 'angry' and 'ferocious' ones – make their presence felt. Combined with the attributes and power of supreme Brahminical deities, trance is transformed into Yoga and possession becomes the vehicle of grace that leads quickly and directly to liberation.

Trikhaṇḍā – the Samayā Vidyā

Mālinī's special association with mantras is not only generic. She is vitally linked in a special way to the most essential core of the mantras that constitute Kubjikā's multiple sonic identity. This intimate relationship is derived from their common Trika roots. This is apparent in the configuration of her Vidyās, especially the Three Vidyās, Parā, Parāparā and Aparā. This is the earliest cluster and is expounded in the SYM. A later cluster, taught in the TS, links Mālinī to a long mantra called Trikhaṇḍā[1] (the Vidyā in Three Sections) which echoes the basic tripartite nature of the goddess in a different way as the energies of Rudra, Maheśvara and Viṣṇu who are the Three Parts. It is adapted to the Kubjikā system by identifying it as a version of the Samayā Vidyā of Kubjikā, although she is not mentioned anywhere in the mantra. The ŚM describes her as follows:

---

[1] Concerning this mantra see above, p. 175, note 5.

Trikhaṇḍā

> That energy which is supreme, subtle, endless, and pervasive (is the goddess) who is consciousness. Supreme and divine, she abides (in the objective sphere as each) moment of time (trūṭi). Endless, pervasive and divine, she resides in the Void (of the transcendent) and her form is the Point. She is the divine nectar within emission (visargasthā). She is activity (cāra) (itself) that resides in the (pure transcendent reality) devoid of (phenomenal) activity (acāra). (Although she is thus) unmanifest, she possesses a manifest (form) (vyakti). (Now) I will explain her manifest (form).[1]
>
> She has three sections (trikhaṇḍā), three faces, a divine form and large belly. She has three eyes on each face and is blissful with wine. (The face) in front is white like snow, a jasmine flower or the moon. Content and tranquil, its gaze is immersed in subtle contemplation and, radiant with divine jewels, is adorned with jewel earrings. (The second face) is dark like a storm cloud and the eyes red as blood. It has fierce fangs and is adorned with snakes for earrings. The expression is mildly fierce and a skull (adorns) the topknot on the head. The third face is on the left (uttara). It is yellow and red and shines with brilliant rays, its light (pure) divine radiant energy (tejas). It is beautiful with many gems and the ears are adorned with earrings. It bears a radiantly brilliant diadem and crown.[2]
>
> A necklace of divine jewels (hangs) from her neck and (there is) one of forest flowers around her head and a necklace of letters. She

---

[1] yā sā śaktiḥ [kh g: śakti] parā śūkṣmā anantā vyāpikā [kh g: vyāpakā] parā ǀ cidrūpā [g: vi-] paramā divyā [g: vidyā] truṭirūpā [kh: trūṭi-; g: tuti-] vyavasthitā ǁ anantā vyāpikā [kh g: vyāpakā] divyā vyomasthā bindurūpiṇī [g: viṁdū-] ǀ visargasthā amṛtā divyācārasthā cārarūpiṇī ǁ avyaktā vyaktamāpannā tasyā vyaktiṁ vadāmy aham ǀ ŚM 6/5-7ab.

[2] trikhaṇḍā ca trivaktrā [k, g: trivargā] ca divyā rūpā mahodarā ǁ tritrikair [g: dvi-] nayanair yuktā madirānandananditā ǀ pūrvataḥ [kh g: -to] śvetavarṇābhaṁ himakundendusannibham ǁ prasannavadanaṁ saumyaṁ kiñciddhyānanirīkṣakam [g: kiṁci- nirīkṣakā] ǀ divyaratnojjvalaṁ devi karṇakuṇḍalamaṁḍitam ǁ nīlameghasamaprakhyaṁ raktāruṇanibhekṣaṇam ǀ daṁṣṭrakarālaraudraṁ [kh g: daṁṣṭrā-] ca phaṇikuṇḍalabhūṣitam ǁ īṣatkarālavadanaṁ kapālakṛtaśekharam [g: -śeṣaraṁ] ǀ tṛtīyaṁ cottaraṁ vaktraṁ pītāruṇasamaprabham ǁ sudīptakiraṇābhāsaṁ [g: -dīptaṁ-; kh: -bhāṣaṁ] divyatejasamaprabham [kh: -tejaḥsamaḥ-] ǀ nānāratnakṛtāṭopaṁ karṇau kuṇḍalabhūṣitam ǁ atidīptisutejāḍhyaṁ [kh: mahādīptaṁ-] kirīṭimukuṭojjvalam [g: kiriṭi-] ǀ Ibid. 6/7cd-13ab.

has six well adorned arms. O beautiful eyes! There is a trident, dagger, and sword in the right (hands) mirror, club (kheṭaka), and skull (kādya) in the left. (Her) weapon has death as its face (kālānana) and, flaming, it consumes (lelihāna) and is hard to bear. The goddess sits in the diamond posture on a lotus below which is a great ghost (mahāpreta), terrible in form and frightening. His arms are upraised and he looks at the goddess's face.

The goddess is enveloped in divine clothes and is adorned with many kinds of flowers. She is the Great Light (mahābhāsā) and, shining intensely, she is in the middle of the Wheel of Mothers each of whom has four arms, three eyes and a topknot. Each holds a sword, club, skull (kādya) and makes a boon bestowing gesture. They have many ornaments. Their form is divine and beautiful. They shine and, possessing many forms, they are beautiful. Each is seated on her own vehicle in the lotus posture. The enemy lies at their feet and, controlled by a spell (vaśyakarṣita), is consumed along with (offerings of) meat and the like by (their) servants, Vetālas, Ḍākinīs, and ghosts. Very fierce, they strike (the enemy and) drink streams of (his) blood.

When the goddess is visualized in this way, she accomplishes everything one wishes to achieve. O beloved, she should be worshipped with effort with meat, liquor and the rest in a temple dedicated to the Mothers (mātṛsthāna), a cremation ground, a derelict house, at a crossroads or in one's own home. O goddess, when she is worshipped she fulfils every desire.[1]

---

[1] divyaratnamayā [kh: -mahā; g: -mayāṁ] mālā [g: mālāṁ] kaṇṭhe cāsyā virājate || vaḍamālā śire tasyā varṇahārāvalambinī |
dvādaśārdhabhujopetā [kh: -bhūjo-] nānālaṁkārabhūṣitā [kh: -maṇḍitā] ||
triśūlaṁ kartṛkā [kh: karttikā] khaḍgaṁ dakṣiṇe ca [kh g: na] virājante [kh: -jataṁ; g: -jate] |
darpaṇaṁ kheṭakaṁ kādyaṁ vāmamārge sulocane ||
astraṁ kālānanaṁ dīptaṁ [g: ditptaṁ] lelihānaṁ suduḥsaham |
vajrāsanagatā devī padmasyopari saṁsthitā ||
padmādhasthān mahāpretaṁ [kh g: -sthāt-; g: -preta] raudrarūpaṁ bhayānakam [kh: bhāyānanaṁ] |
ūrdhvabāhur mahātejaṁ [kh: -vāhu mahātejāṁ; g: -vāhuṁ-] devyānananirīkṣakam ||
divyavastrāvṛtā devī nānāpuṣpopaśobhitā [kh g: -tāḥ] |
dedīpyantī [kh: dedīpyaṁtā; g: dedivyamāntā] mahābhāsā mātṛcakrasya madhyagā ||
caturbhujā mahātejā trinetrā kṛtaśekharāḥ [k, kh: -rā; g: -śeṣarāḥ] |
khaḍgakheṭakasannaddhāḥ [k, g: -sannaddhā] varadāḥ [k, g: -dāḥ] kādyasaṁyutāḥ [k: -tā] ||
nānābharaṇasaṁyuktā [kh: -sampannā] divyarūpā [kh: divyamālā] manoharāḥ [k, g: -rā; kh: vibhūṣitā] |
ratnoddyotanibhā [kh g: ratnodyota-] dīptā nānārūpā manoharāḥ [k, kh, g: -rā] ||
svasvavāhanamārūḍhāḥ [k, kh., g: -ḍhā] padmāsanavyavasthitāḥ [k, g: -tā] |
śatru [k, g: cakraṁ; kh: śatrūṁ] pādatale nyastaṁ kravyādaiḥ vaśyakarṣitam [kh g: paśya-] ||
vetālair ḍākinībhūtaiḥ kiṁkaraiś caiva bhakṣitam |

The Southern Face - Kālī

Kubjikā's relationship with Kālī, the goddess of the Kālīkrama, is as vital and intimate as it is with Parā and Mālinī, the goddesses of the Trika. Kubjikā can be said to be a form or development of Kālī, just as she is of the Trika goddess, although in different ways. The connection with the latter requires the tacit maintenance of continuity. Changes and adjustments to the Trika goddess's nature are barely perceptible. The Mālinī of the Trika Tantras continues to be Mālinī as Kubjikā. There is no essential change in nature or character of the goddess, she has simply been transported into a different environment, a new maṇḍala and adorned with new mantras. All this takes place quietly, inwardly, as it were. The change from Kālī to Kubjikā is, on the contrary, a formidable event. After centuries of empowering contemplation within Bhairava's Liṅga the gentle and auspicious (bhadrā) young virgin (kumārikā) Kālikā is transformed. In the Mālinīstava Bhairava addresses to the goddess in the Liṅga of Space, he calls her Kālikā[1] and even Mahākālī who is 'the radiant energy (tejas) of the Fire of Time.'[2] She emerges from the Liṅga, fierce, dark blue and red and bent over (kubjā) a sign that she has become the goddess Kubjikā.[3] But even though the change is great, it is not total. Kālī is still a part of her. The Little Kālī is the goddess's Heart, the third of her six limbs. Guhyakālī, an important form of Kālī,[4] also known as Pratyaṅgirā, who embodies the spirit of retaliation or 'response' (which is what Pratyaṅgirā literally means) is her Weapon, her sixth and most powerful limb.[5] Thus, as much as one third of the goddess remains Kālī in some form.

In the KMT, forms of Kālī that embody energies of the goddess also appear as Yoginīs in the goddess's entourage deployed in the Wheels of her subtle body. These include Aṭṭahāsā,[6] Kaṅkālī,[7] Karaṅkinī,[8] Karālī / Karālā, Karālikā / Karālinī,[9] Kālarātrī,[1] Śākinī,[2] Kālarodhanī,[3] Kālavamanī,[4] Kālasaṁvartinī,[5] Kālī,[6]

---

tāḍayanti [k: -antī; g: nāḍayanti] mahā-ugrāḥ [k, kh, g: -ugrā] śoṇitaughaṁ [kh: soṇitaugha] pibanti [k: pivantī] ca ||
evaṁ dhyātā mahādevī sarvakāmārthasādhanī [kh: -kī] |
pūjanīyā [kh: pūjitavyā; g: -ya] prayatnena aliphalagvādibhiḥ priye ||
mātṛsthāne śmaśāne vā śūnyāgāre ca [g: ṣu] catvare |
svagṛhe athavā devi [g: + sarvakāmārthasādhanī] pūjitā sarvakāmadā | ŚM 6/13cd-24.

[1] Mālinīstava line 126.
[2] Ibid. line 116.
[3] See intro. vol. 1 p. 38.
[4] See intro. vol. 2, p. 349.
[5] See KuKh, vol. 4, appendix 3 concerning these limbs of the goddess.
[6] KMT 21/37d, 24/137d, 25/49b.
[7] KMT 21/37b, 42d.
[8] KMT 21/37b.
[9] E.g. KMT 2/57d, 15/30c, 21/55d and 21/42d, respectively.

Sukālī, and Kaṅkālakālī. Mahākālī is the goddess of the letter Ma in the Mālinī alphabet. Bhadrakālī and Sukālī are two of the Yoginīs who preside over the thirty-two syllables of Aghora mantra. The same group appears as the beings who preside over the thirty-two consonants in the Wheel of the Moon in the Wheel of the Skyfarers.

However, apart from the Kālī's prominent presence in Kubjikā's body as two of her limbs, Kālī, and her forms do not play a major role in Kubjikā's identity in the KMT. The situation is same in the ṢSS and the ŚM, which although expansions of the KMT, have not developed this possibility. However, as the Kubjikā corpus and its doctrines evolve Kālī becomes an increasingly prominent aspect of both Kubjikā's inner nature and her outer representations. One wonders whether this is just the result of a development of Kubjikā's devotees' tastes. Is it related to the shift of the centre of the cult to the Deccan and the western seaboard? The Kālīkrama, which is not mentioned at all in the KMT, is mentioned repeatedly in later sources. One wonders whether the increased presence of Kālī in the Kubjikā tradition reflects the developing importance of the cult of the goddess Kālī and the growth of independent scriptural traditions centered on her.

As we go through the sources we observe how this situation changes. As the tradition develops Kālī emerges, as we would expect, as Kubjikā's aged form (vṛddharūpa) who governs the Transmission of the Aged. The goddess of this transmission, according to the KMT, is Khañjikā, who is Kubjikā herself. But although she is not said to be Kālī, there are already hints of the future developments. Like Kālī, the goddess of Time and Death, Khañjikā 'takes the life-breath from the fettered and cuts through the net of (their) fetters'[7] and she is said to be very 'fierce'. She is the Doomsday Fire that burns in the centre of the Kramamaṇḍala. As such she retains some of Kālī's inner nature who is 'the radiant energy (tejas) of the Fire of Time.'[8] The link is not made directly, nonetheless, it hints at the future development of Kālī's presence within Kubjikā as her energy, which we shall examine further ahead. YKh (1) retains Khañjinī as the 'aged' goddess's mild, transcendental form, who is the stainless (nirñjanā), pure white and pervasive energy of Kuṇḍalinī. However, it adds to it an immanent form: 'the Kālī of the great Bhairava', who, on the contrary, drinks blood and eats impure bodily products. She is not at all the mild, young virgin Kālikā. This Kālī

---

[1] She appears as a Dvīpadevī in KMT 21/37a.
[2] KMT 2/43d.
[3] KMT 18/49.
[4] KMT 18/43.
[5] KMT 21/73d.
[6] KMT 20/62a, 24/138c and 25/115d.
[7] KMT 17/26.
[8] Mālinīstava line 116.

is very fierce and her 'gaze is severe (koṭarākṣī)'. She consumes impurity, digests and transforms it into the pure vitalizing energy of Emptiness. The goddess who appears out of the Liṅga is a young form of Kubjikā. She is 'red and dark blue' and somewhat fierce. She is the form (mūrti) of the energy of bliss that, 'beautifully horrific' (subhīmā), spreads out from the Point (= Liṅga) in the centre to pervade the maṇḍala. She is young. She is the goddess who 'descends into the world' in this Age of Strife and her Transmission is that of the Child. Her mildness, is represented by her 'subtleness' and the elevated Transmental state she embodies. But, as the 'gross' form of the goddess of the Transmission of the Aged, according to the KRU, she is black and formidable. Her name is not mentioned but it is clear that she is Kālī who, as the Tantra says is 'very fierce' and destroys the universe by licking it up.[1] By the time we get to the SKh the Aged One is in a special way the 'Kubjikā of liberation'.[2] She is 'the supreme Kubjā who in her supreme form is Kālikā.'[3] At the end of this process of developing identification, Kubjikā is totally identified with Kālī. Kubjikā is not only the goddess of emanation, which is the most dominant feature of her metaphysical and theological identity; she also withdraws the universe back into the Void of her essential nature. Thus, she is Mahākālikā.[4] According to YKh (1) the goddess descends in each Age into the clan of the goddess Amarī.[5] The SKh declares that the goddess who descends in each age is Kālī, as does the KnT, which teaches the following etymology of Kubjikā's name that supports her basic identity as Kālī:

> The letter KU is the seed-syllable of Earth. Abjikā is above. Kā is Kālī who is within Śiva. She, Vakrā, the venerable Kubjikā is victorious. I worship Parā by whom she has been emanated, Kujā who consumes the vital breath (haṁsavṛttidvipa). She, the mistress of (all) living beings, is Kālī in the Age of Strife who resides in the Western House.[6]

---

[1] See above, p. 163.
[2] See above, p. 146, note 2.
[3] See above, p. 146-147.
[4] In the Ādyoghadaṇḍakastotra in chapter 12 of Ykh (1) Kubjikā is addressed as: (You who) bring about emanation and withdrawal! O goddess Mahākālikā! sṛṣṭisaṁhārakāre mahākālike devi MS Kh fl. 81b.
[5] See above, p. 170.
[6] kukāraḥ pārthivo [gh: pāthivo] bījo abjikoparisaṁsthitaḥ |
kā kālī śivagā [ṅ: śivakā] vakrā [g: vaktrā; ṅ: nāsti] sā śrīkubjikā jayati ||
sṛṣṭā [gh: sṛstā] yayā parā vicce [g gh ṅ: vicca] haṁsavṛttidvipakujā [g: hasavṛttidvipa; gh: -dvipa; ṅ: haṁsavarttidvīpe] | sā janeśī kalau [g: kalo] kālī saṁsthitā paścime gṛhe || KnT 1/3-4.

According to the KuKh Kubjikā is the pure form of Kālikā.[1] The AS not only asserts that Kubjikā is Kālī, Kālī is essentially Kubjikā:

> She descends down onto the beautiful Island of the Moon. Kubjikā, otherwise called Kālikā, is the authority of the Siddhas. May, Kālī, the venerable Kubjikā of the previous Avvāmata protect (us).[2]

The Thirty-two syllable Samayā Vidyā is the sonic form of the goddess of the New Moon.[3] As the Full Moon, she is encapsulated with the Five Praṇavas. Kālī is the energy on the 'head' of Kubjikā seed-syllable AIṀ. There she is represented by the Half Moon which symbolizes the energy of the New Moon and is her seat.[4] She is the supreme Kālī who emerges there on top of the Yoni (bhagamūrdhni).[5] The New Moon (Amā) is the original form (bimba) of Kālī. Kālī is the Moonlight (candrikā) within the Full Moon[6] feeding it inwardly with lunar energy. Present in the same way in her outwardly visible icon (bahirlakṣamūrti) Kālī 'whose form is crooked'[7] is within Kubjikā as Kuṇḍalinī, her spiritual energy.[8] In the same way she is in the subtle body, purifying it as she moves through it. Piercing through its vulnerable points (marman), Kālī destroys the impure fettered body and regenerates it in a pure form.[9]

Within the pure lunar body of the goddess, she is Śuṣkā,[10] the Emaciated One who also called Kṛṣā (Thin), is an aspect of the goddess of the Kālīkrama. The Devīpañcaśataka describes how Śuṣkā should be drawn and where the letters are projected onto her body from which they are extracted to form her Vidyā. There we read:

---

[1] KuKh 68/5.
[2] avatāraṁ prakurute candradvīpe manorame ||
adhikāraṁ tu siddhānāṁ kubjikā nāma kālikā |
kālī śrīkubjikā pātu pūrva - avvāmatasya tu || YKh (2) 29/39cd-40.
[3] See above, p. 175.
[4] KuKh 3/10 and 40.
[5] Ibid. 6/187cd-188ab.
[6] Ibid. 3/116.
[7] Kālī, the mistress of the gods, whose form is crooked and (consists of) eight groups of eight (energies of the Yoginīs), is the supreme manifest energy.

*deveśī vakrarūpā [ṅ: ca-] uditaparakalā [ṅ: -lāt] aṣṭakāṣṭā [k, kh: metakāṣṭā; gh: meṣṭakāṣṭā; ṅ: manaka ] ca kālī | YKh (1) 15/80.
[8] The goddess in the middle of the Kuṇḍalinī of Energy (śakti) is the mother of the universe. She is the Supreme (goddess) (Parā), the supreme Kālī, the energy (kalā) of the Supreme Goddess (Parameśvarī). KuKh 39/148.
[9] Ibid. 62/77cd.
[10] KuKh 3/132.

> One should draw the supreme goddess there. She is Śuṣkā and, auspicious, her face is emaciated. She has two arms and one face. She has no flesh and no blood (runs through her veins). (Made of just) tendons and bones, her body is thin and she likes (to eat) human entrails and the like constantly. She is seated on Rudra's severed head and her feet are placed on two (others). On the left is Viṣṇu's head and on the right that of Indra and her legs are bent. She is the first (of all the deities) and fills (and nourishes all things). She is Aghorā and her teeth are fearsome. She makes the great (magical) sound 'phet'. Her hair is tied up (on the top of her head) (ūrdhvakeśī) and, auspicious, she has three eyes and holds a large (sacrificial) vessel. Her breasts are shrivelled up and her belly is very thin. She holds the ear of a small child. Ferocious (raudrā), she is adorned with a garland of severed heads and ornaments made of great snakes. Having drawn her in this form, one should worship the Mother (of the letters) (mātṛkā) there.[1]

These names allude to Kālī's nature as the New Moon and her subtlety beyond measurement. Thus, Kubjikā declares: 'I am a certain (subtle) energy (kalā), (the goddess) Kālī.'[2] Thus, although the goddess's outward form has changed from Kālikā to Kubjikā, Kubjikā continues to abide inwardly as the pure spiritual energy of the Will, which is the source of all Kubjikā's energies and replenishes them. Wild and free, Mahākālī is the tribal Śavarī who, as the one great and pure consciousness, illumines all things. Like the divine Fire that emerges out of the Liṅga, Kālī, full of the energy of Kuṇḍalinī, emerges from Rudra's body. Above the Half Moon is the Point that adorns her. It is the Full Moon that is her crest jewel.[3] She is the energy of AIṀ who regulates and

---

[1] tatrālikhet parāṁ devīṁ śuṣkāṁ śuṣkānanāṁ śivām || dvibhujām ekavaktrāṁ ca māṁsaśoṇitavarjitām |
*snāyvasthikṛśavāpuṣīṁ [k, kh, g: -kṛṣṇavapuṣī.] narāntrādipriyāṁ [k: narāccādi-; g: narāstrādi-; k, kh, g: + priyāṁ] sadā [k: sa *; kh: sa (?)] ||
rudramuṇḍāsanārūḍhāṁ muṇḍadvayapadārpitām [g: -padarpitāṁ] |
vāmake vaiṣṇavaṁ muṇḍaṁ savye [g: savya] muṇḍaṁ viriñcijam ||
*pratyālīḍhe [g: -ḍha] ca karaṇe [k: * raṇe; kh: (?)raṇe] sthitā [g: sthita] sādyā [kh: sādyāḥ; g: sārghā] prapūraṇī |
aghorā ghoradaṁṣṭrā [g: daṣṭrān] tu [g: ta] mahāphetkāranādinī ||
ūrdhvakeśī trinetrā ca mahāpātradharī śivā |
śuṣkastanā kṛśodarī śiśukarṇāvalambinī ||
mahāhnyābharaṇā [k, kh, g: mahāhyā-] raudrā muṇḍamālāvibhūṣitā [g: -vibhūṣaṇā] |
evaṁ rūpadharāṁ likhya mātṛkāṁ [g: -kā] tatra pūjayet || DP 2/74cd-79.

[2] KuKh 24/34.

[3] KuKh 61/75.

Śuṣkā

controls all the other energies (damanāśakti).[1] Thus Kālī as Kubjikā's inner energy is Rudra's energy (rudraśakti). The fierce Supreme Kālī, who knows Rudra, is Rudrāṇī.[2]

Kubjikā is also connected with the goddess Kālī by their common association with temporality and its grounding in eternity. Kubjikā is 'beautifully horrific' (subhīmā). Present in the body as Kuṇḍalinī, the power of bliss (ānandaśakti) is implicitly identified with Kālī:

> The power of bliss resides in the centre of the Stick of the Cavity of Emptiness; she pervades the consciousness of the individual soul and is merged between the two breaths (prāṇa and apāna). Slim of figure, her limbs beautifully diverse, (fashioned) by time and moment, she awakens to (the ultimate) principle. Merged in the (Absolute) which is the bliss of Stillness, she is supreme, imperishable and terrifying.[3]

The life of individual consciousness is made apparent in the activity of the vital breath that gives life to the body, senses and mind in which it resides and are its instruments. This life extends and is 'lived', measured out, by the cycles of time – days and nights, months and years – mirrored in the cycles of the breath. The same is true, in its own way, of Deity. Grounded in the transcendental, non-temporal energy of consciousness of the Deity, the individual soul who is essentially one with it generates time within the Kula, that is, the aggregate of its energies. Time is a process of continuous differentiation of moments one from another. It cannot exist in a single, undifferentiated reality. The differentiation of the energies of the one energy, their separation from one another and merger are the inner breathing of the Kulakrama. Although marking the moments of manifestation and the products of that process mark the passage of time, it is not temporal. Thus Kālī, the goddess of Time, although timeless, generates time by arousing the energies of Kula to assume manifest form:

> Haṁsa (the inner breathing operates) by the impulse of the power of consciousness and the Kulakrama is in the belly of Haṁsa. Kula (the congress of energies) is within the energy of Kaula (the union of Śiva and Śakti). Timeless, it is the process of manifestation (kalana). (She) differentiates (all things) (kalana) and so is (called) Kālikā. She is Kālī, the energy of Kula (kaulikī) (called) Kālakaṅkāla

[1] KuKh 59/78cd-79.
[2] KuKh 60/32cd-33ab.
[3] KuKh 2/4cd-6ab.

(the Skeleton of Time). Time arises within Kula. Free of time it is undisturbed.[1]

The form of Kālī who governs the Kaṅkālakāla[2] - the Skeleton Time – is described at length in the CMSS as the Kālī of the Kula of the Sun (the Bhānavīkula).[3] There she manifests as twelve Kālīs, corresponding to the twelve suns that shine in the twelve months of the year. Thus she is the solar year which is a measure of a complete cycle of time and so, by extension, the totality of existence. This cycle of Kālīs is an important feature of the Kālīkrama.[4]

The Kālīkrama sources know virtually nothing about Kubjikā or her tradition.[5] Whereas, on the contrary, the Kubjikā Tantras know a great deal about Kālī and the Kālīkrama. The intimate relation between Kubjikā and Kālī is reflected in the influence the Kālīkrama has had on the development of the Kubjikā cult. Initially, however, in the KMT the Kālīkrama appears to be unknown although it refers to the 'great Tantra called Kālikā'[6] as the source of the Kālī who is worshipped as Kubjikā's Heart. The same is true of the KMT's two expansions, the ŚM and the ṢSS as well as the KRU, which is one of the earliest independent Kubjikā Tantras. This may be because the Kālīkrama did not yet exist or the early Kubjikā Tantras were redacted in parts of India to which it had not spread. However, by the time the MBT was redacted the situation had changed. The Kālikākrama is very well known to the KuKh which refers to it several times.[7] In the Hymn (stava) to Bhagamālinī of the SKh, Kālī is praised as the 'treasure chest of the Kālikākrama' (kālikākramamañjūṣā).[8] In any series of ascending schools, the Kālīkrama is always near the top. Indeed, it is sometimes considered to be even higher than Trika (ṣaḍardha)[9] and is one of the group of six systems related to Kubjikā as Parā (parāṣaṭka).[10] The fifteenth chapter of the surviving part of the KuKauM was drawn from the Kramasadbhāva, of which a fragment has survived in just one manuscript. In this important Kālīkrama Tantra we find an extensive description of the Fivefold Current (pañcavāha) and it's Wheels, which is the core of its most developed form. By the time we reach the

---

[1] KuKh 61/68-69.
[2] KuKh 63/35cd-37ab.
[3] Cf. KuKh 60/32cd-33ab.
[4] See below, p. 373 ff..
[5] The JY, which is a major source of Kālīkrama, refers to the KMT twice. Even so, the JY knows very little about the actual contents of the KMT or its goddess.
[6] KMT 7/51c. One wonders whether this is the Kālikāmata to which Vimalaprabodha refers and says is also called Haṭṭa (KāKuKr fl. 19a).
[7] See, for example, KuKh 61/68-69,71 and 68/46cd-48.
[8] SKh 24/50.
[9] KuKh 68/78-80, 133cd-136.
[10] KuKh 68/114cd-116ab.

AS the Kālīkula has been so extensively colonized by the Kubjikā tradition and is so well respected that according to the AS it was revealed to the last of the Nine Siddhas, implying that it is the culmination of a series of systems and Tantras revealed to the previous Nāthas, and so is the highest.[1]

We notice that all these later sources in which the Kālīkrama features have a special regard for the land of Koṅkaṇa (which is roughly the region around modern Goa) and the Deccan in general (dakṣiṇāpatha). The Kālīkrama probably originated in Kashmir as early as the 8th century. It certainly existed in the middle of the 9th century when Jñānanetra established an independent Kālīkrama school. It was well known in the south of India by at least the 14th century when Maheśvarānanda wrote his Mahārthamañjarī in which he quotes from a large number of Kālīkrama sources. Clearly, the redactors of the Kubjikā sources in Koṅkaṇa and the Deccan had access to the Kālīkrama texts as they did a range of sources of the earlier traditions. But this does not answer the greater question, which is whether the Kālīkula already existed prior to the emergence of the Kubjikā school, that is, the Śrīkula or, as it is called especially in the KRU, the Śrīkrama.

The influence of the Kālīkrama on these later sources is particularly evident in the contribution it has made to the lunar symbolism which, as we have noted already, is one of the prominent features of the development of the teachings of the later Kubjikā Tantras. These are particularly concerned with the New Moon. We have seen that this is the seventeenth energy of the Moon that feeds the others. In the earlier Kālī sources the seventeen energies are the syllables of the Vidyā of Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī.[2] Already one of the most prominent forms of Kālī of the Kālīmata of the JY, her worship persisted as the supreme goddess (Parā) of the Kālīkrama. The MBT is well acquainted with several forms of Kālī found in the JY including Kāpālinī Kālī and Kālasaṁkarṣaṇi, who is the most prominent form of Kālī in the JY.[3]

In the following passage, drawn from the end of YKh (1), the form of Kālī born as Himavat's daughter is Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī. Just as the JY teaches, Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī resides in the yogic body in the form of Moonlight, that is, the energy of the New Moon, in the End of the Twelve. Thus she is the inner yogic

---

[1] AS 8/158-159.

[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 339-340.

[3] devi kaumārike [k kh: -rake] saṁsthitā kledanī klinnarūpā ca pūrva eva [k kh: pūrveva] tvaṁ kālikāpālinī *cakraṣaṭkaṁ [kh: vaktra-; k: -ṣaṭkāṁ] gatā [k: gataḥ; kh: gataṁ] kūṭakuṭilāṅginī vṛddharūpā krame nyastā [k: bhyasta; kh: nyasta] kulakālikā [kh: kulakā * ] devatā tvaṁ | Stava by Mahāskanda SKh MS G fl 95b.
aiṁ stunaumi [kh g: stunomi] satatam ahaṁ [g: sa tu mahaṁ] siddhavidyādharair [g: siddhi-] arcite [k: -taṁ] kāli kāpālini [k g: -nī] kālasaṁkarṣaṇi [k kh g: -ṇī] devi ādhyātmike | - Mahādaṇḍastuti by Krodhamuni, SKh MS G fl. 97a.

equivalent of Kālikā or, as the later sources call her, Bhadrakālī who was Dakṣa's daughter in a previous life and, reborn to Himavat,[1] became the god's consort. As Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī, she is the Jewel Kuṇḍalinī in the Cavity of Brahmā, that is, the supreme energy in the End of the Twelve. There, in the Śāmbhava state, she shines like a burning coal,[2] her flames like tongues that lick up and consume the universe of diversity and bondage.[3] As such she is Saṁvartā, the Fire of Time.

Called Carcikā,[4] she is Kālikā who is the 'Moonlight (candrikā) at the End of the Twelve'.[5] As Carcikā she is the seventeenth digit of the Moon, which is the seventeenth phase of the flow of the Divine Current. As Kālakarṣī – She who Drags Time - she 'drags' the Supreme Principle towards oneself[6] even as she absorbs time and the bondage it entails into her infinite, eternal being. Finally, in the following passage, with which we conclude this brief exposition, she is said to be reborn as Himavat's daughter in her eleventh rebirth. In other references Kālikā is in her eighth rebirth. The variant is probably an allusion to her position in the stream of the aspects of the Transmental that flows as the Divine Current[7] as its eleventh aspect.[8] As such she is 'she is the violent (caṇḍa) Sound (rāvā) (that resounds) at the End of the Twelve' and consumes the finite 'sounds' that constitute the phenomenal universe, mental and physical, of words and meanings.

> Kuleśvarī, the Wish-granting Gem is in the middle between the imperishable and the perishable. Merged in the Cavity of Brahmā she, the supreme energy, shines. She is the Shining One (bhāsā) who, consuming (all things with her protruding) tongue (lelihā), is like a garland of flames. Her form is like a spark and (her) light (is as brilliant) as the (fully) risen sun. In (her) eleventh descent (into the world) she is mother Kujā, the divine Jewel (called Kuṇḍalinī). (She is) the bliss of all the Siddhas in the Western House * * * (?).[9] Then beginning with one House, the agent and deity is Time. Then beginning with one House, she is also Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī.[10]

---

[1] KuKh 3/72-73 and 160-161; see intro. vol. 1, p. 124 ff..
[2] KuKh 31/62cd-63ab; cf ibid. 3/156-158ab.
[3] See KuKh 57/19 and note.
[4] Concerning Carcikā, see below, p. 245 ff..
[5] KuKh 57/74cd-75ab.
[6] KuKh 57/68cd-69ab.
[7] Concerning the Divine Current (divyaugha) see chapter 57 of the KuKh; also intro. vol. 1, p. 245 and vol. 2, p. 409 ff..
[8] See 57/19 and 68cd-69ab.
[9] Text reads triṣvidaṁ which makes no sense.
[10] Cf.: Starting in front, in the beginning, with the one House and Kālakarṣī as the deity, she was born in the house of the Himalaya. As Saṁvartā (the Doomsday Fire), she went into the Western (House). KuKh 57/21cd-22ab.

Born in the house of Himavat, having hidden (herself), she went to the Western (House). The repeated return of one who has gone is Maheśvarī who is (the divine) will. Above the Moon and the Sun, she is (the energy) of the lord who destroys fettered existence. She is the Moonlight (of the New Moon) that shines (darkly) in the End of the Twelve, (her colour) like blue collyrium. She is visible in (this) Age of Strife as the will of the Kula of the vitality of Kaula practice (caryavīrya). The destruction of the three worlds, which must be kept well hidden, has been revealed.[1]

Northern Face - Tripurabhairavī[2]

Tripurabhairavī, also simply called Tripurā, who appears in the Kubjikā Tantras should not be confused with the goddess Tripurasundarī otherwise known as Śrīvidyā. That goddess derives her name from her residence in the triangle in the core of her maṇḍala, the Śrīcakra. She is the Goddess of the Three Cities – the three abodes in the corners of this triangle. Kubjikā is also sometimes called 'tripurā', but this is not a proper name. It is simply an adjective that describes her as the goddess of the triangular Yoni.[3] Tripurasundarī, unlike Tripurabhairavī, is very well known and widely worshipped as a goddess of a highly developed and sophisticated Kaula tradition. Those who contributed to the development of

---

[1] akṣarakṣarayor [g: akṣarā-] madhye cintāmaṇiḥ kuleśavarī |
brahmarandhrāntare līnā abhāti paramā kalā [g: kulā] ||
śāmbhavānte ca [g: na] sā bhāsā [g: vāsvā] jvālāmālaiva [-leva] lelihā |
visphulliṅganibhākārā [g: visphaliṅgānibha-] uditārkasamaprabhā ||
daśaivaikāvatāre [g: -raṁ] ca divyaratnā [-ratna] kujāmbikā |
āhlādaḥ [g: āladā] sarvasiddhānāṁ [g: -siddhān] triṣvidaṁ [g: trisveda] gṛhapaścime ||
gṛham ekam purārabhya [g: -ramya] kālaṁ kartā ca devatā |
gṛham ekaṁ purārabhya kālasaṁkarṣaṇīti [g: -bhi] ca ||
himavantagṛhotpannā saṁvṛtya paścime gatā |
gatasya punarāgatir icchārūpā [g: -rūpaṁ] maheśvarī ||
candrārkopari [g: -rkkāpari] nāthasya bhavacchedakarī tu sā |
nīlāñjananibhā [g: -nirā] bhāti dvādaśānte [-mbha] tu candrikā ||
caryavīryakulecchayā pratyakṣā sā kalau yuge |
trailokyam upasaṁhāraṁ [g: upaghorāsaṁ] sugopyaṁ prakaṭīkṛtam [g: -kulaṁ] ||
YKh (1) 56/1-7.

[2] The only visualized form of the goddess Kubjikā that incorporates Tripurabhairavī (also called simply Tripurā) amongst her faces is the one we are examining found in chapter twenty-nine of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa. The passage in which this form of Kubjikā is described is drawn from YKh (1) and modified so as to include Tripurā amongst the goddess's faces. This is surprising. Like the goddesses of the other faces, Tripurā is identified with Kubjikā in the KuKh, but only once (in 68/6). She is not mentioned there again, whereas she is quite important in YKh (1).

[3] For an example of this usage, see KuKh 38/6.

Kubjikā's tradition included, it seems, as many major goddesses as they could into her pantheon. So the total absence of Tripurasundarī / Śrīvidyā in the Kubjikā sources is in all probability because she had not yet emerged as an independent deity or, at least, was not known in the places where the Kubjikā Tantras developed. There is little reason to doubt that Śrīvidyā appears very late in the history of the early Bhairava and Kaula Tantras. She is totally absent in the SYM, BY and JY. Indeed, Tripurabhairavī is also unknown to these important and extensive early sources. Nor is either of them known to the early Kubjikā Tantras. Tripurā is not mentioned even once in the KMT or its expansions, the ŚM and ṢSS. In contrast to this silence, YKh (1) describes her worship and refers to her several times. Her most extensive presence in the Kubjikā sources is in KuKauM where an entire chapter is dedicated to her. While the evidence suggests that Tripurabhairavī is emerging as a goddess in the period when the later Kubjikā Tantras were redacted, it is unlikely that they are her original home. On the Contrary these passages give one the impression of having been appropriated from other sources. This is particularly the case with the KuKauM, which anyway draws heavily from Tantras of other traditions.

A feature Tripurasundarī and Tripurabhairavī share in common is very significant: they are both associated with Nityās who are, as we will see, a type of Yoginī particularly concerned with Kāma. Indeed, they are both Nityās in their own right and are worshipped surrounded by other Nityās. According to YKh (1) a group of nine Nityās, arranged in the directions, attend on Tripurabhairavī.[1] The

---

[1] The Nine Nityās are listed in the following verses in YKh (1):

Kulanityā is the first and Vajreśvarī is the second. The third is the Nityā Tvaritā and the fourth is Kurukullā. The goddess Lalitā is the fifth and the sixth is called Bheruṇḍā. The seventh is Nīlapatākā and the eighth is Kāmamaṅgalā. The goddess Vyomavyāpinī, who bestows accomplishment, is the ninth. O Lord of the gods, once known Tripurā, on (her) red lotus seat by means of the liturgy of the Nine Nityās recollect (her) liturgy (krama).

kulanityā tu prathamā vajreśvarī [k, g, gh: vajreśvari] dvitīyakā ||
*tṛtīyā tvaritā [ṅ: tvarima] nityā [k, g, gh: ma *; ṅ: * *] kurukullā [k, g, gh: * * kullā; ṅ: ku * * ] caturthikā [k, g, gh, ṅ: -kāṁ] |
pañcamī lalitā devī ṣaṣṭhī bheruṇḍasaṁjñakā [k, g, gh: bha-] ||
saptamī nīlapatākā aṣṭamī kāmamaṅgalā |
vyomavyāpinidevī ca navamī siddhidāyikā [g: siddha-] ||
navanityākrameṇaiva āsane raktapaṅkaje [k, gh: rakṣa-] |
tripurāṁ [all MSs: -rā] devadeveśa jñātvā kramam anusmaret || YKh (1) 44/29cd-32.

Elsewhere in the YKh (1) (MS G fl. 157a) the Nine Nityās are presented as guardians of the quarters. They are as follows: 1) East: Kulavidyā 2) North-west: Nityamadadravā 3) South-east: Vajreśvarī 4) South: Tvaritā 5) South-west: Kurukullā 6) West: Lalitā Nityā 7) North: Bheruṇḍā 8) North-east: Maṅgalā 9) Vyomavyāpinī.

Newars of the Kathmandu Valley continue to worship the Nine Nityās, testifying to their importance as a standard group, although little known elsewhere. Similarly, but much more elaborately, the much better known group of Sixteen Nityās are worshipped in their own *yantra*s along with Śrīvidyā in Śrīcakra. The Sixteen Nityās represent the sixteen phases of the moon and aspects of Śrīvidyā. Lalitā, identified with Tripurasundarī, assumes the prime role as the first and original Nityā (ādyanityā) to whom three chapters (4 to 6) of the Tantrarāja are dedicated. We notice that as many as seven of the Nine Nityās are amongst the Sixteen, reflecting the close relationship between the two Tripurās.[1] In the KuKauM she is described as follows:

> The goddess (Tripurabhairavī) is red like vermillion and the Bandhūka flower. She wears red clothes and is adorned with all the ornaments. She has matted hair and, peaceful (saumyā), the moon is her crest jewel. She is replete with all (auspicious) characteristics and sits on a cot. She has large, round and upraised breasts, her navel has three folds, and she is adorned with (a fine) line of hair (travelling down from it). Endowed with all the ornaments, she sits on the lotus of the Void. Her mind blissful with wine, she is the Mother of great joy. Smiling gently she is the goddess who arouses the Triple World. She has four arms and three eyes. Possessing great power, she is supreme Śivā. O fair lady, an excellent and divine book full of all knowledge is in her left hand. A rosary, brilliant like a hundred suns, is in the right hand. She makes a fear dispelling gesture with the left and a boon-bestowing one with the right.[2] The garland around her neck hangs down to her feet. Its form divine and enveloped in blazing flames brilliant like the sun, it looks like red coral. One should meditate constantly on the goddess who, in this form, is in the middle of a

In this version Nityamadadravā has been inserted between the first and second Nityā of the other version and Nīlapatākā has been omitted.

[1] The Sixteen Nityās associated with Śrīvidyā described in the Tantrarājatantra are as follows. The numbers in brackets after their names are those of the chapters of the TR in which they, and their worship, are described. The Nityās marked with an asterisk are common to the nine Nityās of YKh (1): 1) *Lalitā 2) Kāmeśvarī (7), 3) Bhagamālinī (8), 4) Nityaklinnā (9) 5) *Bheruṇḍā (10) 6) Vahnivāsinī (11) 7) *Vajreśvarī (12) 8) Śivadūtī (13) 9) *Tvaritā (also called Totalā) (14) 10) Kulasundarī (15) 11) *Nityā (16) 12) *Nīlapatākā (17) 13) Vijayā (18) 14) *Sarvamaṅgalā (19) 15) Jvālāmālīi (20) and 16) Citrā (21).

[2] Cf. above (p. 132-133) where Parā is portrayed in the SYM a similar way. The main difference is that she is white and rains down white lunar nectar. Note also that although Parā of the SYM is clearly a form of the goddess Sarasvatī, she has only two arms there. Tripurabhairavī, her red version, is closer to Sarasvatī, who is commonly worshipped in a four armed form.

Kadamba forest in the midst of the eight (Mothers) Brahmī and the rest (each in their) own (place).

A thousand petalled lotus is (above her) on the upper path. (It) rains down with a great current (of nectar) and is (red) like burning lac. One should flood everything with this supreme nectar. O renowned one, praised by the heroes, the adept who practices in this way, arouses the triple world, not in any other way.[1]

Two forms of Tripurā are described in the Agnipurāṇa. One is Tripurā herself and the other is Gaurī. Tripurā is surrounded by the Eight Bhairavas and

---

[1] bandhūkapuṣpasaṁkāśāṁ sindūrāruṇasannibhām |
raktavastravṛtāṁ [g: -dhṛtāṁ; gh: -dṛtāṁ] devīṁ [g ṅ: devī] sarvābharaṇabhūṣitām [g, gh: -bhūṣitā ||
jaṭājūṭadharāṁ [k: -varāṁ] saumyāṁ [g: saumyā] śaśāṁkakṛtaśekharām [k, ṅ: -śeṣarāṁ; g: saśake-; gh: śasāṁka-; ṅ: samaṁke-] |
sarvalakṣaṇasaṁpūrṇāṁ [gh: -pūrṇā;ṅ: -pūrṇṇaṁ] saparyāṅkāsane [g: sapayākesane; gh: saparyāmā(?)sane; ṅ: saryāṁhvāsane] sthitām ||
āpīnamaṇḍalābhogāṁ [all MSs: bhāga] samunnatapayodharām [gh: saṁpunnatapayā; ṅ: -dharā] |
*trivalī aṅgamadhye [k: turaṁgamadhya; g gh ṅ: turaṁgamadhye] tu [g: ] romarājīvibhūṣitām [k: rāmarājivi-; k g ṅ: -taṁ; gh: -vibhūṣiṣaṁtaṁ(?)] ||
sarvālaṁkārasaṁpannāṁ vyomapadmāsane sthitām | madirānandacetaskām [k: -cetasthāṁ; g: -cetaskā] āhlādajananīṁ [k: ājñādajananī; g: āhnādajananī; gh: ā(?)dajananī] śubhām [g: śubhā] ||
trailokyakṣobhaṇīṁ devīṁ īṣatprahasitānanām [g: iṣatprahaśitānanāṁ; gh: -prasahitāna(?)nāṁ; ṅ: iṣaṭ-] |
caturbhujāṁ [ṅ: -jā] mahātejāṁ [gh: mahāṁ-] trinetrāṁ [gh: triṇetrāṁ; ṅ: -trā] ca parāṁ [ṅ: parā] śivām ||
vāmahastaniviṣṭena [gh: -niviṣyena] sarvajñānamayena tu |
pustakena varārohe divyena [ṅ: divyo na] pravareṇa ca || dakṣiṇe cākṣasūtraṁ ca śatasūryasamaprabham [gh: śanasūryasasamran(?); ṅ: samastarya-samastanaṁ] |
vāmenābhayasaṁyuktā [all MSs: vāmevānaya-] varadaṁ [gh: vadadaṁ] dakṣiṇena [gh: da(?)ṇena] tu ||
sūryabimbanibhair mudraiḥ [ṅ: -nibhai sudraiḥ] sphurajjvālāvalīdharaiḥ [ṅ: sphula-; k: -dhanaiḥ; gh: -dhaneḥ] |
grathitā divyarūpā [gh: di(?)-] tu [ṅ: ca] raktavidrumasannibhā [ṅ: raktavindusamannibhā] ||
āpādalambinī [k: āponalaṁ; kh g gh ṅ: āpāna-] cāsyā mālā [k: salā-; gh: mala-] galakasaṁsthitā [gh: geṇaka-; all MSs: -taṁ] |
evaṁ rūpeṇa devyās tu brahmādyās tu [g: -dyā śru; gh: dyāv dyu] svake [ṅ: ṣṭake] svake ||
iti dhyāyet [ṅ: dhyāya] sadā devyāṁ [k, kh: devyāḥ] kadambavanamadhyagām |
*ūrdhvamārge [g ṅ: ūrddha-] sthitaṁ padmaṁ sahasradalasaṁkulam [gh: sa * (?) sradala-]* ||
varṣan caiva [k, g: ca] mahoghena [k: mahādyena; ṅ: mahoyena] jvālālakṣasamaprabham [k: jvālākṣa-; kh g: jāvālākṣañca-; ṅ: jvālākhya-] |
tenedaṁ [g, gh: teneda] plāvayet [k: srāvayet; ṅ: tvāṁ cayet] sarvaṁ [g: sarva; ṅ: sarvva] pareṇaivāmṛtena [kh. gh: pā-; g: parenaivā-; ṅ: pareṇaika-] tu ||
evam abhyasamānasya [g: evamabhyasya-] sādhakasya yaśasvini [ṅ: yasasvini] | trilokyaṁ kṣubhyate tasya nānyathā vīravandite [k: -ta] || KuKauM 5/88-99.

the deities of the six limbs of her Vidyā. These are Bhairavī, Brāhmī and Mukhyā, who are the short syllables of the six limbs, and Bhairavā, Brāhmaṇī and Ṣaṇmukhā, who are the long ones. There are also four Vaṭukas and eight Rudras. She sits on a lotus. Her right hands make a gesture of protection and hold a book. The left make a wish-bestowing gesture and hold a rosary.[1] The description of the goddess in the Śāradātilaka[2] is largely the same, although more detailed. According to the ŚT, she is red and, sitting on a lotus, she wears a garland of severed heads. Her chest is splattered with blood. She holds a rosary and a book and makes gestures that grant protection and boons. Her tiara is adorned with the moon. The ŚT expressly says that she is called Tripurabhairavī,[3] thus alerting us that she is not the Tripurā who presides over Śrīcakra.

Despite her name, Gaurī (the white One) is red. She has four arms. In her right hands she holds a noose and makes a boon-bestowing gesture. The left hold a goad and make a fear-dispelling gesture.[4] This form corresponds to the Tripurā who is one of six Gaurīs described in the Rūpamaṇḍana.[5] The Annapūrṇā described in the Kāraṇāgama is also the same[6] as is Bhuvaneśvarī of the Mahālakṣmīratnākara,[7]the ŚT and Tantrasāra.[8]

The Tripurā, that is, Tripurabhairavī of the AP[9] possesses the same attributes and makes the same gestures as Sarasvatī described in the Vāyupurāṇa[10] and chapter 319 of the AP. The second form – Gaurī-Tripurā or Bhuvaneśvarī - is represented in particular in South India. But the gestures and attributes are those of the ŚT and not the AP, and she is identified with Ādhāraśakti (the Energy of the Foundation).

---

[1] AP 313/7 ff..
[2] ŚT 12/31.
[3] ŚT 12/5-6.
[4] According to the comm. on ŚT 9/14, the goad and fear-dispelling gesture are on the right and the noose and boon-bestowing gesture are on the left.
[5] Rao 1, 2, app. C, p. 120.
[6] Ibid. p. 131.
[7] Ibid. p. 132.
[8] ŚT p. 89, TS p. 86 also ŚT 9/81 and TS p. 89 but according to the comm. by Rāghava Bhaṭṭa on ŚT 10/1 Bhuvaneśvarī is Tvaritā.
[9] AP 313/11cd-12ab.
[10] Bhattacharyya 1974: 65.
Tripurabhairavī

Tripurabhairavī is the subject of chapter six of the Prapañcasāra and most of chapter twelve of the ŚT. Her visualized form in the ŚT follows that of the PS which is as follows:

> I bow to the goddess who has the lustre of ten thousand reddish suns, whose matted hair is coloured by the moon digit fastened to it, who has three eyes, whose face is like the full moon, who holds a rosary, a manuscript, (makes the gestures of) protection (abhīti) and wish-granting (abhīṣṭa), who is discomforted by (the burden of her) fleshy and lofty breasts, whose waist is shining with (three skin) folds, whose body is adorned with a garland of (severed) heads shining with large quantities of blood (and) who (wears) very red silk garments and unguents.[1]

Tripurabhairavī is regularly worshipped as one of the Ten Mahāvidyās. In this form she is fierce, as the garland of heads suggest. Bālā Tripurā, described in the Mantramahodadhi, is a mild form without the garland of heads who is worshipped in Śrīcakra and so marks the point of transition from one to the other.[2] Although Tripurabhairavī is a distinct goddess from Tripurasundarī, they are closely related. Indeed, the former is the latter's precursor. In chapter five of the KuKauM, which is dedicated to Tripurabhairavī, she is called Tripurasundarī two or three times. At this stage it is just an alternative name for Tripurabhairavī but it may possibly have been where Tripurasundarī got her name. Their common link is their identification with the goddess Kāmeśvarī, who we shall examine further ahead when we come to discuss Nityaklinnā, the goddess with whom Kubjikā is identified who embodies her nature as Kāma most specifically.

As Tripurasundarī / Śrīvidyā is a well known Kaula goddess who is extensively worshipped, it is worthwhile taking a small detour to observe some aspects of her early development, especially because these are closely connected to that of the goddess Kubjikā, who in several respects is one of her precursors. In order to understand this we must focus on one of the most central and striking characteristics of Tripurasundarī - her profound and intimate relationship with Kāma.

The scene of the goddess's activities shifts, as she develops from the fierce (caṇḍā) to the erotic goddess (kāminī), from the cremation ground to the forest grove where pleasing spring breezes blow and the Lord of Love pierces the hearts of lovers with his arrows.[3] The end result of this process is well illustrated in her

---

[1] PS 9/8. The translation is by Bühnemann who discusses her form there (2001: 36-37) and in the ŚT (12/31), which is based on the PS (ibid. 224-225).

[2] See MM 8/15 and discussion by Bühnemann (2000: 131-133).

[3] Developments in the history of Āgamic Śaivism are marked by an increasing predominance of the goddess over the god (Bhairava, Śiva) and of Yoginī cults, and the increasing prevalence, in form as Lalitā – the Playful One – whose thousand names eulogized in the Lalitāsahasranāma describe the goddess's spiritual beauty on the analogy of physical, sensuous beauty.[1] There she is called beautiful (ramyā) (307) and desirable (kāmyā) (321). The limbs of her body are faultless (anavadyāṅgī). Her eyes are like moving fish transported by the current of the beauty of her face.[2] The radiance of her gentle smile causes the mind of the Lord of Love to merge in her.[3] Her two breasts are the red and white Points (bindu) of the energy of Kāma (kāmakalā).[4] They are the jewels of Kāmeśvara's love that he holds lovingly in each hand.[5]

The goddess enjoys love games (ramaṇī) (310). She delights in intercourse (ratipriyā) (316) and craves for it (ramaṇalampaṭā) (320). She is the Playful One (vilāsinī) (340), served by Kāma, the Lord of Love (kāmasevitā) (586). The goddess is the source of Kāmadeva's power. She gave him his sugar cane bow and arrows. As this divine passion itself (kāmarūpiṇī) (796), she embodies the energy of the passion of the union of Śiva and Śakti (kāmakalārūpā) (322). Indeed, the whole of her blissful being is symbolized by the spiritual sexuality of absolute existence through the play of the union of opposites. She is also concretely present in its microcosmic equivalent. Like Kubjikā, Lalitā resides in the fertile male seed (śukra) as its vital energy (ojas).[6] Thus she may be worshipped there, in the vital seed, when it is produced in spiritual intercourse.

Her spiritual passion (kāma) is her power; it lies in the passion (kāma) she arouses, which is so great that even the god submits to her. Moreover, she gives the same divine passion (kāma) to her devotees.[7] She is the medicinal herb that restores life to the Lord of Love who has been incinerated by the fire of Lord Śiva's third eye.[8] The same power of spiritual attraction and desire that frees her devotees by attracting them to her, deludes others. From their perspective she possesses the 'noose that is passionate attachment' (rāgasvarūpapāśāḍhyā).

Of course, the goddess's chastity and purity is no less than her erotic energy (kāma). She likes drinking wine very much (mādhvīpānalalasā) (575) and is, like the Kaula Tantric consort, inebriated (mattā).[9] And yet she is wise and sober (sādhvī) some traditions, of the cremation ground, and generally of non-dual philosophy. See Sanderson 1986: 669 and passim.

---

[1] LSNS 13 onwards.

[2] vaktralakṣmīparīvāhacalanmīnābhalocanā

[3] mandasmitaprabhāpūramajjatkāmeśamānasā

[4] LSNS 33.

[5] kāmeśvarapremaratnamaṇipratipaṇastanī

[6] śukrasaṁsthitā (53).

[7] She is kāmadāyinī (63).

[8] haranetrāgnisaṁdagdhakāmasaṁjīvanauṣadhiḥ (84).

[9] LSNS name 576. It is also said of her that her eyes are red and rolling with inebriation (madaghūrṇitaraktākṣī) (432) and that she is 'distraught with the inebriation of vāruṇī' (vāruṇīmadavihvalā) (333). Vāruṇī is date wine and a nāḍī which leads to sahasrāra.

(128). She is the wife, not lover of Kāmeśa. The thread that signals that she is married to him adorns her waist.[1] Only Kāmeśvara has experienced the bliss of the softness of her thighs.[2] She is devoutly faithful to her husband (pativratā), but is not bound by him. Although she sits on the lap of Śiva Kāmeśvara, her beloved depends on her (svādhīnavallabhā) (54). She is to be worshipped in the Sacrifice of Śrī (śrīyāga) as a chaste (pūṇyastrī) Brāhmaṇī.

Like Kubjikā, Lalitā is a Kaula goddess and several names celebrate her connection with Kula[3] and reflect the subtle balance between the sexuality and chastity of the goddess. As a 'kulāṇganā' (92), she is a 'woman of good family' which means that she is devoted to her consort (pativratā), Parameśiva. It also means that she is his partner in the Kaula rite of union they celebrate perpetually. She is established in the Kula (kulāntasthā) (93). She is the Kula Yoginī (95) and her very nature is Kula (kularūpiṇī) (897). She is the Mother of the Heroes, that is, Kaula initiates (vīramātā) (836) and delights in their company (vīragoṣṭhipriyā) (898). She is the presiding deity of the Kaula Path and is on both aspects of it, that is, the Right and the Left (savyāpasavyamārgasthā) (912). So although the goddess is given these names they are sacred to the devotees who practice Vāmācāra also. In short, the Kula rites – sexual yet chaste – share in the same ambiguity as the goddess who presides over them.

One way that the apparent contradiction is resolved is to accommodate the two conditions into the two aspects of deity. Tripurā in her immanent, manifest form 'with qualities' (saguṇa) is passionate, while her unmanifest form `devoid of qualities' (nirguṇa) is passionless. To indicate this ambiguity in her nature she is called 'Devoid of Qualities' (nirguṇā) (130), which is thus the same as calling her 'Devoid of Desire' (niṣkāmā) (142) and 'Devoid of Passion' (nīrāgā) (156). So even though from one point of view she is highly passionate, she remains free of desire. Although, she gives passion (kāmadā) and arouses attachment (rāgamathanī) (157), she also frees from it.

She embodies ultimate reality conceived as supreme bliss - ānanda. This bliss is embodied in her. It is the 'passion that makes her eyes roll' (lolākṣīkāmarūpiṇī) (454). She is 'the form of desire in women'. This is not the Advaitin's ānanda, which is just a covert counter-correlate of saṁsāric suffering (duḥkha), it is positive bliss generated by the union of opposites. She embodies the great play of intercourse between herself and her partner (mahārati) (218). Similarly, she is the Great Enjoyment (mahābhogā) (219). Of course, this union is not external. The bliss of the union she embodies is the delight she experiences of her own inner nature, which is bliss itself (svātmārāmā) (878). This bliss is the result of union. For

---

[1] kāmeśabaddhamāṇgalyasūtraśobhitākandharā (30).
[2] kāmeśajñātasaubhāgyamārdavorudvayānvitā (39).
[3] These are especially names 90-96.

this to take place, there must first be separation. The commentator on the LSNS quotes scripture (śruti) as saying: 'once divided up his own nature in two, he plays as the division of male and female'.[1] Just as Kṛṣṇa emanates Rādhā from his body when he desires the bliss of union, Śrinātha emanates Kubjikā. But even though the female is derived from the male, Śakti is considered to be supreme because she embodies the bliss of union. She is not only the god's power, she is also his bliss.

The goddess's inner secret is her marital sport in which the worshipper inwardly participates. This secret sacrifice (rahasyayāga) is the 'inner sacrifice' (antarayāga) described in the Bhāvanopaniṣad. It is the realisation of the unity of 1) Śrīcakra and the bodies, subtle, gross and causal; 2) the lunar orb (candramaṇḍala) in the thousand–spoked wheel in the head (sahasrāra) and the Point in the centre of Śrīcakra called 'Made of All Bliss' (sarvānandamayabindu); 3) the individual and universal Self, Śiva and Śakti, the Light (prakāśa) of consciousness and its reflective awareness (vimarśa). The union of opposites she embodies is symbolized by her paradoxical nature. Just as she is symbolically, without contradiction, both intensely passionate and yet supremely chaste, she is both young and very beautiful as well as aged (vṛddhā) (671). In this unusual form we find echoes of her common Kaula links with Kālī and Kubjikā worshipped in her three ages.

Now we have had a brief look at Tripurā and observed her vital association with Kāma, we turn to our own goddess Kubjikā to see how she is linked to Kāma and how, in this respect also, she shares in her own way in her successor's nature. The link, we shall see, is their common association with Kāmeśvarī, the goddess of Kāma. This aspect of the goddess Kubjikā is elaborated at length in the CMSS. Identified with Tripurabhairavī, she is one of the immediate predecessors of Tripurasundarī. We shall see that as Nityaklinnā, she is modelled more directly on the figure of Kāmeśvarī who ultimately finds the most complete, expression of her latent sexuality and with it her gracious spiritual energy represented in its most personal and complete form in Tripurasundarī.[2] We shall see [2] The presupposition here is that in this symbolic context sexuality is a direct metaphor for spirituality. The formula is simple: the more erotic and alluring, the more spiritual and spiritually transformative. This equation need not involve us in a Freudian analysis of symbols. I believe that Freudian interpretations of religious phenomena are unsatisfactory for a number of reasons. These may be outlined as follows.

---

[1] svātmānaṁ dvedhā vibhajya strīpuṁ bhedena krīḍati

1) Freudian analysis is fixated with outer forms. It does not bother Freudians at all that Freudian interpretations are mostly unrecognizable to those who have religious experiences in the context of their belief system. Unmindful of the beliefs of a deity's votaries and not sharing in them at all, Freudians cannot see through the outer forms to the metaphysical essences religious people experience and believe in. Symbols are windows through which believers get a glimpse of what they symbolize. The faithless just see the outer forms. A Liṅga or Yoni represents Deity. Indeed, they are the Deity manifest in that form. They are not genital organs.

2) Freudian analysis presumes that there is nothing beyond the symbol. That it is not a symbolic representation of a higher aspect of reality, which is not only empirically inaccessible; it is that linked by their common grounding in Kāma they are all Nityās who ultimately came to sustain and enhance most systematically the character and depth of Tripurasundarī, just as they have in varying degrees and ways contributed to Kubjikā's nature.

Nityaklinnā - The Triadic Goddess of the Yoni

All the three major Kaula goddesses - Kubjikā, Kālī, and Tripurā - possess a powerful, albeit ambiguous, erotic side to their character. This is a natural aspect of the goddess who bestows fertility, growth and offspring and is the embodiment of the Will (icchā) or Passion (kāma) that engenders creation. A feature of the progressive genesis of Great Goddesses, first in the Bhairava Tantras and then the Kaula Tantras that developed from them, is the steady intensification of their sexuality.

Kāma in these texts is an extensively applied symbolic cipher that uses the language of sexuality to symbolize the intensity and vitality of a spiritual energy that operates at every level of the activity of consciousness, fuelling it and directing it to its goals. It acts through the intense passion of the will. The term reminds us that all desire, the spring of all conscious action, is essentially linked to this spiritual energy. The realisation that this spiritual energy is the ground of all desire, amounts to the also 'beyond mind'. Freud' approach makes no room for theology. There is no place for a 'formless' empirically 'qualitiless' Deity or Godhead that escapes analysis.

---

3) Freudian analysis invariably relates it object of analysis to childhood or even pre-natal experience. Freudians maintain that every person's childhood is to some degree traumatic, (largely ignoring that all human experience may be so, whatever the person's age). However, it is evident that the degree and forms of this trauma vary considerably. Nor do they invariably give rise to the same 'fixations' in every adult's life. Nor is it necessarily the case that they should give rise to any. Freudians work post facto, they do not bother to inquire about those cases that are not deemed 'pathological'. This leads me to the next objection.

4) Freudian analysis is concerned with pathology. Symbols are the product of a disturbed psyche that is seeking to find a cure by means of them. Their origin is ex definitio pathological. Thus, from the Freudian perspective, there will inevitably be some element, at least, in any symbol that is 'unhealthy' and reveals a repressed conflict or hidden trauma. Freudians are so focused on this aspect of religious symbols that they consider them to be their essential core around which all other aspects, including 'healthy' ones gravitate.

5) Freudians fail to take into account that powerful religious imagery can be explained in a number of ways. Indeed, a plurality of interpretations is essential. Freudian analysis can be one of them, but not the only one. We learn from each of them. One I believe, is the most important, namely, the one the religious tradition itself offers. This Freudians largely ignore or, if they do refer to it, they do so only to extend the application of their own analytical method.

conjunction of the two through which the brilliance and vitality of the individual merge into that of the universal.[1]

> The reality (ruupa) within passion (kāma) and desire (kāma) is Kulamālinī. It is the womb of Ciñciṇī, consciousness and its absence and is praised as pure and accomplished. O goddess, it is the foundation of the Command intent on grace and constraint. It should be known to be intense and most intense. He who knows it, is a member of the tradition. [2]

This Kāma, paradoxical as it may seem, may be linked to the shocking power of the deity's apparent violence and association with death and destruction symbolized by the cremation ground in which it dwells. The cremation ground is the natural habitat for Kālī and Bhairava, who are paradigmatic figures in relation to such goddesses and the equivalent gods. As Kubjikā is an empowered transformation of the goddess Kālī, she retains many of her fierce features. Even so, she emerges from the cocoon-like Liṅga as a milder goddess who is not much concerned with the world of the cremation ground. The cremation ground as the setting for the revelation of the teachings, practice and the environment for iconic forms is of minor importance in the Kubjikā cult and virtually absent in the subsequent Śrividyā tradition. This decline can be viewed as the result of a concomitant 'domestication' of these cults, that is to say, the growing valuation of the householder initiate with respect to the renouncer.

From another perspective, it is also largely due to the enhancement of another feature of such deities, common to their village, 'non-Brahminical'

---

[1] (Spiritual) passion is the desire within desire. (They are a) couple (like) the radiant energy in (all things filled with) energy.

kāmaṁ kāmāntaraṁ kāmaṁ tejas tejeṣu maithunam || CMSS 7/198cd.

A very well know dictum we find repeated in several sources is derived from this perception of desire:

One should desire (all the things one) desires with (spiritual) passion. One should conjoin (that spiritual) passion in (all one's) desires.

kāmena kāmayet kāmān kāmaṁ kāmeṣu yojayet ||

[2] kāme kāmānte [all: kāmānta] yad [k kh gh: yed] rūpaṁ [all: rūpa] tad rūpaṁ [all: rūpa] kulamālinī [gh: -rī] |
cidacicciñcinīgarbhaṁ prastutaṁ siddhanirmalam [g: siddhi-] ||
ājñādhāraṁ tu taṁ devi nigrahānugrahe [k: nigraho-] ratam |
tīvraṁ [all: tīvrā-] tīvrataraṁ jñeyaṁ [all: jñeyo] yo jānāti [g: yānāti] sa cānvayī ||
CMSS 3/12-13.

counterparts, namely, their close connection to procreation and eros in general. This is also a powerful feature of the early Bhairava cults (especially that of Kāpāleśvara Bhairava of the BY) and both the early and late Kaula Kālī cults. The cremation ground is the venue, however unlikely it may seem to be, of bacchic revelry often vividly described in the Kālī sources. But the ecstatic and violently passionate (haṭha) unions that take place there between Siddhas and Yoginīs, modelled on that of the god and the goddess, is a kind of libens tod. The fury of union generates the consuming energy embodied in the goddess who assimilates impurity, bondage and duality into herself with the overwhelming force of a ravenous demon who devours her victim. The inner counterpart of even the gentle outer union (priyamelāpa) is the one that takes place with great force within (haṭhamelāpa).[1]

In the earliest developments of the tradition, Kubjikā's eros is quietly contained but not displaced for that is, as it is for all Kaula goddesses, the repository of her power. We have had several occasions to note her chaste marital relationship with Bhairava and her 'bashfulness'. However, as the tradition develops Kubjikā's associations tend progressively to be more sexual. Perhaps this development is best understood to be a pervasive one of the Kaula Tantras in general, and not a specific feature of the Kubjikā Tantras. When Kālikā becomes Kubjikā the cult is shifted out of the cremation ground. Freed from the horror of death and destruction, it drifts gradually towards its opposite - eros, life and procreation. Kubjikā's marriage to the god is a mild, domesticated, paradigm of union, which takes place in the goddess's fertile season.[2] It generates spiritual offspring, her sons and daughters who propagate (by uniting as she does) the transmission of the tradition.

Kubjikā's powerful spirituality is represented, as it is in her fiercer counterpart, by her sexuality and that of her partner. But it is not wanton passion – the erotic equivalent of unbridled fury. Kubjikā's sexuality is that of a chaste married couple, directed at the goal of generating spiritual offspring and the world. Right from the start Kubjikā appears as the goddess of creation. She is the Yoni and her Krama is 'set in the order of emanation'. Kubjikā, in this respect, has been contrasted with Kālī, the goddess of destruction.

However, in the beginning Kubjikā is only mildly erotic, just as she is relatively mildly fierce. But by the time we get to the CMSS she has become as powerfully erotic as Tripurā. Indeed, she is just a short step away. Kubjikā in this respect marks a point of transition from one to the other. On the one hand, as Mukundarāja says, Kubjikā is the embodiment of the Kaula consort (dūtikā). She is at once an attractive celestial nymph (apsarā) and Indrāṇī, the epitome of the faithful bride. Moreover, as we have seen, her 'crooked' 'bent over' shape symbolizes her inner identity as Kuṇḍalinī whose energy is 'completely full'. She is bent over with modesty out of respect for the Lord when the Tantra is being explained.[1] Although she is the embodiment of Māyā, her deluding power is not represented by an unrestrained, irresistible sexuality;[2] rather she is controlled, indeed 'bashful'.[3] However, she is nonetheless powerful and much remains in her character of her original identity as Kālikā whose strangely ambiguous nature, at once violent, erotic and yet supremely sacred, is so hard to fathom.[4]

---

[1] See MP (3) 2/29 quoted in intro. vol. 1, p. 582.
[2] See KuKh 3/74-75ab and note 113.

The acme of the erotic goddess is Tripurasundarī the Beautiful Lady of the Three Abodes. We have seen that the triangular core of her maṇḍala is Kubjikā's Triangle – the Yoni. The corners of this Triangle are the 'three abodes' in which she resides and she contains. The same Yoni, with which Kubjikā is identified, is also the most intimate form of Tripurā. Thus unlike Kālikā, in relation to which Kubjikā is a mild transformation, Tripurā is derived from a part of Kubjikā: albeit her innermost core, the Yoni. In Tripurā's case the powerful erotic symbolism of the Yoni is highly emphasized. It is further sustained and even intensified by the energies embodied in the erotic Yoginīs – the Nityās - that emanate from it.

Kāma is initially less apparent in Kubjikā's case. In the centre of her maṇḍala mounted in the configurations of energies and divine beings that radiate from her, Kubjikā's eros is confined. The fire she embodies that burns in the centre of the Yoni is the fire that creates the worlds, but she sits in it like Satī burning with the fire of the austerity of her unsullied celibacy.[5] But unlike Sitā, she tires of her chastity. She retires to the secrecy of the Liṅga where, hidden from view, she is free to satiate her passion. But she does so alone and so is 'bent over'. Then she is the

---

[1] sā śaktiḥ [śaktā] dūtikāpsarā | indrāṇī pratipūrṇaśaktikā māyā | kuṇḍalinīrūpāyāṁ vakrikā vartulā | nāthaṁ prati tantrakathane lajjitā vakrā ity ādayo bahavaś cārthakāḥ | SṁP

[2] Cf the alluring Prakṛti of classical Saṁkhyā.

[3] See intro. vol. 1, p. 12, 39, 46-47.

[4] The reader is referred to a collection of articles published as a book called Encounters with Kālī (see bibliography). Several essays in this collection deal with the difficulties British colonialists had to understand Kālī's ambiguous nature and how they exploited them to their political advantage. These same difficulties, often accompanied by negative reactions and condemnation, have been recurrent in India for centuries. Kālī, for her violence and Tripurā for her erotic allurement, are indeed difficult to understand. Apparent ambiguities and contradictions in the moral character of a deity is a problem inherent in any human conception of it. This is the case even with the One God of semitic religions. The God of the Psalms is invoked to crush the heads of his enemies in battle, and to cut out the tongues of those who speak badly of his devotees. It is very hard, if not impossible, to defend the existence of the One God who is perfectly moral and good in all respects. The problem is not resolved by declaring that his creatures are morally imperfect in their desires and actions – never God. Those in India who are shocked by books written by foreigners underlining these blatantly obvious ambiguities may be consoled to know that the biblical God has been analysed in no less shocking ways from Job's time into the present.

[5] See intro. vol. 2, p. 471?.

self-arousing Yoni, which in the later Kubjikā sources develops into Kubjikā's identification with Nityaklinnā – She who is Perpetually Wet due to her inner spiritual arousal.

One of the historical features of the Kubjikā cult in its sources is the development of increasingly explicit sexual symbolism. This is not a uniform feature of the sources and occurs in varying degrees and forms in each text or section of one. Nonetheless, the trend is undeniable. These developments are marked by Kubjikā's extending identification with goddesses in whom these features are more prominent and elaborated. Amongst these Nityaklinnā is particularly important.

Nityaklinnā is a Nityā, thus she is also sometimes called Nityā Klinnā, the Nityā called Klinnā. She is associated with conjugal love and fertility. Accordingly, the Tantrapaddhati, a liturgical manual written in Kerala in the 12th century and still popular there, recommends the worship of Nityaklinnā to ensure fertile union.[1] Along with the goddess Nityā, Nityaklinnā is amongst the most prominent of the Yoginīs, generically called Nityās, concerned with Kāma.

A Nityā may be worshipped individually as a great Kaula Goddess. She may also be just a minor Yoginī amongst others or the member of a fixed group. Groups of deities appear and develop at different times in the course of the history of the cults of the Tantras, just as single deities do. Like them, some remain relatively minor and obscure, while others attain prominence. Some groups are formed from the beginning as open categories, the members of which may vary, even considerably, without disturbing the identity of the group. The group of Sixty-four Yoginīs is a well-known example. Many groups are simply built up from the single members who come together to form it. In such cases we may observe how the individual members of the group contribute to its formation. We may find the individual members, amongst many others or together with one or more of the members of a future group. Sometimes a group emerges fully formed. A well-known example is the group of seven (later eight) Mothers. It is one of the earliest and, worshipped in all Kaula and related traditions, it has had a long and varied history. One of the latest well known examples is the group of ten Mahāvidyās who emerge in the late Kaula Tantras around the 14th or 15th century. The Nityās emerge individually and in formal groupings towards the middle of the early period of the development of the Tantras. They are unknown to the earliest major sources, the BY and the SYM.

The four ṣaṭkas of the JY (that follow after the BY and the SYM) are arranged in chronological order and, judging by the development of the system they expound, were probably redacted over a substantial period of time. One feature of this development is the appearance of the Nityās who become gradually more defined, as we go through the ṣaṭkas. Nityā originally appears as one of many Yoginīs and then emerges as an independent goddess. This is a common phenomenon. Indeed, it is one of the fundamental features of the theogany of the Tantras. Minor Yoginīs become Great Goddesses and Great Goddesses recede to take their place amongst the hoards of Yoginīs.[1]

---

[1] Tantrapaddhati chapter 23; Unni 1987: 44.

Neither Nityās nor the goddess Nityā are mentioned in the first ṣaṭka of the JY. The word 'nityā' does appear there but it is simply an adjective meaning 'eternal' rather than a proper name. Even so, in retrospect, we may perceive a hint of the future development of an independent goddess called Nityā, although in these references the erotic element which is a fundamental aspect of the goddess Nityā and the Nityās in general, is absent.[2] In the second ṣaṭka Nityā appears for

---

[1] Thus, for example, although Nityā appears in places as the Great Goddess, she is just one of many Yoginīs listed in chapter 12 of the third ṣaṭka of the JY. We notice in the same list other Yoginīs who are also Great Goddesses. Amongst them is Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī, one of the foremost forms of Kālī worshipped in the JY. Again, in the fourth ṣaṭka, Nityā is one of a group of eight Yoginīs related to the eight classes of the alphabet governed by Vāgīśvarī (JY 4/57/27 ff). Mahānityā is a Yoginī in one of the groups of eight that make up the eight groups of sixty-four Yoginīs (JY 4/63/53).

[2] The following are the examples we find of this usage of the word 'nityā' in the first ṣaṭka of the JY. Referring to the dynamic state (calāvasthā) of the deity's consciousness, the JY (1/3/70cd) says that:

It is eternal (nityā), present also in being and non-being, it does not give up its (essential) state.

bhāvābhāve 'pi sā nityā svāvasthāṁ [k, kh: svāṁ-] na jahāti ca ||

Again:

It is the condition (riti) of the great elements and (in a potential state as if in) deep sleep, it is present everywhere. Eternal (nityā), it is the essence of intention (saṁkalpa) and bestows the supreme nectar (of bliss).

mahābhūtaritir hy eṣā susuptā sarvatomukhī [k, kh: -khā] || saṅkalpasarasā nityā parāmṛtavidhāyinī | 1/3/85cd-86ab.

(Now we will) talk about the supreme energy that was previously said to be supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent). It is pure being (sattā), which is the being of all things, and the abode of which is equally (in all things). Well established, devoid of impurity, sinless and eternal (nityā), it is like one's own essential nature.

ucyate paramā śaktiḥ prāg uktā tu parāparā ||
svabhāvotkṛtakā [k, kh: svabhāvokṛtaka] sattā sarvasattā samālayā | supratiṣṭhāmalā nityā svasvarūpopamānagā || 1/29/30cd-31.

In the following example the adjective virtually becomes a proper name but without loosing its adjectival function:

the first time as a proper name of a type of Yoginī or goddess. Kālarātrī, a form of Kālī, is referred to as 'nityā'. This may be a reference to her as a Nityā, a form in which, as we shall see, Kālī does appear. But it may also be just an adjective qualifying the goddess. Trailokyaḍāmarī (the Witch of the Three Worlds), another form of Kālī, which is related to Guhyakālī, is also said to be 'nityā' in the same ambiguous way.[1] However, Trailokyadrāviṇī, described in chapter nineteen of the second ṣaṭka, is a powerfully erotic Yoginī and so, as such, certainly a Nityā. Her name means 'She who melts the Three Worlds'. The 'melting' meant here is a common euphemism for a woman's state of sexual arousal in which her sexual fluids 'melt' and flow. She is worshipped by means of ritual intercourse and the observance of the Vow of the Yoni (bhagavrata).

The imperishable and glorious energy (saṁbhūti) in the condition of the enjoyer, the object of enjoyment and enjoyment (itself) in spiritual disciplines (sādhana) and the like is in every respect Bimbī, who is considered to be the eternal (nityā) Mother. And she is pure, attained through liberation. No association with impurity is perceived independently of her.

bhoktṛtvabhogyabhogeṣu sādhanādiṣu sarvataḥ |
saṁbhūtir avyayā bimbī nityā ca jananī matā ||
sā caiva vimalā [k, kh: himalo] nāma muktitaḥ pratipadyate | na tasyā vyatirekeṇa [k, kh: -na] malayuktir vibhāvyate || 1/43/90-91.

We find a similar example in the third ṣaṭka of the JY also:

The arising of the supreme energy takes place in the Kula which is consciousness and the supreme abode. She is Bhāsā who is the fourfold transformation of Speech and illumines everything. She is eternal (nityā), innate, subtle and unfolds the eight Kulas (of the Mothers).

citsvarūpe [k, kh, g, gh: -rūpa] pare dhāmni [g: dhare-] paraśaktyudayā kule ||
yā bhāsā bhāsayet sarvaṁ caturdhā vāgvivartinī |
sā nityā sahajā sūkṣmā kulāṣṭapravijṛmbhikā || JY 3/16/14cd-15.

[1] Recollect the eternal (nityā) Kālarātrī, who is very horrific. Her face is black and she instills fear. She is adorned with a flag bearing an owl. Naked, she is very fierce. Transported by that (owl) and naked, she eats blood.

kālarātrīṁ mahāghorāṁ kālavaktrāṁ bhayāvahām ||
ulūkadhvajasaṁdīptāṁ digvāsām atibhīṣaṇām| tadvāhanāṁ smaren nityāṁ digvāsāṁ rudhirāśanīm || JY 2/19 MS Kh fl. 93a.

She is this Trailokyaḍāmarī who severs the heads of (erring) Brahmins. Eternal (nityā), she bestows wealth and prosperity and many kinds of benefits.

trailokyaḍāmarī [k, kh, g: -rā] seyaṁ [k, kh: -meyaṁ] brahmaṇaḥ [g gh: -ṇo] śīrṣakṛntanī | [. . .]
dhanadhānyakarī nityā nānāsampatpradāyikā [kh: -kaḥ; g: -kām] | JY 3/8/634ab, 636ab.

The Kaula hero, blissful with wine, should have a partner sitting next to him and worship the goddess in a triangle (trikoṇamaṇḍala), symbolizing the Yoni, with meat and liquor. Trailokyadrāviṇī is brilliant red. She holds a noose, a goad, a drinking vessel, and makes the gesture of the Yoni. She sits on a Yoni (bhaga) and the Yoni is her flag, signalling as clearly as can be her strong association with Kāma.[1] She is said to make 'the universe mad with passion' (jagadunmādinī) and she is endowed with the 'eternal bliss' which is the spiritual joy of sexual union. Her worship makes the yogi irresistibly attractive to women. Thus Trailokyadrāviṇī is a typical erotic Yoginī. The Nityās are generally of this type, modelled on Kāmeśvarī, who is known to the KMT as a Nityā.[2]

As Nityās are not mentioned in the first ṣaṭka of the JY, it is not surprising that Nityaklinnā does not appear there. However, she appears in the second ṣaṭka in a group of 32 Nāyakīs of the Śvetā Kula. Although not expressly said to be a Nityā, she is amongst other Yoginīs who, judging by their names are, like her, concerned with Kāma. These include Kāminī (Passionate One), Kāmāṁganā (Love Woman), Madotkaṭā (Mad with Passion), Madavihvalā (Distraught with Passion), Bhagaklinnā (Wet Yoni), Retovahā (Sperm Mover), Subhagā (Beautiful One), Bhagavāhā (Yoni Mover), Capalā (Fickle One), Puṁścalī (the Courtesan), and Madāvahā (Invoker of Passion).[3]

Nityās are most apparent in the fourth ṣaṭka of the JY, which is also the last in chronological order. There we find several that become well known Yoginīs later. Kledinī[4] and Bhagamālinī[1] are mentioned individually and

---

[1] athātaḥ sampravakṣyāmi trailokyadrāvaṇīṁ śivām |
yathākhyāgrahaṇādevaṁ [kh: deva] trailokyaṁ [kh: -ye] dravate kṣaṇāt ||
suguptaṁ mandiraṁ gatvā puṣpadhūpabharālasam |
madirānandasaṁtṛptaḥ paśya pañcāmṛtaṁ carum ||
śaktyutsaṁgadharo [k: -dhāro] vīraḥ [k: vīrā; kh: vīro] kṛtovalligramo [kh: kṛto-] (?) guruḥ |
trikoṇamaṇḍalasyāntaḥ pūjayen nityasundarām ||
mahāpalālivibhavaiḥ puṣpadhūpabharolbaṇaiḥ |
madirāsavasandarbhaiḥ [k: -saṁvasandarbhaiḥ] pañcaratnālipūrakaiḥ [k: -ratnali-] ||
evaṁ saṁpūjya saṁdhyāyet sādhyāruṇasamujjvalām |
dravallākṣārasaprakhyāṁ dāḍimīkusumopamām [kh: ?] ||
*pāśāṅkuśakaravyagraṁ pānapātrakarāṁ [k: * ? pātrakarā; kh: páll-] śubhām |
yonimudrāsthitakarāṁ bhagavāhāṁ bhagadhvajāṁ ||
manobhavasaṁsthitādiparivāravirājitām |
jagadunmādanīṁ [k: -nī] nityāṁ nityānandasamanvitām || JY 2 MS Kh fl. 100a-100b.

[2] KMT 10/41c.

[3] JY 2 MS Kh fl. 281b.

[4] The eternal Nityā Kledinī is madly passionate with the juice of great bliss. She manifests by (her) association with the penetration of pulsation, contraction and motion.

mahānaṁdarasonmādā nityā nityaiva kledinī |
vyaktā sphuraṇasaṁkocacālanāveśayogataḥ || JY 4/10/22.

Nityaklinnā, who is worshipped with Raktā and Mahotkaṭā along with Śuṣkā, a form of Kālī. The first three are worshipped on the corners of a triangle representing the 'temple of the god of love', that is, the Yoni. They are in the domain of relationships (sālamba). The last is in the Pure Light (bhā) free of them (nirālamba) and is worshipped in the centre.[2] This is a standard pattern. Thus, three Nityās – Nityaklinnā, Kāmeśvarī and Bhagamālinī – are similarly worshipped in the corners of the triangle in the centre of Śrīcakra, whereas Nityāklinnā, Suraktā and Madadravā are those of Kubjikā's Yoni. Indeed, Nityaklinnā's connection to the triangle of the Yoni is one of her basic features. This is where we find her when related to the goddess Rāviṇī in the JY:

> The Kālī of menses who resounds in the abode of the triangle with three parts which is (always) in menses in the three times is Nityaklinnā who makes the beautiful sound (of consciousness).[3]

Chapter thirty-five of the fourth ṣaṭka of the JY is dedicated to Nityā Kālī. The names of a few Yoginīs are prefixed with the appellation 'nityā'. For example, amongst a group of Lakṣmīs (who in this context are forms of Kālī) we find the Yoginī Nityālakṣmī.[4] Nityā Kālī is an erotic form of Kālī, underscoring the Nityās special association with eros. She is called the Kālī of the Five Arrows (Kālīpañcaśarā) reminding us of Kāmeśvarī who also holds the Five Arrows of

---

The repetition of the word 'nityā' in the first line may well be to ensure that 'nityā' is understood to be a proper name, not an adjective.

[1] Giving rise to expansion and contraction in this way, (she is) Bhagamālinī. Intent (on the reality) between (immanent) activity (spanda) and (transcendental) inaction (aspanda), (she is) Nityā and the supreme Bhairavī.

evaṁ prasarasaṁkocau vidhāya bhagamālinī ||
spandāspandāntararatā nityā paramabhairavī | JY 4/47/17cd-18ab.

It is possible that the word 'nityā' here is an adjective. But in view of the fact that Bhagamālinī is commonly a Nityā, I understand the text this way.

[2] nityaklinnā tathā raktā mahotkoṭā [kh: -koḍhā] tu yāśritā [k, g: yāścitā] ||
smaramandiramadhyasthāṁ [kh: -madhyasthā; g: -mandirimadhyasthā] śuṣkāṁ bhairavavallabhām |
bhāmadhye pūjayed devīṁ vāmāveśāt praṇāśanīm ||
sālambe 'tha nirālambe bhāvasaṁhārake ca yā |
devyas tā eva pūjyās tu [all MSs: pūjyātra] nityādiprakrameṇa ca || JY 4/55/71cd-73.

[3] trikoṇadhāmni triskandhe trikāle' tha supuṣpite [kh: (?)] |
virauti puṣpakālī sā nityaklinnā surāviṇī || JY 4/5/71.

[4] JY 3/11/40.

Kāmadeva, the Lord of Love. Auspicious 'she melts the universe' and, although she is fierce (ghorā), the 'women of the three worlds are aroused by her mantra'.[1]

The Nityā form of Kālī is Nityaklinnā. She is the young Kālikā who causes women to 'melt' with the arousal of passion (mahāvidrāviṇī).[2] She is worshipped in the middle of a triangle representing the Yoni. There she is Kṛśodarī a form of Nityā Kālī. Bhairava says of her:

> I see none who is her equal in the very powerful Vidyāpīṭha. She causes the women of the gods to melt (with passion). She is the deluding one (mohanī) even amongst the gods. One should worship her, Kṛśodarī, in the middle of (the Yoni which is) the lotus of the triangle. She is beautifully thin. She has one face and three eyes (that burn) like fire. She is fierce (raudrā) and holds a noose and goad and there are five arrows in her upraised hands. 'Delusion', 'desiccation', 'melting', 'wetting' and 'arousal' – these are the five arrows she should hold in (her) hand. One should think about the powerful Nityā Kālī, the wealth (lakṣmī) of the universe (in this way).[3]

The Tantra promises that by reflecting on her, the adept becomes the equal of Kāmadeva and all women, human and divine, are aroused by seeing him. But although she is always arousing, she is also very fierce (mahogrā).[4] Karaṅkiṇī, a

---

[1] yenaiva [k, kh, g: yenavai] kṣobhamāyānti trijagadyoṣitaḥ sadā |
ghorā pañcaśarā kālī tāṁ śṛṇuṣva samāsataḥ || JY 4/35/3.

[2] O mistress of the gods, she is your Kālikā, Nityaklinnā who is said, in truth, to be the supreme (goddess) who is the great arouser of passion.

eṣā sā tava deveśi nityaklinnā tu kālikā |
ākhyātā paramārthena mahāvidrāviṇī [kh g: -vaṇī] parā || JY 4/35/8.

[3] nāsyās tulyā prapaśyāmi vidyāpīṭhe mahābale || drāvaṇī suranārīṇāṁ mohanī tridaśeṣv api |
trikoṇapadmamadhyasthāṁ yajed enāṁ kṛśodarīm || [. . .]
sukṛśām ekavadanāṁ netratretāgnisaṁnibhām ||
pāśāṅkuśadharāṁ raudrāṁ śaracāpakarodyatām |
mohanaṁ [kh: -ṇaṁ] śoṣaṇaṁ caiva drāvaṇaṁ kledanaṁ tathā ||
kṣobhaṇaṁ pañca ityete śarāḥ saṁdhārayat kare |
cintanīyā jagallakṣmīr [kh g: -lakṣmī] nityākālī maholbaṇā || JY 4/35/9cd-10, 12cd-14.

[4] The JY says of Nityā Kālī: Thus she is always arousing and very fierce. Recollect her residing in a mountain ravine. [. . .] She is the firestick of Passion and the family of mantras. She is Saṁkledinī whose form is Kālī and is very fierce.

tasmāt sadā kṣobhakarī mahogrā smareta sā parvatakandarasthā |
*kāmāraṇī [kh: kāmaraṇī] mantrakulāraṇī ca [kh g: ] saṁkledanī kālirūpā mahogrā |
JY 4/35/18ab, 21ab.

form of Rāviṇī (also called Saṁrāviṇī), like Śuṣkā, combines in herself the erotic and the terrific. She is unbearably arousing, and yet consumes voraciously.

Nityā as a goddess in her own right appears in chapter four of the KuKauM. In the following passage she is presented in two forms – subtle and gross. Extensive theological and metaphysical depth is attributed to her by identifying her with the triadic energy of Kuṇḍalinī in terms with which we have now grown quite familiar in our study of the Kubjikā Tantras. Nityā is not identified with Kubjikā, but the terminology and presentation leaves no doubt that her subtle form is that of Kubjikā as the triadic Kuṇḍalinī. The 'gross' form is actually no less subtle than the subtle one but is said to be such because it is related to the application of the Nityā's erotic, spiritual energy in external, sexual union. This is the goddess of the Nityā Kula by means of which even the impotent and those who have been abandoned by their wives can generate the same spiritual bliss of Kāma within their body. Thus her power and function is clearly Kāma which, as we can see in the following passage, is understood to be the energy of Kuṇḍalinī, Nityā's essential identity:

> (Kuṇḍalinī) bestows (marital) bliss (saubhāgya) and so is said to be Nityā (the Eternal Woman). She brings about growth (and development) and is the eternal (nityā) mother of the universe who instills certainty. She is the eternal Transmental. Devoid of the universe of thought constructs (niṣprapañcā), she resides in the life breath of all. She is the supreme energy, called Kuṇḍalā and is the seventeenth energy (of the Moon). O Supreme Goddess! Once cast the Two Drops in the belly, one who is sustained by her, O Gaurī, obtains supreme marital bliss (saubhāgya).
>
> (As such) she is subtle. I will (now) explain how she is in a gross form. She who is the first (and foremost energy) present in touch and the rest (of the sensations) above and below (at the extremities of the breath) is offered libation (tarpitā) by the union of man and woman. Residing on the plane of the Neuter she is (the one) energy (kalā) and her form is (made of all the) energies. She is threefold (as) will, knowledge and action and abides (permanently) having pervaded the universe. Called knowledge, (she is Kuṇḍalinī and) her form is (round like) an earring (kuṇḍala). Called action, she is the mother of the letters (varṇamātṛkā). Called will, (her) form is mantra. She is (both) the object of denotation and what denotes it. Associated with (both) cause and effect, she emerges from within the pure (energy of the Moon) (vimalānta). She has three natures and resides on three paths; she is endowed with the three causes and the three energies. She > is conjoined with the letter E. (As) the Supreme Power, she resides within Śiva.[1]

Nityā has three iconic forms: red, black and white. The red Nityā is in the centre of a maṇḍala where she sits with her consort Kāmadeva:

> The goddess in the middle is (red) like vermillion and the Javā and Bandhūka flower. She is charming and beautiful. Auspicious, she holds a flower bow and arrows, noose and goad. Her topknot is red and she holds a bowl and a citron (bījapūraka). She is joyful with the bliss of wine. She wears red clothes and has long red eyes. (Her) lips are (like) a flaming red lotus and she shines with red flowers. She is the mother (who makes people) passionate with attachment (raktasaṁrāgajananī) and she colours this universe (with desire). Kāma, along with spring, resides in the Nanda forest. The (spring) breezes are close to him, in front and behind.[2]

---

[1] parasaubhāgyam ādhatte tena nityā prakīrtitā ||
vārdhanī ca jaganmātā nityā niścayakārikā |
nityonmanī niṣprapañcā sarvaprāṇe vyavasthitā ||
kuṇḍalākhyā parā śaktiḥ sā ca saptādaśī kalā |
bindudvayaṁ vinikṣipya jaṭhare parameśvari ||
tayā adhiṣṭhitā gauri paraṁ saubhāgyam āpnuyāt |
sā sūkṣmā sthūlarūpeṇa yathā sā tad vadāmy aham ||
ūrdhvādhaḥsparśagādimā strīpuṁyogena tarpitā |
napuṁsakapadāntasthā sā kalā kalavigrahā ||
jñānakriyecchā trividhā vyāpya viśvaṁ vyavasthitā |
jñānākhyā kuṇḍalākārā kriyākhyā varṇamātṛkā ||
icchākhyā mantrarūpā sā vācyavācakalakṣaṇā |
kāryakāraṇasaṁyuktā vimalāntavisarpiṇī ||
trisvarūpā trimārgasthā kāraṇatrayasaṁyutā |
śaktitrayasamopetā caikāreṇa vibheditā ||
parā śaktiḥ śivāntasthā . . . . | KuKauM 4/6cd-14a.

[2] tanmadhyavartināṁ devīṁ javāsindūrasannibhām | bandhūjīvakavarṇābhāṁ cārurūpāṁ manoharām ||
puṣpacāpaśaravyagrāṁ pāśāṅkuśadharāṁ śubhām |
raktaśekharasampūrṇāṁ pātrahastāṁ suśobhanām ||
bījapūrakahastāṁ ca madirānandananditām |
raktavastradharāṁ raktāṁ raktāntāyatalocanām ||
raktapadmojjvaladharāṁ raktapuṣpavirājitām |
raktasaṁrāgajananīṁ rañjayantīmidaṁ jagat ||
kāmaṁ vasantasahitaṁ nandanākhye vane sthitām |
tatpārśvavartiśiśirāḥ pūrve cānte vyavasthitāḥ || KuKauM 4/71-75.

The names of the eleven goddesses who govern the syllables of Kāmeśvarī's Vidyā and accompany Kāmadeva indicate that they are typical erotic Yoginīs.[1] Although the text does not say so, it is clear that the red Nityā is a form of Kāmeśvarī. She both looks almost the same[2] and grants the same boon, that is, the power to be irresistibly attractive to women. When Nityā is in her black form, she is Kālī. Surrounded by the same Yoginīs, the power to attract women becomes 'the great force of delusion' (mahāvega, bhramavega) by means of which the adept can control and even kill his enemies. All forms of magic are based essentially on the power to control and subjugate (vaśīkaraṇa). 'Black' rites direct this power at enemies, 'red' rites subjugate women and 'white' ones are the means to achieve control of higher, spiritual powers. Accordingly, the white Nityā is like Parā who, similar to Sarasvatī, the goddess of learning and the arts, bestows mastery of Speech to those who recite her Vidyā:

> The goddess Nityā is always white and, completely full, resides in the circle of the moon. She is adorned with a rosary of crystal and a book. She is in the middle of a forest of Kadamba trees and enters into one's own body. The principle (over which she presides) is between the vital breath and is located above (Śiva) the Tranquil One. One should repeat it along with emission at the beginning and end of the Vidyā. One should make it enter with the force of a river carrying along with it all the scriptures. Once placed within the heart, one becomes the Lord of Speech himself. He knows all that is made of speech and contemplates the principle which is the meaning of all written prose. O great goddess! By reciting it a 100,000 times a man becomes a (great) poet.[3]

---

[1] They are called: 1) Hṛllekhā (Heart Line) 2) Kledanī (She who Wets) 3) Nandā (She who Delights) 4) Kṣobhaṇī (She who Arouses) 5) Madanāturā (Pained with Passion) 6) Nirañjanā (Stainless) 7) Bhagavatī 8) Madanāvatī (Passionate One) 9) Vihvalā (Distraught with Love) 10) Dravaṇī (She who Melts) 11) Vegavatī (Vitality)

[2] The only difference between the red Nityā and Kāmeśvarī is that the former has two more lower arms.

[3] nityā devī sadā śuklā sampūrṇā candramaṇḍale | sphāṭikenākṣasūtreṇa pustakena tu śobhitā ||
kadambavanamadhyasthā praviśantī svake tanau |
iramadhyagataṁ tattvaṁ śāntasyopari saṁsthitam ||
tadvisargeṇa sahitaṁ vidyādyante sthitaṁ japet |
niyantaṁ śāstrasaṅghātaṁ nadīvegena cāviśet ||
hṛdgrāhyāntargataṁ kṛtvā sākṣād vācaspatir bhavet |
sarvavāṅmayavettāsau gadyārtha tattvaṁ cintayet ||
kāvyakartā mahādevi lakṣajāpād bhaven naraḥ | KuKauM 4/136-140ab.

The KuKauM declares that her worship in her 'outer' iconic form is 'the essence of the Nityā Tantra'. The following chapter is dedicated to Tripurabhairavī, who is tacitly identified with Nityā,[1] although her iconic form is quite distinct. The Nityā Tantra is also mentioned in the KMT. There it is associated with the Heart, the third limb of the goddess over which Kālikā presides. She emerges from the Heart to take up her residence in the Wheel of the Self-supported which is an important centre for the practice of yogic sexual union.[2] There she 'generates eternal (nitya) bliss'. This bliss is the bliss of Kāma. Thus, the KMT declares that she is Nityā[3] who governs this domain of energy. We have seen that Nityā appears in the KMT as a modality of Parā. She is especially Nityaklinnā in threefold form as Nityaklinnā herself, Madadravā and Raktā who causes the flow of sexual fluids (drāvaṇa), arousal (kṣobhana) and sexual attraction (ākarṣaṇa).[4] Her association with conjugal love and fertility is obvious.

Nityā is mentioned only once again in the KMT in a hymn (stava) dedicated to Kubjikā as Mahāmāyā.[5] Although hardly more than a passing reference to their essential identity, it heralds Kubjikā's subsequent assimilation to Nityaklinnā. Nityaklinnā is the goddess of the aroused Yoni. She is the Triangle (trikoṇā) and its source, the Liṅga of the Point in the centre, which is the pure form of the Command, transcendent and undifferentiated (niṣkala). The two, the periphery and the centre, immanence and transcendence, stimulate each other. Thus the goddess is Nityaklinnā - Perpetually Wet with the vitalizing and liberating lunar fluid that flows from her divine seminal energy. This character of the goddess is evident in a mantra addressed to her. Significantly, it is the last of the mantras addressed to the thirty-two goddesses who govern the syllables of Kubjikā's Vidyā. From here, which is the culmination of the series, flows the same lunar nectar. Thus Nityaklinnā is invoked in this mantra as Kubjikā who 'flows with passion' (madadravā) and causes the fertile male seed to flow (śukradrāviṇī).[6]

---

[1] Chapter four, which is dedicated to the goddess Nityā, is called Vajrayāga. The following chapter is dedicated to Tripurabhairavī. Bhairava declares at the beginning of it that he has already talked about the fire sacrifice (yāga) of Tripurā and will go on to talk about her worship.
[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 258 ff..
[3] KMT 10/41cd-42.
[4] KMT 6/36-48.
[5] This hymn is translated above, p. 21 ff..
[6] AIṀ 5 AIṀ NAMAḤ KLEDANI KLINNE MADADRAVE HRĪṀ (K: HVĪṀ) KUBJIKE HRĀṀ CHRĪṀ KLĪṀ HŪṀ ŚUKRADRĀVAṆI ŚUKRADRĀVAṆI PHREṀ HRĪṀ KLĪṀ KLĪṀ ĀṀ HŪṀ || YKh (1) chapter 21.
Nityā

Nityā, herself triple, governs and embodies all the primary triads as her three aspects (bheda). The three goddesses, their correspondences and functions, are essentially those of the 'three modalities' (trividhagati) of the Goddess in her Triangle as Bhagaśakti – the Energy of the Yoni:

> The energy called the Yoni who is endowed with the dynamism of the three paths, consists of three letters and three aspects (possesses) the venerable Oḍḍiyāṇa which, endowed with the supreme energy and is well energized, is located in the middle. The venerable (sacred seat) called Jālandhara is located within the manifested abode in the right corner. The venerable sacred seat Pūrṇa is in the left (corner) formed through the fear of the fettered. Kāmarūpa is in the front of that (Yoni).[1]
>
> In this way Rudra's energy, the mother of persistence and destruction, has encompassed (vyāpta) all things with (the sides of the Triangle, her) three divisions. Blissful with that (tanmada), the primordial and free God of the gods who is Kula and Akula resides in the centre of that. His Command in the form of the Drop (bindubhūtā) is consciousness which bestows accomplishment and removes the fear of the fettered. (The Command is the goddess) Nityaklinnā (Perpetually Wet). Free and desirous of herself (svaraktā), she bestows perpetual bliss, which is delighted by phenomenal existence.[2]
>
> In the middle of that (Drop) is the Divine Liṅga, which is eternal bliss that generates supreme bliss, (its) form the Drop and nature the Void (kharūpa). Churned by both, it is divided by the six parts. I salute the venerable (goddess) called Kubjikā whose beautiful body is aroused and makes love there (kurvantī tatra kāmaṁ).
>
> I salute the one whose name is the Nameless, who contemplates the phenomenal being of the Wheel of the Earth (which

---

[1] yā sā [k kh: yā śā; gh: pā śā] śaktir bhagākhyā tripathagatiyutā tryakṣarā [g: tyakṣarā] triprakārā tasyāḥ [sarve: tasyā] śrī-oḍḍiyāṇaṁ parakalasahitaṁ madhyasaṁsthaṁ sudīptam | tac chrījālandharākhyaṁ prakaṭitanilaye dakṣiṇe caiva koṇe vāme śrīpūrṇapīṭhaṁ paśujanabhayakṛt kāmarūpaṁ tadagre || CMSS 1/4.

[2] evaṁ vyāptaṁ samastaṁ sthitilayajananī rudraśaktis tribhedaiḥ *tanmadhye [g: missing] devadevam akulakulamayaṁ [kh: -devaḥ sakula-; g: * * vamakulakulamayaṁ]* |  * * * * * * * * * * * * * tanmayādyasvatantraṁ [k, g: tanmadādya-]*
yasyājñā bindubhūtā paśubhayaharaṇī [g: -daraṇī] siddhidā bodharūpā || Ibid. 1/5.

is the syllable AIṀ). Salutations to the goddess of bliss. Salutations to you whose form is the Yoni.[1]

Nityaklinnā is also in a special way the goddess embodied in her Vidyā.

May she, the goddess Nityaklinnā, who consists of thirty-two syllables and is like the red sun, protect (us).[2] I bow with devotion to the mistress of all (sarveśī), who is accomplished (siddhā) and who, having accomplished all things, travels on the extended path (pṛthupatha) (of emanation). Her form is the Triangle and her plane unlimited ability (paṭu). She is enflamed by the burning Point (bindu). Causing (nectar) to flow (drāvayantī), she floods the entire plane of the universe with dense currents of nectar. Active in the utterance (of mantra that takes place) in the centre, she pervades all things with the mass of (her) red and beautiful rays. (She is) the threefold Nityaklinnā, the universal energy (kalā) of Śiva, the root goddess who pervades (all things). She awakens the Command that has been destroyed and removes the impurities (that sully the) Rule. She alone is capable of piercing the bridge. She is the garland of thirty-two syllables, the awakened Kaulika Command, the supreme energy (well) deployed. Pure, she is the Light of the Void and she pulses radiantly with waves of rays. She alone conjoins (the fettered to) the path of the Siddhas.[3]

---

[1] nityaklinnā [kh: -kliṁnnā] svaraktā [g: svaraktāṁ] bhavamuditasadānandadātrī svatantrā tanmadhye divyaliṅgaṁ paramasukhakaraṁ bindurūpaṁ kharūpam | nityānandasvarūpaṁ tadubhayamathanaṁ ṣaṭprakārair vibhinnaṁ [k: ṣaṭpakāraivibhinnaṁ; kh: ghaṭprakārair-] kurvantīṁ [k kh: kurvantī; g: kurvanti] tatra kāmān [g: kāmā] kṣubhitavaratanuṁ [g: -catanuṁḥ] śrīkubjikākhyaṁ namāmi ||
namo nirṇāmanāmnāya [g: -mānāmnāya] bhūcakrabhavabhāvine [k g: bhacakra-; kh: bhavakrabhava-] |
namo ānandadevye [k kh g: -devyai] ca bhagarūpe namas [all: namos] tu te || Ibid. 1/6-7.

[2] sā devī nityaklinnā raktaravinibhā pātu dvātriṁśavarṇā || YKh (1) 38/71d.

[3] yā sā śṛṅgāṭākārā [g: -ṭakārāṁ] amitapaṭupadā [g: hasitapatupadām] prajvaladbindudīptā [g: -dīptāṁ]
sā drāvanty amṛtaughair [g: drātandrāmṛtodyor] jagadakhilapadam plāvayantī [g: plātrayantī] prakāmaiḥ [g: -meḥ] | madhyoccārapravṛttā [g: -vṛtā] aruṇarucicayair vyāpayantī samastaṁ nityaklinnām tridhāṁ tām akhilaśivakalāṁ vyāpitāṁ [g: vyādhitā] mūladevyām || naṣṭājñābodhakartrīṁ [g: -kattī] samayamalaharāṁ [g: mamayamalaharā] setubhedaikadakṣāṁ [g: -bhedeka-] dvātriṁśadvarṇamālāṁ [g: -lā] racitaparakalāṁ [g: -parikalā] kaulikājñāṁ [g: -jñā] prabuddhāṁ śuddhāṁ [g: śuddhā] vyomaprakāśāṁ [g: -śā] sphuradurukiraṇāṁ siddhamārgaikayoktrīṁ siddhāṁ sarvārthasiddhāṁ pṛthupathagamanāṁ sarveśīṁ [g: sarveśān] naumi bhaktyā ||

Thus a part of the goddess stands for the whole. Accordingly in the following verse, which is part of a eulogy of the goddess's 32 syllable Vidyā, Klinnā is the name of the goddess herself.

> She who is KLĪṀ, the goddess Klinnā, accompanied by the Goddess (bhagavatī) and endowed with the consciousness of the Command is Vakrā whose form is the Triangle. Supreme with (the sacred energy of the) nasal (letters in her Vidyā) (ṅañaṇanamaparā), she is Parā, the foremost knowledge. She has three eyes. (As) the Sun and Moon she shines as the Ray (of divine light), and is the goddess called Ciñciṇī. I praise her, she who residing in the Void, is the goddess whose eyes are the Sun and Moon and consists of thirty-two syllables.[1]
>
> Next I will proclaim the teaching concerning the thirty-two (syllable) Vidyā by just knowing which one clearly attains insight (saṁvitti). Nityā, Klinnā and Raktā (are the goddesses in the transmissions of the) Aged, Youth and the Child. These three divisions are said to be the auspicious arising of the teachers. Other, secondary divisions are (those of) the common initiate (samayin), adept (sādhaka) and apprentice (putraka).
>
> (The one goddess) bestows accomplishment in three ways (as) Ambā, Siddhā and Ghorā. Here (in this case, the goddess) in the transmission of the Child is Ghorā and Siddhā is said to be in the Middle One. The Vidyā called Ambikā is in the middle of the transmission of the Eldest. Raktā is in the transmission of the Current of the Eldest. Klinnā is in the Middle Transmission and the one called Nityā, who resides in the teacher's mouth is in (the transmission) of the Child.[2]

YKh (1) 39/12-13.

[1] yā sā klīṁ [g: klī] klinnā [g: klinnaṁ] devī Bhagavatīsahitā ājñācaitanyayuktā [g: ājñācetanya-] vakrā [g: vaktrā] śṛṅgāṭākārā [g: śṛṅgāṭa-] ṅañaṇanamaparā [g: utsaṇanamaparā] sā parā jñānamukhyā netrās trīṇy arkenduḥ [g: -rkendudhāmāṁ] sphurati ca kiraṇā ciñciṇī nāma devyā vicce 'haṁ sā nabhasthā raviśaśinayanā [g: raviśasi-] devī [g: devi] dvātriṁśavarṇā ||

YKh (1) 38/70.

[2] athātaḥ saṁpravakṣyāmi vidyādvātriṁśanirṇayam ||
yena [k, kh, gh: yestu; ṅ: yastu] vijñātamātreṇa [all MSs: -mātrais tu] saṁvittir [k: saṁvitti; ṅ: saṁcitti] labhyate [k, kh, ṅ: labhate] sphuṭam |
*nityā [k, kh, gh: nitya] klinnā tathā raktā vṛddhakaumārabālake [kh: vṛddhakaumā * vālake]* ||
*ete bhedās trayaḥ [k, kh, gh: -stayaḥ] proktā ācāryāṇāṁ [ṅ: -ṇā] ca [ṅ: ] śubhodayāḥ [k, kh, gh: śubhedayāḥ; ṅ: -yaḥ] |
upabhedās trayaś cānye samayīsādhakaputrakāḥ ||

It appears that an error has occurred here. The redactor has divided the name Nityaklinnā into two parts and treated them as those of two separate goddesses. Elsewhere in the same Tantra the triad beginning with Nityaklinnā is related to the three transmissions.[1] There Nityaklinnā (not just 'Nityā') is clearly linked to the transmission of the Child. The same triad is found in the KMT and the ṢSS which follows it, adding a few details. At that initial stage of the development of the Kubjikā tradition only one transmission – Krama – was clearly defined. Its expansion into three transmissions was just a latent possibility.[2] Thus, the triadic Nityā is not linked to them. Instead, the KMT integrates the triadic Nityā into the Trika triad by identifying her as the Nityā form of Parāparā. It is reasonable to suppose, although admittedly the KMT does not say so, that her three forms - Nityaklinnā, Suraktā and Madotkaṭā - constitute an alternative triad that runs parallel to the main one, changing its character from a Trika one to a Kubjikā one. These three goddesses are all like the red Nityā of which they are aspects. They have one face, two arms and hold a goad, noose, book and rosary. They are young, blissful with wine, and, mad with passion, their eyes are distracted (vibhrānta) with passion.[3] Significantly, the commentary adds that they all have two forms[4] - white and red. The white form has only two arms and holds a book and rosary. Presumably, the white forms are those of the goddess Parā and the red, forms of Nityā.

We conclude with one or two observations. As the traditions of the Bhairava Tantras and then Kaula developed, the presence of the Nityā Yoginīs becomes more noticeable and significant. Their presence and progressively developing 'personalities' are markers of an increasing tendency in the Kaula context to allow more space for the 'erotic' as a powerful and symbolically profound perception of the sacred. This development is apparent in the history of the sources of the Kubjikā cult. It culminates in the wonderfully rich theophany of *ambā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: aṁve] siddhā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: siddhe] tathā ghorā [k, kh, gh: ghore; ṅ: ghori] siddhidā [ṅ: siddhiṁdā] ca [ṅ: ] tpibhedataḥ |

---

ghorā bālakrame [ṅ: -mo] cātra siddhā madhye prakīrtitā [k, kh, gh: -tāḥ] ||
ambikā [k, kh, gh: aṁvidyā] nāma yā vidyā jyeṣṭhakramasya [k, kh, gh: kramṛkramasya] madhyagā [k, kh, gh: madhyagāḥ] |
*raktā [ṅ: rakṣa] jyeṣṭhaughakramagā [k, kh, gh: jyoṣṭoday-; ṅ: -kramaśā] klinnā [ṅ: * nnā] madhyakrame sthitā* ||
nityābhidhā tathā [ṅ: nathā] bāle deśikānāṁ mukhe sthitā [k, kh, gh: -tāḥ] |

YKh (1) 21/28cd-33ab.

[1] The (transmissions) of the Child, Youth and Elders (accord with) the division of (the goddesses) Nityaklinnā and the rest nityaklinnādibhedena bālakaumāravṛddhakāḥ [g: -kā] || YKh (1) 29/59cd.

[2] See above, p. 145.

[3] ṢSS 11/132cd-133ab.

[4] The commentary reads dvirūpadharāḥ '(they have) two forms' for devīrūpadharāḥ '(they) bear the form of the goddess' in the root text.

Nityā celebrated in the sublime beauty of Tripurasundarī, who is essentially Kāmeśvarī, and Śrīcakra, which is the sacred abode of the Nityās.

The Western Face: Carcikā and Mahālakṣmī

Carcikā is Kubjikā's western face, also identified with Mahālakṣmī and Umā, the Skyfarer (khecarī), [1] it is the lower one in front (pūrvikā), which is that of Kubjikā herself. She is the last of the six goddesses with whom Kubjikā declares her identity,[2] implying perhaps, that this is her final and most complete form. The goddess is called Carcikā in the KuKh when she emerges from the Liṅga. As such she is the main deity of the Kula, Kubjikā herself. She is Bhairavī who is both the consort and mother of Bhairava.[3] Carcikā is the aspect Kubjikā assumes when she has imparted the Command to Bhairava and embodies that Command in its purest form.[4] She is the Liṅga, that is, the Point in the centre of the Triangle.[5] This is where the teachings originated and so is represented by Oḍḍiyāna, the First Seat. Accordingly, Carcikā is the Mother in the seat of Oṁkāra in the centre of the triangle[6] and is worshipped in the SKh in several mantras as Oḍḍāmbā of Oḍḍiyāna.

Who is the goddess Carcikā? According to the Vāmanapurāṇa Carcikā is one of the eight Mothers born, along with eight Bhairavas, from the sweat of Śiva's brow that formed when he was fighting the demon Andhaka.[7] Carcikā appears a few times in the BY as one of the Mothers or is linked to them. In one place her consort is Cāmuṇḍabhairava,[8] reflecting her association with Cāmuṇḍā. This association is maintained in the Kubjikā Tantras. According to the Guhyasiddhi,[9] out of the eight groups of eight Yoginīs related to the Mothers, Carcikā is amongst the Yoginīs associated with Cāmuṇḍā. She is the fifth amongst an unusual group of eight Mothers listed in the YKh.[10] There, in a common group

---

[1] KuKh 10/22-23 and note.

[2] KuKh 3/71.

[3] She, Trikhaṇḍā Bhairavī, is Carcikā, the deity of Kula. Her son is the great yogi called Mahābhairava.
trikhaṇḍā bhairavī yā sā carcikā kuladevatā ||
tasyāḥ (tasya) putro mahāyogī mahābhairavanāmataḥ | AS 8/42cd-43ab.

[4] KuKh 3/165cd-167.

[5] KuKh 3/169.

[6] YKh (1) 13/2.

[7] Agrawal 1964: 136 with reference to chapter 73 of the Vāmanapurāṇa.

[8] carcikāyā yadā pāto bhave cāmuṇḍabhairavaḥ | BY 34/173ab.

[9] Guhyasiddhi 5/46.

[10] brahmāṇī vaiṣṇavī raudrī mātaṅgī [ṅ: mataṁgī] carcikeśvarī |
*vārāhī nārasiṁhī ca śivādūtī [2: vidūtī ] tathāṣṭamī [k, gh: tathāstamī] ||
YKh (1) 15/61 = YKh (2) 5/154cd-155ab.

of eight Mothers she is the penultimate one and is associated with Cāmuṇḍā.[1] However, in a series of mantras dedicated to the Mothers in the same text she is linked to Māheśvarī.[2] The same connection is made in the Śrīmatasāra (2).[3]

Tantric traditions, especially early Kaula ones, flourished in Orissa during the rule of the Bhaumas and the Somavaṁśīs between the 8th and the 11th century. Despite the powerful presence of Vaiṣṇavism that developed there from about the end of that period, Tantric forms of worship continue to be a major feature of the Hinduism practiced in Orissa. This is especially evident in the continuing worship of the Mothers, amongst which Cāmuṇḍā, the fiercest of them, was considered to be the main one[4] and is sometimes worshipped as Carcikā.[5] This link is supported by the Agnipurāṇa.[6] There Rudracarcikā appears as the first of eight varieties of Cāmuṇḍā. She was identified with a goddess worshipped in a cave in the Hiṅgula mountain in Baluchistan who was probably a form of Durgā called Koṭṭarī. In the course of time she came to be called Hiṅgulā or mother Hiṅglāj, a goddess worshipped by Nātha Yogīs. Her association with Carcikā seems to have begun in the Gupta period from which time she appears in inscriptions. Later on the Paramāra kings of Mālvā (ninth to twelfth centuries AD) made Carcikā their family deity.[7] For a period, a part of their kingdom extended to southern Koṅkaṇa where the Kubjikā cult developed for a large part of its early history. One wonders whether Carcikā's incorporation into Kubjikā may not be somehow related to her importance as a royal goddess. In Orissa her main pīṭha is at Banki in the Cuttack district. It lies on a flat hillock on the right bank of the Mahanadi and is still very popular.

Carcikā means 'repetition of a word'. Accordingly, a rosary used to count the number of repetitions of a mantra, commonly called japamālā, is occasionally called carcakamālā. Her association with Speech is again evident from her location on the upper lip where she is placed according to a prayer (kavaca) that is

---

[1] Camuṇḍā (the sixth Mother) moves without motion (acāracāriṇī) and, mounted on the path of movement and rest (cārācāra), she resides in the end of the End of the Sixteen. Carcikā resides there.

cārācārapathārūḍhā [k, kh, gh: cārocāra-; ṅ: vāroccārayathārūḍho] ṣoḍaśāntāntavartinī [k, kh, gh: ṣoḍaśāṁtāta-; ṅ: ṣoḍaśāntānavartinī] |
cāmuṇḍācāracāriṇī [k, kh, gh: -cāraṇī; ṅ: -caraṇī] tatrasthā carcikā bhavet || YKh (1) 25/94.

[2] YKh (1) MS K fl. 20b.

[3] Śrīmatasāra (2) 4/116, 15/79, 114.

[4] This is 'clearly demonstrated', according to Brighenti (2001: 111), by the placement of the cult images in the sanctum of the Vaitāl Deul temple in Bhuvanesvar.

[5] Brighenti 2001: 112.

[6] Agnipurāṇa 50/30-37.

[7] Agrawal 1964: 136-140.

a common appendix to the Devīmāhātmya.[1] Kubjikā is, like all the Kaula Great Goddesses, a Yoginī who embodies sacred Speech. Although this association is not made explicitly anywhere when she is identified with Carcikā, nonetheless, the pride of place given to her is probably partly due to it.

Carcikā appears occasionally in the JY both as a minor Yoginī and an aspect of the main goddess and continues in these roles in latter Kaula traditions also. Carcikā is just a Yoginī amongst others in the ŚM[2] where she is otherwise not mentioned at all. In the SKh she appears as one of a group of sixty-four Yoginīs. In the milieu of the Kālīmata of the JY, Carcikā appears as a Yoginī of the third syllable of the seventeen-syllable Vidyā of Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī.[3] But there, as in the Kubjikā Tantras, she may also be a form of the main goddess.

A method of worshipping (vidhi) Carcikā is found in the JY. There she is like a very fierce, emaciated Cāmuṇḍā-like Kālī. The adept who observes her vow should be naked, his body smeared with ashes from a cremation ground and carry a skull. Looking like a mad man, he should attend a cremation ground for seven nights. There he makes offerings to Carcikā in a funeral pyre of human flesh and entrails as he repeates her Vidyā. Finally, she emerges from the fire and gives the adept the accomplishments (siddhi) he desires. He achieves union with the Yoginīs and he joins them as a skyfarer and becomes a Lord of Yoga.[4] Carcikā is described as follows in the JY:

---

[1] Brighenti 2001: 112 with reference to Coburn 1984: 177.

[2] ŚM 15/141cd.

[3] She who playfully devours thousands of loads of poison is said to be Carcikā who, with fearsome teeth, is the (Yoginī of the) third (syllable).

viṣabhārasahasrāṇi [k: -rusa-] yā bhakṣayati līlayā ||
carcikā ghoradaṁṣṭrā sā tṛtīyā parikīrtitā [k: -ta] | JY 2/25/124cd-125ab.

[4] tvatkeśāṁ [k: tvakṣyoṣāṁ; kh: -ṣā] ghoraninadāṁ [k: -dī] japel lakṣāṣṭakaṁ [k: jja-] tadā ||
daśāṁśena [k, kh: daśāṁśane] juhet tatra naramāṁsāntramiśritām [k: -māṁsītra-] |
yāvaj juhoti [k: jahoni] deveśi tāvat sā vahnimaṁḍale ||
samudeti mahāghorāṁ ghoraninādanisvanām [k: -nīradaniścanām; kh: -nīrada- -nā] | *carayitvā vareṇaiva yaṣṭena * hi sādhakam* ||
vrajate sā maheśānī rocet [k: roce] saṁsādhayed hitam |
japtvā lakṣadvayaṁ mantrī paścād vratam upācaret || 26 ||
śmaśānabhasmadigdhāṁgair [k, kh: -digdhāgai] nagno [k: nagnā] muṇḍadharaḥ sadā |
ādāved vihased [k: -sa] ghoraṁ vidyolmukakarāvṛtaḥ [k: vidyalmuka-; kh: vidyulmuka-] || 27 ||
unmattavat [k: -va] saptadinaṁ [k: śaptadina; kh: -na] tato rātrau śmaśānagaḥ | vratānte devadeveśi ūrdhvaṁ [k, kh: mūrdha] bāhum udāharet || 28 ||
yāvat sahasramekaṁ syāt tāvan [k: tāvat] melāpamadbhutam [k: melāpadbhutam] |
yoginīnāṁ sahāsyaiva [k: -syeva] jāyate devi niścitam || 29 ||
tābhiḥ [kh: tābhi] saha khagīśaḥ [k, kh: -gāsī] syād [k: -syāj; kh: tābhiḥ-] yogeśvarapadaṁ bhavet | JY 2/26/23cd-30ab.

> Now I will tell (you) the supreme teaching concerning Carcikā by just knowing which one attains every accomplishment. One should visualize (Carcikā) as very thin (and old) (suśuṣkā), her face brilliant and frightening with her fierce gaze. She is (dark) like black lightning and is engaged in devouring the triple world. She has one face and three eyes and two arms and is adorned with a corpse. She is mounted on a buffalo and leather made of human skin is (under her) buttock. (Her) garland is made of human entrails and (she is) adorned with snakes.[1]

According to the JY, Kālikā is called Carcikā because she drinks up (camati) everything making the sound 'chama chama', relishings (carvayantī) all that she consumes.[2] The CMSS implies a similar didactic etymology by saying that the teachings concerning Carcikā are 'relished' (carvita).[3] Another etymology of this sort derives her name from the root 'carca', which means to reflect or

---

[1] athātaḥ saṁpravakṣyāmi carcikānirṇayaṁ [k: -ya] param |
yena vijñānamātreṇa sarvasidhyaruho bhavet ||
dhyāyet [k: -yat] suśuṣkāṁ [k: muṇḍaṣkī; kh: suśuṣkā] dīptāsyāṁ koṭarākṣībhayānakām [k: koḍharākṣīṁ-] |
kṛṣṇajīmūtasadṛśāṁ [k: -ta dṛśāṁ] trailokyakavalodyatām [k: -jyatī]* ||
ekavaktrāṁ [k: pañcava-; kh: -vaktrā] trinetrāṁ [k: trinetrā] tāṁ [k: nāṁ] dvibhujāṁ śavamaṇḍitām |
māhiṣeṇa [k, kh: māhiṣyena] samārūḍhāṁ naracarmakaṭisthalām ||
narāntrakṛtasragdāmāṁ [k, kh: -kṛtaṁ-] bhujagābharaṇairvṛtām [k: -tī] | JY 2/26/20-23ab.

[2] tadā [k: tarā] camati [kh: vamati] sā sarve chamacchamiti [k: -yamachamitī-] yogataḥ ||
tadeva carvayantī [k: -yanni] sā carcikā tena kīrtitā | JY 2/50/17cd-18ab.

[3] This statement comes in the context of explaining the yogic state symbolised by the chowrie offered to the deity:

> O lady of good vows, listen to (the inner symbolic meaning of) the chowrie. O goddess, the supreme energy of the Abyss of the Void (kakandara) arises from the foundation of all things. It should pierce the supreme plane by means of the current of the Wheel of Motion. (In this way) the nectar (amṛta) of the energy of consciousness, which is in the centre of the arising of the three abodes (represented by the corners of the triangular Yoni), is the teaching concerning Carcikā that is relished (carvita) (there). Therefore, O beloved, it is called the chowrie (camaraka).*

*The letter 'ca' of 'camaraka' is derived from 'carvita' and 'carcikā'. The letters 'ma' and 'ra' from 'amṛta' and the letter 'ka' from 'kakandara'.

. . . camaraṁ śṛṇu [gh: śuṇu] suvrate ||
sarvādhāroditā devi kakandaraparā kalā |
cāracakrapravāheṇa [sarve: -hena] bhedayet [k gh: -yat] paramaṁ padam ||
tridhāmodayamadhyasthaṁ drāvitaṁ citkalāmṛtam |
carvitaṁ carcikāmnāyaṁ tasmāc camarakaṁ [all MSs: cā-] priye || CMSS 11/23cd-25.

consider. This is how she is understood to be when, like many other forms of Kālī, she is associated with Rāviṇī – the Resounding Goddess:

> Carcikā reflects (carcayet) in (the Yoni which is) the pavilion of Kula, on the object of reflection (carcya), which is consciousness. He who reflects on all the worlds, also reflects here (in daily life). She resounds within him powerfully and so she is Carcikā Rāviṇī (the Resounding Carcikā).[1]

Carcikā is Ciñciṇī who is the eighteenth and last of the series of goddesses who, coupled with their partners, embody aspects of the energy of the Transmental, Kubjikā's metaphysical identity, that flows as the Divine Current.[2] Thus she is its final and culminating aspect that emerges out of the transcendental current of the Command into immanence. There, inwardly, Carcikā is the energy of the Transmental that pervades the mind, while externally, she is the goddess who descends into the world and is present there with Śrīnātha her consort, the first teacher.[3] She is praised accordingly:

> O divine bliss! Beautiful radiant energy! O immortal one! O consciousness of Bhairavī! Be victorious! Be victorious! O you who are the first (of all the goddesses) and divine! (You) who have descended into Dakṣa's sacrifice and was born in the family of the Himalaya. You, O Kulā, are called Kālikā to whom the gods bow. O Mother! Protect me always, (you who are) the mother of the three worlds, the skyfaring goddess called Carcikā.[4]

Elsewhere she is praised again to remind us that Carcikā is originally Kālī who, as the seventeenth energy of the New Moon, extends through the other sixteen:

---

[1] carcayec cinmayaṁ carcyaṁ carcikā kulamaṇḍape |
carcayed akhilān lokān yo 'pi so 'pīha carcyate ||
tanmadhyagā virauty ugraṁ tena carcikarāviṇī | JY 4/5/66-67ab.

[2] KuKh 2/25.

[3] Śrīnātha should be known to be the eighteenth and the Transmental pervades the mind. She is the Transmental who pervades the mind up to Carcikā, the final one (of the Divine Current).

śrīnātho.aṣṭādaśaṁ jñeyaṁ unmanā [g: ?] manavyāpinī [g: ? -mucyate] |
unmanā manavyāpinyā yāvad vai carcikāvadhiḥ [k, ṅ: -vadhe; gh: -vadhaṁ] || YKh (1) 36/101.

[4] divyānande suteje jaya jaya amare bhairavībodharūpe ādyādivye ca gaurī tuhinagirikule dakṣayajñāvatīrṇā | saṁjātā kālikākhyā suranamitārādhitā tvaṁ kuje.asi
māte māṁ rakṣa nityaṁ tribhuvanajananī khecarī carcikākhyā || YKh (2) 22/7.

(She is) the Vidyā which is Bhairava's form (mūrtikā), the energy of Kālī in the Age of Strife. She is Kaulinī who come forth from the divine in Hara's teaching and, on the Krama path, she should be praised as Umā and Carcikā. She is the Skyfarer marked with Śrīnātha, to whom the gods bow. She is the mistress of the maṇḍala (cakreśvarī), Carcikā at the end of the couple (yugmānte), the supreme energy who is nine-fold up to the sixteenth energy.[1]

Conclusion

One of the most striking features of the doctrines of the Kubjikā Tantras and a sign of their advanced state of development, is the strong emphasis placed on essential metaphysical principles. This dimension of Deity and all that relates to it is always presented their as its foremost aspects. As Deity's abstract nature is best represented by sound – mantra - and pure geometric form – maṇḍala, it is these that we encounter most frequently. The texts do not, indeed they could not, omit the iconic forms, but the deities emerge almost reluctantly into iconic representation out of their abstraction. The path for this emergence, the bridge between the unmanifest (niṣkala) and the manifest (sakala) deity, are the energies of Speech and mantras that issue from them. The audible sonic icon leads to the visible one. This becomes more clearly defined and differentiated as we travel down into the world of the Krama and its forms and as we travel through time tracing the unfolding development of the tradition and its goddess.

---

[1] vidyā bhairavamūrtikā kaliyuge [k, kh, gh: kaliryege] kālīkalā kaulinī
divyotthā [k, kh, gh: divyotā; ṅ: vivyātā] haraśāsane [ṅ: hata-] kramapathe stutyā [k: stuṣyā; ṅ: puṣpā] umā carcikā |
*śrīnāthāṅkitakhecarī [k, kh, gh: -nāthākita-] suranutā cakreśvarī carcikā [k, kh, gh: vakrikā] yugmānte ca parā kalā navadhā [ṅ: na * dhā] yāvat [k, kh: yāval; ṅ: yākal] kalā ṣoḍaśī* ||
YKh (1) 28/30.

Chapter Five

The Early Development of Kaulism and the Emergence of the Kubjikā Tantras

In the seventh century, or may be a little earlier, a new genre of sacred literature began to develop that in the following centuries proliferated to an astonishing degree. These scriptures were variously called Tantras, Āgamas, Saṁhitās, Matas and in other less common ways such as Yāmalas, Kalpas or Vidhānas.[1] Whatever they were called, what was important about this class of scriptural literature was the type of practice, pantheon, and implicit world-view it propagated. We may refer to this in the broadest terms, as Sanskrit sources do, as 'Tantric procedure' (tāntrikavidhi) which, in the Hindu context, is distinguished from the Vedic (vedikavidhi). These terms were coined by the Purāṇas to denote two major typologies (what the Sanskrit texts call 'ṛti'). A detailed comparative analysis is not necessary here, what matters is that the Indian tradition has always perceived (and it is indeed most obvious) that in a very broad and general sense there is a 'Tantric type' of practice. In English we may refer to it as 'Tantrism' or just 'Tantra' but if we do so we must take care not to confuse it with an independent religion or cult. Rather 'Tantrism' or 'Tantra' is a blanket term, that may serve to distinguish many schools, traditions and cults, whether, Śaiva, Vaiṣṇava or even Buddhist and Jaina that format their practice (ritualistic and yogic), pantheon of major and minor deities, supernatural beings and lineages of transmission and, their world view in general, in a way that is sufficiently common that we easily perceive that they are 'Tantric'. By this I mean that they make use of 'Tantric procedures' (tāntrikavidhi), which they may do in various ways and to differing extents.

Detailed analysis in each case is long and tedious and may lead to the dissolving away of the object of inquiry, rather than the discovery of what it is. 'Tantric procedure' is composite. Features of it combine in various degrees and different ways. By analysis that separates them from each other and seeks to find what is specific to each one, we loose sight of them. Nonetheless, its presence is quite clear, evidenced by a few essential features of 'Tantric procedures'. These we may briefly enumerate, but will refrain from analysing at length. A detailed comparison of the two 'procedures', the Vedic with the Tantric, would be confusing. The two are evidently distinct, but if we attempt to identify the differences accurately in every detail, we soon find that many of them tend to disappear in essence, although differences are evident in form. Thus, we must remove ourselves from the most essential without straying into the other extreme of the particular, which is not the domain of general definitions.

---

[1] The way a text is called is not very significant or specifying. A text called a Tantra could, for example, also refer to itself as an Āgama or a Mata. As 'Tantra' is the most basic and universal term I will refer to any text of this sort as a Tantra, although that word itself may not be part of its title. White believes that the different names indicate a typological distinctions. A'Tantra', for example, is distinct from an 'Āgama'. However, this view is not supported at all by the texts themselves.

The first and most general feature of the Tantric paradigm is worship (most commonly called pūjā, pūjana or arcana). Of course, this is not an exclusive characteristic. The worship of images or other representations – stones, liṅgas, trees and the like, in which deities or supernatural beings reside is common to most religious practice that is not Vedic. This includes the innumerable local and regional cults, divine or supernatural, and those of the sanctified dead we find in the countryside, villages, towns, cities, and localities within them. These are not part of the generic Tantric paradigm that is our concern here. Many possible elements of folk religion, for example, animal sacrifice, offerings to the deity of alcoholic drinks, possession and more may appear to be 'Tantric'. This is even more the case with folk (i.e. non-literate rural) cults, such as those of the Bauls of Bengal, who have developed a highly sophisticated conceptual framework, replete with their own terminology and rich body of practice, similar in many respects to the Tantric, including the collection and offering of human bodily fluids. These certainly could be said to be 'Tantric procedures'. Indeed, scholars have even referred to the cult of the Bauls as 'folk Tantra'. However, for the sake of clarity and to avoid an over extensive application of our definition, it would be best to limit the application of the term Tantra to literary sources.

We are accustomed now, after Shrinivasa and Radcliffe-Brown, who wrote in the 60s and 70s to refer to 'folk religion' as part of 'non-Sanskritic' culture. In a European context, we might call it 'peasant culture'. Largely rural, although it extends into towns and even localities within larger cities, some scholars believe this to be the non-Sanskritic heritage of the subcontinent. This is contrasted with the Sanskritic religion that has developed aver the centuries in the hands, largely Brahminical, and always learned, through the medium of the Sanskrit language. It is evident that many of the features of the Tantric paradigm are common with 'folk religion' in varying degrees and forms, especially with that sub-variety within it that we may call, as the texts do, but with broader more generic reference, Kaula. Nonetheless, it is necessary to delineate carefully the two domains. Otherwise, our definition will become so broad that it will no longer serve to specify anything, although in many respects they have a great deal in common.

In very broad, general terms, we can say that the literate Tantric paradigm includes the following basic elements all of which relate to the worship (pūjā, arcana) of the deities, major and minor, a particular Tantric system presents more or less systematical and extensively in one or more Tantras of a particular school. Sometimes, especially in the later period (after the 12th or 13th century), Tantras or works, like compendiums or manuals derived from Tantric sources, may not align themselves systematically with a particular school. Even so, they will invariably stress the primary importance of the teacher and the necessity to receive initiation from him. This then is the first feature of the Tantric paradigm: its initiatory nature. This may be more or less closed: esoteric or public.

Secondly, the basic rites are centred on the worship of the main deity, single or paired with a consort in a maṇḍala. The maṇḍala summates and makes directly and conveniently accessible to worship parts, more or less extensive of the pantheon. A fully developed Tantric system has one major maṇḍala which is uniquely specific to it in which the main deity is worshipped. Invariably, other maṇḍalas are described and worshipped. These may be very many, but they serve to worship secondary deities or aspects of the main one for specific purposes, that may be more or less extensive. Icons, jars, fire altars, stones and other consecrated objects as well as temples[1] may also serve as abodes of the main deity or other deities associated with it, but they never replace the primary maṇḍala, although they may be understood to represent it.

Thirdly, worship takes place by means of mantras. Just as a maṇḍala specifies the cult of a deity, the main mantra with which it is invoked is equally central and uniquely specific to the cult. All systems make use of a large number of mantras. These are naturally ordered in the course of the rite in accord with the deployment of the deities in the main maṇḍala and the other sacred objects in which they are worshipped in the sacrificial area that surrounds it. Developed Tantric systems invariably prescribe the worship of numerous deities independently of the main one in subsidiary cults, linked to them. These too, obviously, are furnished with their mantras and the rest required for the rite.

Fourthly, worship requires the ritual purity of the worshipper, which can only be achieved by some form of identification with the deity, however this may be conceived (whether total oneness or conjunction in some way). Moreover, this requires, by necessary implication, that the body of the worshipper, not just his or her 'Self', be identified with that of the deity. This is generated by the projection onto the body of the worshipper of the mantras that constitute the limbs of the body of the deity. The body of the deity is identified with the totality of the universe. Thus, the body of the worshipper must contain all the principles, energies and the like along with the deities and beings into which the system orders the systematic deployment of the cosmic order in all its aspects.

---

[1] Temple architecture is a major concern of the Siddhānta Āgamas current in South India. Thus, it is remarkable that they are not discussed at all in other early Śaiva Aagamas. Indeed, early manuscripts of Siddhānta Āgamas recovered in Nepal do not deal with this subject at all. Similarly, South Indian Vaiṣṇava Saṁhitās also discuss temple architecture (although less than their Śaiva counterparts). In this case also, this subject is not treated in the earliest Vaiṣṇava sources. It appears, therefore, that temples are not essential for Tantric rituals. However elaborate and extensive they become, these 'abodes of the gods' (devālaya), remain essentially three dimensional maṇḍalas.

The fifth is Yogic practice. This is a direct consequence of the fourth characteristic. The universe is the deity's body. It is alive. This is because the vital breath streams down into it from the disembodied, transcendental aspect of deity 'above' it and beyond the cosmic order and moves in the channels and through the inner vital centres of the body. Just as the physical and subtle body of the officiant must be homologized to that of deity, so must the movement and activity of the vital breath. This is linked to consciousness and Speech, which is the inner energy of mantras. To bring that about involves identification with the inner vital activity, consciousness and Speech of the deity. Essentially this is the Yoga taught in a wide variety of forms in the Tantric procedures.

The sixth characteristic is magic. This seems to be such an important characteristic of Tantric practice that some scholars believe that the original most primitive forms of it were all magical. This is hard to determine and may partly be true, although it is hard to maintain that is entirely the case as it would be difficult to account for the existence of other characteristics that in some form or another are always present to some degree. Moreover, although magic rites do invariably form a part of all Tantric systems, to very varying degrees, they are never the core concern.

Tantrācāra and Kulācāra

The Tantric paradigm presents itself in the Sanskrit sources in two modalities that came to be called Tantric (tantrācāra, tantraprakriyā) and Kaula (kulācāra and kulaprakriyā). Broadly speaking, the former in relationship to the latter is milder. The deities tend to assume a gentle form. The offerings made to them are generally vegetarian. Much of the worship is conducted in temples and is generally more conspicuously within the public domain, although entry into the cult does require initiation. The main deities are mostly male as are their attendants. The Kaula, on the contrary, is 'fierce' and energetic. The main deities generally have fierce or 'erotic' forms, as do their attendants. Female forms are generally dominant. The goddesses, fierce or 'erotic', major or minor, are Yoginīs. These are of many varieties and are in huge numbers. Animal sacrifice and the offering of bodily substances are the norm. The latter may include sexual fluids obtained through ritual intercourse. Initiation into these cults involves the penetration of the deity into the worshipper who is 'pierced' by its energy.

The Kaula modality is more similar in many respects to 'folk religion' than is the Tantric. They both include worship with non-vegetarian food offerings, bodily substances and alcohol of fierce and sometimes capricious beings for protection from the ills they may cause. They reside in specific places, engender possession (āveśa), instigate and gratify sexual desire, and may be invoked to assist in 'black' magical rites to subjugate others or for special assistance in the course of daily life, a crisis, or danger.

Just as the Tantric modality predominated in the Siddhānta Āgamas, the Kaula modality predominated in traditions of the Bhairava Tantras, right from their inception.[1] The latter is fundamentally related to their extensive Yoginī cults. These were ordered at an early stage into Kulas. Kula literally means 'family' which is both the 'family' or group of deities headed by the main deity of a Kula, who is its 'leader' (kulanāyikā or kulanāyaka) and the 'family' of Kaula practitioners, headed and led by their teacher.[2] The teacher is the head of the spiritual family he has made by accepting and initiating disciples. The responsibility he assumes and his oneness with the Kula is such that the Kashmiri teachers maintained that the teacher could not attain liberation until all the members of his Kula were freed.

Yoginīs proliferate to immense degrees to form 'families' of Yoginīs, from which emerge the Great Goddesses first of the Bhairava Tantras and then the Kaula. The teachings of the Kulas, come from the 'Yoginī's mouth'. The MVT refers to independent 'kulaśāstras'[3]. At the same time, it is clear that within the ambit of the system it is expounding it perceives that certain prescriptions are specifically Kaula (kuloktavidhi). Chapter nineteen is dedicated to Kaula practice (kaulikavidhi) which aims at the attainment of accomplishments (siddhi) of the yogis who follow the Kula path.[4] The rites should begin with worship of a specifically Kulacakra.[5] Moreover, it is clear that the practitioner initiated in the Trika of the MVT also belongs to a particular Kula, as the Tantra enjoins that he should repeat only the mantra of his own Kula[6], which is related to a particular quarter of space.

In the course of time, the Yoginīs developed their own independent schools and scriptures, called Kulāgama. Initially, these schools were linked to the

---

[1] I am referring to the Bhairava Tantras of the Vidyāpīṭha. These are most of the early Bhairava Tantras that have survived. The SvT, which belongs to the Mantrapīṭha, is the only extensive and important extant Bhairava Tantra that belongs to another Pīṭha. Its rites and practices belong to the Tantric modality. However, the influence of the Tantras of the Vidyāpīṭha was so great that the SvT came to incorporate the worship of Yoginīs, which belongs to the Kaula modality that was entirely absent in the original, early form of the system.
[2] Modern sādhus similarly refer to their lineage and its members as a 'family'. However, they word for 'family' is not 'kula', instead the use the common Hindi word 'parivār'.
[3] MVT 1/49 and 11/47 MVT 19/22.
[4] Ibid. 19/100-1ab.
[5] Ibid. 19/5.
[6] Ibid. 19/9.

name of Matsyendranātha and retained the pliable, non-sectarian character they had when they were still embedded in the Bhairava Tantras. This allowed Kula doctrine and practice to adapt to the specific sectarian context of the particular school of the Bhairava Tantras in which it appeared. The pliable nature of Kula as doctrine and practice allowed the formation of Trikakulas and Kālīkulas, for example, within the Bhairava Tantras that thus remained Śaivite despite the very large Śākta input that Kula doctrine and practice brought into them. The distinctive feature of these systems is not so much their doctrinal or even symbolic content, although they are configured in a specific way in each system, what is most distinctive is the principle deity or group of deities that is the focus of each system. Many of these were originally Yoginīs.

It was but natural that independent Kaula schools developed around the central figure of a Yoginī. The first two were the goddesses Kubjikā and Kālī. Both were Yoginīkulas, as was the one that followed after centred on the goddess Tripurā. At the last stage of this development, the original affiliation with Bhairava's current (bhairavasrotas) was severed. Prior to that, it remained a matter of prestige and was regularly mentioned in the colophons of these Tantras and elsewhere. Thus, Kubjikā proudly declares that her Vidyā was previously revealed in the Bhairavāgama.[1]

The Kaula Tantras came to develop a series of categories in which they classified practice in general with special reference to their own application of it. This is perceived in general terms as a modality or form of 'conduct' – ācāra. This includes one's general behaviour, habits, and rules one may apply to maintain or enforce it (all of which could be called 'ācāra' in Sanskrit). It includes general food habits (vegetarian or non-vegetarian, alcoholic or non-alcoholic) and the clothes one wears, when one goes to bed and gets up in the morning and the like. In the later Kaula Tantras we commonly find a series of such 'ācāras' mentioned. They are usually graded from the more distant to the closest to Kulācāra. A typical series could be Vedikācāra → Vaiṣṇavācāra → Śaivācāra → Kulācāra. However, although a Kaula would consider this to be a progressively ascending hierarchy, he is also engaged in observing all the 'ācāras' according to which of them is most appropriate in a particular situation. They are not considered antagonistic. The Kaula initiate does not intend to be 'transgressive'. He simply needs to adapt his behaviour to varying requirements.

Initially, we do not find the approach to be so accommodating. The distinction between Kaula practice as a modality embedded within Tantric practice gradually defined itself more specifically in relation to its counterpart. The differentiation of the two modalities reached a climax with the emergence of Kaula Tantras and purely Kaula systems. The gap then widened to such a degree that the Kaula modality came to confront the Tantric as it's opposite. Thus, the KuKh distinguishes between the practice of Tantra (tantrācāra) and Kula practice in general, especially that of the Kubjikā Tantras, invariably deprecating the former in relation to the latter. It warns that its teaching should not be given to Tantrics, or those devoid of Kula practice (kulācāravilupta).[1] Tantrics are said to lack devotion.[2] They are cruel,[3] given to hating others, untruthful, quarrelsome, proud and do not belong to the tradition (pāramparya).[4] Kaula initiates should not dine with them, just as a member of a higher caste should avoid eating with one of a lower.[5] This rule should be observed very strictly especially with regard to the consumption of the sacrificial pap (caru).[6] The merit acquired by eating it in front of the Krama in the Age of Strife is as much as drinking Soma in a Vedic sacrifice. Moreover, it is a cardinal means to acquire both worldly benefits (bhoga) and liberation.[7] However, the YKh warns:

---

[1] KuKh 13/70-71ab.

> These excellent sacrificial paps (caruka) should not be given to Tāntrikas. O Śambhu, it should always be kept hidden, like riches from thieves. Otherwise, there is no success and no tradition (sampradāya).[8]
>
> Again:
>
> It should not be given to anybody who has no deity, fire, or teacher, to Tāntrikas who are most sinful, cruel, without goodness and devoid of devotion.[9]

---

[1] KuKh 3/145.
[2] KuKh 30/40cd.
[3] Ibid.
[4] KuKh 30/136cd-138ab.
[5] KuKh 37/67-68. Cf. TĀ 15/572: There is the danger of falling from (one's own) Kula by contact with those who do not belong to (any) Kula.. The Kula tradition does not enjoin commensality (ekapātra), therefore one should avoid them.
[6] KuKh 37/65cd-66.
[7] somapānārghyabhakṣeṇa [k, kh: -pānārddhalakṣaṇa; gh: -pānārddha-] śiṣye puṇyaṁ [k, kh, gh: puṇyai] kalau [k, kh: kalo] yuge |
tat puṇyaṁ prāśitenaiva [k, kh, gh: prāsitenaiva] kramasyāgre kuleśvara [gh: -raḥ] ||
tena prāśitamātreṇa [k, kh, gh: prāsita-] bhuktimuktir na saṁśayaḥ | YKh (1) 3/158-159ab.
[8] ete hi [k, kh, gh: etāni] carukāḥ [k, gh: narukā; kh: -kā] śreṣṭāstāntrikān [gh: -tāṁtriṁkāṁ] na pradāpayet ||
gopayet satataṁ śambho [k, kh: śebho] caurebhyo dravinaṁ yathā |
anyathā na bhavet siddhiḥ saṁpradāyaṁ na vidyate || YKh (1) 3/162cd-163.
[9] na deyaṁ yasya kasyāpi devāgniguruvarjite [gh: -taṁ] |
pāpiṣṭān [gh: -ṭā] tāntrikān krūrān niḥsattvān [ṅ: niḥśatvāṁ] bhaktivarjitān [gh: bhavati-] ||
YKh (1) 11/30.

The AS stresses that this secret Krama teaching concerning the goddess Kubjikā should not be given to Tāntrikas.[1] In the same spirit, the KuKh admonishes on several occasions that particular teachings should be kept hidden from their view.[2] For example, they should not be given the teaching concerning the deposition of the Mālinī alphabet on the body. They are as unworthy to receive it as are the deceitful disciples of logicians, who are not concerned with spiritual discipline at all.[3] The low spiritual state of those who practice Tantra is a consequence of the inferior condition to which the practice of Tantra leads. In order to reach higher states that should be discarded. For example, one attains the Mahantārikā form of Kubjikā once abandoned the Tāntrika state (bhāva).[4]

However, although the KuKh invariably condemns Tāntrikas and their practice as inferior, the earlier Kubjikā sources are ambiguous. For the earliest Kubjikā Tantras, like their predecessors, this is not an issue or, at least, they do not mention it. The KMT has nothing to say about this distinction. The KRU and the CMSS are similarly silent. All the ŚM has to say is that the status of those devoted to other Tantras is low and that they are ignorant of the true purport of the scriptures (āgama).[5] The ṢSS distinguishes between the two modalities but sees them, as we shall see, in a different perspective. The sections of the MBT are not uniform in their view. In one place in the YKh, the goddess describes the kind of teacher that one should avoid. He is not just immoral. Even worse, although ignorant of the Kaula rites, he criticizes (duṣaka) the Kula scriptures. He is always intent on the practice of Tantra (tantrācāra) and does not possess the Command. He is intent on the low works of magic (kṣudrakarman) taught in the Bhūta and Gāruḍa Tantras.[6] He abandons his teacher and is deceitful (chadmin).[7] By talking with such a teacher and keeping his company, one goes to hell. He is not a part of the tradition (asantānin) and has no authority in any Kula lineage (anvaya).[8]

---

[1] idaṁ rahasyaṁ paramaṁ trividhaṁ kraanirṇayam ||
svayaṁ bhuñjan [bhānān] na dātavyaṁ tāntrikānāṁ viśeṣataḥ | AS 9/51cd-52ab.

[2] KuKh 3/144-146ab and 24/117cd -178ab.

[3] KuKh 18/110; cf. 30/41-42ab.

[4] tyaktvā [k, gh, ṅ: tyaktā] ca tāntrikaṁ bhāvaṁ sādhayen mahantārikām [k, gh, ṅ: mahatāritā] ||
YKh (1) 40/178cd.

[5] anyatantraratāḥ kṣudrā āgamārtham ajānatāḥ | ŚM 1/105ab.

[6] Concerning these categories of Tantras, see Dyczkowski 1988: 39-42.

[7] *kṣudrakarmarato [k, kh, gh: -kramarato] nityaṁ [gh: kṣudu-] bhūtatantraiś ca [k, kh, gh: bhatatataṁtraiśva; ṅ: bhūta * traiśca] gāruḍaiḥ [k, kh, gh: gāruḍai; ṅ: gāraḍaiḥ]* ||
dūṣakaḥ kulaśāstrāṇāṁ kudṛṣtibāhyakārakaḥ [k, kh, gh: kṛṣivāhya-; ṅ: kṛṣivāṇījyakā-] |
śṛṅgārī [k, kh, gh: -rā] vyādhitaḥ [k, kh, gh: -na; ṅ: -ta] chadmī [gh: chaghī] gurutyāgī mahāpaśuḥ ||
īdṛśaṁ varjayec chambho ācāryaṁ [ṅ: ācārya] paścime gṛhe |YKh (1) 25/23cd-25ab.

[8] tasya saṁbhāṣaṇāt saṁgād [k, kh, gh: saṁgā] rauravaṁ narakaṁ vrajet ||
asantānī sa vijñeyo [gh: vijñayo] nādhikāraṁ [k, kh, gh: -rāṁ; ṅ: -rī] kulānvaye |

However, elsewhere in the same recension of the YKh, we are told that a good teacher (deśika) is not only intent on truth and purity, he is also a Tāntrika devoted to his teacher.[1] This is a strange thing to say as one of the greatest defects of a Tāntrika is supposed to be his lack of devotion.[2] It seems that the term is not used consistently and has more than one application. The Kaula scriptures are, after all, Tantras. The KuKauM hardly refers to this distinction. However, in one place, with regard to the visualized form of a particular deity, it says that: 'this was previously explained according to the Tantric mode and Tantra is not part of the Kula teaching'.[3] In the KuKauM, we repeatedly find the expression Kulatantra (which does not appear in the KuKh) as well as Kulāgama (which does appear in the KuKh). The colophons of the KuKauM specifically say that the text is called a Tantra (tantrābhidhāna) and, more specifically a Śrīkula Tantra.[4] It seems then the term Tāntrika can also be applied in a general sense to Kaulas also, but this is not a common usage in our texts.

Moreover, the practice of Tantra – tantrācāra – is not uniformly condemned. Sometimes, along with Kulācāra, it is seen to be one of two acceptable modalities. In one place, the YKh presents a doctrine concerning the symbolism of the five gross elements. They are five sacred seats that 'arise day and night' in the flow of the inhaled and exhaled breath. YKh (1) begins by saying that there is no rite of adoration without the practice of Tantra (tantrācāra).[5] However, generally practice must conform to the Kaula modality even when it is derived from a non-Kaula source. At one place the YKh presents the thirty-two syllable mantra of Śikhārāja Bhairava, also called Śikhānātha. This is the mantra of Svacchanda who is the consort of Śikhādūtī, the embodiment of the energy of the goddess's Topknot (śikhā), the second of her six limbs. His mantra is that of Svacchandabhairava. The YKh says that this mantra 'is mounted on the plane of

---

YKh (1) 25/25cd-26ab.

[1] kathayāmi [ṅ: kathayanti] na sandeho ye yogyāḥ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: yogyā] paścime gṛhe [k, kh, gh: grahe] |
nirmamo niṣprapañcaś ca na ca [ṅ: va] dveṣī [k, kh, gh, ṅ: meti] parigrahī ||
*śānto dāntas tathā tyāgī [ṅ: yogī] kulaśāstraparigrahī [gh: -hi; ṅ: kulā * strapari-]* |
kriyākāṇḍarato vīraḥ satyaśaucadayāparaḥ [k, kh: -saucayoparaḥ; gh: -saucapayoparaḥ] ||
tāntriko [ṅ: śāntiko] gurubhaktaś [ṅ: -bhakṣāś] ca tapasvī [k, kh, gh: tapaści; ṅ: tapasvi] janavallabhaḥ [ṅ: janavatsalaḥ] | YKh (1) 9/3-5ab.

[2] See note to KuKh 30/40ab.

[3] tantrabhedena [g: tatra bhedena; ṅ: taṁ ca bhedena] pūrvoktaṁ na tantraṁ [g ṅ: tatraṁ] kulaśāsane | KuKauM 13/195ab.

[4] See below, p. 277.

[5] ataḥ parataraṁ [k, kh: paraṁtaraṁ; gh: paraṁtara] vakṣye jñānānāṁ jñānam uttamam | tantrācāravinirmuktā [k, gh: -vinimuktaṁ] kathaṁ pūjā pravartate [k, kh, gh: -tai] || pṛthivyāpas tathā tejo vāyurākāśam eva ca |
*pañcaite * mahāpīṭhā udayanti divāniśim [gh: -niśi]* || YKh (1) 5/23-24.

Tantra practice (tantācāra) and is devoid of the Kulakrama.'[1] However, although the YKh warns that 'what is worshipped through Tantric practice is fruitless on this Siddha Path',[2] this mantra is acceptable when it is a part of Kubjikā's body. Tantrācāra is thus integrated into Kulācāra.

The ṢSS also sometimes distinguishes between these two forms (bheda) of a mantra. The two are complimentary and can be used together or alternatively. Thus, after presenting the Five Praṇavas found in the KMT, the ṢSS declares that they belong to the Tantric mode (tantrabheda). It then goes on to present a variant form of the five, which said to be of the Kula type (kulabheda).[3] Similarly, the ṢSS presents the mantras of the goddess's faces 'according to the Tantric mode (tantrabheda)'[4] implying the existence of Kaula variants. Again, two mantras dedicated to Aghora are prescribed. One is for the practice of Tantra (tantrācāra) and the other of Kula (kulācāra).[5] Similarly, after describing how to make an amulet (rakṣanī) that protects against the wicked, the ṢSS declares that the form of the mantra has been explained according to the Kula mode (kulabheda) and that it is found in other Tantras in other forms.[6] However, in one place at least, the ṢSS says that the Tantric form is an extra that dilutes the power of the Kula form. Chapter forty, which is concerned with the worship of the Kramamaṇḍala, begins with the presentation of the mantras in the centre. These are the Samayā and the single syllable Vidyā (HSKHPHREṀ), which represent the goddess, and Navātman, which represents the god. The goddess begins by asking the god about the 'successfully accomplished Vidyā' (siddhavidyā), which is as free of the Tantric modality (tantrabheda) and seals (kīlaka).[7] In this case, the absence of the Tantric mode is considered to be a quality. Free of that, the root mantras and maṇḍala are purely Kaula and hence particularly powerful.

One of the ways the texts characterize the teachings of the Kubjikā Tantras that relates to their Kaula nature is that they are 'free of the sphere of rajas and (its mantras) are devoid of the (six) types (jāti)'.[8] The six 'types' are Vedic syllables, such as OṀ and VAṢAT that are prefixed or suffixed to mantras.[9] Their presence in mantras is coupled with the 'practice of Tantra' (tantrācāra). The texts pride themselves repeatedly in their tradition being free of these elements. In

---

[1] tantrācārapadārūḍhaṁ kulakramavivarjitam || YKh (1) 9/72cd.
[2] niṣphalaṁ [k, kh, gh: bhiḥ-; ṅ: niḥphalaṁ] siddhamārge 'smin tantrācāraprapūjitam [ṅ: statrācāra-] | YKh (1) 9/75ab.
[3] ṢSS 7/250 ff..
[4] ṢSS 8/29.
[5] ṢSS 15/58 ff..
[6] ṢSS 15/251cd-252ab.
[7] ṢSS 40/2ab.
[8] See, for example, KuKh 4/10-11ab, 9/70 and 68/120-122.
[9] See note to KuKh 4/10cd-11ab.

the AS, we find a list of Tantras that are rejected because they teach mantras that contain *jāti*s.[1] At best, the lower Tantras can only lead to the upper extremity of Mahāmāyā. Only the Kubjikā Tantras, the mantras of which are devoid of the 'types', can lead to the supreme Śāmbhava state.[2] Moreover, as we are told there:

> All these (Tantras) are associated with the utterance of the *jāti*s and (so) they are not part of the venerable Śāmbhava Kula. How can they be (part of) the western tradition, which is within Bhairava who is free of (all) defects?[3]

However, despite the repeated insistence in the later Kubjikā Tantras, especially the MBT, that mantras should be free of the 'types', this was not originally the case. The common practice of adding the *jāti*s to the limbs of mantras is accepted by the KMT and its expansions where they are taught to be the syllables added to the division of the goddess's Vidyā into six limbs and six faces. Moreover, the ṢSS enjoins that they should also be projected into the Six Wheels of the subtle body.[4] According to the Mālinīstava[5] of the KMT, the Vidyā of the goddess is 'transcendental and full′ when linked to these syllables. However, while the version of her Vidyā in the KMT begins with NAMO, it has been altered in the MBT to eliminate it. The Vidyā that is free of the jātis, says the KuKh, is successful.[6] Conversely, according to YKh (1), the presence of the 'types' may be positively harmful.[7]

Clearly, as the Kubjikā Tantras developed, their exclusively Kaula character asserted itself in various ways. One was that as the tradition grew it distanced itself progressively more from the Veda by divesting itself as much as possible of

---

[1] AS 28/45ff., cf. KuKh 68/27-32ab.
[2] See note to KuKh 68/27-32ab.
[3] jātyuccāreṇa [jātyoccāreṇa] te sarve na te śrīśāmbhave kule ||
kutas te paścimānvaye [-mavaśye] bhairavānte nirāmaye | AS 28/57cd-58ab.
[4] See KMT 7/41-43. The KMT explains there how the thirty-two syllables of Kubjikā's Vidyā are distributed in the goddess's six limbs and faces. 'This', concludes the KMT, '(with the limbs, body and faces) is the Samayā Vidyā as it is on the Path of Kula'. The ṢSS reproduces most of this passage and confirms that the jātis are associated with each limb. Moreover, that they are projected into the Six Wheels as prescribed in the following lines missing in the KMT:

> (The syllables OṀ) VAṢAṬ, HŪṀ, VAUṢAṬ, SVĀHĀ, and NAMAḤ are said to be in the Six Wheels. O fair lady, one should place the jāti of each limb in the six places.

ṣaṭcakre [k: -cakra] vaṣaṭ hūṁ vauṣaṭ [k, kh: vauṣaḍ] tathā svāhā namas tathā smṛtāḥ [k kh: -tā] |
aṅgajātiṁ varārohe ṣaṭsthāneṣu [k, kh: -ne tu] niyojayet || ṢSS 13/60
[5] KuKh chapter four, line 101.
[6] KuKh 9/70.
[7] YKh (1) 2/52-53.

elements of Vedic ritual. The later texts repeatedly stress that the use of these six syllables is related to the Tantric modality of practice (tantrācāra). However, this was not always the case. The earlier JY makes free use of these 'types' and, moreover, considers them to be 'energizers' (dīpana) of mantras used especially for Kaula rites.[1] However, the later Kubjikā Tantras took pride in being free of them and linked this absence to their capacity to lead the adept to the realization of the Śāmbhava state. Thus, 'beyond the belly of Māyā' and so free of the 'sphere of rajas' (rajamaṇḍala) and the *jāti*s, it is the western Śāmbhava tradition that 'always stands above the Tantra'.[2]

Now we have seen that the terms Tantra, Tāntrika and the practice of Tantra may not refer to a separate school, we should attempt to ascertain what is meant by Tantra when it is contrasted with Kula as a distinct category. We shall see that YKh (1) lists seven schools through which the fettered soul progresses in stages, one for each life. In the seventh life he reaches the Western House where the Śāmbhava teaching is transmitted through the lineage of the Siddhas and is free of Tāntrika practice. Elsewhere, the YKh outlines a hierarchy of merit acquired by making offerings to votaries of various schools. The best is, of course, the offering made to yogis of the western tradition who are 'kramikas'. The others, in ascending order, are the Buddhists, Jains, Vaiṣṇavas and Sauras. Better than them are the Śaivites to whom *maṭha*s are offered as gifts (i.e. Siddhāntins and Pāśupatas). Elsewhere YKh (1) presents the same sequence in reverse, enjoining that a Kaulika who keeps the company (bhuñjate) of Śaivas, Tāntrikas, Sauras, Vaiṣṇavas, Jains, Brahmins (!), Buddhists and those who have killed their teacher, must undergo progressively more sever penances to purify himself.[3] Systems are graded, like castes, in terms of their concern with purity. The Vedic, which is the most so, is at the bottom with Buddhists ('atheists') and murderers.

---

[1] The use of these syllables in the mantric system of the JY can be inferred from the following reference:

The (Kaula) offering (tattva) is encapsulated by HUṀ and PHAṬ. The energizer (of a mantra) is considered to be (the series of types) ending with PHAṬ. And (the series) ending with SVĀHĀ is the firm root that should be used when (uttering the mantra) during lustration (tarpaṇa).

huṁphaṭpuṭagataṁ tattvaṁ phaḍantaṁ dīpanaṁ matam ||
svāhāntaṁ dhruvamūlaṁ ca tarpaṇe saṁprayojayet | JY 1/17/200-201ab.

[2] KuKh 68/33cd-34.

[3] *śaivānāṁ [k, kh, gh: śaivāṁ ] tāntrikān [ṅ: -kā] śaurān vaiṣṇavān [ṅ: -vā] jinabrāhmaṇān [ṅ: yenavrāhmaṇaṁ] |
*bauddhānāṁ guruhantārān [k, kh: -nāṁ; ṅ: guruha * nāṁ] kauliko [gh: -kau] bhuñjate yadi* ||
lakṣajāpyena pūrṇāyāṁ [ṅ: pūrvāyā] kāmataśca caturguṇān [gh: catuguṇāṁ] |
YKh (1) 8/90-91ab.

Kaula, which is the least so, is at the top. In this context Tāntrikas are placed below Śaivites. In the one before, it appears that they are above them. In the first reference there is no direct mention of Śaivites, even so it is clear that those who are 'the most excellent (uttamaṁ param)' are the Śaivites and the Tāntrikas. The Śaivites meant here are, most probably, the Siddhāntins and members of Śaiva sects like the Pāśupata. If so, these are not those who are said to be Tāntrikas. We have noted that the YKh accepts the Tantra practice of the Svacchandatantra as legitimate. Perhaps, according to the YKh, those who practice according to this Tantra are the Tāntrikas meant there.

However, this is probably not the only group of Śaivites to which the KuKh refers as Tāntrikas. We have seen that according to the KuKh, Tāntrikas are devoid of devotion.[1] This probably means that they are Śaivites who did not have any special regard for the goddess. If so, Tāntrikas are all kinds of Śaivites of this sort. When the YKh affirms that Yoginīs are born in the Western House, not in the field (gocara) of Tantra.[2] This may amount to a claim that the Yoginī cults of all the other traditions are derived from that of the goddess Kubjikā. More likely Tantra in this case means Śaivasiddhānta, which does not generally accommodate the Yoginī cults.

Chapter 28 of the AS lists a series of Tantras that are tainted with Tantric practice and stresses that the Kubjikā Tantras are Śāmbhava.[3] Similarly, the YKh glorifies the liberated Śāmbhava state to which the Kaula teachings lead as the ultimate nature of the Western House, that is, the transmission of the Kubjikā Tantras. This is 'where the Śāmbhava state emerges. It is pervasive and omnipresent (sarvatomukha). (Here) Kula has emerged from Akula and it is the manifold Western House. Free of Tantric practice (tantrācāra), it is the extending flow (prasara) which is Śambhu's Circle'.[4] According to YKh (2):

> The Great Mata is above all Tantric practice. It is the Śāmbhava tradition that has come down through the series of teachers. It has come from the invisible (unmanifest) form and gives success in the Age of Strife. O god, it gives worldly benefit and liberation and is sealed in the First Seat. It is the venerable Ciñciṇīkula present in the

[1] KuKh 30/40cd.

[2] yoginyas te gṛhe jātā na jātās tantragocare || YKh (1) 23/26cd.

[3] These Tantras are listed in AS 28/44-54. See concordance concerning references to Tantras in the Kubjikā sources.

[4] śāmbhavaṁ [k, kh, gh: śābhavaṁ] yatra līnaṁ tu vyāpakaṁ sarvatomukham |
akulāc [k, gh: akulā] ca kulaṁ jātaṁ [k, kh: jāṁtaṁ] vividhaṁ paścimaṁ gṛham || tantrācāravinirmuktaṁ [kh: -vinimuktaṁ] prasaraṁ [k, gh: praśaraṁ] śambhumaṇḍalam [k, gh: saṁbhu-] | YKh (1) 4/224-225ab.

venerable Kadamba Cave, established (there) by the God of the gods in accord with the Rule.[1]

Kulācāra leads to the Śambhava state, whereas Tantrācāra does not. Those who are devoted to the practice of Tantra (tantrācāra) cannot attain the Śāmbhava plane. In the Age of Strife, the Śāmbhava state and the teaching that leads to it is only transmitted through the lineage (santāna) of Siddhas.[2] Tantric practice as understood here extends up to the frontier of the Śāmbhava state which 'beyond the belly of Mahāmāyā, always stands above the Tantra'.[3] The KuKh is very keen to make this distinction. Tāntrikas cannot manage to purify the Self from Karma. Thus there is no liberation for them here (in this world), as there is in the Kula teaching.[4] There is no accomplishment (siddhi) to achieve in Tantra during this Age of Strife[5] and so the god wants the goddess to impart the Command to him. He is implying that the previous teachings, apart from those of the 'preceding' Kaula tradition (pūrvāmnāya) are not Kula ones, but Tantric and so are ineffective. This is rather more than saying that only the Kubjikā Tantras teach the way to attaining the Śāmbhava state, which is anyway not true. The Kālīkula sources, also teach that this is the highest state. However, they are generally less insistent than the Kubjikā ones that their teachings are Śāmbhava and lead to that condition. Unlike the Kubjikā Tantras, it is not a badge they wear with special pride.[6] The Kubjikā tradition for its part came to refers to itself especially as the Śāmbhavakula.[1] Moreover, above all, that it is free of Tantra.

---

[1] tantrācārasya sarvasya uparisthaṁ [k, kh: -stha] mahāmatam |
śāmbhavaṁ saṁpradāyaṁ tu pāramparyakramāgatam ||
adṛṣṭavigrahāyātaṁ kalikāle tu siddhidam |
muktidaṁ bhuktidaṁ deva ādipīṭhe tu mudritam ||
śrīkadambaguhāyāṁ tu sthitaṁ śrīciñciṇīkulam |
sthāpitaṁ devadevena kṛtvā samayapūrvakam || YKh (2) 6/29-31.

[2] tantrācāraratā [ṅ: -rato] ye ca na [gh, ṅ: ta] teṣāṁ śāmbhavaṁ padam ||
śāmbhavaṁ siddhasantāne vartate [ṅ: -tai] ca kalau sphuṭam [ṅ: yuge] | YKh (1) 23/16cd-17ab.

[3] KuKh 68/34.

[4] KuKh 13/72cd-73ab.

[5] KuKh 5/15-17.

[6] Referring to its own tradition, the ŪKau says:

The radiant Kaulika tradition is a Śāmbhava one by just knowing which Kaula accomplishment (siddhi) arises.

sasphuraṁ kaulikāmnāyaṁ saṁpradāyaṁ tu śāṁbhavam |
yena vijñānamātreṇa kaulasiddhiḥ [-siddhi] prajāyate | ŪKau fl. 22a.

The ŪKau distinguishes between the three modalities, Āṇava, Śākta and Śāmbhava, which is the highest. This is also the case in other Kālīkrama texts including the KS and the DP (see intro. vol. 1, p. 441 ff., especially 449-450). In the latter Bhairava supplicates the goddess:

At first sight, this is not an easy position to understand and one wonders how its votaries found support for it. However, this is not an untenable view for one who feels and wishes others to feel also that his own tradition is unique. This is possible because the previous traditions did not call themselves Kaula. This includes those of the Bhairava Tantras that in effect were and did tacitly acknowledge this in their own way.

We can see that similar developments were taking place generally by observing the development of the Trika tradition. The distinction that developed between Tantrācāra and Kulācāra in the milieu of the Kubjikā Tantras is reflected in an analogous distinction between the Tantra modality (tantraprakriyā) and Kula modality (kulaprakriyā) in the grand synthesis of Tantric traditions Abhinavagupta presented as his Anuttaratrikakula. Abhinava maintains that Kula is not only the highest tradition, it is the one to which all the others ultimate lead, because it is all the traditions together. Just as the Kubjikā Tantras tacitly present their Kula as all of Kaulism, Abhinava considered his own Trika tradition to be such. As he says:

> Thus, there is only one tradition. On it everything is founded, from popular doctrines up to that of the Vaiṣṇavas, the Buddhists and the Śaivites. The supreme end of all of it is the reality called Trika. As it is present in everything and is undivided and uninterrupted, it is

---

O Bhairavī, abandon (your) deceitful nature and grace me so that I may quickly attain the excellent Śāmbhava plane.

tyaja kauṭilyabhāvaṁ me 'nugrahaṁ kuru [g: kulu] bhairavi ||
prāpnuyām acirād yena śāmbhavapadam [kh, g: śāṁbhavaṁ-] uttamam | DP 7/7cd-8ab.

Emanation is above and its nature is supreme bliss. It is Śāmbhavī, the supreme energy who rains down a shower of nectar.

ūrdhve tu saṁsthitā [g: sa-] sṛṣṭiḥ [g: sṛṣṭi] paramānandarūpiṇī |
pīyūṣavṛṣṭiṁ varṣantī śāmbhavī paramā kalā || DP 3/3.

Also MP (2):

The Ś*āmbhava* (state) is the one in which the power of consciousness (citi) suddenly (sahasā) dissolves away into the Great Void known as the Inactive (niḥspanda) that is profound and has no (phenomenal) abode.

mahāśūnye [-śrūnye] tu gahane niḥspandākhye 'niketane |
sahasā vilayaṁ yāti citir [citi] yatra sa śāmbhavaḥ || MP (2) 129.

[1] *etā mudrā mahāmudrāḥ [k, gh: -drā; kh: mahā * drā] kaulike śāmbhave [k, gh: sāṁbhave; ṅ: saṁbhave] kule* | YKh (1) 24/9ab.

> known as Kula by name. Just as the various parts of the body, superior and inferior, are divided one from the other, but even so life is nonetheless just one, similarly Trika is present in all things, as scripture confirms. It is written in a Kālīkula Tantra: 'Transcending the five currents (of scripture) this reality is said to be the essence of the ten and the eighteen divisions (i.e. the twenty-eight Siddhāntāgamas). Just as there is smell in a flower, oil in sesame, life in the body, nectar in water, similarly Kula is present in all things.' Thus, this tradition, which is one, presents itself in various ways, in accord with the variety of perceivers. Belief is indeed only one even though it belongs to people of differing creeds, whether votaries of our doctrine or that of others. As the Svacchandatantra says, the Sāṁkhya, Yoga, Pāñcarātra and the Veda should not be censored as they (all) originate from Śiva.[1] These various traditions current in the world are isolated fragments of a single tradition. They obscure and delude their devotees.[2]

Abhinava's way of establishing the supremacy of his own Trika tradition by identifying it with the many Kula traditions as a whole, tells us a great deal about how Kaulism appears in his scriptural sources. It is present in them in a pervasive way, not as a separate corpus of teachings. Kula is not a school or cult, but a presence within diverse schools and cults of the Śaiva scriptures. One independent Kula school, at least, already existed in Abhinava's time, as he suggests in this passage, namely, the Kālīkula.[3] He could have promoted this one as the highest. Instead, he prefers his own Trika tradition which he roundly identifies with all the Kaula elements he finds present in the Śaiva scriptures. Indeed, Kula for him is the essence of all that is spiritual in the religious traditions he knew and, indeed, in all others. In this extended sense, they are all Kaula. The earlier view, voiced by the SvT, is that they were all ultimately Śaiva because they 'originate from Śiva'. However, they 'delude their devotees' because they do not have insight into the greater whole to which they belong. This insight is only possible from the perspective of a 'perceiver' who sees the lower traditions from the perspective of the highest one that contains them all. The higher contains the lower. The highest contains everything. Each tradition contributes to the whole. However, only the highest tradition is complete and therefore fully liberating. The [1] SvT 5/44cd-45ab.

---

[2] TĀ 35/30-37.
[3] According to Gnoli the Kālīkula is the name of a text. It is also likely that Abhinavagupta is referring to the school of this name. However, even if this is a text, its title suggests that it belonged to an independent Kaula school of which Kālī was the main deity.

lower ones are just fragments of the whole; alone they cannot lead to liberation. Individually, they are misleading.

Like the series of principles of existence, religious traditions are arranged in a hierarchy in which the higher members pervade the lower ones. This is because they are arranged in a chain of cause and effect. Thus, the highest principle pervades them as does the cause its effect. As we rise along the chain, the ultimate, totally pervasive principle becomes progressively more evident. Thus, as we rise through the lower traditions the presence of the Kaula element in them becomes more evident. This phenomenon in the development of Śaivism allows Abhinavagupta to find the common thread he is looking for. His Trika Śaivism is all of Kaulism. The Trika tradition that preceded him could not be this tradition if it were nothing more than an independent school, like the others, even if it is the best of them. Thus, Abhinava identified his Trika with all the Kaula traditions and Kaula elements in the scriptures he considered to be most important. This he understood to be the true ultimate identity of all Śaiva scriptures. Accordingly, Abhinava marshalled scriptural authority to support his formidable exegesis and synthesis of the Tantric traditions to which he had access in his Anuttaratrikakula,[1] which he presented as the ultimate identity of all Kaulism. Abhinava's approach is an extension of what he found in his sources and conscious of this he quoted them. Thus, he refers to the Kularatnamālā, for example, as saying: 'Kaula (doctrine), based on the (Tantras of) the left and the right, is the essence of all the Tantras gathered together in one place in the venerable teaching of the Trika (ṣaḍardha).'[2]

Abhinavagupta distinguishes between two basic liturgical modalities, namely, Tantraprakriyā and Kulaprakriyā. He treats the rituals of the Tantraprakriyā as basic (nitya) and those of the Kulaprakriyā as optional ones (naimittika) for which only some initiates are fit. The rites described in chapters fifteen to twenty-eight belong predominantly to the former modality, while chapter twenty-nine is concerned exclusively with Kulaprakriyā. The remaining eight chapters are concerned with common matters that are accessory to the rituals such as the drawing of the maṇḍala, mantras, the authoritativeness of the scriptures and more. The two together constitute the liturgy (paddhati) of the Anuttaratrika.[3] Jayaratha explains that the Tantraprakriyā was taught in the tradition (maṭhikā) founded by Traiyambaka[4] (also called Tryambakāditya). He, along with

---

[1] See TĀ 1/14 and in relation to that Dyczkowski 1988: 180 fn 117.

[2] aśeṣatantrasāraṁ tu vāmadakṣiṇam āśritam |
ekatra militaṁ kaulaṁ śriṣaḍardhaśāsane | Kularatnamālā quoted in TĀ 37/26.

[3] The Tantrāloka is, according to Abhinava, a manual of Trika ritual (anuttaraṣaḍardhārthakrama) TĀ 1/14c. Jayaratha calls it anuttaratrikārthaprakriyā ibid vol. I p. 33 comm. on TĀ 1/16. Abhinava refers to the liturgy of his Tantrāloka as a 'prakriyā' which is complete (pūrṇārtha).

[4] śrīsantaty-āmardaka-traiyambakārdhatraiyambakākhyāsu sārdhāsu tisṛṣu maṭhikāsu madhyāt

Āmardaka and Śrīnātha, taught non-dualist, dualist and dualist-cum-non-dualist Śaivism, respectively.[1] A fourth lineage issuing from Śaiva monastic centres (maṭhikā) called ardha(tryambaka)maṭhikā[2] was founded by Tryambaka's daughter. This transmitted the teachings of the Trikula. Abhinava studied the doctrines of Āmardaka's line from Vāmananātha, spiritual son of Erakavara, those of Śrīnātha from the son of Bhūtirāja. Abhinava praises Maheśvara as teaching the doctrines of Śrīnātha's school along with those transmitted through the lineage of Ardhatryambaka.[3] Āmardaka, who is well known as the founder of an important lineage of the Siddhānta, did not teach Trika doctrine in any form. Finally, the 'omniscient Śambhunātha, son of Somadeva, (illumined for him), like the full moon, the sea of the so-called fourth spiritual lineage.'[4] Somadeva learnt from Sumati who resided in the South of India[5] while Śambhunātha came to Kashmir from Jālandharapīṭha were he taught before.[6] vakṣamāṇatantraprakriyāyāḥ traiyambakamaṭhikāśreyaṇena āyātikramo 'sti iti | Introductory lines to TĀ 1/8.

---

[1] See TĀ 36/11-15.

[2] Jayaratha quotes from the Śivadṛṣti (chapter 7) which states that in the past the secret Śaiva and other doctrines where known to the great ṛṣis who taught it to others, but it fell on bad times in the Kali age and the Śaiva teachings (śāśana) were about to be lost. Then, Śrīkaṇṭha, who was walking on mount Kailāśa, transmitted it to the world at the request of Durvāsa by generating a mind-born son called Tryambakāditya. Through the lineage of Tryambika the 'wisdom of the Trikakrama, which is the secret of all the scriptures' was revealed in the world.

ity ādyuktyā kalikāluṣyād vicchinnasya nikhilaśāstropaniṣadbhūtasya ṣaḍardhakramavijñānasya traiyambakasantānadvāreṇa avatārakatvād adyaṁ kailāsasthaṁ śrīśrīkaṇṭhanāthākhyaṁ guruṁ comm TĀ 1/8.

[3] TĀ I p. 28-9, comm. on TĀ 1/9).

[4] TĀ 37/61.

[5] iti--śrīsomadevādayaḥ | śrīsumatināthasya śrīsomadevaḥ śiṣyaḥ, tasya śrīśambhunāthaḥ iti hi āyātikramavidaḥ | yadvakṣyati-- śrīsomataḥ sakalavit kila śambhunāthaḥ... | iti | yat tu-- "kaścid dakṣiṇabhūmipīṭhavasatiḥ śrīmān vibhur bhairavaḥ pañcasrotasi sātimārgavibhave śāstre vidhātā ca yaḥ | loke 'bhūt sumaistataḥ samudabhūt tasyaiva śiṣyāgraṇīḥ śrīmāñ chambhur iti prasiddhimagamaj jālandharāt pīṭhataḥ ||"
ity anyatroktaṁ tatparamagurvabhiprāyeṇaiva yojyam | yad vā--
iti śrīsumatiprajñācandrikāpāstatāmasaḥ |
śrīśambhunāthaḥ sadbhāvaṁ jāgrad ādau nyarūpayat ||
ity ādāv api jñeyam || comm. on TĀ 1/213.

[6] Abhinava prescribes that a sacred seat (pīṭha) be worshipped in conjunction with the maṇḍala he decribes at the beginning of chapter twenty-nine of the TĀ (TĀ 29/28) which is worshipped at the beginning of the rites of the Kulaprakriyā. It is probable that the pīṭha he meant is the place where the scripture is placed and worshipped. However, Jayaratha does not understand it this way. According to him it is 'Jālandhara from which this system (darśana) originates (and has spread) by means of the succession of Siddhas and Yoginīs' (comm. on TĀ 29/27cd-29ab).

Somānanda was the first to make a written contribution to the philosophical school that his disciple, Utpaladeva, called Pratyabhijñā. This was affiliated to Tryambaka's non-dualist (advaya) lineage. Lakṣmaṇagupta who learnt from Utpaladeva taught it to Abhinava.[1] The Pratyabhijñā is not at all concerned with ritual (prakriyā) or, indeed, Yoga. Instead, it teaches a direct intuitive insight into reality cultivated through the exercise of right reasoning (tarka). It affords metaphysical depth to Abhinava's Trikula who systematically integrated the philosophical theology of the Pratyabhijñā into it. He was supported in his method by the tradition that the Trikakula was transmitted originally through Tryambaka's daughter, and so shared common roots with non-dualist Śaivism (that came to be roundly identified with the Pratyabhijñā) right from its inception. Similarly, the Tantraprakriyā was closely linked to the Kulaprakriyā which, according to Jayaratha, was transmitted to Abhinava by Śambhunātha[2] whom Abhinava venerated above all his other teachers because he taught him Trika.[3] This is the tradition 'called the fourth', which is that of Ardhatryambaka.[4]

Another fundamental figure in this tradition, we shall need to discuss at length, is Matsyendranātha. He is universally acknowledged as the teacher who revealed the Kula scripture (śāstra)[5] and with it the Kula modality, which for Trika Kaulas is the fundamental one. Jayartha writes:

> . . . It is said that: 'just as the stars, although they remain in the sky, do not shine when the sun is present, in the same way the (Śaiva) Siddhānta Tantras do not shine in the presence of the Kulāgama. Therefore, nothing apart from the Kula (teachings) can liberate from transmigratory existence'. Thus, even though the work about to be expounded (namely, the Tantrāloka) has two aspects because it consists of (an exposition of both the) Kula and the Tantric methods (prakriyā), and because, as the above reference declares, the Kula method is more fundamental (prādhānya) than other methods, (Matsyendranātha) who has revealed it, the fourth teacher (turyanātha) (who belonging to this, the fourth Age), is praised first in accord with the following view:

---

[1] Abhinava writes:

> Lakṣmaṇagupta, is the (spiritual) son of Utpaladeva, the (spiritual) son of Somānanda who belong to the ocean of the lineage of Traiyambika. TĀ 37/60.

[2] See TĀ 1/16 and ibid. 1/21.

[3] śāstramārgo vimalo jātaḥ ity anenāsya trikādyāgamavyākhyātṛtvam api prakāśitam comm. on TĀ 1/13.

[4] turyākhyasaṁtatīti ardhatryambakābhikhyā comm on TĀ 37/60-64.

[5] sakalakulaśāstrāvatārakatayā prasiddhaḥ comm. on TĀ 1/7.

> Beloved, Bhairavī first obtained (the teachings concerning the practice of) Yoga from Bhairava and so pervaded (the entire universe). Then, fair-faced one, it was obtained from their presence by the Siddha called Mīna, that is, by the great soul, Macchanda (i.e. Matsyendra), in the great seat (mahāpīṭha) of Kāmarūpa.[1]

At first sight, it appears that Jayaratha understands Kulaprakriyā to be simply what is taught in the Kulāgamas and Tantraprakriyā in the Siddhāntāgamas. However, the distinction between them is not so straightforward. According to Jayaratha the Tantraprakriyā is taught in all the five currents of the Śaivāgama. These include both the Siddhāntāgamas and the Bhairava Tantras. Moreover, the two are intimately connected in all of them. There close relationship is expressed through an interesting analogy. The five currents of Śaiva scripture issue from the five faces of Sadāśiva. Jayaratha links them to the Tantraprakriyā. Associated with them are the five configurations of energies embodied in Yoginīs who constitute the core of the Kālīkrama. These are worshipped in what Jayaratha calls the 'special modality' (viśiṣaprakriyā).

Thus, it is clear that Tantraprakriyā is not simply Śaivasiddhānta. Indeed, Abhinava's construction of the rites of the Tantraprakriyā draws from both Siddhānta sources and the Siddhānta-like Svacchandatantra and Bhairava Tantras. To do this he generally takes the former two as his base and then supplements or presents alternatives from the Bhairava Tantras. These include, we should not forget, the Tantras of the Trika and those that teach Kālīkrama. Tantraprakriyā is already a mix of the two modalities at the original scriptural level, especially in the Bhairava Tantras. Generally in most Siddhāntāgamas the Kula modality is not represented or very poorly. However, they supply a substantial part of the basic world-view and practice of the Bhairava Tantras, although they do also contain much of their own. These are especially centred on the worship of Yoginīs, which is largely absent in the Siddhānta, and female divinities, who are secondary there. Thus, perceiving his sources globally, Abhinava draws from one and then the other to form his composite system, just as the Tantras themselves do but more systematically, drawing from a larger pool and taking care also to name them, which Tantras only rarely do. Thus, he may begin with a rite drawn from Siddhānta sources and then present its equivalent from a Tantra of a different school. In this way his Tantraprakriyā includes many Kaula elements that even when they are not the basic rite are presented as the highest and most important. They are not just alternatives, they empower and complete the rite. These Jayaratha calls 'special modalities' because he wishes to maintain, true to Abhinava exegesis, the purity of Kulaprakriyā. Whereas the Tantraprakriyā is sustained by Kaula elements, the Kulaprakriyā does require anything else. Tantraprakriyā is the basic, necessary, and essential modality of ritual that must be regularly performed (nityakarman). In this sense, Kulaprakriyā is not an independent modality. However, it is insofar as it draws exclusively from Kaula elements. This independence is represented by the view that the Kulaprakriyā is the teaching of a sixth current, which comes from the Yoginī's mouth.[1]

[1] Intro. comm. to TĀ 1/7.

Abhinava refers to the rites of the Kula modality collectively as Ādiyāga or Kulayāga. They involve the offering and consumption of meat and wine and the practice of ritual sex and require separate, additional initiations. Abhinavagupta received one such initiation from his Trika teacher Śambhunātha, who imparted it to him according to the procedure laid down by the Tantrasadbhāva,[2] which is a Trika Tantra. An essential feature of these initiations is the piercing (vedha) of the Wheels and other centres of the body and so are known as `initiations by piercing' (vedhadīkṣā). Abhinava draws the varieties of this form of initiation from the Kularatnamālā and Kulagahvara. As we would expect, this is also the basic form of the varieties of initiation described in our text and elsewhere in the Kubjikā literature, which also draws from the latter source,[3] amongst others, and contributes much of its own. Śaivites of other traditions in which this kind of initiation is not given are generically called Tāntrikas. The culmination of this form of initiation and its practice, according to the Kubjikā Tantras, is the realisation of Śiva's state, the Śāmbhava plane.

Abhinavagupta praises Matsyendranātha first,[4] before all the other teachers mentioned at the beginning of his monumental Tantrāloka. In this way, he clearly declares his predilection for Kaulism. The Kula modality is a secret practice (rahasyavidhi).[5] There are many types of such modalities (prakriyā).[1] The Kula one

---

[1] Now the rite taught in the Triśiro(bhairavatantra) is clearly written (in what follows). It concerns Śaivas for whom the reality to be known is tripartite. It consists of five and five, eighteen and ten (Āgamas) and six currents. TĀ 28/146cd-147.

Jayaratha explains that: 'the reality to be known is tripartite because it consists of Nara, Śakti and Śiva. It consists of five and five as Tantraprakriyā as the face (of the five-faced Sadāśiva) and as a particular modality (prakriyā) as Vāmeśī and the rest. This is the meaning. The six currents (are the five) along with Picu's mouth'. Concerning the sixth face, see intro. vol. 2, p. 117 n. 1 and intro. vol. 3, 15.

[2] TĀ 29/211cd-212ab.

[3] See KuKh chapter 31.

[4] May he, the pervasive Lord Macchanda (the Fisherman)[4] be pleased with me, he who has cast along the outer path the net (of Māyā) which, spreads and extends (in all directions) and red with attachment, strewn with knots and holes, is made of many parts. TĀ 1/7.

Concerning Matsyendra, the fisherman see below, p. 321-322.

[5] Now here we will explain the secret ritual that concerns those (whose nature is particularly elevated) and properly fit for it. Now, all of this practice (upāsā) that is said to be (performed) in the Kula modality (kulaprakriyā) is fit (only) for the masters and disciples who are mounted on the (supreme) plane. TĀ 29/1-2ab is particularly associated with the transmission of the Siddhas (siddhakrama) who are, specifically, Matsyendranātha and the teachers who came before him in previous Ages.[2] According to Abhinava and his chosen sources, especially the MVT, the difference between this and the Tantric modality is that outer forms such as the maṇḍala, fire pit (kuṇḍa), depositions of mantras on the body and the rest are unnecessary. It is the modality in which they are all internalised. However, he does not wish to eliminate all outer forms and so allows that even if they are observed, there is nothing wrong with this on the principle that 'excess is no defect'.[3] Indeed, his presentation of the Kula modality is couched in ritual action, albeit closely related to inner equivalents within the body and consciousness. Specifically, it is centred on ritual sex.

The rite begins with the worship of a maṇḍala. It is the maṇḍala of the Siddha Transmission (siddhakramacakra). The energy of consciousness (citi) is worshipped in the centre as Kuleśvarī who is identified with Parā Mātṛsadbhāva, along with Parāparā and Aparā,[4] the three goddesses of the Trika. Although this is essentially a Trika maṇḍala, the Trika teachers are not worshipped in it. Instead, in a corner of it, we find Matsyendra and the teachers of the lineages he founded along with the Kula teachers of previous Ages (yuga). Why does Abhinava chose to begin this way? His model here is the Kālīkrama. Jayaratha writes that the ritual is based on the family of Siddhas and their consorts. These are Matsyendra and the Kula teachers of the previous Ages first of all and then the teachers of the Kālīkrama. However, the maṇḍala is specifically intended for the first Kula teachers. Accordingly, Abhinava says it is sufficient just to recall the other teachers. These Jayaratha tells us are those specifically connected to the Kālīkrama and quotes the Devīpañcaśataka where these teachers are named.[5] The previous verses in the DP Jayaratha comments: The secret (ritual) is in the Kula modality (rahasya iti kulaprakriyāyām). The practice (upāsā) (performed) in the Kula modality is the Kula sacrifice. This is the meaning. (kulaprakriyayā upāseti kulayāga ity arthaḥ).

[1] Thus, for example, in his commentary on the NT (19/53cd-54ab) Kṣemarāja uses this term to refer to the rites required to remove the evil influences of demons.

[2] Jayaratha explains that: the transmission of Siddhas (siddhakrama): consists of the Siddhas commencing with the venerable Khagendranātha onwards (up to Matsyendranātha) who descended (successively into the world) in due order (in each Age) from the Kṛta Age onwards into the Krama, that is, into the Kulaprakriyā that belongs to that lineage (of teachers). Comm. on TĀ 29/3.

[3] Referring to the use of outer ritual for the practice of Kulaprakriyā, Abhinava writes:

Bathing, the maṇḍala, the fire pit, the sixfold deposition and the like is of no use here. However, if (any of this) is done, there is no harm in it. TĀ 29/8.

[4] TĀ 29/46b-48.

[5] This is DP 3/15cd-17ab quoted in the introduction to TĀ 29/43. The same verses are also found in the Yonigahvaratantra fl. 18a of MS no. 10000 deposited in the Asiatic Society of Calcutta.. They are quoted in the catalogue (vol. I p. 108).

refer to the Yuganāthas as the earlier teachers. By Abhinava's time the Kālīkrama had emerged as an independent Kaula tradition (kulāmnāya). The sources to which he refers and Jayaratha quotes, refer to many Kaula traditions,[1] but they may not all have been independent ones. Certainly by Abhinava's time the Kālīkula possessed a number of independent scriptures. Two at least – the Yonigahvaratantra and the Ūrmikaulārṇavatantra – which we know preceded him and others in the same line like the Kālīkulakramasadbhāva and the Devīpañcaśataka have survived in a few manuscripts. A study of these sources reveals that they too follow the same approach. Without fail they all refer back to Matsyendra and his team as the oldest, most revered teachers. This is not the case at the earlier stage when the Kālīkula was still embedded in the Bhairava Tantras.

This interesting fact is highlighted again by Abhinava's method in chapter twenty-nine of his Tantrāloka. A substantial part of the Kula modality he expounds there is drawn from the Mādhavakula. This, the third ṣaṭka of the JY, does not refer to the Yuganāthas. Nor does the rest of the JY or the BY that precedes it. However, for the independent sectarian Kaula schools, whether the Kālīkula or that of the goddess Kubjikā, Matsyendra is a major authority. The first distinguished founder of an independent Kula, of which the Kaulajñānanirṇaya and other such Tantras attributed to him are the scriptures, he is regarded as the founder of all Kaulism. The deities of the KJN are Kuleśvara and Kuleśvarī, that is, Bhairava and Bhairavī, who are identified with Akula and Kula. They are worshipped in the midst of a circle of the Eight Mothers whom they govern and, by extension, all the Yoginīs. They are worshipped in parallel with the teachers - the Siddhas known as the Yuganāthas.[2] Neither the god nor the goddess in the KJN has a specific identity. All the gods of the Kaula type are Bhairavas and the goddesses Bhairavīs. One could say simply, in a nondescript way, that they are Śiva and Śakti. Thus one could describe the cult of the KJN as non-sectarian Kaulism. Some other works attributed to Matsyendra, such as the printed Akulavīratantra and the unpublished Kulapañcaśikā are of the same type. However, we also have examples of sectarian texts attributed to Matsyendra. One is the Guhyasiddhi, which should not be confused with its Buddhist namesake.[3] Overall, this text is also non-sectarian, but it contains passages that relate it to the Kubjikā tradition that may have been inserted to appropriate it for the Kubjikā cult. Another sectarian text attributed to Matsyendra is the Ūrmikaulārṇava, which belongs to the Kālīkrama.

Thus, Matsyendra, who may well have been a historical figure, represents a major watershed in the development of Kaulism. The evidence suggests that prior to him Kaulism existed only in the diffuse form outlined above as a feature of the [1] Cf. reference quoted in comm. to TĀ 29/99.

[2] Cf. Sanderson 1988: 681.
[3] The Buddhist Guhyasiddhi is by Advayavajra and has been published.

Yoginī cults of the Bhairava Tantras. The transition out of this pervasive presence into independent Kaula schools is invariably signalled by his legendary intervention, which we shall examine further ahead. Initially non-sectarian, independent Kaula schools are soon centred on the goddesses Kālī and Kubjikā.

Conscious of this distinction the KMT says that: 'this is a Kaula tradition, it is Śākta, derived from the Plane of Śakti'.[1] Similarly, the Ūrmikaulārṇava says that its tradition is Śaktikaula[2] or just Śākta.[3] In this case Kaula and Śākta combine, although they may be distinct. The KMT, which is an independent Kaula Tantra, refers to itself as a Devī Tantra.[4] The KRU similarly describes the Siddhayogeśvarīmata as a 'great Devī Tantra (devīmahātantra)'.[5] Concerned as it is with the worship of goddesses and Yoginīs, this characterization is not mistaken. Moreover, they are worshipped in a typically Kaula way but, even so, it is a Bhairava Tantra. It does not consider itself to be Kaula. Indeed, as it is one of the earliest Bhairava Tantra, along with the BY, it hardly refers to Kula at all. The JY similarly claims that it is a Devī Tantra. The same is the case with the TS that comes between the JY and SYM in time. The extensive worship of Yoginīs, their sacred sites, and practices related to them as well as other characteristic features of Kaula Tantras are strikingly evident in the TS, as they are in the JY. Nonetheless, neither of them consider themselves to be specifically Kaula Tantras. On the contrary, the TS insists that one who observes 'Tantric practice' (tantrācāra), is successful.[6] One who is devoted to the rule grounded in oneness, which came to be one of the specific characteristics of Kaula practice, is said in the TS to be 'devoted to Tantric practice' instead.[7] The TS considers its teachings to be that of the Tantra (tantrāmnāya).[8] Along with ritual (kriyā), Yoga and knowledge (jñāna), the TS claims that it teaches Tantric practice (tantracaryā)[9]

---

[1] KMT 6/35cd.

[2] The Great Kaula, the Kaula of Śakti bestows the accomplishments of the Mothers and the Yoginīs.
mahākaulaṁ śaktikaulaṁ mātṛyogininisiddhidam | ŪKau fl. 24a.

[3] The Krama teaching that gives life and is Śākta is sevenfold.
saṁjīvanī tathā śāktaṁ saptadhā kramanirṇayam || ŪKau fl. 6a.
Also: 'The Kālikā tradition is Śākta and is known as Bhogahasta' (which is the branch of the Kālīkrama to which the ŪKau belongs).
śāktaṁ kālikramāmnāyaṁ bhogahasteti viśrutam || ŪKau fl. 10a.

[4] Referring to the Samayā Vidyā of the goddess, the KMT says: etat paramasamayaṁ devītantre prakīrtitam || KMT 7/4cd.

[5] KRU 1/16ab.

[6] yas tu pālayate guptaṁ tantrācāraṁ (k: tatrā-; kh: tatrā- -ra; g: ra-) sudurlabham |
sa siddhyati na sandeho yathā bhairavam abravīt || TS 5/51.

[7] advaitakriyayāsaktaṁ tantrācāratātmanam [k, g: -nāṁ] || TS 12/56cd.

[8] TS 1/482.

[9] Ibiḍ 1/35.

and there is no mention of the Kaula modality (kulācāra). The reason for this is simply that the Kaula modality came to understand itself as such only gradually and in various ways as the Tantric traditions developed. Ultimately, Kaulism was seen to be the most essential characteristic and focus of these traditions. It was this that Abhinava took to be the most elevated type of Śaiva tradition of which Trika was the finest fruit. However, Trika was not an independent Kaula tradition in the same way. For one thing there are no references to the Yuganāthas in the Trika sources. The TS, which Abhinava valued highly as a Trika Tantra, exalts Tantric practice (tantrācāra) and the Kula rites appear as modalities. The same is the case in the MVT, which Abhinava treated as the highest Trika authority. It appears, therefore, that on the model of the Kālīkula, the same transition took place in the Trika, establishing it as a Trikakula. This Kula is independent and the Kālīkula imbedded in it functions as does the Kula modality in the Bhairava Tantras as its deepest secret. Abhinava brought this process to completion in his own synthesis that he calls the Anuttaratrikakula.[1] There is evidence that this development was already in the making if it had not already taken place.

The form of the maṇḍala of Abhinava's Kulaprakriyā is one such piece of evidence. He does not tell us the source of this maṇḍala. It is possible that he created it himself, but this is not likely. His source, it seems, bore the mark of an independent Kula Tantra, namely, the worship of Matsyendra as the first teacher. Moreover, the worship of the Trika triad further suggests it was a Trika Tantra.[2] Again, we notice that in one place the Kālīkula Tantra[3] appears to be also called Trikakālīkula.[4] Similarly, the Tantra called Bhairavakula in one place is also called Śrītrikabhairavakula.[5] In another place Jayaratha refers to it as the Śrītrikakula.[6] Perhaps these names reflect the existence of two forms of Trika i.e. Trikabhairavakula and Trikakālīkula. Returning to the Kubjikā Tantras, it appears in the light of these observations that they developed at the end of this process of emergence of a distinct Kaula identity. What remained to be done was to shake off the last vestige of association with any element that was felt not to be Kaula, especially the Tantric that is the closest to it.

Like Abhinava's Trikakula, the Kubjikā Tantras identify their Kaulism with the one authentic Kula that pervades the teachings of all the schools. This is

---

[1] TĀ 1/14.

[2] Perhaps this source was the Kulakrīḍāvatāra that Jayaratha quotes extensively to confirm Abhinava's presentation of Kula teachers and the traditions established by Matsyendra's disciples.

[3] Referred to in TĀ 29/43 and 35/33-34.

[4] Reference to this Tantra is in TĀ 18/15. Gnoli reads this as a compound name of two texts, namely Trikakula and Kālīkula.

[5] TĀ 28/51. According to Gnoli this is not one but two works namely, the Trikasāra and the Bhairavakula.

[6] śritrikakulādāv anukto 'pi ... ibid TĀ XI p. 25. Trikakula is listed is a separate work in TĀ 31/60.

because it teaches non-duality. It is essentially secret and its practices are the reverse of the common, public religion. It is a solitary path: it is not one for the masses and temples are not required. Although the recitation of mantras is essential and ritual has its value, the inner practice of arousing Kuṇḍalinī and piercing the Wheels of the subtle body is its foundation and essence.

> The bliss of Kula is like the sea because it is everywhere. The Kula graces everybody. All four castes, the last born and those without caste (prākṛta), including sweepers and foreigners (mlecchajāti), Buddhists, followers of the Sāṁkhya and Jains, ascetics with three sticks, those with staffs and clubs (i.e. the Pāśupatas) - all these reach the Supreme Śaiva reality. One reaches this by means of 'the Path of the practice of Kula,' which is that of oneness (bhāvādvaita). One should always maintain the practice of the world (laukikācāra) by following the path of the oneness of reality and so practice non-duality. The secret signs (liṅga) should be kept hidden. One obtains the best knowledge from the lowest (practice) if the seeker is of the best kind. One should not cheat one who desires the Command whether he be a Liṅgin or twice born. Everything should be done in solitude not in the midst of many people, otherwise the teaching is destroyed. One should avoid the Buddhist Kaulas and Mīmāṁsakas. [. . .][1]
>
> Abandoning a fallen and destroyed Kula one should take refuge in the Kulakaula. One who does not have the Rule (samaya) is impotent and so, without power, the practice (caryā) is no practice (nirācāra).[2] Once known the entire plane of the tradition (āmnāyapada), namely, the Lord of Kula according to (his true) state, he who has gone beyond practice (nirgatācāra) by the Method of the Six Parts (i.e. the piercing of the six wheels),[3] pure, beyond the objects of sense, becomes one who is free of practice (nirācāra).[4]

Surprisingly, we do not come across the expression Kubjikākula as we would expect, but we do find others that incorporate other names of the goddess, namely, Ciñciṇīkula,[5] Khañjinīkula,[6] and, the most common, Mālinīkula.[1] Kubjikā's

---

[1] These adepts are then severely criticized in the next few verses.

[2] There is a play of words here. The term 'nirācāra' can also denote a very elevated level of practice. See intro. vol. 1, p. 100 ff..

[3] This is described in the next three chapters of the KMT.

[4] KMT 10/134cd-55.

[5] YKh (1) 3/179cd.

[6] YKh (1) p. 368, YKh (2) p. 28

tradition is variously named so as to relate it to her, whilst shying away, no doubt out of respect, from taking the goddess's name directly. Kubjikā is the eldest (jyeṣṭhā), most senior of all the deities and so her family is the Jyeṣṭhākula in which she is the dispenser of grace to all, even to the god.[2] Similarly, Kubjikā, is Parā – the Supreme One and so her school is the Śrīparākula[3] or simply that of the goddess - Īśvarīkula.[4] Several names of Kubjikā's Kula begin with 'śrī'. In common usage the word is a simple honorific meaning 'venerable'. Śrīsamaya, for example, may simply mean the 'venerable Rule'. In the Kubjikā Tantras however, the word generally refers to the goddess, and so[5] we may translate the same expression as 'the Rule of the goddess Kubjikā'. Similarly, we find the expression Śrīśāsana[6] and Śrīmata, which are both the name of the scripture and its teachings. We also find the name Śrīkrama,[7] although mostly in the KRU. One of the most common names is Śrīkula.

The Śrīkula is the final conclusion of all the scriptures. Their most elevated essence, the Śrīkula is the first in the hierarchy of scriptures (śāstrānukramaṇa) beginning with the Upaniṣaḍs, the Vedas, and Śaiva Siddhānta. According to the KRU the Śrīkula is > accomplished by the Command and, supremely divine, it is adorned with the lineage (āvali) of the Śrīkrama. The reality (to which it leads) is not an object of thought and, free of doubt, its mark is supreme non-duality (paramādvaita).[8]

>
> It is called the Lineage (santāna) of the Siddhas and is attended by Yoginīs and Siddhas. (The teaching concerns) many Wheels (cakra) and it is presided over (adhiṣṭhita) by the Six Goddesses.[9] It includes the six-fold (ṣoḍhā) deposition and its forms are Mudrā and maṇḍala. It includes (the teachings concerning) the group of eight Mothers and the liturgy (krama) of the Sacred Seats, the

---

[1] KuKh 4/33cd-34.
[2] KuKh 4/19.
[3] YKh p. 192 Skt type.
[4] Appears once only KuKh 26/83.
[5] Mukundarāja explains that: ''the venerable one' (śrī) is the most excellent (goddess) Kujā, that is, Kubjikā (śrī sarvotkṛṣṭā kujā kubjikā).' SaṁP fl. 4b. The KuKh (4/8) refers to the goddess as śrikārā lit. 'she whose letter is 'śrī'.
[6] *śrīśāsane [k, kh, gh: -sāsane; ṅ: śrī * sane] parā devī kuṭilā divyarūpiṇī* || YKh (1) 12/22cd. Jayaratha defines a śāsana as: 'the awakening of those who should be awakened by means of the teachings of the scripture and the like' (śāsanaṁ śāstropadeśādinā bodhyānāṁ bodhanaṁ). Comm. on TĀ 1/104.
[7] KuKh 4/12cd-13.
[8] See also note to 3/30-31ab.
[9] The so-called Ḍādiṣaṭka, concerning which see KuKh chapter 63.

beginningless (anādi) liturgy called that of the Child, Youth and the Aged. It is the great contemplation of Vidyā and mantra based (pūrvaka) on the teaching of the Kula tradition (kulasaṁketa). It is adorned with the primary and secondary sacred fields, meeting grounds (sandoha) and the secondary seats. (The teachings also) concern spiritual discipline (sādhanā), the rite of adoration (ārādhana), initiation, and the visualization (of the deities) (dhyāna). (Along with these things) I will tell you about the practice of the method of the Great Yoga (mahāyogakriyācāra) correctly and as it truly is. (I will impart) the teaching concerning the extraction of mantras and that concerning the Ages (yuga), the aeons of the descent (of the teaching) (avatārakalpa) and the rest (along with that concerning) conduct (caryā) and Yoga and the characteristic mark of (true) Yoginīs.[1]

The Yoginīkula and the Siddhakaula

We read in the previous reference that the Śrīkula is 'called the Lineage (santāna) of the Siddhas and is attended by Yoginīs and Siddhas'. The intimate association of Siddhas and Yoginīs with the transmission of a Kaula tradition is one of its most basic characteristics. The Kubjikā Tantras are the transmission of the Yoginīs (yoginīkrama)[2] and their teaching (yoginīmata).[3] The whole tradition is the Family of Yoginīs – Yoginīkula and the transmission and Family of Siddhas – Siddhakrama, Siddhakula. As Kubjikā is the supreme Yoginī the Yoginīkula, her devotees would say, is her Kula. Concerning Kubjikā's Samayā Vidyā, the KMT

---

[1] ājñāsiddhaṁ paraṁ divyaṁ śrīkramāvaliśobhitam ||
*niḥsandigdham acintyārthaṁ [k kh g: nisandigdam acintyārtha] paramādvaitalakṣaṇam [kh: paramāddena lakṣa ] |
siddhasantānasaṁyuktaṁ [kh: sannātra-] yoginīvīrasaṁyutam ||
nānācakrasamopetaṁ ṣaḍdevyadhiṣṭhitaṁ [k kh: ṣaṭdevyā-; g: ṣaḍdavyādhiṣṭhitaṁ] priye |
ṣoḍhānyāsasamopetaṁ mudrāmaṇḍalavigraham ||
mātryaṣṭakasamāyuktaṁ pīṭhakramasamanvitam [kh: -krame-; g: pīṭhacakrasa-] |
bālayauvanavṛddhākhyaṁ [k kh: bālaṁ-; g: bālayaivana-] anādikramasaṁyutam [g: -saṁpuṭam] ||
vidyāmantramahādhyānaṁ [kh: -mantre mahāvyāna; g: -dhyāna] kulasaṁketapūrvakam [kh: mahādhyāna-] |
kṣetropakṣetrasandohair [g: kṣatropakṣetrasandoher] upapīṭhair vibhūṣitam ||
sādhanārādhanopetaṁ dīkṣādhyānasamanvitam |
mahāyogakriyācāraṁ [k kh g: -ra] mantroddhāravinirṇayam [kh: -vinirgavaṁ] ||
yugāvatārakalpādicaryāyogaviniścayam [k: -ya; kh: -ye ; g: -caryoyogāvinirṇayaḥ] |
yoginīlakṣaṇaṁ [g: -nīrakṣaṇaṁ] caiva kathayāmi yathārthataḥ || KRU 2/4cd-10.
[2] Compare the expressions yoginīkramayoginām (YKh (1) 7/11b) and paścimānvayayoginām (ibid. 7/14b).
[3] kathayāmi kramārthena [k, gh: kathārthena] durlabhaṁ yoginīmate | YKh (1) 10/9ab.

says that: 'it is a treasure. As such it is the wealth (found) in the Yoginīkula and so this teaching, the Samayā is in all the sacred seats'.[1] Similarly, the Five Praṇavas are the wealth of the Yoginīkula[2] and the sacrificial substances that Siddhas offer in the Yoginīkula is discussed at the end of the KMT.[3] According to the ṢSS a certain method of `restraint' (nigraha) is 'kept well hidden in the Yoginīkula'.[4] The MBT is the essence of the Yoginīkula.[5]

In all these references we may understand Yoginīkula to mean both (or either) a particular Kaula tradition or Kaulism as a whole. Moreover, the term 'Yoginīkula' appears in various contexts with a range of meanings. The groups of eight types of Yoginīs that constitute the Octad of Kula are said to be the Yoginīkula.[6] In this case 'Yoginīkula' simply means a group or 'family' of Yoginīs. Elsewhere we are told that by repeating the Samayā Vidyā the practitioner is freed in a moment wherever he may be, whether in a sacred place, the maṇḍala, a cremation ground, in a gathering of initiates (melaka) or in the midst of the Yoginīkula. In this case, the Yoginīkula is a gathering of Yoginīs (y*oginīcakra*).[7] The body, understood as an aggregate of energies embodied in Yoginīs, is also a Yoginīkula of which, according to the KMT, Kuṇḍalinī is the essence.[8]

The colophons of the Kaulajñānanirṇaya claim that it was brought down to earth by Matsyendranātha into the great Yoginīkaula in Kāmarūpa, a place with which he is generally associated by all Tantric traditions, including that of the Kubjikā Tantras.[9] The KJN, which declares that a copy of it is found in the house of every Yoginī in Kāmarūpa,[10] is closely associated with Yoginīs. Accordingly, Bagchi believed that the Kaula sect he founded was the Yoginīkaula.[11] However, according to the KJN itself, he belonged to the Siddhāmṛta sect. Also called Matsyodara (the Belly of the Fish), it developed out of the Siddhakaula and that

---

[1] KMT 7/26cd-27ab.
[2] KMT18/29d; cf. ŚM 23/31-33.
[3] KMT 25/231cd.
[4] ṢSS 36/88.
[5] KuKh 30/116.
[6] They are discussed in chapter 42 of the KuKh, see YKh (1) 4/76-82ab and 25/58-97ab.
[7] KuKh 23/37-38ab.
[8] In the body she is Kuṇḍalinī who is the treasure in the Yoginīkula. Thus she is the Mother, who is the main goddess (samayā) in all the sacred seats.

yasmād kuṇḍalinīty evaṁ sarvasvaṁ yoginīkule* ||
atha cet sarvapīṭheṣu māteyaṁ samayātmikā | KMT 7/26cd -27ab.
* The edited text reads yasmād bhāṇḍāram ity evaṁ which makes no sense.
[9] See Bagchi 1934: 35.
[10] KJN 22/10cd.
[11] Bagchi 1934: 35

from Mahākaula.[1] These, along with the Jñānanirṇītikaula, were founded in the four Ages. The name 'Siddhāmṛtakula' may be synonymous with the 'Siddhakaula' that preceded the Yoginīkaula. In his commentary on the Mṛgendrāgama[2] the Siddhāntin Bhaṭṭa Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha refers to the Siddhakaula and Yoginīkaula as similar, but separate traditions. The difference between them is that the teachings of the latter school are transmitted by the Yoginīs and those of the former by Siddhas. Thus, David White opines: 'Matsyendra's KJN is itself a synthesis of the Siddha and Yoginīkaula traditions, inasmuch as it portrays the latter as emerging out of the former.'[3]

However, although it is possible that the Siddhakaula and Yoginīkaula are specific independent traditions, they may not be more than common blanket terms for the Kaula teachings that are transmitted through Siddhas, the essence of which is 'born from the body of the Yoginīs'.[4] In actual fact the transmission takes place through lineages of Siddhas not Yoginīs even though the Siddhas attain their accomplishments (siddhi) through them and they, as Kaulas, require consorts. The teachers in the spiritual lineages mentioned in the KJN and, indeed, those worshipped in all similar Tantric and Kaula traditions are almost invariably Siddhas, not Yoginīs.

Moreover, from the Kaula perspective, the two are always found together. A Siddha can only become fully accomplished (siddha) if he is initiated into a Yoginīkula, that is, as the texts put it, if he is born in one. This is a universal requirement of all Kaula and related schools. The KJN insists that only a person

---

[1] mahākaulāt siddhakaulaṁ siddhakaulāt matsyodaram (masādaram) |
caturyugavibhāgena avatāraṁ coditaṁ mayā ||
jñānādau nirṇītaḥ kaulaṁ dvitīye mahat sañjitam |
tṛtīye siddhāmṛtaṁ nāma kalau matsyodaraṁ priye ||
ye cāsmānnirgā devi varṇayiṣyāmi te 'khilam |
etasmād yoginīkaulān nāmnā jñānasya nirṇītau || KJN 16/47-49.

6. Table of the Kaula Schools of the Four Ages

Age	Nātha	Kaula school
Kṛta	Khagendra	Jñānanirṇītikaula
Dvāpara	Meṣa	Mahākaula
Tretā	Kūrma	Siddhāmṛtakaula
Kali	Matsyendra	Matsyodarakaula

[2] Commentary on MṛĀ (caryāpāda) 40cd-41.
[3] White 1996: 134.
[4] One should not give the essence of the Kaula (teaching) born from the body of the Yoginīs (to those who are unworthy to receive it).
na deyaṁ kaulikaṁ sāraṁ yoginītanusambhavam | KJN 6/14cd.

who is born in a Yoginīkula can receive the energy of Kaula accomplishment.[1] In a chapter of the KuKauM drawn from the Kramasadbhāva, a Kālīkrama Tantra, the teacher of that school is said to belong to the Yoginīkula.[2] The JY refers to its own Kālīkrama teachings as those of the Yoginīkula. Referring to a group of twenty-four Yoginīs the JY says that they are 'leaders in the Yoginīkula'.[3] By achieving success in a certain practice described in the JY, it declares that the entire Yoginīkula is disturbed when the adept laughs seven times.[4] This expression is not very common in the JY or the TS and is always used there in a generic, rather than specific sense. So, for example we read in the TS:

> There is nothing higher than this Tantra, sustained by Rudraśakti. (Only) those born into the Yoginīkula, with their minds intent on its essential meaning (tadbhāva) know this scripture whose meaning is profound and is an ocean of knowledge.[5]

The TS insists that those who are not born in a Yoginīkula do not attain the supreme plane of existence.[6] The KuKh further strengthens this view by declaring that they do not even get initiation into the Kubjikā teachings.[7] According to YKh (1), the adept who understands the true nature of the initiation he has received by the goddess's grace knows that he is her son (devīputra) born into her Kula (kulaputra). A person who is not meritorious is rejected from the Yoginī's womb and so cannot acquire the Śrīmata.[8] One must have devotion for the Yoginīs.[9] Those who do, please them and they look at him, not with the evil eye of the lower Yoginīs, but the loving kindness of a mother.[10] The advanced adept, the so-called 'Lord of the Heroes', is generated in the Yoginīkula by receiving the sacrificial pap of the Yoginīs.[11] Those born in the Yoginīkula are excellent yogis. They are elevated beyond the other members of the tradition:

---

[1] yoginīnāṁ kule jāte [jaatau] lābhate kaulikī sphuṭam | KJN 9/14ab
[2] KuKauM 15/534.
[3] caturviṁśatir yoginyaḥ yoginīkulanāyikāḥ | JY 1/19/52ab.
[4] saptadhā hasitenaiva kṣobhayed yoginīkulaṁ | JY 3/23/143ab.
[5] asmāt (k, g: asmānt) tantrāt paraṁ nāsti rudraśaktiradhiṣṭhitam | ye yoginīkule jātās tadbhāvagatacetasaḥ ||
jñāyante te tv idaṁ śāstraṁ gūḍhārthaṁ jñānasāgaram | TS 27/94-95ab.
[6] nāyoginīkule jātāḥ sūkṣmaṁ vindanti tatpadam || TS 9/37cd.
[7] KuKh 33/70ab.
[8] ibid. 30/39.
[9] KuKh 5/51.
[10] KuKh 31/122cd-124.
[11] KuKh 16/20.

> The Yoginīkula of a (true) yogi is in all respects wonderfully beautiful (vicitra). Born in the Kula of the Yoginīs, when engaged in Kaula Yoga the yogi is more excellent than (others) by virtue of his birth (jāti) and possesses all the qualities of wonder.[1]

Just as the initiate is the son of his teachers and elders, he is so also that of the Yoginīs. However, when Kubjikā says that she is pleased with those who are born in the Yoginīkula,[2] she is referring to her own Kula. These receive the teachings, such as those concerning the five sacred seats[3] and those of their own lineages.[4] Conversely, even though one is an initiate in the Kubjikā Tantras, and thus a member of the best Kula, but does not persevere steadfastly in the practice, he is a 'fettered soul in the Yoginīkula. He is not a disciple belonging to (any) Kula tradition (kulakrama).'[5] He may even bring down a great curse upon himself from the Yoginīkula.[6] Clearly, although the Kubjikā Tantras boast, as do those of other traditions, that theirs is the Yoginīkula, it is one amongst others.

Like 'Yoginīkula', the name 'Siddhakula' is both generic and specific. In one place at least in the Kubjikā sources,[7] it is clear that the Siddhakula or Siddhakaula refers to the tradition established by Matsyendranātha with its lineages. It is also called the Siddhakrama. The secret Kula teachings that at first belonged to the gods are transmitted through the Siddhakrama, that is, the series of Siddhas. As Bhairava says to the goddess in the KMT:

> Well done! Well done! O Great Lady! You who bestow great bliss! What you have asked is very astonishing and free of defects. It is the secret of all the Rudras and (Tantric) heroes and Bhairavas, namely, the (transcendent condition of) Stillness (nirācāra), the Siddhakrama. Even so, I will tell you (the teaching) that has come down through the sequence (of the transmission) along the Path of the Siddhas, (the teaching that is) established by the lineage of Siddhas. Hidden on all the paths, that has been revealed to you today. [. . .] This

---

[1] yoginaḥ sarvabhāvena vicitraṁ [gh: vicitra] yoginīkulam ǀ yoginīnāṁ kule [k, kh, gh: kula] jāto [k, kh, gh: jāta] yukte yoge [k, kh, gh: yogai] ca kaulike [k, kh, gh: kolike] ǁ jātyādhiko yadā [gh: padā] yogī sarvāścaryaguṇānvitaḥ [k: -ścaryaṁguṇāṁnvitaḥ; kh: -caryaṁ-; gh: -ścaryaṁguṇāṣṭhitaḥ] ǀ YKh (1) 4/91-92ab.
[2] KuKh 20/29.
[3] KuKh 8/118.
[4] KuKh 15/45.
[5] KuKh 46/282.
[6] KuKh 30/38.
[7] KuKh 25/55.

> (teaching) should not be told to anybody devoid of the lineage of Siddhas.[1]

Elsewhere the god declares to the goddess: 'the transmission of the Command (ājñākrama) was established by you in the Siddhakaula'.[2] Also called Siddhāmnāya and Siddhaśāsana, like a wire that conducts electricity, it is the line of transmission for the energy of the goddess's Command that is thereby absorbed into her tradition. Thus the initiate is a member of both the Siddhakrama and the Yoginīkula. In this context, the Yoginīkula is the Kula of Kubjikā, the most excellent Yoginī. This name is largely derived from the presiding deity of the tradition rather than the Yoginīs who transmit it. In this perspective, the MBT is both the scripture of the Siddhakula and the Yoginīkula. Referring in both instances to the MBT, the KuKh says:

> The Great Penetration (mahāveśa) takes place quickly by listening to the scripture. O Great God, one should lay hold of (this), the essence of the Yoginīkula. [. . .] This is the scripture of the Siddhakula. This is the Kaulika teaching established by the practice that takes place at night (niśācāra).[3]

Clearly the Kubjikā tradition is both a Siddhakula and a Yoginīkula, as is every independent Kaula school.

Akula, Kula and Kaula

Now we have examined how the term 'kula' denotes a modality of practice, school, tradition or teaching, we turn to another range of meanings. The word 'kula' and its derivatives came to denote a surprising number of metaphysical concepts ranging across the whole gamut of reality from the absolute, through to the godhead, deity, its energies and those of the entire cosmic order. Kula is also their microcosmic counterpart ranging from the innermost Self through to the energies of the psycho-physical body. Thus, Kula and the related words Akula and Kaula, denote aspects or modalities of the one non-dual reality.

The Kubjikā Tantras, like those of other schools and their exegetes, find a wealth of meaning in these terms. In the following presentation, drawn from Kubjikā sources, we shall see how the one reality, contemplated as this triad can be understood and ultimately experienced as a single dynamic whole. It is not necessary to relegate diversity into the realm of illusion or error to safeguard oneness, if we understand oneness as a dynamic continuum that alternates without changing between immanence, as the union of opposites, and transcendence beyond them. These terms, free of concrete reference are well suited to denote the one abstract and essential reality and its modalities in the various contexts it generates for itself to which it imparts Being, Life and Consciousness.

[1] KMT 1/44-46, 48.
[2] Chapter 12 of YKh (1), Ādyoghadaṇḍaka.
[3] KuKh 30/116, 177d-178ab.

By way of introduction to the Kubjikā sources, we turn first to what the Kashmiri ones have to say. The presentation there is clear. Kula and Akula are complimentary polarities. One polarity is the female deity. She is Kula. This term, which literally means `family' or `aggregate', denotes the energy or power - Śakti - of the male polarity understood both as the one source of manifestation and the complex of energies deployed in the series of states through which it becomes manifest. Thus, Kula is both the pleroma of energies in potentia and their progressive explication through their application to their cosmological, psychological, soteriological and other functions. It is the sum of all activity at all levels of existence both potentially and concretely. In short, the absolute as the plenitude of all things.

The other polarity is the transcendental source of this power. It is the male deity who is Akula. This term implies that the male aspect is all that the female aspect is not. The privative prefix 'a' indicates that this polarity is to be understood apophatically not as what it is, which, transcendent, is beyond predication, but what it is not, namely, the sphere of its manifestation. It is pure transcendental consciousness and being which, in a sense is all that, in phenomenal terms, Kula is not. Accordingly, Akula, the male deity, is emptiness - the Void which is the source of power and its energies that constitute Akula's 'fullness' (pūrṇatā) through which the process of creation and destruction takes place and of which it is its inner nature. Thus the two polarities – the emptiness of Akula and the fullness of Kula - work together. Any group of metaphysical entities could be called Kula. As Kula they are a dynamic whole consisting of vitally interacting parts, each reflecting an aspect of the microcosm of which Kula is the whole of which each part contains the others. The Kubjikā Tantras represent this unity by the goddess's Triangle. This is the goddess's body that, as an aggregate of energies working in unison, is Kula. The Point in the centre of the Triangle is Akula. The goddess emerges from Akula to enter Kula (akulakulagatā) which is her entry into the body from beyond it.[1]

Abhinavagupta explains that the term 'kula' is derived from the root 'kul', which means `coming together as a group'. Another meaning of this root is 'condensation'. While the first meaning alludes to the collection of the vital breaths, sense organs, elements and so forth that constitute the psycho-physical body, the second denotes the `condensed' state of consciousness that, for those ignorant of this process, is bondage.[1] From another point of view, Kula is Kaulikī śakti, which is both the energy of Kula and the energy that is Kula. Moreover this energy is the power of consciousness that gives life to the body and empowers the senses and the mind. Thus, Kula is both the essential nature of outer phenomena, their manifestation as their perceptual and conceptual representation as well as the Self of every living being. Abhinava lists these various perspectives:

---

[1] Comm. on KuKh 1/1b.

> Kula is the Supreme Lord's energy, power, (His) excellence, freedom, vigour, vitality, the mass (piṇḍa) of consciousness and the body.[2]

Jayaratha comments:

> `Power' is the capacity to merge (the universe into consciousness) and extract (it from it). (The epithet) `excellence' - (indicates that Kula) is above all things as their cause. `Freedom' is the capacity to do of all things and the rest (that the word implies). (Kula is said to be) the `mass' (of consciousness) because the universe here is in a state of oneness (sāmarasya). `Consciousness' (is) the Self. It is said:
>
> Kula is the supreme power (śakti) ... As the nature of consciousness is to arise and dissolve away it is called Kula. Kula is the stainless consciousness in the innate nature (of all things) and is the universal cause (of all things). O best of women, Kula is that which does all things, is all-pervasive and subtle. O goddess, Kula is the Lord of all, it is (wherein) everything is established. Its effulgence (tejas) is supremely terrible (paramaghora). ... Know that all-pervasive Kula is the vitality (vīrya) in the field of the operation of power.[3] Kula is Supreme Bliss. ... Kula is the innate nature of the Self. ... It is said that Kula is the body.[4]

Kula is said to be all these things in the Kubjikā Tantras also. In addition, they open up other perspectives. These are largely derived from the incorporation of a third aspect along with Kula and Akula. This is Kaula. Kula is energy and

---

[1] PTv p. 32-33; see Pandey p.594-595.
[2] TĀ 29/4.
[3] Another important, although less known meaning of the term Kula is the sperm emitted in the Kula rite that is passed from mouth to mouth between the two partners (TĀ 29/128cd-129ab) This is the physical aspect of 'the vitality (vīrya) in the field of the operation of power'.
[4] Cf. KuKh 14/55.

Kaula is the union of Śiva and his energy that precipitates into manifestation when the balance of this union is disturbed. An interesting passage in the ŚM expounds the nature of these principles. Bhairava tells the goddess:

> Akula is (the reality) that should be understood (prameya) and, O lady of good vows, Kaula comes from Kula. (Although) formless (amūrti), one should meditate on it as having form (mūrtimat) (because) its pure cognitive state (pramā) cannot be perceived. Akula is the supreme principle. Śakti, which is five-fold, is Kula. While, (one could say) simply that its permutated (vikāra) (phenomenal) state is (the reality called) Kaula of those who maintain the tradition.[1]

The permutations (vikāra) of Śakti are configurations of the aggregate of the energies that are its parts (kalā). They are at one with it in such a way that each unit of energy is also the whole. This is the difference between the terms 'śakti' (`energy') and 'kalā' (`unit of energy'). Śakti is energy as such, kalā denotes its permutations. However, although distinct, the two terms are in many ways equivalent and interchangeable. The same ambiguity, namely, their oneness and difference, is reflected in the terms Kula and Kaula. Kaula is Kula in its dynamic, transformative state. All that belongs to Kula and comes from it is Kaula.

> Akula is said to be the principle that, self-existent, does not require Kula in order to exist. It is Śiva, the supreme cause. Kula is that from which the universe arises. It is that in which it is established and where it is dissolved away. That Kula is said to be Kaula.[2]

Kula imparts existence to transitory phenomena. Śiva is eternal, he does not depend on Kula, the energy of Being, to exist and so is, as it were, without Kula. Kaula is Kula as the source, foundation and cessation of phenomena, the fundamental energies of which are the letters. Thus Kula in its original metaphysical form is the goddess, who embodies the will that generates the fifty

---

[1] prameyam akulaṁ nāma kulāt kaulaṁ ca suvrate |
amūrti mūrtimad dhyeyaṁ tatpramā nopalabhyate [k, kh, g: ṇo-] ||
akulaṁ paramaṁ tattvaṁ śaktiḥ pañcavidhā kulam | tadvikāraḥ samāsena kaulam anvayavādinām [kh: -vādinī] || ŚM 4/14-15.

[2] na vidyate kulaṁ yasya saṁbhavāya [kh: śaṁbhavāya] svayaṁbhuvam [g: svayaṁbhuveḥ] |
tad uktaṁ akulaṁ [kh: sakalaṁ] tattvaṁ śivaṁ paramakāraṇam ||
yato viśvaṁ samutpannaṁ yatra viśvaṁ vyavasthitam |
viśvasya vilayo [g: vilayā] yatra tat kulaṁ kaulam ucyate [k, g: kaulavedinām] || ŚM 4/16-17.

Siddhas and Yoginīs who preside over the energies of the letters.[1] Kula is the pure energy of Being as such within itself. It is related to absolute existence that does not undergo transformation, into phenomena. The series Akula - Kula - Kaula ranges in descending order from transcendence to immanence, that is, from the self-existent through to the power that imparts being (sattā) to phenomena and finally down into their concrete manifest form. This descent corresponds to a progressive separation between Akula / Śiva and Kula / Śakti. When it reaches its furthest limit, the two unite again in and through each phenomenon and their collective whole here termed `Kaula'. Thus, this triad is the absolute and abides within it. The cosmic process is the dynamic exchange and transformation of these principles. Rightly understood, it involves no decadence of absolute being, which is deity in a state of oneness. As the teachings of the Kubjikā Tantras adhere to this view of oneness based on the dynamics of Śakti, i.e. the goddess who is Kula, the tradition calls itself Kulakaula. Also:

> Akula is said to be Śiva who, flawless, is the first of all things (ādibhūta). He is unmanifest (avyakta), without phenomenal appearance (nirābhāsa), devoid of modifications and is undisturbed. Very subtle and free of supports, he pervades the universe and is without stain (nirañjana). When the unmanifest become manifest out of his unmanifest nature, the supreme, imperishable power of the will emerged from his body. In this way, O fair lady, all the fifty mistresses of Kula who are the letters and are established in the Body of Kula (kulapiṇḍa)[2] were born.[3]

From another perspective Kaula is not Śakti, it is Śiva who contains all things and pervades them. Kaula is the union of Akula and Kula. Akula is Kaula which is Maheśvara who is Śiva in his immanent form. Kula is the goddess who in the following passage is called Pārvatī. Thus Kula is within Kaula as the goddess who is within Śiva. They unite inwardly and so the Self penetrates the Self. We read in the KuKauM:

> Akula is said to be Kaula. It is Maheśvara, the womb in the womb of the most excellent body. O mistress of the gods, he is present everywhere. The abode of Kula is in Kaula, that is, in one's own divine Kula, one's own nature and form devoid of the body. One should enter into the Self by the Self. The Great Goddess engaged in intercourse

---

[1] KuKh 3/31-33.
[2] See KuKh 2/32-34ab, note 64.
[3] ŚM 12/115-118ab.

> within the great Śiva is Pārvatī. By means of the bliss (of this union one) attains the supreme principle and by (that) principle, the supreme (state).[1]

These are not just metaphysical principles. They are also states and aspects of the ultimate experience of the liberated condition that the following passage from the Kularatnapañcakāvatāra describes. The bliss of Akula is the ultimate state of rest (nivṛti) and liberation. It is of two kinds. Initially it is the bliss of liberation the realised soul experiences while still alive (jīvanmukti) and then the liberation he attains when he dies:

> The supreme (reality) attained by the teacher's Command is Akula that bestows worldly benefits (bhoga) and liberation. It is pure consciousness free of the impurity (mala) of Māyā. The omnipresent and tranquil Void (viyat) - that is said to be Akula. Akula's supreme bliss (nivṛti) arises within consciousness (saṁvitti). Its state, which is two-fold, is (now) going to be explained. Listen.
>
> Equality (samatā) (with respect to the opposites), a condition free of thought constructs, detachment in the midst of the objects of the senses, contentment because free of attachment and non-dual - such is liberation in this life (jīvanmukti).
>
> Knowledge of reality, contentment, realisation of the supreme Self, right action - this is the purification of the sources of transient emotions (vibhāvaśuddhi). The one (supreme) liberation is said to (take place) by detachment (from the world) when the body comes to an end and is (essentially) the absence of a fall in (that) condition of (pure) consciousness.
>
> O fair lady, by just knowing (that) dispassion (virāga) arises. That is of two kinds and should be understood by the wise.[2]

---

[1] *akulaṁ kaulam ity uktaṁ [kh g: sarva; ṅ: kolamityuktaṁ] garbhaṁ garbhe [k, g: garbhaṁ * *; gh: garbha * ] maheśvaraḥ ||
*uttamāṁgasya [kh g: tulamāsasya; gh: * (?) lamāsasya; ṅ: tulamāpaśya] deveśi sa vai [kh, g: sarvve; ṅ: sa caiva] sarvatra saṁsthitaḥ* |
*kaule [gh: *(?) le] kulāśrayaṁ [ṅ: kulāśraye] divye svakule [gh: (?) kule; ṅ: tvakule] dehavarjite [g: dehavarjita] ||
svasvarūpe svabhāve ca [g: va; gh ṅ: vā] svātmanyevātmanā [kh, g, ṅ: svātmanātmano] viśet [kh: viśeṣataḥ] |
mahāśive [ṅ: sadāśive] mahādevī [ṅ: mahādevi] ratibaddhā [kh: vivadvā; g: ravivaddhā; ṅ: rativadvā] tu pārvatī [k, gh, ṅ: pārvati] || *sukhena [kh g ṅ: mukhena] paramaṁ [gh: parama] tattvaṁ [gh: tatva] tattvena param aśnute [k, g: ṅ: paramaṁśrute; gh: paramanaśru * (?)]* | KuKauM 20/505cd-508ab.
[2] gurvājñādigataṁ paraṁ tad akulaṁ bhuktipradaṁ [k, kh: bhuktiṁ-] muktidam ||

These two kinds are called 'spontaneous dispassion' (sahajavirāga) and 'dispassion by control' (niyamavirāga) and are as follows:

> The dispassion that is in the state of 'I' and 'mine' should (exert itself to) control fettered existence. The one called 'spontaneous' is free of 'I' and 'mine' and its attribute is insight (jñapti). One who is spontaneously dispassionate is certainly not obstructed (in his quest) even though he enjoys the objects of the senses.
>
> One who suffers knows (reality) in the midst of suffering because (of his) impermanent ignorance. O fair lady, (the consequences of) Karma must be experienced due to the (power) of Karma and that is inevitable. Having understood this there is no attachment or (even) detachment in pleasure and pain. One who knows the condition of his own consciousness does not become subject to Karma. Nor should one take up any other means (yukti) on the supreme plane that consists of (pure) consciousness. Thus, O goddess, this is said to be the supreme Kulakaula.
>
> Will, knowledge, action and bliss - the fifth - is said to be Kuṇḍalī. That (reality), which has been explained in many ways, is the fivefold energy (śakti) in Kula. O fair lady, know that (this) Kula teaching is internal and it pervades the entire universe along with the gods, demons and warlocks.[1] śuddhabodhasvarūpaṁ [g: -pan] taṁ māyāmalavivarjitam ǀ sarvagaṁ viyad suśāntaṁ [k kh g: utsāntaṁ] tad akulaṁ parikīrtitam ǁ akulasyaiva saṁvittau jāyate nirvṛtiḥ parā [k, kh, g: parāḥ] ǀ tasyāvasthā dvidhābhūtā brūyamāṇā niśāmyatām [k: -myātāṁ; g: niśamyatāṁ] ǁ samatākalpanabhāvaṁ [k, g: -kalkanaṁ-; kh: -kalkana-] udāsitvaṁ ca viṣayasadbhāve [kh: -bhadbhāve] ǀ vigataparigrahatoṣī [k: -goṣī; kh: -roṣī] nirdvandvīti ca jīvanmuktiḥ [kh: - jīvamuktiḥ] ǁ tattvajñatā tṛptiḥ [k,kh, g: tṛpti] parātmabodhaḥ samyakkriyā sā hi [k, kh, g: ha] vibhāvaśuddhiḥ ǀ no vicyutiḥ [k: vidyutiḥ] bodhavidhau visaṁgāt kāyāvasāne gaditaikamuktiḥ [k, kh: gati-] ǁ jñātamātrā varārohe virāgaś ca prajāyate ǀ sa eva hi dvidhābhūto lakṣaṇīyo [k, kh: lakṣaṇāyo] vicakṣaṇaiḥ [kh: viva-] ǁ KRP 1/10cd-15.

[1] ahaṁ mameti bhāvastho [k: -sthe; kh: vivastho] virāgo niyamed bhavam [k, kh, g: -vaḥ] ǀ nirmamo nirahaṁkāraḥ [g: rira-] sahajākhyo [k, kh: -jāṁkhyo] jñaptiguṇaḥ [kh: - -rguṇaḥ] ǁ bhuñjīto 'pi hi [k: pim] viṣayān [k, kh, g: viṣayā] sahajavairāgī na bādhyate nūnam ǀ vetti saṁtāpe [g: saṁtāve] saṁtāpī anityājñānasvabhāvataḥ ǁ bhojyaṁ karmavaśāt [k, kh, g: -vaśā] karma tad anivāryaṁ [k, kh, g: -nivārya] hi sundari [k, kh, g: sundaraiḥ] ǀ matvaivaṁ sukhaduḥkhe hi na rāgo na virāgatā ǁ svasaṁvittividhānajño [g: svasaṁviti-; k, kh, g: -jñe] na karmavaśatāṁ vrajet ǀ na cānyayuktiḥ [k: cāgrayuktiḥ; kh: -yuktiṁ; g: cātrayuktiḥ] saṁgrāhyā [k: saṁgrāhya] cinmaye parame pade ǁ

Sound, touch, form, flavour, smell, mind (manas), intellect, ego, and Karma, which is considered to be the ninth - the goddess has assumed nine aspects and (she is) my pervasive power. She brings about (this) multifarious wonder in the three worlds by means of (her) Māyā. Due to (that) will, which is supreme and most inferior, the entire universe is pervaded by these (nine). O dear one, pleasure and pain arise and fall away. (Whereas) those who know the reality of Kula (kulatattva) are born from the path of Kula. Once drunk the divine nectar of Kula there is no rebirth again. Kaula is the permutation (vikāra) of those two and abides in the form of the individual soul. Nothing arises without that in the mobile and immobile universe. When known, the gods, demons, people, animals, vegetation and birds dissolve away (into the absolute). O dear one, the cause of that is Kaula. As the triple universe along with the gods, demons and men, belongs to Kaula, it is said to be Kaula, the cause of the birth of the body.

Whatever is visible or invisible to embodied beings in the three worlds is all, O goddess, certainly Kaula, the cause of union (saṁyoga) (with the absolute). O goddess, the ten-fold divine source (devayoni) (of phenomena, that is, the above nine and Kaula) is the fourfold womb (yoni) (of the four kinds of living beings).[1] They arise and dissolve away in Kaula. (All that) moves and is immobile, the triple world with (all) that moves and does not is born from Kula and comes from Akula. O beloved, that is said to be Kaula.[2]

---

ity evātaḥ paro [k, g: ityegotaḥ paraṁ; kh: tyethotaḥ paraṁ] devi kulakaulo 'bhidhīyate [k, kh: -kaulābhi-; g: kṣalakaulobhi-] |
icchā jñānī [kh: jñāni] kriyānandā pañcamī kuṇḍalī matā ||
tad etad vividhākhyātaṁ śaktiḥ [k, g: śakti] pañcavidhā kule |
abhyantarātmikāṁ [k, kh: abhyaṁnavā-] bhadre [k: bhade] jñāyatāṁ kulasūcanām [k: kulamracanāṁ; kh: kulasūyatāṁ] ||
yayā vyāptaṁ jagat sarvaṁ sadevāsuraḍāmaram [k: sadaivā- -drāmaraṁ] | Ibid. 1/16-23ab.

[1] See note 32 to KuKh 2/14.

[2] śabdasparśaṁ ca rūpaṁ ca raso gandhas tathaiva ca ||
mano buddhir ahaṁkāraḥ karma [k, kh, g: karmaṁ] ca navamo mataḥ |
navaprakāragatā devī [k, g: devi] mama śaktis tu vyāpinī ||
karoti vividhāścaryaṁ triṣu lokeṣu māyayā |
ebhir vyāptaṁ [k: -vyāptiṁ] jagat sarvaṁ parāparatarecchayā ||
sukhaduḥkhasamutpattir jāyate kṣīyate [kh: kīyate] priye |
kulatattvavido [k: -tattvido] ye ca kulamārgasamudbhavāḥ [g: chala-] ||
pītvā kulāmṛtaṁ divyaṁ [kh: dīvyaṁ] na saṁbhūtiḥ punar bhavet |
kaulaṁ tayor vikāraṁ tu [kh: tuṁ] jīvarūpaṁ vyavasthitam ||
na ca tena vinā kiñcij jāyate sacarācare |
devāsuramanuṣyāṇāṁ paśusthavarapakṣiṇāṁ [k: pakṣiṇī; g: paśusthāva-] ||

Hymn to Kula and Kaula

The following hymn is dedicated to Kula and Kaula, the Navakaula and the Octad of Kula (kulāṣṭaka). Kaula and Kula are presented differently in this Hymn. Kaula is not the permutation of Kula, it is the Nameless Absolute. It is the indefinable 'neuter' whereas Kula is deity that, twofold, is both the god and the goddess, Śrīnātha Bhairava and Kuṇḍalinī. Kula is the condition of reality in which there are states and levels. Kaula contains Kula but is not defined or conditioned by the levels within the sphere of Kula.

Kaula is the Absolute devoid of all phenomenal characteristics. The foundation of all things, it cannot be characterized positively as any particular thing, however abstract, whether subjective consciousness or objective Being. All that can be said of it is what it is not. Accordingly, the first part of this hymn eulogizes Kaula through nine negations metaphorically called the Nine Kaulas (navakaula). These nine negations characterize the apophatic Absolute - that cannot be attained by any means whether mantra, ritual or even meditation - in the only way possible. However, although Kaula cannot be grasped by the finite intellect or reached by anything we do, the last of the nine Kaulas does show us a 'wayless' way. This too is negation, but not the denial of the absolute existence of the categories of phenomenal existence or the effectiveness of action - it is the denial of the agent. Just as the anonymous Christian mystic who wrote the Cloud of Unknowing mysteriously apprehends the inscrutable Deity by the wise ignorance of faith, so the Kaula Siddha realises the Kaula Absolute by doing nothing. He is what the text calls a 'non-agent' (akartṛ) and, as such, enters spontaneously into that great reality beyond the processes (krama) of phenomenal existence, ritual and perception, all characterized at one stroke in this, the last of the Nine Kaulas, as the condition in which there is no subject or object:

> (1) I praise Kaula, worshipped by Kula (which is both Śiva and Śakti). It is stainless, luminous (viraja), pure, free of phenomena (niṣprapañca), omnipresent and free of Being and Non-being.

---

vilayatveti [k: tvati; kh: tyanti; g: tpati] vijñāte [k, g: vijñāne] kaulaṁ tatkāraṇaṁ priye |
kaulinaṁ [kh, g: kaulitaṁ] tribhuvanaṁ yena sadevāsuramānuṣam ||
tena tat kaulam ity uktaṁ piṇḍasaṁbhūtikāraṇam [k: vibhuṁ-] |
yat kiñcit [k, g : kikit] triṣu lokeṣu dṛśyādṛśyaṁ śarīriṇām [k, kh: śarīraṇāṁ] ||
tat sarvaṁ niścitaṁ devi [kh: devī] kaulaṁ saṁyogakāraṇaṁ |
daśadhā devayonir yā [k: yoni yo] bhūtayoniś caturvidhā ||
kaule teṣāṁ samutpattiḥ [k: -bhyanti; kh: -tyanti] kaule ca vilayo [kh: vira-] bhavet |
sthāvaraṁ jaṁgamaṁ yac ca [g: pañca] trailokyaṁ sacarācaram ||
akulāt kulasaṁbhūtaṁ kaulaṁ tad ucyate priye | KRP 1/23cd-33ab.

(2) Devoid of (phenomenal) being (niḥsvabhāva),[1] without lord, I praise Kaula, which is ever manifest (sadodita).

(3) Free of Dharma and Adharma, liberation and bondage, I praise Kaula; non-dual, omnipresent and eternal, it is (both) supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent).

(4) I praise Kaula that is completely without stain. Devoid of beginning, middle and end, it is pure, consists of consciousness, is unmanifest and without foundation.

(5) Free of (both forms of liberation, namely) ultimate (sāvadhi) and otherwise (niravadhi),[2] devoid of emanation and withdrawal, I praise Kaula the Nameless (absolute) free of differentiation (kalojjhita) that accomplishes (all things).[3]

(6) Free of sound and touch, devoid of what is to be taken up and abandoned, what exists and what does not, the Great Kaula, the Nameless, is free of the repetition of mantra and worship (pūjā), meditation, and concentration.

(7) I praise Kaula without defects and free of the utterance of Mantra.

(8) Devoid of Navātman, subtle, the expander of thought and its object, free of the Wheels and Foundations, I praise Kaula, (the transcendent beyond) the purview of the senses (agocara).

(9) He who does not act (akartṛ) and enters (therein) awakens within (reality) devoid of (all) process (akrama). Where there is no one that is penetrated (vedhya) and none that penetrates (vedhaka) - that is said to be Mahākaula.[4]

---

[1] See Dyczkowski 2004: 51ff. for a discussion of ultimate reality in these terms.

[2] Concerning these two modalities of liberation, see KuKh 68/60cd-98ab and notes.

[3] nirmalaṁ virajaṁ śuddhaṁ niṣprapañcaṁ [k, kh: niprapaṁca; gh: niprayaṁca] ca [k, kh, gh: sa] sarvagam |
bhāvābhāvavinirmuktaṁ [k, gh: -vinimuktaṁ] vande kaulaṁ kulārcitam [k, kh, gh: kulārjitaṁ] ||
niḥsvabhāvam [k, kh, gh: niśva-] anāthaṁ ca vande kaulaṁ sadoditam |
dharmādharmavinirmuktaṁ bandhamokṣavivarjitam ||
advaitaṁ [k, kh, gh: dvaitaṁ] sarvagaṁ [gh: -ga] nityaṁ vande kaulaṁ [gh: kaula] parāparam |
yasyāntanādimadhyaṁ [k, kh, gh: yasyātaṁnādimapyaṁ] ca [k, kh: caṁ] nirmalaṁ citsvabhāvakam [k, kh, gh: citsvamāśraye] ||
avyaktaṁ ca nirādhāraṁ vande kaulaṁ sunirmalam |
sāvadhiniravadhimuktaṁ [k, kh: -dhirmuktaṁ; gh: māvadhiniravadhirmuktaṁ] sṛṣṭisaṁhāravarjitam ||
anekaṁ [k, kh, gh: anaka] ca kalojjhitaṁ [k, kh, gh: kalājisitaṁ + yad] vande kaulaṁ [k, kh, gh: kaulā] nivartakam | YKh (1) 4/16-20ab.

[4] śabdasparśavinirmuktaṁ [gh: -vinimuktaṁ] heyopādeyavarjitam [k, gh: -yādeyavarjitaṁ; kh: -deyavarjitaṁ] ||
astināstivinirmuktaṁ mahākaulam anāmikam |

After expounding Kaula and the Nine Kaulas, the Tantra moves on to expound Kula and the Eight Kulas (kulāṣṭaka). Mahākaula is purely transcendental. Its 'sphere is the unmanifest'. It is the one reality with no levels or planes and so is 'free of Wheels and Foundations'. Kula is the immanent aspect. Set in relation to planes and stages of ascent, it is the summit. Kaula is the aspect of reality that abides eternally as it is unaffected by anything. Kula is the same reality set in relation to manifestation of which it is the source and ultimate end. Pervading all that exists between these two moments of emergence and merger, it is 'the omnipresent Lord where everything dissolves away'. Kula is Śrīnāthabhairava, who although inscrutable – 'nameless' - as Kaula, is definable in relation to Kula, the sphere of manifestation, as its Lord, Kuleśvara. Kaula is that aspect of reality that is realised by abandoning all gradations and distinctions, and every means of attainment. Kula is that aspect which stands at the summit of every stage and level of existence and can only be attained by knowing them. Kaula and Kula are a single reality. Without knowledge of these planes it cannot be realised and freedom from bondage is not possible. However impossible it may seem to reason, Kulakaula combines in the one reality that is both.

The first five verses enumerate the planes (bhūmi) of reality arranged in a progressive series, first descending from Kula and then ascending back to it. They correspond to stages in the emergence and withdrawal of the sonic maṇḍala through and into which the Krama unfolds. The Lord of Kula stands at the summit at the end of Sound within Śakti. Descending into the polarity of Śiva and Śakti, he assumes the form of Śrīnāthabhairava who is in the centre of the goddess's fertile energy, which is the seventeen digit of the New Moon. He governs the Krama that unfolds around him and then merges back into him. The sequence of descent leads out to the Krama through the phases of AIṀ: Śrīnātha and energy of the New Moon > 16 energies of the Moon > 12 energies of the Sun > the Triangle containing the letters > the hexagram containing the Krama. The return from the Krama follows: Triangle containing the seats > Śiva and Śakti > New Moon > Half Measure > Nameless / Kuleśvara.

Kula is not only the male polarity. It is also Kuṇḍalinī, that is, the power that gives rise to this cycle of emanation and merger. Kula is both Śiva and Śakti.

---

japapūjāvinirmuktaṁ [gh: apa-] dhyānadhāraṇavarjitam ||
mantroccāravinirmuktaṁ [k: vinimuktaṁ] vande kaulam anāmayam |
navātmavarjitaṁ [k, kh, gh: navāṁtavarjitaṁ] sūkṣmaṁ cittacetyavikāsinam [k, kh, gh: ciṁtacetādhikāsinaṁ] ||
cakrādhāravinirmuktaṁ [k: -vinimuktaṁ] vande kaulam agocaram |
akartā saṁkrāmed yas tu akramānte [k, kh: -māna; gh: aktamāna] ca budhyate [k, kh, gh: vadhyate] ||
na vedhyaṁ [k, kh, gh: vedhaṁ] vedhakaṁ [k, kh, gh: vedhakāṁ] tatra mahākaulaṁ [k, kh, gh: mahākolaṁs] tad ucyate [k, kh, gh: ta ucyate] | YKh (1) 4/20cd-24ab.

Kula is Śakti as the dynamic three-fold energy of will, knowledge and action, through which all things are created and destroyed. Śiva is also Kula as their source and ultimate end. The Absolute - Kaula - abides throughout untouched and undivided by any of this process. So Kula is the Absolute which is both Śiva and Śakti, whereas Kaula is the pure abstract Absolute free of all polarities and predication. Between these 'two' Absolutes are all the planes of existence arranged in a hierarchy of heightening yogic states. Knowledge of these two is liberating, just as ignorance of them is bondage.

> At the end of Śakti is Supreme Sound and at the End of Sound is Kuleśvara. One should know that what is born from Kula is on that plane (and) abides (there) in two divisions (as Śiva and Śakti).
>
> The energy (kalā) you are, (O goddess) is the god Time who abides perpetually on the plane of the (ultimate) goal (lakṣapada). Kula is Śrīnāthabhairava who is in the midst of the (the lunar energies of the goddess's) fertile period (ṛtukāla).[1] The sixteen (lunar) energies dissolve away there into the sequence of the twelve (solar energies). The twelve dissolve away into the Merumaṇḍala in seven (parts).[2] (These) seven dissolve away with the six (parts of the Krama)[3] and with the six into the group of four (sacred seats within the triangular Yoni). The four are there where the two parts (kalā) (that is, Śiva and Śakti) are. The two parts dissolve away there where (the energy of the Transmental symbolized as) the digit of the New Moon (amākalā) resides.[4]
>
> The New Moon dissolves away into the Half Measure (of the energy of Sound)[5] and the Half Measure into the plane of the

---

[1] See KuKh 3/74-75ab and note.

[2] These are the seven layer of letters in the goddess's Yoni, the triangular Merumaṇḍala. See KuKh 8/19-20 and notes.

[3] Concerning the six parts of the Krama see intro. vol. 1, p. 323.

[4] śaktyante [k, kh: śaktyānte; gh: śaktyānta] yat paraṁ nādaṁ nādādyante kuleśvaram [k, kh, gh: kuśaikharaṁ] |
tatpade [kh: -padaṁ] kulajaṁ jñeyaṁ [k, kh, gh: jñayaṁ] dvikabhedena [k, kh: -bhaidena] saṁsthitam ||
kalā yāsi [k, kh, gh: -sī] tu sā devaḥ [k, kh, gh: devā] kālaṁ lakṣapade sadā |
ṛtukālasya madhye [k, gh: madhya] tu kulaṁ [k, kh, gh: kula] śrīnāthabhairavam ||
kalāḥ [k, kh: kalā] ṣoḍaśa tatraiva līyante [gh: līyate] dvādaśe krame |
dvādaśaiva vilīyante [gh: vilīyate] dvipañcamerumaṇḍale [kh: -mairu-] ||
dvipañca ṣaḍbhir [k, kh, g: ṣaḍbhi-] līyante ṣaḍbhiś [k, kh, gh: yadbhiś] caiva catuṣkale |
catus tatraiva yat [k, kh, gh: yaṁ] taddvau [k, kh, gh: tadvau] kalau dvau [k, kh, gh: nāsti] yatra [gh: patra] saṁsthitau ||
dvau kalau tatra līyete [k, kh, gh: līyante] yatraiva sā amā kalā | YKh (1) 4/26-30ab.

[5] Concerning the Half Measure, see into. Vol. 1, p. 382-386.

Nameless (absolute). O god, the Nameless is Kula where the lord is Kuleśvara. I praise Kula, the essence of Kaula, the venerable ocean of knowledge.

Kula is the goddess Kuṇḍalinī, Karaṅkinyā, she who transports (the energies). She is Śakti who goes to Kula. I praise her who is auspicious in every way.

All that is perceived in the mortal (world) is just an entity (vastumātra) born of Kula. Kula, the omnipresent Lord is where everything dissolves away.

Kaula, whose sphere is the unmanifest, is in the triple abode of the energy of Kula. That which is within Kula (Śiva / Śakti) and Kaula (the Absolute) is said to be (the supreme) plane (of existence). All that is contrary to enjoyment and Yoga is devoid of Kaula.[1]

The Eight Kulas that are at the core of the theogonic emanation of Kula each with their own pantheons of Yoginīs and Bhairavas are inwardly assimilated to the phases and aspects of absolute reality. They are defined accordingly:

1) Without plane (of existence) (niṣpada), established in Rudra's energy, that is Kula in the Kula teachings. 2) Kula is said to be the body. 3) Kula is said to be the end of meditation (dhyāna). 4) Kula is the aggregate of the (Eight Mothers who are the) Octad of Kula.[2] 5) The Lotus (i.e. Yoni) of Kula (at the End of the Twelve above the deity's head) faces downwards. 6) One should know that Kula is Śakti. 7) It is said here that Kula is knowledge. 8) Kula is the instrument (of emanation and attainment). Kula is of eight kinds in the Kula (teaching). He who knows the omnipresent Kula is a teacher in the Kula (kulācārya). He who says that Kulakaula is devoid of the knowledge of the planes (of existence) (bhūmikājñāna) does not have

---

[1] amā līyati [k, kh, gh: līpati] mātrārdhe [k, kh, gh: mātrāddhai] mātrārdhānāmake pade ||
anāmakaṁ kulaṁ deva yatra nāthaṁ kuleśvaram |
taṁ kulaṁ kaulasadbhāvaṁ vande śrījñānasāgaram ||
kulaṁ kuṇḍalinī devī karaṅkinyātha vāhinī |
sā śaktiḥ kulagāminyā vande tāṁ sarvamaṅgalām ||
yat kiñcid [k, kh, gh: kiṁci] dṛśyate [k, kh, gh: dṛsyate] martye vastumātraṁ kulodbhavam |
[k, kh, gh: + na] kule [k, kh, gh: kulo] yatra [gh: patra] vilīyeta tat kulaṁ sarvagaṁ [gh: missing] vibhuḥ [k: vibhuṁ; kh: vibhuṁ + | 5 ||; gh: missing] ||
kulaśaktitridhāmasthaṁ kaulaṁ [k, kh: kolaṁ] cāvyaktagocaram [kh: cāvyaktaṁ-] | [This and following two lines are missing in MS Gh.]
kulakaulasya yo madhye tat padaṁ parikīrtitam ||
bhogayogaṁ [k, kh: gobhayogaṁ] vilomaṁ [k: vilomayaṁ; kh: vilomaṁyaṁ] yat sakalaṁ kaulavarjitam | Ibid. 4/30cd-35ab.

[2] Concerning the Eight Mother see KuKh chapter 16.

liberation and he wanders in the world of transmigration full of the wombs (within which he is reborn).[1]

The Śrīkrama

Now we have examined the meaning of the important term 'kula' we move on to another one that appears repeatedly in the Kubjikā sources and in those of other Kaula schools, namely: 'krama'. We may distinguish four basic meanings of the term 'krama' that coincide with the common usage of the word. These are as follows.

1) The immediate, literal meaning of the word is sequence, serial order, progression, progressive motion, and succession.

2) The word 'krama' may also convey the meaning of 'going', 'proceeding', 'course', 'the way', 'regular progress', 'order', or 'method'.

3) A 'krama' is also the correct procedure or rule sanctioned by tradition.

4) A 'krama' may also be a hereditary descent or lineage.

The various meanings of the term in the context of the Kubjikā Tantras and those of other schools derive from these literal meanings of the word. We can distinguish varying shades of meaning by examining the context in which the term is used. First, we observe that 'krama' can denote a particular Kaula tradition, its teachings, lineages, ritual, and pantheon. In many respects, Krama, in this sense of the word, is similar in meaning to Kula. The Kubjikā cult is called the Śrīkrama. The equivalent Kālī cult is the Kālīkrama. The Western Path (paścimamārga) of the Kubjikā Tantras is the Śrīkrama.[2] It is the tradition – krama - of the goddess who bestows well-being and prosperity – śrī. It is also called the Paścimakrama or Paścimaśrīkrama.

They can equally well be called Kālīkula or Śrīkula. The term Krama like Kula is non-specific - it is a generic term for a number of different Kula traditions. At times the two terms may be juxtaposed as in the expression Kālīkulakrama or Śrīkulakrama. We do occasionally find the form Kramakula[3] but this is rare

---

[1] niṣpadaṁ rudraśaktisthaṁ taṁ kulaṁ [kh: + kulaṁ] kulaśāsane ||
kulaṁ śarīram ity uktaṁ kuladhyānāntam [kh: kulaghā-] ucyate |
kulaṁ kulāṣṭakagrāmaṁ kulapadmam adhomukham [kh: adhyo-] ||
kulaṁ śaktir vijānīyāt [k, kh: śakti vijānīyā; gh: śati vijānīyā] kulaṁ jñānam ihocyate |
*karaṇaṁ hi [k, kh, gh: karaṇīti] kulaṁ śambho [gh: * bho] kulam aṣṭavidhaṁ kule* ||
*kulaṁ [k, kh, gh: kula] sarvagataṁ vidyāt kulācāryaḥ [k, gh: kulā * ryaḥ] sa ucyate* |
bhūmikājñānanirmuktaḥ [k, gh: -nimukta; kh: -nirmuktai] kulakaulaṁ [k, kh, gh: -kaula] tu yo vadet ||
na tasya mukti - saṁsāre bhramane yonisaṁkule [k, kh: saṁkulai] | YKh (1) 4/35cd-39ab.

[2] KuKh 4/12cd.

[3] That energy who is the Triangle delights in the Kramakula . . . .
yā sā śaktis trikoṇā [g: -ṇāṁ] kramakularamaṇā . . . YKh (1) 38/79a.

compared to the common form, which is Kulakrama.[1] The word Kālīkulakrama, for example, means hardly more than Kālīkula or Kālīkrama, which in the sense of 'school', 'tradition' or, as I often translate 'transmission' are virtually synonymous. Even so, the juxtaposition of the two terms is significant. Many Kulas are not Kramakulas. An example is the one to which the Kaulajñānanirṇaya and Kulapañcāśikā belong and so too, the Kulas listed in the KJN.

A Krama may also be the succession - krama - of teachers in a spiritual lineage (gurukrama). The progression in time from one teacher to the next is also a sequence - krama. The analogy is with a family's genealogy. It is the line through which a person's ancestors have descended and so, by extension, it is that person's pedigree. Even though the Kubjikā Tantras, as do the Kaula Tantras in general, allows access to all castes, they are very careful not to give the teachings to those who are without the appropriate spiritual lineage, that is, to one who is devoid of a Krama (kramahīna). Thus, the Tantra denounces those who speak badly (nindaka) of the Krama as this amounts to speaking badly of someone's family.

A teacher who belongs to such a lineage can be called a 'kramaguru'. He imparts initiation into the Krama (kramadīkṣā). Although, one could theoretically use this expression to refer to any initiation, as they all involve entry into a spiritual lineage, but it is a particular type of initiation as it not only affords entry into a lineage, it also involves the transmission of a Krama which is a type of Kaula liturgy (kramārcana, kramapūjā). There can be various 'kramapūjās', according to the variety of lineages. Indeed, each one is very distinctive and specific to a particular school. One school may possess various Kramas.

The Krama is the teaching transmitted through the lineage. The Kulakrama is the tradition of the teachers,[2] or just the tradition as a whole.[3] The Krama teaching (kramanaya) is the teaching transmitted by the teachers who belong to a Krama. More specifically, a Krama is a sequence of mantras projected into the maṇḍala, which is accordingly called the Kramamaṇḍala. A Krama ritual may be made up of a series of Kramas. The Śrīkrama is the totality of all these sequences.

That from which the pure Kramakula has come forth and where everything dissolves away.

ādau yasmāt [g: yammāt] pravṛtaṁ kramakulam amalaṁ līyate yatra sarvam Ibid. 39/3a.

(She is) that goddess of the tradition who is the glorious power of the Kramakula; who having abandoned (all phenomenal) existence is not a (common) object of knowledge, yāṁ [g: yā] tām āmnāyadevīṁ [g: sāyāmnāya-] kramakulavibhavāṁ nyastabhāvāprameyāṁ [g: nyambhavatprameyāṁ (?)] Ibid. 39/10a.

[1] He who knows (the teachings) in the Western Tradition is a teacher in the Kulakrama.

yo vetti [k, gh: veti] paścimāmnāye [k, gh: -ya] sa ācāryaḥ kulakrame | YKh (1) 3/213ab.

[2] KuKh 1/3c.

[3] KuKh 2/3cd.

Specifically, the Śrīkrama is three-fold as the Krama of the three lineages. It is the one Krama in three parts (trikaṇṭaka).[1] All the Kramas can be said to belong to these three. Amongst them are not only the permutations of the main three, they also include other Kramas variously connected to them. An example is the Kramas associated with the six limbs (aṅga) of the goddess.[2] The female deities worshipped in each Krama are aspects (aṁśa) of the corresponding form of the goddess, just as the male ones are of the god. Emitted from them, they are deployed and worshipped systematically, that is, 'sequentially' (krameṇa - 'in accord with the Krama') around them in their respective spheres (maṇḍala).

The Śrīkrama should be worshipped in the manner taught in the Śrīkulāgama.[3] If this is not done correctly, that is, if the Krama within the maṇḍala is not worshipped in the proper sequence, it becomes impure.[4] The 'purity' of a sequence is preserved by maintaining its exact sequential order not just its contents. The sincere initiate should be devoted to the Krama. Moreover, he should know it. In this context this means both the ritual procedure and its object and means through which it can take place, that is, the deities and their mantras. The rite must be performed in the correct way, in the right place, and at the right time. The officiant must know the Krama and so must have been properly initiated and instructed. Otherwise he is not a kramika, that is, a member of the tradition.

Mantras are particularly effective if repeated in front of the Śrīkrama, projected into the maṇḍala, just as they are if repeated in front of a teacher.[5] Clearly then, the Śrīkrama is external, although it should also be worshipped 'on the top of the head'.[6] Indeed, the goddess is herself the Krama and all the forms of it are aspects of her.[7] Just as Śrīmata and other names of the scripture also denote the entire tradition, in this case it takes its name from the Krama which is the main object of worship (kramapūjā, kramārcana). When we are told that liberation is found in the Śrīkrama,[8] this may mean both the Krama, that is, the object of worship and the entire tradition. When we are told that the worship of the Śrīkrama is essential[9] and that a Siddha was intent on the worship of the Śrīkrama

---

[1] KuKh 28/126-133ab.
[2] See below chapter 11.
[3] KuKh 27/26cd-27.
[4] KuKh 28/108-110. Note how evident it is from this reference that the Krama is also quite literally the sequence of the mantras and ritual actions.
[5] KuKh 39/119cd-120ab.
[6] KuKh 37/69.
[7] See KuKh 3/19 and note.
[8] KuKh 42/12.
[9] KuKh 46/123cd-127 and 46/258cd-261ab.

maintaining silence for a year[1] because the Command is accomplished (ājñāsiddhi) in front of the Śrīkrama,[2] it clearly means the concrete projection of the Krama into the maṇḍala. It is clear that Śrīkrama also means the entire tradition in passages that tell us, for example, that the Command expands out through the current (ogha) of the Śrīkrama[3] and that mortals attain the ultimate goal in the Śrīkrama[4] which is the Krama Path (kramamārga).[5] However, in many instances the expression is ambiguous. It can mean both the concrete Krama itself and the tradition as a whole, as when we are told that once obtained the Śrīkrama the initiate can reach the very vertex of supreme reality.[6] Thus, the revelation of the Śrīkrama that takes place in various modalities of the initiation[7] is at once the transmission of the entire tradition through the energy of the Command and, concretely, the teaching of the Krama.

The Worship of the Krama

The Krama is also the entire body of the transmission that is represented concretely in the maṇḍala, that is, the society of divine forms and their mantras that constitute collectively the body of the Deity. In other words, the Krama is the Deity in its expanded most 'concrete' manifest form. Thus, the Krama is the supreme object of worship even for the Deity itself who by worshipping it relates its own transcendental essence ('Self') to its immanent, cosmic form. The god is engaged in 'non-dual worship', offering substances from his own body that he consumes. Thus, he and his consort generate the bliss that is their most intimate inner experience. In the same perspective Abhinavagupta presents the three principle sacrificial substances (makāra) - wine (madya), meat (māṁsa) and the fluids generated through sexual intercourse (maithuna) as the bliss of the Brahman.[8] Produced by the body they are close to the deity who is consciousness and as such supremely pure. Bhairava explains in the KRU:

> Initially, O great goddess, Ādinātha created the Paścima Krama lineage and then, O dear one, he worshipped it himself with a sacrificial substance (dravya) born from his own body and possessing marvellous power (tejas). O fair one, (this is) the most excellent

[1] KuKh 46/133.
[2] KuKh 46/154cd-156ab; cf. ṢSS 46/207.
[3] YKh (1) 29/5 quoted in the beginning of KuKh chapter 59.
[4] KuKh 67/22.
[5] KuKh 67/23.
[6] KuKh 68/100.
[7] KRU 6/101.
[8] TĀ 29/97cd-98.

Krama (kramavara) which bestows the fruit of enjoyment and liberation.

O one of good vows, I have talked about Ādinātha and the goddess who originates from his body. When he had enacted this most excellent union (melāpaka) with her and externalized all the Kramamaṇḍala from his body, the lord of the gods worshipped it. (He did so) along with the mantras and Vidyās and (their) limbs with heaps of the aforementioned sacrificial substances (dravya) as divine offerings and with lamps (dīpaka) of many forms fed by the Great Clarified Butter (made from human fat). (He also made) food offerings (naivedya) born from the energy of his will, (with many kinds of) human flesh (māhāpala), divine offerings of flowers and tasty food (bhakṣabhojya), (each offered) separately.

(He worshipped thus) with (offerings) of the most excellent and divine Great Incense and many kinds of ornaments, established in supreme non-duality with (substances) born from (his) great bodily essence (mahādhātu). Endowed with supreme bliss and holding the great argha vessel, the Lord of the gods, worshipped, O dear one, the great and excellent Wheel and he, the emperor and Lord of the Śrīkula, deftly put all the Śrīkramas, including the sequence of the Child and the rest, in place in accord with the sequence.[1]

He worshipped the Great Transmission (mahākrama) with hymns and excellent divine lauds, by exhibiting the Great Gestures

---

[1] aadaav eva mahaadevi aadinaathena nirmitam |
pa"scima.m kramasantaana.m [k: sa.mj~naata.m] svaya.m [g: suuya.m] ya.s.ta.m [kh g: ye.s.ta.m] tata.h priye ||
svakaayasa.mbhavenaiva [g: svekaayasa.mbhaveneva] dravyenaadbhuutatejasaa [g: dravyaanaa-] |
ya.s.ta.m [g: ya.s.ta] kramavara.m [kh: kramecara.m] bhadre bhuktimuktiphalapradam ||
yaa saa devii [kh: devi] mayaakhyaataa aadinaathasya suvrate |
svadehotthaa [g: svadehonthaa] tayaa saardha.m [g: saarddha.m] k.rtvaa melaapaka.m varam ||
svadehastha.m bahi.h [g: vahi.h] k.rtvaa a"se.sakramama.n.dalam |
puujayaamaasa deve"so mantravidyaa"ngasa.myutam ||
upahaaravarair divyai.h puurvoktair dravyasa~ncayai.h |
diipakair vividhaakaarair mahaagh.rtavibodhitai.h [kh: -mahaam.rta-] ||
*nijecchaa"saktisa.mbhuutair [kh: nijecchaa kti-] naivyadai"s ca mahaapalai.h |
pu.spopahaarair divyai"s ca bhak.sabhojyai.h [kh: -bhojya] p.rthak p.rthak || mahaadhuupavarair divyair naanaala.mkaarabhuu.sa.nai.h [g: -naanaalakaara-] |
mahaadhaatuprasuutai"s ca paramaadvaitasa.msthita.h ||
paramaanandasampanna.h mahaapaatraarghahastaka.h |
puujayaamaasa deve"so mahaacakravara.m priye ||
sthaane sthaane nive"syaasau [k: -sur; kh: nive.syaasur; g: -sur] yathaanukramayogata.h | baalakramaadikaan [k kh g: daya.h] sarvaan [k kh g: sarve] "sriikramaan [k kh: -kramaa.h; g: "sriikramaa] "sriikule"svaraa.t [kh, g: -raat] || KRU 2/12-20.

and with salutations and the waving of lamps along with divine words of praise and rites of adoration centered on the maṇḍala and the Krama.

Taking up then the energizing (dīpaka) (substances), O fair one, he who does all things, was conjoined (yukta) with the goddess. O Supreme mistress, praised by the heroes, the Lord of the heroes (vīrarāṭ) and the universal Self took up the vessel with the meat (dīpa) and put it in (his) mouth[1] along with the sacrificial pap (caru).

O Bhairavī, once the lord had made the three vessels in this sequence, he worshipped the Wheel by acting (freely) as he desired (yatheṣṭaceṣṭā). Seeing the Lord of the Wheel within the Wheel intent on worship, the Supreme goddess, her mind full of humility (vinaya), asked (him): "O god and lord, what is worshipped in the great union (mahāmelāpaka) that arouses great wonder with (all this) great heap of sacrificial substances and the divine wheels that generate great bliss? Śrīnātha, if you do (indeed) bestow boons tell (me this) by (your) grace."[2]

The venerable Ādinātha said:

"O (goddess whose) face is beloved (to all)! You who move within (me) and outside (me)! Supreme one who is both supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent)! Divine one who resides in the great Void! Do you not know, O large eyed one, that you are, just as I am, without either beginning or end? Such (also) is this Krama lineage (santāna) that has come down through the sequence of the series (of

[1] Note that the imperative `yojayet' is here used to denote past action

[2] stutistotravarair divyair mahaamudraapradar"sanai.h [kh: stutimraatrava-] | niiraajananamaskaarai.h [kh: niiraa.mjana-] divyavaacaabhivandanai.h [g: -candanai.h] ||
ma.n.dalakramapuujaabhi.h puujayitvaa mahaakramam [g: -krama] |
*aadaaya diipaka.m bhadre devyaa yukta.h sa [kh: ] sarvak.rt ||
uddh.rtya paatra.m sarvaatmaa sadiipa.m yojayet [g: yojayen] mukhe |
sacaru.m [kh: sa eva; g: sacaruu] parame"saani viiraraa.t viiravandite ||
anena kramayogena k.rtvaa paatratraya.m prabhu.h |
yathe.s.tace.s.tayaa [g: yathe.s.tave.s.tayaa] cakra.m [g: cakra] arcayaamaasa [g: marcayaa-] bhairavi ||
tathaarcanarata.m d.r.s.tvaa cakrastha.m cakranaayakam |
papraccha parame"saanii vinayaavi.s.tacetasaa ||
kim ida.m puujyate deva mahaamelaapake prabho |
mahaadravyasamuuhena mahaavismayakaarakam ||
mahaacakravarair [k: -vanair; kh: -varaa] divyair mahadaanandakaarakai.h [kh: devair mahadaanada-] |
kathayasva prasaadena "sriinaatha varado yadi || KRU 2/21-27.

teachers). O mistress of Kula, it is worshipped by the troupes (saṁgha) of Siddhas and by the Yoginīs. This is the reality (artha) of my life, O dear one, it is my wealth (sarvasva). I am myself its creator and I am (its) worshipper. This, O goddess, mistress of Kula, is the ultimate Paścima Śrīkrama. Hard to acquire, it is worshipped with this along with the associated sequences (of mantras). It should be worshipped, O fair one, by Siddhas with unlimited energy (tejas)."[1]

The term 'krama' can also denote the sequence of the phases of manifestation. The term is commonly used in this sense in the Tantras of the Kālīkrama. Indeed, one can say that it is specific to them. Thus, although the term is virtually never understood or applied in this sense in the Kubjikā Tantras, this sequence, supplies the basic format for the liturgies of the Kālīkrama. This Krama may be four-fold (kramacatuṣka) as the Kramas of emanation (sṛṣṭikrama), persistence (sthitikrama), absorption (saṁhārakrama) and the inexplicable (anākhyakrama), which contains the previous three in oneness. Some schools add a fifth, called Illumination (bhāsākrama) in which the deity and its essential, pure conscious nature manifest. This homology with the cosmic process further sustains the sense of the term 'krama' as the sequence of actions in the course of a ritual and hence, by extension, the ritual itself.

The Kubjikā Tantras return repeatedly, one could say obsessively, to geographic parallels, subordinating to them associations with the sensory faculties. This is the reverse of the situation in the Kālīkrama where associations with the senses and the entire process - krama - of perception, of which they are the instruments, emerged progressively in the history of its development, to the foreground. The Kālīkrama, like the Kubjikā tradition and, indeed all the Kaula ones, represents ultimate reality as a sacred site.[2] However, whereas the Kubjikā tradition exploits this symbolic representation extensively, the Kālīkrama reaches beyond it and with it all other representations, including mantras and their deities, to understand the Krama purely as the sequence of the phases of perception. This

---

[1] ki.m na vetsi priyamukhe [kh g: priye-] bahirantaracaari.ni |
pare [g: para] paraapare divye mahaa"suunyanivaasini ||
yathaaha.m tva.m [g: nva.m] vi"saalaak.si anaadinidhanaav ubhau [g: -dhanovabhau] |
tatheda.m kramasantaana.m paaramparyakramaagatam ||
puujyate siddhasa"nghai"sca yoginiibhi.h kule"svari |
madiiyajiivitaartheda.m [k: -arthaida.m] sarvasva.m [kh: -sva; g: sarvastva.m] maamaka.m priye ||
aham evaasya sa.msra.s.taaha.m [g: -.taaaha.m] ca [k kh g: naasti] puujayitaa tathaa |
ida.m hi pa"scima.m devi "sriikrama.m kulanaayike ||
anena [g: aanata] kramasa.myogai.h puujyate ca [k kh g: da.m] sudurlabham |
puujaniiya.m yathaa bhadre siddhair amitatejasai.h [k kh: -mita.m] || Ibid. 2/29-33.
[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 579.

usage is prominent in the schools of the Kālīkrama of the Kashmiri masters and their followers who applied and developed the term in this sense to a high degree.

The Division into Āmnāyas

As Kula schools developed and grew in number and size, they aligned themselves into traditions called āmnāyas. By the time we reach Jayaratha's time (mid 12th century) several such *āmnāya*s had developed.[1] A classification of the major schools evolved on the analogy of that of the Śaivāgamas based on a directional model devised by the earlier Śaivasiddhānta into 'śrotas' or 'currents'[2] of which the Kaula equivalent are the *āmnāya*s.

The term āmnāya goes back to Vedic times. According to Monier-Williams the word means: 'sacred tradition, sacred texts handed down by repetition; that which is to be remembered or studied or learnt by heart; a Veda or the Vedas in aggregate; received doctrine; traditional usage, family or national customs; advice, instruction in past and present usage; a Tantra; a family, series of families.' In this case, the meaning is 'received doctrine', which corresponds to my translation 'tradition' or White's translation 'transmission', which I prefer to use to translate the word 'krama'. The Kubjikā tradition is the Divyāmnāya[3] the Divine Tradition and Kulālikāmnāya[4] of the goddess Kulālikā. Leading to the Śāmbhava state, it is the Śāmbhava Kula,[5] which is the Śāmbhavāmnāya.

Ultimately, the Kaula Tantras came to be divided into six *āmnāya*s symbolically set in the four quarters of space, nadir, and zenith. The first of these to emerge were the Uttarāmnāya and the Paścimāmnāya. It is hard to say which of these developed first. The myth in the KMT presents Kubjikā as a transformation of Kālikā and so, obviously, Kālī predates Kubjikā, however, it is not certain whether at that stage an independent Kālīkula had evolved. There is no reference to one in the KMT or in its expansions, nor do we find any in the KRU. However,

---

[1] Thus Jayaratha quotes the following from an unnamed source:

Those who are devoted to the Kula traditions but have set aside these substances, are said to be fettered souls (paśu) and one should not keep their company.

kulāmnāyeṣu ye bhaktā ebhir dravyair bahiṣkṛtāḥ |
paśavas te samuddiṣṭā na tais tu saha vartanam || Comm. on TĀ 29/99-100ab.

[2] See Dyczkowski 1988 and Sanderson 1989.

[3] KMT 25/195.

[4] etat kulālikāmnaye... KMT 17/59a. Concerning Kulālikā see above, p. 104 ff..

[5] The Transmental, which is void, ageless and free of defects is, by it very nature, present in the House of the Full Moon within the Śāmbhava Kula.

svarūpād unmanā śūnyā [k, gh, ṅ: śūcyā] nirjarā ca nirāmayā || candrapūrṇasya veśmasya saṁhatā śāmbhave [ṅ: sobhave] kule | YKh (1) 34/73cd-74ab.

there are several references to the Kālīkrama in the KuKh. These may not be references to an independent Kālīkrama, but it is very likely that they are. It appears, therefore, that the two traditions largely developed together and that the first to be formed was the Paścimāmnāya. As the first independent sectarian Kaula school centred on the worship of a goddess, it distinguishes itself as an āmnāya not just as a Kula or a Krama.

The meaning of both the names Paścimāmnāya and Uttarāmnāya are ambiguous. 'Uttarāmnāya' may mean both the 'higher tradition' and the 'tradition of the north'. Both were probably meant right from the inception of the use of this term. Although the name 'Paścimāmnāya' in the sense of the 'Western Tradition' never appears in the earliest Kubjikā sources, it became one of the standard names for the Kubjikā school in the later ones. Moreover, with the passage of time and the development of other '*āmnāya*s' it became a convenient way of locating it in the context of the other Kaula schools. Several stages of the development of the āmnāya system of classification are discernable in the Tantras of the Kubjikā corpus. Absent in other schools at this early stage, it appears that this system of classification of Kaula schools can be credited to the teachers of the Paścimāmnāya.

The word 'paścima' has several meanings. One is 'west' and so the Paścimāmnāya is the Western Tradition. Although this has become the main way of referring to the Kubjikā school by Western scholars and the Newars refer to it in this way also, this is a relatively late sense of the name. It is not known to the earliest sources, as the directional classification of Kaula schools into *āmnāya*s had not yet developed. Instead, we find the other possible meanings of the word paścima. These include 'last' or 'final', 'behind' or 'beyond', 'ultimate' and 'subsequent'. The Paścimāmnāya is the 'last' or 'final' tradition because it is revealed in a special way at the end of the Age of Strife. It is the final revelation. It is also 'behind' or 'beyond' Meru. Mukunda Rāja proposes, without any apparent textual reference, that there is a mountain in the quarter behind (paścimadigbhāga) Kailāsa called Kujā which is where the tradition originated.[1] However, the intended meaning is probably not a reference to a physical location. The Paścimāmnāya is the tradition that originates from 'behind' in the sense of 'beyond' Meru, that is, from the transcendental domain beyond the goddess's Triangle in the End of the Twelve. As the Transmental, it is the goddess who, one with Śambhu, is his very state of being (avasthā) - the Śāmbhava state (śāmbhavāvasthā) and hence his power - Śāmbhavīśakti. This is the origin and essential nature of the Paścimāmnāya - the Ultimate Tradition that contains within itself all things objective – the world – and subjective – the teachings, lineage and transmission.

[1] kailāśapaścime kubjācalas tatra paścimāmnāyatvaṁ veditavyam. SamP fol. 6a.

Finally, this tradition is 'subsequent' because it comes after and completes the 'previous' (pūrva) Kaula tradition founded by Matsyendranātha. When Himavat presented the goddess to Bhairava and she had declared her devotion to him, the narrative in the KMT continues:

> When the Great Lord heard this speech born of (the goddess's) joy, (everything) was quickly accomplished. (She was) shown how everything in the purview of the earlier (Kaula) tradition (pūrvasantānagocara) was mounted on the seat of the Command and burnt brilliantly with the quality of the bliss of the Command impelled by Śambhu, the endless one.
>
> Then Kuleśvarī, who is the Awakened State, said this: "O Kujeśvara, everything has been shown to me. What is (this) wonder? O Lord, I have come to know everything in the field of action and (its) cause. Tell me Kujeśvara, how has it been brought about in this way?
>
> O Supreme Lord, the (divine) quality of Lordship has originated from the Command. Tell me truly the essence of the purport of the Tantras concerning it. (I have) seen the entire universe by means of your Command. O Kujeśvara, if you are pleased (with me) tell me everything according to the teaching. The essence of (all good) qualities comes from the Command. O god, tell (me) about the (manner in which all good) qualities arise just as everything has been shown (me) by means of the Command.
>
> The essence of (all) that has occurred in the past, all that has been heard in the previous recitation (of the Tantra) (pūrvapāṭha) and the teaching (nirdeśa) of the previous age has been imparted by you, O Lord, by means of the Command. O god, the Great Awakening (mahodaya) of the qualities of the Command was revealed in the past, by falling from that there has been a (general) falling (from the Path), so tell (me) clearly about (that) reality. Mantra, Tantra, ritual (kriyā) and Yoga have been explained (but have) not been understood (nāvadhārita). Now, O Lord, tell (me) everything clearly about the great arising (mahodaya) of the qualities of the Command and its power from which all things come into being. How do the six modalities (prakāra) (of the Kula tradition) abide, namely, Ānanda, Āvali, Prabhu, Yogin, Atīta and Pāda?[1]

The goddess's last question concerns the six lineages established by Matsyendranātha. She implies that they continue to exist and are a part of the

---

[1] KMT 1/32-43.

Kubjikā tradition, which is a revived or 'subsequent' - paścima – form of the previous Kula tradition propagated by the Command. Bhairava refers to this earlier tradition with its six divisions generically as the transmission of the Siddhas (siddhakrama). He identifies this with Stillness (nirācāra). This is the supreme state of the vital breath when reaches the summit of existence where the Siddhas reside beyond the End of the Twelve.[1]

The Kularatnoddyota, probably the earliest independent Tantra redacted after the KMT,[2] resumes this theme. In the first chapter, Bhairava lists a large number of Tantras and outlines their various types and divisions. The goddess wishes to know which one amongst them is the best. Bhairava responds:

> O fair lady, what you are asking about, namely, the most excellent of them all is that special (realisation) that is accomplished by the Command (ājñāsiddha) in the Kula tradition (anvaya). It is the teaching (mata) that has come down (to earth and is based on) six authorities (ṣaṭpramāṇa). It is characterized by the (presence of a true) teacher (guru) and god (deva) and has come down through the transmission of the tradition (pāramparyakrama) by the sequence of teachers and disciples. And that also, O fair lady, consisting of six authorities, is two-fold, divided into prior (pūrva) and subsequent (paścima). O most excellent daughter of the mountains, this Kula has six modalities (prakāra), namely, Ānanda, Āvali, Prabhu and Yogin, in due order, (along with) Atīta, and the one called Pāda. Such is the Kula tradition (āmnāya) characterized by supreme non-duality (paramādvaita).
>
> The goddess rejoins: O god, that supreme Kula tradition (anvaya) that is accomplished by the Command and very hard to acquire has issued forth with two names, `prior' (pūrva) and `subsequent' (paścima).[3]

---

[1] Concerning Stillness, see intro. vol. 1, p. 100 ff..
[2] See intro. vol. 3, p. 363.
[3] yat [k kh: ya; g: yūt] tvaṁ [g: tva] pṛcchasi kalyāṇi sarveṣām uttamaṁ kila । tad viśeṣaṁ varārohe ājñāsiddhaṁ kulānvaye [g: kulātvaye] ॥ ṣaṭpramāṇamatottīrṇaṁ [kh: ṣanpramālamatottīrṇṇa] gurudevopalakṣaṇam [kh: -devodhanajvalaṁ] । pāramparyakramāyātaṁ [g: -yāntaṁ] guruśiṣyakrameṇa tu ॥ tac cāpi [g: tathāpi] ṣaṭpramāṇaṁ [kh: -nāṁ] tu dvidhābhinnaṁ varānane । pūrvapaścimabhedena śailarājasutottame [kh: -sutonume; g: -ma] ॥ ānandāvalibhedena prabhur yogī [k kh: pratur yogi] krameṇa [k kh: kameṇa] tu । atītaṁ [k kh g: -ta] pādasaṁjñā [kh: -damajñā] ca ṣaṭprakāram idaṁ kulam ॥ itthaṁbhūtaṁ [k kh: bhūta] kulāmnāyaṁ [k kh: -ya] paramādvaitalakṣaṇam । śrīdevyuvāca

These six 'modalities' or 'authorities' are the lineages established by Matsyendranātha. The `prior' Kula tradition is the one in which this six-fold division prevailed originally. The subsequent - paścima - Kula tradition of the Kubjikā Tantras took it over. Also incorporated into the other two major independent Kaula traditions, the Kālīkrama and Trikakula, their names are well known. Matsyendranātha and his consort had twelve disciples. Out of these twelve 'princes' (rājaputra), six were 'celibate' (ūrdhvaretas), that is, they did not have spiritual offspring.[1] The other six founded the six lineages (ovalli also called Kulas)[2] mentioned above. They are worshipped along with Matsyendranātha and his consort in the Wheel of the Siddhas[3] at the beginning of the Kaula ritual (pūjā) described by Abhinava in his Tantrāloka.[4]

---

yad etat paramaṁ deva ājñāsiddhaṁ kulānvayam ||
pūrvapaścimasaṁjñābhiḥ [kh: -saṁjñāti] sarpitedaṁ sudurlabham [kh: -bhāṁ] | KRU 1/30-35ab.

[1] Abhinava explains:

These six - Bhaṭṭa, Indra, Valkala, Ahīndra, Gajendra and Mahīdhara are celibate (ūrdhvaretas) and so do not possess authority, as authority (adhikāra) is the expansion of vitality (vīrya) along the path of Kula. TĀ 29/41-42ab.

Notice, by the way, that the 'vitality' (vīrya) to which Abhinava refers is effectively what the Kubjikā Tantras call the Command (ājñā). The Yuganāthas, their consorts and disciples and other details are listed in TĀ 29/29cd-41. See Gnoli 1999: 697 for a summarial chart.

[2] ānandāvalibodhiprabhupādāntātha yogiśabdāntā |
etā ovallyaḥ syur mudrāṣaṭkaṁ kramāt tv etat || TĀ 29/36.
Jayaratha glosses the term ovallī as 'current of knowledge' (ovallyaḥ jñānapravāhāḥ comm. TĀ 29/39).

[3] See Dyczkowski 1988: 81 for a diagram of this maṇḍala.

[4] TĀ 29/25-43. See Dyczkowski 1988: 80ff. The names of the six lineages mentioned here are those we generally find in the Kubjikā Tantras. For example, in the commentary to ṢSS 43/11 we read: prakārāntare prasūtāḥ ṣaḍ yathā ānandaḥ āvaliḥ prabhuḥ yogī atītaḥ pādaḥ iti. Also:
ānandaś cāvaliś caiva prabhur yogī tathaiva ca ||
atītaś caiva pādaś ca ṣaḍbhedaṁ tu kulaṁ smṛtam | ṢSS 18/49.

After briefly describing the six Wheels (cakra) in the subtle body, the KRU states that the six lineages should be worshipped within them in the same order:

ānandaś cāvaliś caiva prabhur yogī [k kh: -yogis; g: -yāgas] tathaiva ca |
atītaś caiva pādaś ca cakrasthānaiḥ [g: -sthāne] prapūjayet || KRU 10/40 The order is the same in the ŚM also (see ŚM 15/40cd-44, quoted below, in note p. 312).

The CMSS is an exception. There we find one or two variants in the names of the lineages and the order differs. These variants agree with the readings of the Kulakrīḍāvatāratantra from which Abhinava probably drew these details. The following verses in the CMSS are virtually the same as those quoted from there by Jayaratha. The variant readings from the Kulakrīḍāvatāra are noted in round brackets:

tripurottarasaṁketaṁ [k g gh: -ta] (tripurottare niketaṁ) siddhasthānaṁ (siddhi-) tu tam viduḥ |
amarasya varārohe varadevasya kāmadaḥ ||

Matsyendranātha[1] is worshipped as the teacher of this Age along with three other teachers and their consorts who brought the Kaula Tantra into the world in the previous three Ages. These four Lords of the Ages (yuganātha) are highly revered in the Kālīkrama[2] and came to be considered to be embodiments of citrasya aṭṭahāsaṁ [g: aṭuhāsa] vai [k: vair; kh gh: vaid; g: sthai] devikoṭaṁ alisya ca (ales tathā) |

---

dakṣiṇādi ca [all MSs: sa] vindhyasya kolāgiryāṁ tu goḍikaḥ (guḍikā kaulagiryatā) ||
CMSS 7/73-74; TĀv comm. 29/34-39.

Unfortunately, the Kulakrīḍāvatāra has been lost and so it is not possible to determine the tradition to which it belonged. However, it may well have been the Kālīkrama which, by Abhinavagupta's time (c. 975-1050 CE), had developed independent Tantras of its own. The names of Matsyendra's twelve disciples are listed in the same order in the Devīpañcaśataka which belongs to the Kālīkrama. This suggests that this was the standard form for this set in the Kālīkrama tradition and that the redactor of the CMSS drew from there. Moreover, the CMSS supplies extra details not found in other Kubjikā Tantras, such as the names of the disciples and their sacred seats, some of which are found in these other sources.

[1] Matsyendranātha has a variety of cognate names. See Dyczkowski 1988: 163 n23. Bagchi lists the following names found in the sources he edited: Macchagnapāda, Macchendrapāda, Matsyendrapāda, Mīnapāda, Mīnanātha, Macchendapāda, Matsyendra, and Macchindranāthapāda. He notes (1934: 6) that: 'the forms Macchendra, Macchenda and Macchindra are all colloquial variants of the name Matsyendra'. The names of the other three Yuganāthas are practically the same in all the sources whereas those of their consorts vary. A sample of these variants, drawn from the KuKrī, CMSS and DP are tabulated below. Those listed in the KRU are recorded in a table below on p. 318 note 1.

7. Table of the Yuganāthas and Consonants

Yuganātha	Khagendra	Kūrma	Meṣa	Matsyendra
Consort (KuKrī)	Vijjambā	Maṅgalā	Kāmamaṅgalā	Kuṅkunāmbā
Consort (CMSS)	Vijāhūtī	Maṅgalājyoti	Kāmamaṅgalā	Kuṅkunāmbā
Consort (DP)	Vijñāmbā	Maṅgalāmbā	Kāmamaṅgalā	Koṁkaṇāmbā
Disciples (KuKrī)	Viktaṣṭi, Vimala	Jaitra, Ajita	Vindhya, Ajita	Twelve Princes
Disciples (CMSS)	Vimala, Suśubha	Ajita, Vijita	Vicitra, Vidhīndunātha(	Twelve Princes
Disciples (KuKrī)	Illāīambā, Ananta-mekhalā	Kullāīambā, Ānanda-mekhalā	Kullāīambā, Ajaramekhalā	Consorts of the Twelve

* Khakulanātha then made more than 64 Kulas and united the lineages (CMSS 7/62).

[2] Jñānanetra, the founder of the Kashmiri Kālīkrama bows to the four Yuganāthas at the beginning of the Yonigahvaratantra he 'brought down to earth'. See catalogue of the ASB vol. 8, part 2 p. 107-108.

the basic states of consciousness. In the following passage, drawn from the Mahānayaprakāśa by Arṇasiṁha, they are projected into the cycle of persistence (sthiticakra) as they generally are in the Kālīkrama.[1] They are described as follows:

> The supreme arising of the Wheel of Emanation has (also) been explained from this, the aforementioned point of view, to be the supreme expansion (of consciousness) that is incomparable and void of (phenomenal) existence (niḥsvabhāva). Those rays of consciousness (saṁvidraśmi) that, luminous (dīpta), free of phenomenal signs (nirlakṣa) and limitations are the sole cause of the outpouring of the four levels of Speech, are the best of Siddhas, namely, Khagendra and the rest who, always free of the perception of duality, reside in the abode of the Void (of pure consciousness) (vyomadhāman) in the form of the perceiving subject. They are manifestations (udaya) of the perception (prathā) of the unfolding of the Fourth State along with (those) called waking, dreaming and deep sleep which, endowed with supreme unity (paramādvaya), always abide with the highest (energies of consciousness). [. . .]
>
> The indestructible Skyfarer (khaga) is the one whose body is the pulsation (of consciousness and vitality) which is the Supreme Self (paramahaṁsa). His lord (indra) who is this (absolute) free of contact (with the phenomenal world) (asparśarūpa) is said to be Khagendra.
>
> The pure Lord who consumes the destruction of the three abodes (of emanation, persistence and destruction) and, limitless, attains the supreme (state) in a moment is said to be Khagendra.
>
> He who is one (advaya), supreme and whose glorious power is the unfolding of the first (impulse of the) cosmogenic imagination (pratibhā) who, undivided, constantly withdraws into (himself) the womb (of emanation) and the diverse deployment of all things, that is, the perception of individual differences, as does the tortoise (kūrma) its limbs, is the one called Kūrmanātha who is free of the obscuration of thought constructs (kalpanāvaraṇa).
>
> He who, by virtue of the innate expansion (of his own consciousness) and freedom, assumes the nature of the senses, without (this thereby) diminishing the glorious power of the Inexplicable (anākhya) (Fourth State of consciousness) in the sphere the objects of sense and who, abandoning (all) exertion (for what is conventionally considered to be) right or wrong, moves (freely) at all times, is known as Meṣanātha who, endowed with the expansion (unmeṣa) (of consciousness), is ever intent (on realisation).

[1] This is also where they are worshipped in the form of the Kālīkrama described in chapter 15 of the KuKauM (15/113-116), which is drawn from the Kramasadbhāva.

He who is the master of all forms of perception, whether dual or non-dual, whose body is everywhere equally present and (yet) without abode, and is the destruction of egoism is said to be the venerable Matsyendranātha, the supreme doer (of all things).

He whose form is the (one) supreme and non-dual (reality) that is the supreme Void (parākāśa) free of alterations (nistaraṅga) and who makes all these modalities (of consciousness) one in his own essential nature through the process of reversal (pratyāvṛttikrameṇa), is famed as (the teacher) called Mīnanātha.[1]

The Siddhas shine everywhere, free of the duality of being and non-being. They are the arising of the undivided perception of the energy of the outpouring of their own expansion (of consciousness).[2]

---

[1] Mīnanātha, 'the Lord of the Fish', is another name for Matsyendranātha.

[2] anayoktadṛśā proktaḥ (proktāḥ) sṛṣṭicakrodayaḥ paraḥ |
niḥsvabhāvaniraupamyaparonmeṣasvarūpabhṛt || 182 ||
jāgratsvapnasuṣuptyākhyaturyonmeṣaprathodayāḥ |
ye sthitāḥ satataṁ proccaiḥ paramādvayadharmiṇaḥ || 183 ||
teṣāṁ pramātṛvapuṣā niṣṭhitā vyomadhāmagāḥ |
khagendrādyāḥ siddhavarāḥ (-rā) sadā bhedagrahojjhitāḥ || 184 ||
vākcatuṣṭayarūpasya samullāsaikahetavaḥ |
te saṁvidraśmayo dīptā nirlakṣā (nilakṣā) niravagrahāḥ || 185 || [. . .]
khagaḥ paramahaṁsātmaspandadeho 'vinaśvaraḥ |
tasyendro 'sparśarūpo 'yaṁ (tasyondrosparśa- -yaḥ) khagendraḥ sa nigadyate || 188 ||
dhāmatritayasaṁhāragrāsako vimaleśvaraḥ (vimaleśvare) | yo 'jasraṁ gacchati paraṁ (paraḥ) khagendraḥ so 'mitaḥ smṛtaḥ || 189 ||
prathamapratibhonmeṣamahimā yo 'dvayaḥ paraḥ |
jagadvicitraracanāṁ pṛthagbhedaprathātmikām || 190 ||
kūrmo 'ṅgānīva satataṁ garbhe dhatte 'vibhedataḥ |
sa eva kūrmanāthākhyaḥ kalpanāvaraṇojjhitaḥ || 191 ||
svonmeṣeṇa (svonmeṣaṇa) svatantratvād gṛhītvendriyarūpatām |
aluptānākhyamahimā viṣayagrāmavartmani || 192 ||
yo yuktāyuktaghaṭanāṁ saṁtyajya vicaret sadā |
sonmeṣaḥ (sameṣa) satatodyuktaḥ (satodyuktaḥ) sa meṣākhyaḥ prakīrtitaḥ || 193 ||
dvayādvayasvarūpāṇāṁ śāstā yaḥ sarvasaṁvidām |
samanirdhāmavapuṣo mama cchedanena (cchandena) tiṣṭhati || 194 ||
sa eva procyate śrīmānmatsyendraḥ (matsyeṁduḥ) kṛtakaḥ paraḥ |
nistaraṅgaparākāśaparamādvayavigrahaḥ || 195 ||
pratyāvṛttikrameṇemāḥ sāmarasyaṁ nijātmani |
vṛttīḥ saṁprāpayati yaḥ sa mīnākhyaḥ prakīrtitaḥ || 196 ||
prollāsanijavisphāraśaktyābhinnaprathodayāḥ |
vibhānti sadasadbhedamuktāḥ siddhāḥ samantataḥ || MP (2) 182-185, 188-197.

The goddess enquires about Matsyendranātha and the lineages founded by his disciples in the KMT, but nothing is said about them. They appear in the ŚM and ṢSS but, as in the Kālīkrama, they only serve an inner, symbolic function. In this case, they are projected into the Wheels (cakra) of the subtle body. In the ŚM this amounts to nothing more than aligning the six lineages with the six Wheels.[1] Collectively they are said to be the 'group of six of the sequence of withdrawal'. It is born from the energy of Kula, which is identified with the Command and is impelled by it. In other words, as one rises from the lowest Wheel upwards, one progressively traverses the states to which the six Kulas lead. The six Kula Siddhas reveal the 'current of the sixfold sequence'. God (deva) is the Lord of the Kula Siddhas. He reveals the unfailing Command and is the Lord (nātha) of the Six Kulas. The entire Kula tradition (anvaya) comes from that.[2]

A much more sophisticated projection into the Wheels is described in the ṢSS.[3] Here we find an exposition of a form of Sadāśiva with seven faces from which the Kaula schools originate in general and the Kubjikā tradition in particular. The ṢSS does not tell us directly, but it is possible that this form of Śiva is the consort of Mahantārikā.[4] Sadāśiva is the form Śiva assumes when he

---

[1] The correspondences are as follows:
1) The Foundation: this is the anus, Ānanda, 4.
2) The Self-supported: born of the Liṅga, Āvaṇi, 6.
3) The Filler of Jewels: located in the navel, Prabhu, 10.
4) The Wheel of Unstruck Sound: located in the heart, Yogin, 12.
5) The Wheel of Purity: the throat, Atīta, 16.
6) The Command: between the eyes, Pāda, 2. ŚM 15/40cd-44.

[2] ŚM 15/44.

[3] ṢSS 42/61-61 and 42/66ab. This addition to the contents of the Six Wheels is well planned in the ṢSS. KMT 11/34-37 outlines the nature of the six Wheels (there called padārtha), the number of their energies and locations. These lines correspond to ṢSS 18/46cd-48ab, 49cd-51ab. The two extra lines inserted in between list the six lineages and identifies them with the group (kula) 'divided into six' (ṣaḍbheda) of Six Wheels (ṢSS 18/48cd-49ab).

[4] Five of Mahantārikā's faces are those of Sadāśiva. Of the remaining two, one is the Face of the Unborn (ajavaktra). Also known as the Teacher's Mouth (guruvaktra), it is situated above the upper face. The other is below all the others. It is the Face of the Yoginī called Picu. Also called the Face of Power (śaktivaktra), its shape is that of a downward facing triangle. Their mantras and accompanying deities are described in a passage in the ṢSS that begins as follows:

> The Face of the Unborn, free of defects, is the penetration of the energy of the will. Conjoined with the energy of knowledge (the face of) Īśāna is located above. It is said that the eastern face of the goddess is Tatpuruṣa. Aghora is the face that abides permanently in the western quarter. O lord of the gods, one should worship the face of Vāma located in the northern quarter. The face called Sadyojāta should be worshipped in the western quarter. The face of Picu is that of Śakti and faces downwards.

icchāśaktisamāveśaṁ ajavaktraṁ [k: ajāvatraṁ; kh: ajāvakrūṁ] nirāmayaṁ ||

utters the scriptures. He has five faces corresponding to the five types of exoteric scripture. From this form, with an extra two faces - one below and the other above – issue forth the seven currents (srotas) of the esoteric Kaula scriptures. The five faces in the middle are those of the Five Siddhas who first propagated the Kaula teachings.[1] The lower face is called Picu.[2] It is the face of Śakti.[3] These faces are in the six Wheels within the deity's body where they utter the teachings transmitted through the six lineages founded by Matsyendranātha's disciples.

The seventh, uppermost face is that of Tūṣṇīnātha, the revealer of the Kubjikā Tantras. This is the Unborn Face, also called the Teacher's Face. It is the ultimate source of all things, the Śāmbhava state and so is said to be the First or Original Face (ādivaktra). Śakti below is Kula and the god above is Akula. In this way all the Kaula traditions, like the entire universe, is encapsulated in these two principles. Akula is the apophatic and acosmic Void of transcendence. Kula is the plenitude of Akula's energies immanent in manifestation. Both are Void. Akula is the Void of transcendence. Kula is the Void of the plenitude of immanence that escapes specification.

Thus, just as Kula and Akula, the Void of Plenitude and the Void of Transcendence encapsulate and complete the five faces of the Sadāśiva, the exoteric Śaiva scriptures are encompassed and contained in the Kaula doctrines of the six lineages.[4] Above them all is the power of the uppermost, Unborn Face of Tūṣṇīnātha (the Silent Lord). He is Kujeśa the lord of the Kubjikā tradition. He possesses the first and foremost energy (ādiśakti) from which the energies of the other faces proceed. The god – Akula – is supremely tranquil (paramanirvāṇa) while the goddess – Kula – is perpetually active (sadodita). The former is above,

---

jñānīśaktisamāyuktam īśānam ūrdhvataḥ sthitam ||
tatpuruṣaṁ bhaved vaktraṁ [k kh: vaktra] pūrvaṁ devyāḥ [k kh: devyā] prakīrtitam |
aghoraṁ tu bhaved vaktraṁ dakṣiṇāśāsthitaṁ sadā ||
vāmavaktraṁ [k kh: -cakraṁ] tu deveśi uttarāśāgataṁ yajet |
sadyovaktraṁ samākhyātaṁ paścimāśāgataṁ yajet ||
picuvaktraṁ bhaved etac chaktivaktram adhomukhaṁ |
ṢSS 28/162cd, 163cd, 165ab, 166cd, 168ab, 169cd, 171ab.

[1] See below, p. 401-402.
[2] See above, p. 271, note 1.
[3] Comm. on ṢSS 42/42ab.
[4] Ānanda is the face of Sadya and Āvali is the current of Vāma. Aghora is called Prabhu and the wise know that Yogin is Tatpuruṣa. Atīta is Īśāna, Śakti's (face) is called Pāda. The seventh is called Kula and is known as the Unborn face.

ānandaḥ sadyavaktraṁ tu vāmasrotaṁ [k kh: -śrotraṁ] tathāvaliḥ [k kh: -paliḥ] ||
prabhusaṁjñam [k kh: prabhuḥ -] aghoraṁ ca yogī [k kh: yogi] tatpuruṣaṁ viduḥ |
atītaś ca tathaiśānaṁ śāktaṁ pādābhidhānakam ||
saptamaṁ kulasaṁjñaṁ tu ajāvaktraṁ prakīrtitam | ṢSS 42/61cd-63ab.

the latter, his support, is below. Thus, the two Voids – that of the Root Lord and that of the Mother – face each other and unite:

> That is the supreme solace (paramanirvāṇa), (the universal) cause, the imperishable Śiva. Unborn (aja), it is omnipresent, subtle, omniscient and facing everywhere. It is the primordial god (ādideva) called `Endless' (ananta) whose nature is emptiness (vyomarūpa) and is without defect. Without beginning or end, it is tranquil, devoid of beginning, middle, or end.
>
> It is Akula, which is Tūṣṇiśanātha, Kujeśa who is imperishable and eternal. (He), the lord (nātha), is conjoined with the primordial power (ādiśakti) and, supreme, he is eternal and without defect. The supreme power has originated from that like a spark from a fire. Inconceivable and not an object of knowledge, her light is like that of ten million lightning flashes.
>
> Free of desire, she fulfils desires and, eternal (nityā), is like the rays of the full moon. Her form is dynamic (cañcalākārā) like a lightning flash. (She is) the primordial power (ādiśakti) who flames up from the mind (manojjvalā). She is the power of that god who is formless, imperishable, eternal, ancient, and conjoined with the power Kubjī. She is conceived to be in the face of the venerable Tūṣṇīśanātha. O goddess, this, the eternally active (sadodita) First Face (ādivaktra) (of lord Śiva) has been explained to you.[1]

Tūśnīnātha, the Root Lord (mūlanātha), that is, the First Siddha of the Kubjikā tradition, and his power, generate the six lineages headed by his six spiritual sons. Thus understood to be Matsyendranātha's deeper, metaphysical identity, Tūṣṇīśanātha replaces him as the founder of Kaulism. He is `unborn'

---

[1] yat tat paramanirvāṇaṁ kāraṇaṁ śivam avyayam |
ajaṁ sarvagataṁ sūkṣmaṁ sarvajñaṁ sarvatomukham ||
ādidevam anantākhyaṁ vyomarūpam anāmayam |
anādinidhanaṁ śāntam ādimadhyāntavarjitam ||
akulaṁ tūṣṇināthaṁ tu kujeśaṁ cākṣayāvyayam |
ādiśaktiyutaṁ nāthaṁ paraṁ nityam anāmayam ||
tadudbhūtā parāśaktir visphuliṅgam ivānalāt [k kh: -lān] |
acintyā aprameyā ca taḍitkoṭisamaprabhā ||
akāmā kāmadā nityā pūrṇendukiraṇopamā |
vidyudvac cañcalākārā ādiśaktir manojjvalā [k: -lāḥ] ||
sā śaktis tasya devasya nairūpasyāvyayasya ca |
śāśvatasya purāṇasya kubjīśaktiyutasya ca ||
śrīmattūṣṇīśasya [k kh: śrīmadvitūṣṇināthasya] vaktratve [k kh: -dve] parikalpitā |
etat te kathitaṁ devi ādivaktraṁ sadoditam || ṢSS 42/9-15.

because, as the first teacher (ādinātha), he is not generated from any other teacher as his disciples are from him. According to the ṢSS:

> The face called `Unborn' (aja) is on the plane of the End of the Twelve. It is the supreme, eternally active Brahman who is born from the abode of all the energies. It is Nirvāṇa, the qualitiless, tranquil and faultless Bliss of Stillness (nirānanda). Know that that is Śiva, the all-pervasive Lord who is the ground (āśraya) of the energy of his own will. Inexplicable and beyond the three (levels of) Speech, he (can only be) praised indirectly (upacāreṇa).
>
> The face called the Lower World (pātāla) is on the path below. It is all bliss, secret, omniscient, and facing everywhere. It generates the six-fold path (of the universe).[1] It is all things, the place where death arises (as well as) the seed and womb (yoni) of the universe. It is the abode of the mother, the secret energy. That current is the lord Akula who, in order to emanate the universe, conceives his own imperishable Self to be Śakti.
>
> (The wise) know that power is in this way in the bottom face and Śiva is in the upper current. O lady of sound vows, Kula and Akula has thus been explained to you.[2]

Apart from the aforementioned identifications, the ṢSS equates the gods of the first four faces with the four Yuganāthas. The remaining three faces correspond to Sarvānanda, Śaktyānanda and Jñānadīpti who is the highest face.[3]

---

[1] See intro. vol. 1, p. 460.
[2] ajākhyaṁ nāma yad vaktraṁ dvādaśāntapade sthitam |
paraṁ nityoditaṁ brahma sarvaśaktyālayodbhavam ||
nirvāṇaṁ nirguṇaṁ śāntaṁ nirānandam anāmayam |
tac chivaṁ tu vijānīyāt svecchāśaktyāśrayaṁ vibhum ||
akathyaṁ vāktrayātītam upacāreṇa kīrtitam |
pātālākhyaṁ tu yad vaktraṁ adhomārgāvilambitam [k kh: - mārga-] ||
sarvānandamayaṁ guhyaṁ sarvajñaṁ sarvatomukham |
ṣaḍvidhādhvānajanakaṁ [k kh: -naṁ] sarvaṁ mṛtyūdayāspadam [k kh: mṛtyu-] ||
jagadbījaṁ [k: jayad-] jagadyonir guhyaśaktyāmbikāśrayam |
tac chrotam [k kh: chrotram] akuleśānaṁ svātmanātmānam avyayam ||
jagatsṛṣṭinimittyarthaṁ śaktitve [k: śaktitvaṁ] parikalptam |
evaṁ śaktim [k kh: śaktir-] adhovaktre ūrdhvasrote [k kh: - śrotre] śivaṁ viduḥ ||
kulākulaṁ bhaved [k kh: bhave] hy evaṁ kathitaṁ tava suvrate | ṢSS 42/45-51ab.
[3] viśuddhaṁ paścimaṁ jñeyam uttaraṁ tad anāhatam |
dakṣiṇaṁ tu maṇir nāma svādhiṣṭhānaṁ tu pūrvagam ||
kūrmarūpam adhovaktram ājñā caiśānavigrahā [k kh: -haṁ] |
saptamaṁ ca ajāvaktraṁ śrīnāthaṁ tat paraṁ padam ||
sadyavaktraṁ khagendras tu kūrmaṁ vāmeśvaraṁ viduḥ |

Jñānadīpti is the consort of Niṣkriyānanda who is the First Siddha of the Kālīkula. The implication thus appears to be that the First Siddha of the Śrīkula has taken over his position also.[1] At any rate, as the first energy she is the Transmental who assumes seven forms by the development of her energies (kalāvṛddhi). These are distributed in the seven faces in the six Wheels and one beyond. They are equated with the six Yoginīs and aspects of the Transmental, that is, Rudra's energy, located in the Wheels and associated with the Siddhas and forms of Sadāśiva as well as the six groups of mantras that constitute the Krama of Twenty-Eight distributed in the six directions. The six energies fuse into one in the first energy, just as all the currents, faces and the rest merge in the First Face, which is that of the First Teacher. In its undifferentiated aspect, the one energy is the Transmental. In its differentiated aspect, it is the energy of the will, which is the first of the seven energies:

> The energy called `will' is the first and her form is consciousness (bodhavigrahā). (She is) the seventeenth (lunar) energy, eternal (nityā), (her) nature Sound, (she is) supreme and imperishable. She is the foundation of emanation, persistence, and withdrawal and is eternally active (sadoditā) in the End of the Twelve. She who is the Fierce One (caṇḍikā) of the Sky of Consciousness is within the primordial god (ādideva) and resides on the first plane which is the Teacher's Face called the Unborn (aja) that faces everywhere.[2]

---

aghoraṁ meṣapādākhyaṁ macchendraḥ [k kh: -ndra] puruṣaḥ smṛtaḥ ||
sarvānandas tathaiśānaṁ [k kh: -nanda-] śaktyānandam adhomukham | saptamaṁ jñānadīptyarthe nādānte saṁvyavasthitam || ṢSS 42/65-68.

[1] After Abhinava has listed the Yuganāthas, their consorts and disciples who are worshipped in the Siddhacakra, he says that 'there are other teachers and their consorts mentioned in the Kālīkula' (TĀ 29/43ab) Jayaratha explains that: 'because they are disembodied (amūrta) they should only be recollected and not worshipped in a special way (as) the previous teachers have not mentioned them' (ibid. commentary). Jayaratha quotes the Devīpañcaśataka (3/15cd-17ab) as an example of a Kālīkrama Tantra in which they are mentioned. They are: 1) Niṣkriyānanda and Jñānadipti; 2) Vidyānanda and Raktā; 3) Śaktyānanda and Mahānandā; 4) Śivānanda and Samayā (preamble to TĀ 29/43-46ab). Just before listing the names of the teachers of the Kālīkrama, the DP lists those of the four Yuganāthas and the twelve disciples of Matsyendranātha. It seems that these teachers are commonly linked together in the Kalīkula. According to the CMSS also, Niṣkriyānanda was the first teacher to reveal the Mahākālīkrama and his disciple was Vidyānanda (see Dyczkowski 1989: 72-73).

[2] icchākhyā nāma yā śaktiḥ prathamā bodhavigrahā [k: voda-] ||
kalā saptādaśī nityā nādarupā parāvyayā |
sṛṣṭisthitilayādhārā dvādaśānte sadoditā ||
guruvaktrapade cādye ajākhye [k: ajāgheṁ] sarvatomukhe |
cidvyomacaṇḍikāntasthe ādidevasya saṁsthitā ||ṢSS 42/23cd-25.

8. Table of Kaula Lineages in the Body

Directions	Ages	Yuganāthas	Sacred Seats	Faces	Siddhas	Praṇavas And their energies	Kaula lineages	Yoginīs	Wheels	Paths of Manifesta-tion	Aspect of Rudraśakti	Six Groups of the Krama
Uppermost	---	Jñānadīpti		Unborn/ Teacher Akula	Tūṣṇīśa	Avyakta	Kula	Pervasive	End of the Twelve	Six Paths in the middle of the five coverings (āvaraṇa)	Will (Caṇḍikā)	Four
Upper	Yama	Sarvānanda	All sacred sites	Īśāna	Sadākhya	Sadāśiva Unmanā	Atīta	Hākinī	Command (ājñā)	Tattva	Knowledge (Aparā)	Five of Knowledge
East	Kali	Matsyendra[1]	Kāma-rūpa	Tatpuruṣa	Śaṅkara	Īśvara Niṣkalā	Yogin	Śākinī	Pure (viśuddhi)	Kalā	Action (Parāparā)	Six
South	Dvāpara	Meṣa	Jālandhara	Aghora	Piṅgala	Rudra Samanā	Prabhu	Kākinī	Unstruck Sound	Varṇa	Raudrī	Four of the Self
North	Tretā	Kūrma	Pūrṇagiri	Vāma	Ananta	Viṣṇu Vyāpinī	Āvali	Lākinī	City of Gems	Mantra	Vāmā	Five
West	Kṛta	Khagendra	Udyānaka	Sadyojāta	Śrī-kaṇṭha	Brahmā Śakti	Ānanda	Rākinī	Self-supported	Pāda	Jyeṣṭhā	Four
Below	Bāla	Śaktyānanda		Picu /śakti/ Paṭala Kula			Pāda	Ḍākinī	Foundation	Bhuvana	Ambikā

[1] Note Matsyendranātha's association with the eastern direction. This is the direction associated with his Kaula tradition (āmnāya).

Matsyendranātha and the Pūrvāmnāya

The Yuganāthas – the Lords of the Ages – are appropriated in other ways also by the Kubjikā Tantras. They may be understood to have propagated the earlier Kaula tradition from the sacred seats where the Kubjikā Tantras were taught later by the Siddhas of those seats.[1] Or they may be identified directly with the four Siddhas of the sacred seats. From that perspective the propagators of the Kubjikā Tantras in the four Ages also propagated the whole of Kaulism.[2] The Yuganāthas are regularly said to belong to the Pūrvāmnāya in the Kubjikā sources.[3] According to the KuKh Śrīkaṇṭha, the founder of the Paścimāmnāya,

---

[1] KuKh 43/29-30. According to the KRU (11/29-30) the teachers and their consorts who brought the Kulāgama into the world in the four Ages are related to the four sacred seats in each of which grows a sacred tree. The text also lists the first disciples of these teachers who then go on to have many more. These equivalences can be tabulated as follows:

9. Table of the Yuganāthas of the Four Sacred Seats

Age	Sacred Seat	Tree	Yuganātha and Consort	First Disciples
Kṛta	Kāmarūpa	Ciñciṇī	Khagendra and Vijayā	Vimalastha and Samudrastha
Treta	Pūrṇagiri	Bilva	Kūrmanātha and Maṅgalāvvā	Acintyavidhānanda (son)
Dvāpara	Jālandhara	Tāḍa	Meṣeśa and Maṅgalā	Acintyavidhuka (son)
Kali	Odyāṇa	Kadamba	Macchendra and Koṅkaṇāvvā	Ramaṇīdeva (son)

The four seats are not normally associated with these teachers. No seats are mentioned in relation to the Yuganāthas in the TĀ (29/29cd-33ab). The names of the Yuganāthas are the same and those of their consorts are almost so. The TĀ reads Vijjambā for Vijayā. Instead of Maṅgalā, the TĀ reads Kāmamaṅgalā. Koṁkaṇāvvā reads Kuṅkunāmbā in the edition of the TĀ, but this may be a mistake for Koṅkaṇāmbā. The spiritual sons are quite different (see chart in Gnoli 1999: 697).

[2] ṢSS 42/16cd-19ab. The correspondences can be tabulated as follows.

10. Table of the Yuganāthas and the Siddhas of the Sacred Seats

Yuga	Yuganātha	Mūlanātha	Sacred Seat
Kṛta	Khagendra	Mitranātha	Kāmarūpa
Dvāpara	Kūrma	Caryānātha	Jālandhara
Tretā	Meṣa	Ṣaṣṭhanātha	Pūrṇagiri
Kali	Matsyendra	Oḍḍīśa	Oḍyāna

[3] Dyczkowski 1988: 68 ff..

initiated them into it.[1] According to the KRU the founder of the Pūrvāmnāya is Mitranātha.[2] Mitranātha is normally considered to be the first teacher of the Paścimāmnāya in this, the Kali Age. However, according to the KRU, the first teacher of the Paścimāmnāya is Vṛkṣanātha who is distinguished from Mitranātha, whereas other sources identify the two. Anyway, it is quite clear that in these ways the Pūrvāmnāya is absorbed by the Paścimāmnāya into itself and attributes the credit of founding the former to its own founder figures.

The Legend of Matsyendranātha

Numerous legends grew up around the important figure of Matsyendranātha to which the Kubjikā Tantras also contribute. Several of them were collected and analysed by Bagchi in the introduction to his edition of the Kaulajñānanirṇaya. He refers to legends from Bengal, Nepal, the Punjab and elsewhere in all of which Matsyendra figures as the teacher of Gorakhnātha. Gorakhnātha probably lived in the 13th century and so post-dates Matsyendranātha who appears in the Sanskrit sources by not less than four centuries. Relating them was a way of linking the Nātha cult founded by Gorakhanātha with the earlier Kaula traditions with which it has much in common. The legend of Matsyendranātha and how he brought the Kaula Tantras into the world narrated in the Kaulajñānanirṇaya is typical of the earlier Kaula traditions that preceded Gorakhanātha.

Bagchi has collected and discussed a number of legends concerning Matsyendranātha and how he came upon the Kulāgama. After the 14th century or so, the legends link him with the important figure of Gorakṣanātha. A group of Nine Nāthas is venerated in the Kubjikā Tantras redacted after the KMT. However, they have little in common with the group of Nine Nāthas revered by the followers of Gorakhnātha as the founders of the Nātha tradition (sampradāya). One could perhaps postulate that the grouping of nine Siddhas found in the Kubjikā Tantras inspired a similar grouping in the minds of those who developed and transmitted the legends and traditions of the Nāthas. That this is possible seems to be strengthened by the substantial presence of Gorakhnāthis in Mahārāṣṭra and Karṇāṭaka where the Kubjikā cult largely developed. The ending -nātha of the names of these teachers and the figure of Ādinātha common to both Nāthasaṁpradāya and the Kubjikā Tantras along with all the early Kaula Tantras

---

[1] KuKh 43/24-26ab.

[2] O fair lady, this, the origin of the Pūrvāmnāya, has been explained and how the lord Mitranātha will do it in the future.

eṣotpattiḥ [g: -tparttiḥ] samākhyātā pūrvāmnāyasya sundari |
bhaviṣye [g: -ṣya] mitranātheśaḥ kariṣyati yathā priye || KRU 11/34.

and traditions, is one of a number of striking common features that associate the Nāthas to the early Śaiva and Kaula schools. Even so, as yet no direct link has been clearly established in the literature or any other source of that period. None of the references identified so far in the written sources, whether in Sanskrit or the vernaculars, indicate that the Nātha tradition founded by Gorakhnātha existed prior to the 13th or 14th century. Moreover, amongst the Gorakhnāthis no Tantric transmission takes place in the strict sense of the word, that is, of a Tantric corpus venerated as authoritative to which access is allowed by initiation. The Gorakhnāthis do, of course, take initiation and they possess a corpus of sacred literature both in Sanskrit and in the vernaculars. However, although much of the contents of their texts and oral teaching is of the type found in Tantras, the texts are not Tantras. However, there are clear indications that Gorakhnāthis studied the Tantras. Thus, for example, the Gorakṣaśataka, attributed to Gorakhnātha himself, contains several verses drawn from them.[1] The Siddhasiddhānta-saṁgraha and other such texts contain several references drawn from them. One gets the impression that the Goraknāthī tradition is a fresh start that echoes many cultural, religious, symbolic and, above all, yogic elements found in the Tantras. These Nāthas, however, did not generally focus on any one Tantric school or corpus.[2]

Bagchi quite rightly assumes that the versions of the Matsyendra legend in which Gorakhnātha does not figure are the oldest. Moreover, it may well be true that the version of the legend found in the KJN is, as Bagchi (1934: 21) suggests, the 'archetype' of the others. We have already noted that the KJN prefigures several important doctrines of the Kubjikā Tantras.[3] Similarly, the legend of Matsyendranātha found there coincides in many respects with the one found in the Kubjikā corpus. Indeed, the passage in the KJN is worth translating and comparing with our sources. The god is speaking to the goddess:

> When I went along with you to the Island of the Moon, (our son) Kārttikeya came in the form of a young boy. In a deluded state, (he) stole the (Kula) śāstra. O goddess, you told me that Kārttikeya stole it. O fair lady, I went to the sea and looked (everywhere) with the vision of knowledge. O beloved, having caught a fish (I) cut open (its) belly. Taking (the śāstra) that was in the belly of the fish, (I) took it home. Once wrapped in the cloth of knowledge, my (śāstra) was > concealed and protected. Then, O mistress of the gods, (Kārttikeya) was angry and that same (god, assuming the form of a) mouse, made a hole and from the tunnel (he bored), (the śāstra) was thrown into the sea.

[1] See, for example, KuKh 40/31cd-32ab (note 23) concerning the 10 nāḍīs. These verses are found in the Gorakṣaśataka (verse 33).
[2] But see intro. vol. 3, p. 325? ff. concerning the relationship between the ŚM and the Gorakṣasaṁhitā.
[3] See intro. vol. 1, p. 252 ff. with respect to the Devīliṅga.

>
> It was eaten by a great fish of vast size. I became angry and made a net of energy (śaktijāla). The fish was (caught in the net) and dragged out of the seven seas. O beloved, that great fish did not come (out of the net). His strength was as great as mine. Generated by the radiant energy of knowledge, he was hard to overcome even by the gods. (I) then abandoned (my) Brahmin (caste-status) and (assumed) the nature of a fisherman. O goddess, I am that fisherman and I made (for myself) the condition of a fisherman. I then dragged the fish caught in the net of energy (out of the water) and having cut open the belly of the fish, took the Kulāgama.
>
> O greatly meritorious one! Although a Brahmin, I assumed the condition of a fisherman. The Brahmin who killed a fish is known as Matsyaghna (the Killer of the Fish). As (I) created the condition of (that) fisherman, (this) leader of Brahmins is a fisherman.[1]

The main points of this story can be summarized as follows. The Kulāgama was revealed by a fisherman in Candradvīpa ('the Island of the Moon'). The fisherman was Matsyendranātha who was originally a Brahmin who renounced his Brahminical status to secure this secret knowledge. He then went to Kāmarūpa where he revealed it for the first time. The Kulāgama was stolen from Candradvīpa by Kārttikeya in the form of a mouse[2] who threw it into the sea where it was devoured by a big fish. Matsyendranātha caught the fish and recovered it from its belly, which is why he is also called Macchagna 'the Killer of the Fish'. It is hard to say how close to the 'original' form of the myth this version is. As his name suggests, Matsyendra – the Lord of the Fish – was in all probability represented as a fisherman in the very first legends. Abhinavagupta portrays him casting his net in the ocean of transmigration.[3] However, he is silent about his original brahminical status. Similarly, in the version of the myth narrated in the KRU Matsyendranātha is not said to be a Brahmin. This is surprising as all the founders of schools and lineages mentioned in the Kubjikā sources are Brahmin ascetics.

However, the author of the KJN - whether, as the colophons claim, he was Matsyendranātha himself or not - is anxious to stress that the founder of Kaulism

---

[1] KJN 14/27-37.
[2] The word for 'mouse' in Sanskrit is mūṣka lit. 'one who steals'.
[3] See reference above, p. 271, note 4.

was a Brahmin. He was not a real fisherman, we are told, but Bhairava himself who, when in human form is, first of all, a Brahmin and then, if he chooses to be, of any caste, however low. It sounds at first that the original Matsyendra was indeed a low-caste fisherman and that his authority to recover - or, some might prefer, compose - śāstra is derived from his being originally a Brahmin. Again, the fact that the śāstra is inside a fish compels the person who wishes to recover it, to kill it. In other words, the Brahmin Matsyendra had to fall from his high caste status to that of a low caste fisherman in order to gain access to the Kulāgama. The message is that this is the 'fall' every Brahmin will have to undergo. However, this degradation in caste terms is an upgrade in terms of Kaula practice.

A variant of this story is told in chapter eleven of the KRU. The narrative, set in the future tense, has a prophetic tone. It supplies `information concerning the coming down to earth of the future Pūrvāmnāya'. Reversing the actual order, the goddess wants to know, somewhat paradoxically, from the god about 'the previous tradition' (pūrvānvya) that will originate from the 'subsequent' (paścima) tradition[1] of the Śrīkula. In the previous chapter we find a description of the main Kramamaṇḍala in which the goddess is worshipped. This is followed by a brief description of the Gurumaṇḍala in which the teachers are worshipped. It concludes with the statement:

> O mistress of Kula, this is by its very nature the last (paścima) Kula tradition (āmnāya). [. . .] The previous tradition (pūrvāmnāya) will possess the mark (aṁka) of the venerable Mīna(nātha) and the transmission (krama) of the sacred seats and that lineage (santāna). It will possess the names of the Yoginīs and Siddhas and, along with the trees and creepers, O mother of Kula, there will also be an independent lineage (pṛthaksantānabheda).[2]

The story that follows in the next chapter is essentially a brief version of the one found in the Kaulajñānanirṇaya. It reads:

> When the (goddess) born in the family of the Himalaya will assume a body, Skanda (Ṣaṇmukha) will be her son. Then Mitreśa

---

[1] kathaṁ pūrvānvayaṁ nātha paścimāt [g: -māc] śrīkulānvayāt [g: chrīkulā-] |
utpatsyate dvitīyaṁ [g: -ye] tu ādinātha tathā vada || KRU 11/35.

[2] paścimedaṁ svabhāvena kulāmnāyaṁ kuleśvari | [. . .]
mīnapādāṅkasaṁyuktaṁ pūrvāmnāyaṁ bhaviṣyati |
pīṭhakramasamāyuktaṁ tatsantānasamanvitam ||
yoginīsiddhasaṁjñābhir vṛkṣavallībhir anvitam |
pṛthak santānabhedaṁ [kh: bhedāna-] ca bhaviṣyati kulāmbike || KRU 10/152ab,154-155.

who is accompanied by his consort, will tell his consort the teaching of knowledge (jñānanirṇaya)[1] in a solitary place (but) will not tell (it) to (his) son. O fair lady, out of anger, his son Skanda will throw that book into the sea and a fish will swallow it.[2]

O beloved, there will be a great Siddha in (the fish's) belly born of the vitality (vīrya) of the Command and he will, O Mahāmāyā, practice the (teaching of) that scripture by himself. That scripture was thrown into the sea by (the goddess's) son by means of the Yoga of Knowledge. O beloved, having quickly caught that fish with the net of Śakti, the lord of Siddhas will study (the scripture) in the belly of that fish. Practicing (the teachings) of the book in the middle of that (fish), he (will become) powerful (dīptimat). He will see (reality) once seen that unique (apūrva) and excellent teaching.

(The goddess now addresses Ādinātha saying): "I have seen this unique (apūrva) miracle (āścarya) which inspires wonder (vismaya). Thus, you have attained another birth from the belly of the fish. This, your excellent spiritual emanation (vibhava), is graced with the name Matsyendra and this will be your great fame on the surface of the earth. Beloved, this is your lineage (santāna) which goes by the name Pūrvāmnāya. It is like the reflection of the Western path. Adorned with the six divisions Ānanda, Āvali (and the rest), it gives success."[3]

---

[1] svaśakter jñānanirṇayam this is virtually a paraphrase of `kaulajñānanirṇayam', the Tantra Matsendranātha is said to have overheard.

[2] yadā tuhinaśailendravaṁśajā [k: -śailendrātvāṁśajād; kh: -śailendratvāṁśajā; g: tuhinaśailendratvāṁśajād] dehasambhavam [k kh g: -vaḥ] |
labhiṣyati tadā tasyāḥ ṣaṇmukho [k kh: ṣanmukho] bhavitaḥ [k kh g: -tā] sutaḥ ||
tadā saśaktimitreśaḥ [k: śā-; kh: sāmitreṇa] svaśakter [k kh: -śaktair-; g: svaśakte-] jñānanirṇayam |
kathayiṣyati ekānte na putrasya vadiṣyati [kh: cadi-] ||
tad eva pustakaṁ bhadre krodhāt tasya suto 'rṇave [kh: -ṇḍave] |
kṣepayiṣyati [kh: -kṣati] ṣaḍvaktro [k: ṣaṭvaktro; kh: ṣaṭcakro; g: ṣaṭvaktre] tad [g: staṅ] giliṣyati [kh: giti-] mīnakaḥ || KRU 11/36-38.

[3] tasyodare [kh: -dale; g: tasyopare] mahāsiddha ājñāvīryodbhavaḥ [kh: -bhava] priye |
bhaviṣyati mahāmāye tacchāstrābhyāsakṛt [kh: tacchrāstā-; g: tacchāstrotpāsakul] svayam ||
jñānayogena tacchāstraṁ kṣiptaṁ putreṇa sāgare |
śaktijālena [kh: -jātvena; g: śaktijājñena] tan matsyaṁ ākṛṣya [g: mākṛṣya] tarasā priye ||
udare [k kh: -raṁ] tasya matsyasya pāṭhayiṣyati siddharāṭ |
tanmadhye pustakābhyāsaṁ kurvantam eti [kh: kurvātamati] dīptimān ||
vīkṣayiṣyati [k kh: -kṣati] taṁ dṛṣṭvā apūrvaṁ [kh: apūrvāṁ] codyam uttamam [kh: cādya-] |
apūrvedaṁ tvayā [k, kh, g: mayā] dṛṣṭaṁ āścaryaṁ [g: māścarya] vismayāvaham ||
tasmāt tvaṁ matsya – udarāj janmāntaram avāptavān |
matsyendranāmnā [k kh: macchendranāmā; g: matsyandranāmā] bhavitas [k kh: -to; g: -tā] tavāyaṁ [k: tavedaṁ; kh: taṭhedaṁ; g: tāvedaṁ] vibhavottamaḥ [k kh g: -mam] ||

The legend has been reduced to its bare bones and a number of details have been omitted. Even so, Skanda's role in the transmission of the scripture appears to be an essential constant. Thus, all the CMSS has to say is that Matsyendranātha managed to get the essence of this knowledge because it was thrown into the sea by Skanda.[1] We notice in this reference that Matsyendra (here called Mīnapāda) is identified with Piṅgalanātha the same Siddha who, according to the ṢSS, spreads the teachings in Koṅkaṇa. Apart from the absence of any reference to Matsyendra as a Brahmin, there is no mention of the mouse or the Island of the Moon. A brief reference to the myth in YKh (1) is similarly silent on these points. According to YKh (1), the original form of the Kulāgama is the remnant (ucchiṣṭa) of the sacrificial food consumed in a Kaula sacrifice. Such remnants may be disposed of by throwing them into a body of water or eaten.[2] Despite their impurity, the remains of sacrificial food are extraordinarily powerful[3] and all the more so in this case as they are the sacrificial pap (caru) of a Kaula sacrifice:

> The remnant (ucchiṣṭa) of that (Kaula) gathering (cakra) was thrown into the ocean of milk and all that Kaulika sacrificial pap (caru) was eaten by a fish. There arose the one there called Mīna. He tavaiṣā [kh: taṭhaiṣā] vipulā kīrtir bhaviṣyati mahītale |

---

tvatsantānam idaṁ [k: tvaṁ-] vatsa pūrvāmnāyeti saṁjñayā ||
paścimasya tu mārgasya pratibimbam iva sthitam |
ānandāvalibhedaiś ca śobhitaṁ siddhidāyakam || Ibid. 11/39-45.

[1] kalau [gh: karau] yuge mahāghore caturthe mīnapādakam || *piṅgalaṁ nāma taṁ nāthaṁ [sarve: nātha] tatrāgatam [*all MSs: tamāgata-]
anāmayam |
*gṛhītaṁ jñānasarvasvaṁ [g: -sarvvaśvaṁ; gh: sarvasva] mokṣahetu carācare [*all MSs: -raṁ] ||
*taṁ jñānaṁ kārttikeyena [*all MSs: kartti-] sāgare nyasitaṁ tathā | CMSS 7/63cd-65ab.

[2] Malamoud (1998: 10) quotes the ŚB (2/6/1/48) as saying:

> And here some people throw the remains of the oblation (into the fire). However, one should not do this, because these are the leftovers of what has been offered. And in order to avoid making an offering into the fire of the leftovers of an oblation, one should rather carry them off to throw into the water, or else one should eat them.

[3] The reader is referred to Malamoud's essay on this subject with reference to the Vedic rites (Malamoud 1998: 6-22). He concludes by quoting the Atharvavedasaṁhitā (11/7/1,3,25) which says:

> On remains are founded name and form, on remains is founded the world. Indra, Agni, and everything are concentrated [. . .] Being and non-being, both are remains, death vigour, Prajāpati [. . .] Inbreath and outbreath, sight, hearing, the fact that things are imperishable, and the fact that they perish: from remains are born al the gods in heaven, who live in the sky.

is Macchanda in the Age of Strife and is famous in the preceding tradition (pūrvāmnāya). Maṅgalā is in that House.[1]

The Island of the Moon is an important place for the KJN. The colophons declare that this is where it was 'brought down to earth', thus implicitly claiming that the KJN is the scripture (kulāgama) Matsyendra retrieved there from the fish. Bagchi identifies it with an island in the gangetic delta[2] thus claiming that the KJN was written in Bengal. The absence of any reference to the Island of the Moon in the versions of the myth in the Kubjikā sources is significant. The reason for this is, no doubt, because the Kubjikā tradition has appropriated this place for itself. It is where, as we have seen, the goddess's Liṅga is located[3] and where she transmitted the Command to Bhairava. We shall see that the Kubjikā Tantras claim that it was their scriptures that were revealed there by Matsyendranātha who went on to propagate them in Kāmarūpa.[4]

To conclude I should say that I agree with David White (2003: 23) that the KJN belongs to the 9th or 10th century and that the KJN contains doctrines that can be understood to be precursors of some of the central ones we find in the KMT and the rest of the Kubjikā corpus.[5] However, it is not likely that Matsyendra and his school were coeval with the aforementioned Tantras to which White refers as 'core Kaula texts' (2003: 23). I would prefer to call them 'proto-core Kaula texts' as Tantras that consider themselves to be purely Kaula (rather than Bhairava Tantras) emerge later. These include the KJN and other works attributed to Matsyendranātha, such as the Kulapañcaśikā and Guhyasiddhi (both unpublished), the Kashmiri Kālīkrama and the Kubjikā Tantras.

Kula in relation to Kaula

The Kubjikā Tantras frequently refer to their tradition as a combination of Kula and Kaula. The Kālīkrama sources also insist that their tradition is a Kulakaula. Perhaps this distinguishes them from the Kula traditions embedded in

---

[1] tasya cakrasya ucchiṣṭaṁ [kh, gh: uchiṣṭa] prakṣiptaṁ [kh: ?] kṣīrasāgare [kh: ?] |
matsyena [k, kh, gh: matsena] bhakṣitaṁ [k, kh, gh: cakṣitaṁ] tac ca samastaṁ carukaulikam ||
mīnākhyaṁ tatra sambhūtaṁ macchandaṁ [k, kh, gh: maṁchaṁdaṁ] sa kalau yuge [k, kh, gh: yugo] |
pūrvāmnāye prasiddho 'sau [k, kh, gh: prasiddhāsau] maṅgalā [gh: magalā] nāma [k, kh, gh: kāma] tadgṛhe || YKh (1) 5/61-62.

[2] Bagchi (1934: 32) writes: 'in the present state of our knowledge it may be located in the deltic region of Bengal and may be identified with the island of Sundwip'.

[3] See intro. vol. 1, p. 16 ff. where we note the development of the importance of this place in the Kubjikā Tantras.

[4] See intro. vol. 3, p. 64.

[5] See intro. vol. 1, p. 252 ff..

the Bhairava Tantras. Independent Kaula schools are the Kaula product of a Kula. The school is thus a Kulakaula. From the perspective of the teachings of the Kubjikā Tantras their Kulakaula is, as one would expect, superior to the others. It is not one amongst many, it encompasses the entire Śāmbhava Kaula teachings[1] and so only deity possesses it.[2]

However, although the later Kubjikā Tantras commonly refer to their tradition as 'Kulakaula', which is the culmination of all others, this expression appears only once in the KMT.[3] We have seen that the ŚM dedicates a long passage to an exposition of Kula and Kaula as aspects of the one reality.[4] However, the expression Kulakaula with specific reference to the Kubjikā tradition appears only in chapter three. There the twelve spiritual sons of the goddess in Pūrṇagiri are said to 'bring the Kulakaula down (into the world)'. Those in Kāmarūpa are 'revealers of the Kulakaula'.[5] In the ṢSS there is only one independent reference not found in the KMT. It is in chapter forty-one, which has no equivalent in the KMT and may well have been added in the late phase of its redaction.[6]

Generally, the expressions Kula and Kaula refer in the KMT to the tradition as a whole and are largely synonymous. One would expect Kaula[7] to be the name of the Kubjikā tradition if it is, as the texts insist, a development of the earlier Kula tradition. We do find this is the case in one or two instances in the KMT. For example, we are told that: 'This is a Kaula tradition, it is Śākta, derived from the Plane of Śakti.'[8] In other words, Kaula is the Śākta derivative of the

---

[1] anyathā kulakaule 'smin śāmbhave na spṛśanti te || MBT YKh 4/75ab.

[2] KuKh 2/1ab.

[3] Abandoning a fallen and destroyed Kula one should take refuge in the Kulakaula.
bhraṣṭanaṣṭakulaṁ tyajya [ṢSS: tyaktvā] kulakaulaṁ samāśrayet ||
KMT 10/151ab (= ṢSS 17/180ab).

[4] See above, p. 286 ff..

[5] dvādaśaite mahātejāḥ kulakaulāvatārakāḥ [kh: -prakāśakāḥ] | ŚM 3/65ab.
ete putrā [k: putrāḥ] mahāvīryāḥ kulakaulaprakāśakāḥ [kh: -śakā] || ŚM 3/86cd.

There are two other references but these may be taken to be generic rather than particular denotations of this tradition. Referring to the Mothers, the ŚM (4/130cd) says that they are 'present in Kula and Kaula and, divine, awaken to the Path of Kula' (kulakaulagatā divyāḥ kulamārgaprabodhakāḥ ||). In chapter eight the adept who practices in a certain way is said to become one who 'reveals Kula and Kaula' (hartā kartā bhaved [g: bhave] devi [g: devī] kulakaula-prakāśakaḥ [g: -kolaprakāśaka] || Ibid. 8/24cd).

[6] The wise man should make liquid offerings with the substances mentioned in the Kulakaula transmission (krama).

kulakaulakramārthoktadravyaiḥ saṁtarpayet sudhīḥ [k: sudhāḥ; kh: śudhāḥ] || ṢSS 41/66cd.

[7] According to common Sanskrit usage 'kaula' is the adjectival derivative of the substantive 'kula', which may be treated as a substantive in its own right.

[8] KMT 6/35cd: saṁpradāyaṁ idaṁ kaulaṁ śāktaṁ śaktipadānugam

Śaiva Kula in which Bhairava is the supreme deity. However, the KMT does not normally make such distinctions. Kubjikā is the goddess of Kula, rather than Kaula or indeed Kulakaula.[1] The absence of this association in the earlier Kubjikā sources may perhaps explain the goddess's declaration to the god that: 'this, the final (teaching) (paścimedam), has (already) been created and it is free of the earlier portion (of the teaching) (pūrvabhāga).'[2]

According to the KuKh, Kaula consists of the four transmissions of the Kubjikā tradition. Kula is the earlier tradition and Kaula the later one, which incorporates the earlier one and so is also called Kulakaula. The two traditions are repeatedly associated with one another throughout the Kubjikā corpus. It is a way of saying that the latter emerges from the former and contains it. Matsyendra's tradition is Kaula in relation to the earlier ones in the Bhairava Tantras that are Kula. Thus, it is called Kaula.

According to the CMSS, the sprout of the Tree of the tradition, that is, its first emergence out of the seed of the earlier Tantras, is Kaula whereas the root is Kula. It is quite clear that the CMSS, at least, understood it this way as the reference to its six divisions, i.e. the six lineages founded by Matsyendra's disciples implies. The CMSS explains:

> Kaula is the supreme lineage of the Siddhas. It bestows the fruit of worldly benefits and liberation and is merged in the Kulākulamata.[3] [. . .] This tradition is Śiva's vitality (vīrya) which has not emerged (into the realms of limitation). It is endowed with Śiva and Śakti and is the essence (sandoha) of the bliss of both that has expanded out through the lineage. O goddess, it is the root Kula tradition that has emerged as Kula and Kaula. Kaula is of six kinds and, accompanied (patita) by six seed-syllables (kūṭa), it is stable. It has emerged with six names and by its extension (prasara) is the Western Tradition (paścimānvaya).[4]

---

[1] For example, in one of many passages we read:

She is the goddess Samayā who is established on the Path of Kula. Present in the differentiated (sakala) (state) she acts (sācārā) and purifies everything. Explained in the Kaula language, she is accomplished (siddhā) in the Kula tradition (kulānvaya). KMT 7/43cd-44.

[2] paścimedaṁ kṛtaṁ deva pūrvabhāgavivarjitam || KMT 2/20cd.

[3] siddhānvayaparaṁ [g: siddhāndhaya-] kaulaṁ [gh: kaula] bhuktimuktiphalapradam [gh: -prade] |
*kulākulamate [*all MSs: -mataṁ] līnaṁ . . . . || CMSS 1/24abc.

[4] śivavīryam aniṣkrāntaṁ śivaśaktisamanvitam |
ubhayānandasandohaṁ pāramparyavijṛmbhitam [g: -vikūmbhitaṁ] ||
kulamūlānvayaṁ [gh: -lāmvayaṁ] devi kulakaulaṁ [k kh: kulā-; g: tulā-; gh: kulāṁ-] vinirgatam |

Sanderson explains that Matsyendranātha brought about a reform in the clan-structured tradition of the cremation grounds found in the earlier Bhairavatantras of the Vidyāpīṭha such as the Brahmayāmala, Jayadrathayāmala and the Trika Tantras such as the Tantrasadbhāva and the Siddhayogeśvarīmata.[1] White explains that this reform: 'shifted the emphasis of early Tantrism away from the 'terrible' practices and clan-based (Kula) system featured in the scriptures of the Vidyāpīṭha, towards the erotico-mystical practices that became the bedrock of later Kaulism.'[2] It also coincides with the emergence of Kaula Tantrism with its own independent scriptures. In this perspective, the transition is marked by distinguishing between Kula and Kaula. The former is a modality of practice and doctrine that refers to itself as Kula in the early Bhairava Tantras. The latter is the form in which it appears independent of them. Padoux notes concerning this distinction:

One generally uses the two terms Kula and Kaula without distinction: Kulācāra [Kula practice] can be said just as well as Kaulācāra. One should, however, note that certain texts appear to distinguish between Kula and Kaula as two different practices.[3] Sanderson sees in the Kula a tradition of renouncer ascetics close to the old Kāpālika substratum, a tendency of which Kaula is a 'reformed' form, made for the benefit of the man in the world. . . . [he] thinks that the difference between them is not one of doctrine but practice. Indeed, the distinction arises in the TĀ in relation to the dīkṣā [initiation]. Certain indications lead on to think that Kula is more ritualistic, closer to the Kāpālikas; Kaula, which makes the rites more esoteric and interiorizes them, is more 'idealist': these two ways of seeing the opposition Kula/Kaula are not irreconcilable.[4]

The doctrines of the Kubjikā Tantras represent a stage in this process of 'domestication' that characterizes the development of single cults and all of them as a whole in relation to one another. Concretely, in the context of the Kubjikā Tantras, the prior Kula school founded by Matsyendranātha and transmitted by his

---

kaulaṁ tu ṣaḍvidhaṁ [k kh gh: ṣaṭvidhaṁ; g: paṭvidhaṁ] bhūtvā [sarve: satvā] ṣaṭkūṭapatitaṁ [gh: ṣaṭkuṭa-] dhruvam ||
ṣaṭsaṁjñā [gh: ubhayājñā] ca samudbhūtaṁ prasarāt [gh: -rat] paścimānvayam | CMSS 2/4-6ab.

[1] Sanderson 1985: 214 fn. 110.

[2] White 1996: 136.

[3] Thus Abhinava quotes the Niśācāra in the PTv (p. 92) and in the TĀ (13/300-301) as saying:

(The teaching is revealed) in the (Tantras of the) Siddhānta, (those of) the Left (vāmaka) and then in the (Tantras of the) right, in the Mata, Kula, Kaula and then (finally) in the Trika, which is the heart (of all the scriptures).

siddhānte vāmake tataḥ dakṣe mate kule kaule ṣaḍardhe hṛdaye tataḥ.

[4] Padoux 1994: 35-36 n.39.

six disciples is the earlier substratum from which the subsequent (paścima) Kubjikā Kula has developed. Just as the world of manifestation is called Kaula as it is a derivative transformation of the original unmanifest union of Śiva and Śakti termed, in this context Kula, similarly, the Kaula school develops from Kula.[1] Moreover, just as, despite the transformation of the Absolute Conjunctio into its manifestations, the latter is pervaded by the former and so is both Kula and Kaula, such is also the case with the doctrines of the Kubjikā Tantras.

The Currents of Scripture, Doctrine (darśana) and Kaula Traditions (āmnāya)

Darśana

The word darśana literally means 'the act of seeing or viewing'. It also means 'a philosophical system', which in India, according to the nature of the system, may be more or less theological, logical, systematic, theistic, atheist, related to a religious tradition or independent. The word appears in the titles of compendiums of such systems. Well known examples are the Ṣaḍdarśanasamuccaya (A Compendium of the Six Philosophical Systems) by Haribhadra Sūri, the Ṣaḍdarśanasaṁgraha of Rajaśekhara and the Sarvadarśanasaṁgraha by Mādhava.[2] Darśana in the modern North Indian vernaculars denotes the act of going to visit a deity in a temple or a saintly person just as one would say in English 'going to see someone'. Thus, darśana, which literally means `vision, insight, and seeing', in this sense is `a meeting with the being who is seen and who sees'. Moreover, it has the added connotation in that context of a spiritual 'vision'. For example, the god in the KRU describes the second of a number of forms of the goddess, saying to her that it is the 'direct vision (pratyakṣadarśana) of you that is free of the attributes of form and the like and devoid of meditation and limitations'.[3] When the god implores the goddess in the Liṅga to appear, he asks her to give him her darśana.[4] 'Seeing' is a powerful action through which magical, yogic and liberating power can be transferred from a deity or liberated being. Darśana is the experience of the recipient who is blessed by this liberating look. Thus, we are told with reference to Ciñciṇīnātha that whomever he gazes at reaches the highest level of being. Conversely, 'sinners gain yogic power

---

[1] saṁpradāyam idaṁ kaulaṁ śambhuśaktitadānugam | ŚM 8/164cd.

[2] The reader is referred to Halbfass (1988: 263 ff.) who discusses the history of the usage of this word in this sense.

[3] rūpādiguṇanirmuktaṁ upādhidhyānavarjitam ||
dvitīyedaṁ varārohe tava pratyakṣadarśanam | KRU 8/25cd-26ab.

[4] KuKh 5/26.

(siddhi) by seeing him (darśana).'[1] Similarly, a purifying and empowering climax takes place in the course of initiation when the aspirant is finally permitted to see the maṇḍala. This 'seeing of the maṇḍala' - maṇḍaladarśana - permits him to enter the maṇḍala, as it were, make offerings to its inhabitants and finally become one with the deity in the centre. In such cases darśana also refers to what is seen, not just the act. Thus, a dream (svapna) is called svapnadarśana, which means both what is seen in the dream and dreaming. Similarly, the word in common usage also means 'appearance', as in the expression ghoradarśana- in relation to a deity with a fearsome - ghora - appearance.[2]

The word 'darśana' can have a broad generic sense. The term Śaivadarśana[3] refers to all the schools of Āgamic Śaivism collectively, which Kashmiri Śaivites refer to as 'Pārameśvaradarśana'.[4] It is also regularly used to mean 'Tantric or Kaula teaching'. Each one of the Kaula traditions (āmnāya) is a 'darśana'. It denotes both the entire Tantric system and, as the rites and Yogic practices taught in any Tantric system imply a view of reality, it also implicitly denotes its theoretical, metaphysical basis. This is not an abstract insight into an absolute principle - a transcendent vision that perceives the essence of things – it is a perception of the orders and patterns of existing things related one to another in the cosmic maṇḍala. It is more akin, therefore, to the `seeing' that takes place when going to a temple, or, more appropriately in the Tantric context, the `seeing' of the maṇḍala that takes at the climax of initiation. The outer forms are represented as divine and supernatural beings. In this `vision' of reality, these beings are arranged in groups, each member of which has a place in the overall order of things. They gather around the supreme being either alone or with his or her mate. The abstract `inner' and `secret' metaphysical essences are not explained separately as one might expound a philosophy. They are explained in the context of Yogic practice. This does not just involve meditation. Meditation may also take place in relation to the `outer' forms when they are visualized as a preliminary to worship. One should worship the deity of a particular place after having visualized it there. A commentary explains that: 'Or else, having visualized the deity of place, one should worship it within one's own body. Alternatively, all the groups of deities mentioned in the MBT should be worshipped in their respective places or in images of the deities or in a Yantra.'[5] The inner essences of things are commonly explained when imparting teachings concerning the movement, [1] KuKh 30/199-200, cf. ibid. 33/31cd ff. and 42/76.

---

[2] KRU 6/320.
[3] See KuKh 30/166ab.
[4] 'In Śiva's teachings' means in the doctrine of the Supreme Lord consisting of the five currents (of scripture). śaivaśāsane iti pañcasrotorūpe pārameśvaradarśane ity arthaḥ | Comm. TĀ 1/36.
[5] svadehe vā tatsthānadevatāṁ dhyātvā pūjayet | athavā tattatsthāneṣu devapratimāsu yantre vā taduktaśeṣadevagaṇāś ca maṁthānoktā ḥ sarve pūjyāḥ | SamP fl 13b.

activity, and transformations of the vital breath. Kubjikā is vitally involved with these processes. In a sense, she is these processes. However, she is not alone. They can only take place through and in view of a conjunctio. This is also the cause and purpose of the process of emanation. It begins and ends in the conjunctio. The process is this union just as it is the goddess because she contains both polarities.

Again, the word 'darśana' denotes what could be called, broadly speaking, a religion or religious tradition and so entails the same problems of definition that we encounter when trying to define what religion is in India in general. In this sense, darśana denotes both a larger generic identity - what we call 'religion' - as well as a specific one - what might be called a 'cult' with relation to a specific deity, or a 'sect'. Thus the religions, Buddhism and Jainism, are referred to as darśanas,[1] just as schools of Śaivism are.[2] The same term may also be used to denote a particular phase of a religion as in the expression 'vaidikadarśana'.[3] Accordingly, the Buddhists, Jains, Vedikas (bhaṭṭa), Sauras, Vaiṣṇavas and Śaivas constitute a group of six 'darśanas' (ṣaḍidarśana), recalling the standard set of six philosophical systems (ṣaḍdarśana).[4] In this context, it is quite clear that the religion of the Buddhists and the rest is meant, rather than the philosophy or the theology of the corresponding theistic religious traditions. Although not all schools of Indian philosophy consider liberation to be their goal, the sense of the co-extensive nature of religion and philosophy implied in the use of the same term for both is based in part, at least, on what is felt to be their common goal, namely, liberation and the means to it, that is, knowledge which includes knowledge of ritual, mantras, the motion of the vital breath and the like. This perspective persists in later Tantric texts. In the Śaktisaṁgamatantra, for example, which post-dates the MBT by three or four centuries, the term is applied to the Tantric version of five great cults that make up the classic smārta pañcāyātana lit. Five Abodes, namely, Śaiva, Vaiṣṇava, Gāṇapatya, Saura and Śākta.[5] Tantras are assigned to each of the five and they are projected into the directions in space as they are in the original

---

[1] See KuKh 68/50.
[2] Ibid. 30/166ab.
[3] In the sense of vedaśāstra. See KuKh 68/131, cf. ibid. the expression bauddhaśāstra.
[4] YKh (1) 4/175. Similarly we read in the JY:

> The systems (darśana) of the (Śaiva) Siddhānta, Vaiṣṇavas, Bauddhas, those preached by the Vedas and the Smārta ones should be carefully avoided because they are considered to be those of the fettered.

siddhāntā vaiṣṇavā bauddhā vedoktāḥ smārtadarśanāḥ |
te [tat] prayatnena vai varjyā yasmāt te paśavaḥ smṛtāḥ || JY 4/20/244 quoted (with variants) in the comm. on TĀ 29/73cd-75ab.
[5] Śaktisaṁgamatantra 4/7/48-58.

smārta version but which is also meant, no doubt, to recall the arrangement of the Kaula *āmnāya*s.[1] Elsewhere in the same text, we again find the standard set of six termed ṣaḍdarśana. In this case, they are the aforementioned five to which Buddhism is added[2] all, presumably, in their Tantric modalities. The paradigmatic function of this group of six is apparent in the conception of three such sets for Tārā, Tripurā and Chinnamastā, the three main goddesses of the ŚST.[3]

In this context we note that Kaulism as a whole is said to be a darśana even when it appears, as it did in the first phase of its development, embedded in the Śaiva Tantras as an option or a modality (kulaprakriyā or kulācāra) contrasted with the Tantric (tantraprakriyā or tantrācāra). In the Netratantra, for example, we find a chapter dedicated to 'an explanation of the Kula tradition' (kulāmnāyanidarśana).[4] Kṣemarāja explains that this is the kulāmnāyadarśana the essential feature of which, as presented in this brief chapter of the NT, is the worship of the eight Mothers.[5] The Kula Tantric systems are generally termed *darśana*s. Jayaratha, in his commentary on the NṢA of the Śrīvidyā tradition refers to its teachings in this way at least twice.[6]

Clearly, in this case, darśana does not denote a philosophical system although it may appear to have this sense when used by Kashimi Śaiva authors to denote the schools of Kashmiri Śaivism that, with respect to the Tantras that are their more or less proximate sources, are more sophisticated and 'philosophical'. This is clearly the case, for example, with the Spanda school that does not have an equivalent in the Tantras. Thus, Rājānaka Rāma, who comments on the Spandakārikā, uses the term 'darśana' to distinguish the teachings of the Spanda school from those of other darśanas.[7] Bhagavadutpala also refers to the Spanda teachings as an independent (svatantra) 'darśana'.[8] However, in the case of the other schools of Kashmiri Śaivism, apart from the Pratyabhijñā, which is constructed in a manner typical of Indian philosophical systems, the application of the same term implies added resonances. Thus, Maheśvarānanda claims that the Kashmiri Krama school (also called Kālīkrama, Mahārthakrama and Mahānaya), is more excellent than all the currents (srotas) of the teachings of the Śaiva scriptures because it is the [1] See Dyczkowski 1989: 66 ff. and below this note.

---

[2] ŚST 1/5/6, 2/4/3 and 2/5/53–54.
[3] See Dvivedi's introduction to the fourth part of the ŚST p. 26-27.
[4] NT 12/1ab.
[5] Kṣemarāja adds that a characteristic and essential feature of whatever rituals are performed in this modality is that they begin with the worship of the four mythical founders of Kaulism in the four cosmic Ages.
[6] VM pp. 48 and 125; Padoux 1994: 28.
[7] SpKāvi, p. 39.
[8] SpPra, p. 6.

essence of all the darśanas.[1] Similarly, Śitikaṇṭha in his Mahānāyaprakāśa (Light on the Great Teaching) refers to the Krama system as one of several kuladarśanas.[2] The term 'Kramadarśana' is not uncommon.[3] Jayaratha refers to it for matters that are not philosophical. For example, when he discusses why Abhinavagupta maintains that there are only twelve Kālīs in a certain maṇḍala he begins by saying: 'surely it is everywhere (the case) in the Kramadarśana that in the centre of the goddesses, the venerable Sṛṣti (Kalī) and the rest, there is (one) called the venerable goddess Sukālī and so there are thirteen goddesses in the Wheel of the Nameless'. The lengthy quotations Jayaratha makes concerning this issue are drawn from the Devīpañcaśataka and Kramasadbhāva. It is in such sources, that are religious rather than philosophical, that Kramadarśana is expounded in its most basic and original form. Thus, it would be a mistake to think that darśana is a designation of the final form the Krama assumed in the hands of the highly learned and sophisticated masters of Kashmir. Conversely, it would be equally wrong to think that these Śaivites did not see anything more in these systems than is presented in their Tantric sources.

Trika is referred to as a darśana several times in Kashmiri Śaiva sources. In his commentary on the eighth aphorism of the Pratyabhijñāhṛdaya, for example, Kṣemarāja says that Trikadarśana is the highest form of monism (paramādvaya). Similarly, although Maheśvarānanda, distinguishes between the Trika and Krama as two darśanas, he maintains that because of their common monistic idealism, there is not much difference between them.[4] In this case, by Trika is meant a philosophical system. Jayaratha goes so far as to identify the teachers of the Trikadarśana as those of the Pratyabhijñā, which is in form and content a typical Indian philosophical system.[5]

The teachings of the spiritual family of the goddess Kubjikā are a darśana.[6] The Ṭīkā warns that those who belong to a different school - darśana - should not be present when certain a rite is performed. This privilege is reserved only for those who belong to a good school - sudarśana.[7] Moreover, one should exert oneself to listen to the teaching of one's own school (svadarśanamata). The

---

[1] yac coktaṁ śrikramakelau vāmadakṣiṇatantrādiṣva py etanmayam eva sarvaṁ nirvahatīti mantavyam iti | evaṁ ca sarvadarśanasāratvād amuṣya śrīmahārthakramasya sarvasroto 'tiśāyī ko 'pi ślāghyatvotkarṣaṁ dhvanyate | MM p. 171-172.

[2] MP (1) p. 111. See also Dyczkowski 1989: 75-77.

[3] See, for example, the introductory remarks of the commentary to TĀ 3/256cd -257ab and also the comm. on TĀ 4/173ab where this expression appears twice.

[4] anena śrī mahārthatrikadarśanayor anyonyaṁ nātyantabhedapratheti vyākhyātam MM p. 92.

[5] śrīdevīpañcaśatike' pi asya śrīsomānandabhaṭṭapādebhyaḥ prabhṛtibhis trikadarśanavad eva guruvaḥ comm. TĀ 4/172.

[6] kukārānvayadarśanam - KuKh 42/51b.

[7] Ṭ (MS K) fl. 1b.

bestower of liberation and worldly enjoyment, one should always observe it and ponder on it.[1]

Siṁhadarśana

Kaula Tantric systems are, in general, termed *darśana*s, but more specifically they are Lion Darśanas (siṁhadarśana). Kubjikā is regularly said to be mounted on a lion (siṁha). In this respect, Kubjikā's model is not so much the Yoginī as the Great Goddess Durgā mounted on a lion. Her earliest plastic representations as Mahiṣāsuramardinī date to the first centuries of the common era. In these, the lion is absent, but she is already associated with lions in the earliest recovered inscription attesting to her cult as the Great Mother, which is dated 491CE.[2] It says that the goddess rides on a chariot yoked to lions. Rudra-Śiva is also depicted in this way in the Mahābhārata,[3] but this is an uncommon representation and not a very early one. Umā-Pārvatī is also represented seated on a lion, but not before Mahiṣāsuramardinī appears with her characteristic mount for the first time in reliefs from Mathura belonging to the Kuṣāna period. This is also how the Sumerian goddess Innana who later became the war goddess of the Assyrians, Isthar, is represented. Scholars have argued that remnants of the cult of Innana / Isthar are apparent in that of the goddess Nana. She commonly appears seated on a lion on Kuṣāna coins of the first centuries of the common era.[4] The Kuṣāṇa empire extended to the north and west far beyond the confines of the Indian subcontinent. In the Kuṣāṇa period, as in the preceding Achamenid, Alexandrian, Scythian and Parthian, India was in close contact with countries beyond its western border. Thus, despite the many intervening centuries, it is not impossible that this aspect of her iconography should have been influenced by this

---

[1] KuKh 37/61cd-62.

[2] This inscription was found in the village of Choṭi Sādri not far from Udaipur in Rajasthan. It was discovered in the sanctum of Bhavarmātā and is dated vikrama era 547 = 491 CE (EI XXX, pp. 120ff.). Its purpose was to record that a certain Mahārāja Gauri, desirous of the grace of the Goddess, built a shrine for her. It opens with the invocation to the goddess called 'devī', who is described as 'one who bears a sharp spear that tears asunder the demon – asura (probably Mahiṣāsura) or demons, whose rapidity is impetuous owing to her being seated in a chariot to which is yoked a fierce lion (or lions), whose anger is concentrated in her frowning glances, who, out of her devotedness, assumes half of the body of moon-crested Hara, and who, out of kindness to the devotees, sustains the world like a mother full of tenderness arising from her affection for her own children.' See Tiwari 1985: 76.

[3] MBh 3/221/1-2.

[4] Agrawal notes that the name Nanā occurs in ṚV 9/112/3 in the sense of 'mother'. The name is also listed in the Nighaṇṭu but these are the only places the name occurs in Vedic sources. Although there may be some connection with the goddess Innana, it is very unlikely that she is related to the Nanā on the Kuṣāna coins. See Agrawal: 1938: 49 and Tiwari1985: 90-91.

important Middle Eastern goddess who was assiduously worshipped for at least 1,500 years.

Whatever be the case, Kubjikā is closely linked to the lion. Indeed, it is the 'tradition or lineage of the lion' (siṁhakānvaya, siṁhāmnāya).[1] Analogous expressions such as the Teaching of the Lion (siṁhaśāsana)[2] and siṁhadarśana refer implicitly to an important practice of this school whereby spiritual energy is transmitted to deities and other supernatural and living beings as well as objects. This is the Lion's Gaze.[3] The Lion's Gaze is the empowering and gracious gaze that energizes the maṇḍala with its divine beings and mantras. Hymns to the Great Goddess invariably refer to the ferocity of her gaze, angered by the demon she engages in battle. In other contexts, the same fierce look strikes terror in the heart of even the most awesome demons. Kubjikā's powerful gaze does indeed overawe Bhairava. However, he is not a demon and is powerful enough to be fit to receive the goddess's grace that is transmitted through it. For him the goddess's gaze is not that of the exorcist but of one who empowers and graces. When the god has been empowered by the goddess's Lion's gaze he too possesses it as do the accomplished masters of the tradition who have received it from their teachers in the same way. Thus, the Tantra says:

> Having spoken thus to the Accomplished One (Siddha), her form the unseen Kula, she, the mistress of the god of the gods, (looked at him) from within the Wheel (of the maṇḍala) with the gaze of a lion. Then the Accomplished One, greatly satisfied, spontaneously assumed the form of a lion.[4]

Powerful and fierce, the goddess of a Kula and her Bhairava are likened to lions. The god is a male lion and the goddess a female one.[5] They are the mighty monarchs of the Kula and sit, as do kings and queens on a throne, a siṁhāsana - lit. 'lion's seat'. Bhairava is both the consort and the lion-throne (siṁhāsana) of the goddess. 'Siṁhāsana' is the name of the pedestal upon which the Liṅga rests. The

---

[1] O Lord of the Earth, unless the Transmission of the Lion Kula arises and the spiritual sons (putraka) enter the Western House, how can they possess the object of pleasure (bhogya) (or achieve) Kaula realisation (pratyaya)? How is liberation possible for those poor people who do not have the Kulakrama? O god, in the Age of Strife they will become the destroyers and enemies of initiation and will not possess the Path of Meru in the Western Teaching of the Lion (siṁhadarśana). KuKh 30/160-162.

[2] KuKh 39/44.

[3] See note to 13/108cd-109.

[4] KuKh 5/70-71ab.

[5] KuKh 3/14.

Lion is the Great Place (mahāsthāna), the support (adhiṣṭhāna) of all things.[1] Seated on it, the goddess is the Great Lioness. The Great Place is said to be in the 'abode of the sea', that is, the Triangle known as the Ocean of the Yoni. It is the Point (bindu) in the centre, which is the throne upon which the deity sits. The deity is the lion generated in that form by the empowering gaze of the partner. Bhairava becomes a lion by the goddess's gaze and the goddess becomes a lioness by the god's gaze.[2] The lion in the centre is the goddess Bhairavī. As the Point, she combines with the letters to form seed-syllable mantras and plays with the Bhairavas who are the letters in the triangle that surround her.[3] Like the king who draws power from his throne, the goddess on her throne possesses special power that is manifest in her ferocity and immunity to harm:

> Seated on a lion throne, she is the Great Lioness and her gaze is wrathful. Her face (contorted) in loud laughter, she dances in the Circle of Fire.[4]

The goddess's powerful, sanctifying gaze is the Lion's Gaze (siṁhāvalokana)[5] through which Bhairava receives the initiation that transforms him into a lion,[6] that is, a governing deity of the Kula. Accordingly, the tradition they propagate is the Teaching of the Lion (siṁhadarśana). The liturgy, the transmission and the contents of the maṇḍala are the Krama of the Lion, the core of which are the three categories (trivarga) of the Krama, that is, the Transmissions of the Aged, the Youth and the Child. The goddess 'arises' within it, energizing and sanctifying it with her presence.[7]

> This is the Western Path, it is the Śrīkrama, which is the most excellent; it is the abode of all the Siddhas and is in a special way the

---

[1] The support (adhiṣṭhāna) is the Great Place, encompassed by the abode of the ocean. Know that to be the (the location of the) Lion, said to be the Lion Throne (siṁhāsana). KuKh 17/33.

[2] That is said to be the mistress of the Primordial Seat associated (bheditā) with the three gestures. According to the teaching of the Lion (generated) by the Lion's Gaze (she is) like the Lion. KuKh 8/87.

[3] O Lord of the gods, listen to (the location of the) the Lion wherein the Mother is self-established. Bhairavī sports there; she plays there with the Bhairavas. KuKh 17/32.

[4] KuKh 49/34.

[5] The goddess says when she emerges from the Liṅga: "I am dark blue and red; I have three eyes and (my) light is like the Fire of Time. The gaze I possess (is like that of a) lion and so (I am called) `she who has the lion's gaze' (siṁhāvalokinī)." KuKh 5/30.

[6] KuKh 5/70-71ab.

[7] KuKh 3/43.

> Śāmbhava (tradition). O Śambhu, it is a (Tradition of the) Lion (siṁhaka) and brings about possession (āveśa)[1] by just recalling (it).[2]

Bhairava assumed the form of a lion and so the convention is that of the lion.[3] This is the Tradition of the Lion (siṁhāmnāyakrama), the Transmission (siṁhakakrama)[4] of the Lion Kula (siṁhakula),[5] and the Western Teaching of the Lion (siṁhadarśana[6] and paścimasiṁhagṛha) because the empowered goddess and the god possess the Lion's Gaze.[7] It is the Lion Knowledge that bestows both enjoyment and liberation.[8] The goddess herself is generated by the Lion's Gaze[9] and becomes a lion who possesses the power to empower others by her Lion's Gaze. Without the transmission of the Command, that takes place thereby even the goddess is nothing. In this sense, she is generated and is empowered by the same look with which she empowers the god. He too, even when he assumes the form of an individual soul, is made manifest in this way.

> In the same way, the Lion (manifests) by the churning process in his supreme form (as) the Moon. The Lion is said to be the Person. He is made manifest by the Lion's Gaze (siṁhāvalokana).[10]

The Lion is the Fire that burns at the beginning of creation. It is the energy through which the universe is generated. As in the Vedic fire, oblations are offered in it before the beginning of time in the sacrifice through which the world is created and the teachings and the scriptures come into being. The goddess narrates:

> Its will is the Unmanifest whose form is subtly manifest. Then I was overcome with wander and (asked myself): "What is this emptiness?" Realising that it was terrible and deep, I was frightened and (my) mind slumbered. Having entered into Bhairava's sacrifice I remained there in (my) supreme (form). As an atom (of [1] The entire transmission and all that constitutes it - the scripture, mantras, rites, Yoga and the rest - bring about the penetration of the Command, that is, the entry - āveśa - of the deity as the power of grace into the aspirant's inner being. See note to KuKh 3/53.

---

[2] KuKh 4/12cd-13.
[3] KuKh 6/10-11ab.
[4] KuKh 3/43.
[5] KuKh 30/160-161ab.
[6] KuKh 30/161cd-162.
[7] KuKh 4/12-13ab.
[8] KuKh 6/10-11ab.
[9] KuKh 8/86cd-87ab.
[10] KuKh 60/53.

> consciousness), the Lion (siṁhaka) (bore) a subtle form. O Lord, the Lion Fire (siṁhasaṁvartaka), full of darkness, became manifest (vyāvṛta).[1]

Their mantra is the Lion's Roar (siṁhanāda).[2] It is the Unstruck Sound of the Fire that burns in the centre of the Ocean of the Yoni fed by the lunar nectar that flows from the Point in the centre. Secreted first into the seed-syllable (AIṀ) of the goddess and the god (HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ), it flows out into the mantra of the Lion who thus 'oozes the white secretions' of the lunar nectar that flows down from the End of the Sixteen.[3] The Vidyā and seed-syllable of the goddess, her sonic embodiments, are the female lion. Our texts says: 'Her form is a lion and she resides (there) facing downwards in the shape of a Liṅga.'[4] AIṀ, the seed-syllable of the goddess, is the Liṅga that faces downwards. Similarly, Bhairava's mantra - Navātman - is the male lion.

The Convention of the Lion is that of the Vidyā of the goddess, as is the knowledge. Bhairava is 'the lion of the thirty-two syllable Vidyā'[5] of the goddess. The Lion is also the Vidyā of the goddess and the mantra of the god in the centre of the maṇḍala, which is their throne.

The Six Darśanas

It is natural that each school should consider itself to be superior to all others. Just as they all claim to lead to the ultimate goal of liberation, they all assert that the others do not. The Siddhānta declares: 'those who are liberated in other Tantras are considered to be fettered souls in the Siddhānta'.[6] However, although all schools agree from their own point of view, that this is true, none of them excludes the others. They all agree that they belong to an ascending hierarchy that culminates in their own tradition. How this hierarchy is understood in each school tells us how it positions itself in relation to the others and how it understands the relationship between them. Climbing from one to the other, as one does the rungs of a ladder, the aspirant, having risen above the lower systems,

---

[1] KuKh 24/9-11.
[2] KuKh 3/7.
[3] HRAUṀ! (You are) the nectar at the extremity of the Sixteen (finger space) (ṣoḍaśānta). (You are the goddess) Śāmbhavī who milks the Drop (bindu) and are flooded with (the mantra of the) Lion that (oozes) white secretions. KuKh chapter 4, Mālinīstava line 4.
[4] KuKh 3/13-14ab.
[5] KuKh 3/38.
[6] Quoted by Brunner 1986a: 517 n. 18.

traverses the Śaiva Āgama as he rises through a series of initiations to reach the ultimate system.[1]

There are various ways of conceiving these hierarchies. Abhinava, as usual, offers the most sophisticated explanation. Each system marks a stage in the development of a progressively more complete insight into the ultimate nature of reality. The consciousness concomitant with this insight expands and develops to the degree in which the object to which it is directed is more complete and it grasps it more completely. The individual soul is progressively liberated to the degree in which this expansion of consciousness advances.[2] The stations of this expansion correspond to metaphysical principles within their ascending series. In his Pratyabhijñāhṛdaya, Kṣemarāja proposes this type of hierarchy, which he presents in the framework of the thirty-six principles that are correlated to the realisation to which each system is supposed to lead. This is a common way of understanding the relationship between systems and is one we find in the Kubjikā sources also.

The levels of realisation to which traditions lead may also be understood as degrees of penetration of the power of grace. The KuKh arranges the Tantras and their schools in a hierarchy corresponding to progressively more elevated states the initiate attains by an increasingly intense penetration of the spiritual energy of the Command released by the repeated recitation of the goddess's Vidyā.[3] However, as one would expect, movement from one level to the next above it may not be rapid. We have seen that realisation requires seven lifetimes.[4] From this perspective, the 'paścimāmnāya' is the 'last' and 'final' teaching one attains in the seventh rebirth. This takes place when the highest realisation attained by Kaula practice rises to its climax in the Śambhava state. The Siddhas attain this state

---

[1] In the context of Trika Śaivism, Jayaratha, quotes two verses from two unknown sources in which the hierarchy in relation to the Trika is outlined. According to the first reference: 'Śaiva is superior to the Vedas and the like, Vāma and Dakṣiṇa (is each superior) to the Śaiva. Superior to Dakṣiṇa is Kaula and there is nothing higher than Kaula.'

vedādibhyaḥ paraṁ śaivaṁ śaivād vāmaṁ ca dakṣiṇam |
dakṣiṇāc ca paraṁ kaulaṁ kaulāt parataraṁ na hi || comm. TĀ 1/18.

The other verse declares: (Higher) than the Veda is Śaiva, then Vāma, then Dakṣa, then Kula, then Mata and then (above that) also is Trika which is the most excellent of all and supreme.

vedāc chaivaṁ tato vāmaṁ tato dakṣaṁ tataḥ kulam |
tato mataṁ tataś cāpi trikaṁ sarvottamaṁ param || Ibid.

[2] Abhinava writes: As knowledge of (the totality of reality) - that is, the object of knowledge along with the metaphysical principles that constitute it- becomes more and more complete and thus progressively higher, it quells the various forms of transmigration which correspond (to the levels one reaches without, however, eradicating them completely). TĀ 1/32.

[3] KuKh 12/10-14ab.

[4] See intro. vol. 1, p. 129-130.

once they have achieved the highest state of the previous six traditions progressively, in six previous lives. These are the 'six systems' (ṣaḍidaśana), which arranged in a series of progressively upward unions (uparyupariyoga),[1] culminate in the experience corresponding to the basic state of the following principles: 1) Buddhism – the intellect 2) Jainism - the three qualities (guṇa) of Nature 3) Bhaṭṭa (i.e. Veda) – Fundamental Nature (pradhāna) 4) Vaiṣṇavism – Puruṣa 5) Sauras – Time 6) Śaivas – Supreme Śiva.[2]

The Four Āmnāyas: The Divisions of the Kaula Traditions

The followers of these six are deemed to be in a state of bondage (paśubhāva). The seventh is the House (veśman) of the Yoginī where liberation can be achieved. There, beyond these six come four 'Lions', that is, Kaula schools (siṁhakadarśana),[3] the first three of which are contained in Paścima the fourth, which is the House of the Yoginī.[4] The Yoginīs bestow accomplishment (siddhi) to Kaula the adepts[5] and the Kaula traditions (āmnāya) are transmitted orally by them.[6] Revealed successively in the four Ages, they are symbolically arranged in the four directions.[7] The first after the Śaiva is the northern Lion, followed by the southern one. Better than that is the eastern one, which is Trika that is identified directly with the Kula teaching. Beyond that is the Western House 'where everything [1] This is the group of six systems deployed in a (graded) sequence of authority. The remaining (lower) principles are not established in authority. (He who follows them) travels from below above and one who is above does not go down. He who knows (this) progressively upward union (yoga) is a (true) teacher.

---

darśanānāṁ [k, kh: darśanāṁnāṁ] tu ṣaṭkedaṁ adhikārakrame [gh: -trame] sthitam [k, kh, gh: sthitā] ||
śeṣāś [gh: śeṣāṁś] caiva tu ye tattvā nādhikāre [k, kh: -ra; gh: nādhiṁkāra] vyavasthitāḥ | adhastād [k, kh, gh: adhastāṁ] gamyate [k, kh, gh: gamyete] ūrdhvaṁ ūrdhvastho nādho [k, kh, gh: urddhasthānādha] gamyate ||
uparyupariyogaṁ [k, gh: upayu-] tu yo jānāti sa deśikaḥ | YKh (1) 4/213cd-215ab.

[2] buddhitattvaṁ tu bauddhānāṁ arhatānāṁ [k, kh: ahantānāṁ] guṇatrayam |
pradhānaṁ vedavādīnāṁ vaiṣṇavānāṁ ca pauruṣam ||
kālatattvaṁ tu saurānāṁ śaivānāṁ ca paraṁ śivam | YKh (1) 4/212-213ab, cf. KuKh 68/129 ff.

[3] (Amongst these ten) four are Lions and so are located in the middle of the seat. Not contrary to one another, they are the Lions on the path of (ritual and yogic) action. YKh (1) 4/185.

[4] KuKh 6/82.

[5] yoginyaś ca pravakṣyāmi siddhidāḥ kulaśāsane | KRU 4/30ab.

[6] rahasyaṁ sarvaśāstrāṇāṁ āmnāyahṛdayaṁ param ||
vaktrād [all MSs: vaktrā] vaktragataṁ jñānaṁ [k gh: jñāna] yoginīmukhasaṁsthitam [all MSs: yogiṇī-] | CMSS 7/40cd-41ab.

[7] The (transmission of the) north (vāma) arises in the Kṛta Age. The arising of the (transmission of the) South takes place in the Tretā Age. The tradition of the East (is taught) in the Dvāpara Age. The venerable Western transmission (takes place) in the Age of Strife. YK(1) 4/190.

dissolves away'.[1] Its final (paścima) culmination is Kaula by which 'the mobile and immobile universe is created'.[2] The goddess resides here as the energy which is liberation and generates all the paths that lead to it. She is embodied in the triangular syllable AIṀ, which in the following passage is called the Lioness who 'faces downwards'. The Tantra explains:

> (Kaula's) will is the energy (śakti) that has come forth (from it) and is Kaulinī whose form is the sprout (of creation). She is the goddess Parā, the (female) Neuter who is the Mother of (all) the systems (darśana). She is the (ultimate) end (avadhi) of the path of liberation. She is (also) the supreme aggregate (of energies) (parapiṇḍikā), which is (the condition) without (any ultimate) end (niravadhi) (and is binding).[3]
>
> (The systems of both types, that is,) with end (that lead to ultimate realisation) and without end (that do not) are (both contained) in Mahākaula which is the Western (or ultimate - paścima - transmission). The seat (āsana) of the Kaula (principle and teaching) is tenfold (as the ten aforementioned systems). It is the circle of the (ultimate) end, free of desire (anecchāvadhimaṇḍala). The condition without (ultimate) end is termed Individual (āṇava). The one with an (ultimate) end is the Śāmbhava plane. (Amongst these ten) four are Lions and so are located in the middle of the seat. Not contrary to one another, they are the Lions on the path of (ritual and yogic) action.[4]

---

[1] Ibid. 4/185.

[2] In the same way the northern one is (better) than the Śaiva. More excellent than the northern one is the excellent southern (school). More than the southern one is the 'essence' (sāra) which is Trika and the Kula teaching. (Better) than Kula is the venerable Western House. (Better) than the Western (House) is (its) final (paścima) and most excellent (end), namely, Kaula by which, O Great God, the mobile and immobile (universe) is created.

*śaivāt [k, kh: śaivāṁ] tathottaraṁ [k, kh, gh: tathoṁtamaṁ] śreṣṭhaṁ [k: cotraṁ; kh: * traṁ; gh: cautraṁ] cottarād [k, gh: cottarāṁ; kh: cotarā] dakṣiṇottamam [k, kh, gh: dakṣiṇāṁtamaṁ]* |
dakṣiṇāc cādhikaṁ [k, kh, gh: -ṇācā-] sāraṁ trikaṁ [k, gh: trikāṁ; kh: trikā] ca [kh: cca] kulanirṇayam ||
kulāc chrīpaścimaṁ [k: kulāśrī-; gh: kulāśrīpaścime] veśmaṁ paścimāt [k, kh, gh: -mād] paścimottamam [all: paścimoṁtamaṁ] |
kaulaṁ nāma mahādeva yena sṛṣṭaṁ [k, kh: sṛṣṭi] carācaram || YKh (1) 4/178-179.

[3] Cf. KuKh 68/49-51.

[4] tasyecchā [k, kh, gh: tasyachā] nirgatā [gh: nirgatāñ] śaktir [gh: caktir] aṅkurākārakaulinī [k, kh, gh: -kolinī] |
darśanānāṁ ca mātā sā parā devī napuṁsakā ||

> [. . .] In the form of the Lion, she who is called Vakrikā and faces downwards also creates. Born from the radiance of Kaula, she is Kaulinī in the Kula teaching. [. . .] There is no Dharma or Adharma there and nothing licit (gamya) or illicit (agamya). Liberation is there in the Western (transmission) where the arising of the one letter (AIṀ) takes place. One cannot attain liberation in the Five Makāras by means of other systems. Liberation by means of the five (sacrificial) substances abides in the Western (transmission), the tradition (anvaya) of the Śrīkrama. Liberation is present everywhere in non-duality, that is, where the Lioness (siṁhā) faces downwards (as the triangular Yoni).[1]

All the Kaula traditions are Lion Darśanas. According to YKh (1), which is the main text to which we shall refer in the following exposition, they are four. Subsequently, other schools developed this notion of four traditions - one for each Age - first into five traditions and then six by abandoning the analogy with the four Ages and retaining the directional symbolism which accommodates two more by adding first the zenith and then the nadir. The contents of these traditions (āmnāya) vary according to different schools, even so the worship of six traditions is a feature of the ritual procedure of virtually all Kaula schools that developed after the Kubjikā Tantras.

This system of classification of Kaula schools emerges progressively as the Kubjikā Tantras developed, which may be taken as evidence that it originally developed there. It is totally unknown to the KMT, the earliest Kubjikā Tantra. Indeed, the word 'āmnāya' is used there in its broad generic sense simply to mean

---

sāvadhir muktimārgasya [gh: sāvadhi mukta-] niravadhiḥ parapiṇḍikā [k, gh: paḍapiṁḍakaṁ; kh: padapiṁḍakaṁ] |
sāvadhir [k, gh: sāvadhe; kh: sāvadhi] niravadhiś ca mahākaule tu paścime ||
daśadhā āsanaṁ kaule [k, kh, gh: kaulai] anecchāvadhimaṇḍalaṁ [k, kh, gh: anachāvadhi-] |
āṇavaṁ [k, kh, gh: ānaṁvaṁ] niravadhiḥ [k, kh, gh: niravadve] proktaṁ sāvadhiḥ [k, kh, gh: sāvadhaiḥ] śāmbhavaṁ [k: śīṁbhavaṁ; gh: śībhavaṁ] padam ||
catvāraś cāsane [k, kh, gh: -nā] madhye saṁsthitā siṁharūpataḥ |
parasparāviruddhās [k, kh: paraspara-] te kriyāmārge [k, kh, gh: -mārgai] ca [k, kh, gh: va] siṁhakāḥ || YKh (1) 4/180-183.

[1] sṛjate siṁharūpeṇa vakrikākhyāpy adhomukhī [all: adhau-] || [. . .]
*dharmādharmaṁ [kh: dhramā-] na tatrāsti gamyāgamyaṁ na vidyate [kh: vi * te]* | ekavarṇodayaṁ [kh: -vaṇodayaṁ] yatra tatra [k, kh, gh: dadā] muktis tu paścime ||
makārapañcake [gh: makāraṁ-] muktiṁ [gh: muktiṁr] na vindyed anyadarśanaiḥ [k, kh, gh: vidyed anyadarśanai] |
pañcadravyaiḥ sthitā muktiḥ paścime śrīkramānvaye ||
advaite [k, gh: addhaite] sarvagā muktir yatra [k, kh, gh: muktiyatra] siṁhā adhomukhī |
Ibid. 4/185cd, 191-193ab.

'tradition' or 'teaching' in general,[1] or that of the Kubjikā Tantras.[2] Equally generically, it is the 'tradition of the Siddhas' (siddhāmnāya)[3] or even just 'Tantric tradition' generally.[4] It is not used in the specific, technical sense of a Kaula school or tradition, although this usage is beginning to emerge. Thus, when the KMT refers to the 'previous tradition' the expression is 'pūrvasantāna', in relation to which the Kubjikā school is subsequent (paścima). In one place where the KMT does refer to its teachings as the 'paścimāmnāya', this is the general sense, meaning 'last or ultimate tradition' of the Siddhas.[5] Even so, the way is being paved for its later common usage as a specific name for the tradition of the Kubjikā Tantras.

The KMT outlines a hierarchy of schools leading to its own. The first is the Veda, above which is 'upper' (ūrdhva), followed by those of the 'left' (vāma) and right (dakṣiṇa) and then Kula (kulaśāsana).[6] The latter is 'absorbed' into the Ocean of the Yoni, which is taught in the KMT. These categories should not be confused with āmnāyas. The division is into three currents of Śaiva Āgamas as we find in the Brahmayāmala.[7] The 'upper' one is the Siddhānta and the other two are the Tantras of the 'left' and the 'right'. The latter were the Bhairava Tantras from which the Kula teachings developed.

In this context, we observe another sign that the KRU is one of the earliest Kubjikā Tantras after the KMT. The KRU is also ignorant of the āmnāya

---

[1] For example, the god says to the goddess concerning the Krama:

O fair lady, having know the teaching (āmnāya) which is attended by divine and human beings (concerning) the group of four, five, six, four, five and four . . . .

jñātvāmnāyaṁ varārohe divyādivyair niṣevitam |
catuṣkaṁ pañcakaṁ ṣaṭkaṁ catuṣkaṁ pañcakaṁ catuḥ || 3/112.

In the following references the word means, as it often does, both 'tradition' and 'teaching'.

O fair lady, there are six parts and six Siddhas. He who has understood them with a discerning, analytical eye, knows the ritual procedure of all the āmnāya.

ṣaṭ prakārāṇi ṣaṭ siddhā jñātvaitān bhinnadṛṣṭinā sa jānāti varārohe samastāmnāyapaddhatim || 10/64.

[2] astrasya dūtikā hy eṣā kubjikāmnāyanirgatā | 10/38ab.

[3] For example:
O Kujeśvarī, in this way he will attain the status of a teacher in the tradition of the Siddhas.
evaṁ gurutvam āpnoti siddhāmnāye kujeśvari | 3/116ab.

[4] O fair lady, he makes an effort to be a protector of the Tantric tradition.

prayatnena varārohe tantrāmnāyaprapālakaḥ | 5/33ab.

[5] paścimāmnāyamārgo 'yaṁ siddhānām akhilaṁ dada | 2.22ab.

[6] KMT 16/28-29.

[7] See Dyczkowski 1988: 42 ff.

classification. However, it refers to the 'previous tradition' (pūrvasantāna) mentioned in the KMT, the Pūrvāmnāya and supplies details of its contents, although most of these are not incorporated in subsequent developments. Thus by the time we reach the KRU the Kula teaching is understood to be divided into two āmnāyas[1] - the 'previous' (pūrva) and the 'subsequent' (paścima). These two, like reflections with respect to one another,[2] are the teachings to which the KRU repeatedly refers.[3] Moreover, the name 'Paścima' is now commonly used for the Kubjikā tradition.[4]

When we reach YKh (1) the full set of four āmnāyas are clearly defined. We can even observe the transition from two to four āmnāyas taking place there. In a sūtra in YKh (1) which predates, it seems, the formation of the classification into four āmnāyas found elsewhere in YKh (1), the god wants to know about the Western and the Eastern House and, along with them, the middle one.[5] We do not find any reply to this question. Perhaps it was part of another sūtra that has been lost while the subsequent tradition developed the four-fold scheme. However, elsewhere we are told that the middle one is the Śāmbhava form of the western tradition:

> The western (House) is the Śāmbhava House. It is in the middle between the east and west. Devoid of duality and non-duality, it is the entire sequence of mantra and form (mūrti).[6]

According to the ṢSS,[7] Guhyakālī is the goddess of the northern tradition (uttarāmnāya) who is worshipped independently in the 'great Kālī Tantra'.[8] This reference, absent in the other sources, indicates that by the time the ṢSS was redacted the division of the Kaula tradition into āmnāyas symbolically set in the

---

[1] pūrvapaścimasaṁjñābhiḥ [kh: -saṁjñāti] sarpitedaṁ sudurlabhaṁ [kh: -bhāṁ] | KRU 1/35ab.
[2] Ibid. 11/44cd-45.
[3] For example: The sacrifice, maṇḍala, initiation and the rest accord with the teachings of the 'previous' and the 'subsequent'(traditions) yāgamaṇḍaladīkṣādi pūrvapaścimanirṇayaṁ | Ibid. 5/41ab.

[4] idaṁ hi paścimaṁ devi śrīkramaṁ kulanāyike || Ibid. 2/32cd.
śrīkulasya bhaviṣyanti paścimasyāvatārakāḥ [k: -vasānakāḥ; g: paścimesyava-] | Ibid. 9/41ab.
mayāpi paścimāmnāyaṁ tavākhyātaṁ tvayā mayā | Ibid. 14/287ab.
[5] paścimaṁ ca gṛhaṁ kiṁ [k, kh, gh: kau] vai kiṁ [k, kh, gh: ko] vā pūrvagṛhaṁ bhavet ||
madhyamaṁ tu kathaṁ veśma [k, kh: vaisma; gh: vaisya] navakośaṁ [k, kh, gh: -kosaṁ] kathaṁ katham | YKh (1) 3/171cd-172ab.
[6] paścimaṁ śāmbhavaṁ veśma pūrvapaścimamadhyamam ||
mantramūrtikramaṁ sarvam advaitadvaitavarjitam | YKh (1) 4/275cd-276ab.
[7] ṢSS 13/117ab-8ab.
[8] KM 7/51 = ŚM 10/210.

directions was already in place. This reached its most sophisticated form in the Kubjikā sources first in the YKh and then in the CMSS where four āmnāyas are described. By the 13th century or so, they became six, which was to remain the standard number.

It is significant that this division even in its simpler (and presumably earlier) form of just four traditions is not mentioned in the KuKh. Instead the KuKh makes use of the four-fold division of the Ages, not to distinguish the four Traditions, but to accommodate the Western Tradition into another grouping of the Śaiva scriptures. In this setup, there are four 'currents' (srotas) of Tantras (not āmnāyas). These are the Tantras of the upper current; those of the south, north and and, finally, west, correspond to the four Ages in which they are revealed.[1] This division into the four Ages is important because it is essential to belong to the tradition of the Age to which one belongs.[2] Consequently, the Western (paścima which also means 'last') current is not only the best, it is the only one fit for this Age, especially because we are close to the end of it.

This division of the Tantras into currents (srotas) echoes a common system of classification, found in the Siddhāntāgamas, according to which Āgamic Śaivism is divided into five major currents (srotas) of teachings that flow in the form of scriptures from the five faces of Sadāśiva's upper face arranged in the five directions.[3] The Kaula traditions are arranged in a parallel fashion with tacit reference to the equivalent arrangement in the prestigious Siddhāntāgamas. In this perspective, the Western Tradition is said to be the Transmission or Kulakrama of Sadyojāta[4] who is the deity of Sadāśiva's western face. Although Kubjikā's

---

[1] See KuKh 30/164-166ab.
[2] KuKh 30/167-168.
[3] See Dyczkowski 1988: 31-32. The correspondences can be tabulated as follows:

11. Table of Upper Faces of Sadāśiva and the Scriptures they Utter

Direction	Deity of the Face	Śaiva Scripture
Upper	Īśāna	Siddhāntāgamas
East	Tatpuruṣa	Gāruḍatantras
South	Aghora	Bhairavatantras
North	Vāmadeva	Vāmatantras
West	Sadyojāta	Bhūtatantras

[4] KuKh 3/16, 30/165 and 39/14. The Transmission of Sadyojāta is sometimes abbreviated to form another name for the Western Tradition. This is Sadya- or Sadyo-krama which literally means the 'Immediate Transmission'. The KuKh supplies a number of fanciful, didactic etymological explanations of the name 'sadyo'. See KuKh 45/60-65ab.

tradition is sometimes referred to as a sixth current, distinct from the five of Sadāśiva's faces,[1] it is also inserted amongst them in this way.

Naturally, the Kubjikā tradition gives pride of place to the goddess. Nonetheless, it takes care to maintain a link with its Śaiva roots both in order to draw from them and to benefit from their prestige and authority. Accordingly, the deities of the faces, all forms of Śiva incorporated into the composite figure of Sadāśiva, are assimilated in various ways into the cult of the Kubjikā Tantras. They appear, for example, amongst Bhairava's 108 names in a hymn addressed to him.[2] Amongst the strategies adopted by the Kubjikā tradition to reinforce this link are manipulations of these faces in conjunction with its own symbolic categories. An example, are the equivalences established between the four principle sacred seats and Sadāśiva's faces. This association implies that the scriptures that issue from these faces originated in the sacred seats where the goddess resides and propagates the teachings. The correspondences are as follows: 1) Udyāna: Aghora. 2) Jālandhara: Tatpuruṣa 3) Pūrṇagiri: Vāmadeva 4) Kāmarūpa: Sadyojyāta.[3] Kāmarūpa, associated with Sadyojāta, is the sacred seat of this Age where Kubjikā's teachings are propagated by Mitranātha.

These models are taken over by the Śrīvidyā tradition and Tripurā came to be linked with the Upper Tradition (ūrdhvāmnāya). It seems, however, that this was not originally the case. Her root Tantra, the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava, relates her to four traditions that emerged from the sacred seats in a manner that is clearly adopted from the Kubjikā Tantras. Thus, the god in this Tantra praises the goddess, saying:

> I salute the venerable Tripurā who resides within Kāma, Pūrṇa, the one called the letter Jā and Śrīpīṭha, she who is the treasure chest of the fourfold Command (caturājñā).[4]

The original 'fourfold Command' that issues from the sacred seats consisted of the four Transmissions (krama) elaborated in the Kubjikā sources. However, for obvious reasons, the commentators on the NṢA preferred to understand them abstractly without reference to the Kubjikā tradition. Vidyānanda explains that Śrīpītha is Oḍyāṇa.[5] According to the Saṁketapaddhati quoted by him,[6] Śrīpīṭha is the Ājñāpīṭha and hence the source of the other three. There it is called Oḍupīṭha. Amṛtānanda, who was earlier than Vidyānanda, describes the

[1] See, for example, KuKh 45/58..
[2] See beginning of chapter 17 of the KuKauM.
[3] KuKh 28/10-11.
[4] NṢĀ 1/12.
[5] NṢA p. 40.
[6] NṢA p. 220. See above note to 2/28.

'fourfold Command' as: 'the great plane (of realisation) consisting of the four flowing currents (of instruction) (srotas).'[1] Vidyānananda abandons the term srotas, which belongs to the older technical vocabulary of Siddhāntāgamas and the Bhairava Tantras, and adopts the term āmnāya instead. This indicates that Vidyānanda was aware of the growing importance and application of this term in the sense in which it originally developed in the ambit of the Kubjikā Tantras. In his perspective, the four sacred seats are the places where the four *āmnāya*s originate. Amongst them, the southern one is especially associated with Tripurā, although she contains all of them.[2] What concerns us here, more specifically, is that these *amnāya*s are the fourfold Command (a technical term that is probably drawn from the Kubjikā Tantras). They are, as Vidyānanda says, 'the systems (darśana) of the lion thrones called east, south, west and north'.[3] This is also the arrangement in the MBT, which is earlier. Śivānanda, another commentator, relates the four currents of the *āmnāya*s to the four sacred seats which together constitute Śrīpīṭha.[4] These projections are not possible in the context of the Kubjikā tradition as the teachers in these seats propagate Kubjikā lineages.

While Śivānanda's aim was to relate the four streams of the Command to Tripurā as they are in her Tantra,[5] Maheśvarānanda, his grand-disciple, seeks to establish that they are based on Mahārtha, the supreme reality taught in the Kashmiri Kālīkrama and, set in the four directions, ultimately lead to it.[6] In this way, he also seeks to identify Kālī with Tripurā. Clearly, he considered the four currents to be divisions within the Kulaśāstras that taught secret Kaula ritual.[7] Again, these four currents (srotas), each vast and deep as the sea, are churned by Manthānabhairava who is the Bhairava of all the Kaula Tantras.[8] In this way Maheśvarānanda, following in the footsteps of his grand-teacher integrates the division into four sacred

---

[1] pravṛttacatuḥsrotorūpā mahāpadavī caturājñā This statement is quoted from the ṛjuvimarśinī by Maheśvarānanda in MM p. 171.

[2] iyaṁ ca vidyā caturāmnāyasādhārṇy api dakṣiṇapakṣapātinī. NṢA Artharatnāvali p. 41.

[3] caturājñeti pūrvadakṣiṇapaścimottarākhyāni catuḥsiṁhāsanadarśanāni. Ibid.. pūrvapaścimadakṣiṇottarākhyāś caturaśabdasucitāś catvāraḥ samayāḥ teṣāṁ kośabhūtā sārabhutām. Ibid. NṢA p. 33.

[4] catuḥsamayanidhanabhūtacatuṣpīṭha .....' these are also called 'ājñākośa' (caturājñākośabhūtām) - NSA 1/12.

[5] The god in NṢA 1/12 says: I salute the venerable Tripurā who is the treasure chest of the four Commands (caturājñākośabhutāṁ naumi śrītripurām aham). Śivāananda equates them with the four sacred seats (comm. ibid).

[6] Maheśvarānanda (MM p. 171) writes: Although reality (artha) is separately established and conceived in each of the four transcendental (alaukika) streams, based on knowledge, Yoga, ritual and conduct, respectively, once reached the end, it is this reality that is established as the plane (of realisation) that is to be attained.

[7] srotaścatuṣṭayopapāditānāṁ paddhatīnāṁ pravṛttir ity etāvanmātraparyavasāyi pūjārahasyam MM p. 82.

[8] MM v. 68 p. 171.

seats of the Śrīvidyā tradition with that of the four currents of the Kula Tantras to make Manthānabhairava the lord of all of them. As he is the Bhairava of the Mahārtha, this implies that it is the essence of all the systems (darśana).[1]

This way of classifying the Kaula traditions developed ultimately into one of six āmnāyas that is still in place today. The Parātantra is one of the earliest sources, if not the first, that expounds this system of six traditions. The earliest dated manuscript of this Tantra so far recovered was copied in 1265 CE. The earliest dateable reference to this system I have been able to trace is in a colophon written by a Brahmin scribe called Harihara who copied a manuscript of Amṛteśvarapūjā in 1216 CE.[2] He tells us that he was a Gujarati from Camatkārapura and the disciple of Vimalaprabodha who was a teacher in the six traditions (ṣaḍanvaya).[3] The same is confirmed in the colophon of some manuscripts of the DP.[4]

Numerous variants of this classification continued to be formulated. However, this was generally not because there was any real attempt to assess the contents of the āmnāyas. The reason was that the worship the deities of the āmnāyas became a standard part of Kaula ritual. As the āmnāya system of classification is unknown to the Kālīkrama sources and the earliest Śrīvidyā sources, it appears that it emerged initially in the Kubjikā Tantras. However, it was probably because the worship of the deities of the *āmnāya*s became a part of the common rites of the Śrīvidyā school that it became a standard part of other

---

[1] evaṁ ca sarvadarśanasāratvād amuṣya śrimahārthakramasya sarvasroto 'tiśāyī ko 'pi ślāghyatvotkarṣaṁ dhvanyate | MM p. 171-172.

[2] Ms. Amṛteśvarapūjā, Darbar Library, MS no. 1-1365-5. The colophon reads: Svasti | śrīmannepāleśvaraḥ | samastarājavalīvirājita | M. | P.-paramamāheśvara | śrī-Paśupati-bhaṭṭārakāvadhānād-bhaktijala-prakṣālitāṁtaḥkaraṇa | sakalaśāstraparimalita | siddhāṁtataṁtrarahasyāgamārghavida | śrīmadvimalaprabodhapādaprasādāl-labdhābhiṣeka-ṣaḍanvayādhārya | nirjjitārivrāta | pratāpalaṁkeśvara | raghuvaṁśakulatisarvvajanahṛdayānaṁda-kara | dīnaduḥkhitajanāśāparipūraka | anekaguṇanidhāna | śrīmadarimalladeva-pravarddhamāna-vijayarājye | Vikramābda-gate 1273 | Nepālābda-gata-samvat 336 jyeṣṭha-kṛṣṇa-saptamyāṁ tithau budhadine | Gurjjaradeśīya-camatkārapurād-āgata brahmaṇapaṁditācārya śrī-hariharena likhitam-iti śubhaṁ || The date corresponds to Wednesday, June 8th, 1216 (Petech 1958: 84).

[3] Vimalaprabodha may well have been the author of the Kālikulakramārcana who describes himself as a 'renounciate teacher' (parivrājakācārya) in the colophon of his work which reads: iti śrīparamahaṁsaparivrājakācāryaśrivimalaprabodhapādaviracitakālikākulapañcakramakramārcanaṁ samāptam. See the bibliography for details of the MSs of this text.

[4] MS K of the DP ends with the simple colophon: samāptam idaṁ śrīkālikākramam. The other two MSs add: paramahaṁsaparivrājakaṣaḍanvayācāryaśrīvimalaprabodhapādānām. This may mean that he wrote the DP, but this is unlikely as it presents itself as a Tantra. It is more likely that this was the colophon of his copy of the work.

Kaula traditions also.[1] Generally, however, this is not elaborately done. The deities of the six traditions (āmnāyapūjā) are worshipped simply by uttering their mantras and those of their attendants.

Newar Kaulism is much more involved in the āmnāya system. Indeed, it is a specific feature of it. Kaulas are generally concerned mostly with the worship of their own Kula deity and hence with just one āmnāya. However, although Newar Kaulas are also initiates in specific āmnāyas, they consider the ideal Kaula to be one who is well versed in all the āmnāyas (sarvāmnāyaviśarada). The daily rites Newar Kaulas perform are those of the particular āmnāya of their Kula deity. However, they also occasionally perform the liturgies (kramārcana) prescribed for all the āmnāyas together. This is done in the course of any major liturgy (mahākramārcana), irrespective of which particular āmnāya their deity may belong, although the final, culminating rites are reserved for the goddess of their āmnāya.

Although, in actual fact, only the northern, western and upper āmnāyas are extensively functional amongst the Newars, in theory, like other Kaulas, they follow a system of six āmnāyas. This is largely based on the Parātantra. Thus, those listed in the Saṁvartārthaprakāśa by Mukundarāja, who was a Newar, agree with that source. The goddesses in the six *āmnāya*s are: 1) East: Pūrvāmnāya - Pūrṇeśvarī. 2) South: Dakṣiṇāmnāya - Niśeśvarī. 3) North: Uttarāmnāya - Guhyeśvarī. 4) Above: Ūrdhvāmnāya - Tripurasundarī. 5) Below: Adhāmnāya - Vajrayoginī 6) West: Paścimāmnāya - Kubjikā. Mukundarāja adds two more goddesses related to the *āmnāya*s who are very important for the Newars. One is Siddhilakṣmī (sic. Siddhalakṣmī). She belongs to the Uttarāmnāya. The other is Ugracaṇḍā (= Maheśāsuramardinī / Durgā) who belongs to the Dakṣiṇāmnāya.

As the Newars are the last to preserve these traditions and probably have been unique in this respect for several centuries, it is worth dedicating some space to the Parātantra's presentation of the six āmnāyas before examining how the āmnāyas appear in the Kubjikā Tantras. The Parātantra magnifies the one Supreme Goddess (ekā paramā) who sits on a throne (siṁhāsana), the six feet of which are the āmnāyas represented as her female attendants, an image well known to the Śrīvidyā texts. To this goddess Sadāśiva reveals the 'secret Kaula tradition' (rahasyaṁ kaulikānvayam) and the āmnāyas within it. Collectively they are the

---

[1] SaṁP fol. 5a. One could cite countless examples of Āmnāyapūjā. An early one is found in the Jñānadīpavimarśinī by Vidyānanda who was probably the same as the Vidyānanada who wrote the commentary called Artharatnāvalī of the NṢA. If so, it is probably not later than the 14th century. There we find five āmnāyas, including the Western one of Kubjikā (see above . below for the reference). There are five amnāyas also in the Saubhāgyaratnākara by another, Vidyānanda. Although certainly later, the goddess of the Western tradition is worshipped amongst those of the other five āmnāyas.

`mahāmnāya' which is five-fold like the body composed of the five gross elements. This receives life from a sixth principle, namely, 'the first supreme power who, residing in the Void, protects the Kulas'.[1] She is the Nityā Lalitā who, assuming the form of Kāpālinī, goes to the forest called Ānandavana, where Sadāśiva is sitting absorbed in concentration on the Six Wheels (ṣaṭcakrasamādhi), to ask him about the six traditions (ṣaḍanvaya).

The first, he explains, is the eastern tradition (pūrvāmnāya) spoken by Tatpuruṣa, Sadāśiva's eastern face. The mistress of this tradition is Pūrṇeśvarī.[2] She is identified with twenty-one goddesses amongst who is Kulālikā, that is, Kubjikā. Pūrṇeśvarī is also called Nāṭeśvari and her consort is Nṛtyabhairava. She lives in Pūrṇagiripīṭha and the cremation ground called Lakṣmīnara. The goddess of the southern tradition is Niśīśī. She is Caitanyabhairavī, Raktakālī, Sundarikālikā and Aghoreśvarī.[3] She has twenty-four attendant goddesses amongst whom we notice Carcikā, a form of Kubjikā.[4] She is worshipped in the sacred seat called Cauhānagahvara in the 'left hand' modality (vāmācāra) as are all the goddesses of the āmnāyas. The goddess of the western tradition is, as we would expect, Kubjikā. Two forms are described. One is that of a young girl and the other that of an old woman. She is Mother Kujā who is the Bhairavī of the Western Tradition established on the Path of Kula.[5] She is seated on the left lap of Sadāśiva who is mounted on a bull.[6] He is light blue (khavarṇa) with one face, three eyes and eighteen arms. She is red with one face, three eyes and two arms and is charming. She resembles Tripurasundarī who, unlike the other goddesses of the āmnāyas, who are multi-armed and wrathful, is peaceful. According to the Parātantra, the source of the Northern Tradition, is the Kālīkula. Amongst the countless forms of Kālī in the Kālīkula,[7] the main one worshipped there[8] is Guhyakālī who is especially associated with Mahākulālikā, that is, Kubjikā. She is considered to be the original source of the Kaula path[9] and her northern (uttara) tradition is the most excellent (niruttara).[10] The upper direction (ūrdhva) is that of Tripurasundarī. She is Nārāyaṇī, the goddess Māyā. Young and beautiful, she resides in Uḍyāna and is the mistress of the six āmnāyas.[11] She is associated with Śrīcakra and the sixteen Nityās and is of

---

[1] ādyā sā paramā śaktir vyomasthā kularakṣiṇī | ParāT 1/45b.
[2] Her visualized form is described ibid. 1/56-60.
[3] Her visualized form is described ibid. 2/4-16.
[4] Concerning Carcikā, see above, p. 245 ff..
[5] ParāT 3/13.
[6] Her visualized form is described ibid. 3/7-12
[7] āmnāyamuttare tu kālīkulasamudbhavā |
koṭikoṭiprabhedo 'sti kālikā tīvranāyikā || ibid. 4/16-2a.
[8] Described ibid. 4/7-14.
[9] kaulamārgapravartatkā ibid. 4/17b.
[10] āmnāyājñā vadantīha uttaraṁ tu niruttaram | ibid. 4/26cd
[11] ibid. 5/7-12.

two types according to whether she is worshipped in the manner of the right or the left.[1] The emphasis is laid on the left-hand manner, as it is with the other goddesses. She embodies the highest state of consciousness (turiyā), which is that of the direct apprehension of spiritual awakening (sākṣājjyāgratsvarupiṇī).[2] The lower direction is that of the Buddhist path and is presided over by Vajrayoginī. She bestows benefits in this Age of Strife (kaliyuga) to Buddhists, but not ultimate liberation.

Three founding figures are mentioned at the beginning of the chapter in the Parātantra dedicated to the western tradition. These are Siddhinātha, Śrīnātha and the hero (vīra) Kujeśanātha.[3] These three are mentioned right at the beginning of the Tantra as having pleased the Lord of Kula[4] suggesting that the Parātantra has a special connection with the western tradition. It is also closely affiliated to Kālī as Guhyakālī who embodies all the āmnāyas.[5] The two sources the text mentions support these affiliations. They are the Kālī oriented Jayadrathayāmala (Śiraścheda) and the Kubjikā oriented MBT.[6] Moreover, Tripurā is accorded a special position in this Tantra as the mistress of the Upper Tradition. She is Lalitā, the supreme Goddess who assumes the form of all the goddesses of this āmnāya. She is identified with Vaiṣṇavīśakti who is the twenty-fifth principle in a system of twenty-five principles. This configuration accords with the more pronouncedly Sāmkhya system of the Pāñcarātra rather then the thirty-six Tattva system of the Śaivāgama. However, the privileged location of Tripurā in this account is as we find it in the later Tripurā tradition, after the NṢA that invariably accords it this, the highest place, and the original seat of the Kaula transmission, Uḍyāna. This is the case with virtually all later accounts of the six āmnāyas, including, for example, the one in the 17th century Puraścaryārṇava that quotes the late Merutantra. This suggests that the classification into six āmnāyas developed in the Śrīvidyā tradition. The form in which it appears in the Parātantra, which was redacted at a time when the earlier traditions were still known, may well be one of the earliest.

Before moving on we may note another way of representing the relationship between the six āmnāyas which similarly accords the most eminent place to the goddess Tripurā of the Śrīvidyā tradition. This is the Sarvāmnāya

---

[1] ibid. 5/42.
[2] ibid. T 5/45, 68.
[3] vibhinnaḥ siddhināthena śrināthenāvatāritaḥ |
kujeśanāthavīreṇa kujāmnāyaḥ prakāśitaḥ || ibid. 3/14.
[4] śrināthādigaṇāḥ sarve vīranāthāvatārite |
siddhināthavikāsena santoṣitaṁ kuleśvaram || ibid. 1/4.
[5] Guhyakālī also integrates the six āmnāyas into her rite in the Kālīkulārṇava which affiliates itself to the Mahārāvatantra:
guhyakālyā kramaṁ puṇyaṁ ṣaḍāmnayaprapūjitam || Kālīkulārṇava NA MS No. 2/130 BSP I p. 42.
[6] ParāT 1/7.

system prevalent amongst some Pārvatīyas of the Kathmandu Valley. Lidke describes it as follows:

> The contemporary Nepalese Sarvāmnāya system represents itself as the culminating synthesis of all (sarva) the transmissions (āmnāya-s) preserved by clans (kula-s) of practitioners united through the seminal wisdom of tantric adepts. In particular, the Sarvāmnāya system incorporates the six streams of Āgamic revelation, or six transmission schools (ṣaḍ-āmnāya-s): the eastern (Pūrvāmnāya), southern (Dakṣiṇāmnāya), western (Paścimāmnāya), northern (Uttarāmnāya), lower (Adhāmnāya), and upper (Ūrdhvāmnāya) transmissions. In the esoteric interpretation of the Sarvāmnāya system, each of the six āmnāya-s is associated with a particular goddess, who in turn is correlated with one of the six cakra-s, or energy centers, in the subtle physiology. The Sarvāmnāya path involves sequential initiation, stage by stage, in each of the six transmission schools in order to awaken the kuṇḍalinī-śakti, the serpentine power at the base of the spine, and activate in turn each of the cakra-s along with the corresponding goddesses who are mistresses of the cakra-s (cakreśvarī). The final stage of the Sarvāmnāya path involves initiation into the upper transmission school (Ūrdhvāmnāya), which is associated with Tripurasundarī, the supreme goddess of the Śrīvidyā kula. Through this final initiation the ajñā-cakra, situated between the eyebrows, is activated, and the kuṇḍalinīśakti rises up to the sahasrāra-cakra at the crown of the head, culminating in a state of full empowerment in which the tantric practitioner (sādhaka) realizes his or her identity with Tripurasundarī, 'the beautiful goddess of the three cities'.

This system is alien to the Newars of the Kathmandu Valley. Indeed, it is so contrary to the spirit of their Kaulism that we may understand it better by the sharp contrast there is with it. The Newars who are qualified to take higher Kaula initiations are given access to their tutelary Kaula goddess. As the family deity, the tradition (āmnāya) to which they belong can only be one. The Newars do, however, concede that access to the worship of one of the Kula goddesses also authorises one to worship all the others. However, this is achieved directly through the one initiation, not in stages. Moreover, each goddess is Kuṇḍalinī within the body and she may rise equally through all the Wheels, whichever one of the goddesses she may be. Finally, Tripurasundarī is certainly an important member of the Newar's pantheon of Kaula goddesses, however Newars do not generally consider her to be the goddess who embodies the highest state of empowerment in a special way.

The Four Āmnāyas

We turn now to the presentation of the four Traditions according to YKh (1). There they are described in four sūtras that have been translated below. This is the earliest presentation of this division into four in the Kubjikā sources and may well be the first ever in any Tantra. The CMSS also describes four āmnāyas. These too are taught successively in the four Ages and arranged symbolically in the four directions as we find in YKh (1). CMSS dedicates most of chapter seven to an exposition of the three Traditions related to the Western one. Judging by the complexity of its symbolism, it appears to be more evolved than the MBT and hence later. This is apparent in the presentation of the four Traditions also. They are related to the earlier presentation in YKh (1), but are more differentiated and possess a clearer identity of their own.

Each Tradition is essentially part of the Śāmbhava Transmission and share in the Śāmbhava state, which is the liberated condition. Thus they are all four `siṁhakadarśanas'. Even so, the attainment of that state is essentially derived from the Command of the Western Transmission. This is the Śāmbhava House. The other three Traditions flow from it like the three qualities flow from Nature, which contains them as the fourth encompassing reality. Thus, Paścima is not only the Western Tradition; it is the last and ultimate one. In the Venerable House (Śrīgṛha) of the Western Tradition all is completely accomplished. Above all other Traditions, they all ultimately merge into this one. Thus, unlike the other Houses, where the Vidyās are not perfect, here the Vidyā is complete in all respects. From this all the others draw their energy and so is their common basis. Thus, the CMSS declares: 'Abandoning all (the distinctions between the Traditions), in accord with (their) essential nature (svabhāvena), merger occurs spontaneously in the Western House.'[1]

This underlying unity in diversity is represented in the YKh by the basic common identity of the goddesses of the four Traditions. Abstractly they are all Śāmbhavīśakti, more concretely they are Kubjikā. In her own Western House, she is Parā. In the Eastern Tradition she is the yellow Kulālikā with five faces. In the South she is the Bhairavī Aghoreśvarī. In the North she is Asitā, the Black One. In each case, a Bhairava accompanies her. In the West, he is Navātman. In the Eastern Tradition, he is Mitranātha. In the Southern, he is Svacchandabhairava. There he governs the Tantras of the Right and the Left. As such, he has two forms, one white and the other black, respectively. In the North, the Bhairava is red.

Just as the goddesses of the four Traditions are presented as forms of Kubjikā, analogously the Bhairavas of the four Traditions replicate the eight-headed Bhairava who governs the maṇḍala that encompasses the couple in the centre and is the core of the system the YKh expounds. There Bhairava is surrounded by the Eight Mothers – one for each of his heads - and the Sixty-four Yoginīs that emanate from them. These eight and 'eight times eight' are energies of the goddess that unfold in the eight sacred seats. The presentations of the Traditions repeatedly allude to them by referring to the sacred trees, creepers, monasteries and other entities within them.[1] Thus, each Tradition replicates in its own way the core system of the YKh.

---

[1] sarvaṁ tyaktvā svabhāvena tal layaṁ paścime gṛhe [all MSs: gṛhaṁ] || CMSS 3/7cd.

The first sūtra opens with an exposition of this common ground of the Kaula traditions. This is the Śāmbhava state of which the Western Tradition is the prime repostory:

> Next, I will talk about the four traditions (āmnāya) by knowing which the divine tradition (divyāmnāya) functions. I will explain in due order that excellent tradition established in the houses (of the four transmissions) namely, the divine Western one, which is Śāmbhava and (so) is above all (others). This Śāmbhava (reality) is the Lord of the Universe, from which everything has emerged. The supreme energy is unmanifest and by means of (this) energy, the universe has come forth. The three qualities have come from the universe and from the (reality which is these) three qualities, the Śāmbhava transmission.
>
> The Western (transmission) is born from Śāmbhava and the Kula teaching (śāsana) from the Western (transmission). The Southern path (comes) from Kula and from the Southern one (comes) the Northern House. From (that emerges the transmission of) the left, the lineage of oneness (ekatvasantāna), which is all, both with sequence and without. Each one has a differing lion-nature and so exists separately in a state in which (each) is exclusive of the other in the House of the Four Lineages (santati). The Western House is the Pure One and is above all (others) and so, free of Dharma and Adharma, its special (excellence) is (well) known. It certainly gives liberation in every way at the end of the Kali Age. The House in the Kṛta Age is the Eastern one. The Southern House is in the Tretā (Age). The Northen one is the House in the Dvāpara (Age) and the venerable Western one is the House in the Age of Strife.[2]

[1] See intro. vol. 1, 707-708, chart 26.

[2] ataḥ parataraṁ vakṣye caturāmnāyaṁ [k, kh, gh: -ya] saṁsphuṭam [k, kh: sasphuṭaṁ; gh: samusphuṭaṁ] ||

The Western Tradition (Paścimāmnāya)

The Western Tradition, according to the CMSS, is the Transmission of the Command (ājñākrama).[1] The energy of the Command expands out into the other Traditions from this one, which thus gives them life and vitality. As it is the source of the other traditions it is called the Tradition of Birth (janmāmnāya) 'which is endowed with (all) four Houses'.[2] Supreme, it is Kula, itself, not just the teachings that concern it. Here Bhairava appears in his most essential nature as Akula, the pure abstract Absolute, from which emerges Kula, the goddess in her essential nature as the Śāmbhava state. As such, she is Parā who is clothed in her seed-syllables. Her Vidyā and the Krama attended by the Eight Mothers emanate from her body. The Western House is the Triangle in the end of the Twelve that 'faces downwards' and so is 'endowed with the twelve-fold sequence (krama) (of energies)' that leads to it and from it. It is the Transmental, identified with Kula that contains the sonic energies of the letters embodied in the Yoginīs and Bhairavas who reside there and attend on it. As the source of emanation, it is also

---

yena vijñātamātreṇa divyāmnāyaḥ pravartate |
taṁ krameṇa pravakṣyāmi gṛhasthāmnāyam uttamam [k, kh: gṛhāsthasrāra uttamāḥ; gh: gṛhāsthasrāra uttamā] ||
śāmbhavaṁ paścimaṁ divyaṁ sarveṣām upari sthitam [k: sarvaiṣāṁ mupariścitaṁ; kh, gh: sarvaiṣāmupariścitaṁ] |
viśveśaḥ [k, kh, gh: -śaṁ] śāmbhavo 'yaṁ [k, kh: śāṁbhavopyaṁ; gh: śābhavopya] tu yasmāt sarvaṁ [gh: sarva] vinirgatam ||
avyaktā tu parā śaktiḥ śaktyā [gh: śaktya] viśvaṁ [k, kh, gh: viśva] vinirgatam |
viśvād guṇatrayaṁ jātaṁ traiguṇāc [k, kh: traiguṇo; gh: taiguṇo] chāmbhavaṁ kramam ||
śāmbhavāt paścimaṁ [kh: paścomaṁ] jātaṁ paścimāt kulaśāsanam |
kulād [k, kh, gh: kulā] dakṣiṇamārgaṁ [k, kh, gh: mārge] tu dakṣiṇāc cottaraṁ [k, kh, gh: -ccāṁtaraṁ] gṛham ||
vāmād caikatvasantānaṁ [k, kh, gh: vaikadvasaṁtānaṁ] etat sarvaṁ [k, kh: sarvva] kramākramam |
anyānyasiṁharūpeṇa [k, kh, gh: aṁnyānya-] pṛthaktvenaiva [k, kh, gh: pṛthakteneda] saṁsthitam ||
viruddhānyonyabhāvena [k, gh: -nyānyabhāvena] gṛhe [k, kh, gh: gṛheś] catvārisantatau |
vimalaṁ paścimaṁ veśmaṁ [k, kh, gh: vesma] sarveṣām upari sthitam ||
viśeṣaṁ tena viditaṁ dharmādharmavivarjitam |
muktidaṁ sarvabhāvena kalisyānte na saṁśayaḥ ||
kṛte yuge pūrvaṁ [k, kh, gh: pūrvva] veśmaṁ [gh: veśyaṁ] tretāyāṁ dakṣiṇaṁ [k, kh, gh: -ṇa] gṛham |
uttaraṁ dvāpare [k, kh: -raṁ] veśmaṁ kalau śrīpaścimaṁ [k, gh: -me; kh: -ma] gṛham ||
YKh (1) 4/215cd-223.

[1] *paścimāmnāyaṁ [k kh: -ya; gh: -mā * ya] deveśi ājñākramaṁ [k: -krama; gh: -cakra] varānane* || CMSS 7/42cd.

[2] janmāmnāyarahasyaṁ tu caturgharasamanvitam [k kh: catu-] || CMSS 8/5cd.

the common basis of all the Houses. In this way YKh (1) presents the essential features of the Western House:

> Kula, which is the manifold western House, has come from Akula.[1] Kula born from Akula is the varied Western House wherein, pervasive and omnipresent (sarvatomukha), the Śāmbhava state is merged. Free of the practice of Tantra (tantrācāra),[2] it is the extending expansion (prasara) that is Śambhu's Circle (śāmbhavamaṇḍala).[3] Ritual, worship with mantras, visualization and its object, sandhyā, the hermitage, the vow, (each) one separate and devoid of oneness, they are not worth a sixteenth part of the Western House.
>
> Like the sun in the sky or an elephant in the battlefield - such is the Western House that stands above all (others). Just as all rivers, great and small, enter the sea, so all Hermitages (āśrama) enter the Western System of the Lion (siṁhadarśana).
>
> The omnipresent (sarvatomukha) Western House has arisen in the Age of Strife. The Western House (vāruṇaṁ gṛham) is the Śrīkrama, divided into three divisions and three (corresponding) energies (trikalā). It is where (the goddess) Parā is present in six aspects. There the Vidyā is complete (pūrṇā) and is of three kinds. Endowed with the twelve-fold sequence (krama) (of energies), it is adorned with the Octad of Kula.
>
> Above it, divided into hidden and revealed, are the twelve accomplishments (siddhi). Conjoined to the Krama of Twenty-eight, it is adorned with the three Lineages (oli). There, the radiance of the maṇḍala is encompassed by the group of the eight Lions (of the Mothers of the Kulas). (It is endowed with) the group of eight Houses (gṛha), Kulācāra, the eight sacred seats and the sixty-four energies and is the arising of the sequence of eighty-six (pādas). It is the Śrīparākula, adorned with the twenty-seven depositions. It is the House that has arisen divided into the forms (mūrti) (of the goddess) and adorned with the knowledge of the planes (bhūmikā). The [1] Kula is the Tradition understood as the spiritual energy of the Bhairava of that Tradition who is Akula. All the Traditions are essentially such, thus they are aspects of the same Western House which is 'varied' and 'omnipresent'. Thus the Western House and the Eastern, which is most closely linked to it as its precursor, are so in a special way and so are specifically said to arise in this way and form.

---

[2] See above, p. 254 ff..

[3] The goddess is said to be established in the Śāmbhavamaṇḍala, which is essentially the Kramamaṇḍala understood to be the sphere of the liberated Śāmbhava state.

extending flow (prasara), which is the arising of the Western (transmission), is the thread (sūtra) illumined by Navātman. Arising in the Age of Strife, it is (completely) accomplished and is the disciple of Bhairava and Kubjikā. It contains the Eight Trees, the Eight Creepers (vallikā), the Eight Mata (schools) and the Eight Accomplishments.[1]

The Venerable House (śrīgṛha) is the arising of the Western (transmission). Free by virtue of the practice of Kula (kulācāra), it is the object of adoration of all the gods, Skyfarers and yogis and is attended by the Mothers, Yoginīs, Vīras, Bhairavas, and Rudras. The manifest Western (tradition) (alone) is successful in the Age of Strife. It is the entire Transmission of the Tradition of the Lion (siṁhāmnāyakrama). It is the Practice of the Lion (siṁhācāra) and (is the energy that) faces downwards.[2] The Western House of the Lion is the common basis of all the Houses.[3]

---

[1] These groups of eight are distributed in the eight sacred seats concerning which see intro. vol. 1, p. 697 ff..

[2] guptaprakaṭabhedena tasyordhve siddhidvādaśa |
aṣṭāviṁśakrame yuktaṁ ulitritayabhūṣitam [k, gh: ūlitritaye-; kh: ūli-] ||
tatra [kh: tratra] maṇḍalakoddyotaṁ [k, kh, gh: -kodyotaṁ] siṁhāṣṭakaparivṛtam [kh: sihā -] |
gṛhāṣṭakaṁ [k, kh, gh: -ka] kulācāraṁ pīṭhāṣṭakasamanvitam ||
catuḥṣaṣṭikalair [k: catuṣaṣṭi-; gh: catuṣaṣṭikalai] yuktaṁ ṣaḍāśītikramodayam [k, gh: -śītīkramodayaṁ] |
saptāviṁśatibhir nyāsair [k, kh, gh: -sai] bhūṣitaṁ śrīparākulam ||
mūrtibhedoditaṁ [k, kh, gh: trimūrtibheda uditaṁ] veśmaṁ bhūmikājñānabhūṣitam |
navātmādyotitaṁ sūtraṁ prasaraṁ paścimodayam ||
udayantaṁ [k, kh, gh: ādayaṁ] kalau siddhaṁ [k, kh, gh: siddheṁ] śiṣyaṁ [kh: śiṣya] bhairavakubjikām |
vṛkṣāṣṭau vallikāṣṭau ca matāṣṭaṁ siddhiraṣṭakam || Ibid. 4/231-235.

[3] kulācāravinirmuktaṁ śrīgṛhaṁ paścimodayam |
ārādhyaṁ sarvadevānāṁ [kh: -davānāṁ] khecarāṇāṁ tu yoginām ||
vīrabhairavarudrāṇāṁ mātṛyoginisevitam [k, kh: mātṛmaitrīrni.-; gh: mātṛmaitrīni.-] |
paścimaṁ uditaṁ [gh: -te] veśmaṁ kalikāle [gh: -kālaṁ] tu siddhyati ||
siṁhāmnāyakramaṁ [k, gh: siṁhāsnāya-] sarvaṁ siṁhācāra adhomukhī [k: adyo-; kh: adhyo-; gh: agho-] |
siṁhakaṁ paścimaṁ veśmaṁ sarvagṛhasamāśrayam [k, kh, gh: -samaśrayaṁ] || Ibid. 4/236-238.
The colophon here says:

This is the sūtra, which is part of the (Tantra of) Twenty-four Thousand (verses), concerned with the description of the Western House. (iti caturviṁśatisāhasre (k: -sraṁ) paścimagṛhavarṇanasūtram |)

The Eastern Tradition (Pūrvāmnāya)

(Now) I will tell (you) about the arising (udaya) (of the tradition) that gives bliss and accomplishment in the Kṛta Age. (The teacher here) with senses subdued (vinaya) is called Mīnanātha. He is the one who has descended (avatāra) into that House. He is the Lord (nātha) accompanied by (the goddess) Kulālī. They are four in accord with the diversity of (their) practice (caryā).[1] They exert authority and possess the various lineages (oli). The Lord (nātha) possesses the Six Lineages (oli).[2]

(There) the (goddess) Kulālikā has five faces. She has ten beautiful eyes, a divine (beautiful) form and is very powerful. Mounted on a ghost as (her) seat, she is yellow and possesses a beautiful, radiant power. Bearing the form (she assumes when engaged in Kaula) practice (caryā), she is profound (dhīrā); (her) form is tranquil (saumya) and sports with great (delight). Mighty with her strength, twelve princes accompany her.[3] Endowed with the eighteen practices (caryā), she wears yellow clothes and is auspicious. Residing in the Five-syllable (Vidyā),[4] she is the Girl (bālikā) Kulakaulinī. They have four Lions (as their seats), namely, the four U (Uḍḍīśanātha), Ṣa (Ṣaṣṭhanātha), Ca (Caryānātha) and Mi (Mitranātha).[5]

The following eight are called Kula: the family (santati) of the sacred seats, the Creeper (vallī), the monastery (maṭha), the Great Tree of Gesture, the family in the extent of the clan

---

[1] The 'four' to which the text refers here may be the four Yuganāthas.

[2] The Six Lineages are listed at the end of this passage. There they are called Kulas.

[3] The twelve princes are the disciples of Mīnanātha.

[4] This Vidyā probably consists of the Five Praṇavas. See KuKh 9/61-62ab and note 50.

[5] udayaṁ [gh: -ya] saṁpravakṣyāmi kṛte cānandaśiddhidam | vinayaṁ mīnanāthākhyaṁ avatāraṁ tu tadgṛhe [kh: tadgṛhaiṁ; gh: tadgṛheṁ] ||
kulālyā sahito nāthaś caryābhedena [k, kh, gh: -va] te catuḥ |
adhikāre pravartante ulibhedasamanvitāḥ [k, kh, gh: ūli- -taḥ] ||
ṣaḍolyā [k, kh, gh: -lyāṁ] sahito nāthaḥ pañcavaktrā [k, kh: -vaktra; gh: -vakra] kulālikā |
*sunetradaśakopetā [k, kh, gh: * * * daśakopetā] divyarūpā mahābalā [k, kh, gh: mahāvalāḥ]* ||
*pretāsanasamārūḍhā pītavarṇā sutejasā [kh: su * jasā]* |
caryārūpadharā dhīrā saumyamūrtir [k, kh, gh: -mūrti] mahālasā || rājaputrais tu sahitā [k, gh: -tāḥ; kh: -tāḥ |] dvādaśaiś ca balotkaṭā |
cāryāṣṭādaśasaṁyuktā pītāmbaradharā śubhā ||
pañcākṣare [k, kh, gh: -reḥ] sthitā sā tu kulakaulinibālikā [gh: -kaulenivāstikā] |
teṣāṁ [gh: tesāṁ] catvāri siṁhāś ca [k, kh, gh: cā] uṣacamicatuṣṭayam [k, kh, gh: ūṣacaṁmī-] ||
Ibid. 4/239-244.

(gotragocara), the extent of the clan itself, the type of Transmission (kramabheda) and the secret language (chomā).[1]

Kula has arisen from Akula and that (Kula) is praised as Bhairava. Therefore the goddess is eight-fold and so also Kula is the eight groups of eight (Yoginīs and Bhairavas).[2] She is called the Energy of Gesture (mudrāśakti) and, present in all things (sarvasthā), she is (herself) the tradition (maṭhikā). One should know that the Family (santāna) is the Śrīmata and that the Clan is Bhairava. The extent (gocara) is the Five Jewels, while the Transmission (krama) is said to be the Śrīmata. My modality (bheda) is at the extremity of the End of the Twelve, beyond that is the Void of Kuṇḍalinī[3] (sūṣmā).[4]

Those who are overcome with greed and the like do what is forbidden. The goddesses take away from him whatever they have uttered before. Then the goddesses take away from the one who has transgressed Śiva's pledge (whatever) other accomplishment (he may have achieved). The Siddhas of the Śrīsamaya and the rest, who are in the maṇḍala have been mentioned in due order.

Such is the Śāmbhava piercing, beyond thought, one should know it for oneself. It has been explained through the venerable Process of Absorption (alaṁgrāsakrama). By recollecting the [1] These eight are similar to the constituents of a sacred seat (see intro. vol. 1, p. 697 ff.) from which the teachings are transmitted through the lineage of teachers. This is how each tradition (āmnāya) is also. Here identified as a Kula, each āmnāya has seats of its own particular Transmission (kramabheda), lineages (here called ‘creepers’), their own spiritual clan (gotra) and affiliations. In this case it is linked to the four seats of the Western Transmission, presumably because it is its precursor. Again, each has its own secret convention or ‘language’ with which the adepts of that Tradition communicate with Yoginīs and each other (see KuKh vol. 4, appendix 4).

---

[2] Here again, the system of eight common to all the YKh. The eightfold goddess manifests as the Eight Mothers from which the eight groups of eight Yoginīs and their Bhairavas are derived. We have seen similar groups of eight, centred around the Eight Lions, that is, Mothers, mentioned in relation to the Western Tradition. In the same way, the Bhairava of the Southern Tradition has eight faces and sixty-four energies.

[3] See KuKh 2/18 and note.

[4] pīṭhasantatir [k, kh, gh: -ti] vallī ca maṭhaṁ [k, kh, gh: maṁṭhaṁ] mudrā mahātaru |
*gotragocarasantānaṁ gotragocarameva [kh: * * -] ca* ||
kramabhedaṁ ca chommā [k, gh: śo-] ca aṣṭau ye kulasaṁjñakāḥ |
akulāt kulam utpannaṁ [k, kh, gh: -nna] bhairavaṁ tac [k, kh, gh: ta] ca kīrtitam ||
tasmād aṣṭavidhā [k, kh: daṣṭa-; gh: ṛṣṭa-] devī tataś cāṣṭāṣṭakaṁ kulam |
mudrāśaktiḥ [k, kh, gh: -śakti] samākhyātā sarvasthā maṭhikā bhavet ||
santānaṁ śrīmataṁ jñeyaṁ gotraṁ [k, gh: gotra] bhairavam eva ca |
gocaraṁ pañcaratnaṁ ca kramaṁ śrīmatam ucyate ||
bhedaṁ me dvādaśāntāntaṁ sūṣmāśūnyam [k, gh: śośmā-; kh: cchośmā-] ataḥ param |
Ibid. 4/245-249ab.

Buddhist and other Siddhas the piercing (vedha) which is devoid of thought constructs and directly perceptible (pratyakṣa) arises in order (to realise) the reality beyond the senses. The entire knowledge (attained by means of this) piercing is the Speech (vācā) (that arises) by recollecting the union (yoga) of the causes. The Śāmbhava piercing takes place in this way both at a great distance and nearby.

The piercing by Rudra's power (śakti) is said to (take place) within the six types of mantras. It manifests in all (the forms of) piercing and is the desired attainment (adhigati) of the Command of the root transmission.

Prabhu, Yogin, Ānanda, Āvalī, Ātīta, Pāda, and the rest called Kulas (are) all (like) rivers that fall into the root transmission. They, the princes and the gods, bodies (piṇḍa), forests (aṭavi), villages (palli), houses and others that are born from the root (transmission) are like rivers (that flow) from the mountain of Kula.[1]

---

[1] lobhādirabhibhūtāni niṣidham ācaranti [k, kh, gh: niṣedhādā-] te || pūrvoccāritaṁ [k, kh, gh: pūrvvāccārita] yat kiñcit tasya devyo [k, kh, gh: devyā] haranti te | *lobhādibhir abhibhūto [k, kh, g: lobhādi * ra-] niṣidham ācaret tu [k, kh, gh: nirṣaṭvamācariti] yaḥ* ||
punar anyat [k, kh, gh: punadravyāt] devyas tasya [gh: devyāstasya] haranti [k, gh: harati; kh: harati |] śivasamayadrohiṇaḥ [k, kh, gh: siva-] siddhim |
śrīsamayādisiddhāḥ [k, kh, gh: śrīmajñayādi-] proktā vai yatra maṇḍale kramāt [k, kh, gh: kramataḥ] ||
tāvac [k, kh: tavati] ca śāmbhavo [k., kh, gh: -va] vedhaḥ cintātītaḥ svayaṁ vedyaḥ ||
śrīmadalaṁgrāsakramagadito [k, kh, gh: -makramagaditri] bauddhādisiddhasaṁsmaraṇāt [k, kh, gh: -sasmaraṇāt] jāyate [k, kh: jāyeta; gh: jāyaṁta] nirvikalpaḥ [k, gh: -kalpaṁ; kh: tirvikalpaṁ] pratyakṣaḥ [k, kh, gh: -kṣa] parokṣārthe [k, kh, gh: parākṣayo] vedhaḥ |
kāraṇayogasmaraṇād [k, kh: -yogiśmaraṇād] vācaiva samastavedhavijñānaṁ dūre nikaṭe ca tathā pravartate śāmbhavo vedhaḥ [k, kh, gh: vedhaṁḥ] ||
yo rudraśaktivedhaḥ [k, kh, gh: -bhedaḥ] prokto mantreṣu ṣaḍvidheṣu [k, kh, gh: ṣadvidhe] vai [k, kh, gh: vi] kule sa sphurati sarvavedheṣṭādhigatimūlakramājñāyā [kh: -mūla * * ?] ||
*prabhuyogyānandāvalyātītapādādikāḥ [k, gh: prattayogyānaṁdā-; kh: * ?yogyānaṁdā-] kulasaṁjñā [k, kh, gh: kule-] nadyo [k, kh, gh: + nadī etāviva] patanti mūlakrame sarvāḥ ||
te [k, kh, gh: ye] rājaputrāś cāmarapiṇḍāṭavikapalligṛhabhedāḥ [k, kh: rājaputracāmaraciṁcilpāṭavika-; gh: rājaputracāmaraciṁcilpādavika-] te 'nye 'pi ca mūlolijāḥ [k, kh, gh: -lejāḥ] sarito [k, kh, gh: saritā] yathādrikulāt || Ibid. 4/249cd-250 and prose passage between 4/250 and 251.

Next comes a list of the Siddhas of the Tradition of the Eastern House (pūrvagṛhāmnāya). Each name is preceded by 'śrī' and ends with 'pāda':

Mārjāra, Jaya, Mahālakṣmī, Kalāpa, Macchanda, Vaṭuka, Kumāra, Yoga, Vicitra, Devīputra, Mātṛputra, and Śrīkaṇṭha. (This is) the sequence of the circle of the twelve persons (puruṣamaṇḍala). Aghora, Padma, Mahānātha, Guhādhipati, Anādikanātha, Karahāṭa, Lakṣaṇanātha, Kukāra, Vicitrāṅgī, Jaṁbhūta, Sarvadeveśvarī, Sarvaviśveśvarī, Kāmeśvarī, Kāmarūpapīṭha, Udyāṇapīṭha, Jālandharapīṭha, Pūrṇagiripīṭha, Kramodaya, Alaṁgrāsa, and Kāraṇayoga.

The presentations of this Tradition in all the sources link it to Matsyendranātha, who is called Mīnanātha here.[1] According to the CMSS the Pūrvāmnāya is a combination of Matsyendra's school and Trika. In this context, the CMSS, like the KRU, also supplies details relating to the four Yuganāthas, but does so more extensively. The following table has been drawn up from two sources.[2] One is the CMSS[3] and the other the Kulakriḍāvatāra,[4] paraphrased by Abhinavagupta in his Tāntrāloka.[5] Both sources supply the names of the six disciples of Matsyendranātha who founded lineages (ovallī, kula), the names of the lineages and the sacred seats from which they were propagated. The CMSS presents a brief hagiography of each disciple. Although they all took initiation from Matsyendranātha, each of them undertook the observance of a vow (vrata) under the guidance of another teacher. Their names are listed along with those of the town (ghara) and adjacent grove (vana) where they practiced. The location of this town is stated in relation to Śrīśaila and the duration each one observed his vow. The Kulakrīḍāvatāra also lists a separate ghara and pallī for each one. The word ghara means 'house'. The CMSS uses this word in the sense of 'town' with reference to the place where the six practiced their spiritual discipline. The names of these places in the two sources differ and so have been listed in separate columns. Those names drawn from the CMSS are in the column labelled 'town' and those from the Kulakrīḍāvatāra, ghara, which Jayaratha defines as the

---

The colophon here says: (This is) the Tradition of the Eastern House (iti pūrvagṛhāmnāyam).
[1] YKh (1) refers to this link again in the following lines:

The remnant (ucchiṣṭa) of the food (offered to that) Wheel was thrown into the ocean of milk and all that Kaulika food (caru) was eaten by a fish. The (Siddha) Macchanda of the Age of Strife was there called Mīna. He is famous in the Pūrvāmnāya. (The goddess) Maṅgalā is in that House.

tasya cakrasya ucchiṣṭaṁ [kh, gh: uchiṣṭa] prakṣiptaṁ [kh: ?] kṣīrasāgare [kh: ?] |
matsyena [k, kh, gh: matsena] bhakṣitaṁ [k, kh, gh: cakṣitaṁ] tac ca samastaṁ carukaulikam ||
mīnākhyaṁ tatra sambhūtaṁ macchandaṁ [k, kh, gh: maṁchaṁdaṁ] sa kalau yuge [k, kh, gh: yugo] |
pūrvāmnāye prasiddho 'sau [k, kh, gh: prasiddhā-] maṅgalā [gh: magalā] nāma [k, kh, gh: kāma] tadgṛhe || YKh (1) 5/61-62.
[2] Cf. Dyczkowski 1989: 70 and Gnoli 1999: 670. See also Pandey 1963: 544-546.
[3] CMSS 7/60-99.
[4] The name of this text may well be derived from the main topic to which it was dedicated, namely, the 'the descent of the play' of union between the Kula teachers and their consorts, which generates their spiritual lineages. This expression is a common a way of representing this event in the sources. It appears in this sense in the CMSS, where we read with reference to a Yuganātha and his consort: Such is the 'descent of the play', that is, the union of the two who are to be established (krīḍāvatāraṁ militaṁ dvayoḥ saṁpadyayos tathā || CMSS 7/60cd).
[5] TĀ 29/29cd-39. See Dyczkowski 1988: 79-85.

'location of a hermitage' (āśramasthāna). The word pallī means 'a small village' that Jayaratha says is the place where the adept begged for alms (bhikṣāsthāna). The Kulakrīḍāvatāra adds a secret gesture (mudrā) for each one. These are formed by showing one by one the fingers of the right hand. The Kulakrīḍāvatāra also lists a chummā for each one. Normally the term chummā (chommā, chummikā) means a 'secret sign'[1] or 'secret name'.[2] But in this case, according to Jayaratha, they are 'secret places'. These are Wheels (cakra) in the subtle body where the adepts are worshipped internally.[3] Abhinava declares that: 'If one who knows (these) conventional signs (saṁketa) roams in the sacred seats (pītha) desiring accomplishments (siddhi), he quickly attains all he desires from the mouth of the Yoginī.' Jayaratha quotes a Tantra: 'It is said that the gesture is that of the Nātha of (a particular) lineage. Extending the hand and displaying it along with the (utterance of the) name (of his lineage) and (the corresponding) (seed) syllable in due order, they will come to know (the adept's) own Kula lineage.'[4]

---

[1] See, for example, HT vol. 1 p. 66.
[2] This is according to SvT 15/1. Kṣemarāja glosses these 'secret names' as 'technical terms' (pāribhāṣikī saṁjñā).
[3] See Gnoli 1999: 553 n.1 and 4.
[4] TĀ 29/40 and commentary.

12. Table of the Lineages Founded by the Six Disciples of Matsyendranāatha

Ovalli	Prince	Master	Pīṭha	Ghara	Pallī	Town	Direction in relation to Śrīśaila	Grove	Time of the Vow	Mudrā	Chummā
Bodhi	Amara	Siddha-nātha	Tripurottara	Paṭṭilla	Dakṣiṇā-vrata	Ḍohāla	South	Kambili	12 years	right thumb	Beyond the End of the Twelve
Prabhu	Varadeva	Vidyānanda	Kāmada	Karabilla	Kumbhā-rika	Kuṇḍī	West	?	?	right index	Kuṇḍalinī
Pāda	Citra	Kaula-siṁha muni	Aṭṭahāsa	Ambilla	Billa	Daṇḍa-ratna	North	Bilva	12 years	right middle	Between eyebrows
Ānanda	Ali	Śṛṅgāla-muni	Devikoṭṭa	Pulinda	Aḍavī	Balahoma	East	Pāya	7 years	right ring	Heart
Yogin	Vindhya	Śāṇḍilya-muni	Dakṣiṇādi	Śarabilla	Akṣara	Piṇḍa	South-west	Khaira	25 years	right little finger	Navel
Avali	Guḍika	Candra-bimba	Kaulagiri	Aḍabilla	Ḍombī	Gauḍika	North-west	Nāri-kela	8 years	right little finger	Genitals

The late CMSS adds a new dimension to the way the Kubjikā Tantras understand the 'previous' (pūrva) or, as the CMSS considers it to be, the 'eastern' (pūrva) transmission. This is its connection with Trika. According to the CMSS, the Trikamaṭhikā is the embodiment of the goddess who emanates three-fold as the energy of Moon (as Candriṇī), Sun (as Bhāskarī) and Fire (as Tejotkaṭā). These three energies descend into the world as the three Kula teachers, Mīnanātha, Meṣapāda and Kūrmanātha, who belong to the Kali, Tretā and Dvāpara Ages, respectively. Khagendranātha, the Kula teacher of the Kṛta Age belongs to the Vyomārdhamaṭhikā. These four constitute the Trikamaṭhikā, which is that of the line of Siddhas known as the Tradition of the Elders (vṛddhavalli). It is in this tradition that Siddhanātha incarnated in this world during each of the four Ages as a Kaula master.[1]

The Southern Tradition (Dakṣiṇāmnāya)

According to YKh (1), this āmnāya is governed by Śikhārāja, the god of the goddess's Topknot (śikhā). He is a form of Svacchandabhairava.[2] Normally he has five faces, whereas this form has eight. This form is probably meant to align him with the main form of Bhairava of YKh (1) who is linked to the Sixty-four Yoginīs. Each of his eight faces is related to the Bhairava and the Mother who are the lords (nāyaka and nāyikā) of the corresponding group of eight Yoginīs. Aghoreśvarī is the consort of Svacchandabhairava. We have seen that she is identified with Kubjikā in several places in our sources.[3] This identification is implicit here also. The thirty-two energies of Bhairava may correspond to the syllables of his mantra or those of the Vidyā of his consort.

> (Now) I will talk about the Southern House, which is that of Bhairava. The authority (here) is the Bhairava of Aghoreśvarī. Endowed with thirty-two energies, (he is) Navātman accompanied by Bhairavī, the group of eight Bhairavas and the eight Mothers,

[1] Summary of CMSS 7/45-54; see Dyczkowski 1989: 68-71. Note that the CMSS's presentation of the Trikamaṭhikā is an evident echo of the manner Kashmiri Śaivites, starting from Somānanda in the end of the 9th century, conceived their tradition as consisting of 'three and a half' māṭhikās. Of these, the last 'half' (ardha) maṭhikā, so-called because it was transmitted by a woman, is specifically the Kaula Trika tradition of Kashmir. The CMSS's representation of these ciphers strongly suggests that the author of this text was acquainted with the Kashmiri Trika school and its self-representation in this way. Thus, this is further evidence of the influence of Kashmiri Śaivism on the CMSS.

[2] See KuKh vol. 2, appendix 3.

[3] See above, p. 49 ff..

Brahmāṇī and the rest, Śikhārāja, the Five Suns,[1] the long vowels, and is adorned with Jātaveda (the sacrificial fire). (Accompanied by) the Five Praṇavas and the thirty-two Bhairavas, he is the lord (nāyaka) there in the south.[2]

Accompanied by the Sun, Moon and Fire, adorned with the thirteen, endowed with the energy of Sound and the Drop, he is the lord of the seed-syllables in the south. He is the very powerful Bhairava, the king of the Tantras of the south. O fair lady, the gesture (there) is the Ocean of the Yoni. She is the Bhairavī Daṁṣṭriṇī. In the south, the gesture is Karālinī and the seat is the Great Ghost. It is associated with the three lines of teachers, Gaṇeśa and Vaṭuka. The god has a large form (mūrti) and eight faces, (each with) three eyes. He is accompanied by the consort (śakti) mentioned above and is endowed with the sixty-four energies.[3]

Bhairava, the Lord of the gods, the Great Lord, has been described (to you). He is the fearsome lord of the Tantras of the Left. Black, (his) consort (śakti) accompanies him. O Śambhu, this is the Southern Tradition (dakṣiṇāmnāya) explained in (this) compendium of the Tantras. He is the preferred authority in the south and is adorned with Śikhārāja. Devoid of Kula and established by the method prescribed by the Lion Transmission (siṁhakrama), it has authority in the Dvāpara Age and is part of the Śrīkrama. Such is the Southern House, which bestows (much) fruit, recommended to you.[4]

---

[1] The Five Suns are probably the Five Praṇavas.

[2] dakṣiṇaṁ kathayiṣyāmi gṛhaṁ vai bhairavasya tu | dakṣiṇe adhikārī ca aghoreśvaribhairavam ||
dvātriṁśaśaktisaṁyuktaṁ [kh: -cchakti-] navātmā bhairavīyutam |
bhairavāṣṭakasahitaṁ brahmaṇyādyaṣṭasaṁyutam ||
śikhārājena saṁyuktaṁ [kh: saṁyutaṁ] pañcasūryena bheditam |
dīrghasvarasamākrāntaṁ jātavedena maṇḍitam ||
lopya pañca bhakāṇi (?) praṇavaiśca samanvitam |
dvātṛṁsabhairavair [k, kh, gh: -savderavair] yuktaṁ] dakṣiṇe tatra nāyakam || Ibid. 4/251-254.

[3] ravisomahaver yuktaṁ [k, gh: -havi muktaṁ; kh: -havir muktaṁ] trayodaśena [k, kh, gh: tradodaśena] bhūṣitam | nādabindukalākrāntaṁ dakṣiṇe bījanāyakam ||
bhairavaṁ taṁ mahātejaṁ tantrarājaṁ tu dakṣiṇe |
mudrā yonyārṇavā bhadre daṁṣṭriṇyā [k, kh, gh: -ṇyād] bhairavī tu sā ||
dakṣe karālinī mudrā mahāpretaṁ tu āsanam |
gurupaṅktitrayair [k, kh, gh: -ye] yuktaṁ gaṇeśavaṭukānvitam ||
mahāmūrtidharaṁ devaṁ aṣṭavaktraṁ [kh: -vaktra] trilocanam |
pūrvoktaśaktisahitaṁ [k, kh, gh: -sakti-] catuḥṣaṣṭikalair yutam || Ibid. 4/255-258.

[4] kathitaṁ devadeveśaṁ bhairavaṁ ca mahāprabhu [k, kh, gh: -prabhum] |

The CMSS differs substantial here from the YKh (1). According to the CMSS, the goddess Kāmeśvarī governs this āmnāya. The opening verses of the CMSS present Kubjikā as a Nityā, thus associating her particularly with Kāma. This is how she appears in this āmnāya, which was linked early on in the Śrīvidyā tradition with Tripurā.[1] The reader is referred to an earlier publication for further details.[2]

The Northern Tradition (Uttarāmnāya)

> I will tell (you now) about the Northern (tradition) that has authority (in the Tretā Age) at the end of Dvāpara. Along with the Mahānaya division (of the Kaula schools), (the Bhairava of this tradition) is seated on a lotus and a ghost. His form (mūrti) is large and, a hero (vīra), he is accompanied by Asitā (the Black One) and is pleasing. Endowed with the Great Rule, he is light red and has beautiful eyes. His bodily form is large and fierce (raudra) and he is the embodiment of the bliss of wine. In his upraised hand, he holds a piece of human flesh and is adorned with eight skulls. He is angry and has ten arms. He is adorned with the energy (mātra) of mantras and is endowed with the fifty seed-syllables (formed from the letters of the alphabet). . . . (?) The Asitā Vidyā of seventeen syllables abides self-established (along with him). She possesses nine energies[3] and fifty seed-syllables.[4]

---

vāmāgamasya [k, kh, gh: -gayasya] ghopeśaṁ [k, kh, gh: ghoreśī] asitaṁ [k, kh, gh: aśitaṁ] śaktisaṁyutam ||
dakṣiṇāmnāyam idaṁ śambho kathitaṁ tantrasaṁgrahe [k, gh: tatra-] |
dakṣiṇeṣṭadhikārī ca śikhārājena maṇḍitam ||
siṁhakramavidhānena saṁsthitaṁ kulavarjitam |
*dvāpare [kh: * * ] hyadhikārī ca śrīkrame preṣaṇāvatam (?) ||
evaṁ tad [k, kh, gh: ta] dakṣiṇaṁ veśmaṁ [k, kh: vesma] vihitaṁ [k, kh, gh: vihidaṁ] te phalapradam | Ibid. 4/259-262ab.

The colophon here reads: This is the sūtra of the Southern Lion Seat (iti dakṣiṇa-siṁhāsanasūtram).

[1] See above, p. 347.
[2] See Dyczkowski 1988: 71, 74-75.
[3] The nine energies of the goddess may be those of the nine syllables of Navātman.
[4] uttaraṁ saṁpravakṣyāmi dvāparānte.adhikāriṇī [k, kh, gh: dvāpareṣṭadhikāriṇī] || mahānayaprabhedena pretapadmopari sthitam |
mahāmūrtidharaṁ vīraṁ asitāsahitaṁ [k, kh, gh: aśitā-] priyam ||
mahāsamayasaṁyuktaṁ āraktābhaṁ sulocanam |
mahāmūrtidharaṁ [gh: -ra] raudraṁ madirānandavigraham [k, kh, gh: maṁ-] ||
nṛmāṁsordhvakare [k, kh, gh: nṛmāsārddhakara] dattaṁ [k, kh, gh: daṁtaṁ] kapālāṣṭakaśobhitam |

> The form (of the deities) is like that of a couple (yugmikā) and is accompanied by the line of teachers. She is covered with the ashes of a funeral pyre and is beautiful by virtue of the Praṇava (that inwardly adorns her). Accompanied by Bhairavas and Vaṭuka, her form is a lion.
>
> Mounted on the seed-syllable of the Three Heads, he wanders through the three worlds. She is the great and venerable Śāmbhavī energy that operates within the energy of consciousness. When angry she destroys, when content she is the means to achieve success (siddhi). Devoted to the practice of heroes (vīracaryā), she is (one with the goddess) Kulālikā in the Western (tradition). Thus, that goddess is passionate (raktā) and initiated into the Western Transmission.[1]

Like the presentations of the other traditions, this one is also an ideal accomodation made from the perspective of the Kubjikā tradition and, especially, the system expounded in the YKh. Even so, it is not a completely unrealistic assessment of this āmnāya. The Northern Tradition is the āmnāya of the Mahānaya governed by Kālī, who is called Asitā in the following sūtra. Her Vidyā is the seventeen syllable Vidyā of Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī, who is indeed the form of Kālī worshipped in the Mahānaya. The Kālīkrama came to be called Mahānaya – the Great Teaching - in Kashmiri sources. This name for the Kālīkrama is unknown, or at any rate very rare, in the earliest Tantras related to the Kālīkrama. We find it several times in the Yonigahvaratantra, which was 'brought down to

---

*daśabāhusthitaṁ kruddhaṁ [k, kh, gh: kurddhaṁ] mantramātravibhūṣitam [k, kh, gh: -mātrī-; kh: -vibhū * taṁ]* || bījapañcāśabhir [k, kh, gh: -bhi] yuktaṁ rāvādyoktādhipānvitam [k, kh, gh: rāvāddhauktādhapānvitaṁ] (?) |
daśasaptākṣarā vidyā asitā sā svayaṁsthitā [kh: svayaṁsthiyaṁsthitā] ||
*navaśaktiyutā sā tu bījapañcāśabhir [kh: vī -] yutā | Ibid. 4/262cd-267ab.

[1] yugmakā sadṛśā mūrtir [k: mūkti; gh: mūrkti] gurupaṅktisamanvitā [k, gh, kh: --tāṁ] ||
praṇavena [k, kh: pranavena] suśobhāḍhyā [k, kh: susobhāḍhyaṁ; gh: susobhādyaṁ] citibhasmāvaguṇṭhitā [k, kh, gh: -taṁ] |
bhairavavaṭukair [k, kh, gh: bhairave-] yuktā [k, kh, gh: yuktaṁ] siṁharūpeṇa [k, kh, gh: saha-] saṁsthitā [k, kh, gh: -taṁ] ||
trimuṇḍabījam ārūḍhā [k, kh, gh: -ḍhāṁ] bhramate bhuvanatrayam |
mahāśrīśāśvatā [k, kh, gh: -svatā] śaktiḥ [k, kh, gh: missing] cicchaktyantaracāriṇī [k, gh: ciśaṁktyatara-; kh: -taracāriṇī] ||
*saṁhārakāriṇī [k, gh: -ṇīṁ] kruddhā saṁtuṣṭā siddhisādhikā [k, kh, gh: siddhisā * ] |
vīracaryāratā sā tu paścime sā kulālikā ||
tena raktā tu sā devī paścimakramadīkṣitā [k, kh: paścime-] | Ibid. 4/267cd-271ab.

The colophon here reads: This is the sūtra of the arising of the Northern (Tradition) (ity uttarodayasūtram).

earth' by Jñānanetra.[1] There it is the name of the Vidyā of the goddess[2] and, indeed, the name of the teaching that was transmitted from the goddess.[3] It became such a standard name for the Kashmiri Kālīkrama that as many as three text in that tradition are called Light of the Great Teaching (Mahānayaprakāśa). Even so, it appears to be a relatively late name. Thus, the Kramasadbhāva to which Śitikaṇṭha, the author of one of these texts, mentions as a prime authority, does not refer to the system in this way. Thus, we may infer that this part, at least of the YKh, was probably not redacted prior to Jñānanetra, that is, the ninth century.

The JY does not refer to the Kālīkrama as the Northern Tradition (āmnāya) nor does it relate it to the 'northern seat' - uttarapīṭha, as later sources do. This takes place, it seems, when the Kālīkrama becomes an independent tradition in its own right. The few early independent Kālīkrama sources that have been recovered are consistent in this respect. Thus, just after the first benedictory verse, the YGT declares that it was revealed in the cremation ground of Karavīra in the 'northern seat' (uttarapīṭha)[4] which is identified with Oḍiyāna. The DP opens with the same benedictory verse and then, like the YGT, immediately refers to the same cremation ground and the 'northern seat' as its place of origin.[5] The 'northern seat' is mentioned in the colophons of both these Kālīkrama works, as it is in those of the Kramasadbhāva, as their place of origin.[6] This ascription may well be related to the actual place of origin of the Kālīkrama in North India. Indeed, the KS specifies that 'the great and excellent seat called Oḍiyāna is in the venerable northern quarter.'[7] Oḍiyāna, may well have been located in the north-west of India in what was once 'greater Kashmir'.[8] Internal evidence also suggests that these texts originated in Kashmir or nearby. One such piece of evidence is the

---

[1] yonigahvaramuddhṛtya mantrasadbhāvamuttamam ||
śrījñānanetranāthena bhūtalasaṁprakāśitam | YGT fl. 1a.
mahānaye paraṁ ghoraṁ raudraṁ vīryaparākramam | YGT fl. 29a.
bindunādena cākrāntaṁ kūṭo 'yaṁ tu mahānaye | Ibid. fl. 31b.
[2] saptādasākṣarā vidyā bhāsā cakrasya bhāsakā ||
mahānayeti vikhyātā kandasiddhikarā śubhā | Ibid. fl. 33a-33b.
[3] devī śrīvīrasiṁhākhyaṁ [-saṁhākhya] svāminī prasphatā bhuvi |
tatpādapadmayugalāt prāptaṁ caiva mahānayam || Ibid. fl. 34a.
[4] śrīmaduttarapīṭhe tu śmaśāne karavīrake | YGT fol. 1a.
[5] śrīmaduttarapīṭhasya [k: śrīmaduttaraṁ-] śmaśānaṁ karavīrakam | DP 1/3ab
śrīmaduttarapīṭhe 'smināyātaṁ [k, kh, g: -sminnāyātaṁ] yādṛśaṁ sthitam || Ibid. 7/9cd ||
[6] The colophons of the DP begin: iti śrīmaduttarapīṭhodbhūte śrīśrīnāthāvatārite
Similarly those of the KS begin: iti śrīmaduttarapīṭhavinirgate [k: -madduttara-] śrīnāthapādāvatārite
[7] śrīmaduttaradigbhāge pīṭhaṁ pīṭhavaraṁ mahat | oḍiyānābhidhānaṁ tu siddhayoginisevitam ||
tasmin pīṭhavare ramye śmaśānaṁ karavīrakam | KS 7/5-6ab = KuKauM 15/59-60ab.
[8] See Dyczkowski 1987: 3.

presence of the term 'vimarśa' in the KS.[1] Although a common and important term in Kashmiri Śaiva texts, it is rarely found in the primary sources.[2] This leads us to surmise tentatively that it was written in Kashmir. Finally, we note that the last colophon of the YGT refers to the tradition that comes from the 'northern seat' as the Northern Tradition (uttarāmnāya).[3] Although the other two early sources we have referred to do not do so, it appears in the later sources as a way of referring to the Kālīkrama. Śitikaṇṭha refers to the 'uttarāmnāya' in his MP as the most excellent.[4] Similarly, Maheśvarānanda extolls it his MM.[5]

The Kālīkrama, also called Kālīkula, is well known to the JY, which incorporates it into its own teachings. However, although it is a well developed Kula, it is not yet associated with Matsyendranātha. This development took place when the Kālīkula assumed an independent status with Tantras of its own. Matsyendra and his mythical predecessors in previous aeons are worshiped in the maṇḍala of the teachers along with their consorts and the spiritual descendents of Matsyendranātha as a prelude to the Kula ritual described by Abhinava in chapter twenty-nine of the TĀ. A major source of this complex ritual constructed by Abhinava is the Mādhavakula, that is, the fourth ṣaṭka of the JY, especially chapter 23. Another is the Kularatnamālā, which, like the JY, was an important Kālī Tantra. Abhinava integrates these Kālī sources with the Trika, which is represented there by the Tantrasadbhāva. Thus he presents a quintessential Kaula rite distilled from these two major traditions, a procedure which finds scriptural antecedents and support in synthesis of the two elaborated in the Devyāyāmala.

We have seen that Jñānanetra, who founded the Kashmiri Kālīkrama, belonged to the middle of the ninth century. Abhinava postdates him by over a century. Even so, it is not clear to what degree that the Kālīkrama had developed before him. Abhinava does quote some works that, judging by their name and the context in which he refers to them, belonged to that tradition.[6] However, Jayaratha

---

[1] For example, with reference to Śāmbhavī, the KS says that she is vimarśagrasanākulā (KS 2/121ab).

[2] See Dyczkowski 2004: 38 n. 27.

[3] ityuttarāmnāye śrī uṁkārapīṭhavinirgate śrīcaṇḍabhairave ṣoḍaśasahasre udite [udvite] yonigahvaraṁ samāptam || Final colophon of the YG.

[4] para utkṛṣṭa uttarāmnāyaḥ MP (1) p. 14.

[5] auttarāmnāyādyaśeṣaśāstrārthāvabodhaśikṣāśālitvāt MM p. 6 tattadauttarāmnāyodghoṣitatvena parāmṛśyamāna iti yāvat Ibid. p. 143
tathā tathā śivas tasyāś caitanyamupabṛṁhayan |
arthatattvam upādikṣad auttarāmnāyasaṁvidām || Ibid. p. 189

[6] These include the Kālīkula, Kālīmukha, and Kālīkulavidhi. Important is the Ūrmikaulārṇava. This is a Kālīkrama text attributed to Matsyendranātha, which has survived in two Nepalese manuscripts (see bibliography). Abhinava refers to it as 'the form of the tradition of the Siddhas' (siddhasantānarūpaka) (TĀ 2/48). He quotes it as many as eight times in his Tantrāloka. See Gnoli 1999: 706.

quotes several more that one would suppose Abhinava would have studied had they been available to him. Amongst them are the Devīpañcaśataka and the Kramasadbhāva. Jayaratha quotes both extensively in his commentary of Abhinava's exposition of the Twelve Kālīs. The former is particularly interesting as it contains an exposition of the same twelve, described one by one. The divergence between the two presentations is stricking. Not only are most of the Kālīs substantially different, in several instances, their order is different. This change was certainly Abhinava's work. The order in the DP is virtually that of the JY, which Jayaratha also quotes but without naming his source. It is surprising that Abhinava does not refer to either the KS or the DP, which Jayaratha considers to be very important sources.

Thus, in brief, we may distinguish three phases in one line of development of the Kālīkrama. The Kālīmata of the Jayarathayāmala, represents the first. Although we have no direct proof of this, we may safely assume that it preceded the second phase initiated by Jñānanetra in the middle of the ninth century. While the teachings of the Kālīkrama are embedded in the JY which considers itself to be a Tantra of the Bhairava current, the second phase is heralded by the emergence of Jñānanetra. He 'brought down to earth' at least one Tantra and wrote independent works. The Tantra – the Yonigahvara – is said to have originated in the uttarapīṭha, which is the locus of an independent Kaula tradition that had its roots in the Kaulism established by Matsyendranātha. The Tantras of the uttarapīṭha on the one hand and and their transmission and the development of an independent Kashmiri tradition based on them of which Jñānanetra is the founder, are two streams of this phase.

The third phase is no longer shrouded in the anonymity of scripture. The oral transmission through the lineage founded by Jñānanetra emerges in the works of the teachers of his lineage. This process reaches a peak in the system presented by three texts recovered to date, all of which are called Mahānayaprakāśa. This third phase is the ultimate development of the Mahānaya founded by Jñānanetra. The first of these three texts was probably the one written by Śiṭhikaṇṭha. As the root text is in old Kashmiri, there can be no doubt that it was written in Kashmir. The following two, first by Arṇasiṁha and then another by an unknown author are probably from the south of India where Kashmiri Śaivism and its branches was popular for two or three centuries from the turn of the first millennium. There in Tamil Nadu, the land of the Cola kings, Maheśvarānanda wrote his Mahārthamañjarī probably in the 13th century. In this work he presents a synthesis of fully developed Kashmiri Śaivism, which he calls Trika, with the Mahānaya of Arṇasiṁha and the Śrīvidyā tradition (saubhāgyasaṁpradaya) that had emerged hardly three or four generations before him.

Although there are substantial variations between them, the three Mahānāyaprakāśas expound essentially the same system, to which they each contribute in their own way. The core of this system is the Pañcavāhakrama – the Sequence of the Five Currents. The Five Currents are, essentially, the procession of energies in the five cycles of creation, persistence, withdrawal, the inexplicable (anākhyā) and illumination (bhāsā). This core is already presented in what is probably one of the last texts of the second phase: the Kramasadbhāva. The importance of this text in this respect is acknowledged by Śithikaṇṭha.[1] A fragment has been recovered in one Nepalese manuscript. Another part of it is preserved in a chapter of the KuKauM. There too we find confirmation that it is expounding this Krama and knows it by that name.[2] The first and second phase is known to the Kubjikā Tantras. They know nothing of the third. They know about the origins of the Five Currents and the Kālīkrama line that focuses on the Twelve Kālīs, to which we shall return further ahead. We have already noted that these developments are unknown to the KMT, the earliest Kubjikā source. Thus, it seems that they evolved alongside the Kubjikā Tantras that absorbed them in their own way as they appeared. By the time we reach the AS[3] the Kālikākrama has been so extensively colonized by the Kubjikā tradition that it claims that Kubjikā revealed it to the last two of the Nine Siddhas.

Krama is the most elevated esoteric core of Abhinava's Trika Kula. The goddess of the Krama, Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī, is identified with the goddess Beyond Parā (Parātītā). As Anākhyā, she stands beyond Parā of the triad of Trika goddesses, Parā, Parāparā and Aparā, even as she integrates them into herself. The core of the Krama system on which Abhinavagupta focuses is a cycle of Twelve Kālīs. Essentially, they represent the usual Krama cycle of creation, persistence, and destruction in each of these domains along with Anākhyā that contains them. Collectively, as the Wheel of Energies, they are the radiant manifestation of the abode of Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī.[4] At another level, but still in terms of his scriptural sources, Abhinava integrates them into his Trika by identifying them with the three Trika goddesses in the domains of each of the three and Anākhyā (= Beyond Parā) that contains them. Finally, in terms of Kashmiri Śaiva idealism (pratyabhijñā), he understands them to be the cycle of the four phases of the Krama that arise and fall away progressively in the domain of objectivity (prameya), perception (pramāṇa) and the perceiver (pramātṛ). Within the framework of the Trika Kula elaborated by Abhinava, they are the most complete and perfect representation of the universal activity of consciousness (sāmānyaspanda). They are the process that is consciousness (saṁvitkrama), its

[1] MP (1) p. 86.

[2] pañcavāhakramaṁ [ṅ: pañcavāhu-] hyetat [ṅ: hotat] kathitaṁ tava śobhane |
KuKauM 15/159ab.

[3] AS 8/157-159.

[4] śrīsṛṣṭikālyādyakhilaśakticakrāsūtraṇena prasphuradrūpaṁ śrīkālasaṅkarṣaṇīdhāma comm on TĀ 1/1.

primary cycle (mukhyacakra, saṁvitcakra) and the Wheel of Energies (śakticakra) that contains all other possible cycles and configurations. The most excellent of all the maṇḍalas and cycles, they are the culminating experience in all three categories of practice (upāya).[1]

Abhinava knew the basic Krama principles concerning the cycles of emanation and destruction very well. He also knew the main goddesses – Khecarī, Vāmeśvarī, and Bhūcarī whose nature he expounds as energies of consciousness and perception in his commentary on the Parātriṁśikā. However, he shows no signs of knowing about the Krama system expounded in the three texts called Mahānayaprakāśa. Even Kṣemarāja, his disciple, does not seem to know about it. Thus, it appears that the system was developing and texts were being added to it after Abhinava's time and that of his immediate successor. Whether Abhinava did not know this Krama system or chose to ignore it, it is clear that the Krama system he espouses centres on the Twelve Kālīs, which is 'very secret' and so supremely important.[2] For this Abhinava chose the Triśirobhairava as his prime

---

[1] Alluding to the operation of the Twelve Kālīs in Śāmbhavopāya, Abhinava writes:

> The triad which, free of limiting adjuncts, precedes these three is the supreme triad wherein Śiva, the supreme consciousness, resides. There are three principle powers that are responsible for the manifestation of (these) divisions, namely, the Absolute (anuttarā) which is the Supreme (parā power), the will which is middling (parāparā) and the power of unfolding called knowledge which is said to be the lower (aparā) (power). [. . .] By the (mutual) absorption (into one another) of these powers brought about by their arising as the power of action, the twelve aforementioned forms of consciousness (arise) within which all things are contained.
>
> TĀ 3/247cd-249, 250cd-251ab.

The Twelve Kālīs are the core of Abhinava's exposition of Śāktopaya in chapter four of the TĀ. Immediately after their exposition, he identifies them with the universal activity of consciousness (sāmānyaspanda), concerning which he writes:

> (Consciousness) is reflective awareness, and so its spontaneous and ever manifest (sadodita) resonance (dhvani) is called the great supreme, Heart. The self-awareness, in the Heart (from which) all things have fallen away, present in the first and last moment of perception is called, according to the (Spanda) teachings the universal vibration of consciousness (sāmānyaspanda) and is the outpouring (uccalana) of consciousness within one's own nature. (This vibration is that) subtle movement (kimciccalana) which is the pulsing radiance (sphuraṇa) (of self-luminous consciousness that shines as all things). Independent of all else, it is the wave (ūrmi) of the ocean of consciousness, and consciousness is (never) without it. Indeed, it is the nature of the sea to be (at times tranquil) without waves and (at others) full of waves. This (awareness) is the essence (sāra) of all things for consciousness is the essence of the lifeless (jaḍa) universe because its very foundation (pratiṣṭhā) depends upon it. Again, the essence of that is the Great Heart. TĀ 4/181cd-186ab.

In Āṇavopāya, Abhinava calls the Wheel of Twelve Kālīs, Anuttaracakra. See Dyczkowski 1987: 125, with reference to TĀ 5/27cd-36.

[2] TĀ 4/145-146.

authority. This was a major Trika Tantra that integrated the Kālīkrama into its system as Abhinava did in his Trika Kula.[1] Moreover, a branch of the Kālīkrama had already singled out the Twelve Kālīs as the core of its system. Thus, they appear independently in Kubjikā sources. In the Māyāstava of the AS, Kubjikā as Mahāmāyā is praised as the thirteenth Kālī in the centre of the circle of Twelve Kālīs, linked and thus is to the Kālikākrama. There the god addresses the goddess saying:

> (You who are) born as the Fire who is Mother Time and reside within time and eternity! (You who are) linked (saṁbandhī) to Kālikā's Transmission (krama) in the maṇḍala of the Twelve Kālīs! (You are) the thirteenth form (mūrti) (of Kālī) who burns the Triple World in the centre (of the maṇḍala). (You are) emanation, persistence and withdrawal in the Great Sequence (mahākrama), called the Nameless (anāmākhya) and abide as awakened consciousness (bodha) in the maṇḍala that awakens the Command.[2]

The Twelve Kālīs are the focus of a branch of the Kālīkrama presented in the CMSS as the Northern Tradition (uttarāmnāya). This form of the Kālīkrama originated with Niṣkriyānanda who transmitted it to Vidyānanda, who also appears as the first teachers of the Kālīkrama transmitted in the YGT and the DP.[3] He was also called Tamasa or Krodha Muni. The teachings he received from the goddess concerning the Twelve Kālīs was called Niṣkriyājñāna. Thus, he was called Niṣkriyānanda. He transmitted the essence of the teachings in the fifty

---

[1] Perhaps the reference in the passage quoted above to the seed-syllable of the Three Heads (triśira) may be to the god Triśirobhairava. Inspired probably by the three-headed Rudra of the Vedas, the Three-headed Bhairava is the consort of the triadic goddess in the Trika Tantra. If the redactor of the YKh (1) did make these associations, it appears that the link between Trika and the Kālīkrama was well established in the scriptural sources.

[2] kālāmbāgnisamudbhūte kālākālāntavāsini [-nī] |
kālikākramasaṁbandhi kālīdvādaśamaṇḍale ||
trailokyadahanīmadhye sā ca mūrtis trayodaśī |
sṛṣṭiḥ [sṛṣṭi] sthitiś ca saṁhāram anāmākhye mahākrame ||
saṁsthitā bodharūpeṇa ājñābodhanamaṇḍale | AS 19/32-34ab. See below, p. 558-559.

[3] Jñānanetra presents the line of teachers (gurukrama) of the Kaulottara school in the YGT he 'brought down to earth. It begins with the teachers related to Matsyendranātha. They are followed by four teachers and their consorts. They are: 1) Niṣkriyānanda - Jñānadīpti, 2) Vidyānanada - Raktā 3) Śaktyānanada - Mahānadā 4) Śivānanda - Ratnā. YGT fl. 17b. Note that Śivānanda is another name for Jñānanetra. Perhaps he is referring to himself in this way. We find virtually the same presentation in the Devīpañcaśataka (DP 3/15cd-17ab), which adds that they are a part of Matsyendra's lineage.

verses recorded in the CMSS.[1] The system has various names. This teaching of the Mahākālīkrama is the 'transmission of Kālīkaṅkala of the Kaṅkāla Kula. The goddess is the consuming fire of absorption (grāsa), which is the energy of Kaula Kaṅkāla. The god is the Void, which is the Kaula reality of the Kaṅkala Kula, within which the energies of the goddess unfold. The YKh and the KuKh know this system and draw from it. Thus, they refer to a form of Kālī as Kālakaṅkāla Kaulikī.[2] She is the Kālī of the Kālakaṅkāla- the Skeleton of Time.[3] Kālakaṅkāla Bhairava governs the Wheel of Rudras in the cremation ground called Karavīra,[4] which is linked, as we have seen, to the 'tradition of the North' and the Kālīkrama in a special way. The 'Skeleton' represents Time that Kālī consumes. It is the experience consciousness has of its own nature (svānubhūti) on the plane of Anākhya.[5] We read in the CMSS:

> One's own form, devoid of form, is the form between form and non-form. (That) undifferentiated reality (niṣkala) is active (udita) everywhere and is free of Being and Non-being. Kālī, the Supreme Goddess who devours the Skeleton (kaṅkāla) (of Time) is manifest (uditā) there. Once drunk from the vessel of the sprout (kandala) of the Skeleton born of the nectar of the Void, she is made to pulsate (ghūrmitā) and vomit (vamitā). Thus, the universe comes into being.[6]

The energy within the energy of the Great Time is the mistress of the Wheel of Time (Kālacakreśvarī), that is, the cycle of Twelve Kālīs. She is the Kālī who devours the Kula of the Skeleton of Time. The consciousness of this Wheel of Consciousness relishes the essential nature of Being and Non-being. This is the sphere of the energies of the Inexplicable. It is the cycle of energies beyond the cycle of creation, persistence and destruction that consumes them into itself. Thus, it is called the Wheel of Destruction (saṁhāracakra) which is engaged in the process of withdrawal (samhārakrama). As she consumes everything into her inherent emptiness, with no residue, Kālī is 'thin' (kṣīṇa) and

---

[1] CMSS 7/189-240.
[2] KuKh 61/69.
[3] KuKh 63/35cd-37ab.
[4] KuKh 6/26.
[5] kālikaṅkalasaṁkrāmaṁ anākhyapadamuttamam || CMSS 7/160cd.
[6] rūpārūpāntaraṁ rūpaṁ svarūpaṁ rūpavarjitam ||
bhāvābhāvavinirmuktaṁ sarvatoditaniṣkalam [gh: -la] |
tatroditā parā devī kālī kaṅkālabhakṣiṇī ||
kaṅkālakandalaṁ pātraṁ pītvā [gh: pītyā] vyomāmṛtodbhavam |
ghūrmitā vamitā sā [k: ya; kh gh: ye] ca tena viśvasamudbhavam || CMSS 7/220cd-222.

'lean' (kṛṣa) and hence her name Kṛṣodarī. As the transcendental Void, she is the Abyss of Kula (Kulagahvarī). This is her tranquil state of repose (śānta, viśrānta). Her emergent state is the Wheel of the Sun of Consciousness. As the transcendental Void, she consumes the Void of the transient immanent sphere of time. This takes place as each object of sense (viṣaya) is 'consumed' by consciousness and 'relished' there, it arouses the pure aesthetic delight (rasa) of wonder:

> I will tell you about (the process) of withdrawal. If the entity (rūpa) born of the bliss of aesthetic delight (rasa) is perceived as an object of perception, it recedes there into the field of the activity (of the senses). Once this activity has ceased, the supreme wonder arises because it has dissolved away.[1]

The way this aesthetic delight can be experienced is described in the following cryptic verses. They explain how yogis drink the 'Kaula nectar' revealed by Niṣkriyānanda.[2] Reading between the lines, the allusion to ritual oral sex is evident.[3] The couple must remain absorbed in the bliss of the Brahman that dissolves away duality; otherwise, the practice bears no higher spiritual fruit:

> There is a Cavity at the end of the Cavity within the Triangle. The Void that is in front of (that) Cavity merges into the mouth of

---

[1] sṛṣṭiḥ [sarve: sṛṣṭis] sarvagatasyaiva saṁhāraṁ kathayāmi te || *rasenānandajaṁ rūpaṁ yadā [g: padā; gh: yādā] grāhyena [gh: grā * na] gṛhyate* |
tadā [sarve: yadā] pratyastamastatra sa ca taṁ vṛttigocaram [k: vṛrttigocaraṁ; kh: vṛttiṁ-] ||
kṣīnavṛttiḥ [k g: -vṛrttiḥ] pralīnatvāj jāyate [g: pralīnanvājāyate] paramādbhutam |
CMSS 7/174cd-176ab.

[2] etat kaulāmṛtaṁ siddhaṁ [gh: siddha] yoginībhirudāhṛtam [k: -hṛtaḥ] ||
niṣkriyānandapādaiś ca bhūtale saṁprakāśitam | Ibid. 7/179cd-180ab.

[3] The practice of drinking sexual fluids is an integral part of Kaula practice. We read, for example in the JY:

> Those adepts (vīra) are the most excellent who are always engaged in union (with their partners) and always drink Viṣṇu (i.e. sexual fluids) and kiss the Yoni constantly.

te vīrāḥ [all: vīra] vīrarājānaḥ sadā melāpabhājanāḥ ||
*ye pivanti sadā viṣṇuṁ [gh: vi ?] bhagaṁ cumvanti [[g: ?] ye sadā | JY 3/38/127cd-128ab.

The later Kaula Tantras prescribed such practices extensively. The late Yonitantra assures us that a person who conjoins his mouth to the mouth of the Yoni and repeats the goddess's mantra is purified from sin. By offering menstrual blood and sperm with mantra to the Yoni he becomes a son of the goddess Kālikā. Yonitantra 3/12-20. See also p. 24 of the introduction by Schoterman to his edition of the Yonitantra.[3] > the Void and the mind (citta) that arises within the mind does so within the beginningless Great Yoni of consciousness. Conjoining the senses of the root (kanda) in the house of licking, which includes kissing and the rest, in the accord with the procedure of the mutual practice (vidhi) and, abandoning one thing (bhāva), if the mind (citi) does not (go on to) grasp another, then the supreme Brahman, which is one's own essential nature, manifests (pravartate).[1]

The teaching transmitted through this lineage is the 'knowledge of Vāmā' consisting of sixty-five energies. These are probably Vāmeśvarī and the energies of Vṛndacakra, which is the core of the Kashmiri Mahānaya. Even so, the central feature of the Kālīkrama presented in the CMSS is the cycle of Twelve Kālīs. It is the 'tradition of the twelve'.[2] The goddess is twelvefold as are the twelve suns in the yearly cycle, a view known to Abhinavagupta who also refers to it in his presentation of the Twelve Kālīs. However, he does not lend this aspect much weight.[3] The CMSS, on the contrary, emphasises this feature so strongly that the teaching is called the Transmission of the Sun (bhānavīkrama) because the energy of Kālī is configured in this way. In this context Kālī's lunar nature takes second place with respect to her solar one.

The cycle of Kālīs are aspects of the one Bhānavī Kālī – the Kālī of the Sun of Kula, the Light of Consciousness, with twelve rays.[4] Kālī manifests Time. Inwardly, she is the inner pulse of inebriation (ghūrmi), the supreme and inexplicable (anākhya) vibration (spanda).[5] As such, she is Bhānavī, the energy of the twelve suns that externally mark its passage, month by month, through the

---

[1] trikoṇānte [k kh gh: -nta; g: -ntan] trikoṇasthaṁ [gh: -stha] suśiraṁ suśirāgragam [k: -grataṁ; kh: suśirāgratam] ||
śūnyaṁ [k gh: śūnya; g: strānya] śūnyamukhe [k: śūnyamukhai; g: strānyamukhai] līnaṁ cittaṁ cittāntaroditam [sarve: -rocitam] |
cidanādimahāyonau [k kh: cipanādihāhānau; g: cidanādicidāhānau; gh: cipanādicidāhānau] cumbanādilihāgṛhe [k kh g gh: -gṛhaṁ] ||
kandendriyāṇi saṁyojya parasparavidhikrame |
hitvā [g: ditvā] bhāvaṁ na gṛhṇāti [k kh gh: gṛhlāti; g: gṛhnāti] yadā bhāvāntaraṁ [k kh gh: -tara] citiḥ ||
tadā tat paramaṁ brahma svasvabhāvaṁ pravartate | CMSS 7/176cd-179ab.

[2] *dvādaśaiva paraṁ bhadre [g: * dre] saṁpradāyaṁ vadāmy aham* | Ibid. 7/163ab.

[3] According to Abhinava, the relationship between the Kālīs and the Sun is hardly more than an outer ascription. Thus he writes: The goddess resides (within the sphere of) objectivity also in the form of the (twelve) months (of the year) and the signs of the zodiac and the like. TĀ 4/146cd.

[4] citprakāśaṁ [k: cipakāsa; kh: -sa; gh: cidākāsa] paraṁ [gh: para] guhyaṁ uditaṁ kulabhāskaram || dvādaśāraṁ sutejāḍhyaṁ [gh: sutejāghṁ] bhūrisūryasamaprabham | Ibid. 7/209cd-210ab.

[5] sphuraty antargatā [sarve: -gato] ghūrmir anākhyaṁ [sarve: ghṛrmmira-] spandam uttamam | Ibid. 7/206ab.

year.[1] She is the Sun within the physical sun who illumines the universe with the rays of her light.[2] It shines within the firepit of the Void as the essential nature of all things in harmony with the rhythm of the Sun of Consciousness.[3] It is the Kālī of the Light of the Twelve Suns. She is the transcendental Void who devours the Void of phenomenal existence. This is the sequence of the destruction of destruction.[4] The CMSS explains in its own cryptic way:

> Once pierced through the divine plane of consciousness which is attended by the Sun of Consciousness and, having melted it with the rays of consciousness and drunk the best of juices, (one attains) the Supreme Void, which is consciousness free of being and non-being. Within it is the juice of the essence (sararasa) which has expanded out of the Supreme Void. It is the field (viṣaya) of one's own inner outpouring and is diversified by many kinds of wonderful diversity.[5]

Thus, there are two aspects of the one pulsation of the Sun of the Twelve Kālīs. One is the repose of transcendental emptiness, the other is the emergent cosmic state of the rising Sun of Consciousness. Both are consciousness, absorbing and awakening one another as the Sun of the Wheel of the Twelve Kālīs rises and sets. Thus, transcendental repose emerges into cosmic activity and then again reverts to its own essential nature:

> That is the plane of repose, illumined by Kālī's radiant energy. Consciousness (bodha) awakens consciousness that has been awakened by its own consciousness. They pervade one another in accord with the activity of the Wheel (of the Twelve Kālīs)

---

[1] kālī kālāñjanī bhīmā dvādaśoditabhānavī [k: -sobhitabhānakī; kh: -bhitabhānakī] |
Ibid. 7/205ab.

[2] raver [sarve: ravir] antargato bhānur [k kh gh: bhānu; g: bhāṇu] bhāsayaty akhilaṁ jagat ||
bhānavī kaulinī yā sā tatpuñjapūritaṁ [sarve: -paritaṁ] jagat | Ibid. 7/166cd-167ab.

[3] tatsvarūpoditaṁ cakraṁ cidbhānvarkagatisthitam [k g gh: -sthitaḥ] | Ibid. 7/172ab.

[4] dvādaśārkaprabhākālī [sarve: dvādaśāṅka-] vyomarūpā khabhakṣaṇī [k kh gh: ścabhakṣaṇī; g: svabhakṣaṇī] |
sphuratkṣīṇā [g: sphurakṣīṇā] svayaṁ [sarve: svaraṁ] kṣīṇāt [k: kṣīnan; kh gh: kṣīṇan; g: kṣīṇan] tat [gh: tan; g: ta] kṣīṇaṁ [g: kṣvīṇaṁ] divyagocaram [kh: -śocaraṁ] ||
kramasaṁhārasaṁhāraṁ [g: kramaṁ-] pāramparyakramānugam [gh: -gaḥ] || Ibid. 7/190-191ab.

[5] bhittvā [sarve: bhitvā] bodhapadaṁ divyaṁ bodhabhāskarasevitam [sarve: -vecitam] ||
drāvitaṁ cinmarīcibhiḥ [sarve: cinmarīcībhiḥ] pītvā tu rasamuttamam | *citsvarūpaparākāśaṁ [k: -rūpa * rākāśaṁ] sadasadbhāvavarjitam* ||
tadantare [sarve: tadantaraḥ] sararasaṁ parākāśavijṛmbhitam [k gh: parākāsa-| *antaḥsvollāsaviṣayaṁ [sarve: -ya] nānāvaicitryacitritam [gh: -citri ] || Ibid. 7/193cd-195.

(cakrācāra). The most excellent (transcendental) Void above is the Skyfarer who has entered into the plane of the plane of its own (innate nature). In the same way, the pulse (spanda) (of the activity of consciousness) pulsates most intensely (spandatara) by the manifestation of that vitality. Once abandoned Time, Eternity and one's own time, one should bring (all these energies) to rest within bliss. Once made contact with the circle of the energy (tejas) of consciousness, the yogi sports in that bliss.[1]

Niṣkriyānanda concludes:

> One is established in the sequence of the worship (pūjākrama) of Kālī that consists of the forceful attainment (haṭhākarṣa) of the foundation of consciousness, when grasping and rejecting, brought about by the distinction between taking up and abandoning, has ceased. (Such a one) who knows reality lights up the Sun of Consciousness (even as) he looks (at it). The Wheel in the form of the universe is manifest (udita) and illumines the cosmic condition. This radiant energy (tejas) is universal destruction, it is the consuming fire of absorption (grāsa). The Sequence of Violent (absorption) (haṭhakrama) with its many divisions is the most excellent (anuttama). The Krama yogi who does this is beloved of the Yoginīs.[2] [. . .]

---

[1] tadviśrāmaparābhūmiḥ kālitejaḥprakāśitaḥ |
bodho [sarve: bodhā] bodhayate bodhaṁ svabodhāt paribodhitam [sarve: para-] ||
cakracāravibhedena [k kh: cakra-] saṁkrāmanti parasparam |
svabhūmibhūmim ākrāntaṁ [sarve: -krānta] khecaram ūrdhvakham uttamam [k kh: khecanmūrddhakha-] ||
*tadvad vīryāvabhāsena [gh: -vabhāse ] spandaṁ [sarve: pinda] spandataraṁ [sarve: piṇḍataraṁ] gatam |
kālākālaṁ [sarve: -kāla] svakālaṁ ca tyaktvā [k: tyaktyā; gh: bhaktyā] viśrāntayet [k kh: -yen; gh: -yas] sukhe [k kh: mukhaṁ; gh: sukhaṁ] || tatsukhe [sarve: tatsukhaṁ] krīḍate yogī spṛṣṭvā cittejamaṇḍalam | Ibid. 7/217-220ab.

[2] cidādhārahaṭhākarṣakālipūjākramārūḍhaḥ [k gh: cīrādārahaṭhā--kramoruhaḥ; kh: cīrādāra--kramoruha] || hānādānavibhedena tyāgagrahaparikṣaye |
nirīkṣamānas tattvajño [sarve: -mānatatvajño] jñānārkaṁ [sarve: -nārka] saṁprakāśayet [sarve: -sayet] || *viśvākāroditaṁ [k kh: visvā-; gh: visvā * roditaṁ] cakraṁ viśvasthityāvabhāsakam [k gh: visvāsthityā; kh: viśvāstityā; sarve: -vabhāsakaḥ]* |
viśvasaṁhārakas [sarve: visvasaṁhāriyaṁ] tejas tattejo grāsaghasmaraḥ ||
vividhena vibhāgena [sarve: vimārgena] haṭhakramam anuttamam [sarve: haṭhākramya-] |
karoti kramiko yogī sa [sarve: sad] yogī [k: yaugī] yoginīpriyaḥ [k kh: -priye; gh: priyeḥ] ||
Ibid. 7/233cd-236.

> In order to eliminate (viparyaya) Being and Non-being, the (yogi) intent (on this process) (yukta) reposes somewhere (in an indefinable state) having contemplated his own consciousness which expands out perpetually, manifest as the bliss intent on the radiant pulse (of consciousness) (ghūrmi). One obtains (this teaching) from the teacher's mouth. The Kālikrama arises where what has been forgotten which is neither below nor above, neither in the middle, nor internal or external, is recollected.[1]

Conclusion

The darśanas are graded vertically. We may rise or descend if we move from one to the other. When we reach the Kuladarśanas at the apex of this ascent the modality changes from vertical to horizontal. There, at the summit of all the schools ranging from Buddhist to Śaiva, Kuladarśana spreads in all directions – a symbol of its completeness. Like the sea that extends all around up to every horizon, Kuladarśana is the Full Circle. Here the Kaula attains the Śāmbhava state, whatever his āmnāya. As the Śāmbhavakramasūtra declares:

> Śāmbhava is common to all things (and to all the Kaula traditions sarvasāmānya). It is where the universe is merged (in its foundation). The location (saṁsthāna) at the end of the Transmental, it is pervasive and omnipresent (sarvatomukha). Śāmbhava, the Lord of the Circle, is accompanied by Bimbanātha. It is the Wheel of the Topknot (śikhācakra) of the supreme power and is adorned with (ever) novel bliss. Accompanied by Śāmbhavīśakti, it is auspicious, like a stream of milk. Endowed with the sixteen Śāmbhava (siddhas) and adorned with sixteen energies, the Śāmbhava lord (nātha) resides there. He is the final dawning (of reality) (paścimodaya) from the west. The Śāmbhava plane is above the fifty worlds. The Western (tradition) is the Śāmbhava abode, that is the east, the west

---

[1] sphuratghūrmigatānandanityoditavijṛmbhitam [k gh: -ratā-; kh: sphuratpurmiratā-] ||
svasvabodhaṁ [sarve: -vodha] parāmṛśya [sarve: -mṛkṣa] bhāvābhāvaviparyaye [k kh: -vipayaye] |
viśrāntastu [kh: viśrāntasut; gh: viśrāntastut] kvacid yukto [k: -yuktā; kh: kracidyuktā; gh: kacidyuktā] guruvaktrāt [k: -vaktrā] tu labhyate [k gh: rabhyate] ||
nādhor nordhve [k kh: nādhonorddhe; gh: nādhānorddhe] na madhye vā na bāhyābhyantare 'pi [k gh: vāhyebhyantarepi; kh: vāhyentarepi] ca [gh: nāsti] |
vismitaḥ [sarve: vismṛta] smaryate [k gh: smayate] yatra tatra [gh: tatrā] kālikramodayaḥ ||
Ibid. 7/237cd-239.

and the middle one . Everything is the sequence in the form of mantras and is free of (both) duality and nonduality.[1]

All the āmnāyas emanate from the Śāmbhava state and to that they return. As the power of this, the Supreme State, Kubjikā gives rises to all the āmnāyas and is the true, ultimate identity of the Supreme Goddess. The same logic tacitle persists in the Śrīvidyā tradition which also perceives itself as an āmnāya whose goddess is the embodiment of the Command that imparts authority to all the āmnāyas and their goddesses. However, the ā*mnāyas* soon degenerated into little more than ritual ciphers. They are worshipped as a way to worship all the traditions collectively. When the Śrīvidya school admitted, as did many other Tantric traditions, the Vedic tradition into its own and was in some way admitted by it, the totality of scripture was equated with the Vedas. These are four as are the basic āmnāyas. The upper (ūrdhva) one of the Upaniṣads is crowned by the 'most excellent tradition' – anuttarāmnāya – of Śrīvidyā, which is understood as the implicit, most elevated sense of the Veda. The compiler of a Śrīvidyā liturgy explains:

The purpose of āmnāyasamaṣṭipūjā [the worship of all the traditions together] is to emphasize that all these mantras only describe citśakti who is not different from the Brahman.[2]

The Kubjikā tradition is not interested in incorporating the āmnāyas into its liturgies. They are not reduced to the worship of their deities and their mantras. Instead they are left intact, not as rites, but as experiential dimensions of a unitary state of attainment. Each āmnāya is allowed to be ultimate in its own way because it is grounded in the Śāmbhava state. Identified with Kubjikā's Paścimāmnāya it contains all the āmnāyas as aspects of the state it embodies and incorporates them.

---

[1] śāmbhavaṁ [kh: śā-] sarvasāmānyaṁ yatra [k, kh, gh: yatta] līnaṁ carācaram ||
unmanānte [gh: unmanāte] tu saṁsthānaṁ vyāpakaṁ sarvatomukham |
śāmbhavaṁ maṇḍalīśaṁ tu bimbānāthena saṁyutam ||
*parāśaktiśikhācakraṁ [k, kh, gh: -śikhā * kraṁ] navānandena maṇḍitam* |
śāmbhavīśaktisahitaṁ [k, kh, gh: -mahitaṁ] kṣīradhāropamaṁ śubham ||
śāmbhavaiḥ ṣoḍaśair [k, gh: ṣoḍaśer; kh: ṣoḍhaśer] yuktaṁ śaktiṣoḍaśamaṇḍitam |
tatrasthaṁ śāmbhavaṁ nāthaṁ [kh: nāthāṁ] paścimāt paścimodayam ||
pañcāśadbhuvanordhvaṁ [k, gh: -bhuvanārddhaṁ; kh: -bhuvanorddha] tu saṁsthitaṁ śāmbhavaṁ [k, kh: śā-] padam | paścimaṁ śāmbhavaṁ veśma pūrvapaścimamadhyamam || [This and following line missing in MSs K, Kh and Gh.] mantramūrtikramaṁ sarvam advaitadvaitavarjitam | Ibid. 4/271cd-276ab.
The colophon here reads: This is the sūtra of the Śāmbhava Transmission (śāmbhavakramasūtra).

[2] Caitanyānanda 1996: 418.

The realisation of the ultimate state of each āmnāya transforms it into the Paścima – 'ultimate' – āmnāya. The goddess of each āmnāya embodies this state and so is essentially Kubjikā. As this is the inner state of the Deity, the outer form remains intact, as is the Vidyā of each goddess and so too the entire liturgy.

The Śrīvidyā tradition worships the goddesses of the āmnāyas as emblematic of all the other goddesses, indeed of all deities, simply by invocating them through their 'root' (mūla) Vidyās. Although the goddesses of the āmnāyas vary considerably in the various Śrīvidyā schools, the goddesses of the Northern and Western Traditions are invariably Kālī and Kubjikā. Kālī may be of various forms. In several instances she is Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī, as she is in the early Kālīkula. This is a sign that the Śrīvidyā tradition began to develop its own system of āmnāyas early on. Kubjikā's presence is another sign of this. In this way the Śrīvidyā tradition retains a memory of the earlier traditions and so Kubjikā's name, at least, is still known, although only to those who worship Śrīvidyā.

The much greater attention Newars pay to the āmnayas is related to Kaulism's central role in their religion and culture. Although initiation is largely restricted to the higher 'twice-born' castes, Hindu Newar society is traditionally Kaula. The goddesses of the āmnāyas are the secret tutelary deities of the families that constitute the nuclear components of this society. As such they sustain and represent it. The worship of the goddesses of the āmnāyas amounts to acknowledgement of this esoteric social order and participation in it. Isolated from one another by the secrecy that sustains the power of their deities, Newar Kaulas maintain the links between them and themselves as members of a single religion, culture and society by their worship. Śrīvidyā initiates, unless they are Newars, do not have these needs. It is enough for them to simply acknowledge the other āmnāyas and their goddesses to relate their own goddess and her Kramas to the others.

We will probably never know how deeply Kubjikā penetrated society in Koṅkaṇa and the Deccan, if at all. However, it is clear that she and her tradition, like Śrīvidyā, was worshipped and understood as a part of the great society of Kaulism which she, in her own way, dominates and sustains.

The word āmnāya means 'tradition', 'school' and 'lineage' as well as the teachings transmitted through it. The worship of the deity and its attendants and all that relates to that are the concern of each āmnāya. The sacred knowledge of sacred action it teaches is transmitted from the deity through the lineage of teachers. These are as sacred as the deity itself and so it is no less essential to worship the lineages of teachers as it is the deity itself, who from this point of view is the first teacher. It is to this aspect of the Kubjikā tradition that we now turn in the following chapter.

Chapter Six

The Teachers and Lineages of the Kubjikā Tantras

The knowledge the preceptor transmits through his exposition of scripture and his own direct insight is multiple. It includes the knowledge of mantras and rituals, their modalities, application, and fruits. It also includes the knowledge of Yoga, that is, how to manipulate the vital forces, physical, mental, and cognitive energies of the body. Beyond, it includes the knowledge of essential metaphysical principles at every level up to Deity itself. The essence of this knowledge in all its aspects and at all levels is the radiant vibration (sphuraṇa) of the deity's empowering Command that is transmitted first to the teacher by the deity and then from the teacher to his disciples.

Energized by the Command and projected into the psycho-physical body through the prescribed ritual actions, the mantras transform it into its divine counterpart (divyadeha). The teacher has perfected this and the other practices transmitted through the tradition and, as a perfected being – Siddha, he is literally an embodiment of this knowledge. In consonance with his exalted metaphysical status and empowered by the deity's Command, the teacher's conduct is impeccable. Indeed, the observance of the Rule (samaya) is no less important than maintaining the required ritual program and Yogic practice. The KMT extols the qualities and virtues of a true teacher accordingly:

> One should make an effort to seek a teacher who brings about eternal bliss and awakens (his disciples) to what is beneficial. (The true teacher is) is fortunate and pleasing to see. He behaves well, as does one from an auspicious caste (śubhajātisuvṛttistha), and he is born in an auspicious country. He possesses knowledge and wisdom and is skillful in everything. He knows (whether a) time (is auspicious or not). He is well versed and skillful and knows (his) capabilities (sāmarthajña) and is not repulsive. He has all his limbs and is free of defects. He knows (the practice of) piercing (vedha) and shaking (ghaṭṭa) (the body of his disciple with his spiritual power) and checking (nirodha) (the flux of the breath). He is well versed in the ways of the world. He is intent of ritual, peaceful, a good devotee and beloved by (his) teacher. He is well content, free of greed and is the beloved of ascetics. He is the joy of those who are dedicated to him. He is brave and (the observance of his) vows is firm. He grants knowledge and freedom from fear and is free of greed and fickleness. Of steady intellect, he maintains right conduct and > is well established in the Rules. He does not abandon what comes to him and he does not cling to what has gone.[1]

The KMT goes on to describe how the disciple should behave:

> Such a teacher is hard to find not just by human beings but also by the gods. O beloved, how can a disciple achieve liberation if the teacher he has found is powerless? How can a tree whose roots have been cut bear flowers, fruit or (anything) else? Anyone who has found a teacher like this is released from bondage. The disciple who has seen him should worship the teacher with all his feeling (sarvabhāva). He should offer himself as his servant and worship him, (offering) himself and (his) wealth, until the teacher is satisfied. When he is satisfied, he initiates the disciple and so his fetters are destroyed (pāśakṣaya). He is awakened if he takes that (initiation) in the proper way (krama),. However, if (the teacher) gives (him initiation) in an improper way (akramāt) and (the disciple) takes (it), both are certainly bound by the fetters born of Kula.[2]
>
> (The disciple) should behave well for a period of eight, five or three years. Otherwise initiation should not be given to him (as) he (would not achieve) success in the Kula teachings. If the teacher imparts (initiation) by his power out of compassion for the disciple, even then (the disciple) should (continue to) behave as a servant in the teacher's spiritual family (kula). (The aspirant) is fit (to be a disciple) if he remains faithful (to his teacher) even if he scolds (him) a hundred times or even beats (him) a thousand times. The evil soul who gets angry with (his) teacher or talks back (disrespectfully) is certainly destroyed as is rotten food. The disciple must never be angry with his teacher whether in speech, mind or with the actions of (his) body. The rays that come from (the teacher's) anger will burn up the disciple who has received (spiritual) knowledge (from his teacher and is then disrespectful towards him).
>
> If the teachers who are in the world have little knowledge how can (authentic spiritual) knowledge be protected (from corruption)? (Indeed, such teachers) steal knowledge away. If a disciple disrespects (his) teacher (thinking to himself) "I have acquired the essence of (his) knowledge, (it is time to) leave" (and does so) without saying (that he is leaving), the goddesses will block (his development) and make (him) more foolish. O beloved, (the knowledge he has received) is like a burnt seed - it does not grow. He who has stolen the Yoga of the Command and (the knowledge of) ritual and mantra (from his teacher) and (then) flees, does not achieve (true) balance. How can (that) fool stand (firmly). (He is) like (someone whose) body (is sick) that vomits (the food he) has eaten. Whether he feels hungry or not, the body (of this) contemptuous one (ghṛṇī) (is always) thin (and emaciated).

---

[1] KMT 3/41-47ab.

[2] Note that the term 'krama' in this context means not only 'tradition' and 'ritual', it also means 'correct order' or 'right way'. KMT 3/47cd-52.

Whatever (the teacher) does, be it auspicious or inauspicious; the disciple should not deride him. (He is) destroyed by deriding (the teacher). When (he) derides (the teacher) he suffers violence. Nor should the disciple talk with the teacher as if he were his equal placing his hand on his mouth saying (with a demanding tone of voice): "Give (me your) command".

He should not protect (his) body (at the expense of his spiritual discipline). He should not cheat his teacher, nor should he ever ignore the tasks he should do whether he has (expressly) been told to do them or not. The disciple who is deceitful and whose nature is wicked, one who expounds false (views to others) and, like a prostitute (kañjinī), hides his intentions (antaraṅgin) and is not sincere (sadbhāvin) is destroyed. The foolish one who, like a pimp (kañjika), is two-faced and (whose selfish) intention (constantly changes) this way and that, is destroyed.[1]

One who, having abandoned a teacher who is blissful and Command is radiant, goes to another, is obstructed everywhere, like a king who has lost his kingdom.

He who maintains his body (pure), (guards his) knowledge of (the Kaula sacrificial) substances, (looks after the) clothes and vehicles of his teacher is worthy of receiving initiation (saṁskāra).

The teacher should be respected and worshipped. Teachers should always to be venerated. Then, if the teacher has been satisfied, all the moving and immobile world has been satisfied. There is no one who is equal to the teacher in the mortal world, especially in the heavens. What (more) should one who saves from the great ocean of suffering do? It is the disciple who acts (at the service of his teacher).

Neither mother, father, brother or relatives help one as the teacher does. Having understood this, whether he suffers when there is (cause for) suffering or is happy when there is (cause for) happiness, he should not, even unwittingly, assume a position contrary to (the one his) teacher has. Sitting next to him (the disciple) should massage him and the like. He should offer him the bowl with which he begs and flowers constantly.

---

[1] Ibid. 3/53-67.

One should not behave (with disrespectful) intimacy with (any) act of speech, mind or body. Whatever is to be done for the teacher, (the disciple) should do it free of doubt.

Accomplishment is not far and liberation is in the grasp of the disciple who, equal in pleasure and pain, behaves in this way. One should worship whatever the teacher gives as (his) teaching. Therefore, having known (the matter) in this way, the teacher is (realised to be) deity and in no other way. One should worship him by prostrating before him, with meditation and Yoga at all three times (of the day). One cannot perceive the invisible form of the Lord in any other way.

(None can) see supreme Śambhu by means of mantra, meditation, austerity, right conduct and the many kinds of Yogas, as long as he does not serve (his) teacher. Even if one meditates constantly on my form as (he has been) taught by the teacher, (he does not) really (experience) any Śāmbhava bliss there until he possess the Command and, b is of good disposition has (the teacher's) feet on (his) head. Until (that happens) the mark of the qualities of the invisible (supreme being) does not arise with any speed.

If one worships those feet, immobile on (one's) head, as the form of the teacher, the (divine) qualities of realisation (manifest along) with the eight yogic powers and Śambhu's plane. I have explained how the three are imperceptible to anyone who does not possess the Command. By explaining (the nature) of the Rudras, Bhairavas, and Heroes, Yoga arises. When that is accomplished (that reality) whose mark are the attributes of direct perception (of the supreme being) is said to have been attained. This takes place by (the power of) the Command and that Command is known by the teacher. There is said to be knowledge in every scripture. I have (put it there) in many ways. The accomplished (form of the) Command is visibly present within the mantras in the field of (vision) of the Siddhas. Thus, this is the lineage of the Siddhas characterized as that of the teacher and the god. The Śāmbhava awakening dawns by the descent of (his) Command (onto his disciple).

Once the teacher, who is the Lord of Kula directly apparent and whose form is knowledge, has been abandoned, how can one worship elsewhere? The fool who abandons the blazing fire of Nirvāṇa falls into > the other fire (of suffering). One who abandons the teacher who is the abode of the gods falls (from the path to liberation). [1]

Just as the teacher can grace those disciples whose conduct and practice conform to the prescriptions of the teachings, he is also empowered to punish those and others who have erred. Like the deity, he has the power both to assist (anugraha) and to restrain (nigraha). He can purify and elevate by an act of grace directly or prescribe appropriate penances (prāyaścitta) from his repertoire of rituals and mantras. This, the most important function of the teacher, the one which makes all the others significant and effective, is intimately connected with his metaphysical identity. It is this identity that makes him who he is and gives him the power to do what he does. Conversely, this power is his most fundamental identity. It is his authority. The same holds good for his disciple. The teacher empowers his disciple with the authority to be a disciple, just as he has been empowered with the authority to be a teacher. In this perspective, a lineage of teachers and disciples is a chain of transmission of empowerment which is imparted through the rites of initiation. This chain begins with the deity and leads back to it.

This theory which, in one form or another, is basic for all religions and cults to which access is gained by initiation is especially important for the many diverse Tantric traditions. In the Kubjikā cult it assumes a particularly central role. The myths that recount the origin of the Kubjikā Tantras invariably focus on the transmission of this empowerment. Externally, the substance of the transmission is the scripture and its explanation. This is what we can examine and study. However, grounded in deity, its source, the actual transmission and what is transmitted is the empowering Command. The former is the teaching and the latter its transformative power. Accordingly, the myth of the origin of the tradition and its transmission is entirely concerned with the Command, rather than the scriptures. The teachings are the 'scripture of the Command' (ājñāśāstra). The Command empowers the deity to be both the deity and the teacher. Scripture is the outpouring of the Command that proceeds from it.

In previous chapters we have tried to fathom some of the depths of the Command and its transmission as a metaphysical principle and inner transformative power. In this chapter we shall examine the nature of deity, the teacher, the scripture and the lineages through which the Command and the teachings are transmitted. First, we will see how the Kubjikā Tantras view themselves as a Tantric tradition or transmission in general and as a Kaula one in particular, by analysing the key terms the texts commonly use to refer to themselves, the teachings they transmit and the manner in which it takes place.

[1] Ibid. 3/68-88.

Many of these terms belong to the common terminology of the Tantras of all the major traditions whereas some are specific to this one. They all refer in different ways to the most essential requirement for a Tantric transmission to take place, namely, the relationship between the teacher who transmits and the disciple who receives.

The teacher gives birth to spiritual offspring generated from the godhead through initiation. The relationship between the teacher, deity and disciple is essentially familial and so the terms that denote it are genealogical. The analogy is so close that it has allowed the Newars to equate the two types of genealogy - spiritual and biological. Scriptural authority unanimously sanctions the empowerment to worship the goddess for all who are morally fit to receive it. Even so, the Newars have chosen to limit the transmission of their Kaula traditions only to those who are related by blood and marriage in accord with the modalities laid down by local custom. The reasons for this are related to the Newars' autochthonous, pre-Sanskritic traditions as well as social and, no doubt, political motivations. Southern Śaivasiddhāntins approach the matter differently. Like the Newars they wish to align the prerogatives and restrictions of caste, that is, biological affiliation, with the spiritual one. However, rather than maintain the original caste distinctions, the initiation transforms the aspiring teacher into a Śaiva Brahmin. However, although theoretically possible for teachers to have originally been of any caste, in practice this system has generated a parallel caste affiliation which one can have only by birth. Both examples illustrate how the metaphor allows ample room for application.

Several terms denote the familial relationship between teacher and disciple. All of them also denote, by extension, the tradition transmitted thereby. Some are common terms with no particular added resonances. One is saṁpradāya. Derived from the root dā 'to give' and the prefix sam- in the sense of 'properly' and the intensive prefix pra-, saṁpradāya denotes the tradition that is 'given (and received) correctly' and those who have received it. One example of the usage of this word is the compound saṁpradāyārtha - the 'meaning' or 'sense' and hence 'teaching' of the tradition that is 'well given'.

Another common word is parampara. It literally means 'that which comes one after (param) the other (para)', that is, the series of teachers and disciples and what is transmitted through them, which may also be denoted by the possessive adjective pāramparya. The first primarily denotes the transmitted teaching and by extension the line of teachers, the second primarily the line of teachers and by extension the teaching they transmit.

In the following pages we will examine a number of such words. We shall begin with the words santāna (and the cognate santati) and anvaya both of which literally mean 'offspring', 'lineage' or 'descendence'. Next, we shall examine the term gotra which literally means 'clan' and so is more specific.

Santāna

The word 'santāna' is derived from the root tan which means: 'to stretch along or cover, to unite or join one's self with; to join or connect or keep together, make continuous, to add, annex, to effect, accomplish; to exhibit, display, evince.' All these meanings derive from the basic sense of extension or spreading out which involves appropriation, accomplishment and manifestation. Relevant literal meanings of the noun santāna include, according to Monier-Williams: 'continued succession, continuance, continuity, an uninterrupted series, continuous flow, ramification, continuous succession, lineage, race, family, offspring, son or daughter.'

Accordingly, a santāna may be an particular spiritual lineage generated by a Yoginī / goddess or a Siddha / god in conjunction with their partner.[1] One notable exception is the founder figure Vṛkṣanātha who, identified with the First Nātha,[2] was, according to the KRU,[3] generated by the goddess alone. However, even then, the process is conceived to be one of self-insemination and hence an unusual type of conjunctio rather than emanation. Possibly because of the exceptional nature of this conjunctio, the text does not locate it at a specific site, although the time it took place is specified. Otherwise, spiritual progeny - santāna - is normally produced in a sacred place.[4] All the major sacred seats (pīṭha) are sacred because they are locations where a conjunctio takes place that generates lineages of spiritual offspring, through which the teachings and empowering grace spreads and multiplies.

All the lineages in a tradition are ramifications of the original spiritual offspring of the founders and collectively constitute their descendents. Moreover, the lineage is the unified whole and a process in and through which the higher more universal and absolute forms of reality progressively manifest as and in the lower. From this point of view, the Path along which the teaching is transmitted is the lineage which is essentially the deity itself.[5] From the perspective of wholeness, the lineage is pervasive and encompassing like space.[6] The outer process in the physical world mirrors the inner archetypal process within the sacred geographical, mantric and psycho-physical symbolic configurations of the deployment of the conjunctio of and within the totality represented in ritual and in the subtle, yogic body by the maṇḍala. The goddess and the god unite in the centre of the maṇḍala to generate the lineage (santāna) which is the stream of the

---

[1] KuKh 6/221cd-222ab.
[2] Cf. KuKh 7/66cd-67ab.
[3] KRU 13/19cd-22ab. See below, p. 478-479.
[4] See, for example, KuKh 6/171.
[5] KuKh 17/1-2.
[6] See KuKh 19/17.

utterance of their conjoined mantras.[1] Similarly, the lineage (anvaya) is initiated by the conjunction of the vital parts of the maṇḍala. Thus, as the lineage of Siddhas is both external and within the maṇḍala, it can be projected inwards into the living maṇḍala of the body where each Siddha has a place in some limb, organ or Wheel in the subtle body.

Anvaya

The word anvaya is derived from root 'i' and the prefix 'anu' in the sense of 'to go after or alongside, to follow; to seek; to be guided by; to fall to one's share.' The relevant meanings of the noun anvaya according to Monier-Wiliams are: 'following, succession; connection, association, being linked to or connected with.' By extension, anvaya also means, as does santāna, descendence, race, lineage, or family. The greater semantic spread of the word anvaya with more implicit meanings than santāna, explains why it is more commonly found in the Tantras than the latter to denote the lineages of teachers and the teachings. Indeed, in some contexts, the word santāna would be inappropriate as, for example, in the expression commonly found in the colophons of our text - 'the tradition of seventy million (verses)' (saptakoṭyanvaya).[2] English demands that we translate the word anvaya here as 'tradition' and so miss the resonance in the original Sanskrit that comes from the word's primary meaning which is 'connection' or 'association' and so can also mean 'the natural order or connection of words in a sentence, syntax, . . . logical connection of words' (Monier-Williams). Anvaya in this perspective is the tradition as a whole as exemplified and expressed in the coherence and syntactical relationship between the statements which constitute its teaching, on the one hand, and the continuity and coherence of its transmission, on the other. Thus the expression pārmaparyānvaya, which is defined as 'the sequence of masters and disciples' (guruśiṣyakrama),[3] is not just the 'lineage (anvaya) of the series' (pāramparya) (of masters and disciples), it is also the connection or association between each member in the series. It is this unbroken continuity (anvaya) that permits the transmission of the energy of grace which is the Command transmitted through the lineage (anvayājñā).[4] The entire tradition and all that it contains is the offspring of the Command of the lineage (anvayājñāprasūti)[5] including the triple energy of will, knowledge and action[6] that

---

[1] See KuKh 7/51cd-52ab.
[2] KuKh 39/55-56, intro. vol.3, p. 24 and p. 76 ff..
[3] KuKh 7/87.
[4] KuKh 7/94-95ab.
[5] KuKh 38/16d.
[6] KuKh 38/31a.

forms the divine triangle through which everything is generated. As the impelling force of emanation, the Western Tradition (paścimānvaya)[1] is bliss itself.[2]

A person who receives the Command through initiation becomes a link in this chain - a member of the lineage (anvayika) who forms a part of this continuum. He is another addition who may in his turn contribute to, as well as receive from, the anvaya which develops cumulatively as 'the collection of what has come before' (pūrvasaṁgraha).[3] Like the English word 'tradition' that denotes both this vehicle of culture and its content, the term anvaya also denotes the teaching that is transmitted,[4] the essence of which is the experience of deity.[5]

The ambiguity between the actual tradition, what is transmitted through it (both the teaching[6] and its power) and the scripture, is maintained when the anvaya of the goddess Kubjikā is said to be the Śrīmata.[7] The Western Tradition (paścimānvaya) is the Śrīmata[8] and the name of the scripture.[9] It has come forth from the centre of the maṇḍala.[10] This is the Cave Dwelling of the goddess and the Śāmbhava plane,[11] which is the teaching transmitted through this Kaula tradition (anvaya),[12] the Paścimānvaya. A common synonym of the name Paścimāmnāya,[13] it is the 'root tradition' (mūlānvaya)[14] of which the individual lineages (oli) and currents of transmission (ogha) are developments. It is the 'lineage of Siddhas' (siddhānvaya)[15] which, as the whole tradition, is at once the path of the accomplished (siddhamārga) and that of accomplishment (siddhimārga).[16] The word 'anvaya' may also denote a particular line of transmission or 'lineage of Siddhas' (siddhānvaya)[17] or 'the lineage of a sacred

---

[1] KMT 2/47.
[2] KuKh 39/32.
[3] KuKh 13/106.
[4] Examples of this usage are found in KuKh 8/6 and 18/113.
[5] KuKh 17/5.
[6] See, for example, KuKh 8/6.
[7] KuKh 2/17.
[8] See KuKh 2/17 and 4/10a, and cf. 45/64.
[9] KuKh 30/104cd-105.
[10] KuKh 3/38.
[11] KuKh 3/162-164ab.
[12] KuKh 3/170.
[13] See, for example, KuKh 6/42, 8/1, 8/7, 9/68, 27/1, 30/52, 31/2, 32/44, and 32/56.
[14] See KuKh 4/10ab.
[15] See, for example, KuKh 17/2 and 26/35. Also:
siddhānvayaṁ paraṁ kaulaṁ bhuktimuktiphalapradam | CMSS 1/24ab.
[16] KuKh 38/17c.
[17] KuKh 6/159cd-160ab and 17/2 also:

seat' (pīṭhānvaya).[1] An embodiment of the deity,[2] the worship of the lineage (anvaya) is an important feature of Kaula ritual in all traditions.[3]

Gotra

The term gotra, literally means 'clan'. Although it is sometimes used in the same broad sense to mean the whole tradition,[4] it more commonly denotes sub-lineages within the whole tradition (anvaya).[5] Thus belonging to the anvaya implies belonging to a gotra also. One belongs to this gotra by virtue of initiation. In this context, to be 'born in a gotra' (gotraja) means to have received initiation, that is, the transmission of the Command. Just as one should pay homage to one's ancestors, it is essential to know and worship the teachers of own's gotra.

The word gotra[6] is first used in the Ṛgveda where it means a 'cow-stable' or 'herd of cows', also 'cloud', 'fort' and, in a few passages, 'assemblage' (samūha). The transition from the last sense to a 'group of persons' is easy.[7] Although there is no positive instance of the term gotra being used in the Ṛgveda in the sense of 'clan', that is, all the individuals who are said to have descended from a common patriarchal ancestor, the notion was already quite familiar. Kane[8] supplies several examples from the Vedas and Brāhmaṇas in which descendents of great sages were called after those sages. In the earliest period it appears that, as here in the [1] KuKh 6/173cd-174ab. In this sense the term anvaya replaces the term oli which denotes a specific lineage within the whole tradition. Thus, the names Parānvaya, Vakrikānvaya and Siddhānvaya stand for the three main lineages namely, those of the Elder, Youth and the Child (ibid. 7/80) or the lineage of a group of Siddhas (ibid. 17/13).

---

[2] KuKh 26/33.

[3] Cf. KuKh 13/106.

[4] The Śrīmata is a name of both the Kubjikā cult and its scripture. In the following reference it is treated as an offshoot of all the Tantric schools that consider their primary scriptures to be Bhairava Tantras. As such, in terms of the transmission (krama) and doctrine (krama), it is said to be a particular descendence (santāna) within Bhairava's clan (gotra), thus reversing the usual order of precedence.

> One should know that the (entire spiritual) lineage (santāna) is the Śrīmata and that the clan (gotra) is Bhairava. The field (of ritual action are the Praṇavas called) the Five Jewels and the transmission (krama) is said to be the Śrīmata.

santānaṁ śrīmataṁ jñeyaṁ gotraṁ [k: gotra] bhairavam eva ca |
gocaraṁ pañcaratnaṁ ca kramaṁ śrīmatam ucyate || YKh (1) 4/248.

[5] KuKh 5/48cd-49ab.

[6] Concerning gotra see Kane 1974: vol. 2, part 1 p. 479 ff.

[7] For example, see Kauśikasūtra 4/2.

[8] Kane 1974: vol. 2, part 1 p. 479-500.

Kubjikā Tantras, 'descent was traced through teacher and pupil as well as through father and son'.[1] But in those days, these identities often coincided anyway.

A reversal with respect to earlier practice and conception took place in the later Vedic period when the gotra relationship was established by birth not from teacher to pupil. Thus according to Pāṇini: 'the word gotra denotes the progeny (of a sage) beginning with the son's son.'[2] It was considered to be so important that the sages of the Upaniṣads who expounded the knowledge of the Brahman addressed their pupils by their gotra names.[3] Difference in clan identity was marked by diversity in certain ritual practices. Kane points out that: 'In the Brāhmaṇa literature there are ample indications that priestly families had come to be formed into several groups named after their (real or supposed) founders and that such families differed in details of worship according to the group they belonged to.'[4] The same was true of the prescriptions found in the Gṛhyasūtra literature. First and foremost, it was forbidden to marry a woman who belonged to the same gotra. Other differences related to the manner in which offerings are made to the ancestors and who is entitled to make them.[5] Those of the upper three caste groups who should make sandhya offerings must maintain a clear sense of their identity as members of their lineage. Just as in the Vedic period gotra was referred to in connection with the sacrifices or education, the fact that gotra and other such markers of lineage and appurtenance should be declared at each of the three daily *sandhya*s indicates that this identity is not just geneological. It was related to the transmission of spiritual knowledge and the sense of a spiritual identity. The term gotra in this sense often appears in inscriptions from the 5th century CE onwards to denote a lineage founded by the namesake of a particular gotra. For example, inscriptions refer to the gārgyagotra - a Pāśupata lineage founded by Gārgya. He is mentioned in the citrapraśasti inscription by Śāraṅgadeva, as one of the four disciples of Lākulīśa[6] and in the Gaṇakārikā by Bhāvasarvajña.[7] Other Pāśupata *gotra*s recorded in inscriptions are chāpalagotra and praṇāmagotra.[8] Abhinavagupta confirms that the term 'gotra', like 'maṭhikā' and 'kula', refers to a lineage of teachers.[9] This is one of the meanings in our text also. The clan is the whole tradition (anvaya)[10] which is 'path of the clan'

---

[1] Ibid.
[2] apatyaṁ pautraprabhṛti gotram Pāṇini 4/1/162.
[3] Kane op. cit. p. 480-489.
[4] Ibid.
[5] Ibid. p. 481-482.
[6] EI, I, p. 282.
[7] Gaṇakārikā p. 14.
[8] Pathak 1980: 10 ff..
[9] gotraṁ ca gurusantāno maṭhikākulaśabditaḥ | TĀ 4/235cd.
[10] KuKh 5/48cd-49ab; santānaṁ gotram - KuKh 38/20a.

(gotramārga), that is, the path to liberation.[1] It is the clan of the goddess Amarikā - the Immortal One[2] or of her transmission (amarikākrama)[3] and so is called the clan of immortality (amaratva).[4] It is said to teach non-duality, which is the union of Śiva and Śakti.[5]

Just as one who transgresses the rules of his caste's clan (gotra) is banned from it by fellow members, similarly, one who transgresses the goddess's Command is deprived of its power and so is said to be 'outside the clan' (gotrabāhya).[6] To fall from the clan or be outside it means that one has lost the Command or not received it.[7] Moreover, just as a transgression of the clan rules requires atonement (prāyaścitta), similarly the repetition of the appropriate mantra purifies one who has transgressed the rules of the goddess's tradition so that he can resume active membership of her spiritual clan. The god protests to the goddess that he abides by the rules and practices of the clan of the goddess's spiritual tradition.[8] Pleased with him, she gives him the Command which makes him a unique member of the clan.[9]

The first clan of the goddess (devyādigotra) consists of the Five Nāthas.[10] The three lineages (oli) of the Siddhas of the sacred seats are a part of the spiritual family of the clan (gotrasantati).[11] Similarly, the Nine Nāthas are also said to belong to the circle of the clan (gotramaṇḍala) in Śrīdeśa, that is, Koṅkaṇa.[12] Affection for the clan is an essential virtue of a good disciple.[13] One should not join drinking parties (pānagoṣṭhī) or meetings of those who are not initiates (paśugoṣṭhī). Instead one should regularly attend meetings of one's own spiritual clan (gotragoṣṭhī).[14] Normal caste distinctions disappear in such meetings. Although they must be maintained in day-to-day life, they are suspended when members of the same spiritual clan come together in an assembly (cakra) to worship. Then they may eat together freely, even if they cannot do so outside the confines of the assembly.[15] One must observe the rules of the clan. These include

---

[1] KuKh 42/60.
[2] KuKh 17/4cd.
[3] KuKh 62/61.
[4] KuKh 17/36cd.
[5] KuKh 53/6.
[6] KuKh 4/16.
[7] KuKh 4/14-17ab.
[8] KuKh 5/38-39ab.
[9] KuKh 5/48cd-49ab.
[10] KuKh 17/37. Concerning the Five Nāthas see below, p. 401-402.
[11] KuKh 29/32 and 30/189cd-190ab.
[12] KuKh 7/69.
[13] KuKh 32/39 and 32/64.
[14] KuKh 37/39-40.
[15] KuKh 46/290.

avoiding meetings and conversation with the wife of a fellow clan member (gotrabhāryā).[1] While all illicit sex is prohibited, the transgression of this rule is particularly bad.

The underlying concept of gotra in the Kubjikā Tantras has also been projected into a ritual and higher metaphysical dimension. The 'clan' from this perspective is the flow of the goddess's creative energy of Speech. It consists of the letters and their energies, represented by the two alphabetical orders - Mālinī, the goddess, and the Assembly of Sounds (śabdarāśi), the god. The original divine gotra of the goddess is the Assembly of Sounds (śabdarāśi),[2] that is, the series of Bhairavas who preside over the letters of the alphabet. The clan (gotra) consists of the Fifty Rudras.[3] 'Within the world of transmigration', they are represented as Siddhas and their consorts who, as aspects of their transcendental archetypes, generate spiritual clans (gotra). The initiate is considered to be their spiritual descendent on the analogy of those who belong to Vedic gotras are descendents of Vedic ṛṣis. Thus, Mukundarāja, explains that: '(the identity of) a clan accords with the lineage (vaṁśa) of the preceding Siddhas in one's own (spiritual) family (kula).'[4]

When the postulant takes initiation he is given a new name. This name indicates the spiritual clan to which he belongs. In order to ascertain it, he is blind-folded and throws a stick into a triangle divided into fifty compartments each of which contains one of the letters of the alphabet. The compartment onto which the stick falls establishes his gotra relationship with the Siddha and Yoginī who reside there. In this way, each letter of the alphabet is a 'clan'. Accordingly, the goddess is said to be divided into 50 clans[5] and the letters collectively are called 'gotrapiṇḍa' lit. 'the body or aggregate of clans'.[6] This aggregate is the entire triangle which the text declares is within the goddess as 'Bhairava's most excellent City of Speech (bharatipura), which is the clan (gotra) and the teaching.'[7] In short, Śiva, who is the Assembly of Sounds (śabdarāśi), and Śakti, who is Mālinī, pervade the aggregate of phonemic energies - the gotra - which brings about the emanation and withdrawal of the universe of Speech.

[1] KuKh 37/56cd.
[2] KuKh 17/37.
[3] KuKh 38/19; see also 2/35.
[4] gotraṁ [gotraḥ] svakulapūrvasiddhavaṁśavṛttikam [-kaḥ]. SaṁP fl. 3b.
[5] See KuKh 2/34cd-35ab and note.
[6] See note 27 to KuKh 2/12.
[7] KuKh 38/24b.

Gṛha

Other common terms for the tradition are veśman, gṛha and, occasionally, the vernacular forms ghara and geha. All these words literally mean a 'house' or 'home' and so, by extension, a household. The term is used in a specific sense to denote a particular Kaula tradition, like the more common term āmnāya. This one is the 'Western House' (paścimagṛha),[1] that is, the Western Tradition (paścimāmnāya or paścimānvaya)[2] which is the 'empowered (śākta) house of the teacher' (gurugṛha).[3] The goddess - Śrī - has authority in the Western House[4] and so it is the Śrīgṛha - the Venerable House[5] of the goddess, the House of her tradition, the Śrīmata,[6] also known as the Śrīkula.[7] It is only in this House that success (siddhi) can be achieved in this, the Age of Strife (kaliyuga).[8] It contains the goddess's tradition and it is from there that it emerges. It is the Western House[9] where the Tree of Mantra grows.[10] Within the subtle body, it is the maṇḍala on top of Kailāsa above the head,[11] that is, the House of the venerable City of the Moon.[12] It is the maṇḍala which is in the 'west' or the 'summit' (paścimastha), that is, both the actual place called the City of the Moon in the west (paścima) and the maṇḍala[13] which is the Abode of the Moon at the very summit or end (paścima) of the sphere of manifestation. Also simply called the City (pura), it is the downward facing triangle above the head.[14] In the centre of this House resides the teacher who recites the mantras (mantrin).[15] This is where the goddess lives in the form of a Liṅga.[16] It is the inner dwelling, the Wheel of Passion (raticakra) in the womb of the goddess. Yogis reside there in that

---

[1] KuKh 36/107ab.
[2] For examples of this usage see KuKh. 3/16, 4/3b, 7/5c, 12/42, 24/37, 30/160, 169b, 36/107 (here called vāruṇagṛha), and 42/58.
[3] KuKh 3/15ab and 3/59.
[4] KuKh 3/16.
[5] YKh (1) 4/236b says of the Paścimāmnāya that: It is the Śrīgṛha which is the western arising (śrīgṛhaṁ paścimodayam).
[6] KuKh 4/10a, 2/17 cf. 45/64.
[7] This name for Kubjikā's tradition is, along with Śrīkrama, mostly found in the KRU. Examples of occurences in our text are in KuKh 27/27b (śrīkulāgama), colophon to chapter 30, 33/19c (śrīkulasantāna), 39/83b, and 42/52d.
[8] KuKh 5/15.
[9] KuKh 7/34 and 30/202.
[10] KuKh 62/57.
[11] KuKh 45/37.
[12] KuKh 5/15, 17/4, 22/26, 31/90, 48/91cd-92ab, 53/5, 58/69cd-70ab, and 63/8.
[13] KuKh 39/51.
[14] KuKh 3/49.
[15] KuKh 3/59.
[16] KuKh 3/168-169.

consciousness, mentally discerning the supreme reality in order to develop insight into the non-existence of phenomenal existence. Thus they play in the Kula tradition (kulāmnāya), the imperishable abode of consciousness.[1] Profound, deep and hard to penetrate, it is the House of Bliss.[2] The goddess descends from the transcendent first into this House above the head and then from there into the mortal world.

The House above has its counterpart below. The lunar energy of the Full Moon in the House of the City of the Full Moon[3] is above. Below, at the other extremity of the subtle body, is the Secret Place (guhyasthāna) of the genitals,[4] the House of the New Moon.[5] They are both essentially the one Ocean of the Yoni which is the Western (paścima) House,[6] that is, the place at the extremities (paścima) of the subtle body. The body is a house as is the cremation ground[7] and every sacred site (kṣetra).[8]

As the core of the maṇḍala,[9] it is the House of the Yoginī (Yoginīgṛha),[10] that is, the goddess Kubjikā, the most excellent of Yoginīs. It is the Triangle lined with letters.[11] Filled with the fifty phonemic energies of the letters, it is also the house of many Yoginīs and the city of the Siddhas who are their consorts.[12] The letters governed by Siddhas and Yoginīs each have their own house, that is,

---

[1] bhāvitaṁ kulakaulākhyaṁ taṁ gṛhaṁ parikīrtitam |
sthitvā tadbodhamanasā bhāvābhāvavivarddhaye [k gh: -vivaddaye] ||
krīḍayanti [k gh: -ynti] kulāmnāye [sarve: -snāye] aviluptacidālaye | CMSS 7/36-37ab.

[2] The radiant Western House is pervaded by `pure liberation'. It is the Void that flows with the pulsation of the aesthetic flavour (rasa) of the Touch of the Unpenetrated. It is the great waveless ocean free of perception (māna) and its object (meya). Deep and profound it is called the House of Bliss (ānandagḥara).

nirāveśasparśarasaspandanisyandakandaram [sarve: niraveśaḥ parśa-; k: n-isyakarā; kh: -rasampandanisyakarā; g: -nispanda-; gh: -saṁpandakarā] ||
kaivalyavimalākrāntaṁ [gh : -kraṁtaṁ] gṛhaṁ paścimasaṁsphuram [k g: -raḥ; gh: -saspharaḥ] |
mānameyaparikṣīṇanistaraṅgamahodadhiḥ [k kh: mānayeya-; gh: -nimtara-] ||
gādhaṁ [sarve: gādha] gambhīragahanaṁ tad ānandagṛhaṁ [sarve: -gṛha] smṛtam [sarve: smṛtaḥ] | CMSS 3/4cd-6ab.

[3] KuKh 7/57, 38/23.

[4] KuKh 17/46cd-7cd.

[5] KuKh 17/34.

[6] KuKh 59/74.

[7] KuKh 14/50.

[8] KuKh 14/75cd-77ab.

[9] KuKh 7/14cs-15ab.

[10] KuKh 6/82, 45/39, 62.

[11] KuKh 7/14cd-15ab.

[12] KuKh 7/28 and 7/50.

compartment within this House, the triangular grid of letters (meruprastāra),[1] which is the goddess's Yoni. Thus, it is not only the Triangle that contains all the sacred seats where the Yoginīs and Siddhas meet, it is also each of the sacred seats within it - the places Bhairava, in the form of a Siddha must enter to meet the goddess.[2] Similarly, the six sacred seats projected into the hexagram surrounding the central Triangle of the maṇḍala are the Six Houses.[3] These are places, both in the outside world and the maṇḍala (external and in the body), where Siddhas and Yoginīs meet (melāpasthāna) and so bestow immediate realisation (pratyaya).[4] Similarly, the places where the Mothers reside in the form of low caste women are houses.[5] They are the Eight Houses[6] of the Mothers projected into the eight petals of the lotus that surrounds the hexagram in the maṇḍala.

According to the KJN, the Kaula teachings are found in the house of every Yoginī in Kāmarūpa. Similarly, in our text we read[7] that the goddess's maṇḍala, which is the sacred seat of Yoga, is in every Yoginī's house. Indeed, wherever the goddess resides, in whatever form, is the House of the Mother (avvāgṛha, mātrīgṛha),[8] her sacred temple to which the Siddha travels with devotion to generate his spiritual lineage in every Age.[9]

The outer and the inner world reflect one another in as many ways as they are represented. From this perspective what is common to both is that they are containers of the sacred which is not an abstract oneness but the concrete, living wholeness of one great family. All the members of this family have their own identity, which is apparent not only in their specific form, name, temperament, power and function but also in their specific location (sthāna), which is their house. At the same time, they are all related in as many of the myriad ways in which they come together or reside in the same maṇḍala, wheel (cakra) or sacred site (whether pīṭha, kṣetra, śmaśāna or the like) that are their many houses. These are the places where the yogi wanders, both within and outside, intent on his practice, to meet and unite with the Yoginī - the embodiment of the goddess Kubjikā, the deity of the House (gṛhadevatā),[10] and his divine counterpart.[11] Thus

---

[1] KuKh 8/18.
[2] KuKh 6/129.
[3] KuKh 61/28.
[4] KuKh 42/32cd-33.
[5] KuKh 14/92-4ab, 16/3-4, 39/112.
[6] KuKh 42/32.
[7] KuKh 58/96cd-97ab.
[8] KuKh 45/54.
[9] KuKh 43/4, 11, 18, 23.
[10] KuKh 42/30.
[11] This wandering is called Niśācāra - the Conduct of the Night, concerning which see KuKh 15/39cd ff..

the yogi achieves accomplishment (siddhi) and, successful, he attains both the joys and benefits of the world (bhoga) and liberation (mukti) by knowing these sacred places[1] of which the highest that contains them all is the House of the goddess Kubjikā.

Ovalli and Oli

The word 'oli' denotes a lineage. The term appears in the KuKauM, ŚM and KRU.[2] Other forms of the word include olika, uli, ulika and auli.[3] The term ovalli is not found in the KuKh even though oli/uli is very frequent.[4] It is found several times in the Ṭīkā[5] with reference to the Three Lineages. In one place the alternation between the two spellings oli and uli is clear as is that between the two forms oli/ovalli.[6] In places we find the spelling ovali instead of ovalli.[7] It appears that the two words have a common derivation: ovalli > ovali > oli (> uli). The Prākṛta forms appear to confirm this. The Deśīnāmamālā supplies the following simple definition: - 'olī is a lineage.'[8] We find the forms oḷi in Gujarātī meaning 'row' or 'line' and, with the same meaning, in Marāṭhī oḷ.[9]

Jayaratha equates oli with ovalli in his commentary on the Vāmakeśvarīmata.[10] He uses the term ovalli with reference to the six disciples (called 'princes' - rājaputra) generated from Mīnanātha and his consort Koṅkaṇā. He was the propagator of Kula doctrine in this Age. Each one of these six disciples founded lineages, the members of which affixed various endings to their names. The disciples of the first of these six lineages added bodhi to their name.[11]

---

[1] KuKh 39/112.

[2] KuKauM 1/27; 1/77; 2/6: śreṣṭhovalli; in ŚM at least twice in 10/58 and 25/91; KRU 13/18; 13/31.

[3] For occurrences of the word and its various forms in our text, see note to the Sanskrit text of 3/11b.

[4] See note to the Sanskrit of KuKh 3/11a.

[5] Ṭ fl. 55a and 96a.

[6] olibhedaṁ na jānāmi ity ādi ahaṁ śrīkaṇṭhanātha ulibhedaṁ na jānāmi kathaṁ devyāvatāritam | [. . .] tathā gurukramovalli kasmin sthānāvadhir yāvat pūjayet | Ṭ MS K fl. 137a

[7] e.g. bālovalyāṁ bālakrameṇa kathyate Ibid. fl. 137b.

[8] olī kulaparivāṭī Deśīnāmamālā 1/148cd.

[9] Marāṭhī ogal, oghaḷ ohaḷ and fem. ohāḷī (< ava-/gal 'to flow down', 'descend'). See J. Bloch: The Formation of the Marāṭhī Language pp. 78 and 86. Bloch explains the -h- by contamination with ghṛ 'to moisten' or with ogha 'stream'. The form ovalli corresponds to oālī in Deśīnāmamālā (1/164cd): oālī asidos'olī. The Sanskrit commentary explains: 'The word oālī has two meanings namely, a fault in a sword and a row.' oālī khaḍgadoṣaḥ paṅktiś ceti dvyarthā. Cf. ibid. 1/151: oggālo tathā oālo alpaṁ srotaḥ.

[10] Vāmakeśvarīmata 1/10: vande . . . devīṁ . . . paraulijām (-vivaraṇa 14): olir ovalliḥ.

[11] See TĀ 29/33-36.

An example is the name Satyabodhi.[1] Thus Jayaratha says: 'There are six *ovalli*s beginning with bodhi and the rest. These are the lineages of knowledge divided into the elders and the rest.'[2] Elsewhere he defines ovallis as: 'currents of knowledge'.[3] The term has a general, common usage, as in Kaula texts, meaning a tradition, lineage, school and the teachings transmitted thereby. When Śitikaṇṭha describes how the Kālīkrama teachings were transmitted from the goddess to Jñānanetra the founder of that school, he refers to it as the 'description of the ovalli' (ovallisūcana).[4] The South Indian Maheśvarānanda bows to the two *ovalli*s of his teacher's feet[5] alluding to Kālī's Northern Tradition (uttarāmnaya) and the Upper Tradition (ūrdhvāmnāya) of Śrīvidyā that are blended together in his own lineage.

The Currents of Teachers

The teacher is more than just a mediator or even a means of attainment, he is the embodiment of the deity and worshipped along with it. He is the bridge between the timeless, ideal world of the scriptures and the actual world of daily life. Myth pours out into history in an encounter that transforms them both into a living tradition. The tradition is not just that of the deity. It is the Tradition of the Masters (gurvāmnāya) and that of the Siddhas (siddhāmnāya) and their teaching (siddhaśāsana). It is as much theirs, the human medium in which the ideal is actualized, as it is that of Śambhu, the god and the Western Teaching (paścimaśāsana). Thus, Kubjikā's teachings are the Tradition of the Masters (gurvāmnāya) that begins with Śrīnātha.[6] Accordingly, in the Kubjikā Tantras this term specifically denotes the teaching and the lineages through which the goddess's Command is transmitted.[7]

Other Kaula or proto-Kaula schools refer to themselves as the Tradition of the Masters. Thus Bhairava affirms with regards to the teachings of the Kālīkula transmitted in the JY that:

---

[1] See comm. on TĀ 3/296.

[2] ovallyo bodhyādayaḥ ṣaṭ jyeṣṭhādibhedabhinnā jñānasantatayaḥ | Comm. on TĀ 3/304.

[3] ovallyo jñānapravāhāḥ | Comm. On TĀ 29/28.

[4] MP (1) p. 49. The goddess Maṅgalā is the fire stick of this 'ovalli'. (kulasya ovallīviśeṣasya araṇiḥ) (MP (1) p. 107) called the Uttaraghorauvalli ibid. p. 42 (read asmin uttaraghorauvalli-viśeṣarūpe for asminnuttaraghoravalliviśeṣarūpe of the printed edition).

[5] MM v. 5b.

[6] Ṭīkā quoted in note to KuKh 4/8-10ab.

[7] See note to KuKh 4/8-10ab and 13/108cd-109, 30/143d, and 39/59d.

> All this, the endless essence of the scriptures that saves from the world of transmigration and the rest is founded on the teacher.[1]

Consequently the tradition is that of the Masters which is the Transmission of the Masters.[2] And so the JY warns:

> Error arises constantly (for those) who are devoid of the Tradition of the Masters and they do not achieve success.[3]

The author of the Khacakrapañcakastotra addresses the form of Kālī who is the goddess of the Kashmiri Kālīkrama as: 'mistress of all the gods! (you who have) come forth from the Tradition of the Masters!'[4] Just as the teacher is deity, so too the deity is the teacher. Ideal representations lead progressively to more concrete ones as if trying to break free from the ideal world to which they belong to penetrate into history. Viewed from the historian's perspective this appears to be a deception, a way of lending authority to a new cult by placing it further back into the past and drawing from the prestige of its powerful and glorious, but purely imaginary, votaries. The Indian ethos that values the past, shunning what is new because it lacks the imprimatur of tradition, demands such deceits. We may discern ulterior motives - selfish aims, personal gains, political manouvers - and no doubt they existed. We may, indeed, we should, trace their history but it does not explain more than the confines of this perspective allows. Just as the history of the Church - however 'black' - does not explain Christianity or, for that matter, empty it of its authentic spiritual content. From the 'inner' perspective of the tradition whose development is recorded in its own terms, regardless of the social and political conditions of the time that the historian strives to pieces together, there is no boundry between the historical and the ideal. The ideal becomes historical with the same ease that the historical becomes ideal. The past tapers off into the timeless Godhead even as it emerges from it, running its course first through myth and then into history. If we pay careful attention to our sources we can witness this process taking place step by step.

The Siddhas presented in the later Kubjikā texts as the founders of lineages and their succeeding generations first appear as ideal images. They are the energies and integral parts of the expanse of deity that progressively defines itself initially into its own divine form to then pour out into the differentiated stream of

---

[1] gurvāśritam idaṁ sarvaṁ saṁsāroddharaṇādikam |
śāstrasandoham akhilam anantaṁ * * * * * * || JY 1/45/1.
[2] gurvāmnāyaṁ gurukramam JY 1/45/74b.
[3] gurvāmnāyena rahitā bhrāntirvai jāyate sadā |
prāpnuvanti na te siddhiṁ * * * * * * * * || JY 4/20/71
[4] sarvadeveśi gurvāmnāyaprasarpite KhCPS 115d principles that mark the stages of the evolution of the emanation of the individual soul and the universe he inhabits. Once Bhairava has been empowered to be the first teacher he assumes the form of the Five Nāthas.[1] These, the first teachers, are the embodiments of the five elements that emanate the universe.[2] These five Bhairavas and the Siddhas of the sacred seats are the first teachers mentioned directly by name in the KMT. As the Kubjikā Tantras developed so did the lineages and their associations. In the following passage from YKh (1) they are equated with the Four Yuganāthas:

> Sādākhya is the Principle of Space (vyomatattva). Anantadeva is all-pervasive, and is adorned with a pure (amala) mind. Well known as the Fire Principle, he is Piṅganātha by name who generates many kinds of qualities. Śrīkaṇṭha is the Water Principle. Śankara (also called) Balīśa is the lord whose body is nectar. I bow to (these) famous Siddhas who create many kinds of Kulas.
>
> These five Siddhanāthas are the lords of the universe. (They are) the Siddhas of the agency of emanation. They are the doors to heaven and have reached the other side (of the ocean of bondage). They have burst apart the limitless worlds of hell and are the only ones able to bestow liberation. They came down onto the venerable (mount) Kailāsa and, heating (tapan) the lotus of phenomenal existence, shine with (their) radiant energy (tejas). I bow before these (Siddhas) constantly whose intellect is well versed in the Krama and are the descent (into the world) of all knowledge.[3]

---

[1] KMT 3/89-93, 96cd-100.

[2] The (god) is fivefold because he is the cause of the clatter of (material) emanation. (He is) Śrīkaṇṭha, Śaṁkara, Ananta, Sādākhya and Piṅgala. Śrīkaṇṭha is in the principle of Earth, Śaṁkara resides in Water. Ananta is said to be Fire and Sādākhya is said to be Air. Space should be known to be Piṅgala. These five are the authors of emanation. In this way, the god who is (these) five resides in Earth and the others. This is the god Ciñciṇīnātha, Bhairava, the Siddha of the Command. The Lord has five forms and can grace and punish.

sa eva pañcadhā bhūtaḥ sṛṣṭyāḍambarakāraṇāt [k: sṛṣṭi-] || [kh: (?)]
śrīkaṇṭhaḥ śaṅkaro 'nantaḥ sādākhyaḥ [k, kh: -khyā] piṅgalas tathā |
śrīkaṇṭhaḥ pṛthivītattve śaṅkaraś cāpasaṁsthitaḥ ||
*tejo 'nantam [kh: * * * (?)m] iti proktaṁ sādākhyo [k: -khyā; kh: sādākṣā] vāyur ucyate |
ākāśaḥ piṅgalo [k: -lā] jñeyaḥ pañcaite sṛṣṭikārakāḥ ||
evaṁ pañcātmako [k, kh: - kaṁ] devaḥ [k, kh: deva] pṛthivyādiṣu saṁsthitaḥ [k, kh: - taṁ] |
ciñciṇīnāthadevo 'yaṁ [k: - devāyaṁ] ājñāsiddhas tu bhairavaḥ ||
pañcamūrtidharo nātho [k, kh: -tha] nigrahānugrahakṣamaḥ |

YKh (2) 15/22cd-26ab = KuKh 46/30cd-33.

[3] sādākhyaṁ vyomatattvaṁ vibhur amalamatiḥ [g: -mati] śobhitānantadevaṁ [g: sābhitannaṁtadevaṁ]

The goddess Matsyodarī is Tārā, the (energy) Śāntyatītā who impels the awakened. Mīnanātha, who has overcome the impurity of the Age of Strife is (the Siddha) Sādākhya in the sacred seat of the Moon (i.e. Candrapura). He is the hero who lays hold of the Yoni which is the (supreme) plane of all the universe by means of (his) insights into many (forms of) knowledge. I always bow to him who reveals Kula by means of the various lineages (of initiates).

In the venerable seat of Oṁkāra, the talented Vijayā, who is (the energy) Śānti, pulses radiantly within. During the Kṛta Age (the Siddha) is the tranquil Ananta directly apparent. The one called Khagendra (is the Siddha) in the Tretā Age and (within him) in the sacred seat of Jāla is the Vidyā which is part of the maṇḍala and is impelled by the (most) excellent Void (gagana). I bow to Piṅgala who shines with the radiance of the Moon and Sun and is the incarnation (called) Kūrma (kūrmāvatāra).[1]

Maṅgalāvva is in Kāmākhya and, presiding on mount Pulimalaya, is well established. Śrīkaṇṭha is Meṣanātha, who is the quelling of the fear of phenomenal existence, the yogi who practices Yoga in the Dvāpara Age. Descent into the Wheel, the abode of the lord of passion (ratipati), (took) place with great speed. (There) Koṅkaṇāvvā is (the energy) Nivṛtti. Macchagna is this (Siddha) called Śaṅkara. Known in the Age of Stife, I always bow to him.[2]

---

tejaṁ tattvaṁ [g: tatva] prasiddhaṁ vividhaguṇakaraṁ piṅganāthaṁ hi [g: hiṁ] nāmnā śrīkaṇṭhaṁ tvāpatattvaṁ [g: tyayatetva] prabhur amṛtatanuḥ [g: -tanu] śaṅkaraṁ vā balīśam ||
siddhān naumi prasiddhān vividhakulakarān vānadevyā pravṛddhān || pañcaite siddhanāthā jagadadhipatayaḥ sṛṣṭikartṛtvasiddhāḥ [g: -siktā] svargadvārā paraṁgāmitapaṭalabhidā [g: -paraṁṅgā- -bhido] muktidānekadakṣāḥ |
śrīkailāsāvatīrṇāḥ [g: -kailāsa- -rṇā] kamalabhavatapan tejasā bhrajamānāḥ [g: pra-] | sarvajñānāvatārāḥ [g: -rā] kramapaṭumatayo ye sadā tān [g: ntā] namāmi || YKh (1) 39/15-16.

[1] devī matsyodarī [g: matsodarī] yā vibudhajananutā śāntyatītā [g: -ta] ca tārā sādākhyaś candrapīṭhe kalimaladamano [g: kaṇi-] rājate mīnanāthaḥ | nānāvijñānabodhaiḥ jagadakhilapadāṁ [g: -pada] yoniṁ [g: yoni] gṛhnāti [g: -ni] vīraḥ saṁjñāṁ [g: sajñā] ca [g: na] santānabhedaiḥ prakaṭayati kulaṁ yaḥ sadā taṁ namāmi ||
śrīmadoṅkārapīṭhe guṇavativijayā śāntir antaḥsphurantī [g: sā-] |
kṣāntaḥ [g: kṣātaḥ] sākṣādanantaḥ kṛtayugasamaye śrīkhagendrābhidānaṁ tretāyām | jālapīṭhe gaganavaraṇutā maṇḍalāṁśā [g: -sā] ca vidyā yaḥ kūrmāvatāraḥ śaśiraviruciram [g: sa-] piṅgalaṁ taṁ namāmi || YKh (1) 39/17-18.

[2] The correspondences are as follows:

> The Siddhas Khagendra and the rest who are the gems (tilaka) of those who have made the Kula are the incarnations of Rudras on Kanyādvīpa, the sacred site (sutīrtha), the most excellent land of Bhārata to which the host of sages bow. From them the initiation which makes all things manifest has come into being by (their) incomparable austerity. I bow all around to those excellent heroes who, free and forbearing (danta), have sanctified (bhavita) all things.[1]

The Currents of the Transmission of the Kubjikā Tantras

In its earliest phase, the Kubjikā tradition divides the succession of teachers (gurvaugha) simply into two major currents (augha) - Divine (divyaugha) and human, variously called the Current of the Siddhas (siddhaugha) or Persons (puruṣaugha). A third phase emerged out of the second one called the Current of Men (mānavaugha). This development in the Kubjikā sources reflects Kaula practice in general. In the course of his commentary on a description of the maṇḍala used for the Kaula rites taught in chapter twenty-nine of the TĀ, Jayaratha says that there are three Currents of teachers worshipped in it. Abhinava does not refer to them. As his presentation of this maṇḍala is very concise, it is possible that his source mentioned them. It is more likely, however, that this

13. Table of the Five Siddhas and Yuganāthas

Five Siddhas	Element	Kaula Teachers	Consort	Age	Seat	Cosmic Force
Sādākhya	Space	Mīnanātha	Matsyodarī (Tārā)	Kali	Candra	Śānty-atīta
Annata	(Air)	Khagendra	Vijayā	Kṛta	Oṁkāra	Śānti
Piṅgala	Fire	Kūrma		Tretā	Jāla	Vidyā
Śrīkaṇṭha	Water	Meṣa	Maṅgalāvvā	Dvāpara	Puli-malaya	Pratiṣṭhā
Śaṅkara	(Earth)	Macchagna	Koṅkaṇāvvā	Kali	Kāma-rūpa	Nivṛtti

[1] kāmākhye maṅgalāvvā pulimalayagirau rājyamānā pratiṣṭhā [g: pratiṣṭāma] śrīkaṇṭhaṁ meṣanāthaṁ bhavabhayaśamanaṁ [g: -samanaṁ] dvāpare yogayogī tūrṇaṁ [g: tūrṇe] cakre 'vatāraṁ ratipatinilaye [g: ratipabhivilaye] koṅkaṇāvvā nivṛtir macchaghnaṁ saṅkaro 'yaṁ kaliyugaviditaṁ sarvadā taṁ namāmi || 19 ||
kanyādvipe sutīrthe munigaṇanamite [g: munimananamite] bhārate varṣamukhye rudrāṇāṁ [g: rudrāṇā] ye 'vatārāḥ [g: yevatāḥ] kulakaratilakāḥ śrīkhagendrādisiddhāḥ [g: -siddhās] |
tebhyo asyāpi (?) jātā [g: jatā] nirupamatapasā [g: -so] vyaktasarvārthadīkṣā [g: -dikṣā] tān [g: ste ?] svacchandān [g: śacchanda] suvīrān [g: pravīrā] akhilabhavitadantān [g: akhilabhavati-] samantānnamāmi || YKh (1) 39/19-20.

conception had not yet developed in his time but had become so well known by the 12th century in Jayaratha's time that he felt that the three Currents should also be accommodated into the maṇḍala.[1]

This classification is fully developed by the time we reach the early commentators in the Śrīvidyā tradition.[2] Padoux lists the teachers mentioned in the sources in the introduction to his work on the Yoginīhṛdaya.[3] The Divine Current (divyaugha) consists of the four Siddhas who govern the main four sacred seats, headed by Paramaśiva. The Siddhaugha that follows ends with Dīpakācārya, who was a historical figure. The Mānavaugha ends with one's own teacher.

Śitikaṇṭha in his Mahānayaprakāśa also divides the teachers of the Kashmiri Kālīkrama into three currents, but these are not the same. The first is Mahaugha. This is the dynamism of the energies of cognitive consciousness represented by the sixty-four Śākinī Yoginīs in the five spheres of the flux of the energy of consciousness (pañcavāha) that unfolds within the sacred seat (pīṭha) of its inherent Voidness. The sixty-fifth energy is the goddess Maṅgalā. She received the Krama from Śiva and so the Siddhaugha begins from her and is her very nature. Śitikaṇṭha explains:

> The venerable Maṅgalā herself is the recipient of the descent (of the teachings) onto the plane of the sacred seat just as Hara's head is that of the heavenly river (Ganges) and her form is the Current of the Siddhas.

The Current of Men - Mānavaugha - begins with Jñānanetra, the founder of this branch of the Kālīkrama, who received the teaching directly from the goddess.[4] The third is the Śiṣyaugha, the Current of Disciples. This consists of the disciples of Cakrabhānu who was the last teacher of the Mānavaugha.[5] The goddess is said to be the fire-stick of this Kula. As such she is the source of the three Currents that are compared to three fires, implicitly identified with the three [1] Abhinava refers to the worship of three teachers. Jayaratha offers two explanations as to who they are. In the first place, he says, they are one's teacher, grand-teacher and great-grand teacher (trīn gurūn iti guruparamaguruparameṣṭhinaḥ - comm. TĀ 29/27cd-29ab). However, further on he says that the 'class of teachers is also of three kinds divided into the Divine, Siddha and Mānava Currents' (divyaughasiddhaughamānavaughabhedena trividham api guruvargam iti ibid.). Jayaratha may well have added this alternative explanation as an after-thought in the light of the traditions of his day.

---

[2] See Śivānanda Ṛjuvimarśinī on NṢA 4/19 (pp. 218-223), Vidyānanda's A*rtharatnāvali* (p.223-234), Amṛtānanda's Saubhāgyasudhodaya (6/5-23) and YHṛDī pp. 8, 294 and 302.

[3] Padoux 1994: 48-49.

[4] śrīmatmakāradevyāḥ pīṭhavare prāptādeśena śrījñānanetranāthena bāhyāntarastham ādidevīsvarūpasatattvaṁ yat sākṣāt kṛtam . . . MP (1) p. 49.

[5] MP (1) p. 107.

fires of the Vedic sacrifice. The three Currents are 'the path of the means free of faults - a row of lamps in the dark that illumine themselves and others'.[1]

This system of classification is not consistent and so appears to be in a phase of development. It is only in the 12th or 13th century, when the aforementioned Śrīvidyā authors lived, that is was fully formed and accepted as common.[2] Mukunda, the author of the later SaṁP, presents the three currents of teachers in an unusual way. He reverses the order of the last two currents of teachers and ascribes three qualities to them. They are not arranged in a succession. Instead they belong to three spheres of existence characterized by the three qualities of Nature (guṇa). They assume the form of the beings who live there in order to impart the liberating teachings. They are as follows:

1) Divyaugha: One should think of the essential nature of the teachers belonging to the Divine Current as the quality of sattva, as the worlds of the Sun and Fire etc and as possessing the nature of deity.
2) Mānavaugha: One should contemplate the essential nature of the teachers belonging to the Current of Men as the quality of rajas, as the Moon and Water etc and as possessing a human nature.
3) Siddhaugha: One should recollect the essential nature of the teachers belonging to the Current of Siddhas as the quality of tamas, as darkness, Space and the Air etc and possessing a supernatural being's (dānava) nature.

> The best and most excellent current amongst the teachers who are the Currents is the one free of the qualities (of Nature). It is said that the Current of Siddhas is in the netherworld and (is made of) supernatural beings. It is said that the Current of Men is in the sphere of mortals and (is made of) human beings. The Divine Current is in heaven and (is made of) the hosts of the gods. That (Current) which is only one appears to be many.[3]

---

[1] MP (1) p. 107-108.

[2] Cf. Padoux in Brunner et al 2000: 258.

[3] sattvaguṇena sūryavahnibhuvanādirūpeṇa devatātmakena divyaughaguru-svarūpaṁ cintayet ǀ rajoguṇena candrajalādirūpeṇa manuṣyātmakena mānavaughagurusvarūpaṁ bhāvayet ǀ tamoguṇenāndhakārākāśapavanādi-rūpeṇa dānavātmakena [sthānavātmakena] siddhaughaguru-svarūpaṁ smaret ǀ gurūṇāṁ oghasvarūpāṇāṁ oghavaraṁ [adhovaraṁ] śreṣṭhaṁ [śreṣṭha] nirguṇasvarūpam ǀ pātāle dānavaiḥ siddhaugha iti saṁpraty ucyate ǀ martyamaṇḍale manuṣyair mānvavaugha iti cocyate ǀ svarge devagaṇair [tadeva-] divyaugha iti ucyate ǀ sa eka evānekatvaṁ pratibhāti ǀ SaṁP fl. 4b.

The KMT refers in a general way to the Current of the Krama (kramaugha).[1] This is generated through the goddess and a Siddha and is propagated by their spiritual sons and daughters in each of the major sacred seats the goddess visits in her tour of the land of Bhārata. The KMT refers to the Divine and Mortal Currents of the transmission but does not elaborate on what they are.[2] Similarly, the KMT refers to 'the lineages of the currents of the line of teachers' that comes from Śiva as the 'transmission (krama) of the Divine Command (divyājñā)'.[3] However, the KMT does not tell us anything about their contents only that if the goddess is worshipped with sincere devotion she enters the current of the series of teachers and disciples.

The KMT claims that it belongs to the Divine Current. However, the sense of this term when the KMT was redacted was not as extensive as it is in the later sources where the same claim is resonant with considerably more significance. It is a claim especially dear to the CMSS, which views all the major Kaula schools as dimensions of highly elevated mystical experience, crowned by that attained in the Western House. Here the adept attains the Divine Current of which the teachings of the CMSS are the essence. The CMSS belongs to the tradition of the Siddhas (siddhānvaya) and is the supreme Kaula.[4] It claims to be the supreme level of the Divine Current (divyaugha)[5] that pours forth from the goddess.[6] Also called Divine Kaula (divyakaula), it is the supreme spiritual bliss which is the Kaula face of Sadāśiva called Picu from which originate the Kaula scriptures. The

---

[1] KMT 2/48.

[2] For example we read:

(Thus) as long as Caṇḍākṣī, whose power is without limit, desiring the qualities of the Divine Current (of the transmission), gazed (at the things) in front (of her), she filled the universe with (many kinds of divine) nectar. KMT 2/68.

Again: Having said this, she went quickly (to the place) where the auspicious river Ucchuṣmā (flows). It is within the Mahocchuṣma forest and transports the Divine and Mortal Currents (of the transmission). KMT 2/82cd-84.

[3] KMT 11/1-4.

[4] siddhānvayaṁ [k, kh, gh: -ya; g: siddhāndhaya] paraṁ kaulaṁ [gh: kaula] bhuktimuktiphalapradam [gh: -prade] | CMSS 1/24ab.

[5] ciñcinīmatasāro 'yaṁ divyaughaparamaṁ [k g gh: divyogha-] padam || Ibid. 1/22cd.

[6] The Void that rests in the (one) empowered reality emerges from the waves of the universe. The supreme goddess is born there. She is a passionate young woman (kāminī) and is passion (kāma) itself. The Virgin Goddess (Kumārī) resides in the sacred seat of Kaula and rains down the great Divine Current.

viśvorminirgataṁ [k gh: visvonmi-; kh: visvānma-; g: visvārmi-] śūnyaṁ śāktaviśrāntamaṇḍalam |
tatrotpannā parā devī [sarve: deve] kāminī kāmarūpiṇī ||
kumārī kaulapīṭhasthā [k kh gh: kāla-; g: kola-] mahādivyaughavarṣiṇī [g: -vaṣiṇī] |

CMSS 1/25-26ab.

Tree of Consciousness, with its extensive roots and branches, grows out of that. It is established in the form of the Unmanifest (adṛṣṭa) and the Siddhaugha is its most excellent fruit.[1]

The CMSS is not amongst the earliest Kubjikā Tantras, even so it appears to be oblivious of the later application of the term to the initial, most elevated phase of the development of the transmission we shall examine shortly. Instead the CMSS maintains the usage of the term we find in the KMT. There, the Divine Current is the Current of the Transmission. It is the inner foundation, the supreme Kuṇḍalinī who resounds as pure Divine Sound. She is the river in the form of the current of the tradition (ogha) that flows constantly in the ocean of the Void of the transcendent.[2] Bhairava asks the goddess to reveal the Kramaugha once she has come down into the world with the words:

> "O Kubjī! I am impelled by you who are the supreme (goddess), the mother of the great current (of the tradition). You are Kubjā, my Supreme Kubjinī. I (am guided by you), then you (are guided) by me. You have taught the group of four (Siddhas who teach in the sacred seats) the Path of the Krama and their Krama. O sinless one! You who possess the Command send forth the supreme Current of the Krama (kramaugha) that is within you!"

The adept should worship the foundation (ādhāra), which is the liturgy of the scripture of the Divine Current (divyaugha), with all his being (sarvabhāva), as he does the deity. He should hide all the tradition because this Divine Tradition (divyāmnāya) is worshipped by divine beings wherever it is, if it is kept very secret.[3] Worshipping the principle (ādya) Circle of the Yoni daily in this way and generating its supreme pervasion, the Current of the Transmission (kramaugha) is set into operation. This is the divine foundation of the Current.[4] By worshipping the lineage of the current he attains the totality of form, gross, subtle and beyond the senses.[5]

---

[1] CMSS 1/30.
[2] KMT 25/82.
[3] KMT 25/195.
[4] KMT 19/116-120.
[5] KMT 19/37.

The Divine Current of the Eighteen Siddhas and the Convention of the Flowers

Although the KMT stresses the importance of worshipping the Transmission, which is both the current of the teachings and the lineages of the teachers, the latter is not discussed at length. The former is worshipped in the Kramamaṇḍala and the latter in the Gurumaṇḍala, which is drawn next to it or may also be projected into it. However, as we shall see, the core of the contents of the Gurumaṇḍala, which is its original form, consists of projections of the seed-syllable Navātman, which is the sonic form of Bhairava, the First Teacher (ādinātha), not human teachers. As the Kubjikā Tantras developed these details developed with them. Lineages of human teachers with their own hagiographies developed and the Divine Current was understood to be their original source that is contained and flows within the Deity as the flux of the energy of the Command.

We have seen that the myths that recount the founding of the lineages of the Kubjikā cult centre on the manner and circumstances in which the goddess transmits her empowering Command. This transmission is understood as a descent of the goddess herself in the form of her empowering Command (ājñā). This takes places through a series of states ranging from Śiva's own state (śāmbhavāvasthā) down to the grossest. Thus the pattern of her descent through which her empowering and liberating Command is transmitted is also the sequence of states that follow one after another from the highest, uncreated condition to that of the manifest world. The rungs of this ladder are tirelessly presented in the Kubjikā Tantras in many forms and modalities because they not only mark the stations of her descent, they are also the stages of the adept's ascent to the supreme state. In this context, they are marked by the currents and lineages of teachers. In this more developed scheme, the Divine Current (divyaugha) consists of eighteen Skyfarers who are liberated teachers corresponding to a series of eighteen principles that extend from the Transmental (unmanī) down to the Śrīnātha who is the first teacher of the next current of teachers, the Mānavaugha. These eighteen principles are a series of elevated states which are the precursors within consciousness of the transmission that takes place through the lineages of Siddhas in the outer world. This the first, supreme, transcendental (para) current of teachers, is followed by another immanent (apara) one, namely, that of the triple transmission of the Child, the Youth and the Aged represented by the corners of the Triangle in the core of the Kramamaṇḍala. The transmission continues through the succeeding line of teachers, first the Nine Nāthas and then the Sixteen Siddhas and their disciples. Their inner counterparts are projected systematically in descending order from the top of the body down to the bottom of it.

We begin here with the Divine Current. The Point (bindu) in the center of the maṇḍala is where contact takes place with the Śāmbhava state. Brilliant like a whirling firebrand, the Point's anticlockwise rotation traces the shape of a flower.[1] The Divine Current (divyaugha) flows through this Point as aspects or levels of the goddess's Command which is the energy of the Transmental (unmanīśakti). This energy is the goddess's vitality, her menstrual flow (rajobhava),[2] which is the red female seed. This too is called the 'flower'. Thus the Divine Current is called the Tradition of the Flower, with reference to the Point and the goddess's seed or Flowers, in the plural, with reference to each of its stages or aspects, which are all 'flowers' of the Tree of the Divine Current that grows from the seed of the Point in the centre. The essence of this stream of divine energy that flows through the higher levels of being contained within the Point is the couple (yugma),[3] that is, the union of Śiva and Śakti.[4] This couple is two flowers.[5] The 'nectar of the tradition (saṁpradāya)' is the product of the union of these two flowers - the Mother (Ambā) and the Lord (Nātha),[6] who fuse together to form the one Flower. This one Flower is the Command[7] that streams through the centre of the Triangle where the first, primordial seat (ādyapīṭha) of the deity, the first teacher, is located. The quintessence of the union of Śiva and Śakti, from it flows the vitalizing and liberating nectar of the goddess's fertilized seed as the stream of the teachings (gurvogha) and with it that of outer manifestation which exits initially out of the transcendent here in the centre. Thus we read in the KRU:

> The Great Seat (mahāpīṭha) originated, O mistress of the heroes, where the Flower originated from our union. It is the middle (seat) and is located in the centre. O beloved, accompanied by its own energy, it is called the Flower.
>
> O supreme mistress, it is said to be the pervasive lord of the sacred seat who, in the aforementioned First Seat, bears (his) own name. O Rudrā, O supreme Goddess, one should know that he is (thus) endowed with his own power.[8]

---

[1] KuKh 13/116.
[2] KuKh 3/33-34.
[3] KuKh 1/2b.
[4] KuKh 2/27.
[5] KuKh 38/15.
[6] KuKh 38/11.
[7] KuKh 57/44cd-45ab.
[8] yat tat saṅgodbhavaṁ puṣpaṁ āvayor vīranāyike ||
tatrotpannaṁ [kh: -tpanna] mahāpīṭhaṁ [g: -ṭha] madhyamaṁ madhyasaṁsthitam [g: madhyasaṁsthitaḥ] |
puṣpasaṁjñābhidhānena svaśaktisahitaṁ priye ||
vyāpakaṁ parameśāni pīṭhanāthaṁ [kh: -nāthā] prakīrtitam |

The Flower in the centre of the maṇḍala is appropriately worshipped by offering a flower, which is placed on it and left there in the course of the worship of the Krama projected into the surrounding maṇḍala. Thus, by extension, the eighteen states or teachers of the Divine Current are also said to be Flowers or parts of that one Flower. Inwardly the term Flower denotes the equality of the fluctuations of the mind attained by means of these eighteen flowers, the inner teachers.[1] The word 'flower' (puṣpa) also denotes a girl's first menses, which is the female seed and is identified with the Command[2] which is the goddess's seed. In the following passage drawn from the Ṭīkā the 'flower' of the teachings is associated with the goddess's menses but in a negative sense. In order for the woman's seed to be fruitful it must mix with the male one, otherwise it flows out and is lost and is considered to be impure. In this context the common metaphor of the male seed sown in the female field (kṣetra) is reversed. The female seed of the Command must be sown in fertile male ground to develop:

> (Giving this knowledge) to one who has no initiation, no hereafter (paratra), lineage (pāramparya), transmission of the teachers (gurukrama), no worship of the Kulakrama and is devoid of the Convention of the Flower and that of the purification of the teachers is like sowing the seeds of wheat (sasya), lentils (muga) and the like on barren ground, that is, on stones. It bears no fruit. Or else, it is like the flower (of menses). Blood flows in the female genitals (yoni) every month. How can living beings who are forms of Nature be born from just the semen that comes from the father without that? In the same way, one should not reveal this Sequence of Twenty-eight to one who is devoid of a line of teachers, initiation, the hereafter, lineage and transmission of the teachers.[3] pūrvokte ādipīṭhe [kh: -pīṭhaṁ] tu svasaṁjñānāmadhārakam [g: svayaṁjñānamadhārakaṁ] || svaśaktisahitaṁ [k: svaśaktisekti-; kh: svasakti-] rudre [k: madre; g: bhadre] jñātavyaṁ parameśvari [kh: -meśvarī] | KRU 2/49cd-52ab.

---

[1] KuKh 57/103cd-104ab.

[2] See note to KuKh 3/33-34 and 57/44cd-45ab.

[3] yasya dīkṣā nāsti | tathā paratrayasya nāsti | pāraṁparyo [-paryo] nāsti | yasya gurukramaṁ nāsti | yasya kulakramapūjanaṁ nāsti | puṣpasaṅketaguruśuddhisaṅketakavarjitaḥ [-taṁ] | tad yathā uṣare aśmāṇapṛṣthe sasyādimugādibījapatanāt [sadyādimugādi vījayannāt] phalotpattirna [phalottpatirna] bhavati | athavā yathā puṣpam [puṣpa] iti | yonyābhyantare pratimāse rakta-sravaṇam | tena vinā naiṣkevalyena (?) pitrodbhavena śukreṇa | mūrtiḥ [mūrti] prakṛtiḥ sākāra-rūpā jantūnāṁ kathamutpattirbhavati | tathā gurupaṅktihīnasya tathā dīkṣāparatrapāraṁparya-gurukramahīnasya | *idam aṣṭāviṁśatikramaṁ [-viṁśa * -] na prakāsayed ity arthaḥ* |

Ṭ MS K fl. 182a-182b.

The ‘Flower’ is the lunar goddess Ciñciṇī. Also called Khañjī[1] and Jyeṣṭhā (literally, the ‘eldest’), she is worshipped within the seventeen energies of the Moon starting with the Transmental (unmanā) that contains them all. Thus she is both at the beginning and the end as the ‘immobile motion’ (acalagati) of the oneness of the subtle vibration that travels too and fro from transcendence to immanence and back, in and out of manifestation and of which each teacher represents one of its phases or energies. As such, she is Kubjikā who, as the goddess Carcikā, is the seventeenth and penultimate of this series of teachers.[2] She is the Śāmbhava Command who resides in the centre of the City of the Moon in the form of the divine Liṅga.

The last station of this descent is the first human Siddha who, identified with Śiva, is called Śrīnātha, Ciñciṇīnātha or Vṛkṣanātha. This is the Convention of the Flower otherwise known as the Current of the Teachers (gurvogha). They are described in chapter 57 of the KuKh, one by one, as states of consciousness that constitute the stations of the descent of the flow of energy, which is the essential nature of the transmission of the tradition, from the highest state. The adept is connected to this flow of energy through the transmission that he has received from his teacher. However, in order to maintain this connection he must regularly reinforce it when he performs the worship of the sequence. The worship of these eighteen energies is thus an essential part of his practice. To worship this sequence correctly is to know it. The adept knows it by passing through these stages of descent. Thus, he can also rise back up through them and reach the highest state. Our text declares:

> O Śambhu, without having known the Convention of the Flower (puṣpasaṁketaka) that extends in due order from the Transmental (unmanā) up to Śrīnātha and Ciñciṇī, one is not liberated. The Current of Teachers (gurvogha), called (the Convention of) the Flower extends from the Transmental up to Ādinātha (the First Nātha). [. . .] There is no initiation, no supreme condition (paratva), no transmission through the series (of teachers) and no transmission (kramaṇa) of the teaching (krama) in the absence of the Convention of the Flower. Just as no crop grows in a field devoid of seed, so too there is no liberation for those devoid of the Convention of the Flower.[3]

---

[1] KuKh 57/49cd-50ab.
[2] KuKh 57/74cd-75ab, cf. 3/165cd-169; she is also called Khañjī, see KuKh 57/49cd-50ab.
[3] KuKh 7/63cd-66.

There are three lists of the eighteen phases of the Divine Current in the KuKh.[1] They are also listed in the KnT and in the ŚM[2] as the Convention of the Eighteen Flowers or the 'divine eighteen'. The KuKh refers to it as the 'eighteen' (dviraṣṭau), the 'eighteen divisions', the 'eighteenfold sequence' and the eighteen aspects of the Divine Current.[3] The Divine Current is not described as a lineage of eighteen teachers but as a sequence of energies that operate on higher levels of consciousness.[4] This is clear as eighteen Nāthas - the male consorts of the energies - who are 'part of the Sequence beginning with the Transmental' are listed separately.[5] Thus, the Ṭīkā, which refers to the Divine Current as the Sequence of the Bliss of the Command (ājñānandakrama), glosses it as the Sequence of the Eighteen Nāthas (aṣṭādaśanāthakrama) who are the teachers of the Convention of the Flower (puṣpasaṁketa).

Navātman - The First Siddha

Just as the goddess is Vāgbhava (AIṀ) or Ekākṣarā (HSKHPHREṀ), Bhairava, her consort, is Navātman. As the First Teacher he is variously called Ādinātha, Śrīnātha, Caryānātha, Ciñciṇīśa and by other names we will refer to further ahead when we come to explore his human, legendary incarnations. Here we note that many associations are generated through the nine letters that constitute Navātman. For example, they correspond to nine names of the First Teacher.[6] Each of the nine syllables generate nine aspects to make the 81 syllables[7] that represent the fully expanded energies and aspects of the Teacher and his evolutes worshipped in the Gurumaṇḍala.[8] As such he is not only the First Teacher, he is every single teacher and all their lineages. Thus, he is embodied in the First Siddha of each of the three lineages. As the First Teacher he generates the three lineages, each of which have three varieties, thus making nine.[9]

---

[1] These are: KuKh 2/20-26 (quoted in the SaṁP), 57/1cd-27 and 57/58-76ab.

[2] ŚM 24/46-50.

[3] KuKh 1/2, 2/20, 57/1, 57/37cd-38ab, respectively.

[4] KuKh 57/52cd-53ab.

[5] See KuKh 57/96-98 and tables on p. 584-585 below.

[6] See below, p. 460.

[7] (Navātman) is made to pervade into the eighty-one syllabic mantras (formed from) its parts and follows (in accord with them).
yad rūpaṁ navātmābhidhānam | tatpadapiṇḍeṣu ekāśītiṣu vyāpitam | anuyāyīty arthaḥ |
Ṭ MS K fl. 177a.

[8] See appendix 2 at the end of this volume.

[9] Now Navātman, which pervades the three Lineages each divided into three modalities, is extracted in its form as letters.
idānīṁ ovallitrayasya tribhis tribhir [kh: tribhis tri] bhinnarūpasya vyāpakatvena vartamānaḥ navātmā sa eva varṇarūpeṇoddhṛyate [kh: varṇṇarūpeṇa-udhrayate] | Ṭ MS K fl. 177a.

Moreover, he is also manifest in the Nine Nāthas who are the disciples of the First Siddha of the present Age and who are the teachers of the Sixteen Siddhas. One's own teacher descends from one or other of their numerous disciples. Navātman not only develops downwards, as it were, into the embodied state. We shall see that he is also intimately related to the phases of the inner Divine Current. Thus, Navātmābhairava is the Deity in both abstract (niṣkala) and concrete (sakala) iconic form. He is also the Teacher in sonic form, visual iconic form and embodied in the First Teacher and, indeed, all the teachers of the tradition of which he is the source and embodiment in all these aspects. YKh (1), like the KMT, does not ignore the existence of the human teacher. Indeed, he is examined at great length – his qualities and defects are listed as are those of the disciple. The perfect Siddha is also described as is the false one. However, here in the first part of this exposition of the nature of the First Teacher we examine his more purely divine nature.

Amongst the mantras of all the lineages, the mantras of the god and the goddess are the most fundamental ones and so are regularly recited in conjunction with the others. Their union generates Śrīnātha, the first teacher who is both in embodied and sonic mantric form:

> How is the root Vidyā? (Navātman) is linked with the goddess Samayā (and they) form a couple that pervades the lineages of the Child and the other (lineages). (This couple is) common to all (of them) and is undivided. This is the meaning. 'The couple which consists of the root Vidyā' . . . etc. And it is that, namely, the form of Navātman along with the root Vidyā, that is, the goddess Samayā who pervade the three lineages as a couple.
>
> Once (the god) had known himself here in the company of the goddess, he assumed a five-fold state, that is, Kula consisting of the five gross elements and was (thus) endowed with a body. Again, initially (everything) was as if void. Then when the embodied condition had arisen and the end of the Vidyā (pādukānta) and the end of the syllable (Navātman) (pādānta) has been formed, the end of the Vidyā (pādukānta) and the end of the syllable (Navātman - pādānta) were made mutually equal (within that state) with those two, that is, the forms of Navātman and the Samayā Vidyā. Then the places on the sides of the fingers were conjoined (in a ritual gesture). (Once this had been done) the universal bliss that arises by union of (their) embrace, that is, by the clasping together of (their) bodies is Śrīnātha in the form of Bhairava, a form which is hard to attain.[1]

In the following passages drawn from the Ṭīkā, the application of this basic principle is explained concretely as the union, that is, coupled recitation of the seed-syllable Navātman which is the sonic form of the god and the Samayā Vidyā, which is that of the goddess.[2] They unite in the centre of the maṇḍala above the head in the End of the Twelve:

> Consisting of forty-two syllables, Samayā Devī along with the (Praṇavas) that encapsulate (her) is on top of Meru.[3] (In other words) she should be worshipped in the calyx in the middle of the Kramamaṇḍala and also in the End of the Twelve. Another (scripture says) the same (namely): 'Meru is said to be the head'. The goddess Samayā should not be worshipped alone (but) along with Ādyanātha who is Navātman. This is the meaning.[4]
>
> And his desire came into being, (a desire) which is free and unobstructed in (all) desires (kāma). How is (that energy of desire)? (It has) the form of a key (kuñcikā), that is, it is crooked. This is the meaning. And when Kubjikā was opened, that is, made manifest, by means of that (key), the couple (yugma), consisting of Ciñciṇī and Ciñciṇīśa, came into being by the descent of the couple consisting of both (brought) about by the union (sannidhāna) of Śiva and Śakti. (As is written): 'Ciñciṇī of the Lord of the Lineage (olinātha) . . .' and so on. Then by the excellent union of the two, that is, by the union

---

[1] kīdṛśī mūlavidyā | samayādevyopetaṁ yugmībhūtaṁ yatra bālādyovallīnāṁ [k: vāmāsyovallīnāṁ; kh: vāmāṣyovallīnāṁ] vyāpakaṁ sarvasādhāraṇaṁ [k kh: -sādhāraṁ] abhinnam ity arthaḥ | mūlavidyātmakaṁ yugmam ity ādi | tad eva ca | *iti navātmano rūpaṁ mūlavidyayā samayādevyā [k: samaya-] saha yugmatayā ovallitrayavyāpakam [k kh: ovallitrayaṁ-] atraiva devyā sahitam ātmānaṁ jñātvā pañcāvasthānagataṁ [k kh: -sthāna * taṁ] pañcabhūtātmakaṁ kulaṁ śarīrasaṁpannam* | prāk punaḥ śūnyam ivāsīt [kh: -sīn] | tataś ca śarīratāyāṁ saṁpannāyāṁ [k: saṁpannāṁ] pādukāntaṁ ca pādāntaṁ kṛtvā [k kh: + tebhyo parasparaṁ] tābhyāṁ navātmasamayārūpābhyāṁ parasparam anyonyaṁ pādukāntaṁ pādāntaṁ ca samaṁ kṛtvā pārśvāṅgulisthānamīlanaṁ [k: -tāṁ; kh: -sthānaṁ-] kṛtvā āliṅganasamayogād [kh: -yogāt] gātraparisvaṅgāt [k kh: -pariṣṭhaṁgāt] | yaḥ [k kh: yo] sarvānandaḥ pravartate sa eva [k kh: iva] bhairavākāraḥ durgamākṛtiḥ [k: durgāmā-; durgāmākṛti] śrīnāthaḥ | Ṭ MS K fl. 177b.

[2] Concerning the Samayā Vidyā, see chapters 9 to 12 of the KuKh.

[3] Concerning the two forms of the Samayā Vidyā in thirty-two syllables and, with the addition of the Praṇavas, in forty-two, see KuKh 9/67-68.

[4] dvācatvāriṁśavarṇamayā samayā devī saṁpuṭasahitā merupṛṣṭhe [kh: -pṛṣṭe] iti | kramamaṇḍalamadhye karṇikāyāṁ [k: -kayā; kh: -kāyā] pūjyā tathā dvādaśānte | tathānyena śiraṁ meruḥ [k kh: meru] samuddiṣṭam [kh: samadviṣṭaṁ] || na kevalā [k kh: kevalāḥ] samayā devī pūjyā [k kh: pūjyāḥ] | ādyanāthena saha navātmanā saha ity arthaḥ | Ṭ MS K fl. 53b.

> (melāpa) of the (two) Voids, the root lineage (mūlānvaya) becomes manifest, that is, the first seed-syllable comes into being. What is it and how (does this take place)? This takes place by the union of the sounds KHA, PHA, RE, that is, by the arising of KHPHREṀ, the Lord of Unstruck Sound. In this way I have explained what cannot be talked about. He himself, the First Lord (Ādyanātha) of the three lords of the lineages, O (Oḍḍīśa), ṢA (Ṣaṣṭha) and MI (Mitra), (thus begins to) act (pravartate). The meaning is that he has become the first Siddha.[1]

The Gurukramasūtra - The Inner Teacher - Śākta and Śāmbhava

The following passage called the G*urukramasūtra* is drawn from chapter three of YKh (1). It begins, presumably, after the Vṛkṣadvādaśikasūtra.[2] If so, the two *sūtra*s have been coupled together. The latter deals with the Āṇava form of the teacher and this one with the Śākta and Śāmbhava forms. However, this may well just be a device to link two separate *sūtra*s together. Thus, in the introductory verses at the very beginning of the next sūtra, we are told that in the Transmission the teacher is four-fold, not three-fold. Indeed, the following description of Bhairava as the First Teacher appears in many ways to be an expanded version of the one presented of Vṛkṣanātha in the sūtra that goes by his name.

Śrīnātha says that he has heard about the form of teacher in the Āṇava sequence. Now he wants to know about the Śākta and the Śāmbhava modalities. The goddess responds by him about the sakala form of Śrīnātha - the One Teacher:

> Now I will tell (you) the teaching concerning Gurunātha, merely by knowing which the tradition of the teachers (gurvāmnāya) functions. O Śambhu, the teacher is established in the three divisions and has emerged as the three lineages. The three-fold Vidyā, Ātman,

---

[1] tasya ca icchā jātā kāmeṣu [k kh: kāmasau] svatantrā apratihatā | kīdṛśī | kuñcikā-kārā kuṭilety arthaḥ | tayā ca kubjikāyā [k: kuvjikayā] udghāṭane prakaṭībhāve [kh: prakanī-] sati ubhayayugmāvatāreṇa śaktiśivasannidhānāt olināthasya [kh: aulināthasya] ciñciṇīty [kh: ciṁcinīty] ādi | ciñciṇīśas [k: ciñciṇīśa; kh: ciṁcinīśa] tathā ciñciṇīti [kh: ciṁcinīti] yugmajātam | tataś ca tayor dvayor varasaṁyogāt [k: -dvayoduṁvara-; kh: tayorddhayoduṁvara-] śūnyamelāpavaśāt mūlānvayo [k kh: mūlāndhrayo] virājate | ādibījaṁ pravartate | kaḥ kutaḥ | khapharerāvasaṁghaṭṭāt [k: khaharārāva-; kh: khaharorāva-] khphreṁ ity anāhatanāthodayāt | ity [kh: iti] anenaiva prakāreṇākathyaṁ [kh: prakāreṇa-akathyaṁ] vaktum aśakyam mayā kathitam | sa eva trayāṇāṁ olināthānāṁ [k kh: auli-] oṣamitrāṇāṁ [k: opami -; kh: opamintrāṇāṁ] ādyanāthaḥ pravartate | prathamasiddhaḥ saṁpannaḥ [k: saṁpannam; kh: saṁpanna] ity arthaḥ | Ṭ MS K fl. 177b-178a.

[2] This sūtra is also found in KuKh 51/1-14ab.

> and Śiva (manifest) as the division of the Moon, Fire and Sun. O god, (he is) associated with the eighty-one parts (pada) (of Navātman) and has eight lotus-like faces and sixteen arms. (This is the) sakala (form of the teacher), which is endowed with energy (kalā). Each part of (his) body (piṇḍa) is (like a shining) lamp within (his) maṇḍalas. (He is) the first teacher (gurvādya) adorned with the Krama and (accompanied) by the Siddha couples of the Transmental (unmanīyugma) (that constitutes the Divine Current).[1]

The three lineages represent the basic triadic division of the world, as the three lights - Moon, Fire and Sun, and the fundamental metaphysical principles - Vidyā, Ātman and Śiva. Śrīnātha, who is the One Teacher of all, is embodied in Navātman. The eighty-one parts of Navātman are divided into nine groups of nine. Eight members of each group are arranged in the directions with the ninth in the middle. Together these maṇḍalas constitute the Gurumaṇḍala which is one part of Śrīnātha's body. The other part is the Kramamaṇḍala. In this way, Śrīnātha is both the deity of the Krama and the One Teacher of the lineages embodied in all the Siddhas in his retinue. He is accompanied by the goddess, his consort, who together are the 'couple of the Transmental' replicated in the Siddhas and their consorts who constitute the Divine Current.

The Niṣkala Form of Śrīnātha

The One Teacher is Deity and so, like all Great Gods and Great Goddesses, possesses two aspects. One is differentiated 'with (manifest) energies' (sakala) and the other is undifferentiated 'without (manifest) energies'. The 'differentiated' one is, as we have seen, embodied in the maṇḍala. The 'undifferentiated' aspect is the Stainless One (nirañjana) in the centre of it who vitalizes it inwardly. The following passage describes him there in the centre of the 'twelve gestures', that is, the twelve ascending series of energies of Speech. These are represented by the twelve parts of the mantra called the Twelve Verses which serves as the Teacher's sacred thread. Their essential energies are the Twelve Jewels that energize all mantras. Embodied in twelve attendants, they are arranged along the axis of the

---

[1] athātaḥ saṁpravakṣyāmi gurunāthasya nirṇayam |
yena vijñānamātreṇa gurvāmnāyaṁ [k, gh: -ya] pravartate ||
tribhedasthaṁ [gh: stribhedarathaṁ] guruṁ śambho ulitrayavisarpitam [k, kh: ūrṇi-] |
candrāgniravibhedena vidyā ātmā śivas [k, gh: śiva] tridhā ||
ekāśītipadair [k, gh: ekāśīrtri-] bhinnaṁ vaktrāṣṭau [k, gh: vakrāṣṭau] paṅkajair yutam |
ṣoḍaśaiś ca bhujair deva [k, gh: bhujaideva] sakalaṁ kalayānvitam [k, gh: kalayāṁnvitaṁ] ||
ekaikaṁ [gh: ekaikhaṁ] piṇḍakhaṇḍaṁ tu maṇḍaleṣu pradīpakam |
unmanīyugmasiddhaiś ca [k, gh: unmanya-] gurvādyaṁ kramamaṇḍitam || YKh (1) 3/231-234.

universe ('the Egg of Brahmā'). This is Śaṅkhinī, the subtle energy that flows along the Central Channel of Suṣumṇā. This is one aspect of the Centre - the Void in which the Teacher moves freely as the Skyfarer. Another is the Triangle – the 'ocean of nectar' – marked by the three energies of will, knowledge and action embodied in the Yoginīs Raktā, Klinnā and Nityā[1] and all the triads. Around them are the Six Yoginīs of the Hexagram. There, in the centre, he 'dances' in the 'calyx of the Lotus of the Heart' as Haṁsa, the Gander, that is, the Self which is the vital breath of his divine body of mantra, the maṇḍala, and the universe it generates. He plays twelve musical instruments symbolizing the twelve forms of Unstruck Sound.

> The niṣkala (form), beyond the energies, is the one teacher in the Western Tradition. Divided into supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent), he is the means (to attain) the awareness of consciousness (citsaṁvit). Come down through the Transmission (krama), with four faces (representing the transmissions of the four seats), the teacher is one in the Western (Tradition). He is within the abode of the twelve gestures and is adorned with the five maṇḍalas (of the Elements). (Each) Praṇava (karaṇa) (from which the Elements originate) is fashioned (mudrita) by him and he is the union (melaka) of Śiva and Śakti. He resides (in the Śāmbhava state in the) middle of Mahendra's plane (of being) and is adorned with the five insignias (pañcakāraṇa) (of a yogi representing the Five Praṇavas). Energized by will, knowledge and action, he is endowed with five forms (as the Five Siddhas who govern the Elements), that is, the five beginning with Śrīkaṇṭha and is in the middle of Śiva, Śakti and the Self (as their union). Raktā, Klinnā, and Nityā (the three goddesses of the Triangle attend on him) and (he is) adorned with the Command of (all the) teachers. Conjoined with the three and a half measures (adhyuṣṭamātra),[2] (he is) the teacher in the Western Tradition.[1]

[1] Concerning these three Yoginīs, see above, p. 243-244.
[2] Concerning the three and three and a half measures, see intro. vol. 1, p. 383 ff..

There is (the energy which is) one measure (ekamātrā), two measures (dvimātrā) and three measures (trimātrā). The (energy which is the) half measure is supreme and subtle. Above it is (the one reality which is both) supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent). It is the teacher's place, the Great Place. The Self, which is endowed with the consciousness of its own consciousness, has come from that Place. The pure (beings) who are on their way to the Supreme should also be conjoined with that plane, and initiated by Śrīnātha.

The first (pūrva) current is one, supreme and stainless (nirañjana), it is conjoined with the eighteen (energies of the Transmental). (At the level of the) person (pauruṣa), the teacher is everything and is free of the three types. This is the Kaulikī language (bhāṣā).

O Lord, come down through the series (of teachers) * * * (?) he abides within Śaṅkhinī (in Suṣumṇā) * * * Both with form (samūrta) and without form (amūrta), he is devoid of (both) being and non-being. (He is) where there is both enjoyment and Yoga and he is adorned with the three syllables (of the Triangle). (His) body (piṇḍa) light red, that teacher is the fire of the sacrifice (homavahni) (that burns in the centre of the Triangle). He is threaded through with Brahmā's thread beginning with the feet and ending with the sacred seat of (his) face. Brahmā's thread is the Sun and Moon and, beautiful, it is the devoured morsel of the energy of Space (khakalāgrāsa). (He holds) a conch that makes the sound of the creation of the universe (brahmāṇḍakalanārāva) and is fearsome with the (Unstruck) Sound of Śaṅkhinī (the energy within the channel of Suṣumṇā). (Navātman), the Tree called Kadamba, is the teacher who possesses the three abodes (of all the triads). Accompanied by (the Six Yoginīs) Ḍā (Ḍākinī), Rā (Rākinī), Lā (Lākinī), Kā (Kākinī) Śā (Śākinī) and Hā ekamātrā dvimātrā ca trimātrā ca tathaiva ca ǀ ardhamātrā parā sūkṣmā tasyordhve tu parāparam ǀǀ gurusthānaṁ mahāsthānaṁ tasmāt [k, kh, gh: tasmā] sthānād vinirgatam [k, kh: vinirgabhaṁ] ǀ svabodhabodhayuktātmā ye śuddhāḥ [all: śuddhā] paragāminaḥ ǀǀ te 'pi te tatpade yojyāḥ [k, kh, gh: yojñā] śrīnāthena [k, kh, gh: -nāthaina] tu dīkṣitāḥ [kh: dīrkṣitāḥ; gh: dīkṣatāḥ] ǀ pūrvoghoṣṭādaśair bhinnaṁ [k: -daśaibhinna; kh: gurvoghoṣṭādaśaibhinna; gh: gurvoghoṣṭādaśaibhica] paraṁ hy ekaṁ niraṁjanam ǀǀ pauruṣe [k, gh: yo-; kh: po-] tu guror garvaṁ [k, kh, gh: guruṁgarvva] trividhena [kh: trividhina] tu varjitam ǀ na tasya tat padavyāptir [kh: padaṁ] iti bhāṣā tu kaulikī ǀǀ YKh (1) 3/292-295.

---

This passage closes with the statement: This is the Sūtra of the Transmission of the Teacher. (iti caturviṁśatisāhasre gurukramasūtram).

[1] niṣkalaṁ tu kalātītaṁ gurum ekaṁ tu paścime ǀ parāparavibhāgena citsaṁvitkaraṇātmakam [k, gh: citsavitkaranā-] ǀǀ caturvaktraṁ kramāyātaṁ [gh: -ta] gurum ekaṁ tu paścime ǀ mudrādvādaśapūryāntaṁ [k: -sūryāntaṁ; gh: -sūryātaṁ] pañcamaṇḍalamaṇḍitam ǀǀ karaṇaṁ mudritaṁ yena śivaśaktyātmamelakam ǀ mahendrapadamadhyasthaṁ [k, gh: mahedra-] pañcakāraṇamaṇḍitam [k, kh: - kāraṁ ca maṇḍitaṁ] ǀǀ icchājñānīkriyādīptaṁ ākārapañcabhir yutam [k: ākāraṁ paṁca-; gh: ākāraṁpaṁcabhiyutaṁ] ǀ śrīkaṇṭhādikramāt pañca śivaśaktyātmamadhyataḥ [k: śiva ktyātma-] ǀǀ raktā klinnā tathā nityā gurūṇāṁś cājñābhūṣitam [k, gh: guruṇāśvajñabhūṣitaṁ] ǀ adhyuṣṭamātrasambhinnaṁ [k, gh: adhruṣṭamātrī-] guruṁ caiva tu paścime ǀǀ Ibid. 3/235-239.

(Hākinī) (who surround him in the corners of the Hexagram), he is called Śrīnātha, the Stainless One (nirañjana).[1]

The attendents of the teacher are twelve and are located in the middle of the staff of the Egg of Brahmā. Free, he resides in the middle of the ocean of nectar (of the Yoni) and he satisfies the universe. They too are the energizers of the letters and are adorned with the Twelve Jewels. They are on the three planes (pāda) (of the triadic universe) and * * * are said to be (both) differentiated (sakala) and without (phenomenal) qualities.

Adorned with a girdle (made of mantras), the venerable teacher is Śambhu the Lord of Yoga. In the form of the Gander (Haṁsa), he dances in the calyx of the Lotus of the Heart. He has twelve arms (with which he plays) twelve musical instruments. He is the teacher * * in the abode of the Void.[2]

The plane of the Stainless One is in the centre. The venerable teacher is supreme in the Western (Tradition). He resides in the midst of the Moon, Fire and Sun in the middle of the Liṅga (helādaṇḍa).[3] Merged in the Cavity of the Spine, the teacher is the venerable plane

---

[1] pāraṁparyāgataṁ nātha vikrodhaṁ (?) virakāravaṁ [gh: -va] (?) |
śaṅkhinyāntasthitaṁ dhāma kramam [gh: kramaḥ] ||
samūrtaṁ [k, gh: samurtaṁ] ca amūrtaṁ [k, gh: amurtaṁ] ca [gh: tra] bhāvābhāvavivarjitam |
bhogaṁ [k, gh: śobhaṁ] yogaṁ tu yatraiva akṣaratrayabhūṣitam ||
āraktāvarṇapiṇḍaṁ [k, gh: -piṁ.gaṁ] tu homavahniś ca [k, gh: homavarṇiśca] tadgurum [gh: -ru] | pādādivaktrapīṭhāntaṁ [k, kh: kādyādivaktraṁpīṭhāṁta] brahmasūtreṇa [k, gh: -sūtraṇa] sūtritam ||
vicitraṁ [k, gh: nivitriṁ] khakalāgrāsaṁ ravīndubrahmasūtrakam |
brahmāṇḍakalanārāvaṁ [k, gh: -kālanārāvaṁ] ghoṣaśaṅkhinidāruṇam [gh: ghokha-] ||
ekapādaṁ [gh: -da] kadambākhyaṁ [k, gh: -kṣaṁ] taṁ guruṁ tripurānvitam [k: nupurāṁnvitaṁ; gh: nupurānvitaṁ] |
ḍaralakasahair yuktaṁ [k, kh: yaralavasahairyuktaṁ taṁ; gh: yaralavasaheṁryuktaṁ] śrīnāthākhyaṁ nirañjanam || Ibid. 3/240-244.
[2] brahmāṇḍadaṇḍamadhye [k: taraṁḍa-; gh: taraṁḍaṁḍa-] tu gurubhṛtyāś ca dvādaśa [k: -daśaṁ] |
muktam amṛtamadhyasthaṁ [k: uktau amṛta-; gh: uktau amṛtamadhyasthe] viśvasyāpyāya-kārakam [k: -dyāṁyakārakaṁ; gh: viśvasyāyāvyāya-] ||
varṇānāṁ dīpanās te 'pi ratnadvādaśabhūṣitāḥ [k, gh: -tā] |
tripādaṁ ca mukatvaṁ ?? ca sakalā [k: -lāṁ] nirguṇā [gh: niguṇā] matāḥ ||
mekhalāmaṇḍitaṁ śambhuṁ [gh: śambhu] śrīguruṁ ca yogeśvaram [k, gh: yage-] |
hṛtpadmakarṇikānte [k, gh: -kāte] ca nṛtyate haṁsarūpinam ||
vādyadvādaśakenaiva [gh: -kaṁnaiva] vidvāpa khe pure [k, gh: khai puraṁ] gurum |
bhujair dvādaśasaṁyuktaṁ [k: bhurjai- -saṁyukte; gh: bhujaidvādaśasaṁyuktai] saṁkrāntidvādaśāvubhau [k, gh: -daśātubho] | Ibid. 3/245-248.
[3] Cf. KuKh 66/12.

(of realisation) (śrīpāda) in the Western (Tradition). (The wise) know him to be the Skyfarer in between (the polarities) of knowledge and ignorance. The supreme teacher whose nature is the Void and is the enjoyer of the Void (khabhojin) abides perpetually. The Lord (nātha) who observes the Vow of Knowledge[1] resides in the End of the Sixteen.[2]

One should always apply the Vidyā that consists of sixteen parts.[3] The venerable teacher is the aggregate of energies * * *, he is the lord of the Western Tradition. He who neither reads nor writes (and is free of all thought constructs) should be lead into the Supreme within the End of the Twelve. The (sūtra of) Twelve (verses concerning the Lord) of the Tree is located there and it is divided into fifty branches. Vṛkṣanātha, who is the lord (nāyaka) of the Kula in the teaching, is its fruit. According to the teacher's teaching, Śrīnātha is born from the body (piṇḍaja) in the form of emanation. That form (rūpa) (which is generated) by the Supreme Lord is the venerable teacher in the Kula teachings. All (the teachers) possess the strength of the Command. This Tantra belongs to the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha).[4]

Authority is the teacher, endowed with the supreme nine-fold Command (embodied in Navātman). Therefore, the nine-fold

---

[1] Concerning the Vow of Knowledge, see intro. vol. 1, p. 517 ff. and concerning the End of the Sixteen, see ibid. p. 407 ff..

[2] nirañjanapadaṁ madhye [k, gh: madhyai] paścime śrīguruṁ param |
candrāgniravimadhyasthaṁ [k, gh: -rivamadhyasthaṁ] helādaṇḍasya madhyataḥ [gh: maṁdhyataḥ] || kodaṇḍakandare [k: kakaṁdakaṁdace; gh: kakaṁdakaṁdacce] līnaṁ guruṁ śrīpāda paścime |
vidyā caiva avidyā ca ubhau [k, gh: ubho; MS Kh is unclear up to here] madhye [k, gh: + ga; kh: dhyega] khagaṁ [k, kh, gh: khaṁgaṁ] viduḥ ||
khasvarūpaṁ sadā tiṣṭhet [k, kh, gh: tiṣṭet] khabhojī paramaṁ gurum |
vidyāvratadharaṁ [k, kh, gh: -vrattadhaṁ] nāthaṁ ṣoḍaśānte [kh: śo śāṁte; gh: -śāte] vyavasthitam || YKh (1) 3/249-251.

[3] When the goddess represents the Moon, the thirty-two syllables of her Vidyā are treated as sixteen pairs to represent its energies. See KuKh 9/30-36.

[4] yojayet satataṁ vidyāṁ [k, kh, gh: vidyā] padaṣoḍaśarūpiṇīm [k, gh: -rūpiṇī; kh: padaṣoḍadaśarūpiṇī] |
kalāgrāmaṁ caruṁ śīghraṁ śrīguruṁ paścimeśvaram ||
na likhenna [k, kh, gh: likhena] paṭhed yas tu dvādaśānte pare nayet |
vṛkṣadvādaśakaṁ tatra śākhāpañcāśabheditam ||
vṛkṣanāthaṁ [k, kh, gh: -nāthe] phalaṁ tasya [k, kh: tasye; gh: tasyaṁ] śāsane kulanāyakam |
gurūpadeśe śrīnāthaṁ [gh: -nātha] sṛṣṭirūpeṇa piṇḍajam [gh: piḍajaṁ] ||
parameśena [k, kh, gh: parameśema] tadrūpaṁ śrīguruṁ kulaśāsane |
ājñābaladharāḥ sarve tantredraṁ dakṣiṇāpathe [k, gh: -yathe] ||
adhikāraṁ guruṁ [k, kh: guru] caiva [k, kh: tatvaṁ ca] navadhājñāparānvitaḥ [k, kh, gh: -tāḥ] | YKh (1) 3/252-256ab.

aggregate (piṇḍa) (of Navātman) is the teacher (gurunātha) (and is) his body. (He has) six faces and is seven-fold at the end. The teacher resides there in the middle of the group of ten (nāḍīs) beginning with Iḍā.[1] That is said to be the teacher's place (sthāna). The Five Praṇavas are at the beginning and the end. The Great Place is in the middle.[2] The gross, subtle, supreme, short, and prolated (energies of all things represented by the letters) go to Krameśvara.

In the middle of that is the abode of the venerable teacher who bestows the fruit of liberation and worldly benefits. And (there also are) those divisions of the Current of the Teacher (i.e the Divine Current) (which flows out through the lineages of) the Aged, the Youth and the Child.[3] [. . .]

(This is the Teacher's Mouth). The Transmission (krama) is fruitless, like a tree whose root has been cut, for one who worships the Sequence of Teachers without (worshipping) the Teacher's Mouth. He certainly falls! This is the Command in the Western House![4]

O god, the teacher in the Western House is of three kinds - gross, subtle and supreme. O Śambhu, he who does not know (this) in the Age of Strife has no (hope of) liberation and worldly enjoyment is far from him. The gross one is the body (piṇḍa) (of Navātman) The subtle form is endless. The supreme (one) is beyond form (rūpātīta). It is directly apparent (unmediated by the senses). The fourth is Śrīpāda (that is, Śrīnātha himself).[5]

---

[1] Concerning the ten nāḍīs, see KuKh 40/31cd-34ab and notes.

[2] Concerning the Great Place, see intro. vol. 1, p. 382 and intro. vol. 2, 335.

[3] tenaiva navadhāpiṇḍaṁ gurunāthaṁ svakaṁ tanu [k, kh: tanuṁ] ||
ṣaḍvaktraṁ [k, gh: ṣaṭvaktraṁ; kh: ṣadvaktraṁ] saptadhā cānte iḍādyaṁ ca [k, kh, gh: -dyāśca] dvipañcakam |
tatra madhye [gh: madhya] guruṁ tiṣṭhed [k, gh: tiṣṭed] gurusthānaṁ tad ucyate [k, kh, gh: sa ucyate] ||
ādyante praṇavāḥ pañca mahāsthānaṁ ca madhyataḥ |
sthūlaṁ sūkṣmaṁ paraṁ hrasvaṁ plutaṁ yānti [k, kh, gh: yanti] krameśvaram ||
tanmadhye śrīgurusthānaṁ [k, kh: śrīguruṁ-; gh: śrīguṁruṁ-] bhuktimuktiphalapradam [k, gh: bhuktiphalaphalapradaṁ] |
gurvoghasya [gh: gurvau-] ca ye bhedāḥ vṛddhakaumārabālakāḥ [gh: -kā] | Ibid. 3/256cd-259.

[4] guruvaktravinirmuktaṁ [k, kh, gh: -ktraṁmavinimuktaṁ] pūjayed yo gurukramam [gh: -ma] |
niṣphalaṁ [k, kh, gh: niḥphalaṁ] tu kramaṁ tasya mūlachinnaṁ drumaṁ [kh: ḍumaṁ] yathā ||
patate nātra sandeha ityājñā paścime gṛhe | Ibid. 3/267-268ab.

[5] trividhaṁ [k, kh, gh: trividhāṁ] ca guruṁ [gh: guru] deva sthūlaṁ [k, kh, gh: sthūla] sūkṣmaṁ paraṁ tathā ||
paścime tu gṛhe śambho yo na vetti [k, kh, gh: veti] kalau yuge [k, kh, gh: yugo] |
na tasya bhavate muktir [k, kh, gh: mukti] bhuktis tasyaiva dūrataḥ [k, kh, gh: -ta] ||
sthūlaṁ piṇḍasvarūpaṁ [k, kh, gh: piṇḍaṁsva-] tu sūkṁarūpam anantakam [k: ma-] |

Requested by Śrīnātha, the goddess goes on to describe Śrīpāda who is in the 'threefold' House of the three lineages as the supreme form of the teacher, the First Lord (ādinātha) who descends from the Divine Current:

> Listen to the supreme and main secret in the Śrīśāsana, that is, the teacher. There is no liberation without a teacher. (Without him) how can the (bondage of the) world of transmigration be severed? The gross form is the god Navātman, who has come down through the sequence of eighteen (stages of the Divine Current). He is the cause, conjoined with the group of six (parts of the Krama), in accord with the division of emanation and withdrawal. If one desires eternal liberation, one should know (him) to be beside (one's own) venerable teacher.
>
> Thus, undivided within oneness (samarasa) is the sixteenth (energy of the Moon) above (the End of the Twelve which is) the location of the (triangular) womb (garbhasthāna) (that contains all the energies of emanation). Free of the plane of the three abodes, (that) subtle (state) is called Śrīpāda. It is the essential nature (svarūpa) within the supreme, that is, the Sun of the energy of the Void (kha). It is the Void (kha) and the foundation (āśraya). Free of 'coming and going', Śrīpāda is the teacher within the Transmission. He who understands (this) otherwise is said to be one who has fallen in the Transmission (krama).[1]

Navātman

The sonic identity of the First Nātha, is Navātman. The seed-syllable called Navātman is the sonic form of Bhairava who is Kubjikā's consort worshipped along with her in the center of the maṇḍala as the First Teacher. He is the emperor

---

rūpātītaṁ paraṁ [kh: paṁraṁ] sākṣāt [k, kh, gh: sākṣā] śrīpādaṁ [kh: cchrī-] tu caturthakam ||
Ibid. 3/268cd-270.

[1] sṛṇu [k: śṛṇa] guhyaṁ ca paramaṁ mukhyaṁ śrīśāsane gurum |
na vinā guruṇā mokṣaṁ kathaṁ saṁsārachedanam [k, kh, gh: śaṁsārachadakaṁ] ||
sthūlaṁ [k, kh, gh: -la] navātmadevaṁ tu aṣṭādaśakramāgatam |
sṛṣṭisaṁhārabhedena kāraṇaṁ ṣaṭkasaṁyutam ||
bodhavyaṁ śrīguroḥ parśve [k, kh, gh: pārśvīd] yadīcchen muktiḥ śāśvatī |
ataḥ samarase 'bhinnaṁ [k, kh, gh: sā-] garbhasthānordhvaṣoḍaśaḥ ||
tridhāmapadanirmuktaṁ [k, kh, gh: -nimuktaṁ] sūkṣmaṁ śrīpādasaṁjñakam |
khakalārkaparāntasthaṁ svarūpaṁ khamāśrayam [kh: khasvarūpaṁ khamā-] ||
gamāgamavinirmuktaṁ śrīpādaṁ cakrame [k, kh: cakreme] gurum |
anyathā caiva [k, kh, gh: aṁnyathā naiva] buddhyate [k, kh, gh: -nte] krame bhraṣṭaḥ sa ucyate ||
YKh (1) 3/272-276 .

(cakravartin) of the nine emperors (cakreśvara) who are the Bhairavas corresponding to the letters of Navātman[1] and so is called Navacakreśvara.[2] Navātmābhairava is in the centre of five important Wheels (cakra) described in the KMT and studied in detail by Heilijgers-Seelen.[3] Tvaritā is the form of the goddess in the centre of Khecarīcakra who is the consort of Navātman.[4] As Lord of the Group of Nine (Navakeśvara),[5] Bhairava is also called Navatattveśvara[6] because he governs the nine principles of Prakṛti, Puruṣa, Niyati, Kāla, Māyā, Śuddhavidyā, Īśvara, Sadāśiva and Śiva that encompass the others.[7]

The fifth and final cakra is named after the Khecarīs (Skyfarers) who reside there. Their name suggests the association of this Wheel with Space, the fifth element, and its location above the head. The Khecarīs are seated on a lotus made of three concentric rings of petals. These are the maṇḍalas of the Sun, Moon and Fire. The maṇḍala of the Sun is the outermost one and consists of twelve petals. The maṇḍala of the Moon, which consists of sixteen petals, comes next. It is followed by the maṇḍala of Fire, which consists of eight petals, and is the innermost ring. These three maṇḍalas are the seats of twenty-four, thirty-two and eight Khecarīs, respectively. The central part of the Khecarīcakra is the Ādimaṇḍala - the 'original' maṇḍala - which contains the Ādiyoni, the primeval source of creation. The centre is occupied by Śiva in his manifestation as Asitāṅga, who is identified with Navātman. He is accompanied by the goddess, who manifests in different forms. The supreme form of the goddess, which can only be realized by means of Navātman, is at a still higher level above the Khecarīcakra. By intense and persistent meditation that brings about the ascent of the fire of the internal Śakti (vaḍavānala), the yogi attains the supreme state in which he is identified with the supreme reality and absorbed into it.[8]

According to the ŚM,[9] the Teacher's basic form there is the Vaḍava Fire that burns upwards from the centre of the Wheel of Skyfaring Goddesses (khecarīcakra) and down through the centre of the other Wheels below. The following visualized form of Navātman Bhairava, described in the ŚM, echoes the association of Navātman with the goddess who is the energy of the Vaḍava Fire.

---

[1] GS 16/362cd-363.
[2] KMT 14/45.
[3] See Heilijgers-Seelen 1992: 28.
[4] See above, p. 84 ff..
[5] KMT 14/93a.
[6] KMT 14/45, 59 and 15/31.
[7] SvT 5/4-7. Cf. Kṣemarāja comm.. on VB verses 2 to 4: kiṁ vā prakṛtyādiśivānta-navatattvāvamarśayuktyā vimṛṣṭaṣaḍadhvanavātmamantrarājasvabhāvatayā rūpaṁ syāt | See note to KuKh 2/29-30ab concerning the nine energies of Navātman.
[8] See Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 150.
[9] ŚM 23/118 ff see note to KuKh19/76 where this passage is given in full.

Navātman is visualized while depositing the letters of the syllable onto the body. This process is called the Yoga of the Vaḍava Fire with which Navātman is identified. He burns as the Fire of Time in the core of the Triangle in the Wheel of the Foundation at the base of the body, just as he does at the summit of the body as the Vaḍava Fire within the Transmental in the Circle of Brahmā at the End of the Twelve. Burning upwards he consumes the lower immanent levels and states until they are all absorbed into the transcendental Void of perfect Stillness attained by the Yoga of Stillness, which is the Yoga of the Inner Fire he embodies. He has nine faces corresponding, no doubt, to the letters of his sonic form:

> One should attain the plane of the Vaḍava (Fire) by means of the Yoga of the Vaḍava Fire. It is in the middle of the abode of the foundation in the centre of the triangle. It is within the Vaḍava Fire and is energized by the Vaḍava Fire. Navātman, who possesses Bhairava's form, is there. His mind is blissful with his own energy and he is delighted by the bliss of (spiritual) wine. He has nine faces (each of which) has three eyes, a crown and earrings. On his ears is a sacred snake and a garland of gems hangs down (from his neck).
>
> He has eighteen arms and is adorned with many ornaments. A skull, conch, noose, gaud, (a threatening gesture with the) index finger, bow, shield and a club studded with iron (parigha) are on the left hand side. O dear one, a trident, double-headed drum, sword, ascetic's staff, pestle, bell, thread, arrow and boon-bestowing gesture are on the right.[1]
>
> One should think that the weapon (astra), which is the terrible Fire of Time, is licking up and destroying (all things with its flames)

---

[1] ādhārapuramadhyasthaṁ [g: pūra-] śṛṅgāṭodaramadhyagam |
vaḍavānalamadhyasthaṁ vaḍavānaladīpitam ||
vaḍavānalayogena vāḍavīyaṁ [kh: vāḍavīya] padaṁ labhet |
tatrasthaṁ ca navātmānaṁ bhairavākārarūpiṇam [kh: -ravānanda-] ||
svaśaktyānandacetaskaṁ [g: -naṁta-] madirānandananditam [g: mahi-] |
navānanaṁ [g: navātmānaṁ] trinetrāḍhyam [k: -kṣaṁ; kh g: -khyaṁ] kirīṭakuṇḍalānvitam [kh: kīrīṭī- g: kīrīṭīkuṇḍalojvalaṁ] ||
divyagonāsa karṇasthaṁ [k kh: kaṇṭhasthaṁ] maṇimālāvalambitam [k: -pralambitam; g: mani-] |
bhujāṣṭādaśakopetaṁ [k g: -ṣṭakasamo-] nānālaṁkāramaṇḍitam ||
kādyaṁ kambus tathā [k: kambu-; kh: kuṁbuṁ-; g: kaṁbuṁ-] pāśamaṁkuśaṁ [g: pāśaṁma-] tarjanī [k: kartarīṁ] dhanuḥ [g: dhanu] |
kheṭakaṁ parighaṁ caiva [kh: parighamabhayaṁ; g: cordhvād] vāmamārge virājate ||
triśūlaṁ ḍamaruṁ [kh g: ḍamarukaṁ; g: + caiva] khaḍgaṁ [g: khaḍga] khaṭvāṅgaṁ [g: khaṭvāṁga] mudgaraṁ tathā |
ghaṇṭhā sūtraṁ tathā bāṇaṁ varadaṁ dakṣiṇe priye [k: kare] ||ŚM 22/120-125.

(lelihāna). (Powerful) like a blue lightning flash, it is energized by the fire of (universal) destruction.

(He is) adorned with a garland of skulls and is beautiful in all (his) limbs. Replete with all (the good) characteristics, he is in the midst of the host of Yoginīs. He has a large chest and a big belly and is very strong. A corpse is placed (under) the soles of (his) feet and, burning intensely, he is very powerful.

The first face is white. A red face is above it. Above that is a yellow face. (The face) on the right is dark blue. Above it is a grey face and above that a blue face. (The face) on the left is yellow and red. (The face) above it is brown and red. (The face) after that (above it) is white and red. The colour of mercury (pārada), it is very brilliant. The brown face is fierce with jagged teeth and (its) eyes are red.

(He has) a garland made of sacred gems that hangs down (from his neck) to the soles of (his) feet. In the midst of the Vaḍava Fire, he is delighted by the bliss of his own energy. Within the womb of the Vaḍava Fire in the Transmental within the Circle of Brahmā, he is successful by means of the Yoga of the Vaḍava (Fire) which is Stillness (nirācāra).[1]

---

[1] astraṁ kālānalaṁ ghoraṁ lelihānaṁ vicintayet |
nīlajīmūtasaṁkāśaṁ [kh: -jīmut-] pralayānaladīpitam [g: pralaya-] ||
kapālamālābharaṇaṁ sarvāvayavaśobhitam |
sarvalakṣaṇasaṁpūrṇaṁ yoginīgaṇamadhyagam ||
bṛhadvakṣasthalābhogaṁ lambodaraṁ mahābalam |
śavaṁ pādatale nyastaṁ dīpyamānaṁ mahaujasam [g: mahojvalaṁ] ||
śvetaṁ [kh: svetaṁ] tu prathamaṁ vaktraṁ raktavaktraṁ tatopari |
tadūrdhve pītavaktraṁ [kh: -varṇaṁ] tu dakṣiṇe [k kh: dakṣiṇaṁ] kṛṣṇavarṇakam || *tasyordhve dhūmravaktraṁ [k: -varṇaṁ] tu nīlavaktraṁ tatordhvagaṁ [k: tatoddha ] | [Reading missing from here in MS K.]
pītāruṇaṁ tu vāme ca [kh: na; g: -naṁ] tasyordhve [kh: tatorddhe] lohitāruṇam ||
śvetāruṇaṁ [kh: svetā-] tataḥ paścāt pāradābhaṁ sudīpitam |
daṁṣṭrakarālaraudraṁ [kh g: daṁṣṭrā-] ca piṅgāsyaṁ [g: -kṣaṁ] raktalocanam [g: ratna-] ||
divyaratnaiḥ [kh: -ratnai] kṛtā mālā āpādatalalambitā |
vaḍavānalamadhyasthaṁ svaśaktyānandananditam ||
vaḍavānalayonyante unmane brahmamaṁḍale |
vāḍavena tu yogena nirācāreṇa siddhyati || ŚM 22/126-133.

Navātmābhairava

> He who practices the Navātmānanda Bhairava, in this way quickly attains success (siddhi). O fair lady, it is the means to attain all the things (one) desires. He who has Navātman in (his) heart holds success in (his) hand. O fair lady, the Krama of one who does not deposit the Vaḍava Fire of Navātman is empty; (his) effort, O goddess, is useless. He is not liberated (and is like) those who are sunk in sinful action. O mistress of the God of the gods, he sinks into the ocean of transmigration which is hard to cross.
>
> The Vaḍava Fire is energized by the Yoga of Stillness. It is delighted by the bliss of Navātman and is rich with the juice of the bliss of (its own) energy. The Vaḍava Fire is energized by the Yoga of the Supreme Nectar. One who is free of the bondage of phenomenal existence has crossed the ocean of phenomenal existence. Therefore, one should practice Stillness with all effort.[1]

As each of the letters is uttered along with the syllable Navātman, another iconic form of Navātman is associated with the Assembly of Sounds called Śabdarāśinavātman. It is described in the KRU.[2] Navātman's subtle form is the Assembly of Sounds (śabdarāśi),[3] which consists of the fifty letters of the alphabet[4] present in the inner movement of the sonic energy of Kuṇḍalinī. His gross form, called Śabdarāśinavātman is described there as follows:

> (Navātman) has a big body and burns intensely, illumining the sky with (his) radiant energy. (He has) five faces (with) large eyes and is adorned with ten arms and the moon. He has a large chest and, auspicious, has a serene face (prasannavadana). He has long arms

---

[1] evam abhyasyamānasya [g: ava-] navātmānandabhairavam |
acirāj [g: acirā] jāyate siddhiḥ khapathasya [g: khepathasthā] prasādhanam ||
sādhanaṁ sarvavastūnāṁ [g: -vastunāṁ] kāminīnāṁ [g: kāmināṁ] varānane |
siddhis tasya kare baddhā navātmā yasya hṛtsthitaḥ [g: hṛ-] ||
yo na nyased [kh: yonyante ca] varārohe navātmāvaḍavānalam |
*tasya śūnyaṁ kramaṁ devi [g: * vī] vṛthā jñānapariśramaḥ [kh: jñānaṁ-]* ||
pāpakarmanimagnānāṁ [kh: -karddamamagnānāṁ] nottāraṁ tasya vidyate | majjate [g: majate] devadeveśi dustare [kh g: -raṁ] bhavasāgare [kh g: -raṁ] ||
nirācāreṇa [g: nirācārena] yogena vaḍavānaladīpitam |
śaktyānandarasālāḍhyaṁ [g: -rasārādhyaṁ] navātmānandananditam ||
parāmṛtena yogena vaḍavānaladīpitam |
bhavabandhavinirmukto [g: -ktā] uttīrṇo [g: -ṇā] bhavasāgarāt ||
tasmāt sarvaprayatnena [kh: satvaṁ-] nirācāraṁ [g: nirācāra] samabhyaset || ŚM 22/134-138ab.

[2] KRU 8/70cd-79. See note to KuKh 19/76.

[3] KRU 8/69ab.

[4] See chapter 18 of the KuKh.

(that extend up to) the knees, (large) thighs and shanks (like a) palm tree. (His) stomach is thin. He has beautiful hands and feet and thin fingers (like tender) shouts. The lustre of (his) nails is like the moon and his face shines with (his) radiant teeth. The middle (part of his body) is marked by a deep navel and the lotus of the navel is a clockwise spiral.[1]

He resides in the midst of hidden (nigūḍha) jewels and (his) penis (piṇḍika) (is long and) sticks to (his) shanks. (His) hips are (like large) planks and he is adorned with beautiful cheeks. He wears divine earrings (kuṇḍala) and the Great Gesture is (his) ornament. He has made the Great Ghost (who lies) on the lotus of the head of the Great Corpse, (his) seat. He has made (the hood of) a great serpent his hat (āṭopa). (He wears) a divine garland and is naked (ambaracchada). He holds a skull and an ascetic's staff. (Another) hand shines (as it were) with a trident. (He also holds) a bow, an arrow, vīṇā, bell and double-headed drum. He makes boon-bestowing and fear-dispelling gestures and is adorned with a garland of mantras. Possessing supreme bliss, he is in the middle of a circle of Yoginīs. O goddess, Śabdarāśi-navātman will be the object of meditation in this form, O mistress of the gods, both internally and externally. O fair faced one, the mantras should be visualized in conjunction with this visualization (dhyāna).[2]

---

[1] bṛhatkāyo [kh: vṛhacchāyo] mahādīptas tejasābhāsayan [g: -bhācayan] nabhaḥ [k: nabha; kh: naca] ||
pañcavaktro [kh: -vaktrā] viśālākṣo daśabāhvendubhūṣitaḥ [kh: -vāhvendrabhūsitaḥ] |
bṛhadvakṣasthalābhogaḥ [g: -stharobhogaḥ] prasannavadanaḥ śubhaḥ ||
bāhupralambajānūrutālajaṅghas tanūdaraḥ [k kh: -jaṁgho tanūdaraḥ; g: -jaṁghā tanūdaraḥ] |
suhastapādasaṁyuktaḥ [g: -yuktaṁ] taralāṅgulipallavaḥ [g: kalalāṅguli-] ||
candrakalpanakhābhāsaḥ [g: -khākāśaḥ] sphuraddantojjvalānanaḥ [k: -dantokṣalānanaḥ; kh: sphūraddaṁbhjvalānanaṁ; g: -dantojvalā-] |
*gambhīranābhimadhyāṅkaḥ [g: gabhīranābhimadhyāṅka] nābhyabjaṁ [kh: nābhyaṁ ; g: nāsvavajaṁ] dakṣavartanam [k kh: -nāt; g: -rtanā] || KRU 8/70cd-73.

[2] nigūḍhamaṇimadhyastho [k kh g: -sthaṁ] jaṅghāvabaddhapiṇḍikaḥ [k kh: jaṁghāvāvaddhapiṁḍikau; g: jaghovāvarddhapiṁḍikau] |
bṛhannitambaphalakaḥ sukapolopaśobhitaḥ [k kh: -taṁ] ||
divyakuṇḍaladhārī ca mahāmudrāvibhūṣaṇaḥ [kh: mahāmudra-] |
mahāśavaśirāmbhojamahāpretakṛtāsanaḥ [kh: mahāśave-; g: -mahāpratakṛtā-] ||
mahāphaṇikṛtāṭopo [kh: -kṛtāyo; g: -tākyeṣa] divyamālyāmbaracchadaḥ [g: divyamālāmbaracchadaḥ] |
kapālakhaṭvāṅgadharaḥ triśūlakarabhāsuraḥ ||
dhanur bāṇas tathā vīṇā [kh: vīnā] ghaṇṭhā [g: ghaṇṭā] ḍamarukaṁ tathā |
varadābhayahastaḥ [k kh: -hastaṁ] ca mantramālāvibhūṣitaḥ [k kh: -taṁ] ||
Śabdarāśinavātman

The mantra form of Navātman is a very important seed-syllable in the Kubjikā Tantras, as it is in the Tantras of other schools. It appears, perhaps for the first time, in the Svacchandatantra as a seed-syllable of Svacchandabhairava. According to the SvT, its independent form is HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ,[1] which is the most common form in the Kubjikā Tantras also. Another form of Navātman – OṀYVLMKṢRHAŪṀ, is projected into the Navanābhamaṇḍala, which is used for the rites of initiation.[2] A sign of the influence of the cult of Svacchanda on the Siddhāntāgamas is the use in Siddhānta rites of the syllable Navātman and the special power that is attributed to it. Somaśambhu prescribes the recitation of a nine syllable mantra he calls Navātman when offering oblations to the fire in order to remove the impurities of the postulant and prepare him to receive the Special Initiation (viśeṣadīkṣā) that gives him access to the Initiation of Nirvāṇa by means of which he is conjoined to Śiva.[3] Not all Siddhāntins agree that the form of the nine syllable mantra is the one to which we are referring. Aghoraśiva does. According to him the full formula for this mantra that 'consumes sin' (pāpabhakṣaṇa) (just as Aghora 'consumes disease') is: OṀ HASAKṢAMALAVARAYŪṀ NAVĀTMANE ŚIVĀYA NAMAḤ.[4] Nirmalamaṇi endorses Aghoraśiva's view and quotes the Pūrvakāraṇāgama where the nine letters of Navātman are given in code.[5]

Navātman appears in the Trika system expounded by Abhinavagupta as the consort of the goddess Aparā. The form of his seed-syllable according to the MvT is RHRKṢMLVYŪṀ.[6] In his commentary on the Vijñānabhairava Kṣemarāja refers to the navātmabheda which he tells us is taught in the important (now lost) Trika Tantra, the Triśirobhairava.[7] Navātman continues to be used in the Śrīvidyā

---

paramānandasaṁyuktaḥ [k kh g: -yuktaṁ] yoginīcakramadhyagaḥ [k kh: -gaṁ] |
rūpeṇānena deveśi sabāhyābhyantareṇa [kh: savācyātyantarena; g: -hyātyantarena] vā ||
śabdarāśinavātmā tu [k: rāsi navātmānaṁ; kh: śabdarāsiṁ navātmānaṁ; g: -rāśirnavātmānaṁ] dhyeyo [k g: dhyeyaṁ; kh: dhyeyā] devi bhaviṣyati |
anena dhyānayogena dhyeyā mantrā varānane || Ibid. 8/74-79.

[1] SvT 5/4-8ab.

[2] See appendix 1 of KuKh vol. 4 for an exposition of the Sixteen-fold Consecration of the Command according to the Ṭikā.

[3] SŚP, vol. 2, 2/11 p. 128.

[4] AP. p. 255; SŚP 2, p. 129.

[5] Pūrvakāraṇāgama 2/10-11a; Np. 257; SŚP 2, p. 129.

[6] MVT 8/21cd-23ab paraphrased in TĀ 30/11ab-12cd. See also PTv p. 150. Navātman is the Bhairava of Aparā. Ratiśekhara, whose syllable is RYLVŪṀ, is the Bhairava of Parāparā (MVT 9/35, TĀ 30/10cd-11ab). Bhairavasadbhāva, whose syllable is JHKṢŪṀ, is the consort of Parā (MVT 8/33-34, TĀ 30/16cd-17).

[7] Comm. on VB verses 2 to 4. According to Jaideva Singh (Vijñānabhairava p. 7) the form of Navātman is HRKṢMLVYṆŪṀ, but he does not tell us the source on which his affirmation is based. See also Laksmanjoo 2002: 4.

tradition that developed after the Kubjikā Tantras. The YHṛ[1] enjoins that Navātman should be used to worship Amṛteśī in the argha vessel charged with the energies of the sun. It is also used to offer libations to the goddesses who preside over the vital constituents of the body (dhātu), namely, Ḍākinī and the rest.[2] In his commentary on the YHṛ Amṛtānanda quotes a passage from the Svacchandasaṁgraha in which the letters of Navātman are given in the Śabdarāśi code. The form appears to be HSKṢ(M)LVRYŪṀ. In his commentary Bhāskararāya[3] quotes the Jñānārṇavatantra in which, extracted in a different code, it is SHKṢMLVRYŪṀ.

We notice that the position of the first two letters in the second version has been reversed with respect to the first one, which is the earlier form we find in the SvT. The same is often the case with the versions of Navātman we find in the Kubjikā sources. A form of Navātman in the KMT is SHRKṢMLVYŪṀ.[4] The same basic form with a double final vowel - SHRKṢMLVYŪ-AUṀ is also found in the KMT and the ṢSS.[5] The first of these is known to the Ṭīkā which presents it in one place.[6] Conscious that this is not the only form of Navātman, once the Ṭīkā

---

[1] YHṛ 3/102-103ab.

[2] See KuKh 63/1 note 1.

[3] Setubandha p. 254.

[4] Extracted in ṢSS 39/141-145. See Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 26.

[5] KMT 16/58-61 = ṢSS 25/98cd-102ab and GS 20/288-291.

[6] The Moon Yoni (candrayoni) – Sa, Śiva – Ha, the Fire of Time (kālāgni) – Ra, the Vowel (svara) - Ū, the Last One (antaga) - KṢa. Time (kāla) – Ma, the Support of the Lotus Yoni (padmayonidhara) – La, the Lord of the Wind (māruteśa) - Ya and the Womb of Knowledge (jñānayoni) Va. The form of (these) letters, extracted according to (their essential) condition and fused together into one syllabic mantra (piṇḍa), is called Navātman. How else is it? It is covered with Sound (nāda). Sound is Unstruck Sound (anacka) [it is drawn like this: S]. The Self at the End of Sound delights, that is, is uttered along with the (vital) Wind, which is the Obstructress (nirodhinī). How is the Obstructress? [it is drawn like this: o|o] What is that Peak (syllable)? (It is) Navātman described previously. How else is it? It is pure, free of impurity and brilliant white like snow, a white lotus and the moon. How else is it? It is full in all respects (āsamāntāt). And as such what does (that) venerable Śrīnātha do? He burns brightly up to (the level of) Uḍḍīśa. Who is that Śrīnātha? Ciñciṇīkula, the nature of which is Caryānātha. This is one extraction (of Navātman).

*yathā candrayoniḥ sa | śivaḥ ha [kh: haḥ] | kālāgniḥ [kh: -gni] ra | svaraḥ ū | antagaḥ kṣa [kh: kṣaḥ] | kālaḥ [kh: kāla] ma | padmayonidharaḥ la [k kh: nāsti] | māruteśaḥ ya [k: yā] | jñānayoniḥ va |evaṁ vyavasthārūpeṇoddhṛtānāṁ [kh: vyavastarūpeṇa-uddhṛtānāṁ] varṇānāṁ [kh: varṇṇānāṁ] ekapiṇḍīkṛtānāṁ [kh: ekakapiṇḍī-] yad rūpaṁ navātmābhidhānam | anyac ca kīdṛśam | nādenācchāditam [k: nādevā-] | nādam iti anackam | [citram - S] | ātmā nādānte tathā vāyunā nirodhinyā saha modati | ucārayati | nirodhinī yathā kim | o|o | kiṁ tat kūṭaṁ | prāg varṇitaṁ navātmā [k kh: navātmam] | anayac ca kīdṛśam | śuddhaṁ nirmalaṁ tathā himakundendusamaprabhaṁ tuṣārasitotpalacandra-sadṛśam [kh: tuśāra-] | anyac ca kīdṛśam | āsamāntāt [k kh: āsanaṁtāt] pūrṇaṁ [k kh: pūrṇa] tathā kiṁ kurvantam [kh: kurvvaṁtaṁ] | śrīśrīnāthaṁ prajvalyamānam | uḍḍīśaparyantam [kh: uḍḍī*paryaṁtaṁ] | kiṁ [k: kan; kh: kaṁ]*

has extracted the syllable in the first of these two forms, it goes on to extract it again using another code in which the letters correspond to sacred sites.[1] The form of Navātman in that case is SHKṢMLVRYŪṀ. Drawn in the maṇḍala, it is seen in its written form (akṣaradarśana), as well as heard.[2]

We notice another difference between this form and the two variants in the KMT and the ṢSS, namely, the position of the letter R, which is critical in other earlier versions of Navātman also, such as those of the Trika we have noted.[3] Another is the order of the first two letters. The letters of Navātman are extracted in one place in the KuKh[4] using the code names for the letters of the Aggregate of Sounds (śabdarāśi). There it is SHKṢMLVRYŪṀ. This is also the form of Navātman that is projected onto the body according to the ŚM[5] and is the one presented in the second extraction of this syllable in the Ṭīkā, which affirms that this is its basic form in all the Kubjikā tradition. Indeed, the form SHKṢMLVRYŪṀ became the dominant one in the later Kubjikā Tantras although remnants of the form HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ are also attested. This is taṁ śrīnātham | ciñciṇīkulam [kh: ciṁcinīkulaṁ] | caryānātharūpam ity ekaḥ samuddhāraḥ | Ṭ MS K fl. 177a.

---

[1] See KuKh 6/212cd-219ab and notes.

[2] Now one should extract (Navātman) again from the grid of Meru. (The text says): 'The one beginning with (the letter) Ma' and so on. Once extracted 'the one beginning with (the letter) Ma', that is Mahālakṣmī, the letter Sa. Then (comes) Oḍyāna (which is the letter) Ha. 'The one beginning with Chā' is Chāyāchatra, the letter KṢa. Then (comes) the one beginning with AU, that is, Auruṣa, (the letter) Ma. The one beginning with E is Eruḍī, (the letter) La. The one beginning with Ma is Māhendra, (the letter) Va. The one beginning with ŚRĪ is Śrīśaila (the letter) Ra. The one beginning with Ma is Malaya, the letter Ya. The one beginning with Ka is Kanyākubja, the letter Ū adorned with anusvāra. Thus (we get) SAHAKṢAMALAVARAYA-ŪṀ. Such is the basic form (vyavasthā) in the entire tradition (ovalli) (and so) the extraction of Navātman is complete. Having (distributed the letters of) that (Navātman) equally according to the teacher's oral instruction, it is (now) presented (complete) as follows: SHKṢMLVRYŪṀ. This is the extraction of the parts of Navātman and the presentation of its written form (akṣaradarśana) which is transmitted orally. This teaching has come down through the line of teachers.

idānīṁ meruprastārāt punar eva uddharet | mapūrvam ity ādi | mapūrvaṁ [k, kh: -pūrvva] mahālakṣmīṁ [k kh: -lakṣmī] sakāram uddhṛtya | tataḥ oḍyānaṁ ha | chāpūrvam iti chāyāchatraṁ kṣakāram | tataḥ aupūrvaṁ [k kh: opūrvve] auruṣam [k kh: orūpam] ma | epūrvaṁ eruḍī la | mapūrvaṁ [k kh: -pūrvva] māhendram va | śrīpūrvaṁ śrīśailaṁ ra | mapūrvaṁ malayaṁ yakāram | kapūrvaṁ kanyakubjaṁ ūkāraṁ [kh: -rāṁ] bindubhūṣitam | evaṁ sa ha kṣa ma la va ra ya ūṁ [k kh: ū] | evaṁ vyavasthā samastovallyāṁ [k: samastāvalyān; kh: samastāvalyāt] navātmoddhāraṁ kṛtam | tad eva gurumukhopadeśavaśāt samīkṛtya pradarśyate yathā iti navātmānaḥ padoddhāraṁ [kh: + a] akṣaradarśanaṁ vaktrād vaktre evaṁ pratiṣṭhitam | sa [k kh: na] śāsanaḥ [k: -na; kh: śāsna] paramparāyātaḥ | Ibid. fl. 177a-177b.

[3] Cf. Heilijgers-Seelen 1992: 26-27.

[4] KuKh 19/77-78.

[5] See notes to KuKh 19/88-89 where the places in the body where the nine letters of Navātman should be projected are listed.

probably because the sequence Ha Sa made more sense than Sa Ha, as Ha is the letter of the male deity and Sa that of the female. Navātman is worshipped along with the Samayā Vidyā[1] in the centre of the maṇḍala. In addition to this couple, to reinforce it, as it were, the male and female forms of Navātman may also be worshipped. The Ṭīkā explains: 'the First Nātha is HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ. This is Navātman. Navātmanī is SHKṢMLVRYĪṀ. This is Navātmī. They should be worshipped in this way in the calyx in the centre of the Kramamaṇḍala.'[2] The ṢSS similarly teaches two versions of Navātman. One is Śakti and is used to grace others (anugraha). It is 'HSRKṢMLVRYŪṀ, the Peak syllable which is Śakti established as (a form of) Navātman'.[3] The other is Śiva used to restrain others (nigraha). This is SHRKṢMLVRYĪṀ.[4] Apart from the difference in the location of the letter Ra, to which we have already referred, we observe that the two presentations are the same. The 'male' form of Navātman begins with Ha Sa and the 'female' one with Sa Ha thus confirming our supposition that the male Navātman should begin with Ha Sa rather than Sa Ha.

Navātman is presented in the ŚM in the Śabdarāśi code in four lines that are reproduced in the KuKh.[5] Navātman there is SHKṢMLVRYŪṀ which is the form of Navātman used to generate the Gurumaṇḍala. It is the seed-syllable form of Kuleśvara.[6] The Supreme Void, which is realised at the End of the Sixteen, is at the summit of the resonance of Navātman, known as the End of the Nine. This is both the summit of immanence and the summit of the Peak syllable (kūṭa).[7] There

---

[1] See note to KuKh 2/27.

[2] ādyanāthaṁ yathā hskṣmlvryūṁ iti navātmā || navātmanī yathā shkṣmlvryīṁ iti navātmī || evaṁ kramamaṇḍalamadhye [kh: kramamaṇḍamadhye] karṇikāyāṁ pūjyau [k kh: pūjyā] | Ṭ MS K fl. 53b.

[3] śaktyātmakaṁ ha sa ra kṣa ma la ya ū [kh: ūṁ] aṁ ardhacandranādāntam iti navātmakatvena śaktyātmakaṁ kūṭaṁ siddhaṁ yathā hsrkṣmlvryūṁ || comm on ṢSS 40/4-9ab.

[4] Again, the second one is Śiva in the form of the living being (jīvabhūta) who, in terms of letters, is as follows: Sa Ha Ra KṢa Ma La Va Ra Ya Ī AṀ along with the Half Moon and the End of Sound. Both Peak (syllables) are in the form of living beings. (This one) consists (along with the previous one) of fourteen (letters).

(Each one of these two Peak syllables) is the living being (jīva) of what? (They are the living being i.e. `soul') of the Western House. The first is Kubjikā and the second is Ādinātha. Without these two all (ritual) is fruitless.

tathā dvitīyaṁ akṣaragatyā śivātmakaṁ jīvabhūtaṁ yathā sa ha ra kṣa ma la va ra ya ī aṁ ardhacandro [k: -candraḥ; kh: arddhacandraḥ] nādāntaṁ caturdaśātmakatvena sthitaṁ yathā shrkṣmlvryīṁ iti kūṭadvayau jīvabhūtau || comm. ṢSS 40/9cd-13.

etat piṇḍaṁ varārohe ādināthasamudbhavam |
svāminyā [k kh: -minyo] sahitaṁ bhadre bhuktimuktipradāyakam || ṢSS 40/14.

[5] ŚM 24/38cd-40ab = KKh 48/12cd-14ab.

[6] kūṭarūpaṁ kuleśvaram KMT 16/63b.

[7] See KuKh 3/112 and note.

the deity who is the teacher of all teachers resides with his consort, the goddess. In this aspect Navātman is worshipped in the Gurumaṇḍala.[1]

As the First Teacher he is Vṛkṣanātha, 'the lord of the gods' who is the bliss of Navātman endowed with nine powers.[2] It has not been possible to trace a direct reference to the nine energies (śakti) of Navātman. One would suppose that they are the energies of the Bhairavas who govern the nine letters of which it is composed and of the nine principles to which they correspond.[3] However, the texts supply more complex answers. A sequence of nine is described in the KuKh. They are said to be nine places in which the Supreme Energy has arisen and from which the nine-fold body of Navātman is generated within which it resides.[4] Elsewhere these nine components are called 'the nine energies beginning with Vāmā' (vāmādinavaśakti)[5] and may well be the nine energies of Navātman. The sequence appears to be: 1) Vāmā 2) Jyeṣṭhā 3) Raudrī 4) Half Moon (ardhacandra) 5) Drop (bindu) 6) Light (jyotirūpā) 7) the Teacher's Mouth which is called Unborn (aja) 8) Īśvara and 9) Śiva. Normally, the Teacher's Mouth, also called the Wheel of the Unborn, is in the End of the Twelve. Perhaps Śiva is in the End of the Sixteen, which in the following reference is said to be the place where the teacher in the form of Navātman is located.

Another way in which the nine energies of Navātman may be understood are as nine aspects of the Command that generates the Bhairavas corresponding to its nine letters. These nine are nine out of the eighteen members of the Divine Current. At the same time, they are also their consorts. In this case the male does not generate the female. On the contrary, the female generates the male. The number in bold after the entry is the number in the serial order of the eighteen.[6] The letter in brackets is the one corresponding to the particular Bhairava. In this case Navātman is SHKṢMLVRYŪ(Ṁ):

> Bhṛgu (Sa) has been generated by the Transmental (unmanā) (1), Lakuleśvara (Ha) by the Equal One (samanā) (3), Saṁvartaka (KṢa) by the Pervasive One (vyāpinī) (4) (while) Mahākāla (Ma) is born of Energy (śakti) (5). Pinākin (La) originated in Heruka (8) and Khaḍgīśa (Va) is the son of Jambhalā (10). The one called Bhujaṅga (Ra) is (generated by) Saṁkarṣaṇī (11). Bālīśa (Ya) is the son of Caṇḍikā (12) while Ārghīśa (Ū) is (generated) by Aghorī (13). (This)

[1] This form of the Gurumaṇḍala is described chapter 24 of the ŚM.
[2] KuKh 2/29-30ab.
[3] Listed in SvT 5/4-7.
[4] KuKh 35/64-68.
[5] KuKh 51/24-25ab but here the names of these nine energies are not listed.
[6] See KuKh 2/21cd-26. and below table on p. 582-583.

> is the excellent teacher within the tradition. He who knows the teacher here is the delight of Kula.[1]

From what is said next it appears that the Divyaugha is divided into parts. One is Navātman, which is as described. The other is the nine-fold Khecarakrama, although it is commonly identified with the whole of the Divyaugha. Moreover, there are some repetitions and not all the eighteen are mentioned.[2] The numerical order in the Divyaugha is noted in bold after the number of the serial order here.

> Above that emerges the Transmission of the Skyfarers (khecarakrama) that is adorned with the group of six. (1) The Half Moon is (generated by) Mind beyond Mind (manonmanī) (2) while (2) the Circle of the Sun is the Unmanifest (5). (3) (Śāmbhavī) Śakti is born from Mathanā (7). (4) The Pervasive One (4) is born from the Unborn Face (ajavaktra). (5) (3) The Equal One is within the expanding energy (vibhāva) of the Sun. The Transmental (unmanā) is born from the Teacher's Mouth. (6) (15) Vijayā is the family (santāna) of the teacher. (7) (16) The supreme energy is called Kamalā. (8) (17) Carcikā, born of the letters of consciousness (caitanyākṣara), has arisen from this. (9) (18) Śrīkaṇṭha, the lord who possesses your Command (ājñādhara), is born within her. He gives enjoyment and liberation. Auspicious, he is the best teacher in the Western Tradition.
>
> He who knows the teacher here is the beloved of Kula. The Krama is fruitless, like a tree whose root has been cut, for one who worships the Sequence of Teachers without (worshipping) the Teacher's Mouth. He will certainly fall! This is the Command of the Western House!

The Unborn Face is the Teacher's Mouth. This is the Supreme Void, the Śāmbhava state. The Transmental originates from here. The Transmental is the goddess who is the unfolding of the energy of the Void within its own unconditioned expanse. The Pervasive One at the summit of the bliss of the Equal One also comes from here. Above all things and self-generated (sahajā), it is the energy that imparts knowledge (jñāpayantī) to the Lord of Kula.[3] The Circle of the Sun is the Unmanifest (5), which is the energy of the Śāmbhava state (śāmbhavīśakti). The Equal One (3) is within its expanding energy. Presumably, [1] YKh (1) 3/261-263. This passage is drawn from the Gurukramasūtra.

---

[2] Nandinī (6), Bhāṣā (9), and Trailokyā (14) are missing.

[3] KuKh 57/8-9.

Śakti is the Unmanifest which, along with the Equal One, is generated from Mathanā (also called Manthānā), the seventh energy of the Divine Current. She is the energy of the dynamism - 'churning' - of Śiva and Śakti and is both of them. She is also all the seven stages, represented by the Wheels (cakra) of energy produced by their dynamism. In particular, this energy is that of the liberated state beyond the Six Wheels symbolized by the Yoni in the Void of pure consciousness.[1] Mathanā produces the Unmanifest which is eternal bliss[2] and the Equal One. The Equal One is the energy of consciousness which 'shines (prior to all things) as the rays of the consciousness of bliss'.[3]

Most commonly the letters of Navātman are identified with the Bhairavas who govern the corresponding letters in the sequence of the Assembly of Sounds.[4] These are listed in the second column of the following table. The nine teachers are grounded in the flow of the energy of the Transmental of the Divine Current and so are also identified with Skyfarers within it.[5] These are entered in column three. At the immanent level, the nine parts that constitute Navātman's sonic form are all the First Teacher in each of the Ages, sacred seats and of each lineage and transmission.[6] He is also the Nine Nāthas who were the first disciples we will turn our attention to later.[7] These are entered in columns four and five.

14. Table of Navātman

Letter	Bhairava	Divyaugha-Energy	First Teacher	Siddha
Sa	Bhṛgu	Transmental (Unmanā)	Kucandraśekhara	Kulanātha
Ha	Lakula	Equal One (Samanā)	Ājñādhara	Ananta
KṢa	Saṁvartaka	Pervasive One (Vyāpinī)	Mahābala	Kandarpa
Ma	Mahākāla	Energy (Śakti)	Śrīnātha	Vimala
La	Pinākin	Heruka	Mitranātha	Advaita
Va	Khagīśa	Jambhalā	Śrīkaṇṭha	Tūṣṇīnātha
Ra	Bhujaṅga	Saṁkarṣaṇī	Tūṣṇīnātha	Samaya
Ya	Bālīśa	Caṇḍikā	Ṣaṣṭhanātha	Śiraśekhara
ŪṀ	Arghīśa	Aghorī	Oḍīśācārya	Śāmbhavājñāvara

[1] KuKh 57/14cd-15ab.
[2] KuKh 57/10-11ab.
[3] KuKh 57/7.
[4] KuKh 19/77-78. The Assembly of Sound – Śabdarāśi – is the subject of chapter 19 of the KuKh.
[5] YKh (1) 3/261-263.
[6] KuKh 31/91-93ab.
[7] KuKh 52/1-3ab.

The Three Lineages

What follows is taken from the Ṭīkā. It is probably a commentary on what is now the first chapter of the Kulakaulinīmata.[1] It is a clear and systematic exposition of one of the most basic and essential conceptions of the lineages of Siddhas. Indeed, this account of the First Teacher and his disciples and lineages can be said to be the classic formulation. We find verses from it throughout the later sources, especially the references to the Divine Current.[2]

We have seen how Navātman, the sacred sonic form of the First Teacher, contains the Divine Current (divyaugha). It also contains and generates the Current of Men (mānavaugha).[3] From the First Teacher come the three lineages,

---

[1] A large part of the beginning of the KuKauM has been lost. All the most complete MSs begin abruptly in the same place in the middle of chapter 74 which deals with the teachers and lineages of the Kubjikā school. It is likely that the Ṭīkā was commenting on this text as the verses commented further ahead (from fl. 181a of MS K) appear at the beginning of what remains of that chapter in the KuKauM.

[2] For example, KuKh 7/65cd-67ab, which correspond to KuKauM 1/14-15.

[3] How is he (the First Lord)? He abides along with the Lord of all. Where? In his own line in the sequence of teachers, that is, in the lineage of Śrīnātha. This is how the Siddha came into being in the Kṛta Age. After this he will explain (how the Siddhas arose) in the Tretā and other (Ages). Oḍīśa has authority in the Tretā Age, Ṣaṣṭhīśa in the Dvāpara Age, and Mitrīśa in the Age of Strife. He will explain all the Current of Men (mānavaugha) (in that Age). 'Listen to the Current of Men . . . etc.' Listen and hear how the Current of Men will be in the future. It was said before: 'Beginning with the Transmental and ending with Ādinātha . . . etc'. The Current of Teachers (gurvogha), called the (Convention of the) Flower, (extends) from the Transmental up to the sons of Śrīnātha, that is, up to the end of the Eighteen Nāthas. 'Flower' is the name of a branch (śākhā) (of the tree of the lineages).

Thus by referring to the eighteen Nāthas the sense of the sūtra mentioned previously, namely, 'beginning with five and pervaded by the nine . . .' is completed and so (the explanation of the previous) reference to the five (elemental Siddhas), the nine (letters of Navātman), the eighty-one (parts of Navātman), the three (Siddhas of the seats) and the eighteen teachers (of the Divine Current) is complete. Thus the Current of Teachers (gurvogha), which has as its convention the Flower beginning with the five and progressing down in accord with the lines (of teachers) and ending with Śrīnātha, has been explained.

kīdṛśaḥ | nikhilīśena [k kh: nikhilasi] saha vartmānaḥ | kutra [k kh: kotra] | svapaṅktau gurukrame śrīnāthasantāne iti kṛtayuge [kh: -yuga] siddhotpattiḥ | tadanantaraṁ tretādiṣu vyākhyāsyati | tatra tretāyāṁ oḍīśādhikāraḥ dvāpare ṣaṣṭhīśasya kalau tu mitrīśasya nikhilaṁ mānavaughaṁ [kh: mānavoghaṁ] vyākhyāsyati | mānavaughaṁ [kh: mānavoghaṁ] śṛṇuṣva ity ādi | bhaviṣyatkāle mānavaughaṁ [kh: mānavoghaṁ] yad bhaviṣyati tac chṛṇuṣ.vākarṇaya | unmanādy ādināthāntam ity ādi [k kh: unmanādinādi-nāthāntaṁ] pūrvoktam [k kh: pūrvvokta] | unmanādi śrīnāthaputraparyantam aṣṭādaśa-nāthāntaṁ [k kh: -paryantāṣṭādaśanāthāntaṁ] gurvoghaṁ puṣpasaṁjñakam [k kh: -saṁjñikam] | puṣpam [k kh: puṣpa] iti śākhābhidhānam [k kh: sakhyā-] | ity aṣṭādaśanāthagrahaṇāt pūrvoktaṁ pañcādyaṁ navabhir vyāptam iti sūtrārthaṁ siddham | tasmāt pañcanavaikāśītitryaṣṭādaśānāṁ [k: -triraṣṭā-; kh: -tṛraṣṭā-] grahaṇaṁ [k kh:

the *oli*s. Accordingly, the tradition is called the teaching of the three lineages (olitritayaśāsana).[1] According to this exposition, the First Teacher is called Śrīnātha or Caryānātha who, specifically identified as Ciñciṇīnātha, is the source of the three lineages that emerge from his three eyes. According to the KuKh, Vṛkṣanātha is the First Nātha of the three lineages and the teacher of the Nine Nāthas. This version, which is probably an earlier one, retains the original figure of Mitranātha and so agrees with the KMT. As each of the Siddhas is said to have been the first in one of the four ages, Mitra is the First Teacher in this Kali Age. As the KMT does not make this distinction, the two versions formally agree.

The goddess begins by asking Śrīkaṇṭha who should be worshipped first in the Krama rite. He responds by explaining that it begins with the worship of the teachers and their lineages. Concretely, this is the worship of the Circle of Teachers (gurumaṇḍala). This may be drawn separately above the Kramamaṇḍala or projected into it. By the time this account was written the lineages and teachers are all related to the House of Candrapūrṇa that is identified with the Western House (paścimagṛha) and their worship is a part of Kula practice (kulācāra).[2] We read in the Ṭīkā:

> The line of teachers is the series (of teachers) related to one another as the sustainer is to the sustained and are the cause and reason of all the transmissions (krama). The meaning is that, this being so, Śambhu's nature, which is the Heart and the Supreme Self, pervades the (line of teachers) as the division of the lineages (ovallibheda). The venerable one called Ciñciṇīśa is that Śambhu by nature and is born from his own body as a subtle exertion (īśadyatana). And what else is there? He should be worshipped along with the Kukārā Vidyā. This is the connection (between the words) with what was said before.
>
> The venerable Ciñciṇīśa, who will be described presently, is the First Lord (Ādinātha). The aforementioned three lineages are born from his right and left eyes and the one on (his) forehead, in that order. [. . .] One should worship, in accord with the division of the three lineages, the three lines of teachers out of which (tatra) (one

grahaṇa] siddham iti pañcādi adho 'dhaḥkrameṇa [kh: adhādhakrameṇa] niḥśreṇyākāragatyā [kh: nisṛśyā-] śrīnāthāntāvadhiḥ puṣpasaṅketakaṁ gurvoghaṁ [kh: gurvvoghaṁ] kathitam |
Ṭ MS K fl. 178a.

[1] YKh (2) 6/26b.

[2] saṁketānīty [k kh: saṁkṣetā -] ādi | he devi me mama saṅketāni [k: -tād; kh: saṁketāt] brūhi | abhijñānāni kathaya | kathaṁ | yathā yena prakāreṇa kulācāraḥ [k kh: -ra] sthitaḥ [k kh: -tā] | asmin darśane vartate [k: carati; kh: varttati] | kasya saṁbandhinaḥ 'candrapūrṇasya veśmanaḥ' paścimagṛhasyety arthaḥ | kīdṛśāni [k kh: kīdṛśaṁ] lekhyasaṁketāni | ekaviṁśatibhiḥ anvaye śāṁbhavatrikonmanā-dyaṣṭādaśanāthādyaiḥ | tasyety [kh: tasyaity] ādi | Ṭ MS K fl. 173b.

should worship) one's own (lineage) as the line of teachers beginning with the (teachers of) the lineage (ovalli) (taught in the scriptures) up to one's own teacher. Thus the purpose has been explained. What is the nature of these lineages? It is said here (that they are the three times with the words) 'the future' etc.[1]

The three-fold transmission (krama) is said to be these three lineages. How is the three-fold transmission? (It is) the product of the essence of knowledge because it is the product of consciousness which is the essence of true knowledge. This is the meaning. How is it that it is called the cause of the cause of the differentiation of the (three) times, namely, the future, the present and the past? Thus - the future, the present and the past are said to be born from the right (eye), the forehead and the left (eye), respectively. Once these lineages (ovalli) have been learnt with effort, that is, (fully) understood and (one is) certain (of their nature), then one should perform the consecration.[2]

The Lineage of the Eldest

Then who and how is the teacher and by whom and where is he worshipped? It is said: '(His) nature is the future'. The lord of the Lineage of the Eldest is Oḍīśanātha. He should be worshipped in the

---

[1] *nikhilānām eva kramāṇāṁ gurupaṅktir ādhārādheya-paraṁparā kāraṇaṁ [k kh: kāraṇa] hetuḥ [k kh: hetu] iti kṛtvā ovallibhedenaiva [k kh: auvalli-] paramātmakaṁ hṛdayam tatra vyāpakaṁ ca śaṁbhurūpam ity arthaḥ | tasya śaṁbhor ātmakaṁ [k kh: śaṁbhurā-] svaśarīrasaṁbhūtaṁ [kh: śvaśarīraṁ-] śrīciñciṇīśābhidhānam īśadyatanarūpam [k: yatanā-; kh: yatatā-] | anyac ca kīdṛśam | kukārākhyayā vidyayā [k kh: vidyā] samanvitaṁ [kh: sa*nvitaṁ] pūjayet | iti pūrvoktena saṁbandhaḥ | iti samanantara-varṇitasya śrīciñcīṇīśasya ādināthasya dakṣiṇottara-netrābhyāṁ [k: dakṣino-] tathā lalāṭanetraṁ ca [k kh: -netrāś ca] yathā - krameṇa pūrvasūcitauvallitrayaṁ [k: -sūcita-valli-; kh: -sūcitovallitrayāṁ] jātam iti saṁbandhaḥ | evaṁ ovallīnāṁ [k kh: auvallīnāṁ] trayāṇāṁ utpattisthānam uktam | idānīṁ kiṁ tābhiḥ ovallibhiḥ [k kh: auvallibhiḥ] prayojanam ity āśaṅkyāha [k kh: -śaktyā-] | siddhabheda iti pūrvaiva [kh: pūrvva] vyākhyātam [k kh: -tum] | ovallitrayabhedānusāreṇa [k: auvalli-; kh: auvallitrayā-] yad gurupaṅktitrayaṁ tatra svakaṁ svakaṁ ovalliprabhṛtigurupaṅktyā gataṁ [k kh: gata] nijaguru-paryantaṁ svakaṁ svakaṁ ātmīyaṁ pūjanīyam iti yāvat | evaṁ prayojanaṁ vyākhyātam | tāsāṁ ovālīnāṁ [kh: o*līnāṁ] kiṁ rūpam | atrocyate | bhaviṣyam ity ādi |* Ṭ MS K fl. 174a-174b.

[2] yat kramaṁ tridhā tā eva [k kh: iva] ovallyas tisraḥ [k: auvalyas-; kh: auvalyaḥ tisraḥ] ity ucyate | kīdṛśaṁ tridhākramam | jñānasya sadbhāvotpattiḥ [k kh: sadbhāvaḥ - utpattiḥ] yasmāt sadjñānasadbhāvacitprasūtir ity arthaḥ [k: -sadbhāvaḥ citprasūtīty arthaḥ; kh: sa jñānasad-bhāvaḥ citprasūti ityarthaḥ] | tasya katham abhidhānaḥ [kh: kathaṁ ābhidhānaḥ] bhaviṣya-vartamānānāgatavibhinnakāla-kalanāhetuḥ [kh: -varttamāṇāgatavibhinnakālakalanā-tuhetu] | evaṁ dakṣiṇalalāṭajavāmodbhūtā [k kh: -ta] yathāsaṁkhyā bhaviṣyad-vartamānabhūtarūpā [kh: haviṣyadvarttamānabhūtarūpā] uktāḥ [k kh: uktā] | yās tā [k: yadā; kh: yastā] ovallīḥ [k kh: auvallayaḥ + tāmahaṁtā] yatnena jñātvā niścayenopalabhya [kh: -bhyaḥ] tataḥ abhiṣecanaṁ kuryāt | Ṭ MS K fl. 174b.

lineage of the family (santānavallī) of the Eldest. What is attained there? The supreme state, that is, (ultimate) reality (tattva). He who possesses the supreme state is one (whose condition) is that of the supreme state of reality. And (he whose condition) is that of the supreme state of reality is a Siddha, that is, one who is in the supreme state of reality that has been accomplished. That accomplished supreme state of reality is the state of reality that has been achieved (niṣpanna). How else is it? It bestows liberation and should be worshipped. This is the connection (between the words). Where (should the one who is in that state be worshipped)? With this question (in mind he says that) one should think that he is in the Place of Wrath. The Place of Wrath is the centre between the eyebrows.[1]

Moreover, within what (should he be worshipped)? There itself, within Ātmatattva. If this is so, who (should do it)? Some wise man who has a 'divine body', that is, a body which is not that of a (mortal) man. One who, by the teacher's grace, is a part of the Lineage of the Eldest. That goddess Parāparā is the Vidyā. Once one has laid hold of and taken possession of (that reality whose) nature is the act of worship, the worshipper and (the deity who is) worshipped on that path by means of (the true nature of) the rite of adoration (pūjārūpa) of the aforementioned sort, he explains, that is, tells, the desired (true) nature (of the deity and all things). [. . .] and he explains (all that) is meritorious, beautiful or that causes sin and is of many forms, auspicious and inauspicious, and has come forth from the sacred seats. [. . .].

In this way, the goddess (bhagavati) indicates by the path of the object of worship, the worshipper and the act of worship, what is beneficial and what is not and the place of the arising (of the teaching) which is, essentially, the arising of the Lineage of the Eldest explained before. This is the meaning. Thus, in this way, the conventions associated with the Lineage of the Eldest, which is the main line (of teachers), are those of the Parāparā Vidyā which is the main one there.

---

[1] deśikas [k kh: deśikaḥ] tataś ca kena kasmin sthāne kaḥ kīdṛśaḥ pūjyate [k kh: pūjyati] | ucyate | bhaviṣyatkālarūpiṇam | jyeṣṭhovallināthaṁ [k kh: jyeṣṭhāvalli -] oḍīśaṁ [k kh: auḍīśaṁ] jyeṣṭhasaṁtānavallyāṁ [k: -vallī; kh: -vatrī] pūjayet | kīdṛśaṁ siddhaṁ [k kh: siddha] tatra [kh: tatraṁ] | parāvasthaṁ tattvam | parā avasthā yasya sa tattvaparāvasthaḥ [k: saḥ tatva-] | siddhaś cāsau [kh: siddhaścasau] tattvaparāvasthaḥ siddhatattvaparāvasthaḥ [kh: sitatatva-] taṁ siddhatattvaparāvastham nis.pannavastvavasthā-rūpam | anyac ca kīdṛśam | muktidāyakaṁ mokṣadaṁ pūjanīyam iti saṁbandhaḥ | kutra [k kh: kotra] sthāna ity āśaṅkya [k: āśaktyā] krodhasthāne cintayet [k kh: cintat] | krodha-sthānaṁ [k: -sthāṁ] bhrūmadhya iti | Ibid.

The conventions are also those of Krodhamuni Durvāsas, (who is also) called Oḍīśa.[1]

The Middle Lineage

Now what concerns the Middle (Lineage) will be discussed. 'The present time . .' and so forth. Where, in which place, should the Vidyā of the present time, that is, Aparā, which is knowledge the nature of which is divine light, be worshipped? This is the connection with what has come before. Who is the wise, intelligent man? One who has obtained grace. How else is he? 'He who has entered the city of the intellect.' He has entered here into his own intellect and is said to have six faces (ṣaṇmukha). Why?

He who is such, that is, the seventh with respect to the mind (manas) which is the sixth (ṣaṣṭha) of the group of five (senses) whose nature is the intellect and is the main (component of those six) is said to be Ṣaṣṭhanātha. Once he, Ṣaṣṭhanātha had known his own Vidyā, that is the Vidyā of the goddess called Aparā, he emerged and was known correctly. By whom? By that worshipper. With whom? Along with the Self. Who is Ṣaṣṭhanātha? What does he do? He visibly reveals what is meritorious, sinful and the rest, that is, what is to be abandoned and what is to be adopted taught in the Lineage of the Eldest and contained in the sacred seats. Thus this is the descent (avatāra) of the Middle Lineage. (It) begins with Kuleśa, that is, it starts with the venerable Ciñciṇīnātha. Thus it has been explained clearly, that is, proclaimed completely.[2]

---

[1] anyac ca kasmin | tatraivātmatattve | evaṁ cet [k, kh: cit] kaḥ kaścid [kh: kaścit] buddhimān tathā divyadehaḥ [k kh: -deha] amanuṣyaḥ [k: amaṇuṣyaṁ; kh: amaṇuṣya] śarīraḥ guruprasādavaśājjyeṣṭho-vallyāntargataḥ [k, kh: -jyeṣṭhāvalyā -] | sā parāparā devī vidyā | *etena tathāvidhena prāgvyākhyātaprakāreṇa [k kh: -prakāra ] pūjārūpeṇa tanmārge pūjāpūjaka-pūjyarūpaṁ [k kh: -rūpa] gṛhītvā samālambya iṣṭaṁ rūpaṁ vadati [kh: vadani] kathayati | kīdṛśam iṣṭaṁ vadati | vimalaṁ nirmalam | anyac ca kīdṛśam | kaulavarjitam [k kh: kola-] | dehotkacastahīnam (?) | tathā sarvapuṇyaṁ ramaṇīyam pāpakarmakaṁ vā tathā bahurūpam anekākāram | kiṁ tac chubhāśubham | pīṭhasaṁbhūtam | pīṭhodbhūtam | pīṭhasthānokta-hitāhitakṛtyākṛtya ity arthaḥ [k: -kṛtyākṛtyetyarthaḥ] | vadatīti [kh: vadanīni] saṁbandhaḥ | trividham uktaṁ bhavati | tathā prāgvyākhyātajyeṣṭhauvallisaṁbhavasvarūpam utpattisthānaṁ [kh: -vyākhyātrajyeṣṭho- -sthāna; k: -sthāna] pūjyapūjakapūjāmārgeṇa [k: pūjāpūjakapūjā-] bhagavatī hitāhitaṁ darśayatīty arthaḥ | tasmāt parāparāyāḥ tatra prādhānāyāḥ [k kh: prādhānyāḥ] ity anena prakāreṇa jyeṣṭhauvallyāḥ pradhānapaṅkter [k: -paṅktir; kh: -paṁktiḥ] vṛddhakramasaṁbandhinaḥ [kh: vṛddhakramaṁ-] saṅketāḥ | oḍīśābhidhānasya [k kh: auḍīśā-] krodhamunidurvāsasaḥ ity api śaṅketāḥ [kh: saṁketāḥ] | Ibid. 174b-175a.

[2] idānīṁ madhyamasyocyate [k kh: madhyamasyocyante] | vartamāna ity [k kh: varttamānety] ādi | vartamānakāle yā sā [k kh: sva] vidyā aparā [k kh: apara] tāṁ [k kh: tā] divyajyotīrūpaṁ yad [kh: yat] jñānaṁ tannirau vā (?) kutra [k kh: kotra] sthāne pūjayed iti [kh: pūjaditi] pūrveṇa

The Lineage of the Youngest

Now the Lineage of the Youngest will be explained. As (it is said) 'the past . . . etc'. 'The past' is said to be the knowledge which is cogitation (manana) and that is said to be (Unstruck) Sound (nāda). It has past thus. Where is (that form of) time? It is said that it is there in the non-dual reality, that is, in the Abode of Birth which is devoid of duality, that is, in the place where the Bulb is located (kandasthāna) (at the base of the spine). I bring about the great arising (of the transmission there) along with the previous four Ages. Śiva, that is, Śrīnātha has entered the (four sacred seats) Oḍḍiyāṇa, Jālandhara, Pūrṇagiri and Kāmarūpa along with Umā, the goddess. The circle of sacred seats, that is, the group of four sacred seats emerges when the principle called Śiva is known. From where and why? From Kāmarūpa, that is, from the will (icchātaḥ) . . . Thus that Siddha has attained repose in knowledge. He has acquired knowledge and is famous in the world. His body has come down into the Lineage of the Youngest. Who is he? He is said to be the sun, the husband of the dawn. The other name he has assumed is Mitra and so (this Siddha) is called Mitrīśa. In this way, the adept (sādhaka) should worship the lineage (santati) which is the past time of the Lineage of the Child within the Śiva principle, in the Foundation of Birth (in the genitals), which is the place (sthāna) called Kuṇḍalī. (It is the lineage of) Mitrīśanātha who has been empowered by the Vidyā of the goddess Parā. (This is) the relationship with (the Siddha) who belongs to the Lineage of the Child. Thus the conventions of the Lineage of the Child have been declared and the three lineages have been explained.[1]

---

saṁbandhaḥ | ko [k: ka; kh: kaḥ] dhīmān buddhimān | labdha-prasādaḥ [k kh: -sādaiḥ] | anyac ca kīdṛśaḥ | dhīpure [k: dī-] praviṣṭaḥ | nijabuddhyantargataḥ atraiva ṣaṇmukhaḥ ity ucyate | kuto hetuḥ [kh: hetu] | īdṛsaḥ [k: īdṛśaṁ; kh: īdṛśa] pañcakasya manasaś ca ṣaṣṭhasya buddhirūpī pradhānarūpaḥ vyāpakaḥ saptamaḥ ṣaṣṭhanātha ity ucyate | asau ṣaṣṭhanāthaḥ svakāṁ [k kh: svakā] vidyāṁ nijām aparābhidhānāṁ devīvidyāṁ [k kh: -vidyā] jñātvā nirgataḥ samyag jñātaḥ | kena | tena pūjakena | kathaṁ sārdhataḥ [kh: sādhataḥ] | ātmanā saha | kaḥ ṣaṣṭhanāthaḥ [kh: -nātha] | kiṁ karotīti [kh: kagetīti] | jyeṣṭhauvallyoktaṁ pīṭhasaṁbhṛtaṁ puṇyapāpādikaṁ heyopādeyarūpaṁ pratyakṣeṇa darśayatīti saṁbandhaḥ | iti madhyamauvallyāvatāro 'yam [k: madhyamavallyā-; kh: madhyamāvalyā-] | kuleśādi śrīciñciṇīnāthaprabhṛtiḥ [k kh: -ti] | sphuṭaṁ vyākhyātaṁ niravaśeṣam uktam | Ibid. fl. 175a-175b.

[1] idānīṁ kaniṣṭhauvallyāḥ [k: kaṇiṣṭhovallā -; kh: kaṇiṣṭhovalyā-] svarūpaṁ bhaṇyate | yathā atītam ity ādi | atītaṁ [k kh: atīta] mananaṁ jñānam ity ucyate tad eva ca nāda ity ucyate | tathā atītam iti | kutaḥ kāla [kh: kālaḥ] ity ucyate | yathā tatra advaite dvaitarahite janmanapure kandasthāne ahaṁ pūrvacaturyugena mahantam eva [kh: pūrvvacātur-; k kh: -yugeṇāhamāhāveva] (?) udayaṁ karomīti | ojāpūkāmarūpe praviṣṭaḥ [kh: praviṣṭa] śrīnāthaḥ śivaḥ umayā saha [k kh: umāsakha] devyā saha [k: devī sahāyaḥ; kh: devī sahāya] | tattvaṁ [k

The data supplied by the Ṭīkā is summarized in the following table:

15. Table of the Lineages and Siddhas

Lineage	Siddha	Principle	Location	Triple Purity	Time	Vidyā	Pīṭha
Eldest	Oḍīśa (Krodhamuni)	Ātman	Between Eyebrows	Bindu	Future	Parā-parā	Oṁ-kāra
Middle	Ṣaṣṭha	Vidyā	Intellect	Suṣumṇā and Kuṇḍalinī	Present	Aparā	Pūrṇa-giri
Child	Mitrīśa	Śiva	Abode of Birth	Manonmanī	Past	Parā	Kāma-rūpa

The Three Sacred Seats and the Fourth

In order to accommodate four seats into three, Caryānātha who resides in Jālandhara is treated as Oḍīśa, the first Siddha in the first seat, that is, Oddiyāna. Thus the Ṭīkā continues:

> The venerable Ciñciṇīnātha, who is (also) called Caryā(nātha), is the authority in (Jālandhara), the southern seat. (When) his name is Oḍi, he is (the Siddha) called Oḍīśa. For this reason this lineage (ovallikā) is the eldest one and also because the lord (nātha) of this lineage, in (this) the first of the seats (ādyapīṭha), is the first. Thus, the first Siddha is in the (sacred seat of) OṀ, which is the first seat, and is that of the family of the Lineage of the Eldest (jyeṣṭhauvallisantāna) that bears (dhṛta) the Divine Transmission.[1] (Thus) worship begins from Oḍinātha onwards, that is, worship starts (with him) . . .
>
> 'The second one and so forth'. And at the end of that, that is, after the (the sacred seat of the) syllable OṀ, the second one has arisen, namely, the sacred seat of Pūrṇagiri. And the six-faced one (ṣaṇmukha) has arisen there and within the body. Having done so, it

---

kh: tatva] śivākhyaṁ jñātvā tataḥ pīṭhamaṇḍalaṁ pīṭhacatuṣkaṁ nirgatam | kuto [kh: kutaḥ] hetuḥ | kāmarūpāt icchātaḥ atīta ity [atītety] ādi | ato [k kh: ataḥ] jñānaviśrāntilabdho [k kh: -lavdha] jñāna-prāptaḥ [k: -prāptiḥ] sa siddhaḥ jagati viśrutaḥ khyātaḥ kanīyasauvallyā-vatāritadehaḥ [k: kanyasovallyā-] | ko 'sau [k: kosyai; kh: kausyau] | uṣāpatir [k: tūṣṇapatir -; kh: tuṣāpatiḥ] dinakara ucyate | tasya paryāyanāma [k kh: -nāmaṁ] gṛhītaṁ mitra iti [k kh: mitreti] | tena mitrīśaḥ | evaṁ bālauvallyāḥ [k kh: vālovalyāḥ] bhūtakālarūpī janmādhāre kuṇḍalyābhidhāna-sthāne śivatattve parādevīvidyāprabhāvitamitrīśanāthasya santatiḥ sādhakena [k kh: sādhake] pūjyā | bālauvalligatena saṁbandhaḥ | iti bālauvallisaṅketāḥ [k kh: vālovalli-] kathitāḥ | iti ovallitrayaṁ [k kh: auvallitrayaṁ] kathitam | Ibid. fl. 175b.

[1] See below, 453-458, concerning the way in which the basic triad evovles into a quaternity.

should be explained because it is what is called the Middle Lineage. One should always contemplate for oneself the Transmission of the Youth which is that of (the Siddha) who is in the sacred seat of Pūrṇagiri. In the same way one contemplates the first sacred seat and the Lord (nātha) (who is there) in the lineage of the transmission. Ṣaṣṭha, the name of the Siddha of that (transmission) his been explained previously. Where? In the (place where) the Middle Lineage (was discussed). This is (the explanation of) the Middle Lineage.[1]

'By means of the nature of desire (kāmarūpa) and so forth'. The venerable Śrīnātha has arisen by his own will. How is he? He is called Mitreśa. The Transmission of the Child has arisen there in Kāmarūpa. How is it? It has arisen from the eastern quarter at the command of the First Lord (ādinātha). That is said to be the Lineage of the Youngest.

At the end of that, that is, after the Lineage of the Child, (the lord has) added his own sacred seat, called Mātaṅga,[2] here in the sacred seat of the lineages. It is within the First Lord (ādinātha), that is, it is presided over by the First Lord. The one who has been referred to successively with various names such as Tūṣṇīnātha and the rest, resides here. Thus, the lineage of teachers which is of three kinds, has been explained.[3]

---

[1] śrīciñciṇīnāthaḥ caryābhidhānaḥ dakṣiṇapīṭhe adhikārī | oḍisaṁjñasamanvitaḥ [k kh: auḍi-; k: -saṁjñaḥsamanvitaḥ] sthitaḥ oḍīśābhidhāno vartate [k kh: auḍīśā-] | yatastena [kh: yataḥ tena] kāraṇena iyaṁ ovallikā [k kh: auvallikā] jyeṣṭhā yataś cāyamovallināthaḥ [kh: yataḥ ścā-] ādyapīṭhe [k kh: -pīṭha] ca ādyaḥ tasmād dhṛtadivyakramasya [k: dhṛtaḥdva-?] [k: dva-?] jyeṣṭhovallisantānasyādyapīṭhaḥ [k kh: -ṭha] .okāragataḥ ādisiddhaḥ [k kh: -ddha] | oḍināthāt prabhṛtiḥ [k kh: -ti] pūjā pravartate | arcā prārabhyate | dvitīyam ity ādi | tasya cānte [k kh: cāte] oṁkārāt [k kh: aukārāt] tadanantaraṁ dvitīyaṁ pūrṇagiripīṭhaṁ [kh: pūrṇṇa-] saṁbhūtam | tatra ca ṣaṇmukhaḥ uditaḥ tathā dehe udita [k kh: uditam] iti kṛtvā madhyamauvalliriti nirdeśāt kathayet | tasyāpi pūrṇapīṭhagatasya [kh: pūrṇṇa-] kaumārakramaṁ [kh: kaumāraṁ-] nityam eva svayaṁ cintayet | tathā kramasya santatau ādyaṁ pīṭhaṁ [k: -ṭha] tathā nāthaṁ [k kh: -tha] cintayec ceti yāvat | tasya ca siddhasya ṣaṣṭhasaṁjñā purā prāṅ nirṇītā [kh: prākanirṇṇītā] | kutra [k kh: kotra] madhyamovallyām [k: -valyam] | iti madhyamauvalliḥ | Ibid. fl. 175b-176a.

[2] Concerning this seat see intro. vol. 1, p. 100 ff..

[3] kāmarūpeṇety ādi | kāmarūpeṇa svecchayā saṁjātaḥ [k kh: saṁjñātaḥ] śrīśrīnāthaḥ [k kh: -nāthāḥ] | kīd.śaḥ [k kh: kīdṛśāḥ] | mitreśaṁjñakaḥ | tatra kāmarūpe bālakramaṁ jātam | kīdṛśam | pūrvadigbhāgāt [kh: pūrvvādigbhāgāt] samudbhavaṁ ādināthājñātaḥ [k kh: -jñātam] | sā tu kaniṣṭhauvalliḥ [k: -valli; kh: kānaṣṭhovalli] smṛtā | tasyānte bālauvallyā anantaraḥ ovallipīṭhe 'tra [k kh: auvalli-] yojitaṁ svapīṭhaṁ mātaṅgābhidhānaṁ [kh: mātaṁgā-] ādināthāntam | ādināthādhiṣṭhitam | atra kramāt saṁjñābhedena ca yaḥ [k kh: ye] tūṣṇīnāthādinā [kh: tūṣṇīśanāthādinā] upakṣiptaḥ vartata iti yāvat | evaṁ trividhagurupāramparyam [kh: trividhā-] ākhyātam | Ṭ MS K fl. 176a.

The Three Lineages and the Triple Purity

The Triple Purity consists of the three inner states within the subtle consciousness to which the three lineages correspond. According to the Ṭīkā, they are experienced in the upper, that is, the most internal part of the subtle body as the Point (bindu) between the eyebrows, which is the seat of the Command, Maṅgalā (also called Nāsā)[1] within Suṣumṇā and Manonmanī in the supreme state:

> Now in order to explain the external purification (śuddhi) of the sacred seats, their lords and the rest in accord with the three lineages (ovallitraya), the condition of their (counterparts) within the (subtle) body is described next. 'The shape of a Kadamba bud . . .' (The Point) between the eyebrows, in the location of the Command, round and full of energy (sakala), is shaped like a Kadamba bud. (It is perceived) in concentration. Most lovely, it is beautiful. It is the auspicious sacred seat called the sacred seat of the syllable OṀ and is governed by Oḍīśanātha. In what is it? (It is) in the upper circle. It is round like a wheel. The Lineage of the Eldest is located there. Who is the Lineage of the Eldest related to? It is (associated with) the venerable Vṛkṣanātha, the lineage (santāna) of Ciñciṇīnātha and the Western House. This is the meaning.[2]
>
> The consort (śakti) of the Great Tree, that is, the incarnation (avatāra) Ṣaṣṭhanātha is (the goddess) Maṅgalā. She is crooked and (resides) in the place of the six-faced Siddha namely, in Suṣumṇā, the middle channel. How is she? She is a beautiful, young virgin (kaumārī). What is meant by this is that she is skillful in doing all things (sakalakarmakaraṇa). It is for this reason that it is said that (she is) Kuṇḍalinī (nāsā) as the Middle Lineage between that of the Eldest and the Youngest and is associated with both.

---

[1] Concerning Kuṇḍalinī as 'nāsā' or 'nāsikāśakti' lit. 'the nasal energy'. See intro. vol. 1, p. 24 and Dyczkowski 1992: 175 ff..

[2] ovallitrayānusāriṇīṁ [k kh: -ṇī] pīṭhatannāthādiśuddhiṁ bāhye samākhyāya [kh: -khyāyā] idānīṁ teṣāṁ śarīrāvasthitānāṁ sthitir ākhyāte kadambagolakākāram ity ādi kadambagolakākāraṁ sakalaṁ [k kh: sakala] vartulaṁ ājñāsthāne bhruvor antare | ekāgre sundaraṁ [k kh: sundaro] ramaṇīyatarataḥ oṁkārābhidhānaṁ [k: -naḥ; kh: ḷkālābhidhānaḥ] pīṭhaṁ [k kh: pīṭha] śivaṁ [k kh: śive] oḍīśanāthādhiṣṭhitaṁ [k kh: -dhiṣṭhā] tu [k: tur] vartate [kh: varttata] | iti yāvat | kīdṛśe | ūrdhva-maṇḍale | cakravartulākārī [k: vakra- -kāri; kh: vaktravattalākāri] tatra jyeṣṭhovallir [k kh: -valli] vartate | kasya saṁbandhinī jyeṣṭhovalliḥ [k kh: jyeṣṭhau-] śrīmadvṛkṣanāthasya ciñciṇīnāthasantānasya paścimagṛhasyety arthaḥ | 1 |

Ibid. fl. 176a-176b.

'The youngest relates to Kāmarūpa'. The youngest is the Lineage of the Child. And how else is it? The meaning is that (with the Lineage of the) Child the Triple Purity (is complete) and (it is) the Transmental (beyond) Mind (manonmanī) that is within the supreme state.[1]

The following passage, drawn from the AS, is one of several we find in the texts that draw these various strands together in their own way. In the AS the paradigm is regenerated and applied to form more complex permutations with additional symbolic associations. Kuleśvarī is speaking.

> Śrīnātha and the goddess Ciñciṇī (reside in) Candrapura in Koṅkaṇa. Three forms (mūrti) (of Śrīnātha) have arisen in the three sacred seats in due order. Mitranātha is in Kāmarūpa under the rule (śāsana) of Vṛkṣanātha. He emanated the Transmission of the Child. It is the first product of the Divine (current) (divyasamudbhava). The Lineage of the Youngest One (kaṇiṣṭholī) is along with me. Mind Beyond Mind (manonmanī), the first (energy), belongs to it. (There) Vṛkṣanātha is called Mitra and (he resides in) Kāmaru, the first sacred seat.[2]
>
> Ṣaṣṭhanātha promulgated his own practice (vidhāna) in Pūrṇagiri. Along with him I am worshipped in the Kramamaṇḍala as that certain (inscrutable energy), the Equal One (samanā). And in this way the Transmission of the Youth (kramaṁ kaumāraṁ), that is, the family (santāna) of the Middle Lineage (came into being).
>
> Once the first worship of the Krama has been performed, the First Lord (ādyanātha) and (his) sacred seat abide initially in the

---

[1] maṅgalājñety ādi | tasya mahāvṛkṣasya [kh: -vṛkṣamasya] ṣaṣṭhanāthāvatārasya ṣaṇmukhasiddhāvasthāne [k kh: -sthānaṁ] madhyamanāḍyāṁ suṣumṇāyām [kh: suṣumnāyāṁ] maṅgalā kuṭilākārā śaktir ity arthaḥ | kīdṛśī | kaumārī taruṇī yuvā cety anena sakalakarmakaraṇe kuśalety ucyate | tena kāraṇena nāsā madhyamauvalliḥ [k: madhyovalliḥ] jyeṣṭhakaniṣṭhāntargatā [k: -ntargata] ubhayānusāriṇīty ucyate | 2 |

kanīyasā [k kh: kanyasā] kāmarūpetyādi | kanīyasā [k kh: kanyaso] bālauvalliḥ [k kh: vālovalli] | anyac ca kīdṛśī | triśuddhiḥ bālety arthaḥ | tathā manonmanī [k kh: manmanī] paramāvasthāgatā | iti yāvat | 3 | Ibid.

[2] śrīnāthaṁ ciñcinī devī koṅkaṇe candrapuryake ||
tasya mūrtitrayaṁ jātaṁ tripīṭheṣu anukramāt |
mitranāthaṁ kāmarūpe vṛkṣanāthasya śāsane ||
sṛṣṭaṁ bālakramaṁ tena pūrvaṁ divyasamudbhavam |
mayā sārdhaṁ kaniṣṭholī tasya ādyā [mādyaṁ] manonmanī [-nīṁ] ||
vṛkṣanāthaṁ mitrasaṁjñaṁ [-jñā] ādyapīṭhaṁ ca kāmaru [kāmaruṁ] | AS 8/63cd-66ab.

body. One should know that this is the Yoga which is both supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent).[1]

The goddess (called) the Pervasive One (vyāpinī) (resides in the sacred seat of) OṀ. The great Lord (mahāprabhu) who has arisen (jāta) in the Wheel of the Command is Caryānātha who has emanated the third (lineage). O lord of the universe, it is the Transmission of the Aged and (I am) Kālikā within (the lineage of) the Eldest Ones. O lord, that also is my knowledge and that is said to be the first sacred seat.[2]

16. Table of Lineages according to the Ambāmatasaṁhitā

Lineage	Seat	Siddha	State
Child	Kāmaru	Mitra	Mind Beyond Mind
Middle	Pūrṇagiri	Ṣaṣṭha	Equal One
Eldest	Oṁkāra	Caryā	Pervasive One

Further ahead we read:

And the Transmental at the end of (Mind Beyond Mind) (manonmanī) (the energy that begins with) the letter Ma is the mother (avvā) Kubjikā in the triple universe. O Lord of Umā, she is the Command of Vṛkṣanātha who is Ciñca (the Tamarind). Again, he is with you as (Navātman) the great divine Peak syllable. And (so) Śrīnātha, (also called) Ciñcinin, and Tuṣṇin arises at the end of the Transmental (pādukā).

And the secret teaching which is the practice (sādhana) of the three lineages has arisen (in this way). By means of the teaching of contemplative absorption (samādhi), the bliss of the Tree (Navātman) is active.

Śrīnātha has the form of Bhairava and his will is freedom. That (freedom) is Śakti (the Transmental) in the form of a key (kuñcikā)[3]

---

[1] ṣaṣṭhanāthaṁ pūrṇagiryāṁ vidhānaṁ prastutaṁ [-taḥ] svayam || tenāhaṁ samanā kācid arcitā kramamaṇḍale |
tathā kramaṁ ca kaumāraṁ santānaṁ madhyamolikam ||
ādyanāthaṁ ca pīṭhaṁ ca ādyaṁ kṛtvā kramārcanam |
vartate 'smin purā dehe yogo [yoga] jñeyaḥ [jñeyo] parāparaḥ || Ibid. 8/66cd-68.

[2] oṁkāre [-ra] vyāpinī devī ājñācakre [-cakra] mahāprabhuḥ |
caryānāthas tv ayaṁ jātas tena [jātaṁ-] sṛṣṭaṁ [yaṣṭa] tṛtīyakam ||
vṛddhakramaṁ jagannātha jyeṣṭhānte nāma kālikā |
tan [ta] me jñānaṁ punar nātha taṁ pīṭham ādyam ucyate || Ibid. 8/69-70.

[3] Acording to YKh (1) (MS G fl. 192b) 'the Transmental has the form of a key' (unmanā kuñcikākārā).

which opens the lock (of the door of the Cavity of Brahmā). Once Ciñcinī has broken through (the lower planes), she reaches the City of Brahmā at the End of the Twelve. (Then) the teaching, which is the Command of the (goddess), the Aged One (vṛddhā), comes from the teacher's mouth by the supreme Command and the universe is pervaded by Bhairava's form.[1]

The Three Lineages of the Three Lineages

In the first Age (kṛta), Śrīnātha in the form of Tūṣṇīnātha, founded the three lineages of the Eldest, Middling and the Child that were governed by Oḍḍīśanātha, Ṣaṣṭhanātha and Mitranātha, respectively.[2] Then each of these, in this order, re-established the three lineages in the corresponding three Ages. Each group of three lineages thus constitutes three sub-divisions of the lineage corresponding to that Age. These correlations can be tabulated as follows:

17. Table of the Siddhas, Seats, Lineages and Ages

Siddhanātha	Sacred Seat	Age	Lineage
Tūṣṇīnātha	Oṁkāra	Kṛta	Independent
Oḍḍīśanātha	Oḍḍiyāna	Tretā	Eldest
Ṣaṣṭhanātha	Pūrṇagiri	Dvāpara	Middling
Mitranātha	Kāmarūpa	Kali	Child

---

[1] unmanā ca makārānte kubjikāvvā jagattraye |
sā ājñā vṛkṣanāthasya ciñcākhyasya umāpate ||
divyakūṭena mahatā tvayā sārdhaṁ ca taṁ punaḥ |
śrīnāthaṁ ciñcinī tūṣṇī pādukānte ca [na] sambhavam ||
uditaṁ ca trayolīnāṁ sādhanaṁ guhyanirṇayam [gulma-] |
samādher upadeśena vṛkṣānandaḥ [vṛkṣaṁānanda] pravartate [varttate] ||
śrīnāthaṁ bhairavākāraṁ tasya icchā svatantratā |
sā śaktiḥ kuñcikākārā kuñcikodghāṭanāya ca ||
bhittvā brahmapuraṁ [-re] yāti dvādaśānte tu ciñcinī |
upadeśaṁ gurorvaktrād vṛddhājñā sā [na] parājñayā ||
vyāptir bhairavarūpeṇa ca [a] viśvasya pravartate | AS 8/80-85ab.

[2] According to the KnT (Schoterman 1982: 36)
1) The Lineage of the Eldest: Oḍiyāna – Oḍḍīśanātha
2) The Lineage of the Middle Ones: Pūrṇagiri - Ṣaṣṭhanātha
3) The Lineage of the Child: Kāmarūpa – Caryānandanātha

Although the lineages correspond to the usual seats, there is a discrepancy with respect to the usual set up in the case of Kāmarūpa. The founder of the Lineage of the Child is in most, if not all other cases, Mitranātha.

The Ṭīkā continues:

> Then again, (in what follows) will be explained how (the lineage) has come (down) threefold during the Age of Strife from Śrīnātha into the land of Koṅkaṇa in the town of Candrapura. (It is written): 'and the nine sons of Caryānātha (cakāra) . . . etc.' (The Siddha) who has authority in the Kṛta Age is called Tūṣṇīnātha. He practiced very severe spiritual discipline (mahogracaryā) (and so from) then on his name was Caryānātha. In this way, that Caryānātha founded the three lineages in the Kṛta Age, namely, (that of) Oḍīśanātha, which is the Eldest, (that of) Ṣaṣṭhanātha which is the Middling One and (that of) Mitranātha which is that of the Child. In this way Śrīnātha, called Caryānātha, made the three lineages in the Kṛta Age.[1]
>
> Then, out of these three, the eldest, called Oḍīśanātha, founded the three lineages in (the Lord's) descent (into the world that took place) in the Tretā Age. These are the three lineages of the Eldest within the lineage of the Eldest, namely, those of the Eldest, the Middle One, and the Child. When he had done this he assumed the name Caryānātha in order to induce (others to practice) discipline (caryā). Thus the three lineages in the lineage of the Eldest at the time of the descent in the Tretā Age have been explained.[2]
>
> Now the three lineages will be explained according to the sequence of the Middle Lineage. Out of the aforementioned three, the middle Nātha, called Ṣaṣṭha, made three lineages, namely, those of the Eldest, the Middle One and the Child, in the Middle Lineage. When he had done this, Ṣaṣṭhanātha assumed the name Caryānātha in order to induce (others to practice) discipline (caryā). Thus the three lineages, namely, those of the Eldest, the Middle One and Child in the Middle

---

[1] tataḥ punaḥ śrīnāthasya sakāśāt [k: sakasāt] śrīkoṅkaṇadeśe [k kh: -kuṅkaṇadeśaṁ] candrapure paṭṭane kaliyuge tridhāgatam [k: tridhagataṁ] yathā tat kathyate | cakāranavaputrāś ca [k kh: cikāranavapatrāśca] ity ādi kṛtayugādhikāriṇaṁ tūṣṇīnāthābhidhānakam [kh: tūṣṇīśanāthā-] | tena yadā mahogracaryā kṛtā tadā caryānāthābhidhānam [kh: -nāthabhidhānaṁ] | evaṁ kṛtayuge tena caryānāthena olitrayaṁ kṛtaṁ yathā oḍīśanāthaṁ jyeṣṭhaṁ ṣaṣṭhanāthaṁ madhyamam mitranāthaṁ bālam | evaṁ śrīnāthena caryānāthābhidhānena kṛtayuge ovallitrayaṁ kṛtam | Ṭ MS K fl. 178a-178b.

[2] tataḥ atra trayāṇāṁ madhyāj [kh: madhyāt] jyeṣṭhena oḍīśābhidhānena tretāyugāvatāre ovallitrayaṁ jyeṣṭhauvallitrayaṁ jyeṣṭhauvallyāṁ [k kh: -valyāṁ] jyeṣṭhamadhyamabālā [k kh: -la] yadā kṛtās [k kh: kṛtā] tadāsau oḍīśanāthasya caryānāthābhidhānam caryākaraṇahetvarthaṁ dhāritam | iti tretāyugāvatāre jyeṣṭhauvallyāṁ ovallitrayaṁ kathitam | Ibid.

Lineage at the time of the descent (of the teaching) in the Dvāpara Age has been explained.[1]

In this way, Śrīnātha, the Nātha who is the eighteenth (of the series) beginning with the Transmental, called Caryānātha, the incarnation in the Kṛta Age fashioned the three lineages. Then in the Tretā Age, the three lineages, namely, those of the Eldest, the Middle One and the Child where established in the (lineage of the) Eldest by Oḍīśanātha. In the same way, in the Dvāpara Age, Ṣaṣṭhanātha, the middle (Nātha) called Caryānātha, established three lineages, namely, those of the Eldest, the Middle One and the Child, in due order, in the Middle Lineage. In the same way, in the Age of Strife Mitranātha, called Caryānātha, established the three lineages of the Eldest, Middle One and Child, in due order, in the Lineage of the Child. [. . .][2]

The Four Siddhas and the Three Lineages

This account of how nine lineages were founded by three Siddhas in four Ages is an example of a solution of a general problem that besets the ordering of the symbolic ciphers in this system. This is the transition from a triadic model (perhaps originally adopted from an earlier system) to one based on a set of four (catuṣka).[3] One could say that the latter model is a more appropriate one for this system as it takes into account the sacred seats (pīṭha), which are a fundamental and specific feature of it. As these are projected into the corners of the goddess's Triangle and the centre cannot be left empty, the sacred seats must necessarily be at least four. The adaptation in the previous reference to the four Ages by placing the First Siddha from whom the Three Siddhas originate in the first Age has shifted down, as it were, the correspondences. Normally, Oḍḍīśanātha is the

---

[1] idānīṁ madhyamovallikrameṇa ovallitrayaṁ kathyate yathā | pūrvoktatrayāṇāṁ madhyāt madhyamanāthena ṣaṣṭhābhidhānena madhyamauvallyāṁ [k kh: -valyāṁ] ovallitrayaṁ jyeṣṭha-madhyamabālaṁ [k kh: -la] yadā tadāsau ṣaṣṭhanāthasya caryānāthābhidhānam caryākaraṇa-hetvarthaṁ tasyaivābhidhānaṁ kṛtam | iti dvāparayugāvatāre madhyamauvallyāṁ [k: vālo-valyāṁ; kh: vālovalyā] jyeṣṭhamadhyamabālauvallitrayaṁ [kh: -vāla-auvallitrayaṁ] kathitam | Ibid.

[2] evaṁ unmanādyādināthena | evaṁ unmanādyaṣṭādaśamanāthena [k kh: unmanāṣṭā-] śrīnāthena [k kh: -the] caryānāthābhidhānena kṛtayugāvatāreṇa ovallitrayaṁ kṛtam | tato 'to [k kh: tataḥ ato] jyeṣṭhe [k: madhye; kh: madhya] tretāyuge oḍīśanāthena [k: auḍīśa-; kh: auḍaśanāthena] jyeṣṭhamadhyamabālauvallitrayaṁ [k kh: -vāla-auvallitrayaṁ] kṛtam | tathā dvāpare [k: dvāpara] yuge [k kh: yugena] ṣaṣṭhanāthena caryābhidhānena madhyamena madhyamauvallyāṁ [kh: -movalyāṁ] krameṇa jyeṣṭhamadhyamabālauvallitrayaṁ [kh: -vāla-ovallitrayaṁ] kṛtam | tathā [kh: + tathā] kaliyuge mitranāthena caryābhidhānena [kh: -nana] bālauvallyāṁ [k: -lovallyā; kh: -lovalyā] krameṇa jyeṣṭhamadhyamabālauvallitrayaṁ kṛtam | Ibid. 178b-179a.

[3] KuKh 2/45.

founder of the Transmission of the Aged (vṛddhakrama, jyeṣṭhakrama), which originates in Oḍḍiyāna. Ṣaṣṭhanātha, who is linked with Pūrṇagiri is the founder of the Transmission of the Youth, which is the Middle One (yauvanakrama, madhyamakrama). Mitranātha revealed the teachings of the Transmission of the Child in Kāmarūpa. We have seen[1] that this triad is converted into a quaternary by identifying the First Siddha - Caryānātha - who gives rise to the other three with the extra one in Jālandhara.[2]

The addition of an extra Siddha requires an extra transmission to complete the set of correspondences. This is the Transmission of the Skyfarers (khecarakrama).[3] However, it does not always appear along with the other three, whereas they invariably appear together. Indeed, in one place, the worship of this transmission (krama) is said to be optional[4] thus confirming that it is an addition to the basic, original three.[5] Some Kubjikā mantras associate the Khecarakrama with Jālandhara[6] but generally, the Khecarakrama is associated with the first sacred seat, that is, Oṁkāra or Oḍḍiyāna[7] in the centre.[8] The four transmissions correspond to the four Ages. The Transmission of the Skyfarers belongs to the Kṛta Age[9] and those of the Aged, Youth and Child to the following three Ages, respectively. However, this implies that, in terms of the four seats, the Transmission of the Aged is that of Jālandhara, but because it is the first lineage, it is usually related to Oḍḍiyāna, the first seat.

At the end of chapter 57 of the KuKu where the eighteen members of the Divine Current (divyaugha)[10] are described, it is said to be the teaching (nirṇaya) concerning the Khecarakrama.[11] Elsewhere the Khecarakrama is said to be that of the Skyfarers (khecara) who move in the Void (kha).[12] It is said to consist of eighteen units[13] as does the Divine Current,[14] thus confirming their identity. The excellence of the Transmission of the Skyfarers is further illustrated by its

---

1 See above, p. 445.
2 See note to KuKh 16/91.
3 See, for example, KuKh 3/11, 11/67, 19/13, 28/109, 39/75cd-77ab, 45/47, 57/28, 105cd-106ab. The Khecarakrama figures clearly as the fourth Krama in KuKh 28/109, 39/75cd-77ab and 45/46cd-47.
4 KuKh 28/109.
5 See notes to KuKh 2/28 and 46/47cd-49ab.
6 SKh MS G, fl. 49b; also KuKh 6/190cd-191ab.
7 See KuKh 6/224-225ab.
8 khecaraṁ cādhikāraṁ tu pīṭham oṁkāranirṇayam YKh (1) 14/31cd.
9 KuKh 28/135.
10 See KuKh 2/20-26.
11 KuKh 57/28 = YKh (1) 36/29.
12 KuKh 19/13cd-14ab.
13 KuKh 39/75cd-77ab and note.
14 See 2/20-21ab and note.

association with the goddess Parā who is the highest of Kubjikā's six faces.[1] Indeed, it is said that the entire scripture of the goddess in its most extensive form speaks essentially of this, the ultimate state.[2] It is the Command in its highest form. When it is attained, liberation is achieved.[3] Indeed, it is the liberated state itself.[4]

Accordingly, the KMT posits a fourth, higher transmission which is Śāmbhava. The three transmissions correspond to the entire range of metaphysical principles, starting with Earth up to Śiva, divided into three principles (tritattva)[5] represented by three states called the 'Triple Purity' (triśuddhi) mentioned above.[6] According to the KMT, the Śāmbhava Transmission pervades these three[7] just as the Śāmbhava state pervades the sacred seats.[8] This, the fourth transmission, came to be identified with the Transmission of the Skyfarers (khecarakrama)[9] and the Divine Current (divyaugha)[10] worshipped in the Point (bindu) in the centre of the maṇḍala.

The three lineages appear in the KMT as abstract streams of energy related to the Śāmbhavakrama;[11] there is no reference to concrete Kramas associated with them. Instead we find, as we have noted already in a different context, that the three transmissions (krama) to which the visualized forms of Kubjikā are related are understood to be elevated Yogic states that correspond to the highest stages of Sound.[12] The fourth and highest state (rūpātīta), which corresponds to the [1] See note to 29/45 below.

---

[2] Ibid.
[3] 57/105cd-106ab = YKh (1) 36/108.
[4] nirvāṇaṁ khecarakramam KuKh 11/67d.
[5] See intro. vol. 1, p. 594-5.
[6] See above, p. 446.
[7] The Śāmbhava Transmission is omniscient and is in the supreme place within (immanent) Kula and (transcendent) Akula. . . . It is present in (the transmissions of) the Child, the Youth and the Aged, in the triple purity and in the three principles. KMT 17/10ab, 11ab.
[8] One should know the Śāmbhava (state) by means of the instruction (that comes) from the teacher's mouth. (It is present) in accord with the sequence (of the sacred seats) O (Oḍḍiyāna), JĀ (Jālandhara), PŪ (Pūrṇagiri) and KĀ (Kāmarūpa) in the heart (that is, in the centre), in the beginning of the right, in the left and in the navel (in the lower corner). KMT 17/8.
[9] There are numerous references to this Transmission in the KuKh. See, for example, KuKh 3/11, 11/67, 19/13, 28/109, 39/75cd-77ab, 45/47, 57/28, and 57/105cd-106ab.
[10] KuKh 2/20-26.
[11] The KMT states that the Śāmbhava Transmission is 'established in (the Transmission of) the Child, the Youth and the Aged'. See KMT 17/10-11.
[12] They are: 1) Bālakrama – Nagnakubjikā – Rūpa – Samanā 2) Kaumārakrama – Mahāntārikā – Pada – Vyāpinī 3) Vṛddhakrama – Kubjikā – Piṇḍa – Śakti. The exposition of the Śāmbhavakrama extends from verse ten to the end of chapter seventeen of the KMT which is dedicated to a description of the four states Rūpātīta and the rest in relation to the goddess Kubjikā who resides in them in four aspects as 1) Rūpātīta – Kubjinī called Kamalānanā (she is 'in the Cavity') 2) Rūpa – Barbarā (she is 'in the Point') 3) Pada – Mahāntārī and 4) Piṇḍa – Kubjeśī (KMT 17/51-52).

Transmental, is Kubjikā herself who, as the goddess Parā, is 'in the middle'.[1] This is the Śāmbhava state. Together, these four are said to be the 'tradition of the transmission of the four Siddhas' (catuḥsiddhakramāmnāya).[2] This is worshipped with 'mental flowers' and is, clearly, purely ideal.[3] We shall see in due course that, in differing ways, the succeeding lines of disciples (the Nine Nāthas and Sixteen Siddhas) also initially had a purely ideal existence but came to acquire a

---

[1] madhyasthā pararūpiṇī KMT 17/12d.

[2] KMT 17/32.

[3] According to the KMT (17/7-14):

The four O JĀ PŪ KĀ are on the left, right, in front and above, respectively. All of them abide in a pervasive state below the navel and are associated with the Siddhas. Similarly, (these four are also located in the head) in the ear, mouth, nose and above the nose. These should be worshipped here as before along with the aforementioned Flames (arci), the Siddhas and protectors. This group is in the three Transmissions and in the triple purity. This is the Śāmbhava Transmission of the omniscient one. One offers sacrifice to it with the Yoga of the Doomsday Fire from the Abyss in the supreme place, Kulākula. Endowed with universal pervasion, one should worship it with the flowers of the Command by means of the Yoga of Rūpātīta and the rest. The supreme goddess is there, her body made of maṇḍalas. She is on the head of Time. Tranquil she is the energy of (all) the energies (kalākalā), (even as she is) beyond the energies. She is Kambalī, who destroys time. Beyond the Doomsday Fire she shines brightly like a thousand suns and is Beyond Form.

The KMT continues with a description of the forms of Kubjikā in the three lineages. The commentary on these verses, reproduced in the ṢSS (26/13cd-16ab), explains that the four sacred seats are arranged on the four extremities of a cross. They are worshipped as a group in three places in the body in the three Transmissions (krama). The sacred seats are worshipped according to the Transmission of the Child (bālakrama) below the navel in the genitals. They are worshipped according to the Middle Transmission (madhyakrama) in the heart. They are worshipped in the four places of the head indicated in the text according to the Transmission of the Aged (vṛddhakrama). The ṢSS prefaces these verses with:

O dear one, Piṇḍakubjī who has arisen in the first Wheel is established in the Body (piṇḍasthā), she is called Samayā and she bestows the fruit of the Yoga of the Body (piṇḍayoga). Siddhakubjī is in the second (Wheel) in the middle of the Sequence of the Parts (padasthakrama). Vajrakubjī is in the third (Wheel). She is the Great Mother who is Established in Form (rūpasthā). Guhyakubjī is in the fourth (Wheel), established on the plane Beyond Form (rūpātīta). These (forms of the goddess) are said to reside in (the states) beginning with the Body and ending with Beyond Form. Each one (consists) of all the many (forms of) consciousness (vijñāna) and bestows (all the) fruits (of Yoga).

piṇḍakubjī samutpannā cakre ca prathame priye |
piṇḍasthā samayā khyātā piṇḍayogaphalapradā ||
siddhakubjī dvitīye tu padasthakramamadhyataḥ |
tṛtīye vajrakubjī tu rūpasthā sā mahāmbikā ||
caturthe guhyakubjī tu rūpātītapade sthitā |
piṇḍādau [k: piṁgadau] kīrtitā hy etā rūpātītāvasānagāḥ ||
vijñānānekaniḥśeṣā ekaikā phaladāyikā [k, kh: -kāḥ] | ṢSS 26/10-13ab.

concrete 'historical' form. In this case the ideal, inner form of the stream of the transmission with its three aspects developed into the Divine Current from which issue the three lineages and their transmissions. Located in the centre, it is the source of the other three thus maintaining the original triad within a quaternary.

The Śrīvidyā tradition adopted the Triangle with its sacred seats and Siddhas from the Kubjikā tradition and so the same problem arose of adjusting the three Siddhas who founded the lineages into four sacred seats. The Saṁketapaddhati, quoted by Vidyānanda in the Artharatnāvali, his commentary on the NṢA,[1] resolves the problem by placing Caryānātha in the centre. This is where the Ājñāpīṭha - the Seat of the Command - is located. Also called Śrī- or Oṁkāra- pīṭha, it is a modality (bheda) of Uḍupīṭha, that is, Oḍḍiyāna. The original couple (ādyamithuna) resides there. The Siddha is Caryānātha and his consort is Ānandaśakti. This couple reveals Mantra, Vidyā and Mudrā in each of the three seats. Mantrapīṭha is related to the other modality of Oḍḍiyāna which is the seat of Oḍḍīśa, the first Siddha of the Lineage of the Eldest (jyeṣṭhauli). Pūrṇagiri, the seat of Ṣaṣṭhanātha, the Siddha who founded the Middle Lineage, is the Vidyāpīṭha. Kāmarūpa, the seat of Mitranātha of the Lineage of the Child, is Mudrāpīṭha. The seat in the centre, reserved for the Command in its purest inner form, was revealed in the first Age (kṛtayuga). The remaining three established their lineages in the three successive Ages (yuga).[2] Vidyānanda himself, who refers to these teachers as the Divine Current, arranges the Siddhas in their seats in a different, unusual manner. Wishing to maintain Caryānātha in Uḍḍiyāna, the First Seat in the centre, Uḍḍīśanātha is shifted to Pūrṇagiri. Ṣaṣṭhiśanātha, who is normally the Siddha there, is moved to Jālandhara, which in the other account is an empty slot. The contents of the Divine Current presented in Vidyānanda's Artharatnāvali can be tabulated as follows:

18. Table of the Divine Current of the Śrīvidyā Tradition according to Vidyānanda

Sacred Seat	Siddha	Goddess
Oḍḍiyāna	Caryānātha	Tripura
Kāmarūpa	Mitrīśanātha	Kāmeśvari
Jālandhara	Ṣaṣṭhiśanātha	Vajreśvari
Pūrnagiri	Uḍḍīśanātha	Bhagamālini

The three lineages (olis) of the Śrīvidyā school are also described in the last chapter of the Saubhāgyasudhodaya by Amṛtānanda, well known as an early commentator of the YHṛ.[1] There the Divine Current (divyaugha) of the goddess Vāmakeśvarī begins with Caryānātha, an incarnation of Supreme Śiva, and his consort (śakti), who is the goddess Tripurāsundarī herself.[2] He resided in the sacred seat of Oḍyāṇa during the Kṛta Age.[3] Oḍīśa is the elder (jyeṣṭha) who founded the Lineage of the Elders (jyeṣṭhauli). He is Krodhamuni who is the leader in the Tretā Age.[4] The founder of the Middle Lineage (madhyamauli) is Ṣaṣṭhīśa, who is Skanda (Subrāhmaṇya). His body is made of sattva and his consort is Bhagamālā. He resides in the sacred seat of Śrīpūrṇaśaila.[5] Vajrīśa is the lord of the Dvāpara Age. His nature is rajas and he resides in Jālandhara.[6] It seems that no lineage is attributed to him. Mitreśa, who is Śrīkaṇṭha and the consort of Kāmeśvarī resides in Kāmarūpa and is the founder of the Lineage of the Child (bālauli). He is the lord of the Kali Age and his form is tamas.[7] The account continues with Lopamudrā who received the Vidyā from Mitranātha. She initiates the Current of the Siddhas. The fifth of these six Siddhas is Dīpakanātha and the last in line is Amṛtānanda who completes the Current of Men (mānavaugha) up to his time.[8] This data can be tabulated as follows.

[1] Unfortunately no manuscripts of the Saṁketapaddhati have been found. The following presentation is based on a passage from it quoted by Vidyānanda in his commentary on the NṢA (p. 219 ff.).

[2] See NṢA p. 220.

19. Table of the Divine Current of the Śrīvidyā Tradition
According to Amṛtānanda

Sacred Seat	Age	Siddha	Consort	Quality	Lineage
Oḍyāṇa	Kṛta	Caryānātha	Tripurā	-	-
	Tretā	Oḍīśa (Krodhamuni)	?	-	Jyeṣṭhauli
Pūrṇaśaila		Ṣaṣṭhīśa (Subrahmaṇya)	Bhagamālā	sattva	(Madhyamauli)
Jālandhara	Dvāpara	Vajrīśa	?	(rajas)	None
Kāmarūpa	Kali	Mitreśa (Śrīkaṇṭha)	Kāmeśvarī	tamas	Bālauli

Many features are common with this system and that of the Kubjikā Tantras. Indeed, there seems to be little reason to doubt that the triad of lineages (olitraya), and all that is associated with it, is drawn from the Kubjikā Tantras and, modified to fit the Śrīvidyā system, is incorporated into it. The Siddhas who founded the three lineages are the same. They reside in the triangle in the centre of

---

[1] Saubhāgyasudhodaya 6/7-12; see also NṢA p. 40, 220 and 222.
[2] NṢA p. 218a-219.
[3] Ibid. 6/5l.
[4] Ibid. 7/7-8. Cf. Ṭīkā MS K folio 175a. where Krodhamuni appears in this role.
[5] Ibid. 6/8-9ab.
[6] Ibid. 6/9cd-10ab.
[7] Ibid. 6/10cd-11.
[8] For further details, see also Vidyānanda's commentary, NṢA p. 218 ff..

Śrīcakra, the maṇḍala of the Śrīvidyā school, just as they do in the centre of the maṇḍala of the Kubjikā Tantras. Indeed, the Śrīvidyā tradition appears to acknowledge its debt to the Kubjikā Tantras and their priority by identifying their founding figures and lineages with the Divine Current with which the Kubjikā tradition is already identified in the KMT. Their derivative character in the Śrīvidyā system is evidenced by fact that comparatively little attention is paid to them, whereas they are very prominent in the Kubjikā Tantras.

It appears that this assimilation took place in the course of the early development of the Kubjikā Tantras. In the passages we have examined from the Ṭīkā, Caryānātha is portrayed in the role of the first Siddha from whom the others are derived. In the KuKh and other later sources he is the Siddha who teaches in Jālandhara, a seat that in the original triadic setup remained empty. The later Kubjikā Tantras resolved the difficulty, not without some incoherence, by attributing the three lineages to the Siddhas of the seats in the corners of the Triangle reserving the centre for the Divine Current. This arrangement was not possible in the Śrīvidyā system that chose instead in various ways to maintain Caryānātha's status as the original Siddha, as we find in the Ṭīkā and the text on which it comments but not in other Kubjikā sources, where the first Siddha appears in several forms and with various other names. It is to this original founder figure to which we now turn our attention.

The First Siddha: The Creation of the World and the Birth of Mitranātha

All Śaiva Āgamic traditions claim that their teachings were originally imparted by the deity directly to a human founder figure who transmitted them to his human disciples or indirectly, through a series of divine and legendary beings. The Kubjikā Tantras represent this founder figure as a direct incarnation of the deity, that aspect or 'part' (aṁśa) of it that assumes human form or, at least, a mythical identity. He is portrayed as a solitary, liberated renouncer.[1] More specifically the Tantras present him as a fully accomplished – Siddha - Yogi, magician and ritual expert at one with the Deity. Moreover, several sources emphasis that he is a Brahmin. He and the founders of the various lineages as well as their developments are portrayed as periodically roaming around and traveling on pilgrimage to the sacred sites, meditating in caves and cremation grounds and

[1] Dumont points out that this is generally true in India:

> Practically all the sects have been founded by sannyāsīs and the greater part include, apart from worldly adherents, a sannyāsī order which constitutes the nucleus of a sect. The link between both sides is provided by the ancient institution of the spiritual master or guru. Instead of the renouncer alone having his guru, he serves in his turn as guru to whoever he wishes. The institution is thus most remarkably enlarged or democratised. Dumont 1965: 58, quoted by Tambiah (1982: 302).

performing rituals on mountain peaks and in other solitary places. They are also engaged in spreading the teachings by debate and, when required, by the display of their spiritual powers, which makes them attractive to kings and potentates.

In accord with the method commonly applied in these texts of identifying people and places with metaphysical entities, the teacher's pre-eminent status is emphasized by identifying him in various ways with ultimate reality itself, which is presented both abstractly and as the deity. Such transpositions and identifications also serve to link the myths and metaphysical conceptions of the various traditions of the Kubjikā Tantras and other schools. In this way the teachings receive support not only from their ontological and soteriological ground but also from the prestige and authority of earlier traditions. Moreover, in this way historical events serve as the nucleus of mythological ones and as symbolic models for the activity of absolute reality. Thus the texts change their perspective with ease from mythical history, couched in cosmological conceptions, to a quasi-historical, temporal narrative.

The figure of the First Teacher - Ādinātha - is no less fundamental than that of the god. In the course of the unfolding of the Kubjikā tradition, he has assumed several names. Behind these names we discern the influence of several traditions, each with their own legends and myths echoing in their own way one another and taking over in varying degrees and in various ways strands from one another, which are woven together to make a larger, richer pattern. As we go through the legends of the origins of the First Teacher and the founding of the lineages of the Kubjikā Tantras, we will see that he is an aggregate of a number of personas. At times, this multiplicity of identities is confusing. However, this is so only if we forget that whatever be the names of the First Teacher, even if diverse hagiographies are associated with them, they are all essentially names and forms of Bhairava. Siddhanātha - the Accomplished Lord - is the generic name for all accomplished teachers of the Kubjikā school[1] especially the founders who are most directly identified with Bhairava, the First Nātha. Thus the Tantra enjoins that:

> (Bhairava) is the First Lord, the southern, northern and the middle one, of the three lineages. This is the descent (into the world) of Siddhanātha. One should worship one's own (Siddhanātha according to one's lineage).[2]

---

[1] Cf. ṢSS 3/90.

[2] ādināthaṁ trayolīnāṁ dakṣiṇottaramadhyamam ||
siddhanāthāvatāro 'yaṁ pūjanīyaṁ svakaṁ svakam | YKh (2) 17/5cd-6a. Concerning the generic name 'Siddhanātha' for all the founders of lineages and the First Teacher, see note 38 to KuKh 6/34.

The CMSS opens with the following verse praising Siddhanātha. He is portrayed in his deepest metaphysical identity as the original propagator of the teachings on the Island of the Moon. According to the KMT, this is where the goddess received the grace that comes from the Śāmbhava state[1] and with it the teachings. The CMSS implies that the goddess received this from Siddhanātha. Awakened by him, the goddess, who is inwardly Kuṇḍalinī, pierces through all the world systems above and below. Thus although Siddhanātha is said to be the first propagator of the teachings, the goddess remains the original source of the teachings. It is her presence within the god as Kuṇḍalinī that makes him Siddhanātha:

> The supremely pure Siddhanātha, who is all things, resides in the womb in the calyx of the lotus of the consciousness of the divine Sun. He brought down onto the Island of the Moon in the middle of the great ocean the supreme light of the consciousness of Ciñciṇī. I salute the venerable Kubjikā (kukārā) of the tradition of the Western Transmission (paścimakrama) who has emerged from the midst of that, piercing through the great Kula, within the worlds in the sky of the divine firmament, devouring (all things from) within the cavity of the circle of the lower worlds.[2]

Several names are given to the First Nātha. Although some of these names are freely interchangeable, they are not all simply names. Each is the name of a First Siddha, who has his own specific identity, although he may possess more than one. The Tantra orders them into a set of nine by identifying them with the letters of Navātman, the sonic form of Bhairava, the one Teacher. We read:

> The one called Kucandraśekhara who, very powerful, is the bearer of the Command, is Śrīnātha, (he is also the) one called Mitranātha, Śrīkaṇṭha, Tūṣṇī(nātha), Ṣaṣṭha(nātha), Oḍīśācārya, the one called Sadā(śiva) (Sadākhya) and the great Piṅgala. The Lord (nātha) assumed (these) nine names by gazing on (Navātman), the Tamarind Tree. (Thus) the nine-fold principle, which is the house of the world and the abode of the gods, has been explained. The gods he > commands by name and by their causal terms (karaṇasaṁjñā) will come into being in the phenomenal world. They will come into being in the Deccan.[1]

[1] KuKh 3/162-4ab.

[2] divyārkabodhakamalodaragarbhasaṁsthaṁ viśvātmakaṁ paramanirmala-siddhanātham | yenāvatāritamahārṇavamadhyacandradvīpāntare [k, kh: -candraḥdvīpāntara; g: candradvīpāntara] paramaciñcinicitprakāśam || tanmadhyanirgatamahākulavedhayantīṁ [k, kh, g: -vedhayanti] divyāntarikṣagaganāntarabhūtaleṣu | *pātālacakravivarāntaragrāhayantīṁ [k, kh: grāha * ntīṁ; g: -grāhantī] namāmi [k, kh, g: namāpamiścima] paścimakramānvayaśrīkukārām [g: -kujārām]* || CMSS 1/1-2.

These nine are all the First Nātha. Each is an emanation of one of the units of Navātman and is, at the same time, the whole of it. Thus though they are all essentially the same, each has his own identity and character. Kucandraśekhara sits next to the goddess as her consort. Śrīnātha is Bhairava who, engaged in the dialogue with the goddess, generates the Tantra that records it. As Śrīkaṇṭha and Sadāśiva, he is identified with Śiva from whom originate the Śaiva scriptures and all the others. Piṅgala is one of the Five Siddhas whose form Bhairava assumes initially. Mitranātha, Ṣaṣṭha and Oḍīśācārya, each the First Teacher in their own right, are also the Siddhas of the three seats and lineages who are the disciples of the First Teacher. Some names are derived from the associations and the deeds of the god incarnate as the first teacher. As the first Siddha, he is also called Tūṣṇīnātha[2] - the Silent Lord - or by the synonym Maunīnātha[3] because he observed a vow of silence. Similarly, he was called Caryānātha because he applied himself to Kaula practice (caryā). He is Vṛkṣanātha or Ciñciṇīnātha (Ciñciṇīśa) because of his association with the Tamarind Tree. Finally we notice once again the constant reference to the Deccan or Koṅkaṇa whenever the First Teacher and his immediate disciples are mentioned in some way in the MBT, which we shall discuss further ahead.

The first of these First Teachers to be mentioned in the Kubjikā Tantras is Mitranātha, otherwise called Mitradeva or just Mitra. This is how he appears in the KMT. Bhairava looks for the goddess in his quest for the Command. He comes in friendship (mitratva)[4] and it is for the sake of this friendship that he petitions the goddess to give it to him[5] when she emerges from the Liṅga.[6] The vision of the goddess appearing out of the Liṅga imparts the empowerment he seeks by virtue of which Bhairava becomes fully accomplished.[7] Thus the goddess accepts him as a friend[8] and so, as the KuKh says: 'this Siddhanātha is known by the name Mitra' - which means 'friend'. Upon receiving the goddess's grace: 'he acquired the name (saṁketa) 'Mitra' and was then Bhairava of the divine Command. He was freed from the fetters of Karma and the Kaula Command was

---

[1] KuKh 31/93cd-94ab.
[2] See below and KuKh 3/1.
[3] See KuKh chapter 46.
[4] KuKh 3/21; 4/50cd-1ab.
[5] KMT 2/17-19.
[6] KuKh 4/48cd-50ab; ŚM 2/139cd-141ab; 147cd-8ab; YKh (2) 16/197, 231.
[7] See, for example, KuKh 5/30ff..
[8] KuKh 4/50cd-1ab, 5/37.

set into operation.'[1] This is how the goddess calls the god[2] and he is known by this name in the world.[3] It is to Mitra - her friend - that the goddess consigns the scripture along with Command.[4]

Although Bhairava says of himself, after receiving the goddess's initiation, that he is the first Siddha (ādyasiddha) and that his name is Mitra,[5] he previously declared that he had transmitted the teachings to the goddess in the past just as she had transmitted them to him. Bhairava is initiated by the emergence of the goddess out of the Liṅga - the formless god - followed by her penetration into him - the god with form. Thus when she is present within Bhairava he is empowered to be Mitranātha the First Teacher:

> She who, having contracted (her limbs), has entered into (the body) is thus said to be Kubjikā (kukārā). O mistress of the God of the gods! She whose form is Sound abides (thus) patiently. She is said to be the supreme goddess of Mitranātha when quitting (the Liṅga). The god always (feels) friendship (maitrībhāva) (for the goddess) and she is in (his) body. Then he is called Mitra, the great manifestation (mahodaya) of the Siddhas.[6]

The goddess is not just within the god, he is also inside her. In this modality she is, in a way, his mother who generates him as the First Siddha and teacher. The KRU presents an extensive and complex account of how the First Siddha, as Mitranātha and then Vṛkṣanātha, was born from her. The next few pages are dedicated to this rich and interesting myth.

---

[1] labhate mitrasaṁketaṁ [k, kh: -tā] divyājñābhairavas tadā |
muktas tu karmapāśais tu kaulājñā ca pravartitā || YKh (2) 16/229.

[2] KuKh 5/57cd-58ab, 61cd-62.

[3] KuKh 5/37.

[4] The goddess promises the god in the ŚM: O sinless one, I will give you the Command on the very beautiful Island of the Moon. On this path (traced by) the lineage of Siddhas, you will be Mitranātha.

candradvīpe [g: -dvīpa] mahāramye [g: -ramyaṁ] ājñāṁ dāsyāmi te 'nagha [kh: naghe] || siddhasantānamārge 'smin mitranātho bhaviṣyasi | ŚM 2/147cd-148ab.

[5] KuKh 5/37.

[6] ākuñcya [g: argaṁ ca] praviśed [k: praviśe] yā tu kukārā tena [k: kukārāstena; kh, g, ṅ: kukārāntena] sā smṛtā [g: sṛtā] ||
sthitā sā devadeveśi [kh: deve devesi; ṅ: caiva deveśi] nādarūpā kṣamāśritā |
niṣkāse [g: nikāśa] paramā [gh: paramāṁ] devī [kh g ṅ: devi] mitranāthasya ucyate ||
maitrībhāvaṁ [k: -bhāve; kh: svairībhāve; ṅ: ?m] sadā deve [g: devi] dehe [kh g: dvehe; ṅ: dvede] sā hi [k, kh, g, ṅ: saha] samāśritā [k, ṅ: samāśṛtām] |
tadāsau mitranāmākhyaṁ [gh: ?m; ṅ: mitranārthasyakhyaṁ(?)] siddhānāṁ ca mahodayam ||
KuKauM 2/161cd-163.

The teachings descend into the world along the same ladder by which the creative energy that emanates from the highest levels of godhead descends into manifestation. The interface between the two extremities of this process, the transcendental and the immanent, is man. Created by the flow of energy that moves between these polarities, the psycho-physical and vital complex which constitutes man's being in the world, serves to mediate between the two. Man's knowledge of this process is therefore knowledge of himself as the dynamic matrix through which transcendental Being manifests as the world. In its outer form this matrix is the vital and psycho-physical complex of the body. Its inner aspect is the network of mantras. The configuration of mantras is the archetype and template of the former and its immediate cause. Both together constitute the maṇḍala. The outer aspect is the configuration of the maṇḍala. The inner consists of the mantras that vivify it and actualize it as the body and the world within which embodied consciousness resides. Knowledge of the sequence of mantras and their configuration is thus knowledge of all that is manifested through them. This knowledge is not that of an abstract absolute Being. It is knowledge of the oneness of the processes and their phases that interact as a dynamic complex system that extends down from its source and spreads out through all of manifestation. The descent and spread of the teachings takes place in parallel with this process as the accompanying recognition of its essential nature and application in practice. The attainment of this knowledge is the accomplishment that fulfils the ultimate reason for this descent into manifestation on the part of transcendental being which thus comes to know itself in its immanent manifestation.

Situated at the supreme apex of this process of descent into manifestation, transcendental being is, in a sense, sustained by its manifestation. The perspective of this concrete holistic view of oneness thus reverses that of the abstract monism of those schools like Advaita Vedānta that understand absolute oneness to be the real foundation of an illusory multiplicity. This is because reality is viewed as the conjunction and interrelation of opposites. This amounts to the theological proposition, which is shared in one form or another by all theistic schools of Hinduism, namely, that there is a unity in distinction between the deity and its power.

The energy of this personal absolute is its free will which is the subtle exertion (iṣadyatana) it applies to impel manifestation. As long as this remains within Deity, no creation takes place. It remains hidden, as it were, in its transcendence. The goddess who embodies the god's Divine Will is Mahāmāyā. She emerges from inner union within the god and unites with him externally to generate the world. The urge that impells this exteriorization is the desire that develops within the god to know himself. The urge to self-realisation in this case does not bring about an end of the world of appearances, on the contrary, it impells creation. The same process by which the world is created generates the mantras and *maṇḍala*s through which the deity is worshipped and hence known by the worshipper who, one with the deity, thus comes to know itself. Thus, the goddess, who is the model of the perfect devotee, is engaged in worship and union with the god she worships, and the teacher and the taught become one.

The two aspects of this process - cosmogonic and soteriological - are intimately related. The First Siddha, and with him the teachings, are born from the same seed from which the universe is generated, as we shall see in the following two passages from the Kularatnoddyota. Significantly, the first, which narrates the origin of the world, is near the beginning of the Kularatnoddyota, setting the stage for the teachings. When the goddess issues out of the Liṅga or the god's body the world is created by the union that takes place between the god and the goddess in the act of adoration. Then, even though Kubjikā is the main deity of the Kubjikā Tantras, she is the god's attendant as befits a pious Hindu wife. However, although she assumes the role of a wife, the universe is generated from them by means of a union that is necessarily incestuous:[1]

> The Will, inherent in the essential nature of the transcendent, the imperceptible, supreme and supremely blissful Lord, shone forth (babhau). God, aroused by his own will, fashioned a supreme body (vapu) (for himself). That (body) possessed every limb and was endowed with the previously (stated) attributes (of deity). Shining like billions of moons, it (was) an immense and marvellous mass of energy. The great lord, the venerable Kubjeśa, accompanied by the encompassing attendants (āvaraṇa) of the Śrīkrama (the tradition of the goddess Kubjikā), sat on the seat of the Wheel of Knowledge, adorned with the garland of Principles of Existence (tattva). The Lord of the gods, whose nature is beyond conception contemplated his own imperishable, and sacred (bhāvita) nature, (the Self) of the venerable Wheel of Bliss.

---

[1] The god declares in the Hymn to Māyā:

O you who are within me! Supreme One! Māyā! My Śivā! My Sarasvatī! O innermost recess of my soul! You are my mother and you are my wife! KuKh 26/79.

Compare this relationship with the one Kālī - the goddess of Time - has with her consort, Bhairava Mahākāla (the Great Time). Bhairava represents the vital breath (prāṇa). Its movement impels the motion of the mind and, with it, the flux of time. Kālī is the divine consciousness who, intent on consuming the energies of manifestation that arise out of her own nature, absorbs the vital breath and with it time into her eternal nature (MP (1) p. 7). Thus, far from being the god's pious bashful attendant, she devours him! When we couple this perception of the goddess with Rāmakṛṣṇa's vision of the divine mother Kālī devouring the children to whom she has just given birth, the reversal of perspective is complete.

Free of objectivity and residing in his own foundation (ādhāra), (he contemplated himself) in order to fashion the wheel called (the Wheel of) Bliss. Thus, O fair lady, as he contemplated himself, billions of aeons passed for (the god who) abides in the aloof reality (kaivalyārtha) (of transcendence). Then, the benefactor of the universe, for the benefit of (his) attendants (praticāraka) conceived the thought which is supreme Nirvāṇa, namely: "Who is our attendant?"[1]

Abiding thus for a moment, he applied (his) mind (manas) to his own foundation (svādhiṣṭhāna).[2] (Thus) he aroused (his) supreme power whose form was coiled. Fire came forth by the left hand path in the Sky, which is both supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent). (Thus) the Supreme Lord, who is the supreme (reality), emanated the supreme goddess. O beloved, that goddess was

---

[1] atītasyāprameyasya [k: atītasya-] parasya parameṣṭhinaḥ |
paramānandayuktasya icchā svābhāvakī babhau || svecchayā kṣubhito [kh: kuṁbhito] devaḥ [k kh: deva] sa cakāra [k: sa cakārā; kh: saṁkānā] paraṁ vapuḥ | tac ca pūrvaguṇair [kh: pūrvasturṇair] yuktaṁ]
samagrāvayavānvitaṁ [k: samamrā-; kh: samamrāvayavānvitaṁḥ] ||
candrakoṭyarbudābhāsaṁ [kh: candrakopya-] tejorāśi [kh: tejośaṁsi-] mahādbhutaṁ |
jñānacakrāsanāsīnaṁ [kh: -sanāsīna] tattvamālāvibhūṣitaṁ ||
śrīkramāvaraṇopetaṁ [k: -caraṇopetaṁ; kh: -caraṇopeta] śrīkujeśaṁ mahāprabhuṁ |
śrīmadānandacakrasya bhāvitātmānamavyayaṁ [kh: savitātmanamavyayaṁ] ||
acintyātmā sa [k: acintayatsa; kh: acintayatma] deveśaḥ [k: deveśā; kh: deveśau] cakram ānandasaṁjñakam |
kartuṁ [k: kartaṁ; kh: karta] devo 'prameyātmā [k kh: devya prameyātmā] svakīyādhāra-saṁsthitaḥ ||
evam acintayat svayaṁ [k kh: evaṁ cintaya tastasye] kalpakoṭyarbudāni [kh: asya kalpakoṭya-] ca |
atītāni varārohe kaivalyārthasthitasya [kh: kaivalyārthai-] ca ||
athākaroj jagaddhātā praticārakahetave [kh: -hetava] |
cintāṁ [k kh: cintā] paramanirvāṇaṁ [k kh: -nirvāṇaḥ] ko 'smākaṁ praticārakaḥ || KRU 1/53-59.

[2] One of the major contributions that the Kubjikā cult has made to Śākta Tantrism as a whole is the well know system of Six Wheels (ṣaṭcakra) visualized in the body as stations of the ascent of Kuṇḍalinī. Kubjikā is Kuṇḍalinī bent over in the form of a sleeping snake coiled in the first of these Wheels called mulādhāra - the Root Foundation. In this case, the energy within the body of Kujeśa is not in this Wheel, which is located in the base of the genitals, but in the second Wheel along, namely, Svādhiṣṭhāna - the Wheel of the Self-supported. In this context, the collocation of this energy here is appropriate. The Wheel of the Self-supported is the place where the penis makes contact with the cervix at the base of the womb during sexual intercourse. Thus, this Wheel is the centre of the first point of contact in the union of Śiva and Śakti from which the emission (visarga) that generates the universe originates.

But although this makes sense, given the prestige of the Six Wheel system in the Kubjikā Tantras, which is at the very core of the cult, one wonders at the anomalous role of this Wheel here. Is it a hangover from an earlier formulation of the Six Wheels when there were only five?

> Mahāmāyā, endowed with his (own divine) attributes. Endowed with the attributes of the Supreme Lord, she was delighted with supreme bliss.
>
> "My Wheel called Bliss," (said the Lord) "is fashioned by means of both of them." (Thus) created, the supremely divine (goddess) was endowed with the twenty-five qualities (of the principles of existence) and, residing in the twenty-five principles of existence, the Supreme Goddess was beautiful.
>
> Energized by the (mantras called the) Five Jewels, enveloped by the seven bodily constituents (dhātu), her nature the wine (sudhā) (that inebriates her consort) and divine, she is coloured with the colour of the principles of existence (tattva). That goddess is (the god's) own will, Bhairavī, (who is in the company) of the God of the gods.[1]

The text goes on to say that the god fashioned a sacrificial vessel (arghapātra) in the form of a skull bowl filled with the energy of the goddess in the form of wine (surā) with which he offered libations to himself and his attendants. The goddess is surprised by how the god can worship himself in this way through his own blissful power represented by the wine. She wants to know more about this internal rite of adoration through which the universe is created. Thus Bhairava, here called Śrīnātha, continues:

> The goddess was established with devotion in the worship of the Beginningless Liturgy (anādikrama). Both of them were seated there and, in the union (melaka) of supreme bliss, the venerable Lord of Kula instituted (their) marriage (pāṇigrahaṇa).

---

[1]iti sthitvā muhūrtaṁ [k: -rthaṁ; kh: mudruttaṁ] vai [k: se; kh: me] svādhiṣṭhāne [kh: -sthāne] mano dadhau । kṣobhayet [k kh: -yat] paramāṁ [kh: paramā] śaktiṁ kuṇḍalākāravigrahām [k kh: -kālavigrahāṁ] ॥ niṣkrāmya vāmamārgeṇa bahirvyomni [kh: vahi-] parāpare [kh: -para] । sṛṣṭavān [k: -vāt] paramāṁ devīṁ [kh: devī] sa paraḥ [k kh: parāṁ] parameśvaraḥ ॥ sā ca devī mahāmāyā priye taddharmadharmiṇī । parameśaguṇair yuktā paramānandananditā ॥ tābhyāṁ taṁ tu mamārabdaṁ cakram ānandasaṁjñakam । nirmitā paramā divyā pañcaviṁśaguṇairyutā ॥ pañcaviṁśatitattvasthā [kh: -tatvaiśca] śobhitā [k kh: śobhitāṁ] parameśvarī [k kh: -rīṁ] । pañcaratnakṛrtāṭopā saptadhātuparicchadā [k kh: -dāṁ] ॥ sudhāsvarūpiṇī [k kh: sudhāturūpiṇī] divyā [k kh: divyāṁ] tattvarāgānurañjitā [k kh: -tāṁ] । svakīyecchā ca [k kh: svakīyaśira] sā [k kh: so] devī [k kh: devi] devadevena [kh: bhedavadevana] bhairavī [k kh: bhairavi] ॥ KRU 1/60-65.

> Now the goddess was troubled (āśaṅkitā) and her body was bent with shyness (lajja).[1] (Thus her) form as the 'crooked one' (kubjikā) came into being with (its) subtle, crooked limp (kiñcitkhañja-gatiryaga)[2] but even then, the lord, blooming with joy, took the hand of the goddess and sat her on his lap.
>
> That is said to be the union of Śiva and Śakti. There, O goddess, they are also churned together as befits (saṁparipadyataḥ) (the act of union). There, O dear one, the male seed and menses (rajas), the vital essence (dhātu) (of the god and the goddess) are mixed together.
>
> The great and immortal Drop (mahābindu) originated there, O fair faced one, energized and shining, (it shone with the) light of tens of millions of suns.[3]

The Tantra goes on to describe how the Drop bursts apart and the universe is generated from it, step by step in a series of emanations that range down to the physical world and its inhabitants. This same Drop, as we shall see, is the seed from which the first Siddha is born. The following passage[4] comes towards the end of the same Tantra as a conclusion which describes the teachings and their manifestation in the world as the activity of the goddess who, in her active, immanent aspect contains both polarities of Śiva (Akula) and Śakti (Kula) and so is equally both, as the god is in his passive, transcendental aspect.[5]

---

[1] See intro. vol. 1, p. 46.

[2] The goddess, identified, as we have already noted, with Kuṇḍalinī, is called the Lady with a Limp (Khañjinī) when she moves up through the Wheels of the god's body, halting for a moment as she pierces through each one.

[3] anādikramapūjāyāṁ bhaktyā devī [k kh: devi] niveśitā ||
tābhyāṁ tatropaviṣṭābhyāṁ paramānandamelake [kh: -melakaṁ] |
pāṇigrahaṇasaṁyogaṁ [kh: pānigrahana-] kṛtavān śrīkuleśvaraḥ ||
athaivāśaṅkitā [kh: āvāṁ-] devī lajjayākuñcitātanuḥ [kh: natuḥ] |
saṁjātaṁ kubjikārūpaṁ kiñcitkhañjagatiryagam [k: khañjāgatiyutaṁ; kh: khaṁjāgatiryyagaṁ] ||
tathāpi tena devena harṣautphullayutena tu |
sā devī gṛhya hastaṁ [k kh: haste] tu svotsaṅge sanniveśitā [k kh: ma-] ||
śivaśaktisamāyogaḥ [kh: -yogaṁ] sa eva parikīrtitaḥ |
tatrāpi mathanaṁ devi tayoḥ saṁparipadyataḥ ||
tatra bījarajodhātoḥ [kh: dhāto] saṁmiśritvaṁ bhavet [k: saṁmiśritvabhavat; kh: sadyiśretvabhava] priye |
tatrotpanno [kh: tatrojñā] mahābindur amṛto yo [kh: yā] varānane ||
dīptivān bhāsvaraś [kh: dīptivārtāsvaraś] caiva sūryakoṭisamaprabhaḥ [k kh: -prabhuḥ] |
KRU 1/73cd-79ab.

[4] KRU 13/3-7ab.

[5] Abhinavagupta similarly describes the transformation of Śiva and Śakti into one another as the dynamic interaction between immanence and transcendence through which the world is created and destroyed. The cycles of creation and destruction, through which experience and the world is transformed every moment, is understood to be a single, two-fold process whereby transcendental

The account of the origin of the first Siddha is more detailed and begins at an earlier stage in the unfolding of this process, one prior to the formation of the god's divine body. As before, the goddess that emerges from the god's body unites with him. This time, however, the product of this union is not the manifest world but the first Siddha, Mitranātha. This is the first sacrificial union (ādiyāga) between the god and the goddess. It is the divine archetype of the analogous, microcosmic coupling of the accomplished adept – Siddha, and his consort - Śakti. The result of this spiritual union is a spiritual son. The god in this way generates himself. He is both father and son and the goddess is both mother and consort. The cycle is thus closed and self-perpetuating. In this way although this union is sexual, the goddess retains her original virginity (kaumāritva), setting it aside temporarily to resume it again to make this cycle possible. Thus, in the same way that the world is created, the lineage of enlightened adepts is founded. Once created in this way, her energy courses through the objective universe, and the mantras and beings that are its inner, spiritual and causal counterparts, by her inner coupling with them. Similarly, it is transmitted through the lineage of her accomplished adepts by her union with them.

---

oneness becomes immanent multiplicity at the same moment as immanence becomes transcendence. This transformation of Akula into Kula and vice versa is the universal rhythm of consciousness (sāmānyaspanda). Thus the two polarities contain one another and are embodied concretely in the partners engaged in the Kaula rite of union. They fuse together and generate a new cosmic order through the dynamism of the emission (visarga) of the seed (bindu) that flows between them:

Thus, this couple where all differentiated awareness progressively ceases is consciousness itself, the union of which is the emission (visarga) of consciousness, the stable abode, the Absolute (anuttara), of the nature of noble cosmic Bliss. Consisting of both of them, it is the Supreme Kaula (reality) which is not just tranquil repose (śānta) (in the transcendent), nor just emergent (udita) (immanence) but the cause of the birth (of both tranquil transcendence and emergent immanence). One who desires the unconditioned plane being (pada) should always make that consciousness one with himself. In reality, it is the consciousness of the Goddess that is unconditioned.

The fortunate one should enter into the unconditioned Abode of Emission by carefully attending to the coming into being and falling away (vilaya) of the states of repose and emergence (which for want of better words are said to be) `like this' and 'like that'. These two forms, tranquil and emergent arise simultaneously in the power and the power-holder. The emergent form passes from one abode to the other; the tranquil abides within it self. In reality both of them are also (each a) couple (yāmala). In this way the emergent is (also) the tranquil (state). Even though the reflective awareness of these two forms, tranquil and emergent, belongs equally to both, it is power (śakti), not its possessor, who nourishes the emanation (sṛṣṭi) proper (to its own nature). This is why power (śakti) is said in the scriptures to be the central abode (which is in a state of perpetual) expansion. Therefore, the master should transmit the (esoteric meaning) of Kula (doctrine) correctly to her (alone) and through her, in the aforementioned way, to men.

TĀ 29/115cd-123ab.

Thus once the goddess's body made of the energies of the vital breath, Speech, mantras and the Kramas has been formed and is ready for sacred union, the god invites her to unite with him and produce their divine offspring, saying:

> O divine goddess, you have come forth here from the supreme plane (where) union (yoga) (takes place) with the limbs of my body and (you) are my equal. (You are) the innate (sahaja) and supreme energy (that has emerged from pure) consciousness which is called the Pervasive One (vyāpinī) and is the bliss of contemplation. (So now) after that (has taken place), O venerable Kujā, I am ready (prapanna) to practice the sacrifice of the sequence of the Wheel of Bliss. You were present next (to me) on the plane of the practice of the Rule (samayavidhipada) (as the virgin) Kumārī who is the first form (of emanation) (ādyarūpā). (Now unite with me)."[1]
>
> Then having taken the sacrificial vessel (arghapātra) and established a mood of loving devotion (kṛtapraṇayagati), (the god said). "I am intent (niviṣṭa) on worshipping you. O divine one, (I who am) respected and called 'Supreme' in the Kula rite (vidhi) should worship you. Having worshipped the entire Wheel, endowed with supreme bliss, (I am) seated in the middle of it. O goddess whose nature is divine bliss, your nature possesses (divine) qualities similar to my own.
>
> Having seen and conceived (kalpayitvā) (my) own Śakti and become blissful (ānaditātmā) (thereby), (my) radiance (ruci), consisting of (both) Kula and Akula, is the fire offering of divine energy (divyatejas) which is Akula that has gone forth (projected out from the) Bliss (of our union) along the Path of the Void (vyomamārga). (Thus) Mitranātha, whose qualities resemble mine, and is (my) incarnation (aṁśa), attained birth (here) below. His Śakti is beyond measure (aprameyā) and intent on (the practice of) vows

---

[1] dvīpāmnāye [k kh g: dīpā; kh g: -mnāya] bhramitvā [kh: tramitvā] vividhakulakalā [k kh: -kulā] ceṣṭayā kalpanābhiḥ
kṛtvā tatrādhikāraṁ [g: -ra] akulakulabhavaṁ sūkṣmarūpeṇa devi | paścād ādhāracakrād uparicaragate [k kh g: -cayagate] divyacakre praviṣṭā [kh: paviṣṭā] tasmād icchāsvarūpā varayuvatitanus tejasābhāsayantī || niṣkrāntā devi divye tvam iha parapadān maccharīrāṅgayogāt [k kh: -matsarīrā-; g: parapadānmaccharīrāṁgayogāt] mattulyā [kh: mastulyā] vyāpakākhyāt [kh: vyāpapakākhyot] sahajaparakalā [k: sahajaparā-; kh: sahaparā-] bhāvanānandabodhāt [kh: -bodhā; g: -ndavodhāt] | paścād ānandacakrakramayajanavidhau śrīkuje 'haṁ prapannaḥ pārśve saṁsthā [g: sthaṁsthā] tvam āsīt samayavidhipade yādyarūpā [k: yājya-] kumārī ||
KRU 13/11-12.

> (vrata) and discipline (niyama), her body is born of the (primal, universal) cause.[1]

By seeing and creative contemplation (kalpanā), the god unites with the goddess. This union makes the goddess blissful, just as her inner presence within the god induces the same bliss within him. The two, Akula and Kula - Śiva and Śakti - are the combined seeds of this union offered to the inner fire in the centre of the maṇḍala. Accepted and energized by the fire, which is both the goddess Saṁvartā and the god Bhairava, the combined seed travels down the central channel of Suṣumṇā, which the Path of the Void. After this brief gestation Mitranātha, an incarnation of Akula, is born.

In the earlier myth narrated in the KMT, the goddess is sent away by the god and assumes the form of a Liṅga. However, in this one the human Mitranātha does not worship the goddess in her unmanifest form as a Liṅga, as the god does. He worships her in the form of a female ascetic who is 'intent on the observance of vows'. Even so, the goddess retains her erotic, passionate character. However, it is not revealed when she is manifest, as happens in the earlier myth, but when she assumes the form of a Liṅga. There she enjoys the bliss of union by herself. She does not need to appear out of the Liṅga to unite with the god but is content to maintain an externally chaste alter ego which functions as the complimentary polarity of her internal passionate identity. The result, nonetheless, is the same. Mitranātha, like Bhairava, obtains the goddess's consecration and thereby, her Command:

> She whose nature is desire (kāmanā) is intent on the supreme bliss she experiences by herself in herself. Established in the foundation of meditation, she attained the state of the Innate (sahaja) Kula whose form is a Liṅga. Then, O goddess, he who is called Mitra, seeing that his own unmoving radiance (sphuraṇa) and the Command had been destroyed, was astonished and (exclaimed) "what has happened to me ?"

---

[1] paścād ādyārghapātraḥ [k, kh: paścādāptārthapātraḥ] kṛtapraṇayagatiś cārcituṁ [kh: -rvituṁ] tvāṁ niviṣṭaḥ [g: -ṣṭā]
divye [g: divya] me [g: ye] pūjitavyā bhavasi [sarve: -ti] kulavidhau [k kh: kuladhau] manyamānā [k kh: naḥ; g: manyasānaḥ] parākhyā [k: -khyāṁ; g: sagatvā] | yaṣṭvā cakraṁ samastaṁ paramasukhayutas tasya madhye niviṣṭaḥ [g: niviṣṭo] divyānandasvarūpe nijasadṛśaguṇaṁ [kh: -śadṛśa-] devi rūpaṁ tvadīyam || dṛṣṭvā cānanditātmā [g: cānandatātmā] akulakularuciḥ kalpayitvā svaśaktiṁ ānandād [g: mānandād] divyatejāhutir [g: -tejāhujatir] akulabhavā vyomamārge prayātā | tasyāṁśo [k kh: tasyāṁsau; g: tasyāsau] mitranātho [kh: -nāthau] mama sadṛśaguṇaḥ prāpyate janmamādau śaktis tasyāprameyā vrataniyamaratā kāraṇodbhūtadehā [kh: kālanod-] || Ibid. 13/13-14.

> Having come to know that there is a very fierce Śakti nearby who is intent on (the observance of) vows (vrata) and discipline (niyama), he went (to her) and having worshipped her by the grace of Kula and Akula, he attained great accomplishment (siddhi). (This accomplishment shone with the) light (avabhāsā) of millions of tongues of fire that radiated from the awakened consciousness of the Vidyā (imparted by the goddess's) Command obtained by means of the many types and forms of consecration (abhiṣeka) preceded by (the piercing of) the Wheels.[1]

Just as the Vidyā in which the goddess is immersed is the fire of her energy, similarly she performs her austerities in her sacred seat sitting in the fire that consumes the worlds. And this is how Mitranātha finds her in Jālandhara, the sacred seat of fire:

> Mitra(nātha), in order to (acquire) the authority which comes from initiation (went to) the dense forest of doctrine (matavana) within which the venerable (goddess) Kubjikā (kukākhyā) wonders. Once the Command was given to him (he became) Kuṇḍalīśa, the lord designated for three Ages.
>
> (This happened) once he had seen Kumārī (the Virgin Goddess there) in that (sacred seat) intent on performing a sacrifice and fearsome (karālī) with enjoyment and liberation. (He saw her) therein, in the Doomsday Fire (vaḍava) in the sacred seat of fire (jvālapīṭha) which is like a blazing fire, enflamed with waves of garlands of flames.[2]

---

[1] ātmany evātmanā [k kh: ātmannevā-; g: ātmayedevānmanā] sā paramasukharatā [kh: paramamukhalaratā] kāmanāyāḥ [k: -yā; kh g: kāmayānā] svarūpā [k: svarūpa; g: svarūpaṁ] dhyānādhāre niviṣṭā sahajakulabhavaṁ prāpya me [k: prāpyase; kh g: prāpsyase] liṅgarūpam | paścān mitrābhidho 'asau sphuraṇam avicalaṁ [kh: sphalaśa-] svaṁ vinaṣṭaṁ nirīkṣya [k: nirīkṣyaḥ; kh: nirīkṣa]
ājñā nāśaṁ prayātā kim iti mama babhau vismayaṁ prāpya devi ||
jñātvā śaktiṁ mahogrāṁ vrataniyamaratāṁ sannidhānaṁ [k kh: naḥ; g: -na] sa [g: ssa] gatvā tām ārādhya prasādād akulakulabhavāt prāpya siddhiṁ mahattām | ājñāvidyāvabodhasphuradanalaśikhā [k: -sphurada-; kh: -sphūlada-; g: ājñādivyāvavodha-] koṭilakṣāvabhāsā [g: -sāṁ] labdhā nānāprakārair vividhagaticaraiś cakrapūrvābhiṣekaiḥ [k kh: -gaticayaiś-; g: -gaticayaiścakrapūrvvābhiṣekai] || KRU 13/15-16.

[2] mitro dīkṣādhikāre [all MSs: mitrā dīśādhikāraṁ] matavanagahane [ṅ: matavahagamate] sātate [k: yāntare; kh, ṅ: yoṁtare; gh: yāṁtate] śrīkukākhyā [k, ṅ: śrīkukākhye] ||
dṛṣṭā [all MSs: dṛṣṭvā] tasmin kumārī makhayajanaratā bhuktimuktiṁ [ṅ: -mukti] karālī
ājñāṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: ājñā] tasyaiva [ṅ: tasyava] datvā triyugam [ṅ: triṣu?gam] adhikṛtaṁ [k, kh: -kṛṁta] svāminaṁ kuṇḍalīśam |

Mitranātha praises the goddess as the sole deity who has authority over all the lineages and she praises him as the Lord of Yogis. He then retires to a cave called Śrīguhā located in the sacred seat of the Moon (candrapīṭha) where he observes a vow of silence in a locality called Śrīkadamba. Just as the First Siddha is a 'part' (aṁśa) of the god, the Siddhas who are his disciples are a part of his body. In this way, they too are born from parts of the god (aṁśaja)[1] as the disciples of Mitranātha immersed in meditation (samādhi).[2] The spiritual progeny generated by the Yoga of the Krama will be withdrawn again at the end of the cycles of cosmic ages, but it will not be destroyed. Instead, it will be withdrawn into Mitranātha's body. Mitranātha is the first born of the goddess. He is the first Siddha. It is proper that his spiritual descendents should be withdrawn back into the spiritual power he possesses that generated them, just as the universe is withdrawn back into its source at the end of a cosmic age. He then merges into the goddess and she into the body of the god along with all the deities of the Śrīkrama:

> "In this way, all embodied beings will be destroyed up to the Great Age (mahākalpa). When the end of the merger of Brahmā, Upendra, and Mahendra comes about, the Siddhas born of the Śrīkula will assume the nature of pure consciousness (cinmātra). Most excellent in every respect, (these Siddhas) will not be destroyed when the time comes of universal destruction.
>
> Then, O beloved, when the Parāpara Age (kalpa) comes, the lineage of Siddhas will all dissolve away into the body of Mitra's power (śakti). That power is in Mitra's body and Mitra is in your's, O mother of the Śrīkula. And you also, along with the entourage (āvaraṇa) of the Śrīkrama, are in my body."
>
> Once the benefactor of the universe, Śrīnātha, called the primordial one (ādi), had spoken thus, he gave the Command to the goddess to bring the Śrīkula down (to earth) and explain (the teaching of the) lineage of the family of Siddhas belonging to the Śrīkula. O beloved, you should explain this venerable teaching (śrīśāsana) to one who has devotion.

---

vāḍave [k, kh: nādāhe; gh: nādohe; ṅ: vādāhe] jvālapīṭhe jvaladanalanibhaṁ jvālamālolidīptaṁ [k, gh: -mālāli-; ṅ: -dīptāṁ] YKh (1) 15/73d-74abc.

[1] This term is commonly used to denote the god's partial incarnations as Siddhas who impart Kula doctrine.

[2] KRU 9/123-128.

> Then once the great lord had given that Command to the goddess and awakened (her), he took rest, O mistress of the gods, and remained silent.[1]

Mitranātha, as the First Siddha, has a dual nature. He is both Bhairava, the First Siddha, as well as the Siddha who founded the lineage of the Child in Kāmarūpa, the sacred seat of this Age of Strife. The same is true of the other Siddhas of the sacred seats. Each of the Siddhas of the seats - Mitra, Oḍḍīśa and Ṣaṣṭha - is the First Siddha who gives rise to the others. Each is both disciple and teacher. Just as Age after Age the universe is recreated, similarly, the First Siddha is born from the goddess, again and again. He is always new and yet, like the goddess who generates and empowers him, he is always the same. The same seed generated by the union of the god and the goddess from which the world is born, gives rise to the First Siddha. Sustained in the transcendental Void by the inner vital breath generated from the energy of the Deity, it matures. The First Siddha is born from that as the immanent, incarnate aspect of the god through the immanent aspect (aṁśa) of the goddess.

The following passage describes the origin of the First Siddha Ṣaṣṭha, the Siddha of another sacred seat.

> Listen, you who are the first born! Divine empowered one! You who are both supreme and inferior! I will tell you, O beloved, how my incarnation (aṁśa) came into being. When I am in the venerable Wheel of Bliss (ānandacakra) along with you, intent on the pleasure of divine enjoyment and intent, O Kujā, in the bliss of playful dalliance (krīḍā), a seed is emitted from us. Energized by (our) radiant

---

[1] evaṁ yāvan mahākalpaṁ saṁhāraṁ sarvadehinām |
brahmopendramahendrāṇāṁ [g: vrahmā-] pralayānte upāgate ||
cinmātrarūpāḥ [k: ciṇmātrarūpā; kh: viśmātrarūpā; g: -pā] sthāsyanti siddhāḥ [kh: siddhā] śrīkulasaṁbhavāḥ |
sarvatrātiśayajātāḥ [k kh: -jñānā; g: jñānāḥ] pralaye [g: vrahmalaye] nāśavarjitāḥ [k kh: nāthavarjjitāḥ] ||
tataḥ parāpare kalpe saṁjātā [k kh g: -te] siddhasantatiḥ |
gamiṣyati [g: ganiṣyati] layaṁ sarvāṁ [k kh: sarvā; g: sarvvā] mitraśaktes tanau priye [g: piye] ||
sā śaktir mitradehe tu mitras te śrīkulāmbike |
tvaṁ cāpi mama dehe tu śrīkramāvaraṇānvitā ||
evam uktvā [g: evamuktyā] jagaddhātā śrīnātho hyādisaṁjñakaḥ |
ājñāṁ dadau [kh: dado] sa [g: sā] devyāyāḥ [g: -yā] śrīkulasyāvatāraṇe ||
vyākhyāne śrīkulasyaiva [kh: śrīkulasyeva] siddhasantānasantateḥ |
vyākhyeyaṁ bhaktiyuktasya priye śrīśāsanaṁ tvayā ||
ājñāṁ [kh: ājñā] datvā ca tāṁ devīṁ [g: -vī] bodhayitvā mahāprabhuḥ |
virarāma sureśāni tūṣṇīm ādāya saṁsthitaḥ || KRU 13/41-47.

> power (varcas), it abides in the supreme firmament (parākāśa), illumining the surface of the sky. It is held in the Sky by the Wind born from the energy of my will. O Kujā, there will be a great Siddha within it born from an aspect of me. He will possess all my qualities, O mistress of the Śrīkula.[1]
>
> He will possess a Śakti born from an aspect of you. And from your presence, O mistress of Kula, he will obtain the Command. She (will be) be born again from an aspect of you and he from her repeatedly.
>
> O mistress of Kula, this Kulakrama was brought down (to earth) by these two through the ages as I have told (you before). He is a certain one who, by virtue of (his) association with the (primal) cause (kāraṇayogataḥ), is sanctified with the name 'Mitranātha'. He impells the unfailing Command and (so) should be worshipped in the venerable lineage of Siddhas (śrīsiddhasantāna). Oḍunātha and the rest who bestow the supreme accomplishment are his disciples. He is born from my terrifying creation with the name Ṣaṣṭhācārya.[2]

We notice that in this context the god is generated from the goddess. At the higher level, the goddess emanates from the god who is the transcendental Void. At the immanent level the reverse takes place. The emanation of the goddess is the result of the polarization of the 'neuter' source into male and female. It

---

[1] śṛṇu tvam ādisambhūte [g: tvaṁmādisaṁbhūte] divye [g: divya] śakte [k kh: śakti] parāpare ||
kathayāmi yathotpattiṁ [g: -tparttiṁ] mamāṁśasya tava priye |
śrīmadānandacakrastho [g: -sthā] yadāhaṁ sahitas tvayā ||
divyabhogasukhāsaktaḥ [k kh g: +śrī] krīḍānandarataḥ kuje |
tadāvayoḥ samutsṛṣṭaṁ [k kh: samutsṛtaṁ] bījaṁ dedīpya varcasā [k kh g: varcasaṁ] ||
parākāśe gataṁ [g: śataṁ] tac ca dyotayantaṁ nabhastalam |
mamecchāśaktijātena vāyunā gagane dhṛtam ||
ante [k kh g: āste] bhaviṣyati kuje mahāsiddho [kh: mamā-; g: -siddhā] mamāṁśajaḥ |
madīyaguṇasāmagryā [g: -matryā] yuktaḥ śrīkulanāyike || Ibid. 9/91cd-95.

[2] tvadaṁśasambhavā [kh: tvandaṁśa] divyā śaktis tasya bhaviṣyati |
tvatsakāśāt [k kh g: tvacchakāśāt] kuleśāni sa cājñāṁ [k kh: -jñā; g: vājñā] prāpsyati priye ||
tvadaṁśajā [k kh g: tvāṁśajā ca] punaḥ sā tu [k kh: punāsmāsu; g: punaḥsāsu] sa ca tasyāḥ [k: tasyā; kh: tasya] punaḥ punaḥ |
tābhyām idaṁ kuleśāni avatārya kulakramam [kh: -kra] ||
kalpamanvantaraiś caiva [kh: kalva-; g: kalpamanvastaraścaiva] yathā te kathitaṁ mayā |
sa mitranāmnā bhavitā kaścit kāraṇayogataḥ ||
pūjyaḥ śrīsiddhasantāne [kh: -santānaṁ] amoghājñāpravartakaḥ [g: -kāḥ] |
oḍunāthādayas tasya [g: tuṇḍanāthādayaḥ] śiṣyāḥ [k kh: siṣyāḥ; g: -yā] [g: + tatra] paramasiddhidāḥ ||
bhīṣaṇīsṛṣṭimadodyutaḥ [k: dūṣlī(?)sṛṣṭimadanvoddhaḥ(?); kh: bhūṣṇīsṛṣṭimadandhoddaḥ; g: bhūṣṇīsṛṣṭimadamvāddaḥ] ṣaṣṭhācāryeti [k: ṣaṣṭhayaitirya; kh: ṣaṣṭhaścarya; g: ṣaṣṭhaścaryyeti] saṁjñayā | KRU 9/96-100ab.

produces both the god and the goddess in relation to one another. The generation of the male polarity takes place at the level on which the polarities have already been established. Moreover, the god who is generated in this way is mortal. This reversal must be accompanied by another. In order for it to take place, instead of asexual disjunction, it requires sexual union. This is of two kinds. One is between the god and the goddess, which generates the universe. The other is between the goddess and herself, which is how Vṛkṣanātha, the next First Siddha was born.

The Birth and Exploits of Vṛkṣanātha, the Lord of the Tree

Vṛkṣanātha - the Lord of the Tree - embodies an important development in the image and form of the First Siddha (ādinātha). He is totally unknown to the KMT. Nonetheless, he appears frequently in the subsequent Kubjikā Tantras as an original founder figure. His rise to this eminent status goes hand in hand with the development of the lineages of teachers which, like him, are unknown to the KMT. Moreover, they claim their origins in Koṅkaṇa, otherwise known as Śrīdeśa in the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha). Vṛkṣanātha appeared in the South,[1] that is, the Deccan (dakṣināpatha). The KRU says that he traveled to the main sacred seats (pīṭha) and other places where he made many disciples. Finally he reached Candrapura and the land of Koṅkaṇa.[2] He is especially connected with this region. There he initiated the three Siddhas and it is where he and the Goddess of the Tamarind reside.[3] There he miraculously bent or burst apart[4] her tree. This was a clear sign of his spiritual attainment that he had, as the KRU puts it, reached the Wheel of the Skyfarers, taking with him many disciples. Thus he acquired great renown for his spiritual attainment and so was called Kīrtideva, the God of Fame. The goddess was pleased with him and graced him further by giving him the name Ciñciṇīnātha - the Lord of the Tamarind Tree.

The birth and exploits of Vṛkṣanātha are described for the first time in the KRU but there he is rarely called by his homonym Ciñciṇīnātha or Ciñciṇīśa.[5] Vṛkṣanātha is the 'Lord of the Tree' because he is associated with the Kramamaṇḍala, which is the Maṇḍala of the Tree (vṛkṣamaṇḍala) and the Tree of Brahmā.[6] More specifically, his name suggests his association with the seed-syllable Navātman which is called the Tree because of the resemblance its written form has to an inverted tree. Outwardly, he is associated with the tamarind tree in which

[1] KuKh 2/29-30ab.
[2] KRU 13/28.
[3] Śrīnātha and the goddess Ciṁcinīdevī (reside) in Candrapūryaka in Koṅkaṇa (śrīnāthaṁ ciñcinī devī koṅkaṇe candrapuryake). AS 8/63cd.
[4] KuKh 7/59cd-63ab, KRU 13/29.
[5] The sole instance is found in KRU 9/144.
[6] KuKh 19/80-81.

Kubjikā, the Goddess of the Tamarind (Ciñcādevī or Ciñciṇī) resides. And so we read:

> There is Tamarind tree (ciñcinī) in the city of Candrapūrṇa. You bent it, O lord, and so it is that you are said to be Ciñciṇī(nātha) (Lord of the Tamarind). Therein, in the City of the Moon (you are) known as Kīrtideva (God of Fame).[1]

Again:

> There is a certain tamarind (ciñcinī) (on the banks of a) pool (taṭāka) in (the city of) Candrapūryaka. Surrounded by Vetālas, one should know it to be Aṁvilī by name. Once felled (ucchitvā)[2] with (magic) pellets (vaṭaka), (he) grasped (the maṇḍala which is) the hermitage of authority (adhikāśrama)[3] forever. (Thus) Śrīnātha was first called Ciñcinin in the teaching of the three lineages by virtue of the power (pratāpa) of (the goddess's) intense Command.
>
> He viewed the (tamarind) tree with the support of (the energy of the goddess) Ciñcinī and when it was broken, as a sign (of his) realisation (pratyaya), (the goddess) brought it back to life. Instructed (śasta) in restraint and grace, she, the supreme power, was transmitted to him in a pure form and so he is said to be Ciñcinin. (Thus) by virtue of (this) power there are two Siddhas with the (same) name (abhidhāna), Śrīnātha and Aṁvilī.
>
> This is the Command which was previously brought down with the Krama by means of the couple (yugmabheda) within the consciousness of the bliss of Navātman.[4]

---

[1] KuKh 7/63.

[2] The correct form is ucchedya.

[3] I take adhikāśramam to be a contraction of adhikārāśramam made to preserve the metre.

[4] tat [na] vṛkṣaṁ ciñcinī kiñcit [kaścit] taṭāke [-kaṁ] candrapuryake || aṁvilī nāma vijñeyaṁ vetālaiḥ pariveṣṭitam |
ucchitvā vaṭakair nityaṁ [-tye] gṛhītam adhikāśramam ||
tīvrājñāyāḥ [-yā] pratāpena śrīnāthasya tu ciñcinī |
abhidhānaṁ purākhyātaṁ olitritayaśāsane ||
ciñcinyayāvalambena [ciñcinyoyā-] vṛkṣaṁ yasyāvalokitam |
pratyayena yadā bhagnaṁ tayā saṁjīvitaṁ punaḥ ||
nigrahānugrahe [-nigrahe] śastaṁ saṁkrāntā tasya sā parā |
śaktir vimalarūpeṇa tasmāt sa [so] ciñcinī smṛtaḥ ||
śaktyābhidhāne dvau [dvā] siddhau śrīnāthaṁ [-nāthena] nāma aṁvilī |
ityājñā yugmabhedena pūrvaṁ kramāvatāritā [kramava-] ||

Vṛkṣanātha is the First Siddha (ādinātha) because he established the three lineages (oli) in Koṅkaṇa. Empowered by the goddess, Śrīnātha, here called the Lord of the Tree, initiated the three Siddhas by whom the lineages of human Siddhas were established. We have seen that, as the spiritual extensions of Ciñcinīnātha, the three Siddhas are said to be his three eyes.[1] They are, moreover, his forms (mūrti).[2] His disciples were also the Nine Siddhas whom we shall discuss further ahead. He is Bhairava in the form of the first teacher (ādinātha), who is the consort of the goddess Ciñcinī. This couple, Śrīnātha, that is, Ādinātha and Ciñciṇī, is the last pair of the eighteen teachers of the Divine Current[3] which extends from the Transmental.[4] Thus we are told that:

> Ciñcānātha is the ocean of the three Lords of the Lineages. They play with him in the pool (taṭāka) encompassed by Ciñcinī. Ciñcinī is the supreme Śakti, she is Parā whose nature is nectar. She is the radiant energy (tejas) on the path of mantra. Auspicious, she is full of the Command. The supreme god Vidyārājeśvara (i.e. Navātman) was first pervaded by her. (He is) Śrīnātha endowed with power and so goes by the name Ciñcinin.[5]

Ciñciṇīnātha is identified, as is Vṛkṣanātha, with Navātman who is self-established.[6] Śrīnātha is Ciñciṇīnātha, the Lord of Kula (kaulīśa) who is Bhairava.[7] He is the Lord (nātha) who possesses the bliss of Navātman just as all the First Siddhas and those of the sacred seats do.[8] They share in Bhairava's navātmānandacaitanye [. . .] AS 8/88cd-94a.

---

[1] Ṭīkā MS K fl. 174a quoted above, p. 440.

[2] His three forms (mūrti) have arisen in due order in the three sacred seats. AS 8/64ab.

[3] KuKh 2/20-26.

[4] KuKh 7/64cd-65ab.

[5] trayāṇāṁ olināthānāṁ ciñcānāthaṁ mahodadhiḥ [mahodadheḥ] ||
krīḍanti tena te sārdhaṁ taṭāke ciñcinīvṛtāḥ [-tā] |
ciñcinī paramā śaktiḥ parā amṛtarūpiṇī ||
tejorūpā mantramārge ājñā pūrṇavatī śubhā |
tayā vyāptaḥ [-ptaṁ] purā devo [devā] vidyārājeśvaraḥ paraḥ ||
śrīnāthaṁ śaktivantaś ca tena nāmena ciñcinī | AS 8/85cd-88ab.

[6] navātmā ciñciṇīnāthaṁ svayam eva vyavasthitam | YKh (2) 5/114cd.

[7] śrīnāthaṁ ciñciṇīnāthaṁ kaulīśaṁ bhairavātmakam | YKh (2) 14/157cd.

[8] *navātmānandasaṁyuktaṁ [kh: navātmānaṁdasaṁ * ktaṁ] nāthaṁ [k, kh: nātha] tūṣṇīśanāyakam* | YKh (2) 5/97ab, cf. KuKh 2/29-30ab.
Also: Caryānātha, who is called Jāla is delighted with the bliss of Navātman (caryānāthaṁ tu jālākhyaṁ [k, kh: -khya] navātmānandananditam) YKh (2) 5/40cd. And: Saṣṭhanātha, who is the essential nature.[1] Just as the goddess is said to possesses six parts, similarly, the 'Lord called Ciñca possesses a body made of the nine (letters of Navātman).'[2] The goddess addresses the Siddha reminding him that he is the god she loves and extols him as the Silent One, alluding, as we shall see, to the identity he assumed when he spread the teachings to Candrapura:

> Khecarī, who is called 'the one who possesses the secret' is Ciñciṇī, (the consort) of Ciñcānātha (the Lord of the Tamarind Tree). You are Tūṣṇī (the Silent One), abide (here) O lord of the gods, Bhairava, spread (our) fame. Śrīnātha, the saviour of the universe, is the consciousness of the bliss of Navātman. You (are he), the lord of all the gods. You are my beloved and (it can never be) otherwise.[3]

The KRU provides an extensive account of Vṛkṣanātha's birth and exploits. Like Mitranātha, he too is born from the goddess, but as she does not, as she should not, unite with him, her son, she must generate the next Siddha alone. To do this she must discard her manifest, ascetic personality and concentrate on her unmanifest, passionate form in the Liṅga. Thus the god goes on to say:

> O venerable Kujeśī, you are the (goddess) who, tired of the restrictions (of observing) vows and discipline on the path of meditation, (assumed the form of a) Liṅga and, by virtue of the assumption (of that state, was) well established (saṁsthā), contemplating (manyamānā) the passion (rati) of supreme bliss (freely) as she desired. After having aroused her own Wheel called the Self-supported, She abided (thus) in the bliss of passion (kāmānanda) having cast (her) tongue (bhāratī) forth from the cavern of her own mouth into (her own genitals), the secret part, engaged in the practice (vidhi) (of savouring) the delight (rasa) of sex (ramaṇa).
>
> The issue from her womb is Akula (akulabhavā) (brought about) by the Yoga of the vitality of concentration (dhāraṇā). Born as an issue of the Divine Current (divyaugha), a (veritable) aggregate of a lord of the gods and the bliss of Navātman is the Lord of the Kula (navātmānandadeveśaṁ ṣaṣṭhanāthaṁ kuleśvaram) Ibid. 5/61ab.

---

[1] The god who saves from transmigration is Bhairava who is the bliss of Navātman. (saṁsāratāraṇaṁ devaṁ navātmānandabhairavam) YKh (2) 19/74cd.

[2] nāthaṁ [k: nārthaṁ] ciñcābhidhānaṁ navatanuracitaṁ vakrikā ṣaṭprakārā YKh (1) 15/19c.

[3] *khecarī sarahasyākhyā * ciñcānāthasya ciñciṇī |*
tūṣṇī tvaṁ tiṣṭha deveśa kuru kīrtiṁ ca bhairava ||
navātmānandacaitanyaṁ [k, kh: -nande-] śrīnāthaṁ jagattārakam [k, kh: jagatā-] |
tvaṁ prabhuḥ sarvadevānāṁ iṣṭo [k: iṣṭho] me tvaṁ na cānyathā || YKh (2) 19/109-110.

> host of excellent qualities, he is the most excellent in the world. The three worlds bow to (this) great soul, a Siddha (born) within (the goddess and issued forth) from the path of Caṇḍikā's Door (in the Cavity of Brahmā). Called Vṛkṣanātha, he, the remover of the impurities of the Kali Age, will take birth in this way.[1]

The first section of this text is remarkable indeed. The goddess is tired of observing the continence required of those who practice austerities and meditation. Although the goddess in this state is aloof from the world, she is not fully transcendent. In order to experience the bliss of the transcendental state, she must withdraw into herself to experience herself. As we have seen in the first passages, she is the 'ever manifest bliss' of the god in his transcendental Emptiness when he is 'established in his own innate bliss'. The goddess makes the god blissful by being within him. She penetrates him. Their divine nature is characterized by the reversal of the human, worldly condition in which the male penetrates the female. Assuming the form of a Liṅga, her outer body is that of the god. Inwardly, she is the god's power that is bliss (ānandaśakti). This is located in the Wheel of the Self-supported (svādhiṣṭhāna), where she abides ready to rise as Kuṇḍalinī.

In several early representations, Kuṇḍalinī does not sleep in the Wheel of the Root Foundation (mūlādhāra). She is said to be in the navel.[2] Her portrayal here as licking her own genitals is indeed astonishing. It is the result of the symbolic and ritual valence of sexual fluid represented by the Point or Drop (bindu). There are striking parallel examples of the image we are examining. One is an idol of Kālarātri, a form of Kālī, installed in a temple in Varanasi[3] and worshipped as the seventh of the Nine Durgās during the festival of the Nine Nights (navarātri) dedicated to the goddess Durgā. The idol is quite large. The face of the goddess is clearly visible and a long red tongue extends from her mouth down into an apron that covers her body. Lifting the apron we see that the

---

[1] tvāṁ sā śrīmatkujeśi [kh: cchrīmatkujeśa] vrataniyamayamaiḥ kheditā dhyānamārge saṁsthā liṅgatvamārgāt paramasukharatiṁ [kh: -sukhā-] svecchayā manyamānā ||
kāmānande sthitā sā nijamukhakuharād [kh: kuhalād] bhāratīṁ [k kh: bhāratī] kṣipya guhye svādhiṣṭhānākhyacakraṁ ramaṇarasavidhau kṣobhayitvā svakīyam |
garbhotpattiś ca tasyā akulakulabhavā [k: rakula-; kh: lakula-] dhāraṇāvīryayogād [kh: dhāraṇa-] - jātā [k: -jāto; kh: āto] divyaughatejo 'tiśayaguṇagaṇagrāma bhūmimahattā [k: divyodbhujāto- -bhūmimahantāṁ; kh: divyodbhutojā- -bhūmimahantāṁ; g: divyo- bhūmimahantī] ||
tasyāṁ siddho mahātmā tribhuvananamitaś caṇḍikādvāramārgān [k kh: -namitasthi-] nāmnā [kh: nāmnā] śrīvṛkṣanāthaḥ kalikaluṣaharaḥ [kh: -khaharaḥ] prāpsyate janmam ittham |
KRU 13/19cd-21ab.

[2] See KuKh 3/120-121 and notes 157 and 158.

[3] This temple is located in Kālikā galli, house number D 8/17.

goddess is squatting, her legs splayed on a Liṅga and her tongue extends down to the junction where it penetrates her.

The priest of this temple is proud that Kālarātri appears in the Kāśīkhaṇḍa of the Skandapurāṇa.[1] There she is portrayed as one of Durgā's energies (śakti) who, serving as her messenger, warns the demon Durgama to desist from his evil ways. She burned the demon's attendants with her breath and prepared Durgā for war.[2] The Nine Durgās are listed and described in the Armour of Durgā (durgākavaca), a supplement (aṅga) of the Devīmāhātmya. There the dark Kālarātri with dishevelled hair wears a brilliant, shining rosary and rides a donkey.[3] Clearly, the idol in the temple is quite different. This Kālarātri is also worshipped as Kālī, the first of the Ten Mahāvidyās. Although, like her identification with one of the Nine Durgās, this is an adventitious projection, her iconography is clearly more compatible with this association. There are other examples of similar forms of the goddess. Hillary Rodriques, who told me about this idol, also told me that he saw a sculptor in Kathmandu engaged in producing a squatting image of the goddess Dakṣiṇā Kālī who, like our goddess, is alone and engaged in licking her genitals.

According to Kripal, Kālī's lolling tongue has two meanings in the context of Tantra, namely, sexual gratification and consumption of the forbidden or polluted. The first is, symbolically, of course, true in the case of our goddess also. Kripal derives the second interpretation from 'Ramakrishna's habit while undertaking Tantric sādhanā of eating faeces, sometimes his own, and drinking wine and urine. . . . He is said to have held his own faeces in one hand and sandal paste (a particularly fragrant and pure substance) in the other and contemplated their essential sameness'.[4] Although this is certainly one of the soteriological functions of such practices, in this case the bodily fluid the goddess drinks is not forbidden or impure. The substances produced from the body of the deity cannot be polluting. The seminal drop (bindu) in the Yoni is spiritually arousing by virtue of the bliss it generates by its rotating motion. This is why it is very powerful, not because it is polluting or forbidden.

When the goddess is outside the god he worships the Krama with the substances produced from his body and those generated by his union with the goddess. This situation is reversed when the goddess is inside the Liṅga. She is no longer the emanation of the god. On the contrary, she has assumed his form. She is not generated by the god: she generates him. Immersed in contemplation, the Krama remains unmanifest and she is not engaged in ritual. In this situation the goddess does not produce bodily fluids to offer them; instead, she recycles them

---

[1] Skandapurāṇa IV.2.71.25 ff..
[2] Rodrigues 1993: 191.
[3] Singh 1999: 75.
[4] Kinsley 1997: 81.

in herself. She delights in the 'passion of supreme bliss' as she wills. She arouses herself independently. She is not aroused by the god, nor does she arouse him. Her Wheel is therefore appropriately called 'Self-supported' (svādhiṣṭhāna). It is the Wheel of Bliss (ānandacakra) the god contemplates within himself, thereby projecting the goddess outside to unite with her. In this way, he makes the Krama manifest and worships it. This is his bliss. The goddess, on the contrary, is not dependent on him for her bliss. She is herself the power of bliss (ānandaśakti). In his transcendent, solitary state, the bliss the god experiences does not satisfy him. He is not so completely absorbed in the joy of contemplation that there is no room left for reflection. His desire to know his own foundation is a product of his sense of incompleteness that leads to the externalization of his energy which, within him is bliss and outside becomes desire. This desire leads to the coupling of the two, namely, the god who desires and the goddess who is the embodiment of that desire. The coupling generates the cycle of bliss (ānandacakra) which both partners experience as the rite of adoration (pūjā) through which the world is created. One is reminded of the Upaniṣadic myth that explains the origins of man and woman, male and female. According to the Bṛhadaraṇyakopaṇiṣad the Self prior to creation is, like Akula, alone:

> In the beginning this world was Soul (Ātman) alone in the form of a Person. Looking around, he saw nothing else than himself. He said first: 'I am.' Thence arose the name 'I' [. . .] Verily, he had no delight. Therefore one who is alone has no delight. He desired a second. He was, indeed, as large as a woman and a man closely embraced. He caused that Self to fall (pat) into two pieces. Therefore arose a husband (pati) and a wife (patnī) [. . .] Therefore this space is filled by a wife. He copulated with her. Thus, human beings were produced.[1]

The myth continues that the woman feels that it is improper for the man to copulate with her as she has been generated by him. So in order to avoid the sin of incest she, like Kubjikā, hides herself by assuming another form. Kubjikā assumes the form of a Liṅga and so, for the god and all that is outside her, she becomes a neutral being, although she retains her gender as the Female Neuter Liṅga. The woman in the Upaniṣadic myth cannot shake off her gender but, like a shaman, she can assume animal forms. This does not save her, on the contrary, her transformations lead to more copulation, as the man assumes the form of the corresponding male animal. The incestuous union now becomes also bestial. The inevitable sin doubles and redoubles as one species after another is generated by their union.

[1] BṛUp 1/4/1-3. Hume's translation.

Inside the Liṅga, the goddess indulges herself but does not sin. When she is about to couple with the god, she is bent in shame. However, there is no shame when she is bent back in sexual intercourse. She merely gets tired and so straightens herself. Outside the Liṅga she relates in various ways and degrees with the god to ultimately unite with him. Inside the Liṅga she is independent. She does not need her male counterpart. She unites with herself and fertilizes herself to generate a Siddha; just as in the following reference she licks her navel to generate the universe:

> O goddess, by churning her navel with her tongue the universe (brahmāṇḍa) was born from her womb by means of (her) divine Yoni. O great goddess, from that time onwards she was known as the goddess Kujā.[1]

The goddess does not literally lick her navel. She projects her energy into the Wheel of the Self-supported which is where, according to some accounts, the goddess's Yoni is located.[2] This is where the 'churning' takes place between her and her partner or when she 'churns' herself. The KRU outlines this process. After hearing about the lineages of Siddhas in previous Ages the goddess asks the god how that 'certain man who is born from an aspect of yourself will come into being ... .'[3] The god goes on to describe how the generation (utpatti) of that aspect (aṁśa) of himself takes place. He is formed initially from the seed generated by the union of the god and the goddess. In this form he was originally immersed in the deity's transcendental emptiness sustained there, as is a foetus in the womb by the 'wind' of the vital breath.[4] Just as he is an aspect of the god, an 'aspect' of the god's energy incarnates as the daughter of the Himalaya. The KRU reworks the myth of the origin of the goddess found in the KMT we have examined. In this case the protagonists are not the original god and the goddess - Bhairava and Kālikā - instead they are their incarnations. Even so, they retrace the actions of their original divine prototypes with few changes, apart from the addition of a number of important details. As in the myth, the incarnate goddess serves her counterpart, craving for union with him. However, Bhairava's incarnation is disturbed by the passion she arouses within him and so leaves her. Left alone, she

---

[1] ParāT 3/2ab-3.

[2] svādhiṣṭhānaṁ yonisthāne Ṭ MS K fl. 55a.

[3] pumān svāṁśodbhavaḥ [k kh: -vaṁ; g: tvāṁśodbhavaḥ] kaścit tvayākhyātaḥ prabho mama || kathaṁ tasya samutpattir bhaviṣyati kuleśvara | KRU 9/90cd-91ab.

[4] Cf. reference above (p. 473) in which the birth of Ṣaṣṭhācārya is described.

retires into a state of contemplation, but not in the Liṅga. Instead, she goes to the Triple Peaked mountain in the middle of her triangular Yoni.[1] Moreover, her state of blissful arousal is here quite explicit and is clearly described as one of passionate bliss:

> O beloved, my seed (svabīja) to which I referred (previously) was initially in the Sky without support, that is, in the supreme, unmanifest (niṣkala), and imperishable Void (vyoman), held (there), O supreme mistress, by the unmanifest (niṣkala) Wind. O you who are born of Akula, an (incarnate) aspect of myself will come into being there. His Śakti will be very powerful (mahābhāgā) and possess his same nature (dharma). The manifestation (saṁbhūti) of his descent (into the world) was told to you before. O goddess, the manifestation (saṁbhūti) of Vṛkṣanātha will come forth from that.
>
> When the Himalaya will have a divine daughter born of an aspect (aṁśa) of you, she will crave for union (saṁgama) with my incarnation (aṁśa) and (so) will perform terrible austerity. Assuming of her own accord the form of a servant, she will be offered (by her father to him). O Kuleśvarī, she will worship him most excellently. Once my incarnation has burnt up Manmatha (the god of love), he will abandon her and go forth. Then, overcome with passion (manmatha) and troubled by that separation, she (will) reside within the Triple Peaked mountain (immersed) in the aesthetic experience (rasa) of the bliss of passion (kāmānanda). O great goddess, she will connect (her) tongue to the Place of Power (śaktisthāna).[2] O fair lady, (that) venerable lady, born from my limbs (madaṁśasambhavā), even though a virgin (kumārī), will bear in her womb the one who will cause the lineage of the Śrīkula to prosper.[3]

---

[1] Concerning mount Trikūṭa and its association with the Yoni, see intro. 1, p. 272. and intro. 3, 377 ff..

[2] This is, presumably, the Yoni in svādhiṣṭhāna.

[3] yat tat priye samākhyātaṁ [g: masā-] svabījaṁ gagane [kh: gagaṇe] purā |
nirāśraye pare [kh: para] vyomni [kh: vyāmni] niṣkale [kh: niṣkare] kṣayavarjite [kh: -ta] ||
dhṛtaṁ ca parameśāni vāyunā niṣkalena tu | tatrotpattir mamāṁśasya [kh: tatotpattir mayāśasya]
bhaviṣyaty akulodbhave [g: -kurodbhava] ||
śaktis tasya mahābhāgā taddharmasamadharmiṇī [g: taddharmmamama-] |
tasyāvatārasaṁbhūtiḥ pūrvaṁ [k kh g: pūrve] ca kathitā tava ||
vṛkṣanāthasya saṁbhūtis tasmād devi bhaviṣyati |
yadā tuhinaśailasya tvadaṁśām [k kh g: tvāṁśajā] bhavitā [g: savitā] sutā [kh: stutā] ||
mamāṁśasaṁgamākāṅkṣī [kh: saṅgamā-] tapaś cograṁ [g: -ścotraṁ] kariṣyati |
*prāticārakarūpeṇa svayaṁ kṛtvā [k: * ; kh g: pitrā] samarpitā ||

She will continue in this way[1] for a thousand divine years. O supreme goddess, she will (abide constantly) meditating on (the being) in the lotus of (her) heart born from an aspect of me. He will then become visible and (although) standing before (you) you will not know it. O fair lady! You who are delighted by bliss! He will (also) not see (anything). Now (the Siddha) called Mitra will speak (with him) with hymns of praise and having conversed (with him), O fair lady, he will awaken that energy (kalā). O beloved, when awakened, she will tarry, contracting her limbs with embarrassment. O mistress of Kula, her face will be averted downwards (adhomukhī) and so become pregnant by means of that which is called the 'Channel' (nalikā) located in the middle (of the place where) the Vajra (that is, the god's sexual organ) strikes (the goddess's sexual organ). And, he will exit by means of the path (formed by the channel called) Cchiṇḍikā. Considering him to be her own son, she will give him the Command. Residing on a plank (tala) of the venerable Ciñciṇī (tree), he pierced that tree at (the goddess's) Command (and so) he who goes by the name Ciñciṇīnātha (Lord of the Tamarind Tree) will be renowned as Vṛkṣanātha (the Lord of the Tree).[2]

ārādhanāṁ [g: -nā] parāṁ tasya kariṣyati kuleśvari |
mamāṁśo [kh: mamāśau] manmathaṁ dagdhvā [k kh: dagdhā] tyaktvā tāṁ saṁprayāsyati ||
tadā sā manmathāviṣṭā [kh: -viṁśā] tadviyogena [kh: -yogaṇa] pīḍitā |
trikūṭaśikharāntasthā [k g: -sthāṁ; kh: -śikharātasthā] kāmānandarase sthitā ||
śaktisthāne mahādevi lalanāṁ yojayiṣyati [g: -ṣyata] |
madaṁśasambhavā [k kh g: -vo] bhadre kumārītve 'pi [k: kumāritve.api] bhāvinī ||
dhārayiṣyati garbhaṁ [g: garbhbhā] sā śrīkulānvayavardhanam | KRU 9/131-139ab.

[1] Or 'with this practice' - vidhinā sthitā.

[2] divyaṁ varṣasahasraṁ sā tenaiva vidhinā sthitā ||
dhyāyamānā pare [kh: paro] devi hṛtsaroje mamāṁśajam |
tataḥ pratyakṣatāṁ jātam agratahsthaṁ [k kh g: -gratasthaṁ] na vetsyasi ||
nekṣayiṣyati [k: na-; g: rakṣa-] kalyāṇi paramānandanandite [k kh g: -tā] |
atha mitrābhidhāno 'pi [kh g: -dhānāpi] hy ālāpaiḥ [k: a-; kh: alāpai; g: ālāpai] stutipūrvakaiḥ ||
kṛtvā saṁbhāṣaṇaṁ bhadre bodhayiṣyati tāṁ kalām |
prabuddhā [k kh: buddhāṁ] vrīḍayākuñcya gātraṁ [g: gara] svaṁ sthāsyati priye ||
adhomukhī [kh: adhau-] kuleśāni tāvad [g: tāvaṅ] garbhaṁ [kh: garbha] vrajiṣyati |
vajrasaṁghātamadhyena nalikākhyena suvrate ||
cchiṇḍikādvāramārgeṇa bahir bhūto [k: bahi-; kh: ba] bhaviṣyati |
taṁ putrakaṁ svakaṁ matvā tasyājñāṁ [k kh g: -jñā] dāsyate ca sā ||
śrīciñciṇītale sthitvā ājñayā vedhya taṁ tarum [g: taru] |
ciñciṇīnāthanāmāsau [kh: ciñcinī-] vṛkṣanātheti kīrtitaḥ ||
KRU 9/139cd-145. Cf KRU 9/144 with KuKh 7/59cd-63ab.

Vṛkṣanātha was born in this extraordinary and miraculous way. Locating his entry into the world in terms of the great cosmic cycles, aeons and ages, the KRU goes on to narrate his exploits as a roaming Brahmin ascetic:

> When the Vārāha Aeon (vārāhakalpa) and six Manvantaras had passed thus (along with) the Manus and those born from them, then, having fashioned an appropriate body in the middle of the present (age), four Ages (yuga) past in the course of time counting in terms of aeons. (Thus) according to (this) method of measuring (time) twenty-eight Ages (yugas) (passed) up to the end of the Dvāpara age.[1]
>
> (Then Vṛkṣanātha) went to the sacred seat of Oḍḍiyāna, an abode on the surface of the earth. (He went to) Jālandhara, the mountains of Pūrṇa, the venerable Kāmākhya, called Supreme (para). (He went to) the city of the lord of the snakes in the root of the seven lower worlds, to mount Śrīśaila, to Mahendra, the city of the king of the gods, Rāvaṇa's abode, the venerable Kailāsa and to Trikūṭa[2] and (then finally to) the excellent mount Malaya and (in all these places) he sported (freely) as he desired.
>
> (Then having done all that he) went to a city of excellent Brahmins there in Madhyadeśa called Ahicchatra. There he graced the holy Brahmins (by initiating them) into the supreme Kula practice (vidhi). Once he had done that, he led them, numbering one and a quarter billion (koṭi), along the path of the Wheel in the Void (khecakra), the abode of the supreme plane. Then, having come out of that with force, he undertook (the observance of) vows and discipline. (As a sign of this) he carried a stick (and wore a) loin cloth with ochre and red clothes. He who knew the doctrine (vādin) persevered in that practice (caryā) (constantly) invoking Hari. (His) mind (moved with the speed of) the wind and, moving swiftly, he resided in the Void (nabhaḥstha).[3]

---

[1] KRU 13/21cd-22ab. Chapter nine of the KRU lists the aspects (aṁśa) of the god and the goddess in previous aeons (kalpa) up to this, the nineteenth one, in which the goddess will be born as the daughter of the Himalaya.

[2] This is where the goddess retreated when she was abandoned. Concerning Trikūṭa see intro. vol. 1, p. 13.

[3] jāte [k: jātā] vārāhakalpe manum anujagatau ṣaṭsu [kh: ṣaṭyu] manvantareṣu vṛtteṣv evaṁ hi paścād ucitatanukṛte [k: -ducilanupakṛte; kh g: -ducitanupakṛte] cāntare vartamāne || tasmin kālākhyacāre tu yugayugagatis tadyugānāṁ [k: yugayugagagatistadyugāṇaṁ; kh: yugayugagagatistadyugāśā; g: -gāṇañ] catuṣke viṁśadbhiś cāṣṭasaṁkhyākṛtagaṇitavidhau dvāparasyāvasāne [k kh g: dvāparāsyā-] |

Vṛkṣanātha first visits the main sites the goddess had established. He descends into the lowest worlds and ascends to the highest heavens. Then, once he has completed his personal pilgrimage, he turns his attention to his mission and moves on to other parts of India to spread the goddess's teachings. The first is Ahicchatra. This ancient city is identified with modern Rāmanagar, a town twenty miles west of Bareli in Rohilkhaṇḍa, a district of Uttar Pradesh.[1] There is only one other reference to Ahicchatra in our sources. In YKh (1) the goddess refers to the god as Śrīkaṇṭha who is the first (ādi) Śaṁkara of the Age. He is said to have 'emerged in Ahicchatra'. He is initiated into the four Vedas and has also come forth out of the four `philosophies' (darśana), that is, the Kaula traditions.[2]

In other words, the first Siddha of this Age is portrayed here as a Kaula Vedic Brahmin from Ahicchatra, which may have been an early centre of the Kubjikā cult. The Kadamba king Mayūravarman (date >>) introduced Brahmins from Ahicchatra into the Koṅkaṇa region[3] where they enjoyed considerable prestige. The references to Ahicchatra and mass conversion of Brahmins to the Kubjikā cult may, at least, be a covert claim to their status and authority.

---

gatvoḍḍiyāṇapīṭhe [k: gatvā oḍḍiyāṇa-; kh: gatvā uḍḍiyāna-; g: gatvāoḍyānapīṭhe] kṣititalanilaye jālapūrṇācaleṣu [k kh: jālapūrṇa-; g: -rṇācaleṣu] śrīkāmākhye parākhye bhujagapatipure saptapātālamūle [k kh: mule] || śrīśailādrau [k g: -lendrau; kh: -lendro] mahendre tridaśapatipurau [k kh g: -ripau] rāvaṇasyālaye ca śrīkailāse trikūṭe malayagirivare [g: -vale] svecchayā krīḍayitvā | gatvāsau madhyadeśe [g: madhye-] dvijavaranagaraṁ nāma tatrāhicchatraṁ tasmin kṛtvā dvijānāṁ paramakulavidhau [g: -vidho] nugrahaṁ bhāvitānām ||
nītvā khecakramārge parapadanilaye koṭir ekā sapādā tasmān niṣkramya vegād [g: veśād] vrataniyamadharo daṇḍakaupīnadhārī | vastraiḥ kāṣāyaraktair harir iti vacasā bhāṣayantaś ca vādī tām evāsthāya caryāṁ [g: -ryyā] pavanagatimanaḥ [k kh g: manapavanagatiḥ] śīghragāmī [g: śrīghragāmī] nabhaḥsthaḥ [k kh g: nabhasthaḥ] || KRU 13/21cd-24.

[1] See Day (1927) 1990: 2; Bühnemann 2000: 5-6.

[2] You are the first Śaṁkara of this Age who has emerged in Ahicchatra. You are the son of Śrīdhara and, initiated into the four Vedas, you have emerged out of (these) four `philosophies' (darśana) with the name Śaṁkara.

yugādiśaṅkaras [k, kh, gh: -ra] tvaṁ ca ahicchatre [kh: -nna] vinirgataḥ [k, kh, gh: -taṁ] || *śrīdharasya sutas [k, kh, gh: śrutaṁ] tvaṁ ca caturvedeṣu dīkṣitaḥ [k, kh, gh: caturve * * dīchitaṁḥ]* |
tvaṁ [all MSs: sa] caturdarśanāj jātaḥ [k, kh: catvadarśanāj jātaṁ] śaṅkaro [k, kh, gh: -raṁ] nāmanāmataḥ || YKh (1) 4/280cd-281.

[3] The Sahyādrikhaṇḍa, which attaches itself to the Skandapurāṇa, is in two parts called Ādirahasya and the Uttarārdha. The subject of the latter, which is divided in three sections, is the Brahmins of the Koṅkaṇa. Levitt (1977: 14) explains: 'The first deals with the origin of brāhmaṇa groups and the creation of the Konkana coast, the second with the introduction of brāhmaṇas from Ahicchatra by Mayūravarman of the Kadamba dynasty and the third with the origin of degraded brāhmaṇa villages'.

Well versed in the Vedas and born from the deity, and thus himself a deity on earth, Vṛkṣanātha is a Brahmin as are many other important Kaula teachers, including Matsyendranātha himself. Moreover, the KRU boasts that many of his converts were also Brahmins, just as the Śrīmatasāra proudly proclaims that the first Siddhas of all the sacred seats were. To underscore further the Brahminical connection and draw from its prestige, the KRU claims that many of the early teachers were Vedic ṛṣis. According to the KuKh the goddess is attended by ṛṣis in the sacred seats. The KuKauM goes further by claiming that each of the Kaula teachers of the four Ages (yuganātha) was a master of one of the Vedas (vedarāṭ) and bestowed its fruit.[1] This implies, of course, that the tradition understands the founders of Kaulism to have been Vedic Brahmins. However, these are Brahmins who are not averse to setting aside caste norms if a higher purpose requires it. We have seen that Matsyendranātha was a Brahmin who assumed the role of a fisherman in order to get the Kaula teachings. Similarly, Vṛkṣanātha is not averse to eating with outcastes and serenely braves the censorship of his fellows. This is not just because he is a casteless wandering renounciate. The text stresses repeatedly that he is a Brahmin and it is clear that he makes this known to everybody. However, he is, above all, a Kaula Siddha.

Two ideals combine in the perfect Kaula who is qualified to be a teacher. One is the standard Brahminical one of ritual purity and the other is the Kaula one. The true Kaula is a person who has been penetrated by the grace of the goddess's Command. This is the one essential qualification. Nothing else matters. He may not even be an initiate. The first ideal is basic, nonetheless. Although the Kubjikā Tantras are thoroughly Kaula, the figure of the ideal Kaula remains that of conventional, 'orthodox' Vedic tradition - the Brahmin. Thus we read in the ṢSS:

> Now the teacher whose behaviour is such (as follows) is said to be a (true) Brahmin. (He is dedicated to) truthfulness, cleanliness (śaucya),[2] compassion, forbearance, he unites with his wife when it is her season, not out of passion, but for a son for the benefit of his lineage. He practices the six magical rites, bathes (regularly in the morning), and he worships at the three times of day. He avoids the śūdra and the low caste as well as (accepting food from others) whether cooked or raw. One who is endowed with such qualities is a [1] KuKauM 12/166cd ff.. Each of the Vedas bestows one of the goals of human life. The Ṛgveda gives Dharma, satisfaction (puṣṭi) and peace. The Yajurveda gives wealth and male progeny. The Atharvaveda gives passionate love (kāma). The Sāmaveda is the supreme Brahman and gives liberation.

[2] The word 'śaucya' also denotes ritual purity.

> Brahmin not by caste or by virtue of (his) sacred thread (and the like). These are the qualities of a (true) Brahmin. He who possesses them is a (true) teacher. Again, he removes error, and he reveals the meaning of the Kula scripture. Previously consecrated, (such a one) should always be made (one's) teacher.[1]

Vṛkṣanātha is not just a Brahmin; he is also a Kaula Siddha. As such, he possesses the power (siddhi) to be free of impurity, even when he is in contact with impure outcastes. He steps into a fire and stands there unscathed to the consternation of his Brahmin critics. Thus he converts many of them and we discover that this is the real reason for his visit to the house of untouchables.

From Ahicchatra in the north-east, Vṛkṣanātha travels west to Pāṭalīputra, where the modern city of Patna in Bihar is located. The KRU continues:

> (Then he went), according to his own desire, to another very excellent city called Pāṭalīputra with the rouse (that he sought) alms (bhikṣārūpeṇa) and he wondered (therein) in order to sport in the house of an excellent Brahmin (who resided there). O venerable Kujā, after having done that, he set out for the houses of seven low caste men and, his intellect (mati) free of impurities, took food with (all who belonged to the) Cāṇḍāla caste (freely) as he desired.
>
> Once he had done this, he suddenly desired to go once again to the temple of the Brahmins (there). Their hands folded (with false) respect they all mocked (him saying): "This is (indeed) a special touch (viśeṣā spṛśā) (you have received)." (He replied): "(Now I am) said to be an outcaste (bāhya) (but) I say - explain O Brahmins! What (needs to be done) to protect (oneself from the pollution) due to which (you) have become untouchable by (your own) improper conduct! Explain that to me now! Having known that by means of which one is purified, my supreme illusion will cease. Whether one is a Brahmin or an outcaste is decided by fire!"[2]

---

[1] atha vipro guruḥ prokto yasyāsti cedṛśī kriyā | satyaṁ śaucaṁ dayā kṣānti ṛtukāle gamāgamaḥ ||
putrārthī na ca kāmārthī gotrasantatihetave [k: -saṁpati-] |
ṣaṭkarmacaraṇaṁ snānaṁ trisandhyāvandanaṁ smṛtam ||
śūdrāntavarjanaṁ caiva pakvāpakvavicāraṇam [k, kh: pakvaṁ cāpakvameva ca] |
īdṛgguṇayuto vipro na jātyā copavītakaiḥ ||
brāhmaṇasya guṇā hy ete yasya tiṣṭhanty asau guruḥ | athavā bhrāntihartā ca kulaśāstrārthadarśakaḥ ||
pūrvābhiṣecitaḥ [k, kh: -te] yo [k, kh: so] hi kartavyas tu guruḥ sadā | ṢSS 20/12-16ab.

[2] gatvā divyaṁ tu [k kh g: sva] cānyaṁ nagaram ativaraṁ pāṭalīputrasaṁjñaṁ

Then (having said that), praised by all the hosts of demons and gods, he entered the fire (prepared to test him). When he emerged out of the mouth of the fire all the Brahmins residing in the city praised him. O goddess, once he had acquired fame in the Wheel of the Void and quickly and with force made one hundred thousand Brahmins (his disciples) in this way, the leaders of the towns made a sound (of approval) (?). Then, having wandered (about there) just to play, (that yogi) of unequalled intellect (went) to the city next to the sea called Candrapura and, having got there, was praised by the hosts of immortals.

(He experienced) a divine awakening by (the goddess's) Command in the supreme practice (vidhi) of Kula and having burst apart (vidārya) a tamarind (ciñca) tree, he whose mind (moved with the speed of) the wind, received the name Ciñcīśa. (Thus) he reached the land of Koṁkaṇa. (There that) great soul, in order to explain all Kula practice (vidhi) with its (many) divisions, divine and otherwise, he initiated nine (randhrasaṁkhyā) holy (people) including Brahmins and others.[1]

---

bhikṣārūpeṇa tasmin dvijavarabhavane [k kh g: -naiḥ] krīḍanārthaṁ [k kh g: -yārthaṁ] bhramitvā | paścāt saptāntyajānāṁ gṛhagamanavidhau śrīkuje 'sau pravṛttiṁ [kh: pṛvṛttiṁ] kṛtvā cāṇḍālajātyā svayamamalamatir bhojanaṁ [kh: -bhojanaṁ] yāvad icchā || evaṁ kṛtvā dvijānāṁ punar api sahasā mandiraṁ [k kh g: mandirair] gantukāmas taiḥ [g: tai] sarvaiḥ [kh: sarve; g: tsarvveḥ] sopahāsaṁ [k kh g: -hāsyaḥ] kṛtapraṇayakaraiḥ sā [k: -bhā; kh: -kṛtaḥ praṇayakaraiḥrbhā] viśeṣā [k kh g: viśeṣāḥ] spṛśaiṣā [kh g: spṛśeṣāḥ] |
ukto vāhyo [k: vāsū] gadiṣye [g: -ṣya] vadatha kim iti bho vāraṇāya [k g: cā-; kh: vālanāya] dvijendrāḥ [g: -ndrā] |
yenāspṛśyāḥ [k kh g: -sparśā] saṁjātā [k g: mamajātā; kh: -samajātā] anucitavidhinā [k: anuciṁta-] śīghram ākhyāhi [k, kh, g: ākhyeya] tāṁ naḥ || jñātvā yenātmaśuddhir bhavati mama parā bhrāntir astaṁ prayāti vipro vā [k: vu; kh: nāsti; g: mvu] cāntyajātas tava [k kh g: ścāntyajātes-] ca bhujavate [g: -vato] niṣkṛtis tatra [g: niṣkatistatra] vahniḥ | KRU 13/25-27ab.

[1] paścād vahnau [k kh: -vahno] praviṣṭo [k: praviṣṭaṁ; k: pravistaṁ; g: praviṣṭa] asurasuragaṇair vandyamānaḥ [kh: -mānaṁ; g: masurasaragaṇairvvandyamānaḥ] samastair-niṣkrānto vahnivaktrāt sakalapuravarair brāhmaṇaiḥ [k: sakalapurapurabhavairbrāhmanai- kh: sakalapulapurabhavairbrāhmanai-; g: -rabhavairvrāhmaṇaiḥ] stūyamānaḥ [g: mnūyamānaḥ] || kīrtiṁ [k kh: kīrti] kṛtvā khacakre [kh: svacakre] sapadi rabhasakṛl lakṣam ekaṁ [kh: labha-] dvijānāṁ kṛtvaivaṁ devi paścān nagarapuracaraiḥ [k kh g: -varai] syandanagrāmaghoṣaiḥ [k kh: ṣyantanai-; g: ṣyaṭṭanairgrā-] |
krīḍāmātraṁ bhramitvā punar atulamatiḥ [kh: -mati; g: punarapitulamatiḥ] sāgarasyāntagarbhe nāmnā [g: rnāmnā] śrīcandrapuryāṁ [k g: -puryaṁ; kh: -pūryaṁ] puram amaragaṇair vandyamānaḥ [kh: pūrama-] sa gatvā [kh: gandhāḥ] ||
ājñādivyāvabodhāt paramakulavidhau ciñcivṛkṣaṁ [g:kiñci-] vidārya [k kh g: -ryaḥ]

These nine disciples, as we shall see, are the Nine Nāthas. Before discussing them and their sixteen disciples, we turn to another account of the First Siddha.

The Exploits of Tūṣṇīnātha, the Silent Lord

The Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā also narrates the exploits of the First Siddha at length. An entire chapter, most of which is reproduced in the Kumārikākhaṇḍa, is dedicated to him and his disciples.[1] We notice several features of this presentation that indicate that it is later than the one in the KRU. The Nine Nāthas and their disciples, the Sixteen Siddhas, appear in the ṢSS in the clear, ordered form we find in the later Kubjikā Tantras. Moreover, the scene of the action is now virtually entirely the land of Koṅkaṇa and, in particular, Candrapura and its environs. The First or Root Siddha (Siddhanātha, Mūlanātha) is never called Vṛkṣanātha in the ṢSS. Instead he is identified with Piṅgalanātha, the fifth of the Five Siddhas.[2] He is also called Ṣaṣṭhanātha, as he is in the KRU (but not in the KuKh). He is especially called Tūṣṇīnātha or Maunīśa, the Silent Lord and is identified with Mīnīśa, that is, Matsyendranātha, the first Kaula teacher, Caryānātha[3] and Oḍḍīśa the Siddha of the first seat.[4] As do all his homonyms, this First Siddha is said to be the teacher of the three Siddhas of the sacred seats. In this context they are, Mitranātha (Kāmarūpa), Caryānātha (Jālandhara) and Ṣaṣṭha (Pūrṇagiri) who, along with the First Siddha, identified with Oḍḍīśa (Oḍḍiyāna), form the group of four Siddhas in its final and most consistent form.

The account in the ṢSS can be said to take up where the KRU leaves off, adding numerous details that fill out the figure of the First Teacher. The ṢSS refers to his wonderings only cursorily. The focus of attention is on Candrapura and Koṅkaṇa, which are described in vivid detail as the scene of the great exploits of the First Teacher who observed a vow of silence and so was called Tūṣnīnātha - the Silent Lord. [5] Tūśṇīnātha wondered far and wide, observing his vow until he reached the 'northern side of the ocean of milk'.[6] This was the land of Koṅkaṇa, a prāptā [kh: praptā] ciñcīśasaṁjñā manapavanagatiḥ koṅkaṇaṁ prāpya [kh: prāpta] deśam | divyādivyādibhedaiḥ sakalakulavidhaiḥ [g: -vidheḥ] khyāpanārthaṁ mahātmā viprādyān [k kh: viprādyā; g: viprāsye] randhrasaṁkhyān [k: nuṁdhra-; g: dhra-; k kh g: -saṁkhyā] kṛtavinayaguṇān bhāvitān dīkṣayitvā || Ibid. 13/27cd-29.

---

[1] The chapter in the ṢSS is forty-three. The equivalent one in the KuKh is forty-six, to which the reader is referred.

[2] ṢSS 43/16ab and ṢSS 43/13 = KuKh 46/36.

[3] ṢSS 43/16b. Here, the name appears to be an epithet - `the Lord who performs Kaula practice (caryā)'. As a proper name it is that of the Siddha who presides over the sacred seat of Jālandhara.

[4] ṢSS 43/21cd-24ab and also KuKh 46/40-41.

[5] He came to be called Tūṣṇīśa in the Three Worlds because of (his) silence (tūṣṇī).
ūṣṇyā tūṣṇīśasaṁjño 'sau jātas tribhuvane yathā || ṢSS 43/23cd.

[6] ṢSS 43/15.

beautiful mountainous region, on the western sea. There was a mountain there called Candraśilā (the Mountain of the Moon) near Candrapura (the City of the Moon). Here, using Tūṣṇīnātha as her instrument, the goddess graced the world by transmitting the teachings in the four Ages from the four sacred seats. She did this by descending repeatedly into the cave on the peak of the mountain where Tūṣṇīnātha practiced austerities and observed his vow of silence[1] until she and her consort finally come to stay there permanently. This took place at the beginning of the Age of Strife (kaliyuga) when the Western tradition of the Kubjikā Tantras was first propagated. Following Tūṣṇīnātha's enlightenment, he and the teachers of the other three sacred seats met in the cave and received the goddess's empowering grace. Thus, whereas the earlier three transmissions occurred one at a time in the preceding cosmic Ages now, at the end of the Age of Strife, the sacred seats and their transmissions originated all together on the peak of the Mountain of the Moon.[2]

The sage's behaviour imitates and emulates that of the goddess. According to the KMT, when the goddess abandons the god she goes to the Mountain of the Moon on the Island of the Moon. Although we are told that there are many caves on this mountain[3] there is no mention of any particular one associated with the goddess. However, later in the tradition a good deal is made of the cave on this mountain for it is here that the Liṅga is located into which the goddess enters and within which she receives the Command. The symbolism of the Cave encompasses and fulfils the extensive symbolism of the Liṅga. The goddess sits in the Cave absorbed in the contemplation of the energy generated by her austerities.[4] Tūṣṇīnātha imitates her in this as he does in maintaining the silence the goddess observes there. For as the god says in praise of the goddess: 'Silent (tuṣṇī) in the abode of the Cave of the Moon, the gods bow (before you).'[5] There, we are told, she abandons her dark form to become Gaurī. In this also Tūṣṇīnātha

---

[1] ṢSS 43/25ab quoted in note to KuKh 46/42ab.

[2] O goddess, when the Kali Age began, Mīnīśa, (also) called Oḍḍīśa, sealed all the Krama and then took and observed a vow of silence. The members of the congregation of the Practice of the Rule (samayācāramelaka) belonging to the Kula tradition (amnāya) that were (thus) sealed (mudrita) all came at the end of the cosmic age (kalpa) and, even though they were of three kinds (i.e. belonged to the three preceding Ages), they all meet together in one place.

saṁprāpte tu kalau devi mīnīśauḍḍīśasaṁjñakaḥ [k, kh: mīnāśo-; -kaṁ] ||
mudrayitvā kramaṁ sarvaṁ maunam ādāya saṁsthitaḥ |
mudritās tu kulāmnāye [k, kh: -yaṁ] samayācāramelakāḥ ||
kalpānte āgatāḥ sarve tridhāpy ekatra [k, kh: tridhāy aikatraṁ] saṁsthitāḥ |ṢSS 43/21cd-23ab.

[3] KMT 1/57.

[4] KuKh 6/3-4ab.

[5] tūṣṇīṁ candraguhālaye suranutāṁ YKh (1) 26/56c; cf. KuKh 3/1.

is her follower, for 'taking a vow of silence he always did (everything to seek the knowledge of) Gaurī and Nirvāṇa (nirvāṇaceṣṭita)'.[1]

After achieving enlightenment, Tūṣṇīśanātha, now fully conscious of his identity with the male deity, left the cave and travelled west, the direction of Kubjikā's 'western tradition' (paścimāmnāya), towards the City of the Moon. There he met the king called Candraprabha (Moonlight) and Candrabimba. The king had a young and beautiful daughter called Gaganāvatī. At first she mocked the Siddha even though her hair stood on end at the sight of him engaged in the 'practice of the conduct of demons (piśācocchuṣmacaryā)'. When the Siddha saw the princess laughing at him, he made a great and frightening sound and in an instant flew up into the air and disappeared. The daughter of the king was astonished and, very frightened, she fainted. When she came too, trembling, she begged forgiveness as the king stood up respectfully.[2]

The Kaula Siddha is the antinomian ascetic who hides his identity by behaving like a mad man caring nothing for the world or its potentates. At the same time, like the typical Indian sage, he is very sensitive to the manner in which he is treated. This is not because he is proud. The display of his miraculous and frightening power is provoked by disrespect towards the mighty spiritual and magical power of the goddess within him. His ultimate intent is not to chastise but to grace. Thus when the princess, sent by her father to the holy Mountain of the Moon (candraśilā), worships the Siddha there, he bestows upon her and her entourage the liberated state of Flight (khecaratva) by the power of his Command.[3]

Siddhanātha spent much time on the peak of the Mountain of the Moon immersed in meditation surrounded by the divine beings and sages who came to worship him. There he installed a Siddhaliṅga, in which the goddess is worshipped and a Circle of Mothers (mātṛmaṇḍala) with the goddess Koṅkā in the centre. These he and his disciples worshipped, along with the Sixty-four Yoginīs, with libations of wine.[4] Finally, on this mountain Siddhanātha initiated nine disciples that were known as the Nine Nāthas.[5]

The first of these Siddhas was a Buddhist called Vajrabodhi,[6] whom the ṢSS depicts as an arrogant and aggressive Brahmin convert.[1] Although everybody

[1] ṢSS 43/24ab.
[2] ṢSS 43/56ab.
[3] ṢSS 43/65ab.
[4] ṢSS 43/113.
[5] ṢSS 43/176.
[6] Brahmins were converting to Buddhism from the Buddha's time. Many of the major exponents of the Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna were originally Brahmins. One was Vajrabodhi is namesake who was well known in the south of India where the ṢSS, or at least this chapter of it, was redacted. According to the Chinese chronicles, this other Vajrabodhi was born in the Malaya kingdom in disliked him, Vajrabodhi was the teacher of the king of Candrapura. His conversion and that of his royal disciple heralded the spread of Kubjikā's cult in Koṅkaṇa. Thus, the ṢSS describes this important event in some detail.[2] There we read that the king and his chaplain were returning to Candrapura with the army after a battle. On the way, they heard that a powerful Siddha was staying in a nearby cremation ground. Curious to meet him, the king went there with Vajrabodhi, where they found him sitting immobile in the shade of a tamarind tree. Siddhanātha was engaged, no doubt, in contemplating Kubjikā, the goddess of the tamarind, rising by her power through the planes of meditative absorption. The depth of his concentration impressed them, especially the king, who offered his respects. However, the Siddha was so immersed in meditation that the king was unable to rouse him and the more he tried to do so, the more he became angry. Then the proud Vajrabodhi, commanded by the king, started shouting at the Yogi and made loud noises. Seeing that this had no effect, he began to abuse him. To this, the angered Siddhanātha finally responded. By the power of his Command, a disembodied voice was heard and he shook his index finger at them shouting "hā hā hā". Fire and smoke came from his nose, mouth and ears that filled the surrounding land and sky. The king and his attendants were paralysed by the Siddha's power and stood before him unable to flee, trembling and fainting with fear. The earth quaked and the seas became stormy. The trees of the surrounding forests crashed to the ground. Apart from the tamarind tree under which the Siddha sat, everything shook as the proud Vajrabodhi fell senseless to the ground.[3]

Seeing this, the king became angry with Vajrabodhi and chastised him for his evil mind (durbodhi). Released from his paralysis, the king prostrated before the Siddha. He exhorted him to be compassionate and praised him as the teacher of the world. The sage, thus placated by the king, gave him the grace of his Command and said to him: "Establish a great kingdom! Conqueror the ten directions! Go, go, great king and establish a kingdom at my Command!" Then he warned him that if he breaks the Rule (samaya) of the Kaula path, he will be south India. At the age of ten he took his first vow and went to study at both Nalanda and Vallabhi where he received the title 'Tripiṭakācārya'. He studied Tantric Buddhism from the south Indian monk Nāgabodhi. The Pallava king, Narasiṁha the Second asked him to pray for rain when a severe famine afflicted the region around Kanchipuram, which was granted. Vajrabodhi went to Ceylon from Kanchi and when he returned left for China to spread Vajrayāna. He reached Ch'ang-an with his disciple Amoghavajra in 720 AD where Śubhākara, another Vajrayāna monk, resided. Vajrabodhi translated twenty-four Vajrayāna texts into Chinese. He died in 741 CE at the age of 71. Saroja 1999: 131.

---

[1] ṢSS 43/139cd. See note 31 to KuKh 46/45.

[2] The reader will find the complete account in the translation and notes of chapter forty-six of our text.

[3] ṢSS 43/139cd. See note 31 to KuKh 46/45.

punished by the rays of the angered deity's power and that Kubjikā, the supreme goddess, commanded that if any man in his kingdom were to be devoted to any other deity apart from her, it would be destroyed.[1] Then turning to Vajrabodhi, who still lay there unconscious before him, Siddhanātha touched his head with his foot to awaken him. Vajrabodhi, coming too, recognising the Siddha's great power, begged to be forgiven. Humbly he prostrated before him and praised him, asking for the grace of devotion.[2] Siddhanātha, pleased with him, gave him yogic powers, just as he had bestowed royal power on the king. He promised Vajrabodhi that would be initiated on the Mountain of the Moon and be born, along with others, into the goddess's Kula.[3] Vajrabodhi bowed his head and the sage became silent.[4]

The Tantra goes on to narrate how another time, when Śrīnātha was sitting under the same tamarind tree, other Siddhas came and attacked him. He looked at them angrily and uttered the syllable HŪṀ from which emerged a magic pill (guṭikā) that struck them with such great force that they fell on the ground. Distraught and worried, lest they be struck again by the magic pill, and awed by Śrīnātha's power, they prostrated before him.[5] He calmed them and liberated them.

We shall see in the following section of this chapter that Siddhanātha's nine disciples appear regularly in the Kubjikā sources as the Nine Nāthas along with the Sixteen Siddhas who were their disciples. The account in the ṢSS clearly implies that these are the other eight Siddhas who, along with Vajrabodhi, were converted by Siddhanātha and became the Nine Nāthas. They are not expressly said to be Buddhists although their aggressive behaviour suggests it. However another source, the Kubjikānityāhnikatilaka, explicitly says that Siddhanātha converted a number of Buddhist monks.[6] The KnT is a derivative text, not a Tantra and so is probably reporting a common tradition that developed in some Kubjikā sources I have not been able to trace apart from the ṢSS. The following is Schoterman's summarized translation (1983: 38) of the relevant passage in the KnT:

> On the instigation of Śrīśāmbhunātha (that is, Śiva) Śrīnātha went to Gandharvaloka. There the Buddhists (saugata) asked him who he might be, and what the object of his coming was. When Śrīnātha told them that he was a Siddha who had obtained the supreme, divine instruction (divyājñāvaralabdhaka) the

[1] ṢSS 43/148.
[2] ṢSS 43/152-157ab.
[3] ṢSS 43/163ab.
[4] Ibid. 43/166ab.
[5] ṢSS 43/169ab.
[6] See KnT 1/188 ff. This account is part of a long passage dealing with all the teachers.

Buddhist monks (vandaka) laughed at him, and invited him to prove his statement. Thereupon Śrīnātha pronounced the sacred syllable HŪṀ, and all the lofty *vihāra*s of the monks collapsed. The monks acknowledged the authority of Śrīnātha, and were subsequently converted to him.

These stories may well correspond to reality in some loose way. Buddhism was a powerful presence in the Deccan when the ṢSS was redacted. It had already spread to Maharasthra during the reign of emperor Aśoka in the 4th century BCE. The following centuries witnessed the excavation of a series of rock-cut caves in the Sahya ranges in the Koṅkaṇa region especially in the third century CE when the Satavāhana kings ruled the Deccan with their capital at Pratisthan (which is modern Paithan in the Aurangabad district). From the 2nd century CE onwards these Hinayāna caves were altered to fit the new Mahāyāna doctrines and new shrines were added to them. Buddhist monasteries were also established. Subsequently, the Vajrayāna also spread to these regions. Signs of all these developments are apparent in the Buddhist caves of Panhhale Kaji, not far from Goa, which is where the ancient city of Candrapura was located.[1] Judging by the many common sacred sites we find in Buddhist and Śaivite sources redacted in the last quarter of the first millennium, the presence of both in the same region is not surprising. Koṅkaṇa is the very first entry amongst the twenty-four sacred sites described in the Āmnāyamañjarī, a commentary on the Saṁpuṭatantra written by Abhayākaragupta who lived from the 11th century to the first quarter of the 12th. Probably redacted before the standard set of twenty-four sites, we find in the later Buddhist Tantras had developed, only six sites are mentioned in the Saṁpuṭatantra itself. There too Koṅkaṇa is the first amongst them.[2] The reason for this may well be because the Tantra was redacted there.

---

[1] Concerning the geographical location of Candrapura, see intro. vol. 3, p. 303?? ff.. Wayman (1995: 156) reports that: While in India in August 1994, M. N. Deshpande informed me of his treatise The Caves of Panhhale Kaji (ancient Praṇālaka), a Memoir of the Archaeological Survey of India, Janpath, New Delhi, wherein he describes unearthing a tantric site 200 miles south of Bombay, and slightly north of present Goa, including finding the Buddhist tantric deity Mahācaṇḍaroṣaṇa.

[2] The others are: Candradvīpa (south-east Bengal), Aṭṭahāsa (Bengal), Devīkoṭṭa (north Bengal), Haridvāra (modern Hardvar), and Jālandhara (Himachal Pradesh). See KuKh vol. 4, appendix 8, table 21.

The Nine Nāthas and Sixteen Siddhas

Prototypes of the Siddhas and Teachers

We have seen that according to the ṢSS the First Siddha initiated nine disciples. These were the Nine Nāthas who achieved the supreme state and became teachers in their turn. Their disciples were the Sixteen Siddhas, who also had their disciples. Beyond them are the lineages of teachers that extend down to the initiate's own teacher and himself. This scheme emerged progressively as the system taught in the Kubjikā Tantras developed. Let us see what the sources have to say about them and observe how this development took place. In order to do this we will look at the sources one at a time arranging them in a roughly chronological order. We have noted already that the KMT is virtually silent about the tradition and its transmission beyond its initial revelation by the goddess to the god and to the Siddhas in the sacred seats. Even so, the KMT does prescribe the worship of the lineages of teachers up to one's own within the Gurumaṇḍala, but does not define its contents.[1] We notice the first development towards the final scheme in YKh (1), to which we turn our attention first.

The first recension of the YKh does refer to the Nine and Sixteen Siddhas, but they are invariably presented as the sonic energies of letters. A few teachers are mentioned, apart from the Siddhas of the sacred seats, but no attempt is made to present these two groups as human teachers. The association between sonic energies and concrete, historical lineages of teachers is easily made because both are understood as a series of interconnected links. The YKh (1) presents the goddess's 'lineage', the teaching and tradition (santāna, anvaya) as a flow of energy from the source Triangle. This is the inner source and ultimate fundamental nature of the outer lineage of teachers.[2] This inner grounding is represented concretely in YKh (1) as the Divine Current of Eighteen teachers who live as Skyfarers in the transcendent beyond the corporeal state that precedes the stream of human teachers. These teachers are aspects of the energy of the Transmental symbolically located beyond the body. The subsequent tradition will project the teachers that follow, the Nine Nāthas and the Sixteen Siddhas, into the subtle and gross body, respectively. Śrīnātha and his consort, the goddess, who are the last pair of the Divine Current, stand at the interface between the two levels and serve as a bridge between them.

---

[1] See below, appendix 2, p. 563 ff..

[2] The following is an example of this usage: The Lineage (santāna) of the two paths of Meru is Mātṛkā with the three divisions. The tradition (anvaya) has arisen there. Three flowers should be melted (kṣaret) from that. KuKh 58/61cd-62ab.

Śrīnātha is the deity who assumes the form of the First Teacher. The teachers at the lower levels are generated from the First Teacher just as deities are generated from the main deity. Each is an aspect or part (aṁśa) and, at the same time, the whole deity. Again, just as the deity outwardly assumes the form of the cosmic order, each teacher represents a 'part', level, or state within it. The earliest representation of this process is found in the KMT. There, as we have seen, Bhairava, the first teacher assumes the form of the Five Siddhas who govern the gross elements. Subsequently, in YKh (1) Bhairava, the First Teacher is understood in a more complex way as embodied in a series of mantras, the essence of which is the seed-syllable Navātman. In this perspective, the Nine Nāthas embody the nine letters of Navātman. The Sixteen Siddhas, who are derived from them, are the sixteen vowels. They are the energies of the lunar goddess who drips with the nectar of immortality. This nectar consecrates the neophant and so one can say that these Sixteen Siddhas are teachers who bestow the liberating initiation.

Both these sets are of primary importance in the symbolism of the Kubjikā Tantras. Navātman is both the god and the First Teacher. He is nine-fold as the nine letters that correspond to Nine Nāthas or Siddhas and their energies who are their consorts. Similarly, the sixteen Siddhas correspond to the sixteen vowels that represent the energies of the Moon. The Moon is the Command. Accordingly these sixteen are emanations and aspects of the Command. Thus, they are permutation of the lunar Divine Current. One could say, although the text do not do so explicitly, that the Sixteen Siddhas are the outer counterparts of the first sixteen members of the Divine Current, which is the inner lunar Current. The last two are not counted as they are the First Siddha and his consort. Thus the outer contents reflect the inner and are the one reality in two modalities.

The god's body is made of the Siddhas, just as the goddess's body is made of their energies. The following verses of a hymn to the goddess illustrate well how the energies that develop into the 'outer' Siddhas abide within her:

> I am she and, again (I am) one only and of many kinds, (I am) five (as the Five Siddhas) and the other (apara) couple (yugma) (at the end of the Divine Current) and in (the body which is) the city of the lord (nāthapura), (I am) one, three, nine-fold and sixteen (as the energies of the teachers) in the Sequence of the Command. The Śrīkrama family (santati) of Śambhu is the most excellent. It is the Skyfarer (khecarī) consisting of eighteen divisions in the Kulakrama, O Śrīnātha, within the lunar seat (somāsana).[1]

[1] eṣāhaṁ [ṅ: ekā-] punar eka eva vividhā paṁca tathā cāparaṁ [ṅ: ca-]

The first, endless, unborn, consisting of the three qualities, the five beginning with the Void and the rest are the agents (of spiritual action) (karakāraka), accompanied by Umā. (Located) at the end (ante) (in the final extremity of the flow of the energy of the Command), they are said to be eighteen. The primordial goddess (ādyā) is the Sixteenth (ṣoḍaśī) of the sixteen (lunar energies). She is the goddess who is Śiva (śivamayī). She is the supreme plane (bhūmikā) and, beginning with the Undivided (akhaṇḍa), is the plane encompassed by the maṇḍala and adorned by the glory (śrī) of Saṁvarta.[1]

She is the object of worship in my Kula of the sixteen-fold sequence. O Śambhu, she is by herself (spontaneously) Śāmbhavā within the lineage (santāna) as well as the plane of the sixteen which is the arising of the venerable path of (mount) Meru. O god! you are the seventeenth and I am one embraced by the Flower (of the Divine Current) * * * * * the venerable * * * * * (?),[2] the nine-fold sons and the sixteen.[3]

Again, in the world of transmigration, in the triple transmission within the three cities, in the middle, is the energy (kalā) of Śiva's Fire, which is the Vidyā, the plane of the foundation (āśrayabhūmikā) who, as the six planes, is the (goddess) Kālikā who saves (the fettered). That is merged within the Self in the abiding state of liberation * * * I am Kālikā, the destroyer (saṁhārī) while, the most

---

yugmaṁ nāthapuraikas [k, kh, gh: puneka-; ṅ: pureka] trīṇi navadhā ājñākrame ṣoḍaśa [k, kh, gh: -śaṁ; ṅ: -śaḥ] ||
śaṁbhoḥ [ṅ: -bho] śrīkramasantatiḥ [k, kh, gh: -tī; ṅ: -kamasaṁtatī] paratarā nāthakrame [k, kh, gh: - kreme] khecarī [k, kh, gh: khacarā; ṅ: -rā] bhedāṣṭādaśa [k, kh, gh: - daśā; ṅ: bhedacāṣṭada + śā] iti kulakrame śrīnātha somāsane [k, kh, gh, ṅ: sobhāsane] | YKh (1) 26/13cd-14ab.

[1] ādyānantam anantyanantatriguṇā [ṅ: ādyantaṁtamahatpranantatri-] śūnyādipañcādayā [k, kh, gh: - paścādayā; ṅ: sūnyādipaścodayā] *ete karakārakā [ṅ: kandarakārakā] umayutā [ṅ: * mayutā] ante [ṅ: a ] dviraṣṭau smṛtāḥ [k, kh, gh: -tā] ||
*ādyā [ṅ: ā ] ṣoḍaśaṣoḍaśī śivamayī devī parā bhūmikā ākhaṇḍādi ca maṇḍalāvṛtapadā saṁvartaśrīmaṇḍitā | [ṅ: this and next line missing] Ibid. (1) 26/14cd-15ab.

[2] The MSs read tuṁtutitrinaka which makes no sense.

[3] ārādhyā mama [gh: sama] ṣoḍaśakramakule śaṁbhu svayaṁ śāṁbhavī [k, kh, gh: -vā] santāne [gh: sa-; ṅ: missing] punar eva ṣoḍaśapadaṁ śrīmerumārgodayam ||
*deva tvaṁ daśasaptam ekam ahaṁ [k, kh, gh: -kaṁ; ṅ: -mekamadhi + kaiḥ] puṣpaiḥ [k, kh, gh: puṣpe] samāliṁgitā [k, kh: -liṁ * *, gh: -lī * ] *śrīmāṁtuṁtutitrinaka [kh: -tuṁntutitrinaka; gh: -tuṁtatitrinaka; ṅ: śrīmāntutitri * * * ] navadhā putrās tathā [k, kh, gh: yu-; ṅ: putrāḥkalau] ṣoḍaśa | Ibid. 26/15cd-16ab.

excellent (member of the) transmission has, in reality, been emitted with the name of Kujīśa, who is most excellent.[1]

He has made this Krama liturgy (paddhati), which is mounted in the Void. The venerable lord (īśvara) is the body (piṇḍa) and Kuṇḍalinī is the energy (kalā). She is the savour (harā) and she is six-fold (as the Krama) on the plane of the vital Self (haṁsa). Vakrā, born of the Śrīkula is encompassed by the three lineages (āvalī) and is given (dattā ?) as the Command consisting of three and a half (measures of energy)[2] and, ninefold (navadhā) as the lords (nātha) of the cities and the rest (within the body). Within the group of four (sacred seats), she is Kubjinī.[3] [. . .]

(She is) the Vidyā which is Bhairava's form (mūrtikā), the energy of Kālī in the Age of Strife, she is Kaulinī come forth from the divine in Hara's teaching, and on the Krama path she should be praised as Umā, and Carcikā. She is the Skyfarer marked with Śrīnātha, impelled (nutā) by the gods (sura), she is the mistress of the wheel (cakreśvarī), Vakrikā at the end of the couple (yugmānte), the supreme energy who is nine-fold up to the sixteen energies.[4]

The Stone of the Moon is in the centre (which is the location of) Kuṇḍalinī (nāsikā),[5] (the goddess) of Koṅkaṇa. The adepts in the mortal (world) are in the sequence of the nine (Nāthas) and the three

---

[1] saṁsāre [k, gh, ṅ: -raṁ; kh: -daṁ] puratrikrame [k, kh, gh, ṅ: puna -] tripurage [ṅ: triṣu-] madhye śivāgnerkalā [k, kh, gh: śivāgniṁ kalāṁ]
vidyā sāśrayabhūmikā [k, kh, gh: mā-; ṅ: mā--ka] ṣaṭpadabhū [k, kh, gh: -padai-; ṅ: yetryadai-] tārikakālikā [k, kh: - * kikā; gh: tpari  kikā]* ||
*tanmokṣasthitilīnamātmani ca yā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: ye] saṁhāry ahaṁ [ṅ: saṁhārya ] kālikā saṁsṛṣṭam iti tattvato [k, kh, gh: hati -] kramavaraṁ nāmnā kujīśaṁ varam | Ibid. 26/16cd-17ab.

[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 379-387.

[3] *tenaidyaṁ [ṅ: tene *] kramapaddhatir viracitārūḍhādiviṣṇvīśvaraḥ [kh: -citā * ? gh: viratritārūḍhā-; ṅ: -citāvrahmādiviṣṇīśvaraḥ]
piṁḍaṁ kuḍalinīkalā [ṅ: -kulā] kulaharā haṁse [ṅ: sa] pade ṣaḍvidhā [k, kh, ṅ: ṣaṭvidhā; gh: sadvidhā] || *vakraḥ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: vakro] śrīkulajāvalī trivalitāvṛtā [k, kh, gh: -vṛttā; ṅ: -tādṛttā?] trayordhvādikā [k, kh, gh: trayordvādikā; ṅ: tra * * dhikā]* *ājñā deva purādinātha [ṅ: -nāna] navadhā [ṅ: * vadhā] turye [ṅ: tuye] *kubjinī [k, kh, gh: ku * jinī; ṅ: kujākhañjinī]* | Ibid. 26/17cd-18ab.

[4] vidyā bhairavamūrtikā kaliyuge [k, kh, gh: kaliryege] kālīkalā kaulinī
divyotthā [k, kh, gh: divyotā; ṅ: vivyātā] haraśāsane [ṅ: hata-] kramapathe stutyā [k: stuṣyā; ṅ: puṣpā] umā carcikā ||
śrīnāthāṅkitakhecarī [k, kh, gh: -nāthākita-] suranutā cakreśvarī vakrikā [ṅ: carcikā]
*yugmānte ca parā kalā navadhā [ṅ: na * dhā] yāvat [k, kh: yāval; ṅ: yākal] kalā ṣoḍaśaḥ* |
Ibid. 26/30cd-31ab.

[5] Concerning 'nāsikā' or 'nāsā' as Kuṇḍalinī, see intro. vol. 1, p. 24 and Dyczkowski 1992: 175ff.. and above p. 446.

> (Siddhas) MI (Mitra), Ṣa (Ṣaṣṭha) and O (Oḍḍīśa) (in the three sacred seats).[1] The other sixteen who move on the earth (bhūcara) are famed as teachers in the Age of Strife. I am Vakrā who resides in the (teacher's) mouth on the (transcendental) plane of the Transmission (krama). I am the unfailing and supreme Command.[2]
>
> O god, (I) have become the Command of those teachers and reside in their mouth. One should not mention (their) caste (jāti) if men are worthy of worship by the lord's (prabhu) Command. She resides within the sequence which is such and is the excellent worshipper of the divine Transmission impelled by the god (sura). In the Śrīsamaya she is the teachers' protector (gurupālikā) and, impelled by the awakened one, bestows liberation in the Śrīśāsana.[3]

In this way the YKh (1) establishes the numerical paradigms relating to the lineages of teachers who will emerge subsequently. However, these inner representations are not enough. Each member of the tradition must be initiated into it by a teacher who has been authorized to impart it by his teacher. In other words, each initiate must belong to a lineage. Naturally, YKh (1) also affirms that this is essential:

> (Initiates) possess Navātmaka up to the seventeenth place (which is that of the supreme plane of existence).[4] Bhairava's form (is such) because (he) fills (all things) (bharaṇāt) and by recollection also (he is) Bhairava. The disciples after this are innumerable. He who knows the first convention of the Flower is a (true) teacher. One who is not part of the sequence of teachers (gurukramavinirmukta) is like a

---

[1] Concerning the three + one lineages etc. see the Navasaṅketasūtra (YKh (1) 51) in notes to KuKh 39/113-115ab where it is translated.

[2] madhye [gh: madhya] koṁkaṇanāmikādhikaraṇe [k, kh, gh: koṁkaṇanāsikādhikaraṇe; ṅ: madhyekoṇakanāśikādhi-] candraśilā [k, kh, gh: cāṁdrā-; ṅ: caṁdrāśilā] nirmitā [k, kh, gh: nimitā]
maiṣaṁ [ṅ: maiṣa] ogayakatrayaṁ [kh: ogapa-; ṅ: ḍagapakatrayaṁ] navakrame [ṅ: navakrana] martye tu ye sādhakāḥ [ṅ: -kā] ||
anye ṣoḍaśa bhūcarā guru [ṅ: + kra] me kīrtyā kalau [ṅ: kalai] netarāḥ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -rā] vakrāhaṁ [ṅ: ca-] ca mukhasthitā kramapade ājñā amoghā parā | YKh (1) 26/31cd-32ab.

[3] teṣāṁ deva kalau yuge pariṇatā ājñā gurūṇāṁ mukhā [ṅ: mukāt] teṣāṁ [gh: teṣā] jātiṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: jāti] na [gh: ma] carcayed [k, kh, gh, ṅ: cāccared] yadi narāḥ pūjyāḥ prabhātājñayā [k, kh, gh: prabhārājñayā; ṅ: prabhorājñayā] || *īdṛgbhāvakramāśritā suranutā [k, gh: śuraṇutādi; kh: suraṇu ] divyakramasyārcikā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -rccakā]
śrīsamaye gurupālikā [k, kh, gh: - dhālakā; ṅ: -pālakā] budhanutā [ṅ: vidhenutā] śrīsāsane [ṅ: śrīśā-] muktidā | Ibid. 26/32cd-33ab.

[4] See intro. 1, 414, 417, 420 and KuKh 25/39cd-40, n. 17.

> thief in (this) school (śāsana). One should never show the scripture (āgama) (to such a one) or place it in (his) hand. One should never let go of the thread of the scripture (that binds it together). (The power of) Kauladharma functions (only) after one has learnt this teaching (āmnāya). One who is (properly) initiated into the Western House has descended through the series of teachers (pāramparyakrama). One should worship that and offer (all one's) wealth (to the teacher and the lineage).[1]

However, although YKh (1) declares that the initiate is, by virtue of his initiation, a part of the lineage, the members of this lineage are not named. It is left an open possibility. Get initiation and you will belong to an authetic lineage, provided that the teacher from whom you have received initiation 'knows' the Divine Current and hence is connected to it. Even so, there must be a 'sequence of teachers', which should be worshipped beginning with the First Teacher, Navātmābhairava, up to one's own teacher. This is done in the Gurumaṇḍala. In the more developed rite, as we find it in the KuKh and elsewhere, the Gurumaṇḍala is drawn separately behind the Kramamaṇḍala. A chapter of the ŚM teaches the use of the same Kramamaṇḍala as the place to project the teachers thus transforming it into the Gurumaṇḍala. There the 'teachers' are the personified energies of the letters of Navātman. They are represented equally as Bhairavas or Siddhas. It is essential, as the Tantra tirelessly repeats, to worship the teacher as a part of the lineage. So, at a time when there was still no detailed account of the previous teachers, the matter was resolved in this way. Subsequently, the tradition elaborates on the identity of the Nine Nāthas and the Sixteen Siddhas, supplying them, by means of their hagiographies, with palpable

---

[1] yāvat saptādaśasthānaṁ [g: saṣṭā-] tāvat [k, gh, ṅ: tāvaṁ] teṣāṁ navātmakam ||
bharaṇād bhairavākāraṁ smaraṇād api bhairavaḥ [k, ṅ: -va] | ataḥ parās tu [2: parāś ca] ye śiṣyās teṣāṁ [k, gh, ṅ: śiṣyā teṣāṁ; 2: śiṣyā yāvad] saṁkhyā na [2: aṣṭādaśa] vidyate [2: kramāt] || [2: + k: tāvaṁ (kh: tāvan) teṣāṁ navātmānaṁ bharaṇād bhairavaṁ vapuḥ | anye ye 'pi bhaviṣyanti teṣāṁ saṁkhyā na vidyate |]
prathamaṁ puṣpasaṁketaṁ [k, gh: -ta] yo jānāti [k, gh: jñānāti; g: jñāati] sa deśikaḥ |
*gurukramavinirmuktaḥ [g: -kta; 2: k: -muktā; kh: -mukto] śāsane [2: kh: śāsa ?] cauravad [2: kh: ?] yathā [k, gh: yavo; 2: kh: ?] ||
āgamaṁ [2: na tasya] naiva [2: āgamaṁ] darśeta [k, gh, ṅ: darśyeta; 2: dadyāt] haste 'pi [2: sarvathā] ca [g: na; 2: k, kh: tyajya] na [2: nāsti] dāpayet [g: pradāpayet; 2: pāpakṛt] |
na [g: ta] tyajed bandhanaṁ [k, gh: urddharaṁ; ṅ: urddhaṁraṁ] sūtraṁ āgamasya kadācana || [2: missing]
ity āmnāyaṁ [2: sadācāra] purā [2: paras] jñātvā [2: yāpi] kauladharmaḥ [k, ṅ: kaulaṁdharma; g: -dharmaṁ; 2: kuladharma] pravartate |
pārmaparyakramāyāto [g: -taṁ; 2: -yātaṁ] dīkṣitaḥ [2: -taṁ] paścime gṛhe [2: paścimānvaye] || [this and following line missing in MSs K, Gh, and Ṅ] pūjayet tat prayatnena sarvasvaṁ ca nivedayet | YKh (1) 27/64cd-69ab.

identities. This is beginning to take place in the first recension of the YKh (1), but in an unsystematic way and not related directly to the groups of Siddhas.

Thus, apart from the four Siddhas of the sacred seats, two teachers are mentioned in the Sūtra of Thirty-six (verses) (Ṣaṭtriṁśadvṛttasūtra) of YKh (1). This sūtra eulogizes the teachers progressively at each stage of the transmission. The last two may have been actual historical figures. The first is Vajrabodhi who, we have seen, appears in the ṢSS as a Buddhist who was converted by Siddhanātha and was the first of the Nine Nāthas. However, although the following passage from YKh (1), agrees that he was originally a 'Brahmin Bodhisattva', that is, Brahmin Buddhist convert, he is portrayed as the teacher of twenty-six unnamed disciples and is not related to the Nine Nāthas. The passage reads:

> (There was a) Brahmin Bodhisattva in (the city) called the Moon * * * (?) with anger, the great soul again and with force appointed him to authority. He disappeared and that instant (all his) transitory desires came to an end by (his) divine thought. I bow to that Nātha with devotion, the venerable Oṁkāranātha who is the churning of supreme power (bala).[1]
>
> The one who is called Vajrabodhi, his body pure by (the observance of) vows  (?) is the Siddha, an aspect (aṁśa) of Bhairava who, because he protects the Mother's Rule is respected by (all) yogis. I bow to (this) Siddhanātha, also called Tārānātha, who has brought bliss to all (the world) and who has consecrated twenty-six disciples, whose impurities were destroyed in an instant on the path of the Siddhas.[2]

The other teacher is Vatsagulma[3] who appears in the later scheme as the second of the Sixteen Siddhas. The next three verses are dedicated to him in which we are told that he became an elephant called Mada who, hard to control,

---

[1] candrākhye [g: cadvākhye] bodhisattvaṁ dvijamayanipatis trīṇyenagnā tu gṛha (?) sānukrośo [g: manukroso] mahātmā punar api rabhasāt saṁprayojyādhikāre [g: -prayodyā ?] | antardhānaṁ [g: tarddhānam] babhūva kṣaṇarucinidhanam tatkṣaṇād divyacintyā [g: vivya-] taṁ [g: ta] nāthaṁ naumi bhaktyā parabalamathanaṁ śrīmadoṁkāranātham [g: śrīmadoṁkāra-] || YKh (1) 39/30.

[2] nāmnā yo vajrabodhiḥ [g: ye dvajabodhi] vratavimalatanuḥ kādyaśca dvāgapāṇi (?) so siddho bhairavāṁśo 'mbasamayavaraṇād [g: bhaireveśo-] yogibhiḥ sadkṛtena ṣaḍviṁśad yena śiśyān [śikhyān] kṣaṇagatakaluṣān siddhamārge 'bhiṣiktān tārānāthāparākhyaṁ tam akhilamuditaṁ siddhanāthaṁ namāmi || YKh (1) 39/31.

[3] Vatsagulma is the place of origin of the Vākāṭakas who ruled in the Gupta period (320-600 CE) over a large area of central India. It has been identified with a town called Vashim in the Akola district. Deshpande 1986: 11. See below, p. 529, table of Sixteen Siddhas.

was like a mountain peak. The last verse concludes that those who recollect the initiates who possesses genuine devotion at the three times of the day and shine as the Krama teachers, easily enter into the universal cause which is incomparable expansion (prasara).[1] One wonders why as many as three long verses are dedicated to Vatsagulma. One gets the impression that he is not just a stereotype. The attention paid to him and the fact that he is not presented as the member of a group whose number could be just symbolic, makes one wonder whether he was a historical figure. Indeed, perhaps he was the teacher of the author of this sūtra. According to the later scheme he is a disciple of one of Vajrabodhi's disciples. In this case he may be a disciple of one of the twenty-six Vajrabodhi is said to have initiated. Whatever be the case, it appears that in this passage we find a precursor of the later systematic presentation of the lineages of Siddhas.

Here and there in the early Kubjikā sources we find references to other Siddhas who appear in the well ordered lists of the later sources. One is Gaganānanda, the first of the Nine Nāthas.[2] Another is Vaṭapura who is the fifth of the Sixteen Siddhas.[3]

Finally, it is clear that even though we observe this development from ideal to historical, the Kubjikā tradition considers all the Siddhas, including the first one, to be authentically historical persons. Thus we find several hymns in the later corpus attributed to one or other of them. For example, the Śrīmatasārasaṁgraha concludes with a hymn to the goddess (devīstotra) attributed to Gaganadeva, who was the first of the Nine Nāthas. Similarly, there are several hymns in the SKh attributed to the three Siddhas of the main sacred seats.

The Teachers according to the Kularatnoddyota

The Triadic Universe and the Three Lineages

The following stage develops in the Kularatnoddyota. There the teachers and their lineages are described twice in two different ways, first in chapter nine and then again in chapter thirteen. We begin with chapter nine. There we find long lists of names of the teachers, nonetheless it is clear that they are not historical personages whose identity extends no further than a name. Moreover, they are not

[1] Ibid. 39/33-36.

[2] This reference is found in the KRU which lists the names of twelve couples of a lineage (santāna) that includes Matsyendra who is with Matsyodarī. The list concludes with Gaganānanda who sits on the venerable Kadamba (tree) as his seat (KRU 10/77).

[3] The venerable (sacred seat called) Mātaṅga is Stillness (nirācāra) and should be worshipped on the head. It has one form and possesses Mātaṅgī and Vīra. It has the Seed of Power and should be worshipped in the west. This is associated with the Siddha called Vaṭapura, whose power is astonishing. (KRU 10/70-71).

arranged in the format which came to be the standard one. However, they do share one feature in common with it and that is their arrangement into three lineages, although they are not those we commonly find in the later sources.

The first half of chapter nine recounts the various incarnations of the goddess and the god (mūrtyaṁśasaṁbhūti) in this and preceding aeons and ages.[1] The second half goes on to deal with the relationship between the teachers (gurusaṁbandha). These are the Siddhas who will bring Kula doctrine down into the world. As they descend down with it, they form lineages within the fundamental principles from which the world and the teachings are emitted. The initial station of this descent is the Śiva principle. The First Teacher is created here from the union of the god and the goddess along with the divine lineage (pāramparya) of teachers. As the KRU says:

> (Those) people who reside in the Śiva principle in this way are in three lines. O mistress of the gods, they will be initiated into the Kulakrama and, when that has taken place, a certain master (rāṭ) Siddha who is manifest (to all) will be born of mine and your union. O fair lady, born in the Void (kheja) and not of mortal womb (ayonija), he will be the lord of the Skyfarers. O great goddess, he will be called Siddhanātha.
>
> He will also have two types of disciples, those with divine and those with mortal (adivya) forms (mūrti). O goddess, from aeon to aeon in (many) greater cosmic ages they are the protectors of the unfailing Command in accord with the nature of (each particular) age.[2]

These Siddhas are the fifty limbs (aṁśa) of Bhairava. Ranging from Śrīkaṇṭha to Saṁvarta, they are the Bhairavas who govern the letters, arranged here in three 'lineages'.[3] They follow the deity's will and are destined to bring the

---

[1] KRU 9/1-32.

[2] evaṁ paṅktitraye [g: -traya] saṁsthāḥ [g: saṁsthā] śivatattvāśritā [k kh: -taṁ; g: -tāñ] janāḥ [k kh g: janaṁ] ||
kathayiṣyanti deveśi dīkṣayitvā [g: dīkṣayaitvā] kulakramam |
mama te saṅgajaḥ kaścit siddharāṭ vyaktalakṣaṇaḥ ||
ayonijo [kh: ajonije] varārohe khejaḥ khecaranāyakaḥ |
*bhaviṣyati [g: bhaviṣyanti] mahādevi siddhanātheti [k: -nāthe ] saṁjñayā ||
tasyāpi dvividhāḥ śiṣyā divyāś cādivyamūrtayaḥ |
kalpamanvantaraiś [g: kalpamanvaraiś] caiva tathā devi yuge yuge || yugadharmānurūpeṇa amoghājñāprapālakāḥ | KRU 9/44-48ab.

[3] The three lineages are as follows: 1) Śrīkaṇṭha to Caturāsya – the twenty-four Siddhas who govern the letters from A to Ja; 2) Ajeśa to Dviraṇḍa – the sixteen Siddhas who govern the letters from Jha to Bha and 3) Mahākāla to Saṁvarta – the ten Siddhas who govern the letters from Ma to KṢa.

Paścima Kula down to earth and grace the beings who reside in the Śiva principle. These are the 'divine' teachers which the Tantra takes care to distinguish from the 'non-divine', mortal ones, just as the later ṢSS distinguishes between sixteen 'divine' Siddhas and those who 'will be men'.[1] The mortal 'non-divine' teachers are analogously arranged in three lines. These are ṛṣis, teachers and disciples numbering twenty-two, twenty-five, and twenty, respectively, each of which is noted by name.[2] They all possess 'astonishing energy' (tejas) and arise out of 'the principle born from an aspect (aṁśa) of the god'.[3] They belong to the Kula tradition (kulāmnāya) and will give initiation, explain the scriptures and grace many.

Next, below that level, is the principle of Puruṣa. The Siddhas who reside here are aspects (aṁśaka) of the three qualities (guṇa) of Nature. There are thirty-two Siddhas in sattva, thirty in rajas and twenty-one in tamas; all named one by one.[4] All of them are accompanied by a consort (śakti). Below these are the Siddhas born from that aspect (aṁśa) of the god which is manifest-cum-unmanifest (vyaktāvyakta). 'They will awaken the triple world with the awakened consciousness of the Command'. They are of four types according to whether they are born from sweat, dung, seed or egg.[5]

The KRU goes on to describe the spiritual birth of Mitranātha, the First Siddha. Then it lists the names of Mitranātha's disciples. There are twenty groups of them, each corresponding to a cosmic age (kalpa), varying from two to seven Siddhas. Next the god states the number of Siddhas who come from various parts of his body starting from his forehead down to his feet. The god concludes by saying that these beings are born from parts of himself (aṁśaja)[6] and will belong to one of the disciples of (presumably) Mitranātha who is intent on meditation (samādhi). They will number ninety-two.[7]

We turn now to the account in chapter thirteen of the KRU. This is the Ādisūtra we have already had occasion to refer to for a description of the exploits of Vṛkṣanātha, the First Siddha. There we noted that it differs from the rest of the KRU because of it refers to Candrapura which, even though it is the final destination of the First Siddha, is not mentioned elsewhere in the KRU. Here, the presentation of the Nine Nāthas and Sixteen Siddhas is consistent with the other sources related to Candrapura and Koṅkaṇa. Although these vary as to where they

---

[1] KuKh 46/134-138.
[2] KRU 9/51-64ab.
[3] KRU 9/51.
[4] KRU 9/66-81ab.
[5] KRU 9/85cd-88.
[6] This term is commonly used to denote the god's partial incarnations as Siddhas who impart Kula doctrine.
[7] KRU 9/123-128.

say the Siddhas originated, they all agree that they received initiation in Candrapura and spread the teachings from there. The first account of the teachers in the KRU was not taken up subsequently. Instead the tradition accepted this version of the transmission which is related to the teachers of Candrapura.

The Ādisūtra of the KRU is the first text that has come down to us in which the figure of the First Teacher and the members of his lineages begin to assume a historic form, Although the latter have only a tenuous, nameless identity in the Ādisūtra, an attempt is made to tease out the profiles of 'historical' figures. However, this is largely limited to Vṛkṣanātha. The reference in the following passage to king Ṣāṣṭha may be an authentically historical one.[1] The text to which we now turn, largely speaks for itself. Mitranātha praises the goddess who is present in the tripartite universe into which the teachers are divided. The triadic division of the universe is mirrored by the triadic modality of the Krama transmitted through the three lineages. The Nine Nāthas are not mentioned specifically, but their characteristic configuration into three groups of three has already been established.

> O goddess, (you possess all the) divine authority you desire by virtue of the variety of experiences (that arise by the practice) of the Yoga of the intense form of (your) Command. (You exercise this authority) in the sky, on the surface of the earth, in the root of the seven lower worlds, that is, in the heavenly world, in the middle region, and in the city of the lord of the demons and the abodes of the Yakṣas and Rakṣasas.
>
> The divine and non-divine current of the Krama has three modalities (trividhagati). They are, according to the names given to divisions of the lineages (oli) whose glories have been revealed by the tradition (krama) of the path of the Siddhas, (the sequences of) the Eldest, the one called the Middle One and (the sequence of the) Child. O goddess, having done this everything in the teaching is an object of worship (pūjya) and removes all impurity.[2]

---

[1] See intro. vol. 3, p. 305.

[2] tīvrājñāyogabhogair nabhasi bhuvi tale saptapātālamūle svarloke cāntarikṣe asurapatipure yakṣarakṣālayeṣu | ājñāyogair vicitrair nijarucividhinā [kh: ājñāyogairvicitai] devi divyādhikāraṁ divyādivyaṁ kramaughaṁ [k kh g: kramoghaṁ] trividhagatiyutaṁ jyeṣṭhamadhyākhyabālam || olīsaṁjñāvibhāgaiḥ [kh: olīśaṁjñā-] prakaṭitavibhavaiḥ [k kh g: -vibhavais] siddhamārgakrameṇa
kṛtvaivaṁ [kh: kṛtvevaṁ] devi sarvaṁ sakalamalaharaṁ śāsane pūjyabhūtam | KRU 13/17-18ab.

Just as in the later, more elaborate accounts, Vṛkṣanātha makes nine main disciples who live in the three regions of the universe. Again, just as in the later accounts, they have sixteen disciples in the three lineages. They are eight in that of the Child, one in the Middle One and seven in the lineage of the Eldest:

> Then, after he has done (all) that, he to whom all the gods bow (with respect) will come by the path of the venerable Kujeśī of the Wheel in the Void (khecakra). O divine one, in order to make the forest of the lotuses of Kula bloom of those nine (who were his main disciples), three who were without blame, attained authority above, three below, and three on the surface of the earth.
>
> (He went on to) initiate the Sun, Nāga (who is the Lord of the Snakes), Rakṣa, who is the finest jewel of the (cosmic) ocean, Śakra, Kūrma, Piśāca and others ending with the Lord of the Heroes and the holy (inhabitants of) many countries. The third one of these is Ṣaṣṭha who belongs to a family of kings. This is how I worship.
>
> O goddess, these three will have (many) sons. Three currents (oli) (will) come forth of eight, one, and seven (Siddhas). O venerable Kujā, they will have fifty-two, fifty-two, eighty-four and eight-four sons. O Kujeśānī, the garland of their lineage (santāna) (will number) eight-four people (puruṣa) as long as the Command continues (to operate).[1]

---

[1] paścāt khecakramārgaṁ [g: -mārgo] sakalasuranutaḥ [g: -sulanutaḥ] śrīkujeśy āgamiṣye [k kh: kujesyāga-] teṣāṁ divye navānāṁ [g: -nā] kulakamalavanotphullahetor anindyās- [kh: kulamakala-; g: -valosphullahetoramindyās]
trīṇy ūrdhve [g: -rddha] trīṇy adhastāt [kh: trīśyavastā; g: triṇyavastrā] kṣititalanilaye [g: -laya] trīṇi gatvādhikāram | [g: + yā śrī nānyā tu nityaṁ sakalasuragaṇai śrīkuje siddhimārge |]
sūryaṁ nāgaṁ ca rakṣaṁ udadhimaṇivaraṁ [k: -madhivaraṁ; kh: -manivaraṁ] śakrakūrmaṁ [kh g: -kūrmā] piśācam [kh: pisācaṁ] ||
vīrādhīśān [kh: vīrāvīṁ-] tu [k kh g: ti] cānyān [k kh g: -kānyān] vividhajanapadān bhāvitān dīkṣayitvā [kh: vīkṣa-] |
ādyas teṣāṁ [k kh: ādyasthasya?; g: -sthāsya] tṛtīyaḥ [k, kh: -yo, g: -yā] kṣitipakulabhavo [k, kh, g: -vo] ṣaṣṭha ity evam īḍe [k kh g: -ḍye] || [g: + nityā nitye va vande sakalabhayaharaṁ trābhimāṁ kubjinātam]
teṣāṁ devi trayāṇāṁ tu bhaviṣyanti sutāḥ [kh: sutā] pṛthak |
aṣṭaikasaptasaṁkhyābhir olitrayavisarpitāḥ [k: -bhi litrayaviśarpitāḥ; kh: -tā; g: -sarpvitāḥ] ||
teṣāṁ putrā dvipañcāśad dvipañcāśat [g: -śat] tathaiva ca |
catvāro 'śīti cāśītiḥ [k kh g: -ti] śrīkuje [g: -kujā] caturādhikā ||
teṣāṁ santānamālā tu aśīticaturādhikā |
puruṣāṇāṁ [kh: puruṣānāṁ] kujeśāni yāvadājñā [g: -jñā] bhaviṣyati || KRU 13/30-34.

The tradition that was lost in a previous Age will be recovered by Vṛ.kṣanātha who will re-establish it just as it was before in the fifth sacred seat, that is, Candrapura.

> (The Command can be) very intense (atitīvrā), intense (tīvrā), weak (mandā), and most weak (mandatarā). O mother of Kula, being such, after dissolving away, he will attain the Command.
>
> Now, after this, Vṛkṣanātha himself will again certainly establish manifold authority in the fifth sacred seat after going there. There will again be a descent of Siddhas divided into (groups of) nine and sixteen. Once this has taken place, he will again attain Flight (khegati) by the Command of Mitreśvara.
>
> O goddess, their lineage will again be in the aforementioned manner, two of fifty-two and two of eighty-four. O mistress of Kula, they will also certainly have (spiritual) progeny and a lineage in the aforementioned way. By this same Kramayoga the aforementioned lineage will exist again in the three aeons up to the end of the Kali age.[1]

According to this presentation the Sixteen Siddhas had one hundred and eighty-eight disciples. According to the later tradition starting from the KuKauM down to the KuKh[2] they had 163 disciples (called puruṣas). Although those are also divided into three groups according to the three lineages to which they belong, they are not the same. Otherwise the other details relating to the 'nine and the sixteen' are the same as we find in the later tradition that fills them out and adds others. It is to this that we now turn.

---

[1] atitīvrā ca tīvrā ca mandā mandatarā tathā |
evaṁ bhūtvā layaṁ paścād yāsyaty ājñāṁ kulāmbike ||
athātaḥ pañcame pīṭhe vṛkṣanāthaḥ svayaṁ punaḥ |
gatvādhikāraṁ vividhaṁ kariṣyati na saṁśayaḥ ||
navaṣoḍaśabhedaiś ca [k kh g: -dena] punaḥ siddhāvatāraṇam |
kṛtvā mitreśvarājñātaḥ punar eṣyati [g: punarevanti] khegatim [kh: ṣegatiṁ; g: -ti] ||
teṣāṁ pūrvoktavidhinā devi [kh: devī] santānasantatiḥ |
dvipañcāśad [kh: dvipañca; g: dvipañcad] dvayaṁ [g: dvaya] devi [g: deveśi] dve 'śītiścaturādhike [kh: -ti caturā-; g: dvyeśīticatu-] ||
punas teṣāṁ puroktena mārgeṇa kulanāyike |
santānaṁ [k kh g: -na] santatiś caiva bhaviṣyati na saṁśayaḥ [kh: śaṁsayaḥ] ||
anena kramayogena yāvat kaliyugāntikam |
punaḥ puroktaṁ [g: -kta] santānaṁ [k: santāṁ] bhaviṣyati yugatraye || KRU 13/35-40.

[2] KuKh 7/81-82. See note there where their names recorded in the Ṭīkā are listed.

The Kulakaulinīmata and the Later Tradition

We begin by examining the group of Nine Nāthas. This group is unknown outside the Kubjikā tradition and so is hardly know at all. However, there is a very well known group of nine Nātha Siddhas related to Gorakhanātha (13th century?) who are venerated by his followers as nine founder figures. Perhaps this paradigm was inspired by the Kubjikā Tantras with which some of these 'later day' Siddhas may have had a connection in the early period of their formation. If so, they emptied the contents of this paradigm to replace them with their own legendary founder figures who, apart from Matsyendranātha and Jālandharanātha, are unknown to the Kubjikā Tantras. The reason why the group of nine Siddhas was chosen and other groupings were ignored may simply be because a group of nine can be conveniently worshipped in the eight directions with the first Nātha in the centre.

Returning to the Kubjikā tradition, we continue with a presentation of the form the paradigm ultimately assumed. This is laid out for the first time, it seems, in the KuKauM. According to the KuKauM, Mitranātha made nine disciples in Candrapura in Koṅkaṇa. These are called the Current of Men (puruṣaugha) that Mitrīśa, the First Teacher of this Age, generated as his spiritual sons. [1] These Nine Nāthas originally resided in his body as his vital breaths[2] from which they emerged and were born as men in nine places.[3] Note that according this account the First Lord (Ādinātha) who generated the Nine Nāthas is Mitra not Vṛkṣanātha, as we find in other sources.[4] This is not a small detail. According to those sources the Nine Nāthas are inwardly and originally the nine letters of the Navātman. As such they are aspects or, literally, parts (aṁśa) of Vṛkṣanātha, the Lord of the Tree who is the embodiment of the Navātman - the Tree. Arranged in an ascending order, the End of the Nine is the transcendental Void of the Śāmbhava state[5] which is the essential nature of Vṛkṣanātha the First Teacher, as it is of the Nine Nāthas.

---

[1] KuKauM 1/89.

[2] KuKauM 1/43cd- 46ab.

[3] KuKauM 1/46cd-48. The nine places the Nāthas were born are listed in the table below as the birth places of the Nine Nāthas. The vital breaths are listed, in the same standard order, and discussed in KuKh 40/31cd-32ab and the notes.

[4] See, for example, KuKh 7/67cd-68ab. Although, as we shall see, it is significant that the KuKauM chooses to have Mitranātha as the First Siddha, the tradition is quite clear that he is Vṛkṣanātha also. Thus the AS (8/66ab) says:

Vṛkṣanātha, called Mitra is (the Siddha) of the First Seat and Kāmaru.

vṛkṣanāthaṁ mitrasaṁjñaṁ [-jñā] ādyapīṭhaṁ ca kāmaru [kāmaruṁ] |

[5] See above p. 435.

Although the KMT is quite clear that it was the goddess who installed the Siddhas in their principle sacred seats, the later accounts present the First Nātha as their teacher and, as such, the source of the three lineages they founded. This is taught in the Sūtra of the City of the Moon, which is part of chapter seven of the KuKh. According to this Sūtra, Vṛkṣanātha is also the teacher of the Nine Nāthas who belonged to these three lineages,[1] even though one would suppose that they should have been the disciples of the Siddhas of the three seats. The KuKh claims that the Sūtra of the Moon is the first, introductory sūtra (pratijñāsūtra) of this Kula scripture.[2] It is indeed possible that it was originally one of the sūtras of an earlier compilation that developed into the MBT. Be that as it may, this claim does in fact reflect a new departure in the development of the tradition.

According to the KuKauM, the Nine Nāthas existed in various forms in the three previous Ages. In these three Ages, one amongst them were leaders of lineages (ovalli) just as Mitranātha is the First Teacher of this Age. In the first Age the Nine Nāthas were the gods of the directions.[3] In the second (tretā) Age they were eight of the nine planets (Ketu is omitted) along with Oḍḍīśa, who was their teacher.[4] In the Third (dvāpara) Age they were eight snake deities (nāga) who were the spiritual sons of Ṣaṣṭhanātha.[5] This data is entered in the following table.

20. Table of the Nine Nāthas according to the KuKauM

Nāthas	Breaths	Gods of the Directions[6]	Planets	Snakes	Other names	In the Unmanifest
Gagana	Prāṇa and Apāna	Indra (Ahi)	Sun	Ananta	Hara	Indra
Kumuda	Samanā	Agni	Moon	Kulaka	Guha	Mahān
Padma	Udāna	Yama (Ṣaṣṭha)	Mercury	Vāsuki	Vidhi	Kāma
Deva	Vyāna	Nairṛti	Mars	Śaṁkhapāla	Vidhu	Bhāskara
Bhairava	Nāga	Varuṇa	Jupiter	Takṣaka	Manmatha	Garuḍa
Kamala	Kūrma	Vāyu (Sumitra)	Venus	Mahāpadma	Vihūni ?	Brahmā

[1] KuKh 7/67cd-68ab.
[2] KuKh 7/98cd-101ab.
[3] KuKauM 1/77-78.
[4] KuKauM 1/79cd-80.
[5] KuKauM 1/82cd-85.
[6] The first eight are the gods of the eight directions listed in the normal clockwise order starting with Indra in the east and ending with Īśāna in the north-east. Presumably, Viṣṇu, who is all-pervasive and the source of the eight directions, is their teacher and source of authority in the middle.

Nāthas	Breaths	Gods of the Directions[1]	Planets	Snakes	Other names	In the Unmanifest
Śiva	Paktakalā?	Yakṣarāṭ	Saturn	Kārkoṭa	Svarga	Vāyu
Rāma	Devadatta	Īśāna	Rahu	Padma	Saṁyamana	Viṣṇu
Kṛṣṇā-nanda	Dhanañ-jaya	Viṣṇu	Oḍḍīśa	Ṣaṣṭhinātha	Jvāleśa	Mārtaṇḍa

The names in the first column are the common ones by which the Nine Nāthas are worshipped (pūjānāma). An example of the application of these names for this purpose is a simple maṇḍala described in the following passage in the Ṭīkā, in which they are worshipped in the standard serial order in which they are normally enumerated. The Ṭīkā says:

> These Nine Nāthas should be worshipped here on this path, that is, in the maṇḍala and in the sacred seat of the Self. (They are worshipped) in the lotus of the heart within the body, eight on the eight petals with the ninth in the middle. The same is said here:[2] 'One should worship the Current of Men (puruṣaugha) on the eight petals in the heart.' Now the name of (each of) these nine is said (to be as follows): 1) Gagana 2) Kumuda 3) Padma 4) Deva 5) Bhairava 6) Kamala 7) Śiva 8) Rāma and 9) Kṛṣṇa who is the ninth.[3]

In accord with the basic triadic division of the universe, the Nine Nāthas are divided into three groups of three. Three have authority on the earth (bhur). Three went down into the netherworlds, and the remaining three flew up into the sky.[4]

---

[1] The first eight are the gods of the eight directions listed in the normal clockwise order starting with Indra in the east and ending with Īśāna in the north-east. Presumably, Viṣṇu, who is all-pervasive and the source of the eight directions, is their teacher and source of authority in the middle.

[2] The text which the Ṭīkā is commenting is probably the KuKauM.

[3] asmin mārge 'tra [k: mārgo.atra; kh: mārhotra] maṇḍala iti navo nāthās te ca ātmapīṭhe [kh: -pīṭha] pūjayet | śarīre hṛtpadme dalāṣṭake aṣṭau madhye navamam | tathā atraivoktam hṛdaye ca dalāny aṣṭau puruṣaughaṁ prapūjayet | idānīṁ eṣāṁ navānāṁ nāma [k kh: nāmaṁ] kathyate | yathā gaganaḥ kumudaḥ [k: -da] padmo [k: padma; kh: padmaḥ] devo bhairavam eva ca |
kamalaḥ [k: -la] śivo [k kh: śiva] rāmaś ca kṛṣṇaś ca evaṁ navamaḥ | Ṭ MS K fl. 179a.

[4] Again, the Nine Nāthas are (also) arranged separately in (another), conventional order. Thus, (out of these nine) the second, Kumudānandanātha, the fourth, Devānandanātha and the fifth Bhairavānandanātha - these three out of the nine are in the lower world (pātāla) and (so) have no authority (in this world). Similarly, out of the nine, the seventh, Śivānandanātha, the eighth, Rāmānandanātha and ninth, Kṛṣṇānandanātha - these three out of the nine went up into the sky (antarikṣa) and (so) have no authority (in this world) as they are Skyfarers (who have become so) by the power of the goddess's Command. Those who are in the netherworld consume the object of

The three Siddhas of the second group 'consume the objects of enjoyment' in the lower worlds. The Siddhas of the third group have become Skyfarers 'by the power of the goddess's Command' and move in the upper spheres of the transcendental Void of the deity's pure consciousness by the power of the Command. These six Nāthas have no spiritual authority in the mortal world and so have no disciples (nirvaṁśa).[1] All nine received initiation in Candrapura in the land of Koṅkaṇa in this Age but only three of them remained to teach in the City Full of the Moon (Candrapūrṇa) where 'the sequence of the lineage (anvaya) commences'.[2] Each lineage contains three lineages.[3] The disciples of Mitranātha enjoyment there. Three have authority in the sky. The aforementioned first, third and sixth (Nāthas) namely, Gagana, Padma and Kamala belong (to the lineage) of the Child Nātha called Mitra. Gagana is in (the lineage of) the Eldest, Padma in the Middle One and Kamala in that of the Child.

---

tataḥ evaṁ navanāthāḥ pṛthak krameṇa saṅketakena tiṣṭhanti | yathā yatra madhyād [kh: madhyāt] dvitīyaḥ kumudānandanāthaś caturthaḥ [k kh: kṛtamudānandanāthaścaturyaḥ] devānandanāthaḥ pañcamaḥ bhairavānandanāthaḥ [k kh: -tha] | evaṁ navamadhyāt trayaṁ pātāle niradhikārāḥ tathā navanāthamadhyāt saptamaḥ [k kh: saptamaṁ] śivānandanāthaḥ [k kh: -tha] | tathā aṣṭamo [k kh: saptamaṁ] rāmānandanāthaḥ [k kh: -tha] | navamaḥ [k kh: navamaṁ] kṛṣṇānandanāthaḥ [k kh: -tha] | evaṁ navamadhye [kh: -madhyāt] trīṇi ūrdhvam [kh: ūrdhva] gatāḥ nirādhikārāḥ 3 | khecarāḥ devyājñāprabhāvena ye pātāle te [kh: ste] tatraiva [k: nātraiva; kh: netraiva] bhogyaṁ bhuñjanti [kh: muṁjaṁti] | vāsaradivase adhikāre sthitāḥ [kh: sthitā] trīṇi pūrvoktaprathamatṛtīyaṣaṣṭhamāḥ [k: -maḥ; kh: pūrvvokta--maḥ] gaganapadmakamalāḥ eṣāṁ bālanāthasya mitrābhidhānasya gagano [k kh: -na] jyeṣṭhe | padmo [k kh: padma] madhyame | kamalo [k kh: -la] bāle | Ṭ MS K fl. 179a-179b.

[1] KuKh 7/68cd-69ab. In the Ṭīkā we read:

> Thus out of the nine, the first, the third and the sixth, called Ga, Pa and Ka belong to the (lineages of) the Eldest, Middling and Child within the Lineage of the Child. They possess authority in the mortal world. The remaining six out of the nine have no lineage (nirvaṁśa), that is, no authority. These Nine Nāthas should be known in this way from the oral tradition (mukhāmnāya).

iti navamadhyāt prathamatṛtīyaṣaṣṭhā [k kh: -ṣaṣṭha] ma-ga-pakābhidhānāḥ [k kh: -naḥ] bālovallyāṁ [kh: -lyāṁ] jyeṣṭhamadhyamabālakrameṇa [k kh: -madhyamaṁvāla -] martyaloke adhikārikāḥ [kh: adhikālikāḥ] śeṣāḥ [k kh: śeṣa] ṣaṭ navamadhyān nirvaṁśāḥ nirādhikārāḥ evaṁ navanāthāḥ [k kh: -nāthān] mukhāmnāyena jñātavyāḥ [k kh: -vyā] | Ṭ MS K fl. 179a.

[2] KuKh 7/57-58cd.

[3] According to the Ṭīkā: Various Siddhas have arisen in our great abode, the Western House, namely, the lords (nātha) Ga (Gagana), Pa (Padma), Ka (Kamala) and the rest. Who are they related to? The Transmission of the Child, that is, the family (santati) of Mitranātha of the Lineage (ovalli) of the Child. (This will now be) explained. The Siddhas Ga (Gagana), Pa (Padma) and Ka (Kamala) have come down to earth in due order in accord with the (lineages) of the Eldest, Middling and Youngest, respectively. And there the Lineage of the Eldest is governed by Gagananātha (gakāranātha) which, like an aged (man), is gross. This is the meaning. The Middle One is governed by Padmanātha (pakāranātha) and it is short, that is, subtle. This is the meaning. The Youngest is supreme (parā) and it is beyond the subtle. That was said initially, namely: 'the founded the three lineages of the Lineage of the Child.[1] The first, the third and the sixth Nātha amongst them founded the lineages of the Eldest, the Middle One and the Child, respectively. As they are directly derived from the First Nātha, YKh (2) relates them to the Divine Current of which he is the final member:

> Now I will tell (you) about the Current of Siddhas when the fourth (Age) has come. The Divine Current, called the Flower, beginning with the Transmental and ending with Ādinātha is divided eldest is short and her form is the supreme.' (But) here it has been explained (in another way) because (the teaching) has come down through a different transmission. The three lineages have been explained properly in due order in this way. How is that? O - PŪ - KĀ, that is, Oḍyāṇa, Pūrṇagiri and Kāmarūpa along with their lords O (Oḍḍīśa), Ṣa (Ṣaṣṭha) and Mitra, (respectively). And in what other way? Each in three modalities. What are they? Starting from Oḍḍīśanātha up to Mitra, each one of the three are in the form of (the three lineages) of the Eldest, Middling and Youngest.

---

asmākaṁ mahālaye paścimagṛhe te te siddhāḥ [kh: siddhā] ga-pa-kaprabhṛtayo nāthā jātāḥ | kasya saṁbandhinaḥ | bālakramasya mitranāthasantatiḥ kanīyasovallyā [k kh: kanyasovalyā] iti yāvat | kathayati | ga-pa-kasiddhā [kh: -siddhāḥ] avatīrṇāḥ anukramāt [k kh: anukramaṁ] jyeṣṭhamadhyamakaniṣṭhagatyā [kh: -gatyāt] | tatraiva ca jyeṣṭhovalliḥ gakāranāthādhiṣṭhitā jyeṣṭhavat [kh: -va] sthūlety arthaḥ* | madhyamā pakāranāthādhiṣṭhitā hrasvā sūkṣmety arthaḥ | kaniṣṭhā parā [kh: parāḥ] sūkṣmātīteti yāvat | etat prathamam [kh: pratham] evoktaṁ] | jyeṣṭhā hrasvā parākārā [k kh: -kāram] ity arthaḥ | ihānyakramāgatatvāt [kh: ihanya-] ākhyātam | evam eva krameṇa ovallitrayaṁ prayuktaṁ kathitam | katham | opūkaṁ [k, kh: oṣṭhakañ] ca | oḍyāṇaṁ [k kh: -ṇa] pūrṇagiriḥ [k: -giri; kh: pūrṇṇagiri] kāmarūpam [k: -rūpa] tannāthā oṣamitrānusāreṇa [kh: oṣamitrā.aṇusāreṇa] | anyac ca kathaṁ tribhis tribhiḥ prakāraiḥ | kais taiḥ [kh: thaiḥ] | oḍīśanāthād [k kh: auḍīśa-] ārabhya mitrāntaṁ yāvat trayāṇām api pratyekaṁ jyeṣṭhamadhyamakaniṣṭharūpaiḥ | Ṭ MS K fl. 176b-177a.

[1] According to the Ṭīkā: In this Age of Strife Mitranātha, called Caryānātha, will certainly have nine (spiritual) sons in three lineages within the Lineage of the Child. Amongst these nine, Gagana, Padma and Kamala will be in Candrapura in Koṅkaṇa. Again, out of the nine belonging to the Lineage of the Child, Gaganānandanātha is the first. Again, out of the nine belonging to the Lineage of the Child, Padmānandanātha is the third and, out of the nine belonging to the Lineage of the Child, Kamalānandanātha is the sixth. [. . .] . (It is said): 'And another (group consists of) Ga, Pa and Ka in Koṅkaṇa . . .'

mitranāthasya caryānāthābhidhānasya asmin kaliyuge bālovallyāṁ [kh: -valyāṁ] ovallitrayeṇa navaputrā [kh: -trāḥ] bhaviṣyanti | nātra sandehaḥ teṣāṁ navānāṁ madhye [kh: madhya] gaganaḥ [k kh: -na] padmaḥ [k kh: padma] kamalaḥ [k kh: -la] koṅkaṇe [k kh: kuṅkaṇe] candrapure nānyat [k kh: manyet] | atra punar bālovallyāṁ [kh: punaḥ vālovalyāṁ] navamadhyād [kh: -madhyāt] gaganānandanāthaḥ prathamaḥ [k kh: prathamam | tadbālovallyāṁ [k kh: taṁ-; kh: -valyāṁ] [kh: + ṣaṣṭhaṁ] padmānandanāthaḥ [k kh: -nātha] navamadhyāt [kh: -dhyā] tṛtīyaḥ [k kh: -yam]* | tadbālovallyāṁ [k kh: -valyāṁ] madhyame [k kh: madhyamaṁ] kamalānandanāthaḥ [k kh: -nātha] | asmin [kh: asmiṁ] bālovallyāṁ [kh: -valyāṁ] bālo [k: valaṁ; kh: valeṁ] navanāthamadhyāt ṣaṣṭhamaḥ [k kh: -maṁ] sa [k kh: taṁ] bālaḥ [k kh: vālam] | tathātraivoktam gapakāḥ [k kh: -kaḥ] koṁkaṇe [k kh: kuṁkuṇe] nānyat | Ṭ MS K fl. 179a.

into three in Koṅkaṇa in the Age of Strife beginning with Śrīnātha. There are three mortals below Koṅkaṇa and three above it. O Bhairava, these six are said to be without descendents (nirvaṁśa).[1]

Three are in authority in the (lineage of) the Eldest, Middling and Youngest. I will tell (you) their names, each one separately. These are the pūjā names. I have extolled them for you. (They are) the first, the third, and the sixth. They are in a position of authority and are praised in the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha).

The second, the fourth and the fifth - three reside in the netherworlds and are subject to worldly experiences (there). The seventh, the eighth and the ninth - these three are in the sky. I will tell (you) there names as mentioned in the previous Āgama.[2]

Thus the three groups of three Nāthas are as follows:[3]

1) Earth: Koṅkaṇa:

A) Gagana (Gaganendu) (Eldest, gross),

B) Padma (Padmabhāskara) (Middle, subtle) and

C) Kamala (Child, supreme).

2) Lower worlds: Śivānanda (also called Dhāraśiva), Kṛṣṇānanda (also called Kṛṣṇamārtaṇḍa) and Rāma.

---

[1] caturthe tu yuge prāpte siddhaughaṁ [k, kh: siddhoghaṁ] tu vadāmy aham ||
unmanādyādināthāntaṁ [k, kh: -ntā] divyaughaṁ [k, kh: divyoghaṁ] puṣpasaṁjñakam |
koṅkaṇe tu tridhā bhinnaṁ śrīnāthādau kalau [kh: kalo] yuge ||
 * * koṅkaṇe martyāḥ [k, kh: martya] trayo 'dhas traya [k, kh: adhastrīṇi] ūrdhvataḥ [k: trayordhvataḥ; kh: trayorddhataḥ]* |
nirvaṁśāś ca samākhyātāḥ [k, kh: -tā] ṣaḍ etāni ca bhairava || YKh (2) 15/78cd-80.

[2] The 'previous Āgama' may well be the KuKauM.
adhikāre [kh: + tā] sthitās trīṇi jyeṣṭhamadhyamakanīyasam [k, kh: -kanyasam] |
nāmāny eṣāṁ [k: - yaṣāṁ; kh: nāmānyaṣāṁ] pravakṣyāmi ekaikasya pṛthak pṛthak ||
pūjānāmāni caitāni [k: ityate; kh: ityete] kīrtitāni mayā tava |
prathamaṁ ca tṛtīyaṁ [k, kh: -ya] ca ṣasthamaṁ [k, kh: ṣaṣṭamaṁ] ca tathaiva ca || *[*Both MSs repeat this and the previous two lines.]
adhikārapade [k, kh: adhikāre-] śete [k, kh: sete] kīrtyate dakṣiṇāpathe |
dvitīyaṁ ca caturthaṁ ca pañcamaṁ ca tathaiva ca ||
pātāle saṁsthitās trīṇi bhogān bhuñjanti vāsare |
saptamaṁ cāṣṭanavamaṁ trīṇy ete [k, kh: ente] khapade [k, kh: -pada] sthitāḥ ||
teṣāṁ nāmāni vakṣyāmi yathā coktāḥ [k, kh: coktā] purāgame |YKh (2) 15/81-85ab.

[3] This is the basic layout we find in almost every case. One exception is the KnT. According to the KnT (quoted by Schoterman 1983: 35) all Nine Nāthas belonged to one or other of the three lineages. However, this does not make sense, as only three of them taught in the world where the lineages developed. Anyway, the KnT classifies them as follows:
1) Gagana, Padma and Deva are called *Bālanātha*s.
2) Kumuda, Kamala and Rāma are *Kaumāranātha*s.
3) Bhairava, Śiva and Kṛṣṇa are *Vṛddhanātha*s.

3) Upper worlds: Kumuda, Bhairava and Deva.[1]

The KuKauM first, and then subsequently other sources, supply a few hagiographic details for each Nātha. These are required in order to worship them. The KuKauM declares that:

> Those who know their own (spiritual) clan (gotra) and lineage (santāna) should make an effort to know the enumeration (of the Nine Nāthas) in this way in order to understand the Krama. The knower of the truth who knows the sequence (krama) (of teachers) beginning with the Five (Siddhas) and ending with his own teacher along with (the details concerning their original) homes (gṛha) and caste (varga) (truly) belongs to the tradition (kramāmnāyika).[2]

The Ṭīkā explains:

> In this way one should make an effort to know the number of the nine, sixteen and one hundred and sixty-three whose clans (gotra) are known. What for? In order to know (saṁbodhana) the Transmission (krama), that is, the Transmission of the Teachers (gurukrama). Beginning from which one? Beginning with Śrīnātha up to one's own teacher.[3]

It is essential, therefore, to know at least the basic profiles of the teachers. Accordingly, lists of the teachers' names are found in several places in our sources, sometimes along with additional information about them. Each Nātha has a name derived from an episode in his life that made him famous. I have called this his 'famed name' (kīrtināma). A Nātha may have more than one such name, according to the number of extraordinary events especially associated with him. The KnT recounts them in brief. The account in the KuKauM is even less elaborate and is probably older than the one in the KnT. There we find just the

---

[1] Cf. KuKauM 1/91 and KuKh 7/71cd-73ab.

[2] evaṁ saṁkhyā ca gotrajñaiḥ [k: gotrajñaḥ; kh gh: gotrajñai; g: gotrajñe] santānaviditātmabhiḥ [k kh gh: satāna-; g: santānaṁ-] |
viditavyā [k: viditavyāḥ; kh: vidi tathā; g: viditavyo] prayatnena [g: prayatnenaṁ] kramasaṁbodhanārthataḥ [k: kramaḥ soṁbo; kh gh: kramaḥ śaṁbo-] ||
pañcādyādisvagurvantaṁ kramaṁ [kh: nāsti] yo vetti tattvavit [g gh: tatva-] |
gṛhavargasamopetaṁ [g: -samoyaṁtu] sa kramāmnāyiko [k kh gh: -kā] bhavet || KuKauM 1/12-13

[3] evaṁ gotraviditānāṁ navaṣoḍaśānāṁ tathā śatamekatriṣaṣṭyadhikānāṁ [k kh: -ṣaṣṭyā-] parisaṁkhyā jñātavyā prayatnataḥ | kim artham | kramasya gurukramasya saṁbodhanārtham | kasmād ārabhya [kh: -bhyo] | śrīnāthādi | śrīnāthaṁ svagurvantaṁ | Ṭ MS K fl. 182a

name of the Nātha, his father and caste. If he is a Brahmin, the Veda to which he belongs is also noted. The KuKauM also supplies the birthday of each of the nine and sixteen Siddhas. It became standard practice to celebrate the teachers' birthdays (parvan) and so they are noted in several sources, including the ṢSS and KuKh. However, virtually none of the independent sources are the same.[1]

We have omitted these details in the following tables. However, we take note of the castes to which the sources say the Siddhas belonged. We notice that half of them are said to have been Brahmins. We have noted already that the sources stress that the First Nātha converted numerous Brahmins and that he himself was one, although the KRU takes care to add that he also converted outcastes and dined with them in their homes. Nowadays, only about 5% of Hindus are Brahmins. This may well have also been the case in the past. Whether the Siddhas actually existed or not it is quite possible that the number of Brahmin converts was indeed relatively high. At least this is what the Kubjikā texts say, there we read:

> At the end of the Age of Strife, there will be adepts who belong to Kaula (lineage). They will be members of (all) the four castes and will be particularly Brahmins. The best (will be), well versed in the Veda (but) there will also be others who belong to the lowest caste. Those of the lowest caste and the twice born eat the sacrificial pap in one place together. I have told you everything (that) will take place at the end of the Age of Strife. And so the Command will certainly be extremely weak.[2]

The tone of this passage suggests that it was written by a Brahmin who would prefer, as purity-conscious Brahmins do, that Brahmins alone should be initiated to avoid the polluting contact with initiates of lower castes. This is surprising. A well known feature of Tantric systems in general and, in particular Kaula ones, is negation of caste distinctions. In actual fact the Kubjikā sources, like the Kaula ones in general, are ambiguous with respect to caste, reflecting the ambiguity of the practice, which in public conforms to the accepted social norms and secretly, in the ritual context, is conditioned only by its own. Thus, in conformity to the former requirements, the KuKh admonishes one who is the Lord of a Kula - i.e. a teacher - not dine with others. If he does his mantras will be averse to him and he will suffer difficulties at every step.[3] According to the KuKh, he should not even consume sacrificial food in the company of Tāntrikas, that is,

---

[1] Compare, for example, KuKh 46/49-52 and KuKauM 1/180-183.
[2] KuKh 31/133-135.
[3] KuKh 37/67-68.

fellow Śaivites who are not Kaulas.[1] Even so, elsewhere the KuKh[2] declares that true teachers may be of any of the four castes, although it does make a point of saying that of the four castes the śūdra is the lowest. Distinctions are also evident in the time it requires for members of different castes to be allowed access to the initiated state. Śūdras must be tested for 12 years, whereas Brahmins require just three. However, they are tested to see whether they can sustain conditions from which their caste would normally be a bar. The Brahmin must do the work those of the lowest caste do and the śūdra is tested by making him do that of the highest caste.[3]

In other words, it is essential for the Kaula initiate, at least when engaged in his practice, ritual or yogic, to be able to do anything that may be required. This includes the handling of normally polluting substances by Brahmins and the recitation of Sanskrit mantras by members of the lowest castes. The transgression of social norms is not a goal in itself. It is simply a necessity, imposed by the culture of the Kaula traditions. The sincerity and determination that is a part of true devotion allows the aspirant to surmount the prejudices and ritual impositions that bind him in his daily life. Thus, the Tantra admonishes:

> One should not take into consideration the caste of those who are detached in this world, in order to purify their basic emotional state (bhāva) and devotion. (Instead) one should test their devotion. A Brahmin who is not a devotee is considered to be an outcaste (caṇḍāla). If an outcaste possesses devotion, he is considered to be a Brahmin. What is the use of caste distinctions? Here, (in this tradition), devotion alone is the prime factor (that determines whether a person is fit to be a member of the tradition).[4]

The First Table of the Nine Nāthas

This basic data concerning the Nine Nāthas who propagated the Western Transmission noted in the Kubjikā Tantras is presented in the following three tables. The first one is divided into eight columns, the first three of which record information regarding the original 'worldly' identity of the Siddhas, that is, where they were born, their caste and their original name. The modern renouncer ideally obliterates the identity he had prior to his initiation, but here, as the reference

[1] KuKh 33/66-67.
[2] KuKh 32/33.
[3] KuKh 33/66-69ab.
[4] KuKh 32/66cd-69.

quoted above testifies, the memory of this should be retained. Although each Siddha has a consort with which he shares some part of his spiritual discipline, she is not considered to be his wife. Thus, from the perspective of his identity as an initiate, he is not a householder. Nonetheless, the retention of the Siddha's 'worldly' identity suggests that he could resume it when required. The legends woven around the figure of these Nine Nāthas and their sixteen disciples do not tell us anything in this regard. However, we do know that the Newars, for example, who have been initiates for centuries, are all householders and so do live this double life. Indeed, this is the case with householder Kaulas in general throughout India.[1]

The following four columns list the four different names of each Siddha. The caryā name is the common, public name the Siddha uses in the course of his practice when living as a wandering renouncer. This is listed in column four. The 'famed name' (kīrtināma) is listed in the next column. When asked, a Siddha could give either one of these names, whereas the secret name, is the one by which he is known only to fellow initiates, his teachers and disciples. It is never revealed to anybody outside the circle of initiates. Finally, the pūjā name is the one by which the Siddhas are worshipped. The last column records the names of the Siddhas' Tantric consorts (śakti) who may be more than one.

The data entered in each column and the sources are as follows:

1) The data for the first column, in which the birth place of each Siddha is recorded, is drawn from the Kubjikānityāhnikatilaka quoted by Bagchi.[2] This is the first entry in this and the other columns. It is in plain type.[3] The second entry in bold type is the variant noted in the KuKauM.[4]
2) The caste of each Siddha is listed in the second column. The first entry in plain type is from the KnT. If the Siddha was a brahmin, the Veda to which he was affiliated recorded in the KnT is noted in plain type in brackets. The second entry in bold is from the KuKauM.
3) The third column records the original names of the Siddhas. As before, the first entry in plain type is from the KnT. The KuKauM presents the birthdays of the [1] Svaboda's biography of his teacher's colourful life – Aghora at the Left Hand of God - amply illustrates this dual way of life. In his daily life Vimalānanda resided in Mombay where he enjoined a rich 'worldly' life. In particular he liked horseracing and betting on the horses he divined would win by the powers he acquired from his sādhanā. He would engage himself in the latter periodically when he gave up his Mombay life and, donning the garb of an ascetic, went to cremation grounds to practice.

[2] Bagchi: 1934: 68-72.
[3] See KuKh 46/46-47ab (=ṢSS 43/193-194ab), for another list of the towns where the Nine Siddhas were born. These are recorded in the first column of the second
[4] KuKauM 1/48cd-49.

Siddhas, their castes and names at birth together.[1] The latter are entered in bold in this column along with the name of the father of each Siddha which follows after a hyphen.

4) Column four records the caryā names of the Siddhas. These are all drawn from the KnT. These names, like the other names listed in the following columns, may end in -ānanda, -nātha, -deva or combinations of two or more. As these endings are freely interchangeable, variants have not been noted.

5) Column five records the famed names of the Siddhas according to the KnT. The KnT supplies a few hagiographic details to explain the Siddhas' 'famed names'[2] which are recorded after the tables.

6) Column six records the secret names of the Siddhas. The two sources are the KnT and the KuKauM.[3] As usual the first is in plain type and the variant in the KuKauM is the second entry in bold characters.

7) Column seven records the pūjā names. The first entry is from the KnT. The second in bold characters is from the KuKauM.[4] The last entry in italics is from the ṢSS, which is also found in the KuKh.[5] These readings are entered in italics. These names are listed twice more in the KuKh. One of the lists is the same,[6] the names in the other list[7] are closer to the most basic forms of the names. These are entered in table three.

8) The names of the consorts of the Nine Siddhas are listed in the column eight. The first entry in plain type is from the KnT. The second in bold characters is from the KuKauM.[8] Some of the consorts listed in the KuKauM have more than one name. The names of the consorts according to the commentary on the ṢSS[9] are listed last in italics. If they coincide with other entries, these are marked with an asterisk.

---

[1] KuKauM 1/50-72.
[2] See KuKh 46/167-180, for other legends connected with each of these Siddhas.
[3] KuKauM 1/73cd-82.
[4] KuKauM 1/72cd-82.
[5] ṢSS 43/117-120ab = KuKh 46/42cd-45.
[6] KuKh 46/167-180.
[7] KuKh 7/69cd-71ab.
[8] KuKauM 1/100-108.
[9] Commentary on ṢSS 44/21ab.

21. First Table of the Nine Nāthas

Birth place	Caste	Name at birth	Caryā name	Famed name	Secret name	Pūjā name	Consort
1) *Pauṇḍra-vardhana in Oḍapīṭha	Brahmin (Sāmavedin) Yajurvedin	Trivikrama Śrīdhara - Bhāradvāja	Bhairavīśa	Vyomānanda Udayānanda Kiraṇānanda	? Udayānanda	? Gaganeśa Gaganendra	Gaganāmbā + Candrāmba Ṣaṣṭhā, Cidrūpāmbā
2) Koṅkaṇa Pāṭalīputra	Brahmin (Ṛgvedin) (Yajurvedin)	Dāmodara Nārāyaṇa - Govinda	Vīrānanda	Munigaṇavara Dhruvavedhin Gajavedhin	Kanaka	Kumuda Ratneśa	Siddheśvarī Siddhā (Siddhaśarīra, Jayā, Ciddruma) Mahāsiddharatnāmbā
3) Pūrṇagiri in Ḍāhala Bhoga-vardhana	Kṣatriya Brahmin (Ṛgvedin)	Udayarāja Viśvarūpaka - Vāsudeva	Pippilīśadeva	Laṅkānanda	Ratna	Padmānanda Padma-bhāskara	Padmāmbā Ratnā Padmacandrā Padmacampakā
4) Madhutā Nandāpura	Brahmin (Atharvan)	Govinda Keśava - Puruṣottama	Puṣpānanda	Śobhanānanda Yakṣānanda	Devānanda Bhṛṅgānanda	Bāladeva Devānanda Deva-vaktrāmṛta	Suracakrāmbā Suvaktrā Amṛtā Lalitābhairavī
5) Varaṇā in Vāṅga Palāra	Brahmin ?	Viṣṇuśarmā Mātaṅgadeva -Kāñcideva	Gauḍīśadeva	Vīrānanda Indrānanda Matsyendra	Bhairavānanda Vīrānanda	Pippalīśādeva Bhairava Bhairavabja	Lalitābhairavī (Vibhavanāśanī)
6) Kāmākṣā in Sauradeśa Kānyakubja	Śūdra (Kṣatriya) (king)	Vāhila Mahīpāla - Someśvara	Olīśadeva Mātaṅgīśa	Ājñāprabhāva-deva	Māṇikyānanda Māṇikākṣa	Kamala Kamalārka	*Kamalādevī Mānikyā (Kamalā)

Birth place	Caste	Name at birth	Caryā name	Famed name	Secret name	Pūjā name	Consort
7) Śrīśaila Siṁhala	Vaiśya (Śūdra)	Dehila Bhīmadeva - Māṇikya	Mātaṅga	Gajaprabodha Kuntaprastambha Vyomānanda	Kīrtikānanda Kārttika	Śivānanda Śivāmbhoja	*Śivāmbā Kusumāmbā Śivā (Kusumā)
Birth place	Caste	Name at birth	Caryā name	Famed name	Secret name	Pūjā name	Consort
8) Kāśmīra Avanī	Śūdra (Kṣatriya) king	Sehila Viśvakarman - Jayadeva	Jhiṇṭhīśa	Unmanānanda Vīraśāntideva Laghupra- bodhadeva	Sahajānanda	Rāmānanda Rāmatattva	*Rāmāmbā Rāmā (Tārā)
9) Kundāpura in Oḍḍa Cohāra	Kusuḍilyapāla Kṣatriya	Māhila Makarāditya - Keśava	Kuharadeva	Gausthirīśa Khambāditya Kapilaprabodha	? Vinayānanda	Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇamārtaṇḍa	*Kṛṣṇa- piṅgalāmbā Pūrṇā (Kumbhā Piṅgalā)

The Second Table of Nine Nāthas

This second table is drawn from the ṢSS.[1] The places where the Nine Nāthas were born, entered in the first column, are also recorded in the KuKh[2] in a passage drawn from the ṢSS. Note that the sixth Siddha, although a Brahmin by caste, was, according to the ṢSS, a king. The eighth Siddha is also said there to have been from a royal family. Several Siddhas in other sources are also said to be of royal descent. Thus the KRU remarks initiates

[1] ṢSS 43/177-196ab.
[2] KuKh 46/46-47ab.

‘will be great Siddhas and great kings'.[1] The names in the fifth column are clearly the pūjā names. The type to which the other names belong are not identified.

22. Second Table of Nine Nāthas

Birth Place	Caste	Name	Name	Name	Name	Name
1) Pauṇḍra	Brahmin	(Vikrama)		Gaganeśa (Vajrabodhi)
2) Ahicchatra	Kṣatriya	Bherinātha	Aparāditya
3) Bhogapura	Brahmin	Pippalin	Bāladeva	Padmānanda
4) Pāṭalī	Śudra	Gośṭhīśa	Khaḍgavīra	Devānanda
5) Māyāpura	Brahmin	Pulīśa	Gīta	Bhairavānanda	Yakṣanātha	Bhramarānanda
6) Kanyākubja	Brahmin (king)	Aṁga-mukha	Vyomānanda	Kamalānanda
7) Alaṁpura	Śudra	Reḍinātha	Kūrma	Rāmānanda		Bhīma
8) Ayodhya	Kṣatriya (belonged to royal family)	Nirānanda	Girinātha	Kṛṣṇanātha		Aparāditya
9) Vardhamāna on the isle of Cohāra	Brahmin	Koḍaura	Khaparānanda		Kallola	Kṣamāditya

[1] KRU 9/66.

Third Table of Nine Nāthas

The data entered in this is table is drawn from the Kumārikākhaṇḍa and the Siddhakhaṇḍa. The first column records the places where the Nine Nāthas were born according to the KuKh and the ṢSS.[1] The second and third their pūjā names according to the KuKh.[2] The names of the nine found in a series of mantras addressed to them in the SKh[3] are recorded in the fourth column. The seed-syllables associated with them in these mantras are entered in the fifth column and their location in the inner Wheels in the sixth one.

23. Third Table of Nine Nāthas

Birth Place	Pūjā Names of the Nine Nāthas	Pūjā Names of the Nine Nāthas	SKh	Seed-syllable	Location
1) Pauṇḍra	Gagana	Gaganendra	Sūrya	YLĀṀ	Between the eyebrows
2) Ahicchatra	Kumuda	Ratneśa	Kūrma	RLĪṀ	Circle of the Support
3) Bhogapura	Padma	Padmabhāskara	Vīra	LLŪṀ	The City of Gems
4) Pāṭalī	Deva	Devavaktrāmṛta	Bhairava	VLṚṀ	The City of Gems
5) Māyāpura	Bhairava	Bhairavābja	Deva	ŚLḶṀ	Circle of the Support
6) Kanyākubja	Kamala	Kamalārka	Kamala	ṢLAIṀ	The Self-supported
7) Alaṁpura	Śiva	Śivāmbuja	Śiva	SLAUṀ	Circle of the Nameless
8) Ayodhya	Rāma	Kṛṣṇa (Ratnanātha)	Rāma	HLAṀ	Circle of the Nameless
9) Vardhamāna	Kṛṣṇānanda	Mārtāṇḍanātha (Kṛṣṇamārtāṇḍa)	Kṛṣṇa	KṢAḤ	Circle of the Nameless

Hagiographics of the Nine Nāthas

The KnT briefly notes the extraordinary events in the lives of the Nine Nāthas that inspired the 'famed' names, as follows:

---

[1] KuKh 46/-46-47ab.
[2] The entries in the second column are from KuKh 7/69cd-71ab. Those in the third column are from KuKh 46/44-45. The variants in brackets are from KuKh 46/167-180
[3] SKh MS G fl. 48b.

1) Trivikrama.[1] He was called Vyomānandanātha because when he was in the city of Kanyākubja he stopped the movement of the sun and fixed it in the sky for twelve days. He was called Udayāṇanada because he illuminated (udyotita) Kaula, that is, the union of Śiva and Śakti. He was called Kiraṇānandanātha because on another occasion he concealed the rays of the sun.
2) Dāmodara. He was called Munigaṇavara (the Best of the Host of Ascetics) because he pierced the gandharva Citāṅga (with the energy of the Command). He pierced the polestar (dhruva) in the sky and so was (also) called Dhruvavedhin. He was called Gajavedhin (Piercer of the Elephant) when he calmed a mad elephant (in the same way).
3) Udayarāja. He was called Laṅkānandanātha because he graced Vibhīṣaṇa, Rāvaṇa's brother in Śrīlaṅka.
4) Govinda. He taught the beauty (śobha) people possessed and so was called Śobhanānandadeva. He was called Yakṣānandanātha because he graced the Lord of Yakṣa (by initiating him).
5) Viṣṇuśarmā. He was called Indrānandadeva because he graced Indra. He was called Matsyendranātha because he was dragged up in the Markaṭa river.[2]
6) Vāhila. He was called Ājñāprabhāvadeva because the power of the Command (ājñāprabhāva) imparted to him was energized (dīpita).
7) Dehila. He was called Gajaprabodhānandadeva (Ānandadeva who was the Awakening of the Elephant) because he transferred his consciousness (ātmasaṁkrāmaṇa) into an elephant that died seven days before and revived it. He was called Kuntaprastambhadeva because he checked the course of the spear of passion in the form of a woman (kuntā vāmā). He was called Vyomānandanātha because he saw the moon in the sky, presumably during the day.
8) Sehila. He was called Unmanānandanātha from when he attained the power of the Lord of the Transmental (unmanīśa). He was called Vīraśanideva because he contemplated all that is one on the plane of the heroes. He was called Laghuprabodhadeva because he awakened Buddhists.
9) Kalpapāla Māhila. He was called Gausthirīśadeva because he calmed a cow (sthirīkṛtā). He was called Khambhādityanātha because he burst apart a pillar

[1] The story of this Siddha is also told in YKh (2) chapter 15, which is translated below on p. 543.

[2] Matsyendranātha hid himself in the belly of a fish to listen to the Kaula teachings Śiva was imparting to Pārvatī on an island in the sea. He managed to obtain them in the form of a book that Skanda threw into the sea that was swallowed by the fish. He was fished out of the sea and freed from the belly of the fish (see above, p. 320-321). This Siddha in some way emulated this great Kaula teacher, but in this case the fish that contained him was caught in the Markaṭa river not the sea.

(khambha) (with his yogic power). He awakened (the sage) Kapila and so he was called Kapilaprabodhānandanātha.

The Sixteen Siddhas

All the accounts agree that three of the Nine Nāthas had sixteen disciples called the Sixteen Siddhas or Sixteen Nāthas. Moon Yoga is practically absent in the KuKauM, although lunar symbolism is not. As a great deal of the extant KuKauM is not directly concerned with Kubjikā, the lunar symbolism we find there is largely associated with other deities. However, one example of lunar symbolism directly associated with a teaching of the Kubjikā Tantras is the notion that these sixteen teachers are the rays of the moon.[1] This is the only substantial reference in the KuKauM to lunar symbolism associated with Kubjikā's cult. Clearly, the original nature of the sixteen teachers was not forgotten by the later tradition. Thus YKh (2) declares:

> O god, just as (one worships the goddess so too) my original sixteen (energies) are in the end of the Triple Void. Sixteen are (the energies) in my lineage, O Srīnātha, (they are) sixteen. Liberation resides in the End of the Sixteen in (this) pervasive and first Age of Strife. [2]

In the outer world, the three Nāthas who taught in Candrapura (the City of the Moon) had sixteen disciples. All of them remained there and had disciples in their turn. Thus they spread Kubjikā's teachings first in Candrapura and then beyond it. As the Ṭīkā says:

> In this way, the sixteen Siddhas assumed authority over the town of Candrapura in the land of Koṅkaṇa. Then (they established) authority (there) in all directions.[3]

---

[1] O fair faced lady, these sixteen should be known to be the energies of the Moon. Having entered a human body, they descended onto the surface of the earth.

candrasyaiva kalā jñeyāḥ [k kh g: jñeyā] ṣoḍaśaite varānane || [gh: ?]
mānuṣītanum [g: mānuṣai-] āśṛtya avatīrṇā mahītale | [gh: ?] KuKauM 1/102-103ab.

[2] triśūnyānte [k, kh: trisūnyate] tathā deva mama ādya ṣoḍaśa [k, kh: ādhya-] |
ṣoḍaśa [k, kh: ṣoḍaśā] mama santāne [k, kh: śantāne] śrīnātha ṣoḍaśa ||
ṣoḍaśānte sthitā muktiḥ vyāpakādikalau yuge | YKh (2) 27/19-20ab.

[3] evaṁ ṣoḍaśa siddhāḥ koṅkaṇadeśe candrapurapaṭṭanādhikāraṁ kṛtāḥ | tataḥ digvidikṣu adhikāram | Ṭ MS K fl. 181a.

The later sources all emphasis the outer connection between the Sixteen Siddhas and Candrapura in Koṅkaṇa. However, they also always recall their inner counterparts within the body and, at a higher level, within the supreme principle, which in the following passage is identified with the 'divine Liṅga of Unstruck Sound'.

> These are the sixteen great Siddhas who have authority in Koṁkaṇa. They are all Skyfarers and sons of Ciñcinī. They have complete authority. And (authentic spiritual) authority is (found especially) in Koṅkaṇa. The Kaulika (tradition) with sixteen lineages originated in the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha). Three of them are said to be disciples at present in the Kulāgama. They will certainly (also) be within one's own body and should be worshiped (there). The disciples (who come) after them will be in thousands in (this) Age. In the end (paścime) they will dissolve away into the divine Liṅga of Unstruck Sound. Pierced by the awakened consciousness of bliss, the Siddhas in the Circle of the Mothers will not be in this wheel of transmigratory existence (any more in any of) the four ages.[1]

The following two tables record the data relating to the Sixteen Siddhas. The KnT supplies short hagiographical references for the Sixteen Siddhas, just as it does for the Nine Nāthas. These are noted after the tables.

The First Table of the Sixteen Siddhas

1) The first table of Sixteen Siddhas is divided into eight columns. The first column records the birth places of the Siddhas. The first entry in plain type is from the KnT. The other source is the KuKauM.[2] The variant entries from the KuKauM are in bold characters.

---

[1] ṣoḍaśaite mahāsiddhāḥ śrīkoṅkaṇe cādhikāriṇaḥ [-riṇī] |
khecarās te samastāś ca sarve [sarvvaṁ] ciñciniputrakāḥ [-kaṁ] ||
teṣv adhikārasakalaṁ [teṣṭādhikāra-] adhikāraṁ ca koṅkaṇe |
ṣoḍaśānvayasaṁjātaṁ [-tā] kaulikaṁ dakṣiṇāpathe ||
trayāṇāṁ te smṛtāḥ śiṣyā vartamānāḥ [-nā] kulāgame |
bhaviṣyanti na saṁdehaḥ svadehe tu prapūjayet ||
ataḥ parāś ca ye śiṣyā yuge yānti sahasraśaḥ |
paścime te layaṁ yānti divyaliṅge anāhate ||
ānandabodhavedhena ye siddhā mātṛmaṇḍale |
te na saṁsāracakre 'asmin bhavantīha caturyuge || AS 8/56-60.

[2] KuKauM 1/110cd-113ab.

2) The second column records the caste of the Siddhas. The first entry is from the KnT. A long passage in the KuKauM records the original name of each Siddha and that of his father along with his caste and date of birth.[1] His caste is noted in this column and name in the next. The variants are noted in bold characters. The third source is the Ṭīkā.[2] If the reading there agrees with the first entry nothing is added. If it agrees with the second, an asterisk is prefixed to that reading. If it differs from both, the name is entered in italics.
3) Column three records the name of the Siddha at birth. The first entry in plain type is from the KnT. The second in bold characters is from the KuKauM. The first name is that of the Siddha. The second name after the hyphen is that of his father.[3] Note that the name of the Siddha listed in the KnT, which is later than KuKauM, curiously coincides in several instances with the name of the father of the Siddha listed in the version of the KuKauM.
4) Column four records the caryā names of the Sixteen Siddhas. Those taken from the KnT are entered first in plain type. The KuKauM lists three names of each of the Sixteen Siddhas together. They are the caryā name, which is the well known one (prasiddha), the secret one (gopya) and the one by which the Siddha is worshipped (prapūjya). These are noted in their respective columns The variant readings are entered in bold characters.[4]

If the reading in the Ṭīkā[5] is the same as the first entry nothing is done. If it agrees with any of the other readings these are prefixed with an asterisk. Otherwise the variant is entered separately and the source is noted. The variant readings from the AS[6] are treated the same way. If they agree with the variant reading in the Ṭīkā, that is prefixed with an asterisk. Otherwise the variant is noted separately along with its source. The entries in italics are the variants found in the ṢSS. [7]

The caryā names in the KnT and the KuKh[8] all agree except for the last. The variant in the KuKh is entered in italics and underlined. The name of the first Nātha is the same in the KuKauM and the KuKh but differs from the one in the KnT, which is the first entry.

---

[1] KuKauM 1/113cd-148,
[2] Ṭīkā MS K fl. 181a.
[3] KuKauM 1/113cd-148.
[4] KuKauM 1/150-165.
[5] Ṭ MS K fl. 181a.
[6] AS 8/52-55.
[7] ṢSS 44/9cd-13. The commentary on this passage of the ṢSS also lists these names. They are the same as those in the first list of the KuKauM except the seventh which reads Prayāga instead of Prayāsa, the eighth which reads Kaṁsāla instead of Kauśāla and the thirteenth which reads Varāhadeva instead of Dhāraśiva.
[8] KuKh 46/181-198ab.

5) The fifth column records the Siddhas' 'famed' names. These are drawn from the KnT.
6) The secret names in the sixth column are drawn from the KnT and the variants in bold are from the KuKauM.[1]
7) The pūjā names of the Siddhas are recorded in column seven. The first entry in plain type is from the KnT. The second entry, when it differs from the first, is taken from the KuKauM[2] and is in bold characters.

The Ṭīkā[3] paraphrases the same passage and also lists the corresponding pūjā names separately. Nothing is noted if the name in the Ṭīkā is the same as the one in the KnT. If this name coincides with the one in the KuKauM, it is prefixed with an asterix. If the name in the Ṭīkā differs from both, it is noted separately in bold characters and underlined. If the entry in the second list in the Ṭīkā differs from the first, it is noted in brackets after it.

The SKh[4] supplies a series of mantras addressed to the Sixteen Siddhas. When the name in a mantra agrees with the first entry, nothing is done. If it is the same as another entry that is put in italics. If it differs from the other entries the name is written separately in italics.
8) The consorts of the Siddhas are listed in the eighth column. The first entry in plain type is from the KnT. If there is more than one consort, the names are linked with a plus sign. The commentary on the ṢSS 44/21ab lists the names of the consorts of the Sixteen Siddhas. Apart from the first one, their names are all different. They are noted in italics.

[1] KuKauM 1/150-165.
[2] KuKauM 1/150-165.
[3] Ṭīkā MS K fl. 179b.
[4] SKh MS G fl. 48b.

24. First Table of Sixteen Siddhas

Birth place	Caste	Name at birth	Caryā name	Famed name	Secret name	Pūjā name	Consort
1) Candrapura	Brahmin	Madhusūdana Keśava – Dāmodara	Bherīśa Candrapurya Candrāpūrya	Bhramarānanda	Somānanda	Candrapūrya Śūlānanda Śūra Surānanda	Candrāmbā
2) Ḍāhala Vacchoga	Brahmin	Viṣṇuśarmā Mādhava - Viṣṇuśarmā	Gulmadeva AS: Vatsagulma	Mālādhara	Tripurānanda	Tīvrānanda	Viśvāmbā + Ajitāmbā Kalpaviśvāmbā
3) Manukheṭa in Śālikoṭa	Brahmin	Dhūrjaṭideva Māṇikya - Dhūrjaṭi	Stambhadeva	Tejīśādeva	Caruka Rūka-saṁkṣika	Khecarānanda Kṣeparānanda	Caryāmbā + Ānandāmbā Vaṭāmbā
4) Khandhāpura in Kanna Khaṭvāra	Brahmin	Dāmodara Ravicandraka – Dāmodara	Kārpāsadeva Vimaladeva Kalmāsa	Vastrāpahāra-deva	Vimalānanda	Garbhānanda Garbhamuktaka	Khecarī āmbā Gulma-śekharāmbā
5) Yājapura in Pāṇḍu Jayapura	Brahmin	Padmanābha Mahādeva - Vāsuki	Vaṭapura Candrapurīśa	Viṣayasaṁ-krāmaṇadeva	Vyāptānanda	Siṁhānanda Siddhānanda	Stambhāmbā + Sadānandā Stambhāmbā
6) Kanyākubja Virajā	Mahārāja Soma-siddhāntin Kṣatriya Brahmin	Devapāla Jayadeva - Tribhuvana	Virāja Virājeśa	Śaṅkhānanda	Ratnānanda	Jayānanda	Ratnadevī Vīrajāmbā
7) Ḍāhala Vaṁkāpura	Brahmin	Puruṣottama Keśava - Puruṣottama	Prayāsadeva Prabhāsa Prayāga	Ghaṭaplāva-nānanda	Yogānanda	Vijayānanda Śubhagānanda	Vijayā + Raktasiddhā Raktākṣambā
8) Rājakīya Sandhiviprahī ? Nandavardhana	Brahmin Kṣatriya[1]	Vaṅkadeva Aṭaputraka - Bākāla	Katsāladeva Kaṁsāla Kāṁsāla Ṭ: Kāsapāla AS: Kaṁsabala	Kharjūrānanda	Mahimānanada	Citrānanda Amṛtānanda Mitra	Kulaśāsanī + Citrānandāmbā Kulaśāsanāmbā

[1] KuKauM bhūmiputra

9) Antarvedyā in Śrīkoṭa Madhyama	_Kṣatriya_ Brahmin	Devadhara Vasudeva – Vikrama	Bhogānanda Bhogapureśāna *Bhogadeva Bhogadeva	Śāraṅgadeva	Śubhānanda	Vīrānanda Amṛta	Vīrāmbā + Mahālakṣmī + Anantāmbā Mahālakṣmyambā
10) Hastinagara Zagara	Vaiśyā *Kṣatriya	Śivagaṇa ?	Bimbadevī* *Bimbadeva Bimbadeva	Bodhatrāsanī	Guptadevī Vimala	? _Vimala_	Vimalā[1] Sundarāmbā
11) Rudrāṅka Sopāra	Śūdrā Vaiśya Kṣatriya	Karnavaṭaśarī Mahādeva - Āgama	Khaḍgadevī *Khaḍgadeva Khaḍgadeva	Karuṇādevī Puruṣakṣobha-devī ambā	Ratnadevī Ratnadeva	Indramaṇidevī Vāmānanda Ratna	Puruṣakṣobha-devī Kuṭilāmbā
12) Rājapura Gauḍīdhārā	Vaiśya* Brahmin	Śavarāvayava Śrīdhara - Ṛṣi	Rudradeva	Śilāvedhadeva	Padmānanda Prajñānanda	Unmanānanda Icchānanda Keśava (Icchā)	Unmanāmbā + Yogāmbā Vikārāmbā
13) Pṛthūdaka in Kurukṣetra Śivasthāna	Brahmin* Vaiśya	Aniruddha Padmanābha - Tāta	Rāmaśivadeva _Dhārāśiva_ V*arāhadeva*	Puṣpānanda	Keśavānanda	Ratnānanda Bhaṭṭānanda Traipura (Bhava) Unmanānanda	Vegadevī + Barbarāmbā Vegāmbā
14) Mahārāṣṭra Koṭara	Kṣatriya _Śūdra_	Devagaṇa Virāja - Gopāla	Mudrāsphoṭa	Śilāvedha	Unmanānanda Unmatta	Keśavānanda Bhagānanda Bhaṭṭa Mudrānanda	Nīlagarvāmbā Unmanyambā
15) Jājanagara in Gauḍa Makuṭa	Kṣatriya Brahmin Śūdra	Carpaṭa Rājadeva - Viśvarūpa	Vaṅkāpura	Ketakīdeva	Marmānanda Manonmana	Khaḍgānanda Brahmānanda Brāhmārpaṇa Srotrānanda	Khaḍgāmbā + Mohinyā + Divyāmbā Mohanyambā
16) Ayodhyā Bhogavardhana	Śūdra Kṣatriya Brahmin	Rājāditya Mitranātha – Durjaya	Bhojadeva AS: Bhūrjadeva	Nandasphoṭa	Sahajānanda	Vyaktānanda Manonmanā-nanda Magha (Unmatta) Mahantānanda	Vyaktāmbā Madanāhlādinī Dīptāmbā Manohlādāmbā

[1] Vimalā has nine other names: Śikhā, Bimbadevī, Suśobhanā, Nāgakanyā, Kumārī, Dhāriṇī, Payadhāriṇī, Raktā and Bhadrā

The Second Table of The Sixteen Siddhas.

1) The names according to the ritual convention (pūjāsaṁketa) listed in the KuKh are recorded in the first column.[1]
2) These names of the Sixteen Siddhas are repeated twice in the Ṭīkā.[2] They are entered in column two. The variants in the second list are noted in brackets.
3) The caryā name of the Siddhas according to the KuKh[3] are recorded in column three.
4) According to the ṢSS the Sixteen Siddhas, who belong to the profane (adivya) world of men, have sixteen divine (divya) counterparts. Omniscient, all-pervasive and immortal, they are said to be rays of divine light (raśmirūpa) that shine in the Wheel of the Self-supported, which consists of the bliss of the innate pulsation of consciousness (sahajaspanda). Accordingly, they are known as the Lords of the Foundation (Ādhārīśa) who are said to be the sixteen supports of the universe.[4] Their names are listed in the fourth column.
5-8) The fifth and the following three columns record the locations of the sixteen Siddhas within the body (called 'doors' in the Ṭīkā) according to the KuKauM[5] (column 5), the Ṭīkā[6] (column 6), and the KuKh[7] (columns 7 and 8).
9) According to the KuKauM and the Ṭīkā, the sixteen Siddhas are disciples of three of the Nine Nāthas each of which belong to one of the three lineages (oli). The first nine except the fifth are the disciples of Gagana and belong to the Lineage of the Eldest. The fifth Siddha is a disciple of Padma and belongs to the Middle Lineage. The remaining seven are disciples of Kamala and belong to the Lineage of the Child. The Ṭīkā refers to a seventeenth Siddha called Muktānanada but does not state to which of these three lineages he belongs. The lineages to which the sixteen belong according to the KuKauM[8] are recorded in column nine.
10) The teachers of the sixteen according to the KuKh and the Ṭīkā[9] are recorded in column ten.

---

[1] KuKh 7/74cd-77ab.
[2] Ṭ MS K fl. 179b.
[3] KuKh 46/181-196ab.
[4] ṢSS 44/2-8.
[5] KuKauM 1/167-174.
[6] Ṭīkā MS K fl. 181a.
[7] KuKh 25/34-36 and ibid. 7/85cd-87ab.
[8] KuKauM 1/158-163.
[9] KuKh 7/77cd-79 and Ṭīkā fl. 181a.

25. Second Table of Sixteen Siddhas

Pūjā Name according to the KuKh	Pūjā Name according to the *Ṭīkā	Caryā Name according to the KuKh	Sixteen Divine Siddhas ṢSS	Location in the body KuKauM	Location in the body the *Ṭīkā	Location in the body KuKh	Location in the body KuKh	Lineage KuKauM	The Teachers of the Sixteen KuKh and the *Ṭīkā
Sūra	Śūra	Candrābja	Pingeśa	Forehead	Anus	Uvula	GARLAND	THE LINEAGE OF THE ELDEST (PARĀNVAYA)	GAGANĀNANDA
Tīvra	Tīvra	Gulmanātha	Śvetanātha	Between Eyebrows	Ajayoni	Palate
Khecarya	Khecara	Śaktyagni	Krūrāstra-mati	Two eyes tejoyugma	Picuyoni	Fat	OF Garbhamukta	Garbhamuktaka	Kalpeśa	Vibhrama	Two ears	Navel	Marrow
Siṁhaka Ṭ: Siṁhapa SKh: śrīsiddha	Siṁhapa	Vaṭasiṁha	Ardhendu	Nose	Breast	Semen	THE	The MIDDLE LINEAGE (VAKRIKĀ-NVAYA)	PADMĀNANDA
Jaya	Jaya	Virajeśa	Gaganon-matta	Mouth	Breast	Kuṇḍalinī		THE LINEAGE OF THE ELDEST (PARĀNVAYA)	GAGANĀNANDA
Vijayamitra	Vijaya	Japānanda	Kaulārka	Throat	Ear	Sinews	SKULL
Vīra	Mitra	Jayānanda	Kauleśa	Left shoulder	Ear	Bones
Five Pure Ones In the SKh: Śrīvimala Śrīratna Śrīkeśava Śrī-unmana Śrīmudra	Vīra (Amṛta)	Ratneśa	Kulamātaṇga	Right shoulder	Nostril	Skin	NAVEL
	Vimala	Bimbavimala	Rudra-mārtaṇḍa	Heart	Nostril	Hair
	Ratna	Amraka	Aghora	Left armpit	Eye	Nectar (?)		LINEAGE	KAMALĀNANDA
	Keśava (Icchā)	Śrīnātha	Daṇḍavega	Right armpit	Eye	Meat	CIRCLE
	Traipura (Bhava)	Ṣaṣṭhānanda	Ṣaṣṭhānanda	Navel	Forehead (bindu-sthāna)	Blood		OF Ratnakeśava	Bhaṭṭa	Khageśvara	Khageśvara	Self-supported	Uvula	Cosmic Fire	OF	THE
Unmattamudra SKh: Śrīśrotra	Brahmārpaṇa (Brahma)	Ḍāmara	Kumuda	Genitals	Topknot	Wind	THE
Srotavāha SKh: Śrīmahanta	Magha (Unmatta)	?	Uḍadeva	Foundation	End of the Twelve	Sky	VULVA	CHILD SIDDHĀNVAYA

Legends of the Sixteen Siddhas

Like the Nine Nāthas, the Sixteen Siddhas have names derived from episodes in their life for which they were famous. The KnT recounts these events in brief as follows.

1) Madhusūdana. He was called Bhramarānandanātha because he conjoined his Self with a bee (bhramara).
2) Viṣṇuśarmā. He was called Mālādharadeva because he miraculously hung a garland of flowers (mālā) in the sky.
3) Dhūrjaṭideva. He was called Tejīśadeva because he awakened the king of the land of the Turks (turuṣka).
4) Dāmodara. He was called Vastrāpahāradeva - the lord who stole away the clothes (nothing is written about this name).
5) Padmanābha. He was called Viṣayasaṁkrāmaṇadeva because he refuted an attack made in the field of the teaching during a dispute with Brahmins.
6) Devapāla. He was called Śaṅkhānanadeva because he made the sun face east with the sound of his conch (śaṅkha).
7) Puruṣottama. He was called Ghaṭaplāvanānandanātha because he caused a water jar that was on his head to fly up into the sky.
8) Vaṅkadeva. He was called Kharjūrānandanātha because he caused a date tree (kharjūra) to fly up into the sky by merely looking at it out of sport (krīḍārthe).
9) Devadhara. He was called Śāraṅgadeva because he paralysed[1] a Śāraṅgī bird.
10) Śivagaṇa. This teacher was born a woman. She was called Bodhatrāsanī Ambā because she frightened the Buddhists in Ṭhāṇakoṅkaṇa with the sound of her kettledrum (bherī). When she took initiation and assumed authority as a teacher (adhikārakāla) she made a gesture that transformed her into a man (puruṣaliṅgamudrā) and assumed authority with her female consort (śakti). Even so, the uninitiated (paśu) see her in the form of a woman. She has ten names. They are: Vimalā, Śikhā, Ciddevī, Suśobhanā, Nāgakanyā, Kumārī, Dhāraṇī, Payodhāraṇī, Rakṣā and Bhadrā.
11) Karṇavaṭaśara. This teacher was also a woman. Her name was Karuṇādevī because she had compassion (karuṇā) for many. She was called Puruṣakṣobhadevī Ambā (the Mother Goddess who Arouses Men) because, out of curiosity to see its effect, she displayed the gesture of a woman's Yoni along with the gesture that transformed her into a man (puruṣaliṅgamudrā) and thus aroused men.

---

[1] Read -stobhitas- for -stoṭitas-.

12) Vaiśyaśavarāvayava. He was called Śilāvedhadeva because he pierced (vedha) a stone (śilā) with a mere look.
13) Aniruddha. He was called Puṣpānandanātha because he once caused flowers to bloom out of season.
14) Devagaṇa. He was called Śilāvedhadeva because he pierced (vedha) a stone (śilā) with a mere look.
15) Carpaṭa. He was called Ketakīdeva because he once caused flowers to fall from the sky.
16) Rājāditya. He was called Nandasphoṭadeva because he awakened Nandirudra.

The Disciples of the Sixteen Siddhas.

The Ṭīkā commenting, it seems, on the verses quoted above from the AS[1] says:

> The sixteen (Siddhas) will have one hundred and sixty-three disciples[2] and then their (spiritual) sons will be countless thousands. Merger takes place in the western lineage (paścimovalli). Where? They are all merged in the supreme Void, that is, in the divine Liṅga which is Unstruck Sound. By what means (does that take place)? By the one who has realised blissful consciousness by the awakening of the knowledge of the bliss of consciousness. The meaning is that they are never born again in the world of transmigration.[3] [1] AS 8/56-60, see above, p. 526.

---

[2] See KuKh 7/81-82.

[3] eteṣāṁ ṣoḍaśānāṁ śiṣyāṇāṁ kaliyuge santatir bhaviṣyati yāvat ātmana [k, kh: ātmā] ekādaśasthānam | ekādaśasthānaṁ kim ucyate | tat kathyate yathā | navanāthamadhyād ekaṁ tataḥ ṣoḍaśamadhyād [kh: -madhyā] dvitīyam | dvāpañcāśanmadhyāt [k: -śamadhyāt-; kh: -śamadhyā] tṛtīyam | tatputraṁ caturtham | tasya putraṁ pañcamam | tasya [kh: tasyaḥ] putraṁ [k kh: putra] saṣṭham [k kh: saṣaṣṭhaṁ] | tasya putraṁ [k: putra] saptamam | saptamasya putram aṣṭamam | aṣṭamasya putraṁ navamam | navamasya putraṁ daśamam | daśamasya putram ekādaśam | tasyaikādaśasthānaṁ [kh: tasyadekā-] yāvat asmin paścimāmnāye ovalliśuddhiḥ kāryā [k kh: kāryāḥ] | tadūrdhve sthānasaṁkhyānakād ity arthaḥ | yadi cet [k: cche; kh: cchet] sthānasaṁjñābhedakrameṇa ovalliśuddhir na kriyate tadā [k kh: yathā tada] śivādisvagurvantam ovalliṁ [k kh: ovalliḥ] kathaṁ pūjayet | tat kathyate yathā | guruḥ [k kh: * *] paramaguruḥ [k kh: -ru] paramācārya ādisiddhaḥ [k kh: -siddha] parameṣṭhir iti [k kh: parameṣṭhi iti; kh: parameṣṭhiti] pañcakaṁ pūjyam [k: -jyā; kh: -jya] | tathā navātmā tataḥ śrīkaṇṭhaḥ [k kh: -kaṇṭha] śaṁkaro 'nantaḥ sādākhyaḥ piṅgala [k: piṁgalaḥ] iti gurupañcakaṁ pūjayet | evaṁ navaṣoḍaśanāthāḥ [k kh: -thaḥ] bhairavasya śrīnāthasya putrāḥ adhikāraṁ kṛtvā sarve [k: sarvaṁ] khecaratve bhaviṣyanti | yadā tair adhikāraṁ [k kh: te adhi-] kṛtaṁ tadā santānaṁ dakṣiṇāpathe koṅkaṇe [kh: kuṁkuṇe] | evaṁ ṣoḍaśa śiṣyāḥ kaliyuge vartamāne vartante [k kh: varttati] | te ca svagotre niyojanīyāḥ [k kh: -yāt] | tato 'parāś ca [k kh: tataḥ parāśva] me śiṣyāḥ || iti [k kh: * *] ṣoḍaśānāṁ śiṣyāḥ śatam ekaṁ triṣaṣṭyādhikam bhaviṣyanti [k kh: * * * ] | tatas

Seven of the sixteen did not have disciples. The rest had a varying number as noted in the following table. Although, according to the Ṭīkā, many of them came from various places, they were all initiated in Candrapura. Naturally, they belonged to the lineages of their teachers and so did their disciples. Fifty-two belonged to the Lineage of the Eldest, twenty-seven to the Middle Lineage and eighty-four to the Lineage of the Child. These went on to found 'innumerable' lineages of Siddhas whose Command was 'extremely powerful'.[1] The KuKh simple states the number of disciples in each lineage. The KuKauM and the Ṭīkā list the numbers of disciples each one had as well. The Ṭīkā even supplies their names and in many cases their birth place.[2]

26. Table of the Disciples of the Sixteen Siddhas

Serial Order	Name according to the SKh[3]	Name according to the Ṭīkā[4]	Lineage	Number of Disciples
1	Sura	Candrapurya	(Middle)
2	Tīvra	Gulmadeva	Elders	4
3	Khecara	Stambhadeva	Elders	10
4	Garbhamukta	Kārpāsadeva (Muktānanda)	Elders	20 8
5	Siddha	Vaṭapura	Middle	27
6	Jaya	Virāja	Elders	10
7	Vijaya	Prayāsadeva	(Middle)
8	Mitra	Kāsapāla (Kauśala)	(Middle)
9	Vīra	Bhogadeva (Bhogadevī)	(Child)	(14)
10	Vimala	Bimbadeva (Bimbadevī)	Child	50 (25)
11	Ratna	Khaḍgadeva	Child	10
12	Keśava	Rudradeva	(Middle)
13	Umana	Dhārāśiva	Child	10
14	Mudrā	Mudrāsphoṭa	(Middle)
15	Śrota	Vaṅkāpura	(Middle)
16	Mahanta	Bhojadeva (Bhujasphoṭa)	Child (Middle)	14

---

teṣāṁ putrāḥ sahasraśaḥ asaṁkhyātaḥ [k kh: -tāḥ] | paścimovallyāṁ [k: -valli; kh: -molli] layaṁ bhavati | kutra [k kh: kotra] | divyaliṅge anāhate pare śūnye līnā bhavanti [k kh: bhavati] sarve | kayā [k kh: kena] yuktyā | ānandabodhabodhinā bodhānandajñānodbodhanāt | punaḥ saṁsāre na [k kh: ṇa] saṁbhavanti kadācid ity arthaḥ | | MS Kh. 180b-181a.
The masculine noun 'putra-' in this passage is consistently treated as neuter.

[1] KuKh 7/81-82.

[2] Ṭīkā MS K fl. 184a.

[3] SKh MS G fl. 48b. All these names end with 'ānandanātha'.

[4] Names as in the first table of the Sixteen Siddhas, see above, p. 529-530.

The Lineages and Siddhas according to the Second Recension of the Yogakhaṇḍa

The Divine Current (Divyaugha)

Chapter fifteen of YKh (2) is dedicated to an account of the lineages of teachers. In accord with the common basic triadic pattern, YKh (2) presents three currents of Siddhas. The first emerged in the First Age, the second and third in the third and the fourth, respectively. The first is the Divyaugha – the Divine Current. It is also called the Gurvogha – the Current of the Teachers. The second is the Divyādivya – the Divine-cum-Mortal - Current and the third is the Siddhaugha, the Current of the Siddhas. Generated at the beginning of each Age, they trace step by step, group by group, the formation of the cosmic order first, and then the microcosmic body.

The first two Currents contain the same number of Siddhas divided into the same six groupings of 1, 3, 5, 7, 9 and 16 Siddhas. Both begin with a cosmogony that includes the origin of the First Siddha and with him the universe and the teachers. The third one is the Current of the Siddhas. There is no initial cosmogony as in the first two Currents. Instead it begins with the Nine Siddhas, who are derived from the Divine Current called 'the Flower'. This is the stream of energies of the Transmental.[1] It should not be confused with the first of these three Currents of Siddhas.

The Divine Current (Divyaugha), that is, the Current of the Teachers (Gurvogha), begins as follows. The goddess is speaking:

> O Great God (mahādeva), when the universe, mobile and immobile, was a formless Void there was neither you nor I, neither Brahmā nor Keśava (Viṣṇu), neither the gods nor the worlds, neither Gandharvas nor Kinnaras, neither Nāgas nor the netherworlds (where they reside). I had burnt (everything) with the Fire of Time (kālāgni). Nothing came into being and all things were darkness wrapped in inertia (tamas). The divine Command arose there in (that) formless ocean. Once again I emanated that (Command) beautiful with the earth and (the other principles of existence).[2]

---

[1] See intro. vol. 1, p.23-24.

[2] yasmin kāle nirākāre [k, kh: -kare] śūnyabhūte carācare ||
na [k, kh: ta] tvaṁ nāhaṁ mahādeva na brahmā na ca keśavaḥ [k, kh: keśava] |
na surā na ca vai lokā gandharvā na ca kinnarāḥ [k, kh: -rā] ||
*na nāgā na ca pātālā dagdhāḥ [k: nagdhā; kh: na (?)] kālāgninā mayā |
utpattir nāsti [k, kh: utpattiṁ-] sarveṣāṁ andhakāras tamovṛtaḥ [k, kh: -raṁ tamāvṛtam] ||
*tatrārṇave nirākāre [k: -rai; kh: nirākā (?)] divyājñāyā [kh: (?)] samudbhavā [kh: -va] |

> The God of the gods, the Supreme Lord without beginning, the agent of the emanation of the radiant energy (tejas) (to which belongs all that) extends from Brahmā up to the end of the worlds, slept. O Hara, the unmanifest god, generated the Cosmic Egg (aṇḍa). O fair faced one, there in the middle, you and I abided for a cosmic age (kalpa). O Bhairava, by the Yoga of the Sequence of Withdrawal (saṁhārakrama), I came to be (saṁbhūtā). O beautiful one, listen to what I, who had just come forth, did. Taking that Egg into (my) hand, I churned it. Then when the Egg had been churned, Brahmā and Viṣṇu came into being.[1]

The first group are the three Śāmbhava Siddhas. They are Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra, who are generated by the goddess to perform their functions of creating, sustaining and destroying the world (19-20). Then once, the fundamental basis of the cosmic order and its dynamism has been established, its parts emerge:

> O god, (now) you have been told this, listen, O Bhairava, to (what happened) next. This God, called Self-existent (svayaṁbhū), observed great austerity and the one called Victory arose (there in) in his abode. He became fivefold (in the form of the Five Elements) in order to serve as the cause of the deluding clutter (ḍambara) of creation.[2]

Bhairava's fivefold form consists of the Five Siddhas. They appear in the KMT as aspects of Bhairava who is called Ciñciṇīnātha here. They are 'the agents of emanation' and govern the five gross elements.

---

*punar eva mayā sṛṣṭā * pṛthivyādimanoramā* || YKh (2) 15/10cd-13.

[1]prasuptaṁ devadeveśaṁ [k: -devaśaṁ] anādiparameśvaram |
tejaḥsṛṣṭes tu [k: -ṣṭistu; kh: (?)] kartāraṁ ābrahmabhuvanāntikam ||
avyaktena tu devena aṇḍam utpāditaṁ hara |
tatra madhye ahaṁ tvañ ca sthitau [k, kh: -to] kalpaṁ varānana ||
saṁhārakramayogena saṁbhūtāhaṁ ca bhairava |
*mayā saṁjātamātre yat [k: -mātrāyā; kh: saṁjātamā * (?)] yat kṛtaṁ śṛṇu sundara ||
tac cāṇḍaṁ [k, kh: sa-] tu kare kṛtvā mathitaṁ tu mayā tadā |
tadā [k: tatsau; tatsyai] cāṇḍasya [kh: vāṇḍasya] mathite [k, kh: mathitu] brahmā [k, kh: brahma] viṣṇur ajāyata || Ibid. 15/14-17.

[2] etat te kathitaṁ deva aparaṁ śṛṇu bhairava | [kh: (?)]
svayaṁbhūr [k: -bhū] nāma devo 'yaṁ mahātapasi [k: -su] saṁsthitaḥ [k: - taṁ] || 21 || [kh: (?)]
tasya [kh: (?)] sthāne [kh: (?)] samutpannā vijayānāmanāmataḥ |
sa eva pañcadhā bhūtaḥ sṛṣṭyāḍambarakāraṇāt [k: sṛṣṭi-] || [kh: (?)] YKh (2) 15/21-22.

> (The five are) Śrīkaṇṭha, Śaṅkara, Ananta, Sādākhya and Piṅgala. Śrīkaṇṭha is in the Earth principle and Śaṅkara resides in Water. Ananta is said to be Fire and Sādākhya is said to be Air, (while) Piṅgala should be known to be Space. These five are the agents of emanation. In this way, the god who has five natures is established in Earth and the other (gross elements). This is the god Ciñciṇīnātha. He is Bhairava who has attained the Command. He is the lord, who has five forms and can (both) grace and punish. [1]

In the KMT, Bhairava describes himself:

> I am indeed the sole potter (kulāla) and I burn with (divine) qualities in the midst of the Skyfarers and the rest. Established in the status of a teacher, I emanate all things. I am Sādākhya of the Skyfarers, Piṅga (the Tawny One) born of the Wind. In (the element) Fire, my nature (as Ananta) is endless (ananta). I am the Lord of Grace - Anugrahīśa, born of Water. I am Śrīkaṇṭha at the culmination of completion (nivṛti). I am Kulīśa in the world. I grace all things. Although one, I am many. In the condition of a teacher I have shown all things in accord with the intention (bhāva) with which I have been questioned. I am visible here (in this very world) in the Lineage (santāna) of the Siddhas. I am constantly present in the form of the teacher whose Command issues forth and functions (saṁpravartate). One should know that these teachers are born from the limbs of my Command. They are like the forms of gold which are of many kinds (only) because of (their) diverse names (such as) belt, bracelet, anklet, necklace, seal and ring.[2]

Now the material sphere has been emitted, the seven 'leaders of the Siddhas' who come next generate and govern the seven constituents of the body. These are followed by the Nine Siddhas. There are three in the sky, the netherworlds and on the earth.[3] The Sixteen Siddhas are their spiritual sons. The

---

[1] śrīkaṇṭhaḥ śaṅkaro 'nantaḥ sādākhyaḥ [k, kh: -khyā] piṅgalas tathā |
śrīkaṇṭhaḥ pṛthivītattve śaṅkaraś cāpasaṁsthitaḥ ||
*tejo 'nantam [kh: * * * (?)m] iti proktaṁ sādākhyo [k: -khyā; kh: -kṣā] vāyur ucyate |
ākāśaḥ piṅgalo [k: -lā] jñeyaḥ pañcaite sṛṣṭikārakāḥ ||
evaṁ pañcātmako [k, kh: - kaṁ] devaḥ [k, kh: -va] pṛthivyādiṣu saṁsthitaḥ [k,kh: - taṁ] |
ciñciṇīnāthadevo 'yaṁ [k: - devāyaṁ] ājñāsiddhas tu bhairavaḥ ||
pañcamūrtidharo nātho [k, kh: -tha] nigrahānugrahakṣamaḥ | Ibid. 15/23-26ab.

[2] KMT 3/94-100ab.

[3] Cf. above, p. 514.

first twelve are worshipped in the body and four beyond up to the End of the Twelve.[1]

The Divine-cum-Mortal Current

The account of the Divine-cum-Mortal Current opens with the creation of the universe and the birth of first Siddha. The goddess is speaking:

> O god, lord of the universe, listen. O best of the gods, I will explain. There is a great place, a mountain peak (called) Trikūṭa on the top of Meru. Agnituṅga arose there. He came into being without a sound. Powerful and surrounded by a garland of flames, he possessed the radiant energy of the twelve suns. The Person (puruṣa), unmanifest by nature, emerged from his navel. O Bhairava, he has no manifestation and is not perceived. And that is said to be the supreme place that is very frightening.[2]
>
> The power of his will emerged and came forth like a streak of lightning. And she was in the Sky (ākāśa) above and below in the supreme (transcendent) and the inferior (immanent). She was divided into three parts by the power of (her) divine energy. O god, will, knowledge and action - the mobile and immobile (universe) was pervaded by (these) three. I gave rise to the other gods and I am the mother of the universe.[3]
>
> The deity called Kubjikā arose in the form of power (śakti). It is (the god's) power of will, knowledge and action in the form of a sprout. Impelled by my Command, he performed intense austerities.

---

[1] YKh (2) 15/26cd-42.

[2] śṛṇu deva jagannātha pravakṣyāmi surottama ||
āste [k, kh: asti] śikharasaṁsthānaṁ [k, kh: śikharaṁ mahāsthānaṁ] trikūṭaṁ [k, kh: citrakūṭaṁ] merumūrdhani [kh: -mūrddhani] |
nirghoṣaṁ tatra saṁjātaṁ [kh: saṁsthānaṁ] agnituṅgasamudbhavam ||
jvālāmālākulaṁ tīvraṁ dvādaśādityavarcasam |
tasya nābhyāṁ samutpannaṁ puruṣam avyaktarūpiṇam ||
na tasya vidyate vyaktir na sa paśyati [k, kh: dṛśyati] bhairava |
śrūyate ca paraṁ sthānaṁ durgamaṁ [k, kh: sadramaṁ] cātidāruṇam [k, kh: tamati-] ||
Ibid. 15/43cd-46.

[3] tasyecchāśaktir utpannā nirgatā vidyullekhavat [k: vidyulekha-] |
ākāśe tu gatā sā ca [k: sara; kh: sāra] ūrdhvādhaś [k, kh: adhordhve] ca parāpare ||
tridhākhaṇḍagatā sā tu divyaśaktiprabhāvataḥ [kh: -tāḥ] |
icchā jñānī [kh: jñānā] kriyā deva tribhir vyāptaṁ [k, kh: -pta] carācaram ||
mayā cānyoditā [k: conyāditā] devā ahaṁ mātā jagatas tathā [k, kh: jagasya ca] |
Ibid. 15/47-49ab.

> (When he had) practiced terrible austerity for a thousand divine years, a great Siddha came into being there who shined like the risen sun. He had five faces and four arms and burnt with fifteen eyes. O Śaṅkara, such was the form that arose in the time of the Age of Strife. O beloved, he was the first born Kaulika of (the goddess) Kubjikā (kukārā). He performed intense austerities in the venerable house of Candrapura.[1]

Three Siddhas were born from the first Siddha's radiant energy. They were the counterparts of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra of the previous Current. After them, as in the previous Current, Five Siddhas came into being who were the counterparts of the previous ones. They entered 'the sequence of the six parts (ṣaṭprakārakrama)', that is, the Krama. Thus, along with Śrīnātha, they are the Siddhas of the sacred seats. The seven Siddhas who come next are Skyfarers, close to Dhruva. They are followed by the Nine Siddhas who are emanated from the deity's radiant energy (tejas) and are worshipped in the Cavity of Brahmā. The next Sixteen Siddhas are born from Sūryadeva and are located in the body.[2]

The Current of the Siddhas (Siddhaugha)

The Current of Siddhas is the Current of this Age. It emerged in Koṅkaṇa directly from the Divine Current of the Transmental, presumably, from the ninefold body of Śrīnātha with which it ends. These nine and the following sixteen Siddhas are those we find in the accounts in the other sources. Here the Nine Nāthas are called by their names used for worship (pūjā). As usual, three of them emerge in Koṅkaṇa and are praised in the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha).[3] They are worshipped in the body and beyond.[4] The Sixteen Siddhas or Persons (puruṣa),

---

[1] utpannā śaktirūpeṇa kubjikā nāma devatā ||
tasya icchājñānī [k: tasyachani; kh: tasyecchāni] kriyāśaktir aṅkurākārarūpiṇī |
tena tīvraṁ tapas [k, kh: tapaṁ] taptaṁ mamājñāpreritena ca ||
divyavarṣasahasraṁ tu tapaḥ [k: tape; kh: tapaṁ] kṛtvā sudāruṇam |
tatrotpannaṁ mahāsiddhaṁ uditārkasamaprabham [k, kh: uditārkaṁ-] || cāturbhujaṁ [k, kh: pañcavaktraṁ] pañcavaktraṁ [k: cāturbhujaṁ; kh: cātujaṁ] tripañcanayanojjvalam [k: - nājvalaṁ; kh: tripaṁcanayanījvalaṁ] |
īdṛgrūpaṁ samutpannaṁ kalikāle [k, kh: kāli-] tu śaṅkara ||
kukārādisamutpannaṁ tenāsau kaulikaḥ [k, kh: - kāṁ] priya |
tapas tīvraṁ kṛtaṁ tena śrīmaccandrapure gṛhe || Ibid. 15/49cd-53.

[2] Ibid. 15/54-73.

[3] Ibid. 15/79-87.

[4] Ibid. 15/88-90.

who have 'authority in Koṅkaṇa', are listed next[1] along with their states, distribution in the three Lineages and locations in the body and beyond.[2]

The data relating to the three Currents is summerized in the following tables.

27. Table of the Three Siddhas

Gurvogha	Location	Function	Divine-cum-Mortal
Brahmā	Egg of Brahmā	Creation	Ananta
Viṣṇu	Bhaga	Preservation	Mahīdhara
Rudra	Liṅga	Destruction	Piṅgala

28. Table of the Five Siddhas

Gurvogha	Element	Divine-cum-Mortal
Śrīkaṇṭha	Earth	Matrīśa
Śaṁkara	Water	Ṣaṣṭhideva
Ananta	Fire	Caryā
Sādākhya	Air	Oḍīśa
Piṅgala	Space	Śrīnātha

29. Table of the Seven Siddhas

Gurvogha	Divine-cum-Mortal
Sparśa (Touch)	Asitāṅga
Carmadeva (God of the Skin)	Candradeva
Māṁsarakṣa (Guardian of the Flesh)	Krodheśa
Raktāṅga (Blood Body)	Unmatta
Asthideva (God of the Bones)	Kāpālika
Majjadeva (God of the Marrow)	Bhīṣaṇadeva
Bīja (Seed)	Siṁha

[1] Ibid. 15/90cd-94.
[2] Ibid. 15/95-104.

30. Table of the Nine Siddhas

Gurvogha	Divine-cum-Mortal	Current of Siddhas	Location
Dhruva	Gaṇeśvara	Kiraṇa	Eyebrows
Candra	Kārttikeya	Yoga	Foundation
Sūrya	Mahākāla	Padma	Full of Gems
Aśvatthāma	Nandideva	Goṣṭīvya	Full of Gems
Hanumān	?	?	Full of Gems
Vibhīṣaṇa	Anaṅga	Tripurāntaka	Knot of Brahmā
Bali	Śankūkarṇa	Kamala	Beyond the Fifth
Rājā	Vīrabhadra	Tattvadeva	Beyond the Fifth
Kūrmaśeṣa	Puṣpaka	Ciñcinīnātha	Beyond the Fifth

31. Table of the Sixteen Siddhas

Gurvogha	Location	Divine-cum-Mortal	Location	Current of Siddhas	Lineage
Kumuda	Feet	Drāvaka-vedhaka	Garland of Skulls	Candrapuṣpa	None
Kroḍadeva	Ankles	ṇnandaghūrmi	Garland of Skulls	Gulmadeva	None
Khagīśa	Knees	Lampasiddha	Garland of Skulls	Stambhadeva	None
Ṣaṣṭha	Thighs	Sandohaka	Garland of Skulls	Karpāsa	Eldest
Ghora	Anus	Amara	Garland of Skulls	Vaṭapurya	Middle
Caṇḍa	Palce of birth	Śiraśekhara	Garland of Skulls	Viraja	Eldest
Raudra	Kuṇḍalī	Bhadrāṅga	Garland of Skulls	Prayāsa	None
Mahākāla	Navel	Kulūta Mūrchaka	Garland of Skulls	Kāśālya	None
Kaulīśa	Unstruck Sound	Pāvaka	Navel	Bhogadeva	None
Kulanātha	Pure Wheel	Jīmūta	Knot of Brahmā	Bimbadeva	Child
Kīrti	Uvula	Paṅkanātha	Knot of Brahmā	Khaḍgadeva	Child
Koṅkaṇa-pāduka	Between Eyebrows	Amara	Knot of Brahmā	Rudradeva	Child
Śvetāṅga	Forehead	Bhairava-śekhara	Knot of Brahmā	Dhārāśiva	Child

Gurvogha	Location	Divine-cum-Mortal	Location	Current of Siddhas	Lineage
Piṅgala	Cavity of Brahmā	Kaulīśa	Knot of Brahmā	Mudrāsphoṭa	Child
Krūra	Half Moon	Rudra	Knot of Brahmā	Kāpura (Śaśāṅka)	Child

The Hagiographies of the Siddhas

The Siddha Trivikrama

The goddess goes on to narrate stories of the lives of three Siddhas. These are the three Nāthas out of the Nine Nāthas who taught in Candrapura and made disciples there. Together they generate the 'Triple Purity', which is the transmission of authority (adhikārakrama) in the lineages of the Eldest, the Middling and the Youngest. The first one is Trivikrama who belonged to the Lineage of the Elders. Each Siddha has a consort along with whom he should be worshipped. Her conversion and exploits are an important part of the hagiography of each Siddha. The main features of these Siddhas generally agree with the ones noted in the KnT and the KuKauM recorded in the tables.

> O beloved, there is a famous town, called Puṇḍravardhana, on the great and beautiful Island of the Sun (sūryadvīpa). O venerated by the gods, there is a well known Brahmin there whose name is Trivikrama. He is a Sāmavedin and, as is clearly apparent, he is very powerful and possesses the Command. He performed severe austerities for a thousand divine years and sought knowledge. He looked at the sun and checked its course in the sky and he pierced the king of the gods. As he is thus related (to the Sun), he is called Kiraṇānanda (Bliss of the (Sun) Rays).
>
> O Lord of the gods, he again attained the state of a Skyfarer by means of (his) practice (caryā) and (so), the name Gaganadeva is said to be (his) pūjā name. Again, his secret name is said to be Sūryānanda. O lord, spreading out the rays (of the sun), he imparts radiance to the rays. As he has pervaded the sky (with them) he is said to be Kiraṇānanda and his consort is well known and will be Va * lā *. O god, they who are of the nature of both Śiva and Śakti, should be worshipped as a couple.[1]

---

[1] sūryadvīpe mahāramye prasiddhaṁ nagaraṁ [k: -ra] priya |
puṇḍavardhananāmānaṁ prasiddhas tatra brāhmaṇaḥ ||

The Siddha Pippalīnātha

According to the ṢSS Pippalin was the third of the Nine Nāthas. He was a brahmin from Bhogapura,[1] which is called Bhogavardhana in the KuKauM.[2] This is his caryā name. His pūjā name is Padmānanda and he belongs to the Middle Lineage.[3] Again the goddess is speaking:

> There is a well known and fine town on the beautiful bank of the (river) Mandākinī called Bhogavardhana and Vikrama lives there. He was born in Visuli of a merchant (vaiśya) and was very powerful. Well known as an Atharvavedin.[4] He was very strong and possessed the Command. He practised the austerity of (standing on) one toe in front of Ādinātha. For a thousand divine years he practiced tremendous austerity. A lotus grew out of the lotus of his (navel) that shone like the sun. A man (puruṣa) was born there in the middle of it who was clearly visible (vyaktarūpin). A divine Śakti was (also) born from his navel. Her name was Maṇī and she was very famous. The Śakti that was born in his body possessed (his) same (divine) attributes. He desired knowledge intensely and so the Pippalī tree (under which he practiced austerity) was adorned (by his presence). As he is thus related (to the tree), his name is Pippalīnātha.[5]

---

nāma saṁjñā punas tasya trivikramaḥ [k, kh: -ma] surārcita |
sāmavedī bhavet [k: -ve] sākṣāt ājñādharo [k, kh: -dhara] mahābalaḥ ||
tena tīvraṁ tapas taptaṁ [k, kh: tapaṁ-] divyaṁ varṣasahasrakam |
jijñāsā ca kṛtā tena sūryaṁ vai cāvalokitam ||
gagane [k, kh: gagaṇe] stambhitas tena [k, kh: stabhitāstena] vedhitaś ca surādhipaḥ [k: -ṣipa; kh: -dhipa] |
tena saṁbandhayogena kiraṇānandasaṁjñakaḥ ||
*punar gataś ca deveśa [kh: de * śa] khecaratvaṁ [k, kh: -tve] sa [k, kh: va] caryayā* |
*gaganadevābhidhāno 'yaṁ [k, kh: gaga * devābhidhānīyaṁ] pūjānāma prakīrtitaḥ* ||
gopyanāma [k, kh: nāmaṁ] punas tasya sūryānandas tathocyate [k: cocete; kh: -nandeti cocyate] |
kiraṇān [k, kh: kiriṇā] vikiran nātha kiraṇoddyotakārakaḥ ||
gaganaṁ [k, kh: gagaṇaṁ] yena cākrāntaṁ [k, kh: ā-] kiraṇānandas tenocyate [k, kh: -ta-] | *śaktistasya ca vikhyātā va * lā * bhaviṣyati* ||
pūjayed yugmakaṁ [k, kh: -no] deva śivaśaktyubhayātmakam [k: -śaktibhayātmakau; kh: - kau] |
YKh (2) 15/110-117ab.

[1] See above, the second table of Nine Nāthas.
[2] See above, the first table of Nine Nāthas.
[3] See second table of Sixteen Siddhas.
[4] According to the KuKauM, this Siddha was a Ṛgvedin. The KnT says he was a kṣatriya. See above, the first table of Nine Nāthas.
[5] mandākinītaṭe [k: mandhā-; k, kh: -tate] ramye prasiddhaṁ nagaraṁ śubham |
bhogavardhananāmānaṁ [kh: -varddhana-] vikramas tatra vāsinaḥ ||

He, the lord of the gods, went again to the great city of Laṅkā. He looked in the four directions with the gaze of an intense Command and 86,000 demons were pierced while Vibhīṣaṇa, (their) king, was in a state of divine inebriation (ghūrmāvasthā). He stood on the surface of the earth (in this state) for a hundred years and then the king of the demons was satisfied with him again. (The Siddha said to him): "Arise! You who have recalled the goal!" (Vibhīṣaṇa then) prostrated (before him) with devotion and, having done so, the king addressed Siddhanātha (who stood) before him and with fine words of praise, lauded (his) lotus feet: "You are Brahmā. You are Viṣṇu. You are Rudra and you are indeed Śiva. O Bhairava, by your grace, the lord of the gods, whose sign is supreme bliss, has arisen in the abode of my consciousness!" Then the Nātha placed a handful of flowers in the Cavity of Brahmā (on the top of the head of the king). Then, O god, the great king Vibhīṣaṇa was initiated. (Thus) all the teaching concerning the second (Nātha) has been narrated.[1] (133ab)

---

*visulyāṁ ca bhavej janma vaiśyajaḥ [k, kh: - jāḥ] * pracaṇḍavān* |
atharvavedī vikhyāto [k, kh: -tā] ājñādharo [k, kh: -ra] mahābalaḥ ||
aṅguṣṭhena [k: ekāṅguṣṭena; kh: ekāṁguṣṭhena] tapas taptam ādināthasya [k: patataptaṁ ā-; kh: tayaṁ taptaṁ ā-] cāgrataḥ |
divyavarṣasahasraikaṁ tapas taptaṁ [k, kh: tapaṁ taptaṁ] sudāruṇam ||
tasya nābhyāṁ samutpannaṁ padmaṁ sūryasamaprabham |
tatra madhye samutpannaṁ puruṣaṁ [k, kh: puruṣa] vyaktarūpiṇam ||
tasya nābhyāṁ samutpannā śaktiḥ [k, kh: śakti] sāmararūpiṇī |
*nāma saṁjñā bhavet tasyā maṇī a * tiviśrutā* ||
sā śaktis tasya saṁjātā śarīre [k, kh: sa-] samadharmiṇī | *jijñāsā ca kṛtā tena [k, kh: te ] pippalītaruśobhitam ||
tena saṁbandhayogena pippalīnāthasaṁjñayā | YKh (2) 15/119-125ab.

[1] punar gataśca [k: - rgataṁśca] deveśo laṅkāṁ [k, kh: laṅkā] nāma [k: rāma; kh: lāma] mahāpurīm [k, kh: -purī] ||
vilokitaś caturdikṣu [k, kh: avalokitā ca-] tīvrājñayāvalokanāt [k, kh: -jñāyā ca lokanāt] |
ṣaḍaśītisahasrāṇi [k, kh: ṣaḍā-] rākṣasānāṁ [k: rākṣānāṁ] tu vedhitāḥ [k, kh: -tā] ||
rājā vibhīṣaṇaś [k, kh: -ṇāś] caiva ghūrmāvasthāṁ tu tiṣṭhati |
vāsarāṇāṁ [k, kh: + tu] śataṁ caikaṁ tiṣṭhate dharaṇītale ||
punar āpyāyitas tena rākṣasādhipatis tadā |
uttiṣṭhita [k: uttiṣṭita] smṛtalakṣa [k, kh: smṛtilakṣa] tadā rājā vibhīṣaṇaḥ ||
sāṣṭāṅgaṁ praṇipātas [k: - yātaṁ tu; kh: -taṁ] tu kṛtaṁ [k, kh: kṛta] bhaktyā tu tena vai [k, kh: vaiḥ] |
vijñāpayati vai rājā siddhanāthasya cāgrataḥ ||
stutivākyaiḥ prasannaiś ca stunute pādapaṅkajam |
tvaṁ brahmā tvaṁ ca vai viṣṇus tvaṁ [k, kh: +tu] rudras tvaṁ [k, kh: -stva] ca vai śivaḥ ||
tvatprasādāc ca [k, kh: - praśādācca] deveśaṁ [kh: -śa] paramānanda-lakṣaṇam |
utpannaṁ citpure [k, kh: vitpure] mahyaṁ tvatprasādāc ca bhairava ||
puṣpāñjalis tataḥ [k: puṣpājalī tataḥ; kh: -lī tataḥ] kṣiptā nāthena brahmarandhrake [k: -radhvake] |

The Siddha Bauddhadeva

Bauddhadeva is the sixth of the Nine Nāthas. His pūjā name is Kamalānanda and he belongs to the Lineage of the Child. According to the ṢSS and the KuKauM, he was a king,[1] as he is said to be in this account. This account also agrees with the KuKauM, which refers to him as Mahīpāla, the son of Someśvara.[2] The goddess is speaking:

> There is a well-known town in India (jambudvīpa) which is your (sacred) place. It is the town of Kanyākubja situated between the Ganges and the Yamuna. (There was) a benevolent (śiva) king who reigned happily there (called) Someśvara. He was a powerful warrior by caste (kṣatriya) and was born in the dynasty of the Moon. (One) night on the fourteenth of the dark fortnight, he left (his palace) to engage in Kaula practice (vīracaryā). O Bhairava, in half a moment he brought a Vetāla under his control; because of that, (the king) who observed Kaula practice, had a son called Mahīpāla.[3]
>
> He enjoyed the earth up to its very limit, the sea. O Bhairava, (such was) the kingdom Mahīpāla (enjoyed) for a hundred years. O fair faced one, (the goddess) ordered (him) in the middle of the night: "O wise one, if you desire liberation, practice severe austerity." Then the king woke up and the supreme thought came (to his mind). Having recollected the god with (his) blissful mind, (the king) went to the shore (of the nearby sea).[4]

---

dīkṣitaś ca [k, kh: - taṁ ca] tadā deva mahārājo [k, kh: -jā] vibhīṣaṇaḥ ||
etat sarvaṁ samākhyātaṁ dvitīyasya vinirṇayam | YKh (2) 15/125cd-133ab.

[1] See second table of Nine Nāthas.

[2] See first table of Nine Nāthas.

[3] jambudvīpe [k, kh: jambū-] tu nagaraṁ prasiddhaṁ sthānakaṁ tava ||
gaṅgāyamunayor madhye kanyakubjaṁ [k: kaṁnya-] tu pattanam |
tasminneva sukhāsīno [k, kh: - naṁ] rājā someśvaraḥ [k, kh: śome-] śivaḥ ||
kṣatriyo 'sau [k: kṣetrī-; kh: kṣetriyosau] mahābāhuḥ somavaṁśasamudbhavaḥ |
rātrau kṛṣṇacaturdaśyāṁ [k: kṛṣṇacā-] vīracaryāvinirgataḥ ||
vetālaḥ sādhitas tena nimiṣārdhena bhairava |
tena saṁbandhayogena vīracaryādharas tathā [k, kh: -dhareti ca] ||
tasya putraḥ [k, kh: putraṁ] samutpanno [k, kh: -nnaṁ] mahīpālābhidhānakaḥ [k, kh: -kam] |
Ibid. 15/134cd-138ab.

[4] bhuktvā tu pṛthivīṁ [k, kh: -vī] tena āsamudrāntamekhalām || saṁvatsaraśataṁ rājyaṁ mahīpālena bhairava |
tasyādeśaḥ [k, kh: -śaṁ] samutpanno [k, kh: -nnaṁ] niśārdhena [k: niśārdhaṁna; kh: niśārddhena] varānana ||
tapaś [k, kh: tapaṁ] cograṁ kuru prājña yadi mokṣaṁ samīhase |
rājā tatastu prabuddho vai cintāparamamāgamat [k: citā-] ||

O god, Vyāpaka, Jaya and Vijaya, the third - these are the three adepts who resided there. O Bhairava, he began to practice very difficult austerity, (hanging) face down. He practiced severe austerity for a thousand divine years. Jaya was on (his) left shoulder and Vijaya on (his) right. The Pervasive One (Vyāpaka), practiced terrible austerity in the Cavity of Brahmā. Then blood came out of his ears, eyes, nose and mouth. A great lotus grew there, as brilliant as a ruby (vaidūrya). The king saw that divine lotus. O fair faced one, there arose there the state in which Śiva and Śakti. Wonderstruck, Mahīpāla spoke to (those) who practiced (sādhaka) (with him).[1]

"(Kaula) practice (caryā) serves to produce (this) lotus. It has come forth from my blood. Throw (this) excellent lotus in the current of the stream of the Ganges."

He, the leader (of the gods), is the deity and the adept (who worships him) is very strong. At the king's command, the lotus, covered with kuśa grass, was thrown into the (flowing) current of the Ganges. It reached the middle of a crossing (of two rivers) (veṇi) in between the Ganges and the Yamuna in the centre of a great island. A divine virgin girl resided there who, observing a vow, practised austerities. The lotus reached where the girl who practised austerities was. Seeing it and taking it in (her) hand, she placed it around her neck. She saw Śiva and Śakti emerge from the centre of the calyx. These two she saw in the auspicious forest of Mahālakṣṁī. O god, at that moment the Buddhist Ardhaśira entered the forest and so, because of that connection, he is famed as Bauddhadeva.[2] smṛtvā devaṁ hṛṣṭamanā surasarpas [k, kh: -sarpā] (?) taṭaṁ gataḥ | Ibid. 15/138cd-141ab.

---

[1] vyāpakaś ca jayaś caiva vijayaś ca tṛtīyakaḥ ||
trayas te [k: trīṇete; kh: trīṇy ete] sādhakā deva sthitās tasmin [k, kh: -tasmai] ca bhairava |
adhovaktraṁ tapas tena [k, kh: tapaṁ tena] prārabdhaṁ [kh: prārarddhe] cātiduṣkaram ||
divyavarṣasahasraṁ [k, kh: divyaṁ-] tu tapas [k, kh: tapaṁ] taptaṁ sudāruṇam |
vāmaskandhe [k, kh: -ndha] jayaś [kh: jayāś] caiva vijayaś caiva dakṣiṇe ||
vyāpakaṁ brahmarandhre tu tapaś [k, kh: tapaṁ] carati dāruṇam |
*tadā karṇākṣināsābhyāṁ [kh: * * * (?)sābhyāṁ] mukhād raktaṁ vinirgatam ||
tatrotpannaṁ [k: -nna] mahāpadmaṁ raktavaiḍūryasaprabham [k: raktavairdūrya; kh: raktavaidūryya-] |
rājāvalokayet taṁ vai kamalaṁ divyarūpiṇam ||
*śivaśaktisamāvasthau [k, kh: -sthā] tatrotpannau [kh: tatro * nnau] varānana* |
vadate sādhakānāṁ tu mahīpālo savismayaḥ [k, kh: saviśmayaḥ] || Ibid. 15/141cd-146.

[2] sā caryā kamalotpattir [k, kh: -lotpatti] mama raktād vinirgatam |
gaṅgāśrotapravāhe [k: śaṅgāśrota-] tu kṣipyatāṁ kamalottamam ||
yo 'sau vai nāyako [k, kh: nā-] devo sādhako vai mahābalaḥ |
rājādeśena [k, kh: + tat] kamalaṁ kuśenopari veṣṭitam ||
kṣiptaṁ gaṅgāpravāhe tu gato 'sau veṇimadhyataḥ |

There, in (that) place, the Supreme Lord, seated comfortably was engaged in meditation. The girl came there at midnight on the eighth lunar night. She prostrated before him and served him. (She) offered the god a necklace, anklets, bracelets and many kinds of clothes adorned with rubies and gems. (She offered) many kinds of divine gems and many (other) things, including vermilion, sandalwood, camphor and musk. The girl offered everything to the God of the gods with devotion.[1]

The girl said: "You are Brahmā, indeed You are Viṣṇu, Rudra and Śiva. You are without beginning and end. You are the Lord of Dharma, the Destroyer of the City (of the Demons – Purandara), You are Yama, Varuṇa and the path to liberation. You are my way, O lord of the gods, I am frightened by the ocean of transmigratory existence."

The Siddha said: "Listen girl! greatly fortunate one! why have you come? What task has brought you here?"

The girl said: "If you are pleased with me O god, listen, O pervasive one, to my request. O causal ocean of destruction! Lord of the Universe! I have come to the Island of Jambu, O god, frightened with the fear of the ocean of transmigratory existence. O Great God, I who desire liberation have taken refuge in you. Destroy all the net of (binding) forces. You who are austerity (itself); (you) are my refuge!"[2]

---

gaṅgāyamunayor madhye mahādvīpasya madhyataḥ ||
tatrasthāne vratasthā ca divyakanyā tapaś caret |
āgataḥ [k, kh: āgato] kamalas tatra yatra kanyā tapasvinī ||
dṛṣṭaṁ [k, kh: dṛṣṭā] gṛhītaṁ tat tena kaṇṭhe cāguṇṭhitaṁ kare |
vīkṣate karṇikāmadhye śivaśaktisamudbhavaḥ ||
te dvau dṛṣṭau [k, kh: adṛśau] tu tatrasthau [k: tatau tu; kh: gatau tu] mahālakṣmīvane śubhe |
praviṣṭas tadvanaṁ deva bauddho [k, kh: bauddhāri rddhasirā tadā] ardhaśiras tadā [k, kh: rirddhasirā tadā] ||
tena saṁbandhayogena bauddhadevaś ca [k, kh: -deveti] kīrtitaḥ | Ibid. 15/147-153ab.

[1] tatrasthāne sukhāsīnaṁ dhyānasthaṁ parameśvaram || aṣṭamyām ardharātraṁ tu tatra kanyā samāgatā |
kṛtaṁ daṇḍanamaskāraṁ preṣaṇaṁ kurute ca sā ||
*niveditaṁ tu devasya hārakeyūrakaṅkaṇam [k, kh: hāra * yūrakaṅkaṇāḥ]* |
vastrā nānāprakārāṇi maṇimāṇikyaśobhitāḥ [k, kh: maṇimākyaśobhanāḥ] ||
divyaratnāny anekāni nānāvastūni [k, kh: -stuni] yāni ca |
kuṅkumaṁ [k, kh: -ma] candanaṁ [k, kh: -na] caiva karpūraṁ nābhisaṁyutam ||
sarvaṁ niveditaṁ bhaktyā devadevasya kanyakā | Ibid. 15/153cd-157ab.

[2] kanyakovāca
tvaṁ brahmā tvaṁ ca vai viṣṇus tvaṁ rudras tvaṁ ca [k, kh: nāsti] vai śivaḥ ||
tvam anādi anantaś [k: tvaṁmanādimataṁtaś; kh: -dimantantaś] ca dharmarājaḥ [k, kh: -jo] purandaraḥ |
yamaś ca varuṇas tvaṁ hi mokṣamārgas [k, kh: mārgaṁ] tvam eva hi || tvaṁ gatir [k, kh: gati] mama deveśa bhītāhaṁ bhavasāgarāt |

O Bhairava, when Siddhanātha heard this (he was pleased) and Siddhanātha initiated her with an intense descent of (spiritual) energy. She fainted because of the gaze of (his) intense Command. She (lay there) motionless for twenty-one days. Then, O Hara, the god was satisfied and gave (her) the Lion Seat. The God of the gods gave the virgin girl the Command. Then, (after) the girl (received it), she became (completely) intent on (her spiritual) practise (anuṣṭhāna) in the auspicious forest of Mahālakṣmī. That goddess resided there for twelve years.[1]

After that, the Siddha looked at (some) wild geese. O fair faced one, even though they were (flying far away) in the sky, they (suddenly) went mad and, by his mere look, fell to the surface of the earth. He went to Amarāpurī within the body of a wild goose (haṁsa). Then he became famous as Haṁsadeva. More than thirty-three were initiated * * * ? The king of the gods was consecrated by the gaze of (his) intense Command and feel into a motionless (trance) for twenty-one days. (In this condition) king Amara was in an inebriated state (ghūrmāvasthā) and (his) senses were deranged. Then, when the god was satisfied, he placed a handful of flowers on his head. And so, due to this connection, he is known as Amaranātha.[2]

---

siddha uvāca
śṛṇu kanye mahābhāge kim āgamanakāraṇam ||
kena kāryavaśenaiva [k, kh: -senaiva] atra tvaṁ ca samāgatā | kanyovāca
yadi tuṣṭo 'si me deva vijñaptiḥ [k, kh: -ptiṁ] śrūyatāṁ [k, kh: śru-] vibho ||
jambudvīpe [k: jamvūdvipe; kh: -dvi-] jagannātha saṁhārakaraṇārṇava |
āgatā ca ahaṁ deva bhayabhītā bhavārṇavāt ||
mokṣārthinī [k, kh: mokṣāthinī] mahādeva tavāhaṁ [k, kh: tava hiṁ] śaraṇāgatā |
sarvaṁ chindhi kalājālaṁ tvaṁ tapaḥ [k, kh: tapaṁ] śaraṇaṁ mama || Ibid. 15/157cd-162.
[1] ity evaṁ ca samākarṇya [k, kh: samārṇya] siddhanāthena [k, kh: siddhi-] bhairava |
tīvraśaktinipātena siddhanāthena [k, kh: siddhi-] dīkṣitā [k, kh: -ta] || *mūrcchāvasthāṁ [k, kh: -sthā] gatā sā tu sutīvrājñāvalokanāt [k, kh: * tījñāyāvalokanāt]* |
niśceṣṭā tiṣṭhate [k: niṣṭate; kh: niṣṭhate] sā tu dināś caivaikaviṁśatiḥ [k, kh: -ścaicaikaviṁśati] ||
tadā tuṣṭena devena dattaṁ siṁhāsanaṁ [k: -na] hara |
ājñā samarpitā tasyā devadevena kanyayā ||
*anuṣṭhānaratā [k: aṣṭānaratā; kh: a * ṣṭhānaratā] kanyā mahālakṣmīvane śubhe* |
tiṣṭhate tatra sā devī abdāni dvādaśāni vai || Ibid. 15/163-166.
[2] tadanantaraṁ siddhena haṁsāś caivāvalokitāḥ [k, kh: - taḥ] | ākāśasthāpitā [k, kh: -sthāpite] haṁsā unmattena varānana ||
avalokanamātreṇa patitā dharaṇītale |
haṁsadehe [k, kh: -haṁ] pratiṣṭho 'sau [k, kh: -ṣṭhāsau] gatas tu amarāpurīm [k, kh: -rī] ||
haṁsadeveti vikhyāto tadā khyātim avāptavān |
*trayastriṁśatikādīni [k: trayaṁ-] * * nāntena dīkṣitāḥ* ||
surarājābhiṣiktas tu tīvrājñayāvalokanāt [k: tīvājñāyā-; kh: tīvrājñāyā-] |

Then, O god, he returned to the auspicious forest of Mahālakṣmī. Siddhanātha was surprised to see that the Bilva forest had been burnt down. He became angry again and said to the girl. "O girl, you have burnt the forest with (the fire of) your penance!" When she heard what Siddhanātha had said, the goddess of the universe responded: "O god, O great lord, I have sought knowledge. O Nātha, by the power of the Command I will regenerate it. If I am unable to regenerate the forest as it was before, let me be cursed and I will prescribe the penance (I should observe for myself)."[1]

When the Siddha heard the girl's words, he said: "O girl, you who possess Kulakaula, generate the forest!" Having received the teacher's permission (ājñā), she looked at the forest and by a mere blink of the eyes, the forest was restored. It was full of fruits and flowers and the sound of maynard birds and peacocks. It was strewn with heaps of flowers and had many kinds of trees and creepers. The divine forest was green (and beautiful) like a blue Aśoka.

Thus seeing (her) power, which is the most excellent radiance of the Command, the lord of the gods was pleased and gave the girl boons. The god consecrated her with eight jars (of holy water) and she was given the name Vimalānandā by (his) Command. (Thus) she has authority in the midst of the sixteen Siddhas.[2] patitaś ceṣṭayā hīnaḥ [k, kh: hīnaṁ] ekaviṁśad dināni vai ||

---

vikalendriyo 'mararājo [k, kh: -jā] ghūrmāvasthaś ca tiṣṭhati |
*tatas tuṣṭena [k, kh: tustena] devena kṣiptā puṣpāñjalī [k: -lā; kh: - * ?] śire [k, kh: śi ] ||
tena saṁbandhayogenāmaranātha iti [k, kh: -nātheti] viśrutaḥ [k, kh: -tāḥ] | Ibid. 15/167-172ab.

[1] punar vyāvartito [k, kh: punarvyāvṛrttito] deva mahālakṣmīvane śubhe ||
dṛṣṭvā [kh: dṛṣṭā] bilvavanaṁ dagdhaṁ siddhanāthas tu vismitaḥ [k, kh: viśmitaḥ] |
punaḥ krodhasamāviṣṭaḥ [k, kh: - viṣṭo] kanyakāṁ prati cābravīt [k: cāpravīt] ||
prāyaścittaṁ ca te kanye vanaṁ dagdham iha tvayā |
siddhanāthavacaḥ [kh: -vacaṁ] śrutvā viśvadevī prabhāṣate [k: prabhāvate] ||
jijñāsā me kṛtā deva rabhasāc ca mahāprabho |
punar utthāpayāmīdaṁ [k, kh: -myeya] nāthājñāyāḥ prabhāvataḥ |
*yadā notthāpane [k, kh: notthā * ne] śaktā vanaṁ vai pūrvavad yathā* |
tadā śāpaṁ pratīcchāmi prāyaścitaṁ vadāmy aham || Ibid. 15/172cd-176.

[2] kanyakāyā [k: kaṁnyakāyā] vacaḥ [k: vaca; kh: vacaṁ] śrutvā siddho vacanam abravīt |
utthāpaya vanaṁ kanye [k, kh: kānya] kulakaulasya bhājani ||
ājñāṁ [k, kh: ājñā] gurumukhāl labdhvā [kh: -lavddhā] vanaṁ tenāvalokitam |
cakṣuspandanamātreṇa vanam āpyāyitaṁ tadā [k, kh: -yitastadā] ||
phalapuṣpasamopetaṁ [k, kh: phalaṁpuṣpaṁ-] kokilaiḥ śikhināditam |
puṣpaprakarasaṁkīrṇaṁ [kh: -saṁkīrṇṇa] nānādrumalatāvṛtam || nīlāśokanibhaṁ divyaṁ vanaṁ haritaśādvalam [k: -sādhalam; kh: -sādvalaṁ] |
*evaṁ dṛṣṭvā * sāmarthyaṁ [k, kh: sāmarthaṁ] ājñāsphurtim anuttamām* ||
tadā tuṣṭaś ca deveśaḥ [k, kh: -śo] kanyāyāṁ varado 'bhavat [k,kh: bhavet] |
kalaśāṣṭābhiṣekas [k, kh: -kaṁ] tu kṛto [k, kh: kṛtaṁ] devena tasyā [k, kh: tasya] vai ||

The Siddha Aṁśadeva

According to the KnT, the tenth Siddha out of the Sixteen Siddhas is a woman called Bimbadevī.[1] Her secret names are Guptadevī and Vimalā who is the consort of Kamalānanda. The goddess is speaking:

> Then in the tenth divine place, there will be an extremely powerful Command and you will certainly establish a lineage and a clan (gotrasantāna) in the oli of the Child by the power of (that) divine Command.
>
> After that the Siddha fashioned a (human) form with (all its) limbs and the name Aṁśadeva (God with Limbs) came into being on the surface of the earth. Hands and feet, shanks, heart and back - a human body came into being and (its) face was that of a deer. He will be called Aṅgadeva in the Age of Strife.
>
> Then he became visible again and went to the peak of Kailāśa. His pūjā name was Kamalānanda. O beautiful one, I will tell (you) Siddhanātha's secret name. There are snakes that are hard to overcome who, unconquered, (live) in the abyss of the netherworld. He (came to be known as) Amṛtadeva when he drank the tanks of nectar and Māṇikya[2] because he (miraculously) split apart a pearl.[3]
>
> Such are the names of the Siddha that should be worshipped that were hidden and have been revealed. Thus, the Nātha who travels in the sky, on the earth and in the netherworld is omnipresent

---

abhidhānaṁ kṛtaṁ tasyā vimalānandety ājñayā [k, kh: -nandeti saṁjñayā] |
ṣoḍaśānāṁ tu siddhānāṁ teṣāṁ madhye 'dhikāriṇī || Ibid. 15/177-182.

[1] See above, p. 529, the first table of Sixteen Siddhas

[2] This is also the secret name of Kamalānanda according to the KuKauM. See first table of Nine Nāthas.

[3] daśame sthānake [kh: + sthānake] divye ājñātīvratarā tadā |
bhaviṣyasi tvaṁ bālolyāṁ gotrasantānakāriṇaḥ [k, kh: -riṇī] ||
bhaviṣyasi na sandeho divyājñāyāḥ [k, kh: -yā] prabhāvataḥ |
anantaraṁ kṛtaṁ rūpaṁ siddhena sāṅgarūpiṇam ||
aṁśadeveti saṁjñā vai saṁjātā pṛthivītale [k, kh: -nala] |
hastapādau ca jaṅghau ca [k, kh: jaṁghāśca] hṛdi pṛṣṭhas [k, kh: pṛṣṭas] tathaiva ca ||
mānuṣītanu saṁjātaṁ [k, kh: -saṁjñā ca] mukhaṁ ca mṛgarūpiṇam |
aṅgadeveti nāma [k, kh: nāmaṁ] vai bhaviṣyati [k: bhavṣyati] kalau yuge ||
punar adṛśyatāṁ yātaḥ [k: jātaḥ; kh: jatāḥ] kailāśaśikharaṁ gataḥ |
pūjā nāma [k, kh: -maṁ] tu tasyaiva kamalānandasaṁjñakaḥ ||
gopyanāma [k, kh: -maṁ] pravakṣyāmi siddhanāthasya [k, kh: siddhi-] sundara [k, kh: -ram] |
pātāle vivarasya tu jitā [k, kh: tvājitā] nāgāś ca durjayāḥ [k, kh: -yā] ||
pītāny amṛtakuṇḍāni amṛtadevastadābhavat [k, kh: -bhavet] |
tathā māṇikyanāmā [k, kh: -maṁ] ca muktāphalavidāraṇāt || Ibid. 15/183-189.

(sarvagata). (That) venerable one has three forms and the sandals of Mitra are nine-fold.

Next I will tell (you something else). O you who are venerated by the lord of the heroes, listen. O god, two Siddhas came to the forest of Mahālakṣmī. Gaganeśa and Padma came where the girl was. (They) brought and made many offerings [. . .]. The goddess Bimbā gave them the Command, in due order. Authority and the Command was given (to them) again. O god, I have told (you) this, namely, how the Command is in the (lineages of) the Eldest and the Middle One. They were again endowed with the Command and arose in the previous tradition (āgama). I have told (you) the tradition (pāramparya). What is secret has been revealed. It should be hidden and protected with care like the body.[1]

Conclusion

We have seen that there are extensive and detailed representations in YKh (1) of the metaphysical identity of the First Teacher. These are supported by rich expositions of the metaphysical states represented by the teachers and their energies of the Divine Current that issues out into the concrete manifestation of Śrīnātha as the First Teacher and the goddess as his consort. Moving through and out of the sacred sites of the Yoni and its Siddhas, the currents of teachers assume the form of the Nine and Sixteen Siddhas who remain ciphers representing metaphysical entities, just ideal extensions of the Divine Current that precedes them. Even so, a few teachers begin to emerge whose names appear later amongst these Siddhas along with a few details of their legendary lives.

The next stage develops in the Ādisūtra of the KRU. The presentation is strikingly different from that of YKh (1). The teachers continue to be linked to metaphysical principles, but these are now hardly more than the energies of the

---

[1]evaṁ nāmāni siddhasya pūjyā guptāḥ [k, kh: guptā] prakāśitāḥ |
evaṁ sarvagato [k: sarvvaṁ-] nāthaḥ khabhūpātālagāminaḥ [k, kh: khebhūtāla] ||
tridhā mūrtidharaḥ śrīmān navadhā mitrapādukā [k, kh: -kāḥ] |
ataḥ paraṁ pravakṣyāmi śṛṇu vīrendravandita ||
mahālakṣmīvane deva dvau siddhau tatra cāgatau |
gaganeśas [k, kh: gamanades] tathā padma āgatau [k, kh: āgatā] yatra kanyakā [k, kh: -kāḥ] ||
ānītaṁ bahusaṁbhāraṁ vyavahāraṁ niveditam | [. . .]
ājñā niyojitā teṣāṁ [k, kh: steṣāṁ] bimbadevyā yathākramam ||
dattaṁ [k: datta] caivādhikāraṁ tu punar ājñā niyojitā |
etad deva mayākhyātaṁ [k: -ta; kh: te] yathājñā jyeṣṭhamadhyame [k, kh: jyeṣṭa-] ||
punar ājñādharās te vai saṁjātāś ca purāgame |
pāramparyaṁ [k, kh: -rya] mayā proktaṁ [k, kh: yuktaṁ] aprakāśyaṁ prakāśitam ||
gopanīyaṁ prayatnena rakṣaṇīyaṁ [k, kh: -ya] śarīravat | Ibid. 15/190-193ab, 195cd-198ab.

letters. At the same time an attempt is made to represent them as actual human beings, although they are just lists of names except for the First Siddha who takes on a substantial persona. The standard sets of Nine and Sixteen Siddhas do appear, however they are still just nameless groups with no names or individual personalities. Indeed, embedded in other groups of teachers, they would be of no particular interest were it not that they are the only groups that survived in subsequent sources.

The second recension of the YKh displays significant developments. Here the Nine and Sixteen Siddhas appear as established groups, even though they appear as part of a series of groups. At the same time an attempt is made to give a substantial identity to some of them through short hagiographies, but these are not presented systematically and we find other teachers who do not belong to these groups amongst them.

The next stage develops in the ṢSS. Although there are differences, the First Siddha maintains features of the identity outlined in the KRU. Moreover, major additions are made to his hagiography that fill out his personality. Koṅkaṇa and Candrapura are described in detail and are presented as vibrant living places. The Nine and Sixteen Siddhas assume clear identities as the first members of the lineages established in Koṅkaṇa. The ṢSS even supplies lists of places in the north of India where they were born and their birthdays.

The most elaborate and systematic canonical presentation is found in the KuKauM. Here the currents of teachers, the lineages and their contents are clear and systematic. Like the ṢSS, the KuKauM supplies the locations in the subtle and physical body where the Siddhas are projected. This enables one to reproduce in oneself the parts (aṁśa) of the body of the deity that incarnate in the world. However, it does not dwell on their subtle metaphysical identity. Instead, the KuKauM presents the detailed network of correspondences that can be represented in mantras to form a liturgy. Teachers are named that belong to four corresponding Ages. Each teacher of the present Age is given a caste, place and time of birth, a series of names and consort. The KuKauM also supplies a few details of their legendary lives. Thus, we have here the most complete and systematic presentation we find in our sources. Accordingly, it is taken up by the Ṭīkā that presents it as a complete and well ordered liturgy. The same is adopted in its own way by the KnT as the liturgy of the teachers that accompanies the worship of the Krama (kramārcana).

Finally, while the KuKh probably precedes the KnT, it certainly comes after the KuKauM. We know this because it refers to the disciples of the Sixteen Siddhas, that the KuKauM names one by one and about which the ṢSS is entirely silent. The KuKh takes over, and further establishes, the basic format enriching it by integrating the ideal presentation of the Divine Current drawn from YKh (1) with the model standardized and elaborately systematized in the KuKauM and the ṢSS.

While it is not possible to claim that these are more than ideal schemes with possibly some historical foundation, they serve as markers on the path of the development of the system from which we may infer the chronological development of our sources. First we have the texts redacted outside the Deccan namely: the KMT and most of the ŚM and KRU where there is no specific reference to the lines of teachers. Then comes the first recension of the Yogakhaṇḍa. Here the insistent references to the importance of Koṅkaṇa, the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha) and Candrapura that characterizes virtually all of the later sources begins. Here we also find the initial development of the idealization of the lineages of teachers and the First Siddha as ideal representations. This is followed by the Ādisūtra of the Kularatnoddyota which elaborates the figure of Vṛkṣanātha as a fully historical personality who brought the teachings to Koṅkaṇa. Then comes the Kulakaulinīmata where the paradigmatic models of the lineages are established and the Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā that takes them up. They are followed by the second recension of the YKh and the Kumārikākhaṇḍa. The Kubjikānityāhnikatilaka presents the final form systematically as part of the worship of the Krama. Then the Ambāmatasaṁhitā takes up these models and adds new layers to the basic paradigms by further elaborate replications.

Appendix I

The Māyāstava

The following version of the Māyāstava is drawn from chapter nineteen of the Ambāmatasaṁhitā.

> Here is the Mahāmāyāstava which is part of the transmission of the virgin goddess of the Vidyā.
>
> Homage to you Mahāmāya! unconquered one! the subtle support (of the universe)! You are born without body, you who are beyond the body and stainless!
>
> Immeasurable and greatly subtle one! You are the sphere of the Thirty-two (lettered Vidyā)! You are the aggregate of the sounds of (the reality) called Sound (nāda) and reside in the heart of all living beings!
>
> You are within (the maṇḍala) of six parts and, called the letter Ī, you who are very powerful! You are the dynamic union of Sun, Moon, and Fire in the middle of the Drop, O Great Sound (mahāravā)!
>
> You who bear the digit of the Half Moon and are omnipresent are Space (kha)! In the Heart, you are conjoined with the Five (Praṇavas) and in the capsule (saṁpuṭa) you reside encapsulated (by the Five Praṇavas at the beginning and end of your Vidyā)!
>
> O you who are in the middle of the sacred seat of OṀ and are aflame with the blazing fire (in the centre)! You who are called the letter Ha in the body of Vidyā on the plane of the goddess (Bhagavatī) Māyā!
>
> You who are like moving waves are the Great Goddess of the ocean of the Yoni! You are called the letter Ku and the great energy (of divine consciousness)! You who have dissolved into the centre of the Yoni.
>
> O you who are called Kumārī! Greatly terrible one (mahāghorā)! You who impell (along) the path to liberation! O Mahāmāyā who are called All Things (sakalā), you who give strength and are worshipped by Kaulas!
>
> You who are within Word and Kula! Great light who holds a trident! You who are the letter Kha and the aggregate of the letter Ū and are adorned with the letters AI and U!
>
> O Mistress of the Knots (in the centres of the subtle body)! Bliss of the Yoni (guhā)! whose form (mūrti) is the Liṅga! Salutation to you! She alone is (you), O crooked one! The supreme power of (divine) Sound (nāda)! Salutation.

You are free of all duality! and sit on the seat which is the (triangular) letter E! You reside in the Drop and in the Sound of the Drop! You who reside in Jālandhara!

O you who are the Fourth State in the midst of the Fourth State and reside in Pūrṇapīṭha! You are established in time and are beyond the energies (of differentiation) (kalātītā). Within Kāmākhya, you are born of phenomenal existence![1]

You who are powerful (as Kuṇḍalinī who is) the energy of the Knot of Brahmā (at the base of the body) and impell the current in the centre (through Suṣumṇā)! It moves with the force of the wind. O Vāmadevī, salutations to you!

O omnipresent Śivā! O subtle and perpetual bliss! great festival! bestower of boons! you who are life (āyur) and reside in the Kula of (Suṣumṇā), the eldest of the vital channels (jyeṣṭhanāḍī)!

You are the half of the half of sixteen in the form of fire's sparks. You break through the heart and palate, you who are reflection

---

[1] mahāmāyāstavaṁ cātra vidyākaumārikākrame |
namo 'stu te mahāmāye ajite [añjite] sūkṣmadhāriṇe || 1 ||
adehe [adehā] tu samutpanne dehātīte nirañjane |
aprameye mahāsūkṣme dvātriṁśavarṇagocare || 2 ||
nādākhye nādanicaye sarvabhūtahṛdi sthite |
ṣaṭprakārāntarasthe ca īkārākhye mahābale || 3 ||
somasūryāgnisaṁghaṭṭe bindumadhye mahārave |
ardhacandrakalādhāre sarvage khasvarūpiṇi [-ṇī] || 4 ||
hṛdaye pañcasaṁyukte saṁpuṭe saṁpuṭasthite |
.okārapīṭhamadhyasthe [.okāre - -stha] jvālātanusamujjvale [-samujvale]|| 5 ||
vidyādehe hakārākhye māyābhagavatīpade |
caladvalayasaṁkāśe yonyārṇave [-va] maheśvari [-ra] || 6 ||
kukārākhye [ūkārākhye] mahānākhye yonimadhye [-madhya] layaṁ gate |
kumāryākhye [kumārā-] mahāghore mokṣamārgapravartaki || 7 ||
sakalākhye mahāmāye balade kaulapūjite [-taṁ] |
śabdasyānte kulasyānte śūlahaste mahāprabhe || 8 ||
khakāre ūkāranicaye aikārokārabhūṣite |
grantheśvari guhānande liṅgamūrte [-mūrtti] namo 'stu te || 9 ||
sā [sa] eva kuṭilākāre nādaśaktipare namaḥ [tama] |
sarvadvandvavinirmukte ekārāsanasaṁsthite || 10 ||
bindusthe bindunādasthe jālandharavyavasthite [jālā-] |
turye [turya] vai turyamadhyasthe pūrṇapīṭhavyavasthite || 11 ||
kālasthe ca kalātīte kāmākhye ca bhavodbhave | AS 19/1-12ab.

(carcā)! and, in the wheel, the beautiful woman of the Wheel of Consciousness!

O you who are the sign (lakṣa) within the heart and have three signs (lakṣa) (within the subtle body)![1] and are established in the head and the palate! Your form is that of the young (rising) sun (perceived) by blocking the portal of the Drop (between the eyebrows).

You who preside over the function of the intellect! Divine world, salutations to you!

O you who are the power of passion (kandarpa)! Inexplicable one! Mind beyond Mind! You who are the Unmanifest! You who bind the individual soul and all living beings![2]

---

[1] Concerning the Three Signs and their location in the subtle body, see KuKh 25/36cd-37 n. 14.

[2] mahāmāyāstavaṁ cātra vidyākaumārikākrame |
namo 'stu te mahāmāye añjite sūkṣmadhāriṇe || 1 ||
adehe [adehā] tu samutpanne dehātīte nirañjane |
aprameye mahāsūkṣme dvātriṁśavarṇagocare || 2 ||
nādākhye nādanicaye sarvabhūtahṛdi sthite |
ṣaṭprakārāntarasthe ca īkārākhye mahābale || 3 ||
somasūryāgnisaṁghaṭṭe bindumadhye mahārave |
ardhacandrakalādhāre sarvage khasvarūpiṇi [-ṇī] || 4 ||
hṛdaye pañcasaṁyukte saṁpuṭe saṁpuṭasthite |
.okārapīṭhamadhyasthe [.okāre - -stha] jvālātanusamujjvale [-samujvale] || 5 ||
vidyādehe hakārākhye māyābhagavatīpade |
caladvalayasaṁkāśe yonyārṇave [-va] maheśvari [-ra] || 6 ||
kukārākhye [ūkārākhye] mahānākhye yonimadhye [-madhya] layaṁ gate |
kumārākhye mahāghore mokṣamārgapravartaki || 7 ||
sakalākhye mahāmāye balade kaulapūjite [-taṁ] |
śabdasyānte kulasyānte śūlahaste mahāprabhe || 8 ||
khakāre ūkāranicaye aikārokārabhūṣite |
grantheśvari guhānande liṅgamūrte [-mūrtti] namo 'stu te || 9 ||
sā [sa] eva kuṭilākāre nādaśaktipare namaḥ [tama] |
sarvadvandvavinirmukte ekārāsanasaṁsthite || 10 ||
bindusthe bindunādasthe jālandharavyavasthite [jālā-] |
turye [turya] vai turyamadhyasthe pūrṇapīṭhavyavasthite || 11 ||
kālasthe ca kalātīte kāmākhye ca bhavodbhave |
brahmagranthikalāṭope madhyasrotapravāhini [-nī] || 12 ||
vrajate vāyuvegena vāmadevi namo 'stu te |
śive [śiva] sarvagate sūkṣme nityānande mahotsave || 13 ||
varade āyurūpe ca jyeṣṭhanāḍikulasthite |
vahnikanakarūpeṇa ṣoḍaśārdhārdharūpiṇi || 14 ||
hṛttālubhedini [-nī] vicce [carcce] cakre ciccakrasundari |
hṛllakṣe ca trilakṣe ca tālumūrdhni pratiṣṭhite || 15 ||
bindudvāranirodhena taruṇādityarūpiṇi [-ṇī] |

Bondage of the supreme Brahmā! Salutations to you whose form (mūrti) is rajas! O you who reside in the reality of the Self of the energy of the Self and whose form (mūrti) is Viṣṇu, salutations!

You who reside in the reality of Self of the energy of the Self! (you are) Rudrāṇī, Rudra's wife!

O Gaurī! You who wonder in worlds and whose form is tamas, salutations! You who are free of the three Qualities! free from the great bondage!

You who resides in the middle of the calyx of the lotus (of the Heart)! Supreme One residing within the Topknot who are as powerful as the Fire which is the Weapon of Time! You free from Mahāmāyā!

O Greatly Terrible One (mahāghorā)! You who check the capsule of the Drop! Aghorā! Aggregate of Ghorā! Mistress of Yoga! Bestower of boons!

O Aparā! (You are at) the end of Sound and the Drop merged in the Word Absolute (śabdabrahman). You who are the cause of the lion's gaze and are adorned with the eight spheres (pada) (of the Mothers)!

Bestower of boons! You who are the goddess (Bhagavatī) of the Wheel of the Three Energies! O Kumārī! limb of Kunāmā! beloved of the universe! you are freedom from fear (abhaya)!

You who know the mantra of the Lord (nāyaka) of Mantras! I worship (you who) reside within Kaula!

Residing in the midst of the five sacred seats, mistress of Meru! O Śarvarī! O Ghorāmukhī! Three-eyed One! Cāmuṇḍā who saves the universe.

(You are) the mother of the Wind within (lord) Śiva, you who have descended from the eight limbs (of his body)! (You who) reside in the six limbs and are the six sheaths (koṣa) and instruments of the six peaks syllables!

(You who are) union brought about by Sound (nāda)! O solitary, skillful one, (sacred) Drop! You abide in silence (tūṣṇībhūtā) within the secret Hermitage, O Bhairavī of the Tamarind tree!

O (you who) reside in the Kadamba tree! Mahāmāyā! Deluding One! Triple sweetness! O (you who) reside in the midst of the fifty sacred seats and expand out the body of mantra (padapiṇḍa).

---

buddhyādhikaraṇādhiṣṭhe divyaloke namo 'stu te || 16 ||
kandarpabalarūpe ca [ṇa] anākhye [tanākhye] ca manonmani [-nī]|
avyakte sarvasattvānāṁ puruṣasya ca bandhani || AS 19/1-17

O (you who are) within the Ṣaṣṭha! O abode of Ṣaṣṭha! (You who) cause the three energies to develop! (You who are) gross, subtle and supreme and are here (in this world) with support, O three-eyed one![1]

Devoid of opposites (pakṣa)! (You) are Raudrī in the two conditions, Dharma and Adharma. Mother of Viṣṇu, Brahmā, and Rudra, salutations to you!

(You are) the Skyfaring goddess (Khecarī) and the One Who Moves on the Earth (Bhūcarī)! The one who impells the flow of the machine of energies (śaktiyantra). (You who are) devoured by the Drop! You are all things (samasta) and are free of the eight categories (jātyaṣṭaka)!

(You who are) born as the Fire who is Mother Time and reside within time and eternity! (You who are) united (saṁbandhī) to Kālikā's Transmission (krama) in the maṇḍala of the Twelve Kālīs! (You are) the thirteenth form (mūrti) (of Kālī) who burns the Triple World in the centre (of the maṇḍala). (You are) emanation, persistence

---

[1] bandhani [bandhāna] parabrahmasya rajomūrte [rajamūrtti] namo 'stu te | ātmaśaktyātmatattvasthe viṣṇumūrte [-mūrtti] namo 'stu te || 18 ||
ātmaśaktyātmatattvasthe rudrāṇi [-ṇī] rudragehani |
gauri [-rī] bhuvanasañcāre tamomūrte [-mūrti] namo 'stu te || 19 ||
guṇatrayaparityakte [-traye-] mahābandhavimocani |
padmakarṇikamadhyasthe śikhānte 'vasthite pare || 20 || kālāstrāgnisame śākte mahāmāyāvimocani [mayāmāyāvimocanī]|
nādamadhye mahāghore bindusaṁpuṭarodhani || 21 ||
aghore [-rā] ghoranicaye yogeśvari varaprade |
bindunādāntage [-ma] pare [para] śabdabrahmalayaṁ gate || 22 ||
siṁhāvalokane [saṁghāvalokanā] heto padāṣṭakavibhūṣite |
śaktitritayacakrasya bhagavati varaprade || 23 ||
kunāmāṅge kumāri tvaṁ abhaye [abhayaṁ] jagavallabhe |
mantranāyaki [-ka] mantrajñe vicce kaulāntavāsini || 24 ||
pañcapīṭhakamadhyasthe [-pīṭhika-] merunāyaki śarvari [-rī] |
ghorāmukhi trinetre [-netrā] ca cāmuṇḍe [cāmuṇḍā] jagatārike [-kā] || 25 ||
śivāntavāyujanani [-nī] aṣṭāṅgebhyo [-bhya] nipātite |
ṣaḍaṅgasthe ca ṣaṭkoṣe ṣaṭkūṭe karaṇātmake || 26 ||
nādaghaṭṭitasaṁghaṭṭe [vāda-] bindukevaladakṣiṇe |
tūṣṇībhūtāśrame guhye ciñcinīvṛkṣabhairavi || 27 ||
kadambasthe [-stha] mahāmāye bhrāntike madhuratraye |
pañcāśatpīṭhamadhyasthe padapiṇḍavikāsini [-kāśini] || 28 ||
ṣaṣṭhānte ṣaṣṭhanilaye śaktitrayavivardhani |
sthūle sūkṣme pare cātra sāvalambe trilocane || Ibid. 19/18-29.

and withdrawal in the Great Sequence (mahākrama), called the Nameless (anāmākhya) and abide as awakened consciousness (bodha) in the maṇḍala that awakens the Command.

(You are) Raudrī in the form of the letter OṀ, the beautiful woman of the Principle of Knowledge (vidyātattva).[1]

O Mother of Ṣaṣṭha! Unsustained one! You who purify the (Void) form of the Cave (of the Yoni)! O (Ḍākinī) called the letter Ḍa within the foundation! O (Sākinī) called the letter Sa, who resides within the Yoni!

(You are Kākinī) called the letter Ka in the middle of the (Wheel of) Gems, (Rākinī) called the letter Ra in (the Wheel of) Unstruck Sound, (Hākinī) called the letter Ha, (you) reside in the Pure (Wheel) and (as Yākinī) called the letter Ya in the Kula scripture (kulāgama).

O endless one (nirāntā)! (You who are) the Six Parts and are adorned with the five subtle elements! You are Kula and, content (prasannātmā), you have merged into the middle of the individual soul (aṇu).

O goddess (you are) sixteenfold, you whose nature is half of the half of the energy (of the letter Ha). O great goddess, you who reside in the peak syllable of union (yogakūṭa) and possess four qualities, reside within the heart!

O goddess, (your) form is the fire of the plane of the practice (ācāra) of the Vidyā. (You govern) the three Qualities, (you who are) united with (the reality) devoid of the Qualities! (You who) move within the Wind! (You) reside on the slopes of Meru, (you who are) beyond the form of Earth and Wind![2]

---

[1] Another translation of the expression vidyātattva could be `the principle of Mantra'.

[2] hīnapakṣe sthite [-tā] raudri [raudrī] dharmādharmapadadvaye |
viṣṇumāte brahmamāte rudramāte namo 'stu te || 30 ||
khecari [-rī] bhūcari [-rī] caiva śaktiyantrapravāhini [-] |
bindugraste samaste ca jātyaṣṭakasamujjhite || 31 ||
kālāmbāgnisamudbhūte kālākālāntavāsini [-nī] |
kālikākramasaṁbandhi kālīdvādaśamaṇḍale || 32 ||
trailokyadahanīmadhye sā ca mūrtis trayodaśī |
sṛṣṭiḥ [sṛṣṭi] sthitiś ca saṁhāram anāmākhye mahākrame || 33 ||
saṁsthitā bodharūpeṇa ājñābodhanamaṇḍale |
raudri [raudrī] .okārarūpeṇa vidyātattvasya bhāmini || 34 ||
ṣaṣṭhamāte nirālambe guhākāraviśodhani [guhākara-]|
ḍakārākhye [makārākhye] ca ādhāre sākārākhye [-khya] bhagasthite || 35 ||
kakārākhye maṇermadhye [maṇir-] rakārākhye [ga-] anāhate |
hakārākhye viśuddhasthe [-stha] sakārākhye [sā-] kulāgame || 36 ||

(You are) present in the mouth and the pair of nostrils and are perceived at the End of the Sixteen! Stainless one! Unmanifest! (You who) unfold the principle of Mahāmāyā! O goddess, you are the Command who moves within the Heart! O goddess! You are the essential nature of the Self, established in the essential attribute (of Nature and consciousness) within your own abode.

Attainable (only) by Yoga! Unsustained! You who are called Durgā! Devoid of objectivity! Unnameable! First Light! Beyond the Fourth! Born of phenomenal existence! Manifest above in the upper current and in the lower current in the three worlds! O (you whose) body is made of the Five Principles and are, essentially the Great Pervasion! O knowledge of (the three principles of) the fettered soul, bondage and the Lord! O wisdom! O right conduct (vinayā) within the Kula!

O (you who) by the division into one and many are the Kālikā of the Sun of Kula! O mother of the teaching of Ha and KṢa! (You who) unfold the ultimate reality! O you who are immobile in the moving and unmoving (universe)! Playful one! Fickle one! O child! O goddess! Mistress of every limb (of my body)! O Void of the Self! O triple Void! O flow of the Upper Void! O (you who are) endowed with the qualities of the Three Voids and abide with the multitudes of energies! O (you who are the) Mother of the flow within the (supreme) abode and the five categories (of the gross elements) in due order![1]

ṣaṭprakāre nirānte ca pañcatanmātrabhūṣaṇe |
kulaṁ [kula] tvaṁ suprasannātmā aṇumadhye layaṁ gatā || 37 ||
ṣoḍaśarūpiṇi [śaraṇaśca rūpatāṁ] devi kalārdhārdhasvarūpiṇi [kālā-] |
caturguṇe mahādevi yogakūṭe hṛdi sthite || 38 ||
agnirūpadhari [-rī] devi vidyācārapadasya ca |
triguṇe 'guṇasaṁbandhe [triguṇā-] anilāntaracāriṇi || 39 ||
sthite [-tā] merutaṭe ūrvīvāyurūpaparāyiṇi [-ni] | Ibid. 19/30-40ab.

[1] mukhanāsāpuṭāvasthe ṣoḍaśānte hi lakṣaṇe || 40 ||
nirañjane nirābhāse māyātattvavikāsini [-śini] |
sā tu devi tvam ājñā yā hṛdayāntaracāriṇī [-ṇi] || 41 ||
ātmasvarūpatā devi svasthāne guṇamāśritā |
yogagamye [-game] nirālambe durgākhye grāhyavarjite || 42 ||
anākhye ca purābhāse turyātīte bhavodbhave |
ūrdhvasrotordhvavicchinne [-srotārddha] adhaḥsroto [adhasrota] jagattraye [-yaṁ] ? || 43 ||
mahāvyāptisvarūpeṇa pañcatattvatanukṛte [-tanuḥ kṛte] |
paśupāśapatijñāne vijñāne vinaye kule || 44 ||
ekānekavibhedena kulamārtaṇḍakālike |
hakṣasaṁketajanani [-nī] paramārthaprāsāriṇi || 45 ||
carācare [cārācale] ca acale cañcale capale bale |
gajajihvopacāreṇa ? devi sarvāṅganāyaki || 46 ||

(You are) the Yoni by virtue of (your) pure nature and know its permutations, in due order. (You who are) said to be the bestower of grace! Fair lady of the five beloved (gods)! O (you who) reside within (the reality) Beyond the Fourth! O (you who are) the three planes, prior and subsequent (to all things)! O Bhairavī! By moving along the sixfold path you are (well) established!

O mother of the triple world! (You who) move about and act at night! (You who) dry up (and eliminate) the (malevolent) planets! Hard to look at in the three worlds! O beloved of Time! Having sustained all things, you are know! Salutations to you O goddess of the Command (who are accompanied) by the most elevated rays (of divine light) and (divine) beings! O (you who are) all (the energies) in the wheel of the lotus of the heart! O (you who are) the flood of radiance of (divine) light.

O fair lady of the triple world! (The way to your supreme state) is opened up by means of the five signs. O you abandon love for delusion by means of the stick of the collyrium of knowledge. Salutations to you by means of the penetration that takes place by just recollecting (you) once![1]

ātmaśūnye triśūnye ca ūrdhvaśūnyapravāhini |
triśūnyaguṇasaṁpanne [-māpanne] śaktibhiś ca gaṇaiḥ saha || 47 ||
dhāmni pravāhajanani [-nī] pañcavarge [-vargā] yathākramam | Ibid. 19/40cd-48ab.

[1] yonir vimalarūpeṇa vikārajñā [vikārojñā] anukrame || 48 || anugrahakarīśaste iṣṭapañcakabhāmini |
turyottaragatāntasthe pūrvottarapadatraye || 49 ||
ṣaṇmārgamadhyacāreṇa [samāgamadhyāvaraṇe] atas [astas-] tiṣṭhati bhairavi |
ācāracarite rātrau jagattrailokyamātarī || 50 ||
ṣoṣaṇi [-ṇī] ca grahādīnāṁ durnirīkṣye [-kṣā] jagattraye | sarvasaṁbhāraṁ [-ra] saṁbhṛtya vidyase kālakāmini || 51 ||
prottuṅgakiraṇairbhāvairājñādevi [-devī] namo 'stu te | hṛtpadmacakrasakale dyuteroghasamuddyute [dyutiro- -samadyutāṁ] || 52 ||
udghātaṁ pañcabhiḥ lakṣair jagattrailokyabhāmini [-lokyayā] |
snehatyāgini mohasya [māhasya] jñānāñjanaśalākayā || 53 ||
sakṛtsmaraṇamātreṇa āveśena namo 'stu te | Ibid. 19/48cd-54ab.

Appendix II

The Gurumaṇḍala

The worship of Bhairava as the First Teacher and the lineages of teachers directly and indirectly derived from him is an essential part of the Krama rites of the Kubjikā Tantras. This is universally the case. We find it in the rites of the Śrīvidyā tradition and is no less important in Buddhist Vajrayāna ritual[1] in which the Buddha is worshipped as the First Teacher. The Kubjikā Tantras prescribe the worship of the teachers in the Gurumaṇḍala, which may be fashioned separately or integrated into the main Kramamaṇḍala.[2] The Gurumaṇḍala drawn from the ŚM described in chapter 48 of the KuKh is a separate maṇḍala.[3] However, after describing it, the KuKh goes on to describe another one that is integrated into the Kramamaṇḍala.[4] This is also the case with the extended form of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala, which incorporates the Nine and Sixteen Siddhas, described at the beginning of our text.

The Gurumaṇḍala according to the Kubjikāmata

The form of the Gurumaṇḍala and its contents taught in the Kubjikā Tantras developed, as one would expect, in parallel with the development of the lineages of teachers. In the initial stages the emphasis is on the worship of Navātmā-bhairava in the centre of the maṇḍala along with the Vidyā of the goddess and the scripture. The first form of the Gurumaṇḍala described in the Kubjikā Tantras is the one in the following passage in the KMT. No lineages have yet emerged at this initial stage of the development of the Kubjikā tradition. The teachers worshipped here, along with Bhairava and the goddess in the centre, are the Siddhas of the sacred seats along with their consorts and the seats themselves. Bhairava is speaking:

> (One should worship) in a secret place that is fragrant (with incense), solitary and free of troubles. (There one should worship) the sacred seats, the lords of the seats, the Siddhas, the mothers of the

---

[1] See Locke 1980: 81ff..

[2] This is the case with Śrīcakra. The Supreme Teacher (paragurusvarūpa) is worshipped in the Point in the centre of it. The Gurumaṇḍala is worshipped in the trapezium above the last triangle in the eight-sided figure formed from three triangles in the middle of Śrīcakra. The teachers of the Divya, Siddha and Mānava Currents are worshipped there in three horizontal lines. See Caitanyānanda 1996: 254-255 for a diagram.

[3] KuKh 48/1-49.

[4] KuKh 48/50 ff..

sacred seats, who are close to them, and the goddess in the middle of the sacred seats who is accompanied by the four Siddhas. One should worship the line of teachers (in this form) in the upper part (uttaradigbhāga) of the maṇḍala. That is said to be the teaching (āmnāya) relating to the maṇḍala.

The maṇḍala and the rest, measuring a hand-span, is in front of the Yoni. I should be worshipped there in the maṇḍala with the syllables of Navātman along with the word `ānanda' preceded by (the word) 'śaktibhairava' followed by the word `bhairava' and 'vīrādhipataye'.[1] I should be worshipped here in the maṇḍala conjoined with the sixteen syllables (padas). This is the Maṇḍala of the Tradition (āmnāyamaṇḍala) with its encompassing girdles and four parts (catuṣkala). All this is the teaching of the transmission (kramāmnāya). The maṇḍala (of the teachers) is above the maṇḍala (of the Krama). By worshipping it, it quickly (bestows) all that I have generated.[2]

A vessel filled with liquor (ali) (is offered) along with (another one filled) with water (consecrated with the) Samayā Vidyā. The liquid offering (argha) is offered in the course of the rite and at the end of it (pūjā). One should offer the mouth wash (ācamana) separately with sandal wood, incense and food (naivedya). After that one should worship with the requisite rites. The maṇḍala is worshipped (cakrapūjā) by offering lamps (dīpotsava) with food offerings (naivedya) and a vessel (full of) liquor (alipātra) along with meat. Otherwise, one can worship the foundation (ādhāra), the liturgy of the scripture of the Divine Current (divyaugha), with all one's being (sarvabhāva). One should keep all the teaching (āmnāya) hidden.

Worshipping the principle (ādya) maṇḍala of the Yoni daily in this way and generating its supreme pervasion, the Current of the Transmission (kramogha) is set into operation (for one) who reads this scripture, which is the divine foundation of the Current (of the teaching). (This is done) after worshipping (the teacher's) sandals on the fourteenth and eighth days (of the lunar month).[3]

(The rite is performed) in a divine enclosure of flowers adorned with clothes and garlands, scented with perfume, decorated with lamps and garlands, with gold, silver and the like along with copper,

---

[1] The mantra appears to be:
HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ ŚAKTIBHAIRAVĀNANDĀYA BHAIRAVĀYA VĪRĀDHIPATAYE
[2] KMT 19/108cd-114.
[3] Ibid. 19/115-120.

iron, stone and earth. The god (should thus be worshipped) with devotion and with one's own power. Lamps (piṣṭadīpa) with clarified butter (are offered) along with food (naivedya), meat and liquor, flowers and incense of many kinds. Once this has been done, during the explanation or reading (of the scripture), one should fashion the Gurumaṇḍala which encompasses the three times (triṣkāla) in front of the scripture (pustaka). I am indeed (all the devotees') teachers wherever the scripture (āgama) may be. (Thus the scripture) should be respected like the teacher.

The awakening of the Vidyā is the supreme teacher. There is no Vidyā without the teacher and no teacher without the Vidyā. As is the teacher so is the Vidyā and as is the Vidyā so is the teacher. The teacher possesses the Vidyā that has been (completely) attained (prāptavidyā). (A person attains the) status of a teacher when the Vidyā has been attained. Such is your Kaula Path by virtue of the teaching (it imparts) concerning ultimate reality (paramārtho-padeśataḥ). It is Kula, the Kula Vidyā, the Kula Path and the Kulakrama. He who knows these four is the darling of the Kula.[1]

The Gurumaṇḍala according to the Yogakhaṇḍa

As the lineages of Siddhas had not yet developed in the YKh, the Gurumaṇḍala described there is not the same as the one we find in the later sources. It also differs from the one in the KMT, but is similar to it in several respects. In this version of the Gurumaṇḍala, as in the one described in the KMT, and, indeed, in the subsequent forms of it, the deity is worshipped in association Navātman.[2] Again, the Gurumaṇḍala is especially associated with the scripture,[3] which is the most prominent attribute Kaulīśa, the First Teacher, holds in one of his hands. According to YKh (1) he should be visualized as follows:

---

[1] Ibid. 19/121-129ab.

[2] tasyāṅgāni ca [2: tasyaivāṅga] vaktrāṇi [2: ṣaḍaṅgāni] kathayāmi [2: vaktrāṇi] samāsataḥ [k, kh, gh: samāsataṁ; 2: kathayāmy aham] || 198 ||
navātmānandabhedena [2: navātmakena bhedena] bhede 'smin [ṅ: bhedasmin; 2: bhedayen] gurumaṇḍale [2: merumaṇḍalam] |
YKh (1) 16/160. Variants labelled '2' are from YKh (2) 14/208.

[3] O god, the Gurumaṇḍala should be praised and worshipped regularly in all three times (of day). Mantra operates (fruitfully) wherever the Śrīmata is present.

pūjyaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: pūjya] vandyaṁ [k, kh, gh: vadyaṁ; ṅ: vasva] sadā [ṅ: mahā] deva trikālaṁ [k, kh, gh: trikālāṁ] gurumaṇḍalam |
*yatraiva śrīmataṁ [ṅ: śrīmaṁ ] tiṣṭhet [k, kh, gh: tiṣṭe; ṅ: tiṣṭa] tatra mantraḥ [k, kh, gh: pada maṁtra; ṅ: yatra rāṣṭra] pravartate || YKh (1) 20/42.

> One should invoke him there quickly. He is yellow and faces downwards (adhomukha).[1] He has the face of a goat (ajavaktra) and tongue like a lightning flash. He is adorned with sixteen arms and has twenty-four eyes. He is surrounded by female snakes and is adorned with jewels, gems, corals, pearls and the jewel-like Moon. (He wears) a crown, earrings and a necklace and is adorned with the lord of the snakes. The hero sits on a lotus seat and shines with the full light (of ultimate reality). He is accompanied by (the Mothers who are) the eight mistresses of speech (vāgeśvarī). One should think of this form of Kulīśa, the Lord of the Śrīkula. He holds the Śrīmata in his hand and sustains a great and auspicious (state) of Yoga.[2]

The maṇḍala in which Bhairava is worshipped as the First Teacher includes a place for the scripture – a Vidyāpīṭha, just as the version of the maṇḍala described in the KMT does:

> Once the (ground has been prepared for) the maṇḍala with liquor, cow dung and scent, (one should then fashion) the square, which is the best enclosure (pura). In the middle of that is (a round) unbroken (akhaṇḍa) circle. The Vidyāpīṭha is located there. It should be sustained on top of the calyx (of the lotus in the centre). The god Bhairava is on the seat. One should offer (him) flowers along with the subsidiary directions. One should place the Kulāgama above the maṇḍala in the north-east. Liquor, sandalwood, saffron (kāśmīra), camphor, a Jāti flower, incense, musk, and excellent consecrated (argha) water. O god, in this way the vessel is said to be adorned with [1] YKh (2) (14/209d) reads: navapuṁliṅgalakṣaṇam - 'he is characterized by the Liṅga of the nine persons.' In other words, Bhairava is identified with Navātman that consists of the 'nine persons', that is, the nine Bhairavas of its constituent letters.

---

[2] tatraivāhvānayec chīgraṁ [k, gh: tatrevāhvānayeśrīghraṁ] pītavarṇam adhomukham ||
*ajavaktraṁ [k, kh, gh: ajaṁ-; ṅ: a * -] vidyujjihvaṁ [k, kh, gh: vidyu-] bhujaṣoḍaśabhūṣitam [ṅ: bhujaṁ-]* |
caturviṁśatinetraiś [k, gh: -treś] ca āvṛtaṁ nāgakanyakaiḥ ||
maṇiratnapravālaiś [k, kh, gh: -pravālaś] ca muktāphalamaṇīśaśiḥ |
*mukuṭaṁ kuṇḍalaṁ [ṅ: * ḍalaṁ] hāraṁ [k, kh, gh: ḍāraṁ; ṅ: doraṁ] phaṇendreṇa [k, kh, gh: phaṇidveṇa] vibhūṣitam* ||
padmāsanasthitaṁ vīraṁ saṁpūrṇajyotibhāsuram [k, kh, gh: -pūrṇaṁjyovi-] |
aṣṭavāgeśvarīyuktaṁ padmasyoparisaṁsthitam ||
*īdṛśaṁ [ṅ: ī * śaṁ] cintayed [gh, ṅ: -yad] rūpaṁ kaulīśaṁ śrīkuleśvaram* |
āgamaṁ [ṅ: -ma] śrīmataṁ haste mahāyogadharaṁ śubham || YKh (1) 16/161-165ab.

nine maṇḍalas. The coconut (viśvamitrakapāla) is adorned with the Five Jewels.[1]

The text does not tell us why there are nine circles to which these offerings are made. However, we may safely assume that they house the nine parts of Navātman which in later developments of the Gurumaṇḍala are worshipped, extensively. As in the version of the maṇdala described in the KMT, the goddess is worshipped in the centre along with Bhairava in the form of her thirty-two syllable Vidyā. In addition, as if to reinforce her presence there, she is also worshipped as Trikhaṇḍā, which is considered to be an extended version of her Vidyā (bṛhatsamayā).[2]

O god, one should think with all one's mind about the supreme Kujā. One should think that she causes an uninterrupted stream of water to flow into the vessel and (in this way) rains down a divine shower of nectar. One should recollect Aghora there and the (teacher's) sandals that are like Śrīnātha (himself). Once purified with the king of weapons, one should envelop it with the Armour.

O Lord, the unbroken (circle) (akhaṇḍamaṇḍala) and the rest should be established in the maṇḍala with libations. Ghorīśa who consists of the Eight Skulls should be deposited in the (eight) directions, that is, in the north, south-west, north-east, west, east, south-east, north-west (and south) with Śrīnātha's sandals in the middle. One should fashion three encompassing girdles with the three (Siddhas) Mitranātha, Oḍḍīśa and Ṣaṣṭha, (one) on each of the three. Then the wise should offer a flower to the Samayā Vidyā. (Finally) one should think that there are sixteen Śāmbhava Siddhas in the calyx.[3]

---

[1] aligomayagandhena [ṅ: alinomayaganvena] kṛtvā maṇḍalanirṇayam ||
caturasraṁ [k, kh, gh: -śraṁ] puraṁ śreṣṭhaṁ [k, kh, gh: śreṣṭaṁ] madhye cākhaṇḍamaṇḍalam | vidyāpīṭhaṁ tu tatraiva dhārayed [gh: -yad; ṅ: dhārāyad] karṇikopari [k, kh, gh, ṅ: yaṁtriko-i] ||
āsane bhairavaṁ devaṁ puṣpān [ṅ: puṣpād dadyād [k, kh, gh: dadyā] vidikṣubhiḥ |
īśāne maṇḍalasyordhve [k, gh: maḍalasyārddhe; ṅ: -lasyārddhe] sthāpayeta kulāgamam ||
alicandanakāśmīraṁ karpūraṁ jātipuṣpakam |
dhūpaṁ tu agaruṁ [k, kh: aguruṁ; gh: aguru; ṅ: agabhaṁ] śreṣṭhaṁ [k, kh, gh: śreṣṭaṁ] arghatoyaṁ tathaiva ca ||
evaṁ pātraṁ smṛtaṁ deva navamaṇḍalamaṇḍitam [gh: navamaṇḍilameditaṁ] |
viśvāmitrakapālaṁ tu pañcaratnavibhūṣitam [kh: paca-] || YKh (1) 16/166-170ab.
Concerning the Five Jewels, see KuKh chapter 62.
[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 589.
[3] saṁpūrṇamanasā deva cintyeta [k, kh, gh: ciṁtayet; ṅ: cintaye] sā parā kujā ||
nirantara-m-avichinnāṁ [k,kh, gh: -nnā; ṅ: -madichinnā] pīyūṣadhāranirmalām [all: -lā] |

The Eight Skulls are eight Bhairavas worshipped in the directions along with Ghorīśa Bhairava in the centre. These are not the Bhairava's of Navātman we find in the final form of the Gurumaṇḍala. Even so, the pattern is already established. Similarly, the sixteen Śāmbhava Siddhas, represented by the vowels in the centre, are the precursors of the Sixteen Siddhas of the later tradition.

The Gurumaṇḍala according to the Ṭīkā

The Śrīmatottara and the Ṭīkā present the most complete and sophisticated form of the Gurumaṇḍala. The source of the Gurumaṇḍala described in the Ṭīkā is apparently the Bṛhadāgama, which is probably the KuKauM.[1] It is divided into five groups consisting of of 1, 5, 9, 81, and 3 teachers and includes a fourfold sequence of the 18 teachers of the Divine Current. Note that the Nine Nāthas and Sixteen Siddhas are not included in this form of the Gurumaṇḍala. We may surmise, therefore, that it is an older version than the one described in the ŚM, which does include them. These and other additional details found in the ŚM will be integrated into the following account.

According to the KRU the middle of the maṇḍala is the seat of the Great Void that 'bestows the fruit of liberation and worldly benefits'. [2] The Ṭīkā identifies this Void with Bhairava, the First Teacher in his most elevated form as the Lord Beyond the Inexplicable Void – Anākhyavyomātītanātha. He is the inner soul within all living beings who generates the first, most subtle form of emanation (ādisṛṣti). He is worshipped in the End of the Sixteen within the yogic body (kula) and externally in the centre of the Gurumaṇḍala as the Teacher who pervades it and is the essential nature of all the teachers worshipped within it. He is worshipped, as are all the other teachers, along with his consort. She is śravantīṁ [k,kh, gh, ṅ: -ntī] pātre [ṅ: pātra] saṁcintya divyāmṛtapravarṣaṇīm [k,kh, gh, ṅ: -ṇī] ||

---

aghoraṁ saṁsmaret [gh, ṅ: -re] tatra śrīnātham iva [ṅ: -thaṁmitra] pādukām |
astrarājena saṁśodhya [k, kh, gh: -sādhya] kavacenāvaguṇṭhayet ||
maṇḍale sthāpayen nātha [gh: yan] [k, kh, gh: nāma] akhaṇḍādi ca tarpaṇaiḥ |
*aṣṭākapālaghorīśaṁ [k, kh, gh: -kālī-; gh: -saṁ; ṅ: -ghorī ] diśāsvaṣṭau ca [k, kh, gh: -ṣṭasva; ṅ: divyāsvaṣṭasva] vinyaset ||
uttare nairṛte [k, kh, gh: naiṛte; ṅ: nairite] īśe [ṅ: dakṣe] vāruṇe [ṅ: tathā] pūrvadakṣiṇe [ṅ: pūrve ca dakṣiṇe] |
*āgneyāṁ [ṅ: āpyāṁ ] mārute [k, kh, gh: -ṇe] caiva madhye [gh: madhya] śrīnāthapādukām ||
mekhalātritayaṁ kuryād [k, kh, gh, ṅ: kuryā] mi [k, kh, gh: mī] o [k, kh, gh: ū; ṅ: ḍa] ṣa ca tribhis tribhiḥ [k, kh, gh: -bhi] |
*paścāt [ṅ: paścā] samayavidyāyāṁ [k, kh, gh: -yā; ṅ: samayāvidyā ] puṣpaṁ deyaṁ [ṅ: devya] manīṣibhiḥ [gh: -bhi] || ṣoḍaśaḥ sāmbhavān [k, kh, gh: -vā; ṅ: -vāḥ] siddhān [k, kh, gh: smidvā; ṅ: siddhāḥ] karṇikānte vicintayet | YKh (1) 16/171-176.

[1] See intro. vol. 3, p. 344?, 349? and 399? ff..

[2] tasya madhye mahāśūnyaṁ bhuktimuktiphalapradam || KRU 10/144cd.

Parāparavyomātītavyomeśvarī - the Goddess of the Void who is Beyond Supreme (transcendence) and Inferior (immanence).

Five Voids are generated from this couple. They are collectively called Beyond the Void (Vyomātīta). Within the yogic body, they are located in the End of the Twelve. They are worshipped externally in the NW, SE, SW, NE, and the centre of the Gurumaṇḍala. We can infer from their names and the form of their mantras[1] that they are the Voids within which the Five Praṇavas resonate. The Void in the centre is the First Teacher – Ādinātha. The other four are aspects of his transcendental emptiness and their energies worshipped as five teachers and their consorts. They are:

1) Ādinātha - Vyomātītā 2) Anādinātha - Vyomeśvarī 3) Anāmaya - Vyomagā 4) Ananta - Vyomacāriṇī 5) Viyadābhāsa - Vyomasthā.

The five Voids 'Beyond the Void' generate the Nine Voids (navākāśa).[2] Their names indicate that they are the states and energies of Navātman. Along with their energies, they are:

1) Unmana - Unmanā[3] 2) Samana - Samanā 3) Vyāpti - Vyāpinī 4) Śakti - Śakti 5) Dhvani - Avyayā 6) Dhvanimātra - Nādāntā 7) Anāhata - Nādamātrā 8) Indu - Anackā 9) Bindu - Amṛtavarṣiṇī.[4]

These nine Voids are the sources and abodes of the nine Bhairavas related to the letters of Navātman. Each of them replicates to form a total of eighty-one units. Together these two parts of the maṇḍala coincide with one of a set of five Wheels described in the KMT called Dūticakra.[5] It is also described in the ṢSS and the ŚM, which dedicate separate chapters to it.[6] Heilijgers-Seelen analyses and compares these two presentations in detail.[7] Apart from a few differences this part of the Gurumaṇḍala and the Dūticakra are essentially the same. Thus it

[1] Each member in the series begins with one of the Five Praṇavas, in the usual serial order. This is followed by a seed-syllable formed from H with the addition of ĪṀ, ŪṀ, AIṀ, AUṀ and AḤ. Then comes the name of the consort ending in 'ambāpādukāṁ pūjayāmi'. Each mantra concludes with the syllable AIṀ.

[2] Their mantras begin with the Five Praṇavas. Then comes the name of the teacher ending in 'ākāśanātha'. This is followed by the name of the consort ending in 'vyomeśvarī ambā' and 'pādukāṁ pūjayāmi'.

[3] This is the plane Beyond the Void of Stillness (nirācāra). T. MS K fl. 85a.

[4] According to the Ṭīkā (ibid.) this is the Void from which the nectar of the Drop falls.

[5] KMT 14/62-94.

[6] See chapter 22 of the ṢSS and chapter 16 of the ŚM.

[7] See Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 69-89, 239-243.

appears that the former is derived from the latter. We shall compare the two accounts as we go along.

The Nine Voids from which the Bhairavas are derived are practically the same as the states ascribed in the KMT to their corresponding groups of Dūtis. However, there is one major difference in the order of their deployment which affects them and the entire series of related groups: the last entry in the Ṭīkā corresponds to the first in the KMT. This makes a considerable difference as the last member in the series is the one which is placed in the centre. The two sets compare as follows:

32. Table of Nine Voids

KMT	Ṭīkā
State transcending practice	Amṛtavarṣiṇī
The state from which proceed the Transmental and the rest	Unmanā
Unmanā	Samanā
Samanā	Vyāpinī
Vyāpinī	Śakti
Mastery of Speech	Avyayā
State of the Lord of Gestures	Nādāntā
State of Destruction	Nādamātrā
Niyamikā	Anackā

Nine Bhairavas originate from the Nine Voids in the form of the letters of Navātman and reside within them. These are the Nine Shining Lords - Bhāsvareśvaras of the Dūticakra. The series in this case begins with Kapāla not Ananta as it does in the KMT. In the KMT, Ananta is in the centre.[1] The Ṭīkā places the last member of the series in the centre. Apart from minor variations (noted in brackets), they are the same as the ones in the KMT.[2] They may be tabulated as follows:

---

[1] KMT 14/71.
[2] KMT 14/70-71.

33. First Table of Nine Bhairavas and Bhāsureśvaras

Letter	Bhairava[1] (Ṭīkā)	Consort (Ṭīkā)	Bhāsureśvara (KMT)
Sa	Kapāla	Parā	Ananta
Ha	Caṇḍa	Aparā	Kapālin
KṢa	Yoga	Parāparā	Caṇḍalokeśa
Ma	Manonmana	Rudraśakti	Yogeśa
La	Hāṭaka	Pramuditā	Manonmana
Va	Kravyāda	Śakti	Hāṭakeśvara
Ra	Mudrā	Jyeṣṭhā	Kravyāda
Ya	Diṅmaheśvara	Vāmā	Mudreśa
ŪṀ	Ananta	Ambikā	Diṅmaheśvara

The Nine Bhairavas

Each of the letters of the seed-syllable Navātman (HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ) has nine aspects thus making a total of eighty-one units each of which corresponds to a Nātha and his consort.[2] In the Dūticakra, these nine groups of nine are arranged in the eight-petalled lotus of the City of Gems (maṇipūraka) located in the navel. It is the centre of the principle of Water and is the abode of Viṣṇu. Each petal of this lotus consists of an eight-petalled lotus as does the one in the centre. Their domains are those of the Bhairavas of the corresponding letter of Navātman. They should not be confused with the nine Bhairavas who come from the Nine Voids. These Bhairavas are amongst the fifty who preside over the letters of the Assembly of Sounds (śabdarāśi). They emit the nine sounds of the letters of Navātman (navātmākṣaravaka) into the corresponding Void (ākāśa).[3] Thus each lotus is pervaded by the corresponding Void listed above from which it originates.

---

[1] The name of each Bhairava ends with 'īśvaranātha' and that of his consort with 'ambā'.

[2] The configuration of the lotus of the Gurumaṇḍala into eighty-one divisions is a common one. It is easily formed by drawing two parallel vertical lines and two horizontal ones within a square. The result is a large square containing nine squares; one in the middle surrounded by eight others. By repeating the same procedure in each square we get eighty-one squares. As the form of this maṇḍala is easy to make and is symmetrical, it is a common one. It is also ancient. Thus, this is the form of the Vedic fire altar of the Agnicayana (Staal 2001: vol. 1 p. 163). Called Sarvatobhadra, it is used in Vaiṣṇava ritual. It also coincides with the form of maṇḍala in which the Vāstu deities are worshipped in the foundations of a building. Chapter 46 of the Garuḍapurāṇa contains a detailed description of a building with eighty-one rooms, placed in a diagram of nine by nine rooms. Various deities are placed in the squares or rooms, in a particular order. An extended maṇḍala of eighty-one Yoginīs, called Mūlacakra, is described on the same pattern in chapter 25 of the ŚM. See Dehejia 1986: 50 for a drawing of the Mūlacakra. See also Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 296-298.

[3] Ṭīkā fl. 87b.

The KMT supplies a list of the eighty-one Dūtis on the petals of the lotuses and the nine Bhairavas who are the lords of the nine lotuses. The ŚM reproduces practically all the text of the KMT and adds descriptions of the Dūtis' iconic forms. The ṢSS supplies a description of the maṇḍala in which they are worshipped and their mantras. These are formed from Navātman and so this connection is evident in the ṢSS. Although the mantras are not mentioned in either the KMT or the ŚM, both texts are aware of the connection with Navātman. Thus the KMT refers to the creation of the Dūticakra from the body of Ananta as the creation of the parts of the mantra (pada)[1] of which he is the Lord.[2] They are eighty-one and are the 'belly' of the god Navakeśvara[3] who contains them, clearly implying that they are formed from Navātman.

These nine groups of nine also appear is the KRU.[4] There the Dūtis are listed together with the governing Bhairava of each group of nine as the members of the Lineage of the Elders (vṛddhakrama). According to the KRU,[5] the first out of each of the series of nine Dūtis initially emerge out of nine cavities of the deities body. Each one then becomes nine-fold[6] to make up 'the plane of eighty-one'. However, according to the other sources, they are emanated from the god Ananta. Again, according to the KMT and related texts, the nine groups originate from the nine Bhairavas. According to the KRU, the nine Dūtis of each group are the subdivisions (bheda) of the first one in each series.

Only the Ṭīkā mentions the consorts of the Dūtis. They are worshipped as teachers, not just as Bhairavas. I have not managed to locate the source of these names. The other sources are concerned with an exposition of the Dūticakra which, as its name suggests, consists essentially of female elements. They do not refer to their individual male counterparts. The word 'dūti' (also spelt 'dūtī') according to common usage means a female messenger. She is a woman's female

[1] KMT 14/71 = ŚM 16/18ab.
[2] KMT 14/69 = ŚM 16/15ab.
[3] KMT 14/93 = ŚM 16/79.
[4] KRU 3/155cd-173.
[5] KRU 3/155cd-160.
[6] These places in the god's body are listed there as follows:

1) Bindukā: From Bindu's location (between the eyebrows)
2) Caṇḍā: From the eyebrows
3) Manojavā: From the middle of the mind.
4) Aindrī: From the square.
5) Hiraṇyā: From the place of the foundation.
6) Vāk: From the Principle of Speech.
7) Vajriṇī: From the conjunction of the Vajras.
8) Lambā: From the glottis (lambakamaṇḍala).
9) Suprabuddhā: From the principle of the intellect.

companion or maid who serves as a go-between her and her lover. In Tantric texts a Dūti is the female Tantric consort. In the case of the Dūticakra, the male consorts are Bhairavas, each of whom enjoys the company of nine Dūtis. In the Ṭīkā the Dūtis figure as the consorts of eighty-one Nāthas who are worshipped in this part of the Gurumaṇḍala as teachers.

In order to understand what has happened, we should refer to the Gurumaṇḍala described in the ŚM. There we read:

> One should deposit the Moon (Sa) in the north and the Sun (Ha) in the Circle of Īśāna (in the north-east). The Peak (KṢa) should be deposited in the south-west, the Circle of the Drop (Ma) in the south, the god Purandara (La) in the east and Varuṇa (Va) in the western direction. Fire (Ra) should be deposited in fire's corner (in the south-east) and Wind (Ya) in Wind's corner (in the north-west). One should worship the letter Ū in the centre. One should worship the Gurumaṇḍala (in this way). (Thus) the Gurumaṇḍala, which is (common to all) the three Lineages (oli), has been explained. Such is said to be the Gurumaṇḍala, which is the same in the three lineages. O fair lady, the Gurumaṇḍala is adorned with nine maṇḍalas. The rite of adoration should be performed there as taught previously in the Śrīmata.[1]

The structure of this maṇḍala is basically that of the Dūticakra. Although the Dūtis are missing, the remaining features are the same. The difference between this Gurumaṇḍala and the Dūticakra derives from the basic perception of Navātman as the sonic form of the First Teacher.[2] Its constituent maṇḍalas correspond to the nine letters of Navātman who is the First Teacher.

The mantra of each maṇḍala, contains its name, along with that of the Siddha and his equivalent Bhairava and consort.[3] These variables can be tabulated as follows:

---

[1] ŚM 23/38cd-40ab, 41 = KKh 48/12cd-14ab, 20cd-21ab. According to the Ṭīkā (MS K fl. 87b), these verses are the Gurumaṇḍalasūtra

[2] See note 8 to KuKh 48/8.

[3] The structure of these mantras is as follows: 1) The Five Praṇavas followed by Navātman. 2) The name of the maṇḍala with 'adhikāre' in the locative suffixed to it. In the majority of cases this is the name of the corresponding quarter. 3) Two names of the Siddha / deity of that maṇḍala prefixed with the honorific 'śrī' and suffixed with 'ānandadeva'. The second name is preceded by the diction 'dvitīyanāma' - 'second name' and is that of the Bhairava who presides over the corresponding letter of Navātman. 4) The seed-syllable HSKHPHREṀ. 5) The name of the consort prefixed by 'śrī' and followed by 'kubjikāmbādevī tayor yugmapādukāṁ pūjayāmi' - 'the goddess mother Kubjikā. I worship their pair of sandals.' Thus, for example, the first mantra is:

34. Table of the Maṇḍalas of Navātman

Maṇḍala	Letter	Siddha	Bhairava	Goddess
Soma (N)	Sa	Somagarbha	Bhṛgu	Somagarbhavatī
Sūrya (NE)	Ha	Tejānanda	Lākula	Tejovatī
Akula (SW)	KṢa	Kuleśvara	Samvarta	Kula
Bindu (S)	Ma	Bindukuleśvara	Mahākāla	Bindumālinī
Indra (E)	La	Pulinda	Pinākin	Pulindavatī
Varuṇa (W)	Va	Amṛta	Khaḍga	Amṛtānandavatī
Vahni (SE)	Ra	Tīvra	Bhujaṅga	Kulakuṇḍalī
Vāyu (NE)	Ya	Māruta	Bālīśa	Pavanavatī
Vyoma (centre)	ŪṀ	Vyoma	Arghīśa	Vyomamālinī

The Bhairavas in this part of the Gurumaṇḍala govern the corresponding nine letters of Navātman in the Assembly of Sounds from which they are extracted. The names of the 'teachers' are mostly derived from the names of the directions in which the letters are arranged. The latter, in their turn, are derived from the letters themselves as they denote the directions. For example, the first letter of Navātman is Sa. This is the letter of the Moon who governs the northern quarter. The corresponding Siddha is called Somagarbha (He who contains the Moon). Most of the names of the consorts are, as often happens, derived from the names of their male counterparts. Thus the consort in this case is called Somagarbhavatī (Pregnant with the Moon).

The couples who reside in nine maṇḍalas of the Dūticakra are alone there and so their mantras are simple invocations of each couple. In this case, the structure of the mantras is more complex. Changes take place progressively in the form of Navātman and the seed-syllables are formed from the corresponding letters. These permutations agree with the form prescribed in the ṢSS for the corresponding parts of the mantra (pada) of the constituents of the Dūticakra. Either the author of the Ṭīkā or his source combined these two *maṇḍala*s in this way also. The nine Bhairavas are those of the nine letters of Navātman as described in the ŚM. Their names differ from their counterparts in the Dūticakra. However,, like the Dūticakra, they do not figure along with the nine Dūtis who have their own separate consorts. Finally, another feature this part of the Gurumaṇḍala has in common with the Dūticakra is its association with the water element and its corresponding deity - Viṣṇu and wheel - the City of Gems - in the navel. This feature is rather incongruous with respect to the other parts of this Gurumaṇḍala, none of which are specifically linked to other Wheels in the body.

AIṀ HRĪṀ ŚRĪṀ PHREṀ HSAUṀ HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ SOMAMAṆḌALĀDHIKĀRE ŚRĪSOMA-GARBHĀNANDADEVA DVITĪYANĀMA ŚRĪBHṚGVĀNANDADEVA HSKHPHREṀ ŚRĪSOMA-GARBHAVATĪ KUBJIKĀMBĀDEVĪ TAYOR YUGMAPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI

Thus it appears that the Dūticakra is indeed the source of this part of the Gurumaṇḍala.

Let us return to the collocation of the Bhairavas in nine maṇḍalas. According to the commentary on the ṢSS,[1] Ananta is in the centre. Accordingly, his group is named first. The remaining Bhairavas with their Dūtis are arranged clockwise around them, starting from the east and ending in the northeast. The sequential order according to the Ṭīkā agrees with the arrangement of the Gurumaṇḍala described in the ŚM. The centre comes last in the sequence and the remaining eight are arranged around it, starting from the south and ending in the northeast. However, the order in which the groups of Dūtis are arranged according to the Ṭīkā, agrees with the one in the KMT, where their locations are not stated. This means that the Dūtis of the first Bhairava of the other sources, that is, Ananta who is in the centre, are the Dūtis of the first Bhairava in the Ṭīkā who is in the north. This discrepancy could only have been avoided if the basic spatial structure of the Gurumaṇḍala had been altered to fit that of the Dūticakra or vice versa. The first option is ruled out because, as we have noted already, the very letters of Navātman denote the directions in which they should be placed. One wonders why a little care could not have been taken to simply ascribe a particular group of Dūtis to the corresponding direction. The answer to this seems to be that what matters in this case is the sequence of the Dūtis as laid down by the primary authority, the KMT.

Only the ṢSS ascribes permutations of Navātman to these groups. In that case the sequence, starting from the centre and then moving round from the east to the northeast, is determined, it seems, simply by the most common spatial convention. The positioning, on the other hand, of the Bhairavas of the letters of Navātman in the Gurumaṇḍala according to the ŚM is not hampered by having to maintain the sequence of the Dūtis intact and so are distributed in a more coherent way. Indeed, it is possible that the spatial distribution of the Dūtīs according to the ṢSS is not the one intended in the KMT. The last Bhairava in the series according to the KMT is Diṅmaheśvara - Lord of the Quarters. One would expect him to be in the centre where he can command the directions. Another clue to the spatial distribution intended in the KMT is the sequence of Dūtis in the fourth group. The Dūtis of this series are, as their name clearly indicate, the consorts of the guardians of the quarters. Thus we can see how they should be ordered in space. The first eight in this sequence are: E > SE > S > SW > W > NW > N > NE. Clearly, the ninth at the end of this series is in the center. There is no reason to suppose that the spatial ordering of the other groups, and the groups themselves, was meant to have been otherwise. Thus it seems that the authors of the later expanded versions of the KMT, the ŚM and the ṢSS, were either not aware of this or choose to ignore the original ordering in space. The latter possibility is more likely in the case of the ṢSS and the former in the ŚM. Thus, for no good reason, the ŚM arranges the nine groups in the following directional sequence: middle > S > W > E > N > NE > SE > SW > NW. That the author of the ŚM was conscious of what he was doing is indicated by the fact that he was careful to alter the order of the sequence of Dūtis in the fourth group by shifting it forward by one. Thus the first directional Dūti is the second of the series in the ṢSS and the directionally undefined slot that accommodates the centre, which is the last in the KMT, is placed first in the ṢSS.

---

[1] Comm. on ṢSS 22/21.

A further complication arises that may be the result of an attempt to bypass some of these discrepancies. Our first set of sources links the Bhairava of each group with the first Dūti. This couple is in the centre with the eight remaining Dūtis around them. The setup in the Ṭīkā is quite different. The presiding Bhairava of each group is not worshipped within the group. Instead he appears as the Bhairava in authority in the pervasive space (ākāśa) within which the lotus of that group unfolds. As all these alterations and transpositions have taken place it is hard to decide whether it is correct to equate the Bhairavas in authority in this part of the Gurumaṇḍala with the Bhāsureśvaras of the Dūticakra.

The Nine Maṇḍalas of Navātman

We move on now to examine the nine maṇḍalas. The mantras of each group begins with a form of Navātman produced by dropping the first letter successively for each successive group. Thus the seed-syllable of the first group, which is located in the north, consists of all nine letters of Navātman, i.e. HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ. The seed-syllable of the second group, which is located in the north-east, is formed by dropping the first letter to make SKṢMLVRYŪṀ and so on. The mantras of the ninth group begin with just the last letter, namely, ŪṀ and are projected onto the lotus in the center. The procedure in the ṢSS is basically the same, apart from two differences. The first Bhāsureśvara, Ananta, is placed in the centre with his group of Dūtīs. As the first member in the series, his seed-syllable is the full form of Navātman. We would expect the corresponding form of Navātman of the second Bhāsureśvara, Kapālin, to be shorter by one letter, however, it is the full form of Navātman again. Thus, according to the ṢSS, there are only eight, not nine, permutations of Navātman. The last form of Navātman there is YŪṀ, not ŪṀ.

This inconsistency leads to another discrepancy with respect to the arrangement in the Ṭīkā. This concerns the seed-syllables of the Dūtis. They are formed by adding seven long vowels and visarga successively, in the regular alphabetical order to the letter of that group. Thus, for example, the eight seed-syllables of the Dūtis of the first group, which is that of the letter Sa, are SĀṀ

SĪṀ SŪṀ SṚṀ SḶṀ SAIṀ SAUṀ SAIṀ SAḤ. They are only eight, not nine, because the seed-syllable is omitted in the first mantra. The ṢSS treats the last syllable – YŪṀ - as Ya. The eight permutations of that letter surround YŪṀ in the centre, which corresponds to the series of the penultimate group according to the Ṭīkā. Now we can understand why the ṢSS is not fully consistent. In order to avoid the difficulty of being left with just ŪṀ for the last group, the ṢSS posits only eight permutations of Navātman. The Ṭīkā prefers to be consistent and so, for want of a better alternative, presents ŪṀ as the seed-syllable of each of the Dūtis of that group.[1]

The following tables record the names of the Bhairavas – cum – teachers and the Dūtis of the nine groups. The first two columns record the names in the Ṭīkā and the following four in the sources noted at the head of each column.

35. 1) North, the letter Sa (SHKṢMLVRYŪṀ)

Bhairava / Teacher	Dūti / Consort	KMT	ŚM	KRU	ṢSS
Śikhāśekhara	Bindu-garbhā	Bindukā	Bindukā	Bindukā	Bindukā
Kandarpa	Nādinī	Bindugarbhā	Bindugarbhā	Bindu-garbhā	Nādinī
Hṛdaya	Nāda-garbhā	Nādinī	Nādinī	Nādinī	Nādagarbhā
Koṅkaṇeśvara	Mālinī	Nāda-garbhajā	Nādagarbhajā	Nādagarbhā	Śakti
Vītarāga	Śabda-garbhā	”Śakti	”Śakti	Śaktinī	Garbhinī
Advaita	Parā-garbhā	Garbhinī	Garbhinī	Śakti-garbhā	Cacyāyī
Tīvra	Cāriṇī	Parā	Parā	Kalā	Parāyī
Haṁsa	Vyoma-garbhinī	Garbhā	Garbhā	Kalā-garbhiṇī	Garbhāyī
Aadhāra	Caṇḍī	Artha-cāriṇī	Avadhāriṇī	Kalādhārī	Antyacāriṇī

36. 2) North-east, the letter Ha (HKṢMLVRYŪṀ)

Bhairava / Teacher	Dūti / Consort	KMT	ŚM	KRU	ṢSS
Citra	Caṇḍamukhī	Caṇḍā	Caṇḍā	Caṇḍā	Sarvalokeśvarī
Kuraṅga	Caṇḍogrā	Caṇḍamukhī	Caṇḍamukhī	Caṇḍamukhī	Caṇḍāyī
Carya	Caṇḍavegikā	Caṇḍavegikā	Caṇḍavegikā	Caṇḍavegikā	Caṇḍamukhī

[1] The structure of their mantras according to the Ṭīkā is simple. First comes the appropriate form of Navātman. This is followed by the name of the teacher ending with ‘ānandanātha’. Then comes the seed-syllable formed from the letter of that group and the name of the consort ending with ’ambā’ and ‘pādukāṁ pūjayāmi’. This section extends in MS K of the Ṭīkā from fl. 84b to 87a.

Bhairava / Teacher	Dūti / Consort	KMT	ŚM	KRU	ṢSS
Mitrīśa	Manojavā	Manojavā	Manojavā	Manojavā	Caṇḍā
Ṣaṣṭha	Caṇḍanetrā	Caṇḍākṣī	Caṇḍanetrā	Caṇḍākṣī	Caṇḍavegā
Madandhra	Caṇḍā	Caṇḍanirghoṣā	Caṇḍanī	Caṇḍanirghoṣā	Manojavā
Uḍīśa	Nirghoṣikā	Bhṛkuṭī	Bhrūkuṭī	Ghoṣā	Caṇḍāyī
Vyāpaka	Bhṛkuṭi	Caṇḍanāyikā	Caṇḍanāyikā	Bhṛkuṭi	Caṇḍanirghoṣā
Madāṅga	Cāṇḍanāyikā	Caṇḍīśanāyakā	Caṇḍīśa-nāyakā	Cāṇḍanāyikā	Bhṛkuṭi

37. 3) South-west, the letter KṢa (KṢMLVRYŪṀ)

Bhairava / Teacher	Dūti / Consort	KMT	ŚM	KRU	ṢSS
Krodha	Manodbhavā	Manojavā[1]	Manojavā	Manojavā	Manojavā
Nitya	Mano-’dhyakṣā	Mano-’dhyakṣā	Mano-’dhyakṣā	Mano-’dhyakṣā	Mano-’dhyakṣā
Vīra	Manomayī	Mānasī	Mānasī	Manaḥprīti	Mānasī
Kuleśvara	Manonāyikā	Manonāyikā	Mananāyikā	Maneśvarī	Manasāyī
Kuṇḍala	Manohārī	Manohārī	Manohārī	Manohārī	Manohārī
Khekhara	Manohlādī	Manohlādī	Manohlādī	Manohlādī	Manohlādī
Khameśa	Manaḥprīti	Manaḥprīti	Manaḥprīti	Manā	Manaḥprīti
Khecara	Maneśvarī	Maneśvarī	Maneśvarī	Unmādā	Maneśvarī
Kumārakandara	Manonmanī	Manonmanī	Manonmanī	Mādinī	Manonmanī

38. 4) South, the letter Ma (MLVRYŪṀ):

Bhairava / Teacher	Dūti / Consort	KMT	ŚM	KRU	ṢSS[2]
Lalita	Aindrī[3]	Aindrī	Aindrī	Aindrī	Ananteśvarī
Ciccira	Aagneyī	Hutāśanī	Hutāśanī	Hutāśanī	Aindrī
Ananta	Yāmyā	Yāmyā	Yāmyā	Yāmyā	Hutāśanī
Satata	Nairṛti	Nairṛti	Nairṛti	Nairṛti	Yāmyaī
Gocara	Vāruṇā	Vāruṇī	Vāruṇī	Vāruṇī	Rākṣasī
Bhūcara	Vāyavyā	Vāyavī	Vāyavī	Vāyavī	Vāruṇī
Kesara	Kauverī	Kauverī	Kauverī	Kauverī	Vāyavī
Karīśa	Īśānī	Aiśānī	Aiśānī	Aiśānī	Kauverī
Nirānandanātha	Kaulinī	Laukikeśvarī	Kuleśvarī	Laukikeśvarī	Īśānī

[1] All the other sources read Manojavā. Even so, one wonders if this is not a mistake for Manodbhavā as Manojavā already appears as the fourth Dūti in the preceding series.

[2] We have observed that the names of the Dūtīs indicate their location in space and that, according to the ṢSS, the first of the nine groups is in the centre. Consequently, this should also be the case within each group. In this case, we can clearly see that the KMT intends the last member of the group to be in the centre. As the Ṭīkā also follows this arrangement, the serial order of the Dūtīs found in the ṢSS is anomalous with respect to both the KMT and the Ṭīkā.

[3] MSs of the Ṭīkā read: aiṁ hrīṁ.

39. 5) East, the letter La (LVRYŪṀ):

Bhairava / Teacher	Dūti / Consort	KMT	ŚM	KRU	ṢSS
Kiṅkara	Hiraṇyā	Hiraṇyā	Hiraṇyā	Hiraṇyā	Manonmanā
Kalikala	Sauvarṇā	Suvarṇā	Suvarṇā	Suvarṇā	Suvarṇāyī
Samvara	Karmaṇī	Kāñcanī	Kāñcanī	Kāñcanī	Kāñcanī
Advaita	Hāṭakeśvarī	Hāṭakā	Hāṭakī	Hāṭakī	Bhaṭṭā
Svayamvara	Rukmiṇī	Rukmiṇī	Rukmiṇī	Rukmiṇī	Rukmiṇī
Oṁāndanātha	Manasvī	Manasvī	Manasvī	Manasvī	Mānasī
Tameśa	Subhadrā	Subhadrā	Subhadrā	Subhadrā	Subhadrā
Kala	Jambukā	Jambukī	Jambu	Jambukā	Jambukāyī
Maṇipūraka	Hāṭakā	Hāṭakī	Nāyikā	Hāṭakā	Hāṭakā

40. 6) West, the letter Va (VRYŪṀ):

Bhairava / Teacher	Dūti / Consort	KMT	KRU	ŚM	ṢSS
Mauna	Vāgvādinī	Vāgvatī	Vāk	Vāgvatī	Vibhāvasī
Svayambhuva	Vākpravāhī	Vāc	Vāgavatī	Vāc	Cāyikā
Tūṣṇīśa	Vāgeśvarī	Vāṇī	Vāṇī	Vāṇī	Vānarī[1]
Śamvareśvara	Bhīmāvatī	Bhīmā	Bhīmā	Bhīmā	Bhīmāyī
Vallabha	Citra	Citrarathā	Citrarathā	Citrarathā	Varṇacintakā
Śikhā	Sudhī	Sudhī	Sudhī	Sudhī	Sudhīyāyī[2]
Rakta	Devamātṛ	Devamātṛ	Devamātṛ	Devamātṛ	Devamātṛ
Anāmaya	Suvarṇā	Hiraṇyā	Hiraṇyā	Hiraṇyā	Hiraṇyāyī[3]
Karāla	Yogeśvarī	Yogeśvarī	Yogeśvarī	Yogeśvarī	Yogeśvarī

41. 7) South-east, the letter Ra (RYŪṀ):

Bhairava / Teacher	Dūti / Consort	KMT	ŚM	KRU	ṢSS
Alicaṇḍākṣa	Vajriṇī	Vajriṇī	Vajriṇī	Vajriṇī	Kuleśinī
Kadamba	Śaktinī	Śakti	Śaktinī	Śaktinī	Vajriṇī
Mahocchūṣma	Daṇḍī	Daṇḍī	Daṇḍinī	Daṇḍī	Śaktinī
Ciñciṇīśa	Khaḍginī	Khaḍginī	Khaḍginī	Khaḍginī	Daṇḍinī
Anāhata	Yoginī	Pāśinī	Pāśinī	Pāśinī	Khaḍginī
Susaṁviśodhana	Dhvajī	Dhvajī	Dhvajinī	Dhvajī	Pāśinī
Viśuddhi	Gadinā	Gadī	Gadinī	Gadinā	Dhvajinī
Viśva	Śūlinī	Śūlinī	Śūlinī	Śūlī	Mudgarī
Bhaga	Padminī	Padminī	Padminī	Padmī	Śūlinī

[1] According to the commentary this Dūti is called Vāṇī.
[2] According to the commentary this Dūti is called Sudhī.
[3] According to the commentary this Dūti is called Hiraṇyā.

42. 8) North-east, letter Ya (YŪṂ):

Bhairava / Teacher	Dūti / Consort	KMT	ŚM	KRU	ṢSS
Jñāna	Lambā	Lambā	Lambā	Lambā	Lambayikā[1]
Vimala	Lambastanī	Lambastanī	Lambastanī	Lambastanī	Lambastanī
Abja	Śuṣkamukhī	Śuṣkā	Śuṣkā	Śuṣkā	Śuṣkā
Aṅkura	Pūtivadanā	Pūtivadanā	Pūtivadanā	Pūtivadanā	Pūtivadanā
Śaśāṅka	Mahānanā	Mahānanā	Mahānanā	Mahānanā	Mahānanā
Sūrya	Gajavaktrā	Gajavaktrā	Gajavaktrā	Gajavaktrā	Gajavaktrā
Trikoṇa	Mahānāsā	Mahānāsā	Mahānāsā	Sunāsā	Mahānāsā
Abhaya	Vidyutā	Vidyutā	Vidyutā	Vidyutā	Vidyutā
Ghana	Kravyādā	Kravyādanāyikā	Kravyādanāyikā	Kravyādanāyikā	Nāyikā

43. 9) Centre, the letter ŪṂ:

Bhairava / Teacher	Dūti / Consort	KMT	KRU	ŚM	ṢSS
Khaṇḍa-śekharastha	Aprabuddhā	Suprabuddhā	Suprabuddhā	Suprabuddhā	Suprabhā
Viddha	Prabuddhi	Prabuddhā	Prabuddhā	Prabuddhā	Prabuddhāyī
Nabha	Daṇḍinī	Caṇḍī	Caṇḍī	Caṇḍī	Caṇḍinī
Koṭara	Muṇḍinī	Muṇḍī	Muṇḍī	Muṇḍī	Muṇḍikā
Paṅkaja	Kapālinī	Kapālinī	Kapālinī	Kapālinī	Kapālikā
Kṛpa	Mṛtyuhārī	Mṛtyuhantā	Mṛtyuhantrī	Mṛtyuhantrī	Mṛtyuhantā
Ghaṭika	Virūpākṣī	Virūpākṣī	Virūpākṣī	Virūpākṣā	Virūpākṣī
Anāmaya	Kapārdinī	Kapardī	Kapardī	Kapardī	Kapardī
Śakti	Kalanātmā	Kalanātmikā	Kalanātmikā	Kalanātmikā	Khecaranāyikā

The Śāmbhava Siddhas

According to the Ṭīkā, the Three Śāmbhavas should be worshipped after these nine lotuses. They are the teachers who founded the three lineages, the Siddhas Mitranātha, who is the Sun, Ṣaṣṭhanātha, who is the Moon and Oḍḍīśanātha, who is Fire.[2] The mantras in the Ṭīkā address them as Tūṣṇīśanātha, Ciñciṇīnātha and Auḍīśanātha, respectively. Presumably, they are worshipped in the corners of the triangle in the centre of the maṇḍala in their corresponding sacred seat (pīṭha).[3] They are under the authority of Śambhu, Merunātha and Ātmatattva, respectively. They bestow the Command of the Śrīkulakālīsiddhas, the Mahākālīkula and the Kālikula teachers, respectively. Their consorts are Mind Beyond Mind (manonmanā or unmanī). They are 1) the mother (ambā) of the [1] According to the commentary this Dūti is called Lambālikā.

[2] Cf. KuKh 2/28.
[3] Cf. KuKh 11/40-42ab and note.

lineage of the Command of the Mother (ambikājñāvlī), 2) the mother of the lineage of the Command of the Goddess (devī-ājñāvalī) and 3) the mother of the lineage of the Command of Kubjikā (kubjikājñāvalī), respectively.[1]

The Divine Current - The Sequence of the Bliss of the Command and the Eighteen Nāthas

Following the course of the text on which it is commenting,[2] the Ṭīkā continues with the mantras of the Divine Current (divyaugha). This is called the Sequence of the Bliss of the Command (ājñānandakrama), which the Ṭīkā glosses as the Sequence of the Eighteen Nāthas (aṣṭādaśanāthakrama). These are the eighteen teachers of the Convention of the Flower (puṣpasaṁketa).[3] In this case it is of four kinds (catuṣprakāra), namely: 1) Āṇava 2) Śākta 3) Śāmbhava and 4) Nirīha. Each series is invoked in a sequence of eighteen mantras.[4] The first three

---

[1] Their mantras are constructed in the following way. 1) The Five Praṇavas. 2) The name of the Siddha in authority ending with 'adhikāre' in the locative. 3) The form of the Command. 4) The seed-syllable HSKHPHREṀ 5) The name of the mother. 6) The seed-syllable HSKHPHREṀ 7) The name of the Siddha preceded by 'Ciñciṇīnātha' and followed by his alternative name which incorporates the name of the luminary with which he is associated. The latter is preceded by "śrīśrīnātha- and ends with ānandanāthapādukāṁ pūjayāmi. The first mantra, for example, is:

AIṀ HRĪṀ ŚRĪṀ KHPHREṀ HSPHŪAUṀ ŚRĪŚAṀBHUNĀTHĀDHIKĀRE ŚRĪKULAKĀLĪSIDDHĀJÑĀ HSKHPHREṀ MANONMANĀ AIṀ KROṀ AMBIKĀJÑĀVALĪ AMBĀ SHKṢMLVRYŪṀ CIÑCIṆĪNĀTHA TŪṢṆĪŚANĀTHA ŚRĪŚRĪNĀTHASŪRYĀNANDANĀTHAPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI

[2] The Ṭīkā's presentation of the Gurumaṇḍala up to this point is essentially a long commentary on the following line: 'The one that precedes the five that burns with the syllable of supreme bliss is pervaded by nine (pañcādyaṁ navabhir vyāptaṁ parānandākṣarojjvalam)'.

The two main sources from which the Ṭīkā draws the passages it comments are the ṢSS and the Bṛhadāgama. As this line is not found in the former, we may conjecture that it is taken from the latter. Another possibility is the ŚM, but this line is not found there either. The Ṭīkā informs us that the following passage on which it comments, which deals with the remaining part of the Gurumaṇḍala, is drawn from the Bṛhadāgama. So the previous one may be so also.

[3] See KuKh 5/45-47ab.

[4] Ṭīkā MS K fl. 90b. The structure of the mantras of the Śākta and Śāmbhava groups are similar. The first three components are the same. They are as follows: 1) The Five Praṇavas. 2) The seed-syllable HSKHPHREṀ 3) The name of the Siddha ending with 'ānandanātha'. In the Śākta group, the name of the consort / energy follows directly ending with 'ambāpādukāṁ pūjayāmi'. In the Śambhava group this is preceded by a seed-syllable formed from the letter Ha to which the sixteen vowels are added successively to form sixteen seed-syllables. The last two seed-syllables are HIṀ and HĪṀ.

The mantras of the Āṇava group are different. Each mantra starts with the Five Praṇavas. This is a followed by a statement of its specific jurisdiction (adhikāra), which corresponds to the energy worshipped with that mantra. After that comes the name of the Nātha. Thus, for example, the first mantra is addressed to the Transmental and the corresponding Nātha whose name is mention the names of the Eighteen Nāthas along with their energies. The mantras of the fourth series, Nirīha, refer only to the male counterparts, which are the same as the Śākta group. Although 'nirīha' means 'without desire', this series of Siddhas are worshipped in the 'cruel rites' (krūrakarman) of black magic (abhicāra) aimed at expelling, paralysing and even murdering one's enemy. The energies represent states and forces in the phases of the development of consciousness. Presumably, they have been omitted in this sequence as their worship is not relevant here. The Āṇava sequence bestows the fruits of enjoyment and liberation, the Śākta, peace and fulfilment and the Śāmbhava one, control and attraction. The variables are recorded in the following table.

The first column of this table records the names of the energies of the eighteen Siddhas listed in the other columns mentioned in the mantras recorded in the Ṭīkā. They have been compared with those in the KuKh (chapters 2 and 57) and the KnT. These entries are mostly masculine in the list presented in chapter two of the KuKh and are entirely so in the KnT. Nonetheless, as the present context requires, their names are listed in the feminine forms found in the two expositions of the eighteen in chapter 57 of our text[1] which is drawn from YKh (1). These are entered in plain characters. Variants in the KnT are noted in brackets. Two asterisks next to a variant indicate that the same variant is found in the KnT. Variants from chapter 57 of the KuKh are in bold italics. The eighteen are described twice there. Variants found in the first presentation are marked 'A' and those in the second, 'B'. Variants in the Ṭīkā are noted in plain, bold characters. An asterix next to a variant indicates that that variant is also found in the Ṭīkā.

---

preceded by the statement 'śrī unmanādhikāre' lit. 'in the jurisdiction of the venerable Transmental'. One wonders whether this insertion would not be appropriate in the case of the mantras of the other two groups also because the mantras of all three groups are in the jurisdiction of the corresponding energy, not the male counterpart who plays a subordinate role.

Two more differences distinguish the mantras of this group from those two. One is the insertion of the seed-syllable HSKHPHREṀ between the name of the Nātha and the energy and the letter Ī between the name of the energy and the diction 'ambāpādukāṁ pūjayāmi'.

The structure of the mantras of the fourth group - Nirīha - is simple. They begin with HŪṀ PHAṬ. Then comes the name of the Nātha ending with 'pādukāṁ pūjayāmi'. This is invariably the same as the energy of that mantra.

[1] One of the issues to clarify here concerning this Sequence of Eighteen is whether it is a sequence of Nāthas or of their consorts. This is discussed in the note 49 to KuKh 2/20-26. In chapter 57 of the KuKh all 18, except Śrīnātha, the last one, are unambiguously presented as the energies or aspects of the plane (bhūmikā) (a feminine word) of the Command. It is the eighteenfold transmission explained from the point of view of the stages of realisation (bhūmikārtha) (KuKh 57/1ab). They are described individually twice (first in KuKh 57/1cd-27 and then again in 57/58-76ab). All of them have a corresponding Lord (KuKh 57/96-98).

The names of the male consorts listed in chapter 57 of the KuKh have been entered in the second column. The male consorts named in the mantras of the four classes found in the Ṭīkā are listed in the following four columns

.

44. Table of the Four Kinds of Divine Current

Energy	Male Consorts KuKh	Āṇava	Śākta	Śāmbhava	Nirīha
Unmanā	Śabdarāśi	Ciñciṇīkula	Ājñā	Siṁha	Ājñā
Manonmanā	Saṁvarta	Kadamba	Siṁha	Saṁvarta	Siṁha
Samanā	Khecara	Vimala	Khecara	Kiñjalka	Khecara
Vyāpinī	Ananta	Tūṣṇīśa	Rudra	Bhaga	Rudra
Avyaktā Śāmbhavī[B]*	Amogha	Advaita	Goṣṭhīśa	Svatantra	?
Nandinyā Nādinī[B]	Bindunātha	Śikhā	Ogha	Khecara	Goṣṭhika
Manthānā	Anādi	Mitra	Mekhala	Ājñā	Mekhala
Bhairava (Pheruka) Herukā	Śukra	Hṛdaya	Kanyasa	Vyāpaka	Kanyasa
Samayākṣī Kṣuradhārā Bhāṣā[B]*	Ajātānanda	Kumāra	Tejasa	Kandarpa	Tejasa
Jhambhalā (Jṛmbha) Samayākṣī[A]	Rakta	Krodha	Vidyā	Garbha	Vidyā
Kālasaṁkarṣaṇī[1] Kālakarṣī	Krīḍānātha	Megha	Śaṅkha	Kumāra	Śaṅkha
Caṇḍanirṇaya Kujā[A] Cañcalā[B] Caṇḍikā	Āśānanda	Khecara	Vīra	Krodha	Vīradeva
Aghorā *Aghoreśvarī	Oghanātha	Kiraṇa	Pūrṇa	Kiraṇa	Pūrṇa

[1] This name appears as an alternative to Kālakarṣī in YKh (1) 36/22. See notes to the edition of the KuKh 57/21cd.

44. Table of the Four Kinds of Divine Current

Energy	Male Consorts KuKh	Āṇava	Śākta	Śāmbhava	Nirīha
Trailokyā Maheśvarī[A]	Rasānanda	Cakreśa	Kalakala	Amṛta	Kālkoka
Vinaya Ekavīrā[1] Vimalā	Dhvaja	Madatrika	Manmatha	Cit	Manmatha
Kamalā Karaṅkiṇī	Jvālādeva	Kubja	Bhāsura	Caryā	Bhāsura
Carcikā	Nagna	Caryā	Mūla	Kubja	Mūla
Śrīnātha Ājñāvalī[2]	Kubjānanda	Ciñciṇī	Amṛta	Ciñciṇī	Amṛta

[1] YKh (1) 36/73d = Ekavīra

[2] The last member of this series is usually said to be Śrīnātha, while the rest are all female. The Ṭīkā partly resolves this anomaly by listing the eighteenth member as Ājñāvalī Ambā, in the Śākta sequence, where she is expressly said to be also called Śrīnātha (śrīnāthābhidhānā śrī-ājñāvalī ambā MS K fl. 88b). She is Ājñābālā Ambā in the Śāmbhava sequence and Cakradevyājñāvalī in the Āṇava.

We may conveniently compare the presentation in the ŚM here. The eighteen members of the Divine Current are listed in a few lines that are common to the passage in chapter two of the KuKh.[1] They appear again in a series of mantras that invoke the Siddhas along with their consorts.[2] In the following table the first entries in the second column are the names of the Siddhas mentioned in the mantras. The second entries are the form in which they appear in the verses. No consorts are mentioned in the verses. The names of the consorts in the right hand column are those that appear in the mantras. They usually end with ambā and sometimes ambādevī. The first column records the name of the Age they are supposed to have exerted their authority.

45. Table of the Divine Current according to the Śrīmatottara

Age of Jurisdiction	Siddha	Consort
Kali	Unmana /Unmanī	Unmanī
Dvāpara	Manonmana /Manonmanī	Mālinī
Tretā	Vana (Kh: Vadana)/ Parāvyāpti	Parakalā
Kṛta	Vyāpaka / Vyāpinyā	Vyāpinī
Akhaṇḍa	Avyakta	Nibodhinī (Kh: Nirodhinī)
Kāla	Nāda / Nādinyā	Nādinī
Mandārka	Manthāna	Madanāvalī
Hema	Heruka / Pherubhairava	Māricī
Amogha	Samaya	Śavarī
Pavana	Jambhava / Jambhala	Varuṇā
Varāha	Kula / Kulāmnāya (Kulāśraya)	Kulamālinī
Piṅgala	Nandibhairava /	Sadākhyā
Ananta	Aghora	Aghoreśvarī
Amara	Trailokya / Tripureśa	Nādinī[3]
Dhūmra	Amareśvara / Amā	Vyāpinī
Timira	Kamala / Kamalā	Parādevī
Tamāndha	Śrīnātha	Samanā
Andha	Ghūrma	Unmanī

[1] KuKh 2/21cd-25 = ŚM 23/46-50ab. The variants are compared in the notes to the Sanskrit text there. See also KuKh 35/91cd ff. and notes.
[2] Each mantra begins with the Five Praṇavas. This is followed by the name of the Age in which the Siddha and consort wielded authority suffixed by 'adhikāre' in the locative. Then comes Navātman and the name of the Siddha prefixed by 'śrī-' and ending with '-ānandadeva'. This is followed by the syllable KHPHREṀ and the name of the consort ending with Ambā. Finally come the words 'tayor yugmapādukāṁ pūjayāmi' – 'I worship their pair of sandals'.
[3] This is the reading in YKh (1) 36/64a.

The Gurumaṇḍala according to the Śrīmatottara

Chapter twenty-three of the Śrīmatottara, which is most probably a late addition to the text, is dedicated to the rites centred on the Gurumaṇḍala, first, and then the Krama (kramārcana).[1] The procedure there is explained as follows:

> Fashion a maṇḍala the size of one handspan there in a secluded, beautiful place where there are no people and is out of sight of the uninitiated. One should make the square maṇḍala with cow dung mixed with water (gomayodaka).
>
> In the center of it make a maṇḍala, round like the solar disc, with liquor, sandalwood and saffron consecrated (mantrita) with the Five Praṇavas. O beloved, having placed the right hand (there) with the root mantra and having established (it) in conjunction (with the Samayā Vidyā), rotate the clenched fist in an anti-clockwise direction. (The Point which is) the Unbroken Maṇḍala is in the middle (where) the thumb is.[2]
>
> Fashion three girdles in union (yoga) with the three gestures and, having uttered the Five Praṇavas, (place) five flowers in the middle of (the maṇḍala). Then, having removed (sumuddhṛtya) one's hand and washed (the maṇḍala) with auspicious water, one should draw (the syllable AIṀ, which is) the energy Kaulīśī, facing downwards, within the triangle.
>
> Outside that (triangle) fashion a group of six (that is, a hexagram) adorned with the three girdles. Then, having placed a Hero's Vessel (vīrapātra) (there, it should be) filled with spirituous substances (alidravya), sandalwood (of various types) lac, or brown sugar, according to one's means. O fair lady, a fish or the like, consecrated with the Five Praṇavas, (should be placed in the vessel) with them. O beloved, one should then deposit the six limbs of the body (of the Vidyā) in the middle of the vessel, having enveloped it with the Armour by means of the left index finger and protected it with the Weapon (in the way) I am about to explain to you.[3] Then, having deposited the Kula

[1] The Krama rite is presented in appendices 8 and 9 of vol. 6 of the notes of the edition and translation.

[2] muṣṭimaṅguṣṭhamadhye tu akhaṇḍam iti maṇḍalaṁ.

[3] The mantra of the Armour used to envelop the sacrificial vessel is:

AIṀ 5 ṄA ÑA ṆA NA ME AGHORĀMUKHI BAHURŪPĀYAI KAVACĀYA HŪṀ |

The mantra of the Weapon used to protect it is:

Vidyā encapsulated with the Five Praṇavas, deposit the Kulavidyā[1] in the middle of the vessel.[2]

The Purification of the Elements

O goddess, one should then prepare the inner (mental) organ. Having exhaled the breath and then drawn it in again into one's own body, retain it. Having entered the Root Wheel, (the breath) should be checked below and above. (The energy in the body), whose form is (like a) a sleeping snake and shape (round like) an earring, awakes and moves quickly, following the path of the Channel of Brahmā (brahmānāḍī). She moves by the Path of Brahmā as she pierces through the body progressively (liṅgabhedakrameṇa) and penetrates into the Supreme Place, that is, the supreme limit (parāntika), at the end of the Transmental. (There the adept experiences) the oneness of Śiva and Śakti, that is, the churning that is like wonder. The one who has entered within the Circle of Principles by means of the union (yoga) of the churner and the churned (mathyamanthānayogena) neither hears, sees or exhales at any time.

He should bring (Kuṇḍalinī) back again into the middle of the heart by (following) that same path. (Then) he should expand it out by means of the upper channel. (In this way the process of) purification takes place in the middle of (the Yoni), the Secret Place (guhya). He should check the inhaled (apāna) and exhaled breath (prāṇa) there. (Kuṇḍalinī) straightens by checking (the two breath) and enters the Circle of the Moon. (Then) the Supreme Energy (kalā), whose form is (subtle and straight) like a spider's thread, rains down (nectar).

Thus, one should recollect that the Self is flooded with the drops (of that energy), blazing with rays (of power). (One should recollect) that it is sprinkled with that Nectar of Yoga. O beloved, he should meditate on the dawning Sun within the vessel and, in the middle (of it), the rising Moon.

AIṀ 5 KIṆI KIṆI VICCE KOṀKAṆĀYAI ASTRĀYA PHAṬ ǀ

[1] According to the notes in the margins of MSs Kh and G of the ŚM, the Kula Vidyā is:

AIṀ 5 HSAUṀ [G: SHĀṀ] GUHYAKUBJIKE PHREṀ BHĪMABHĪṢAṆE HRĪṀ MĀTAṄGINI KIṆI KIṆI KULAVIDYEŚVARĪYE HRĪṀ HRŪṀ PHREṀ PHAṬ SHAUṀ [KH: SHOṀ] PĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI HSAUṀ 5 ǀ

[2] ŚM 23/6-15.

O goddess, in the middle of that he should contemplate the triangle, which is the Circle of Fire. Again, (he should contemplate how) the Self abides in the midst of Fire. He should think that (it has) the form of an atom. Recollecting that his own Bhairava nature is like red mercury and (its) energy enflammed, radiating light, he should begin the sacrifice.

The divine Transmental (energy) in the form of a Point (bindurūpā) is in the Supreme Sky. The wise man should sport with her. The knower of Yoga should do so for just a moment (truṭimātra). O fair lady! Engaged in that, he is not stained by Dharma or Adharma and he burns away all the sins committed in seven lifetimes.

In this way, O goddess, he should purify the elements (bhūtaśuddhi). Once the elements have been purified, (the adept is) purified. Then he should commence the sacrifice. He who performs the rite of adoration with the elements (in an) impure (state) does not obtain its fruit and his worship of the Krama is useless. Therefore, he should make every effort to purify the elements.[1]

The Worship of the Teachers in the Nine Lotuses

Once the adept has drawn the Gurumaṇḍala and purified himself in this way, he is ready to worship the teachers projected into it. Naturally, he begins with the worship of the First Teacher in the centre. This is Navātman in its nine forms worshipped in nine maṇḍalas. As the ŚM says:

O fair lady, the teacher (HSKṢMLVRYŪṂ) consists of nine and he is divided into nine states of being. O goddess, one should worship the Gurumaṇḍala again five times.[2] He who does not have a Gurumaṇḍala should make one. One should not converse with (one who does not fashion and worship the Gurumaṇḍala) and one should avoid his company. If one does so the Command is taken away (from him) and he should perform penance. By repeating (the Vidyā) 100,000, (he is) purified and the Command operates (once again). Thus, one should make every effort to know the Gurumaṇḍala.[3]

---

[1] Ibid. 23/16-30.
[2] It is worshipped again five time in the lotus in the centre of the maṇḍala where the five forms of Śrīnātha are worshipped with five handfuls of flowers.
[3] ŚM 23/31cd-34.

This is the worship of the external *maṇḍala*s. Śrīnātha is worshipped in the centre with five handfuls of flowers,[1] one for each of the Five Siddhas (also called Nāthas) who are his forms.[2] The following table records their names, those of their consorts and their maṇḍala.[3]

46. Table of the Five Siddhas

Maṇḍala	Teacher	Consort
Ananta	Śrīkaṇṭha	Raktā
Amala	Śaṅkara	Caṇḍā
Akula	Ananta	Śrīkaṇṭhā
Akṣaya	Sādākhya	Ucchuṣmā
Akhaṇḍa	Piṅgala	Mātaṅginī

The Siddha Teachers

After the First Teacher has been worshipped in all his aspects and forms in the middle of the maṇḍala, the Siddhas of the three currents of teachers are worshipped next. These are 1) the three Siddhas of the Divyaugha, 2) the six Siddhas of the Gurvogha of the Lineage of the Eldest, 3) the three Siddhas of the Gurvogha of the Middle Lineage and 4) the four Siddhas of the Gurvogha of the Lineage of the Child.[4] These can be tabulated as follows.

---

[1] This line is appears also in KuKh 48/16ab. There the preceding line enjoins that 'The lord of seed-syllables, the ninth, should be placed below the two hands'. This corresponds to the Navātman in the middle.

[2] The ŚM says here: (There are five teachers, namely) Śrīkaṇṭha, Śaṅkara, Ananta, Sādākhya and Piṅgala. Śrīkaṇṭha is the upper face. Śaṅkara is said to be Sadyojāta. Ananta is said to be Vāmadeva and Sādākhya, Tatpuruṣa. Again, Piṅgala is Ghora. (Such is) Sadāśiva with five faces. I have explained them in the Siddhānta and in the form of Siddhas in the Kula tradition. ŚM 23/43-45ab.

[3] The structure of the mantras invoking the Five Siddhas is similar to those of the previous set. They begin with 1) the Five Praṇavas and Navātman, followed by 2) the name of the maṇḍala, and 3) the name of the teacher prefixed by 'śrīguru ājñā HSKHPHREṀ. 4) Then comes the syllable KHPHREṀ, 5) the name of the consort prefixed by 'śrī' and suffixed with 'kubjikāmbādevī' and ending with tayor yugmapādukāṁ pūjayāmi. Thus, for example, the first mantra is:

AIṀ 5 HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ ŚRĪ ANANTAMAṆḌALĀDHIKĀRE ŚRĪGURU ĀJÑĀ HSKHPHREṀ ŚRĪŚRĪKAṆṬHANĀTHA KHPHREṀ ŚRĪRAKTĀKUBJIKĀMBĀDEVĪ TAYOR YUGMAPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI |

[4] All the mantras of these four groups have the same structure. They begin with 1) the Five Praṇavas and Navātman. 2) In the first series the second unit is the name of the maṇḍala related to the mantra. It is prefixed with the honorific 'śrī' and ends with 'adhikāre'. Only the suffix '-adhikāre' occurs in the mantras of the other series. 3) The name of the teacher prefixed by 'śrī'. 4) The syllable KHPHREṀ. 5) The name of the consort is prefixed with 'śrī' and suffixed with

47. The Siddhas of the Divyaugha

Maṇḍala	Siddha	Consort
Amala	Śilāśekhara	Saumyā
Sṛṣṭi	Sṛṣṭi	Anādi
Gagana	Oḍīśa	Olambikā
The Gurvogha of the Lineage of the Eldest Kulakuṇḍala	Kaulīśa	Kula
Khecara	Ciciṇīśa	Parā
Unmana	Tūṣṇīśa	Candrā
Mahāvyoma	Gagana / Kiraṇa	Kiraṇā
Samana	Candragarbha / Garbhamukta	Bālā
Pūrva	Śavara / Mitreśa	Mahaṇā (?)
The Gurvogha of the Middle Lineage
Mahā-ugra	Padma	Ratnāvalī
Mahā-ugratara	Ugratara	Vimalā
Mahādurga	Vedha	Sundarī
The Gurvogha of the Lineage of Child
Mahābimba	Kamala	Devāmbā
Mahābimba	Vimala	Vimalā
Mahābimba	Jāla-oli / Nakhanakha	Bhuvanā
Mahābimba	Vīra	Vinayā

The Triple Purification (triśuddhi)

Next comes the liturgy of the triple purification (triśuddhikrama). This is the worship of the three Siddhas who, out of the Nine Siddhas, founded the three

---

'kubjikāmbādevī'. 6) The mantra ends with 'tayor yugmapādukāṁ pūjayāmi' - 'I worship their sandals'. Thus, for example, the first mantra is:

AIṀ 5 HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ ŚRĪ AMALAMAṆḌALĀDHIKĀRE HSKHPHREṀ ŚRĪŚILĀŚEKHARANĀTHA KHPHREṀ ŚRĪSAUMYĀKUBJIKĀMBĀDEVĪ TAYOR YUGMAPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI

The last mantra in the first series ends with Navātman followed by the Five Praṇavas in the reverse order. Perhaps these should be added to all the mantras.

lineages. The mantras praise them and their consorts. They mention their birth place, father's name, caste and alias.[1] These details can be tabulated as follows:

48. Table of the Three Siddhas of the Triple Purification

Original name	Trivikrama	Vikramāditya	Mahīpāla
Birth place	Puṇḍravardhana	Bhogapura	Kanyākubja
Caste	Brahmin (Sāmavedin)	Brahmin	Brahmin (Ṛgvedin)
Father's name	Vikrama	Vāli	Soma
Name of fame	Loka	Parama	Anaṅga
Secret name	Sūrya	Laṅkeśa	Vajra
Pūjā name	Kiraṇa	Ratna	Māṇikya
Public name	Gagana	Parama (i.e. Padma)	Kamala
Consort	Kiraṇā	Hīrāvalī	Kaṇṭhābharaṇa

The Convention of the Eighteen Flowers.

The eighteen Siddhas of the Divine Current are worshipped next. See above for details.[2]

The Nine Nāthas

The Nine Nāthas are worshipped next. Their mantras invoke them with two names, along with their consorts.[3]

---

[1] The following are invoked in the mantras. 1) The birth place prefixed with 'śrī-' and ending with 'mahāsthāne' in the locative. 2) The caste of the Siddha beginning with the diction 'janmajāti-'. 3) The father's name. 4) The original name. 5) The name of fame (prasiddha). 6) The secret name. 7) The pūjā name. 8) The public name (prakaṭanāma). The last four names are prefixed with 'śrī-' and end with '-ānandadeva'. 9) The name of the consort prefixed with 'śrī-' and ending with '-ambādevī'. 10) The words 'tayor yugmapādukāṁ pūjayāmi' – 'I worship the sandals of the couple'.

[2] See above, p. 581 ff..

[3] 1) Each mantra begins with the Five Praṇavas. 2) The seed-syllable HSKHPHREṀ. 3) The name of the Siddha prefixed with 'śrī-' and suffixed with '-ānandadeva'. 4) The alias of the Siddha introduced with the words 'dvitīyanāma' – 'second name'. It is prefixed with 'śrī-' and ends with '-ānandadeva'. 5) The name of the consort beginning with 'śrī-' and ending with 'ambā' followed by 'tayor yumapādukāṁ pūjayāmi'. Note one mantra is missing and so only eight out of the nine Nāthas are listed in the table.

AIṀ 5 HSKHPHREṀ ŚRĪGAGANĀNANDADEVA DVITĪYANĀMA ŚRĪ-MĀRTAṆḌĀNANDADEVA KHPHREṀ ŚRĪKIRAṆĀVALĪ AMBĀ TAYOR YUGMAPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI |

49. Table of the Nine Nāthas according to the Śrīmatottara

First name of the Nātha	Second name of the Nātha	Consort
Gagana	Mārtaṇḍa	Kiraṇāvalī
Kumuda	Bhairava	Ratnā
Padma	Pippilin	Hīrāvalī
Bhairava	Goṣṭhīśa	Gautamī
Deva	Candana	Muktāvalī
Kamala	Sura	Kaṇṭhāvalī
Śiva	Mātaṅgīśa	Vīrāvalī
Sulocana	Mālatīśa	Tantalī[1]

The Sixteen Nāthas

The worship of the Sixteen Siddhas follows naturally after that of the Nine Nāthas. Their names and those of their consorts mentioned in their mantras are tabulated below.

50. Table of the Sixteen Siddhas according to the Śrīmatottara

Nātha	Consort
Candra	Candrā
Gulma	Kumārī
Stambha	Vīrā
Karpāsa	Bālā
Vaṭapura	Bhānumatī
Vīrya	Bījā
Payasāṅka	Parvāvalī
Bhogapura	Bhoginī
Kauśala	Kośalā
Vimala	Vimalā
Khaḍga	Khaḍgāvalī
Rudra	Rudreśvarī[2]
Vara	Dhātrī
Vaṅgāla	Vaṅkeśvarī
Vaṅkāpura	Pureśvarī
Caryā	Carcikā

This completes the worship of the Circle of Teachers according to the ŚM. After this the ŚM goes on to describe the Worship of the Krama (kramārcana).

[1] Variant: Ḍhaṇḍhalī, [2] Variant : Prāṇeśvarī.

The

Manthānabhairavatantra

origin, structure and development

Volume Three

of the Introduction

to the

Edition and Translation of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa of the

Manthānabhairavatantra

CONTENTS OF VOLUME THREE OF THE INTRODUCTION

Tables

Chapter Seven

The Manthānabhairavatantra, origin, structure and development

The Kubjikā scriptural corpus can be divided into two principle categories, which we may refer to as the main and the subsidiary Kubjikā Tantras. The main Kubjikā Tantras are a part of what is called the 'root tradition' (mūlānvaya). The scriptures of the root tradition are the KMT and its expansions, the ŚM and the ṢSS. Another branch is represented by the MBT and two other scriptures that present themselves more or less implicitly as versions of it, namely, the Ambāmatasaṁhitā and the Kulakaulinīmata. The remaining scriptures are all closely related to this primary corpus and consider their teachings to be variously derived from it, but do not claim to be directly descended from the original scripture revealed by the goddess in the systematic way the others do. These include the Kularatnoddyota, the two *Śrīmatasāra*s, the Siddhapañcāśikā, and the Kularatnapañcakāvatāra.

The main Kubjikā Tantras are technically called Matas, a title that is generally included in one of their names. Thus the MBT is also called the Śrīmata and Vakrikāmata. The Ambāmatasaṁhitā is also called just Ambāmata and it would be more accurate to call the KMT just Kubjikāmata. It may also be called, like the MBT, Śrīmata. Accordingly, its expansion is called the Śrīmatottara. In one instance, at least, we find the name Ṣaṭsāhasramata for the SSS.[1]

Both Word and Scripture, this Mata is that of the goddess Kubjikā and takes its names from her names. Apart from Kubjikā,[2] her scripture is variously named after her - Kubjinī[3] - the Hunchback Girl, Kubjī,[4] Kujā, Kujī, Khañjinī - the Lame One, Vakrikā or Vakrā - the Crooked One, Ciñcinī[5]- the Goddess of the

---

[1] ṢSS 45/77, quoted below.

[2] The Kubjikāmata refers to itself by this name in the colophons and in KMT 10/39d, 6/29b, app. 4/13b, 25.

[3] The KMT refers to itself as the Kubjinīmata in KMT 20/57d, 79d, 25/206b.

[4] The KMT refers to itself as the Kubjīmata in KMT 19/87a.

[5] Kubjikā is frequently called Ciñcinī – the goddess of the tamarind (ciñcā) in the MBT and her later Tantras although this name is unknown to the KMT. Morever, Kubjikā's scripture is referred to once as the Ciñcinīmata in the following place:

Thus she is the agent and, omniscient, is the energy Śāmbhavī that emanates the cosmic form and is well known in the Ciñcinīmata.

tasmāt sā [k, g, gh: tasyāmana] kartṛrūpā [k, g, gh, ṅ: -rūpaṁ] tu sarvajñā śāmbhavī [k, g, gh, ṅ: -vā] kalā [k, g, gh, ṅ: kulā] |

sṛjate viśvarūpaṁ [g: -rūpama] hi vikhyātā [k, gh, ṅ: vichetā; g: vicchentā] ciñciṇīmate ||

YKh (1) 35/6.

Tamarind, Kulālikā[1] - the Potteress, Ambā or the vernacular form Avvā, and Anāmā,[2] Laghvikā[3] and, most common of all, Śrī - the Royal One who has as her scripture, teaching, school[4] and tradition (anvaya, āmnāya) the Śrīmata. Otherwise known as the Kubjinīmata, Kujāmata, Kujīmata,[5] Khañjinīmata, Vakrikāmata, Ciñcinīmata, Anāmamata and Kulālikāmata[6] and their homonyms, it is more commonly called Paścimāmnāya.[7] Concerned as it is primarily with the worship of the goddess, the MBT is appropriately referred to as the Mother's book (avvāpustaka).[8] As her scripture - Mata - it is the Avvāmata - the Mata of the Mother. This Mata is the King of Matas - Matarāja,[9] the Mata of the Goddess who is her devotee's guide and leader (svaminī). Identified with the MBT it is, as the long colophons at the end of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa proclaim, 'the venerable scripture of twenty-four thousand (verses) (caturviṁśatsahasrasaṁhitā) (known as) the Svāminīmata of the Supreme Lord's command as uttered within the Tradition of the Mother (avvākrama)'.

This name, rare elsewhere, is common in the Ciñcinīmatasārasamuccaya. The following are three of several references:

This is the Essence of the Ciñcinīmata, the supreme plane of the Divine Current.
*ciñcinīmatasāro 'yaṁ divyaughaparamaṁ [*all MSs: divyogha-] padam || CMSS 1/22cd.

The secret Mata which is beyond (all other) Matas is the excellent venerable Śrīciñcinīmata.
mataṁ matottaraṁ [k, kh, g, gh, ṅ: matantaraṁ; c: metantaraṁ] guptaṁ śrīciñcinīmatam uttamam || ibid. 2/2cd.

O god, I have heard the most excellent of the best Matas. By your grace I have heard this Essence of the Ciñcinīmata.
śrutaṁ deva mayā sarvaṁ matānām uttamottamam |
ciñcinīmatasāro 'yaṁ tvatprasādāt mayā śrutam || ibid. 11/18.

[1] KuKh 68/120-122. The KMT refers to itself as the Kulālikāmnāya in the colophons and in KMT 17/59a and as Kulālītantra in KMT 10/32d.

[2] This is a collection of the essence (of the teaching), the excellent teaching of the goddess with no name (anāmāmata) whose (name) should not be uttered. If (one does) utter it (by mistake in public), he should repeat (the goddess's Vidyā) a hundred million times.

sārasaṁgraham etad dhi anāmamatam uttamam ||
yasyoccāraṁ na kartavyam uccārād ayutaṁ japet | ṢSS 50/87.

[3] Concerning this name of the goddess see below p. 315 ff.. The KMT is called Laghvikāmata in a variant of the colophon of chapter 15 and Laghvikāmnāya as a variant of Kulālikāmnāya in the colophons of chapters 9, 10, 13, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 23, and 25.

[4] KuKh 4/5cd-6ab.

[5] KMT 18/114.

[6] Also called Kulālītantra in KMT 10/20-39.

[7] KuKh 4/8-10ab.

[8] One should worship the Siddhakhaṇḍa in the middle of the Mother's Book (avvāpustaka).
*avvāpustakamadhye [kh: avvāpusta * madhe] tu siddhakhaṇḍaṁ prapūjayet* | YKh (2) 29/36ab. Quoted below in full below on p. 98-99.

[9] KuKh 30/2cd-3, 11.

The Mata and Matas

The common meaning of the word 'mata' is 'point of view', 'doctrine', 'teaching' or by extension 'school of thought'. In a technical sense, the word conveys a number of other related meanings. A Mata is a type of Tantra. In one place in the JY the deity declares that he has heard many very secret Tantras and Matas.[1] This does not mean that Matas are not Tantras. Tantras may also be called by other names. *Saṁhitā*s or āgamas may be Tantras, in the broad sense of the term. Types of Tantras may also be given more specific names like 'kalpa'. The terminology is not always consistent. The Siddhayogeśvarīmata, for example is also sometimes called Siddhayogeśvarītantra. There may also be overlapping between the specific and the generic terms. The Brahmayāmala, for example, is a type of Tantra called 'yāmala'. However, it is also commonly called Picumata and occasionally even Picutantra.[2]

The canon of the Śrīkaṇṭhīyasaṁhitā, accepted as authoritative by Kashmiri Śaivites, like those of several other Bhairava Tantras, including the JY, classify the Bhairava Tantras into eight groups of eight Tantras. In this ideal scheme there are said to be eight Mata Tantras.[3] In one place the KuKh lists sixteen Mata Tantras.[4] A good number of the names that appear in such lists of Tantras are imaginary. However, those that do exist and are specifically termed Mata Tantras are all centred on the worship of goddesses. For example, Abhinava refers to the SYM as the 'great scripture of the Mata' (matamahāśāstra).[5] The

---

[1] śrutāni bahutantrāṇi mahāguptatarāṇi [kh: -tavāṇi] ca |
nistriṁśāni matāny eva vikalpakṣīṇavṛttayaḥ || JY 4/20/30.

[2] siddhayogeśvarītantraṁ trikasārottaraṁ tathā ||
picutantraṁ mahāraudraṁ vimalocchuṣmasañjñitam | JY 3/24/34cd-35ab.

[3] See Dyczkowski 1989: 45, 47-48, 110 and 115. The eight Mata Tantras are listed in the JY as follows. Note the reference also to 'Upamatas' - 'secondary Matas':

matāṣṭakaṁ śṛṇu ataḥ sadāśivaparigraham |
raktādyaṁ peṭikādyañ ca bhāruṇḍīmatam eva ca ||
mahāmataṁ (hahlāmataṁ ?) caturthan tu pañcamaṁ piṅgalāmatam |
nīlakeśīmataṁ ṣaṣṭhaṁ saptamaṁ śamvarāmatam ||
utphullam aṣṭamaṁ proktaṁ saptasrotovilakṣitam |
śatāṣṭakaṁ hy upamataṁ pariśiṣṭaiś ca saṁyutam || JY 1/44/7-9.

Out of these Tantras we know of the existence of the Piṅgalāmata, manuscripts of which have been preserved in Nepal. Abhinava refers to the Utphullakamata in TĀ 29/166ab. The Buddhist Saṁvaratantra, also called Cakrasaṁvara is well known. Sanderson notes that Buddhist Tantras sometimes adopt their names from Śaiva ones. However, this and the remaining names may well be purely imaginary.

[4] See KuKh 68/27-32ab.

[5] TĀ 26/74.

deity of this Mata Tantra is Siddhayogeśvarī whose three aspects or forms are the goddesses Parā, Parāparā and Aparā. Siddhalakṣmī, a form of Kālī, is the main (samayā) goddess of the Kālasaṁkarṣaṇīmata.[1] Similarly, although the Picumata is concerned with the worship of Bhairava, it focuses on his consort Caṇḍākāpālinī and the Yoginīs associated with her. Subsequently, in the JY she figures as Matacakreśvarī - the Mistress of the Assembly of the Mata - a form of Kālī identified with Caṇḍikāpālī. She is 'mounted on the Mata' (matārūḍhā) and becomes manifest in and through the levels of Speech.[2] In this context, the term 'mata' is similar to 'kula' in the sense that it denotes a type of Tantric teaching or tradition which is a part of a Bhairava Tantra. Thus for example we find, a Yakṣiṇīmata in the JY.[3]

The third ṣaṭka of the JY contains more concerning Mata than the other three ṣaṭkas. Chapters 11-14 are dedicated to the Vidyā and related practices (vidhāna) of Matacakreśvarī one of the Mata goddesses of the JY.[4] 'Matas', i.e. 'teachings',[5] are dedicated to goddesses in the JY. For example, the Mahālakṣmīmata[6] is dedicated to Mahālakṣmī who is worshipped in association

---

[1] Sanderson 1986:163.

[2] The goddess Matacakreśvarī wears the garland (of her) thousand syllable (Vidyā). She is the goddess of the Mata and, mounted on the Mata, is Kālikā (called) Caṇḍikāpālī. She is manifest fourfold according to the (fourfold) division of Speech in association with the liturgy (krama).

matacakreśvarī [kh: manaśukreśvarī] devī sahasrākṣaramālikā [g: -tā; gh: -mālinī] | [. . .]
mateśvarī matārūḍhā [g: -manā-] caṇḍikāpālikālikā ||
caturdhā vāgvibhedena vyaktā sā kramayogataḥ | JY 3/11/2ab, 15cd-16ab.

[3] O (goddess) to whom the Lords of Heroes bow, listen to this astonishing secret the excellent teaching concerning the Yakṣiṇīs, the essence that bestows every accomplishment.

śṛṇu vīrendranamite rahasyam idam adbhutam ||
sarvasiddhipradaṁ sāraṁ yakṣiṇīmatam uttamam | JY 2/64.

[4] According to Sanderson (1988: 683-684) there are three main Mata goddesses of the Kaula Mata of the JY. These are Matacakreśvarī, along with Trailokyaḍāmarā and Mahālakṣmī (Ghoraghoratarā). They came to be worshipped as the three faces of Guhyakālī.

[5] An example of this usage is: (The god) with a divine form uttered this teaching (mata) concerning Mahālakṣmī.
mahālakṣmīmatam idaṁ bhāṣitaṁ divyarūpiṇā || JY 4/65/37cd.

[6] Now I wish to hear the auspicious Mahālakṣmīmata, the knowledge of the Vow of Generation accompanied by (Tantric) practice (caryā) and mantra (I wish to know) the Mudrā, maṇḍala and rite of adoration of (her) practicioners according to (their) karma.

adhunā śrotum icchāmi mahālakṣmīmataṁ śubham |
utpattivratavijñāna caryāmantrasamāyutam ||
sādhakānāṁ yathā karma mudrāmaṇḍalapūjanam | JY 4/60/6-7ab.

This chapter of the JY is a part of the section (cakra) concerned with the Mahālakṣmīmata. The colophon reads:

with Kālī.[1] There is the Kuṇḍaleśīmata dedicated to Kuṇḍalinī who, identified with Kālikā, is Piṇḍeśī, the Mistress of the (Mantric) Body.[2] The JY enjoins that such 'matas' should only be given to those who are dedicated to the Devī Tantras[3] i.e. the Goddess.[4] Some of these '*mata*s' became extensive enough to have entire Tantras dedicated to them. One is the Kālasaṁkarṣiṇīmata, mentioned above, a teaching – mata - which is also a part of the JY.[5]

According to the Niśācāratantra, in a more extended sense, Mata forms a part of a series of progressively more 'evolved' groups of Tantras and doctrines that culminate in the Trika Śaivism taught in the Niśācāra.[6] In this context Mata

---

iti jayadrathayāmale caturviṁśatisāhasre caturthaṣaṭke mahālakṣmīmatacakre devyutpattimaṁtroddhārapaṭalaḥ [k: devyotpattimaccho-; g: devyopatti-] || 60 ||

[1] The primary form of Kālī worshipped in the JY is Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī but Lakṣmī (particularly as Mahālakṣmī and Viśvalakṣmī) is also prominent. Chapter 21 of the first ṣaṭka of the JY deals extensively with the worship of Lakṣmī in the context of Kālī worship. There we read:

In order to gain wealth (and royal power) (lakṣmī) one should worship Lakṣmī in the middle of Lakṣmī's maṇḍala surrounded by the aggregate of Kālī's energies.

lakṣmyarthaṁ pūjayel lakṣmīṁ lakṣmīmaṇḍalamadhyagām ||
kālīkalākalāpena samantāt parivāritām | JY 1/21/7cd-8ab.

Then follows a description of how to draw the Lakṣmīmaṇḍala. The seventeen syllable mantra of Kālasaṁkarṣaṇī is projected into it. The goddesses in the maṇḍala all wear Lakṣmī's clothes.

[2] evaṁ kuṇḍalacakreśī piṇḍeśī [gh: piṁdeśī] kālikā smṛtā | JY 3/15/29ab.

[3] One should not give the Kuṇḍaleśīmata to those who are not devotees. O fair lady, here, it should be given those who are devoted to the Devī Tantras.

kuṇḍaleśīmataṁ nāma [gh: manantā?ma] nābhaktāya pradāpayet ||
devītantraratānāṁ [g: devi-] ca dātavyam [k, kh, gh: -vyām] iha sundari | JY 3/15/265cd-266ab.

[4] A 'Devī Tantra' is mentioned in the KMT which says that Kubjikā's Vidyā is found there. This is not the name of a text, but rather of a type of Tantra. This is clear as Bhairava goes on to say that he has taught the same Vidyā in each Tantra (tantre tantre) many times. See KMT 7/1-10.

[5] Then, O Supreme Goddess, I gave him a boon because he asked me for the teachings - mata - concerning Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī.

tadāhaṁ varadas tasya saṁsthitaḥ parameśvari |
prārthito 'haṁ [k: prāthi-] tatas tena kālasaṅkarṣaṇīmatam [k: kala-] || JY 2/49/12.

[6] The series is: Veda > Śaiva (i.e. Siddhānta) > Vāma (Bhairava Tantras of the left) > Dakṣa (Bhairava Tantras of the right) > Mata > Kula > Kaula > Trika.

vedāc chaivaṁ tato vāmaṁ tato dakṣaṁ tato matam |
tataḥ kulaṁ tataḥ kaulaṁ trikaṁ sarvottamaṁ param || Niśācāra quoted in the comm. on TĀ 13/300cd-301 and in PTv p. 92.

Abhinava (TĀ 13/300cd-301) explains the transition from one type to the other of the Tantras as consonant with progressively more intense forms of grace (śaktipāta).

follows after the Siddhāntāgamas, those of the Left and the Bhairavatantras of the Right, but precedes the two forms of Kaula cults, namely, Kula and Kaula beyond which comes Trika. Sanderson is of the opinion that in this sense Mata denotes the Kālī cults of the Kālīkrama, embedded in the root Tantra of this school, namely, the JY. The JY is, therefore, according to this view, the most representative Tantra of the Mata Tantras.[1]

Be that as it may, in relation to the Kālīkrama and the Trika, the term 'mata' is used in the Kubjikā Tantras with reference to themselves as the special custodian of the Divine Current of the Kaula scriptures. Perhaps with the intention of distinguishing it from the earlier Matas, this one is called 'Matāntara'.[2] Indeed, the term 'mata' has, like the more common term 'kula', a range of applications many of which overlap. The 'assembly' (cakra) of a Mata make a family - Kula. Sometimes, 'Mata' like 'Kula' may denote a kind of scripture not just a school or a teaching or group of deities, just as 'Kula' may also mean the actual scripture, not just the teaching in abstract or a particular Kula school.[3] Matas and Kulas are

---

Kula, at least according to the Kubjikā sources, is the form of non-sectarian Kaulism founded by Matsyendranātha. Kaula stands instead for those forms of Kaulism centred on a particular goddess.

[1] See Padoux 1994: 38-39. Sanderson writes (1988: 682): 'The Kaula Mata is rooted in the tradition of the Jayadrathayāmala.'

[2] The Mata (in this case) is the secret Matāntara, the excellent and venerable Ciñcinīmata.

mataṁ matāntaraṁ [k gh: matantaraṁ; g: metantaraṁ] guptaṁ śrīciñcinīmatam uttamam ||
CMSS 2/2cd.

[3] The Kālīkula (quoted in TĀ 28/15, 29/43 and 35/33), the Niśākula (quoted in TĀ 13/126) and Mādhavakula, which is the fourth ṣaṭka of the JY, are examples. The following are examples of this usage:

The matrix (mātṛkā) of the letters is said to be the fire-stick of mantras and she should be known to be the energy Kuṇḍalinī, the supreme power. Then (from that are) born mantras, Kulas, and Tantras, each separately. O mistress of the God of the gods, I have praised them before properly in the previous extensive ṣaṭka.

varṇānāṁ [g: veśināṁ] mātrikā yā sā sā ca mantrāraṇiḥ [k, g: -raṇi] smṛtā [g: -tiḥ] ||
sā ca kuṇḍalinī śaktiḥ sā jñeyā [g: kriyā] paramā kalā |
tato mantrāṇi jātāni kulāni ca pṛthak pṛthak ||
tantrāṇi devadeveśi tāni samyak purā mayā [g: mayā purā] |
kīrtitāni sureśāni pūrvaṣaṭke [k: -ṣaṭka] suvistare [k, kh, g: -raṁ] || JY 3/24/26cd-28cd.

In chapter forty-two of the second ṣaṭka of the JY the deity begins by saying that she has heard many *śāstra*s and goes on to list a series of names mostly ending in 'kula' and concludes that 'similarly there are other Tantras':

pūrvaṁ [k: pūrva] śrutāni [k: śrutyāni; kh: śrutvāni] śāstrāṇi bahuni paramāṇi ca |

closely related in contents and form. The same goddess teaches both. Historically and morphologically, they develop together and both are rooted in the earlier more Bhairava centred Kāpālika practice.[1] So once the god has imparted the teaching to the goddess he says to her in the JY:

> Today I have revealed the Kālīkāpālikāmata, the accomplished Kaulika knowledge by means of the union of invariable concomitance, that supreme and pure nectar, the most excellent practice (vidhāna).[2]

But, as the following reference implies from the same source, the difference between a Mata and a Kula is hardly more than in the name:

> One should know the teachings (mata) by means of that Mata and the Mata is a part of the Matakula. The goddess who is the destroyer (of delusion) of the Mata (matasaṁhāriṇī) and utters 'mata', 'mata' and again 'mata' is Mateśvarī by name. The proud (goddess) who utters forth each Kula, and Akula which, merged in Kula, is the Kula of Rāviṇī located in the abode of Kulakaula, should then be known to be Kuleśvarī.[3]

In order to understand better what is meant by Mata in this sense, we must refer to the use of the term in context. Sanderson distinguishes the Mata as one of the major traditions of the early Kaula Kālī cult. Omitting the details that are specific to the Kālī cult, we may refer to the more general features of that Mata concerning which he says:

This Kaulism, like that of the Trika, rests upon a broader base of Tantric practice, but unlike that of the Trika this base is unrestrainedly Kāpālika. The mahāmataṁ [k: -mantra] mahākaulaṁ samatāmohanaṁ param ||

---

siddhasenāpatikulaṁ rāvākhyaṁ kulam uttamam [k: kṣumuttamaḥ] | [. . .]
evam [k, kh: evaṁm] anyāni deveśa tantrāṇy [k, kh: -ny] api samāsataḥ || JY 2/42/7-8ab, 10cd.

[1] This is implied in the reference above in the CMSS to the Kaula Mouth of the Yoginī called Picu. This is the Yoginī of the BY who teaches Kāpālika practice.

[2] siddhakaulikavijñānaṁ tavādya prakaṭīkṛtam | avinābhāvayogena kālikāpālikāmatam ||
amṛtam yat paraṁ śuddhaṁ vidhānaṁ tu hy anuttamam | JY 4/21/165-166ab.

[3] tanmatena mataṁ jñeyaṁ mataṁ matakulāntagam ||
*mataṁ mataṁ mataṁ bhūyo yadā rāvayate [k: rāva * te; g: rāva te] hi sā* |
matasaṁhāriṇī [k, kh: maṁta-] nāmnā tena devī mateśvarī || [g: (?)]
kulaṁ kulaṁ kule līnaṁ akulaṁ rāviṇīkulam |
tat kaulakuladhāmasthaṁ hi [k, kh: vi] rāvayati garviṇī ||
*tadā kuleśvarī jñeyā * * * * * * *  | [g: (?)] JY 4/5/53cd-56a.

most striking feature of this Tantric Mata is the prevalence of deities who have the faces of animals, or who have numerous such faces in addition to a principle anthropomorphic face.[1]

The Kaula Mata of the Kubjikā cult can be said to be a reformed version of the Kaula Mata rooted in the traditions from which the Jayadrathayāmala is drawing. Thereomorphic forms are here limited to the attendants of the main deities. The iconic forms of Bhairava and Kubjikā, although polycephalous, do not have animal heads. The Kāpālika strains marked by the prevalence of nocturnal rites in cremation grounds and a powerful transgressive sacrality have been quietly internalised or relegated to the domain of magical rites. The use of bodily fluids, normally considered impure, as sacrificial offerings has been retained but the practice of ritual intercourse is no longer central to the main body of practice, although not ignored. Domestication and internalisation has led to the development of a rich, extensive and highly complex repertoire of inwardly visualized, and also externally represented, configurations of deities, most of whom are Yoginīs, alone or with their partners. Accordingly, Kubjikā's tradition is also called the Yoginīmata[2] and is understood to be the quintessence of the Kula teachings of all the schools.[3] This goddess's Mata is, moreover, exclusively Kaula and takes pride in being the Great Kula (Mahākula) and so does the MBT.[4] It is the 'Great Kula consisting of three sections'[5] which, as we shall see, is the way the MBT is divided.

The Descent of the Scripture

The KMT and MBT are independent texts. Even so, the mythical accounts of the origin of the Kubjikā scriptures we shall examine in this chapter, consider them to be derived from one another as part of a chain in which the individual versions progressively decrease in size. Thus they are all, in a sense, the same Mata. We notice here a phenomenon that we will observe repeatedly in the passages that follow namely, what could be called replicated denotation. By this I mean that the same name serves to denote each of the texts in the descending series of progressive abridgments that take place in the course of its transmission from master to disciple. This manner of describing the formation of a scripture is

---

[1] Sanderson 1988: 683.

[2] kathayāmi kramārthena [k, gh: kathārthena] durlabhaṁ yoginīmate |
sthānabhedaṁ tathā sarvaṁ yat phalaṁ [k, gh: niḥphalaṁ] kulaśāsane [k, gh: kulasāśane] ||
YKh (1) 10/9.

[3] yoginīmatasāraṁ tu āmnāyaṁ kulaśāsanam | CMSS 7/44ab.

[4] See KuKh 30/39.

[5] KuKh 30/2cd-3, cf. ibid. 57/90-91ab.

a common paradigm we find in Tantras of all traditions. N. R. Bhatt writes about the Āgamas of the Siddhānta:

> [The Āgamas] are said to have been very extensive when they were first revealed and were subsequently taught in a progressively more condensed form because of the gradual degeneration of mankind, lifespan, strength, and faith etc. [. . .] Thus the Suprabhedāgama is said to have contained thirty million *śloka*s when it was initially revealed and there are 4,665 in its present abridged form; the Kiraṇāgama, said to have contained fifty million while there are 1,990 and 1/2 in the one we now possess.[1]

Similarly the original Siddhayogeśvarīmata is said in the beginning of the Mālinīvijayottara to contain 90 million verses. This gave rise to three different lines of transmission. The Path of Yoga is discussed in the original Mālinīvijaya which is said to consist of 30 million verses. Another shorter form consists of 12,000 verses. However, this was also considered to be too long and hard to grasp by people of limited intellect. Thus, the Mālinīvijayottara, 'a summary of this summary' which has survived complete, was revealed as a sequel to the Siddhyayogeśvarīmata.[2] Abhinava summarizes the progressive descent of the SY in nineteen stages starting from Bhairava who transmitted it to Bhairavī and then successively down through a series of gods, divine beings and sages. At each stage of the descent after the gods, the original scripture consisting of 90 million verses decreased by a half until it reached Rāvaṇa and then Rāma who learnt it from Vibhīṣaṇa, Rāvaṇa's brother. Thus a chain of transmission is set up from higher, divine beings, through to sages and ultimately men. The Āgamas classify these into various types of 'relationship' (saṁbandha) ranging from one between deities (divyasaṁbandha) down to one between human beings (adivya). This way of explaining the origin of scriptures is common also to technical treatises in general. Wujastyk (2003: 396) comments on the mythological accounts given in the beginning of medical treatises in which medical knowledge is passed down from the gods to humans through a chain of divine beings and spiritual teachers. He says:

> Accounts of origins cast as historical discourses can be considered as having two dimensions: a horizontal and a vertical, rather as Ferdinand de Saussure divided linguistic study into orthogonal diachronic and synchronic dimensions. The horizontal dimension is that of mundane time: history in this dimension is the narrative of events of past times. The vertical dimension measures closeness to God: the history of this dimension is the account of how the present manifest situation has evolved, or descended, from an original, pristine world of absolute unity. When at the start of a Sanskrit text we are told by the author, as so often happens, that the work once consisted of millions of verses, but was handed [down] from the original omniscient sages to human scholars only in abbreviated form we must understand that we are dealing with vertical history. . . . Such a spiritual narrative is not to be confused or conflated with horizontal history, although the narrative may be cast in the language of past tenses and linear teacher-pupil descent.

[1] Bhat 1964: ii.
[2] MV 1/8cd-12ab.

In the same way the first chapter of the SvT introduces itself as a condensation of a much more extensive 'ur-tantra'.[1] The revelation of this particular text, in an abbreviated form is presented as a particular act of grace. It is not necessary to multiply the examples. The claim is a common one, although there is little reason to doubt that in actual fact Tantric texts, especially very long ones, were built up from smaller originals. The Purāṇas similarly claim original extensive versions which were subsequently condensed,[2] although the more correct assessment of their status as part of a series of augmentations (upabṛmhaṇa) is also well attested. The cardinal example of the degree to which Purāṇas develop through this process is the Skandapurāṇa. The present version runs into 35,000 verses, making it the longest of the Purāṇas. However, a 9th century manuscript recovered in Nepal contains a text that is hardly 5,000 verses long.

In this case, the chain of scriptures is distinguished from the others by its length, measured in numbers of verses. For example, the largest may be, according to some accounts 100 crores (koṭi) or 70. This is the Mata of 100 or 70 crores. The shortest in the descending chain is the published Kubjikāmata to which the texts refer as the Mata of 3,500 verses, which is its actual size. In between is the Mata of 125,000 verses and that of 24,000. The latter is identified with the Manthānabhairavatantra. All these are one Mata, that is, one scripture, one transmission, one teaching transmitted from the deity down through the 'root tradition', first to the Siddhas in the main sacred seats and then along their lineages.

This scripture (śāstra) is the pure doctrine - Mata - which is the knowledge and the Transmission (krama) handed down through the series of teachers (pāramparya).[3] 'Mata' also means 'spiritual knowledge' in the JY. When one knows the one reality within one's own body, in each and every limb then one is

---

[1] Arraj 1988: 9.
[2] Concerning the Purāṇic version of this notion, see Rocher 1986: 46-7.
[3] KuKh 6/188cd-189ab.

established in the Absolute (brahman). This, according to the JY, is Mata knowledge.[1] The Kubjikā Tantras explain this spiritual knowledge in their own way. Referring to itself as the highest (uttara) knowledge hidden in the Śrīmata, the Śrīmatottara, admonishes those who have been granted the grace of initiation to abandon all the other scriptures and Tantras and search for the knowledge that saves from the ocean of transmigration in the Kujāmata. The best of all scriptures (āgama), merely by knowing it, the adept becomes pure and, without fear, 'he wanders over the whole earth, like an elephant of the jungle'.[2]

It is not only the teaching of Kubjikā's Kula. It is the knowledge of all the Kulas. Indeed, it is that one Kula, that is, tradition, from which all the many individual Kulas are ultimately derived and of which they are, therefore, just a part. Through it is transmitted the divine knowledge that is for everybody whatever their condition, be it householder or wandering ascetic, and whatever their tradition:

> Those fools who are devoted to mistaken knowledge and reflect on the meaning of many śāstras (but) are devoid of Kula knowledge do not attain the supreme principle. If they do not know the Śrīmata, they do not know that plane and, O goddess, without the Matottara, their effort to gain knowledge is useless. O goddess, one should abandon all the Tantras like rotten meat, as an old man does sexual desire and one who is full, food. [. . .] The great fools devoid of the Śrīmatottara in the terrible Age of Strife sink in the ocean of transmigration that is hard to cross. Sunk in the ocean of transmigration, how can they cross (it)? Again, O Laghvī, those who have attained knowledge and understand the Śrīmatottara cross over easily. That, O mother, is Mata knowledge.[3]

---

[1] yad vad ekasya tu jñānaṁ svadehe saṁprajāyate |
aṅgapratyaṅgapiṇḍādau [k, kh: -pīḍādau] tad vad brahmaṇi saṁsthitaḥ ||
evaṁ tan matavijñānam ato 'sya samudāhṛtam | JY 1/9/221-222ab.

[2] KuKh 18/16-17ab.

[3] bhrāntijñānaratā [g: bhrāṁnti-] mūḍhā [k: rūḍhā] bahuśāstrārthacintakāḥ ||
na vindanti [k: vidanti] paraṁ tattvaṁ kulajñānavivarjitāḥ [g: kulā-] |
śrīmataṁ [kh g: -mate] ye na jānanti na te jānanti tat padam ||
matottaraṁ vinā devi vṛthā jñānapariśramam |
yathā tṛptas tyajed [k: jattas tyaje-; g: -vipratya-] annaṁ vṛddhaḥ kāmaṁ yathā tyajet ||
tathā sarvāṇi tantrāṇi tyajed [kh: tejed-] devi palalālavat | [. . .]
kalau yuge mahāghore duṣpāre bhavasāgare ||
majjamānā mahāmūḍhāḥ [g: -mūḍhā] śrīmatottaravarjitāḥ |
bhavasāgaramagnāś ca [g: magnasya] kathaṁ pāraṁ taranti te [g: re] ||
ye punar jñānasaṁsiddhāḥ [g: puna- -siddhā] śrīmatottarabodhakāḥ [g: -kā] | taranti līlayā laghvi [g: laghvī] matajñānaṁ [kh: manajñāna; g: marājñāna] tad ambike [g:

In this sense the Śrīmata is the whole teaching (mata), the veritable Ocean of Kula.[1] In the highest sense it is the goddess Kubjikā herself who is the energy of the Ocean of the Yoni (yoṇyārṇavī).[2] Śiva is the Ocean of the Void,[3] which is the emptiness of the goddess's Triangle and the state of eternal repose that contains all time called the Ocean of the Aeons.[4] The Śrīmata is the Yoni of Kula, the Ocean Bhairava churns to produce the scriptures and the currents of the teachings. The source of the tradition, the transmission and teaching is the source from which all things originate and to which they ultimately return. It is the one ultimate reality experienced as the Śāmbhava State (avasthā). Symbolically located a span of twelve fingers above the head, it is experienced in the highest Wheel (cakra). Called the Unborn (ajacakra), it is both the source of the 'compendium which is the essence' of the teaching i.e. the Manthānabhairavatantra[5] and its abode. It is the Teacher's Mouth which, vitalized by the energy of the Transmental (unmanī), is also the goddess's hidden face, the Yoni, the 'crooked' or 'bent over mouth' (kubjavaktra). Both the outer womb-like triangle, and the seminal Drop (bindu) within it, the goddess streams and flows first within the Drop and then, impelled by her inner, innate bliss, flows out as the current of the teachings transmitted through the lineages of teachers. This tradition is the Divine Current that flows out in this way from the sacred Point (bindu) in the very centre of the goddess's being. The scripture is the Rule (samaya) in which the goddess as Kāmeśvarī resides as the intense 'passion' (kāma), that is, the creative, divine will, which is the source (yoni) of all things.[6] It is the energy of the Transmental that assumes these spiritual sonic forms by its own will and inherent power. The Scripture of the Command (ājñāśāstra), which is the dawning of the transmission (kramodaya),[7] emerges from the Ocean of the Drop (bindu) of the Command by the application of this power and, as the MBT declares: 'There is nothing higher than the Brahmā Vidyā and nothing superior to the Scripture of the Command (ājñāśāstra).'[8] Again: 'Who is not liberated by just explaining and reciting it? Without a doubt the Scripture of the Command is truth and again truth.'[9] Thus the goddess is the Unborn One – Ajā - from whose mouth taraṇḍake] || ŚM 20/164cd-167ab; 178cd-180.

---

[1] KuKh 45/56-57.

[2] KMT 2/14.

[3] KuKh 58/90cd-92ab.

[4] KuKh 64/15.

[5] KuKh 30/90.

[6] KuKh 6/124cd-125ab.

[7] KuKh 7/4-5ab.

[8] brahmāvidyāparaṁ nāsti ājñāśāstrāt [kh: -śāstrā] paraṁ na hi ||
YKh (1) 16/190ab; Cf. KuKh 9/74ab.

[9] vyākhyānakathanād eva [g: vyākhyānakathanīnāṁ deva] kasya muktir na jāyate |
satyam eva punaḥ satyaṁ [g: ?] ājñāśāstraṁ na saṁśayaḥ || YKh (1) 34/131cd-132ab.

proceeds the Great Mata which is the compendium of all the teachings, the Manthānabhairavatantra, the Scripture of the Command and the oral tradition (mukhāmnāya).[1] Like the five faces of Sadāśiva below it, each of which utter their own scriptures, the sixth, Unborn Face of the goddess above is the source of all the Kula teachings, originally divided into the six currents or lineages established by the disciples of Matsyendranātha considered to be the founder of the 'previous' Kaula tradition.[2] It is, in a special way, the source of the MBT, the most excellent of the Kaula scriptures where the goddess says:

> This compendium, which is the essence (of the teaching) that has (come) from the mouth of (the goddess) Ajā (the Unborn), is the Supremely Tranquil (realised) in the Śaiva (tradition) consisting of five currents and in Kula doctrine (consisting of the) six (lineages).[3] It is the finest part of the line (santāna) of Siddhas who are proficient in the Command and the experience (pratyaya) (of reality). It is the knowledge of the arising of the Transmission (krama) of the Great Mata of the venerable (goddess) Khageśī (the Mistress of the Skyfarers). Śrīnātha said: You have told (me) the Kaula (teaching about the) truth which is the experience (pratyaya) (of reality). There is nothing higher than Kaula knowledge. The Compendium of the Mata is (indeed) hard to acquire.[4]

The Tantra goes on to enumerate the extent in millions of verses of the five 'currents' (srotas) of Śaiva scriptures uttered by the five faces[5] and concludes:

> Once known the tradition of the scripture, the Mata, practice it. These are (the scriptures) that have emerged out of the Five Currents along with the number of (their) verses. I have told you about them for the sake of the practice of common folk in the world (lokācāra). I have concealed the sixth great face. One hundred and fifty books have come from that face. And they are within the secret Wheel of the Skyfarer (where they have been) revealed.[6]

---

[1] KuKh 28/122ab.
[2] See intro. vol. 2, p. 306 ff..
[3] See table on p. 316 of intro. vol. 2.
[4] KuKh 30/91.
[5] Concerning the Five Currents of Śaiva scripture that issue from Sadāśiva's five faces, see Dyczkowski 1988: 31ff..
[6] KuKh 30/101-103ab..

These concepts and symbols are not exclusive to the Kubjikā Tantras. The JY also considers its teachings to be essentially oral in the same way. These too ultimately proceed from the deity's mouth. Symbolically situated at the End of the Twelve above the head, the uppermost extremity of the range of differentiated principles, worlds, energies and mantras, the deity's mouth is the Teacher's Mouth (guruvaktra) also called the Wheel of the Unborn (ajacakra). There we read:

> The (vital centre) called the glottis is in the Teacher's Mouth and the teacher is in the Unborn Mouth. The Unborn is in the centre of the Equinox and the Equinox is in Emission.[1]

The Equinox is the where the breaths are equalized and fuse into the energy of emission through which the teachings and all emanation takes place. The polarities, balanced out, unite, fusing into the emission (visarga) of the lunar energy of the divine consciousness which, nectar-like, flows down from the centre of the Wheel in the End of the Twelve - here called the glottis of the Teacher's Mouth. Drinking this nectar, the initiate is liberated and achieves immortality.[2] As the JY says:

> If it is acquired from the Teacher's Mouth, that plane is the most excellent. It is said that the adept is liberated at that very moment. This, the plane that has been explained to you, O goddess, is called the Conqueror of Death (mṛtyuñjaya).[3]

The Kaula Tantras and their precursors the Bhairava Tantras uniformly refer to their original form as oral transmissions, particular as secret doctrines taught by Yoginīs. Matsyendranātha says the school of which he is spreading the teachings is called the Yoginīkaula because it is the doctrine transmitted by the Yoginīs in the privacy of each home in Kāmarūpa. Similarly, referring to the Kālīkula Maheśvarānanda quotes a Tantra as saying: 'that is this supreme secret that is in the mouth of the Yoginīs.'[4] From here proceed the secret scriptures.[5] It is also called the

---

[1] lambākhyaṁ guruvaktrasthaṁ gurum ajamukhe sthitam ||
ajaṁ viṣuvamadhyasthaṁ viṣuvaṁ tu visargagam [all MSs: -kaṁ] | JY 4/19/205cd-206ab.

[2] These symbols are well known to the Kubjikā Tantras also. Concerning the Equinox of the breaths, see KuKh 2/15-16 and note 36 and the inner glottis (lambikā), see KuKh 2/11 and intro. vol. 1, p. 401-402.

[3] yadā prāptaṁ gurumukhāt padam etad anuttamam | tadaiva muktatā tasya sādhakasya udāhṛtā ||
nāmnā mṛtyuñjayam idaṁ padaṁ devi tavoditaṁ | JY 3/17/381-382ab.

[4] tad etat paramaṁ guhyaṁ yoginīnāṁ mukhe sthitam || quote in MM p. 173.

[5] See Dyckowski 1988: 63 ff..

Mouth of the Yoginī called Picu (picuvaktra). The CMSS declares that the Kubjikā tradition is the Divine Current that issues from this mouth:

> The supreme bliss of the Divine Current is the Kaula Mouth of (the Yoginī) Picu. The tree of consciousness with extensive roots and branches arises from the middle of it. It is invisible and its excellent fruit is the Current of the Siddhas.[1]

According to Abhinava's presentation of Kaula ritual the `Mouth of the Yoginī' (Yoginīvaktra),[2] is the primary wheel of consciousness (mukhyacakra). This is where the union of Śiva and Śakti takes place that emites pure spiritual bliss[3] and is the source of the Kula teachings. As Abhinava says:

> The Great Lord has said that the main Wheel is the Mouth of the Yoginī. This spiritual lineage is there and it is from that that knowledge is obtained. It is said that that (knowledge) cannot be set to writing, but passes from mouth to mouth and, as has been said, the mouth is the main Wheel. How can that which is one's own consciousness be written down?[4]

In the following passage from the JY, part of which is quoted in Kashmiri Śaiva works, we find one of the basic concepts of the Kālīkrama. This is the notion that the cycle of creation, persistence and destruction is contained in a fourth, transcendent and liberated state of pure consciousness that is as fundamentally real as it is inexplicable. Here too we are told that this is an oral teaching transmitted by the Yoginīs:

> O goddess, sinless one, I will tell you of a special (most elevated) grace. The sequence of emanation is the first. The descent

---

[1] divyaughaparamānandaṁ [k g: divyogha-; kh: -paraṁmānandaṁ; gh: divyogha- -nanda] picuvaktran [kh: picū-] tu kaulikam |
tanmadhyoditacidvṛkṣaṁ [k kh gh: -vṛkṣā; g: tat- -vṛkṣyā] mūlaśākhāsuvistaram [k gh: -sākhā-; g: -sākhyā-] ||
adṛṣṭavigrahārūḍhaṁ [kh: ahṛṣṭa-] siddhaughaphalam [k g gh: siddhogha-] uttamam |
CMSS 1/29cd-30.

[2] Jayaratha explains: The Lord Maheśvara has said in the aforementioned way that the primary Wheel is the Mouth of the Yoginī itself which is otherwise called the Mouth of Picu etc.
tat uktena prakāreṇa bhagavatā maheśvareṇa picuvaktrādy aparaparyāyaṁ Yoginīvaktram eva mukhyacakram uktam | Comm. on TĀ 29/124cd-125ab.

[3] The 'primary wheel' is also where the union of the partners engaged in the Kaula rite takes place. See TĀ 29/104-106ab.

[4] TĀ 29/124cd-6ab.

> (into the world - avatāra i.e. persistence) is the second. Withdrawal is the third and the Inexplicable (anākhyeya) is the fourth. The tradition (āmnāya) concerning it is (transmitted) from mouth to mouth of a Yoginī and, sometimes, also of a man. It should be practiced secretly.[1]
>
> The (knowledge of the) ultimate reality of the goddesses is well established in the oral transmission. It has come down through the sequence of the series (of teachers) and abides in the heart of the goddesses.[2]

The oral tradition (mukhāmnyāya) continued to be considered to be most important also once the Kālīkrama had developed out of the more strictly scriptural milieu of the Bhairava Tantras into the sophisticated system developed by the Kashmiri masters of the 9th century onwards. The most elevated yogic teachings of what thus became an essentially yogic tradition, are transmitted this way:

> That (one essential nature) of attention (dhārana), meditation (dhyāna) and contemplative absorbtion (samādhi) abides, by its very nature, directly apparent also when the yogi rises from the state of contemplation (vyuthāna) and the three are fixed together (as one). By knowing this there is in actual fact no distraction and by not knowing that (essential) nature what are the states that are not distracting? This is the supreme secret that is in the mouth of the Yoginīs.[3]

Although, of course, secrecy and exclusivity of religious practice can used for political motives, as indeed virtually any aspect of a religion can be misunderstood and misused, its original purpose was to safeguard the sacrality of the teachings. Access is limited to authentic spirituality, that is, to those who are morally fit for it. In this general sense, even the public scriptures, are secret. This is how Kṛṣṇa refers to the Bhagavadgītā, certainly one of the most popular, well known and most 'exoteric' of all. There he says to Arjuna:

---

[1] viśeṣānugrahaṁ devi pravadāmi tavānaghe || sṛṣṭikramaṁ tu prathamaṁ avatāraṁ dvitīyakam |
saṁhāraṁ tu tṛtīyaṁ syād anākhyeyaṁ caturthakam ||
vaktrād vaktre tu yoginyāḥ kadācit puruṣasya tu |
āmnāyaṁ tasya caivāsti guptācāreṇa saṁcaret || JY 4/20/58cd-60.
[2] devīnāṁ paramaṁ tattvaṁ vaktrād vaktre susaṁsthitam ||
pāramparyakramāyātaṁ devīnāṁ hṛdaye sthitam | JY 4/19/208cd-209ab.
[3] MP (3) 7/166-168ab.

> This secret gospel of the Gītā should never be imparted to the man who lacks penance, nor to him who is wanting in devotion, nor even to him who lends not a willing ear; and in no case to him who finds fault with Me . . . He who, offering the highest love to Me, preaches the most profound gospel of the Gītā among My devotees, shall come to me alone; there is no doubt about it.[1]

We frequently find similar admonitions in the Tantras not to reveal them to those without devotion. Secrecy in this sense is the natural reserve one must have out of respect for the sacrality of spiritual teachings in general. One must not cast pearls before swine. However, in addition to this common basic level of secrecy there are others. One is the importance of orality. The transmission of teachings by word of mouth has a special power and prestige. There are numerous examples of this phenomenon. One outside India is particularly striking. The rabbinical commentary on the Torah – the midrash – was transmitted in two forms, one was written and the other oral. The oral one enjoyed a special prestige for centuries and continues to do so even though it was set to writing in the 4th century of the current era.

All Kaula traditions are secret.[2] This secret is both maintained and revealed by transmitting the teachings orally or, as the Tantras say 'from ear to ear'. This is the case with the teachings of the Śrīvidyā, the goddess Tripurā. As the god says to her in the Heart of the Yoginī:

> Today, out of love for you, I will tell you a secret that has come onto the surface of the earth by the teaching (transferred) from ear to ear.[3]

Similarly, concerning the Kālīkula, the goddess asks the god in the Devīpañcaśataka:

> Tell me with (due) respect the oral Kaula (teaching) which is (transcendental and) free of the moving and immobile (universe) and resides in the (teacher's) mouth. (Tell me) by way of the most secret oral tradition that (is transmitted) secretly from mouth to mouth (what) has been omitted amongst the means (taught) in the scriptures.[4]

---

[1] BhG 18/67-68; Zeahner's translation.

[2] vāmadakṣiṇasiddhāntabhedatrayavibhedataḥ |
vaiṣṇavādisamāyuktaḥ sa rahasyam udāhṛtaḥ || NT 16/2.
In his commentary Kṣemaraja says: sarahasyam iti kulaprakriyāyā udāhṛtaḥ uktaḥ |

[3] YHṛ 1/2cd-3.

[4] mukhāgamavidhānena vaktrād vaktrakrameṇa tu |

The teachings of the scriptures remain secret even when they are formulated in independent exegetical schools that are constructed on the basis of their more or less implicit philosophical purport. The Spanda school of Kashmiri Śaivism, for example, that expounds the doctrine of vibration – spanda - that is, of a dynamic divine, universal consciousness which is both deity and the Self is said to be a 'secret tradition' (rahasyāmnāya).[1] Originally an oral tradition, the doctrine was set to writing in the form of the Stanzas on Vibration because as one of the commentators on the Stanzas says:

> If there were no authoritative book (śāstra) none would bother to even consider what is (ultimately) worth acquiring or rejecting, let alone inquiring into the nature of reality.

The scriptures are the means by which the deity makes itself known. Transmitted by Speech, ultimately it is always oral and self-realisation is the self-illumination of the deity, which is an act of grace, and not the work of reason. The devotee addressing the deity exclaims:

> Scripture is You directly apparent (sākṣāt) and Your's alone is the intelligence (that comprehends and creates it). Transmitted through the medium of the Word, it purifies those fit for instruction.[2]

The ultimate purpose of the travails of the god and the goddess narrated in the myth we examined in chapter one was to make the teachings manifest in the world so that those who are fit to receive them may attain worldly benefits (bhoga), accomplishments (siddhi) and, ultimately, liberation. The teachings are manifest in the world in the form of the Tantras and the teachings transmitted through the lineage of teachers to their disciples. Although both are essential, the transmission is primary. Passed on by word of mouth, the scripture is fundamentally oral (mukhāgama). Thus, upon receiving Kubjikā's Command the god exclaims:

---

*guptācāreṇa bhāvena hy atiguptatareṇa [k: guptaṁ-; kh: gu * * * (?)] ca ||
ādarāt kathayasva [k, kh, g: kathayatvaṁ] me śāstropāyeṣu varjitam |
mukhakaulaṁ mukhāvasthaṁ [g: muthovasthaṁ] cārācāravivarjitam || DP 1/18-19

[1] Bhagavadutpala writes in the preface to his commentary on the Spandakārikā:

(Taught) here (in the Stanzas on Vibration) is the secret tradition transmitted by word of mouth (to Vasugupta by) a perfected yogi (siddha). Receiving it from Vasugupta, Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭendu set it down to writing as this, its synopsis of fifty verses, to awaken (his) disciples. Dyczkowski 1992: 139.

[2] Quoted from the Ṣāḍguṇyaviveka by Bhagavadutpala. Dyczkowski 1992: 140.

> I have received this scripture (āgama) in the fourth great Age. It is Śambhu's (śāmbhava) oral tradition (transmitted through the) lineage (pāraṁparyamukhāgama) within the Kaulika transmission (kaulikānvaya).[1]

Many Tantras survive belonging to traditions that are no longer extant because there are no teachers left to transmit them. They can still be studied and with tenacity and effort scholars may acquire extensive knowledge of their contents, but this does not qualify them to be teachers who can transmit them to others if they are not empowered to do so. The Tibetans preserve many such Buddhist Tantras however, because they belong to traditions of which the transmission has been lost, they do not study them, although they continue to respect them as scripture.

Indeed, the scriptures themselves are essentially a transmission that takes places from a teacher to his or her disciple. Accordingly, they are invariably in the form of a dialogue between the teacher and the taught. In most of the Śaiva and Kaula Tantras the dialogue takes place between the god and the goddess. However, this is not always the case. The teacher and the taught may vary in the Tantras of other major schools, Vaiṣṇava, Buddhist or Jaina. The one who questions may be another deity or sage. The teacher may also vary. Obviously, in the case of the Buddhist Tantras, it is normally a Buddha and in the Jaina, a Jina. This formulation implies an original oral form of the scripture. The teachings may be transmitted from master to disciple by way of a scripture that the teacher first dictates to the disciple and then explains. The teacher may also transmit the teachings directly orally. This transmission mirrors the original one between the god and the goddess and so is considered to be the most fundamental. Viewed from this perspective, all the Tantras are oral transmissions (mukhāgama). However, the Tantras of the Kubjikā cult take pride in being so in a special way. Indeed, if we compare the contents of the earliest Kubjikā Tantra and the subsequent ones, we notice that some subjects that are central to the cult are mentioned but not discussed as one would expect. Such matters were probably considered to be too secret to write down and were originally entrusted to the oral tradition. As the school developed they were reduced to writing, but not without a residue that required the oral explanation of a qualified teacher. The KuKh records several such teachings that it signals as such explicitly by referring the reader to a teacher.[2]

The oral tradition is not only understood in the sophisticated 'inner' sense of the transmission. It is also, concretely, the oral explanation the teacher gives to his disciples of the written scripture. This is what the following passage refers to as the 'Letter of the Convention':

---

[1] KuKh 3/170.
[2] KuKh 39/99cd-101.

> One should purify (one's understanding of) the Letter of the Convention by (referring to) the one (true) oral tradition. (It should not be done) by blockheads and fools by means of dry logic and the like. O god, there is a divine form of Speech (vāṇī) which is freedom (itself) that (operates) in the scripture, Āgama and (its) commentary. The Divine Tradition comes into being when this (reality), which is the reverse (of falsity), has been grasped. Abandoning (dry) scholarliness, one should listen to the Kaulikāgama that is easy (to understand) and the oral tradition that has been passed down from ear to ear. O Bhairava, the essence (of the scripture) and the teaching concerning the verses (of the written scripture) has been taught to you. There is nothing higher than the Kaulika Command, there is nothing superior to the Śrīmata (the scripture of the goddess), there is nothing higher than the oral tradition, everything else should be abandoned like rotten meat. Having thought about this with effort, one should practice the (teaching of) the oral tradition.[1]

The Tantra is not only warning us against the use of 'dry logic' to understand it. It is telling us also that the teachings are not confined to the sphere in which logic and reason operate. They refer to a higher reality that cannot be grasped by reason but must be experienced directly. This is the way the teachings are truly effective if they are listened to carefully and deeply pondered because it is through the medium of the Divine Speech of the Kaulikāgama that the enlightening energy of the Command is transmitted.

However, although the goddess asserts that 'the Kaulikāgama is easy to understand', the scriptures often do not explain directly what they mean to say. Indeed, many explanations themselves require explanation. It is essential that the teacher does not make mistakes concerning the Kramamaṇḍala and the ritual and Yogic practice associated with it. Even if he has himself received the goddess's Command and has been liberated by it, he should exert himself to gain deep understand of the Kaula knowledge transmitted in the scripture. It is enjoined on the person who has achieved liberation that he learn the scripture in order to liberate others.[2] Thus he must have received, as he himself should impart, the initiation into the explanation of the scripture (vyākhyādīkṣā). The Tantra warns that one who has not properly understood the meaning of the scripture and assumes the authoritative status of a teacher damages himself, not only his disciple.[1] Indeed, the true teacher is one who, by the grace of the deity, understands the scripture and can impart this understanding to others:

[1] KuKh 30/78-83.
[2] KuKh 65/21cd-22.

> Just like bee, who is greedy for scent, goes from flower to flower, similarly the disciple greedy for knowledge goes from teacher to teacher. (However,) before and also now, it is the very same Supreme Śiva who graces the fettered souls. How can one go to another teacher (when it is Śiva himself who is the true teacher). The true teacher who has been authorized (ādiṣṭha) by the goddess is one in whose presence the mind (becomes) firm in the meaning of the scripture (grantha), the rite of adoration and sacrifice, and all doubts are destroyed.[2]

Doubt about reality, behaviour and the meaning, origin and end of one's personal and cosmic existence are all ancilliaries of the basic uncertainty concerning the teaching. Knowledge of scripture and the attendant actions it enjoins is all that needs to be known. This knowledge comes through the grace of the deity who gives his/her Command to the devoted yogi and/or householder empowering him to understand the meaning of the scripture and to teach it to others. This takes place when the process of elevation, transformation and its attendant overcoming of obstacles and impediments to the same, has all been achieved. This, the Tantra says, takes place through the perfect accomplishment of the rite of initiation and its attendant inner transformations and motions.

Unable to turn to the oral tradition as initiates were able to do, we must seek to fathom the depth of the allusions, technical and coded expressions, and suggested meanings by carefully examining the sources we have. From the perspective of the Kubjikā Tantras, the Tantras are layered in a hierarchy that, whether accepted or not, demanded that the 'higher' the Tantras the more they be kept secret. Their secrecy is the measure of their interiority. Although outer rituals may be many, they can all be transported within. Indeed, the whole Tantra should be kept secret there. Silently, inwardly, the initiate could continue his inner practice and

---

[1] KuKh 65/18-21ab.

[2] gandhalubdho yathā bhṛṅgaḥ puṣpaṁ puṣpāntaraṁ vrajet ||
jñānalubdhas tathā śiṣyo guror gurvantaraṁ [k, kh: - gurutaraṁ] vrajet |
pūrvaṁ vā adhunā vāpi evam [k, kh: eva] eva paraḥ śivaḥ ||
saṁsāriṇo 'nugṛhṇāti kathaṁ gurvantarāgamam |
yat sakāśāt [k, kh: -śā] sthiraṁ cittaṁ granthārthe yāgapūjane ||
truṭyanti [k:; kh: truṭanti] sarvasandehāḥ [k, kh: - hā] devyādiṣṭastu sadguruḥ |
ṢSS 20/16cd-19ab.

guard the precious secret from which he drew inspiration, yogic and magical power, and finally attained liberation.

> The Kula scripture should be given and explained to the disciple in secret. (So in this way) the mind (will be centred) in a short time on the deep (hidden) meaning (of the scripture).[1]

The esoteric nature of a cult is not only measured by the degree of secrecy with which it shrouds itself to prevent access to the non-initiate. Even in the past when the student could turn to his teacher for help, he would have been confronted with many hermeneutical problems. In his and our search for meaning we are engaged in a process which, similar in many respects to the solving of an enigma or a Zen Haiku, serves to generate insight into ultimate reality itself, not merely the solution of the cryptic meaning of a text. The teachings are kept hidden in this way, preserved and maintained for those who, when the time is ripe, are fit to receive and understand them through a direct experience of the reality from which they originate and to which they should lead. Thurman argues, in relation to the Vajrayāna Tantras, that it is also reflected in the obscurity of the teachings. These are such not just to hide the teachings further or due to a lack of explanation or commentary. Their obscurity serves a soteriological function. It acts as the precursor that, paradoxically, engenders the clarity of enlightenment. The texts are therefore kept deliberately hidden so they may better fulfil this function. The Kaula tradition, like the Anuttarayoga Tantra of the Vajrayāna, prides itself in being the most esoteric of all the Tantric traditions, and this is especially true of the Kubjikā tradition, which considers itself to be the finest Kaula tradition. So what Thurman (1988: 121, 125. 126) writes concerning the Vajrayāna applies equally well to the Kaula Tantras:

'. . . there are some real differences between the hermeneutical principles of the Tantric literatures and those of the philosophical schools [. . .]. The principle of the use of reason would seem to be shared; the Tantric literature is rational and persuasive in its commentaries, at least. However, reason is harnessed to different ends, it seems to me. To put it very bluntly, if you can say that the aim in exoteric Centrist and Idealist schools is clarity, then the aim in the esoteric tantric traditions is, 'clearly', obscurity. [. . .]

The goal of most exoteric philosophical teaching is rhetorical, elucidative, persuasive - it presents pathways of thought to the conceptual mind that enable it to see more clearly, more comprehensively, and more penetratingly. However, esoteric teaching is by definition secret, occult, mysterious. It is purposely to be hidden from most eyes. It has no rhetorical or persuasive function, hence its communicative or elucidative function is of a different kind. It also might seek to move the conceptual mind, but not necessarily to understanding, perhaps sometimes to confusion, to feeling, to action, to creation, growth, compassion, or bliss. It might seek sometimes to generate obscurity, by means of the mystification of clarity. [. . .]

---

[1] KuKh 30/225cd-226ab.

The tradition was within the confines of person-to-person succession, with individual masters initiating and teaching individual disciples. And even in this context, clarity was not necessarily the main thing. The disciple did not always require persuasion or rational compulsion. Sometimes a disciple would need his clarity shattered, his intellectual control of reality shaken by the deliberate introduction of obscurity.

The Tantric tradition hides itself from the world. Even so, the Kubjikā Tantras stress the importance of knowing it well. The ṢSS declares concerning itself that: 'he who knows all this book both literally and its meaning is a teacher belonging to the Kula tradition'.[1] But to know a Tantra, its meaning must be fathomed at all levels and from all perspectives.[2] In order to achieve this the initiate receives three things. First of all he is given the grace of the Command. Secondly, empowered thereby he can listen to the scripture which, thirdly, is explained by the teacher who himself has received the teaching transmitted 'from ear to ear'. Understanding the meaning of the scripture means much more than knowing how to perform the rituals or inner practices it describes. To know the meaning of the scripture is to realise the true nature of reality. Initiation is a procedure that conjoins the Self of the disciple with that of the teacher who is one with deity. In this way the disciple's impurities are removed and he or she is united with the deity. However, although this does actually happen, the initiate must experience this oneness directly to be conscious of his liberated condition. This is achieved by knowing the true meaning of the scripture, the Mata:

> Just as is the great knowledge of scripture, so is the one who awakens to (the meaning of) the Mata. He sees with the eyes of knowledge that there is no duality (between himself) and the teacher.[3]

Generally, the oral form precedes the written. It is not only the original form, it is also the most secret. The earliest scriptures are both most extensive and secret because they are not committed to writing. Thurman (1988: 126) argues that from 100 AD for the first 700 years of the Vajrayana there were no written texts. The maṇḍalas existed carrying with them in their complex symbolism the content of the scripture but there were no written elucidations. The notion that for long periods of time prior to the setting to writing of the texts their contents were transmitted orally, is common to all the early Tantric traditions. Modern South Indian Siddhāntins believe that the Siddhāntāgamas existed in Vedic times in an oral form. This explains, they say, why some matters taught in the Vedic texts are also found in the Siddhāntāgamas. The Kubjikā tradition, no less than the others, follows suit. The original form of the scripture, which is said to be seven million verses long (saptakoṭika), was 'the oral tradition of the gods, a teaching with profound meaning.'[1] This scripture was believed by the redactors of the texts to be still existent in their time. The student of the KuKh is referred to it as the direct source of some of the teachings.[2] Extensive expositions of doctrines that are only briefly expounded may be found in it.[3]

[1] ṢSS 45/78cd.
[2] Cf. KuKh 30/81.
[3] KuKh 30/187-188ab.

In keeping with the general preference in the Indian tradition as a whole for the spoken rather than the written word, the Kubjikā texts tirelessly extoll the excellence of the 'oral scripture' (mukhāgama). One colophon of a Kubjikā Tantra says that it is the 'oral scripture of the tradition' (saṁpradāyamukhāgama) that belongs to the 'first descent' (ādyāvatāra) of the scripture.[4] Thus the oral tradition both precedes the redacted scripture and also accompanies it. The teachings are by no means exhausted by committing them to writing. Indeed, the written without the oral tradition which serves to transmit it, even as it explains it, is just dead letter. Both the scripture and oral tradition - the written and the spoken Word - are essential. However, of these two, the latter is superior. The Kubjikā Tantras, including our text, provide elaborate instructions for the copying of the text and the rituals that should be performed when the teacher explains it.[5] Worship of the written scripture is an important part of the initiate's daily practice. However, although the written word is venerated, its original link to the oral transmission must always be maintained. Accordingly, the teacher dictates the Tantra to his disciple. Thus, he commits to writing what has been spoken and heard, rather than written and seen. However, even when committed to writing, the teaching should not be revealed directly:

---

[1] KuKh 30/74.

[2] KuKh 39/67, 149. In KuKh 40/106 we read: 'I have told you this before in (the scripture of) seventy million (verses). O god, (the Energy) in the form of Letter (varṇa) has been revealed and then again hidden.' Note that this line is drawn from the TS, illustrating how this way of presenting new teachings without depriving them of the authority old ones enjoy is common practice.

[3] Thus the meaning of the sūtra has been (just) indicated (uḍḍiṣṭa) (whereas) it is expounded in full (nirṇīta) in the (scripture of) seventy million (verses). KuKh 42/26ab.

[4] Colophon of AS chapter 20.

[5] See chapter thirty.

O god, one should not write clearly (prakaṭa) about (all) this, the teaching of the Krama (kramārtha), that has come from (the teacher's) mouth. It is always on the teacher's mouth and one obtains it from the teacher's mouth. He who is connected to this awakened consciousness (bodha) possesses the Kaulika Command.[1]

The teachings are not only transmitted by word of mouth to keep them secret or in order to explain them better. There are teachings that cannot be properly transmitted in any other way. To do so would be to drain them of their sacred energy. The more powerful they are, the more they should be kept secret. An example is the mantra of Twelve Verses. This is so powerful that it lines the walls of the goddess's Triangle. It is therefore as powerful and secret as the maṇḍala itself and the goddess who is embodied in the ritual gesture (mudrā) made before it and so our Tantra enjoins:

The Gesture, the Maṇḍala of the Rule and the Twelve Verses should be kept well hidden. (All this) should be studied (with the teacher); it is not written down. O handsome one, the Twelve Verses are kept well hidden. (This teaching is not) to be given carelessly. (Nor is it found in books but only) within the range of hearing and is (transmitted orally, whispered) from ear to ear. Success (siddhi) comes from (its) utterance once one has known it.[2]

Indeed, all mantras can only be transmitted to the disciple by word of mouth. So Abhinava declares on the authority of the scriptures:

It has been spoken and (so) kept hidden from them. Therefore it should not be written in a book. It should be taken from the teacher's mouth, never otherwise.[3]

Mantras learnt from books are devoid, as Abhinava puts it, of the effulgence of consciousness.[4] However, he accepts, as does the KMT, that there are three sources of knowledge namely, the scripture, the teacher and oneself. So in some cases, if one's own power of intuition and insight (pratibhā) is strong enough one may by-pass the teacher and be self-illumined or, failing that, take initiation from the [1] KuKh 39/170-171ab = KuKh 45/66cd-67.

[2] KuKh 39/99cd-101.
[3] kathitaṁ gopitaṁ tebhyas tasmāt lekhyaṁ na pustake |
guruvaktrāt tu labhyeta anyathā na kadācana || quoted in comm. on TĀ 4/68.
[4] TĀ 4/66.

goddess directly by reciting her mantra.[1] But if one is unable to reach the high state of consciousness of a teacher, one should seek one who has mastery over the scriptures (śāstramat). Serving him with devotion, the teacher initiates him and he thus comes to understand the meaning of the scripture.[2] Abhinava is consistently the champion of those who progress without taking the support of a teacher. So it is not surprising that according to him, in some exceptional cases, those in a highly developed state of consciousness can learn a mantra from a book. Those who realise the power of mantra just by reading it in a book are initiated by Bhairava directly.[3] However, this is rare and risky. Those who do not naturally possess this high level of conscious, or have not been initiated, are enveloped in ignorance. They may try to harm others with them and use them for magical purposes.[4] Even if the mantra is imparted by the teacher in the course of initiation he should transmit the mantra to his disciple orally. He should not write it down for him. Abhinava explains why:

> Mantras consist of phonemes and these are essentially (forms of) reflective awareness. And if that (reflective awareness) is not separate from the teacher's consciousness, it can be transmitted to the disciple. A written mantra is powerless. That has been (merely) imagined here. Due to the (linguistic) convention (that obscures it), its power is not manifest from a book.[5]

The essentially oral nature of the transmission is explained in the SvT from a different perspective. Focusing on the literary form of the Tantras as didactic texts in which the deity dialogues with his or her partner, The Svacchandatantra explains how this works in the following way:

> The god Sadāśiva, establishing himself on the plane of teacher and disciple, brought the Tantra down (into the world) by means of questions and answers.[6]

Abhinavagupta explains this process in detail in his commentary on the Parātriṁśikā. Consisting of some thirty odd verses spoken by the goddess and said to be drawn from the Rudrayāmala, they are introduced with the words 'the goddess said'. This occasions Abhinava's exposition not only of how corporeal Speech is derived from the Absolute, which is the supreme form of Speech, but

---

[1] TĀ 4/65.
[2] TĀ 4/70cd-71ab.
[3] TĀ 26/23cd-24ab.
[4] TĀ 4/67-68.
[5] See TĀ 26/21-22.
[6] SvT 8/31.

also how scripture develops from it as a progressive descent through its four levels. At the supreme level of Speech (parāvāc) the transmission and the teachings abide in a state of oneness contained in the energy of the Śiva. This, Abhinava explains, is the reflective awareness (vimarśa) Śiva has of his own infinite consciousness which is his essential nature. Forming itself spontaneously out of his own free will by that same power of reflective awareness as the next level of Speech, which is that of Paśyantī - the Speech of Vision, he outlines within his own infinite being a faint trace of the image of the universe of language he will emit outside which, at this stage, he intuites within himself. Then, through the following two levels of Speech the gap between the subject and object, the deity and his creation, the speaker and the spoken, progressively widens to ultimately apparently separate completely. These two are Middle Speech, which is that of mentally articulated conceptualisation. Then, finally, comes Corporeal Speech. Analogously, Abhinava explains, this is how the teachings are made manifest in the outer world:

> Question and answer is an ever present reality (vastu) which is in the first instance at the level of Supreme Speech without division. [. . .] So the inner content i.e, question-answer which appears in the consciousness of the highest Lord in an undifferentiated way because of its being the highest truth, is thought of in the Paśyantī [Speech of Vision] stage in an indeterminate (nirvikalpa) form with a desire to put it in the apportionment of letter, word and sentence; it is posited with a sense of separateness in the Madhyama [Middle] stage [of Speech] in a determinate (savikalpa) form; it is finally expressed in the form of question and answer in the Vaikharī ['Corporeal'] stage [of Speech], that is, in gross speech consisting of māyīya [phenomenal] letter, word and sentence.[1]

Although this explanation is sophisticated and subtle, it is relatively simple and free of difficulties. This is because the teacher who responds is the god and the one who questions is the goddess. She is Speech and the god is the speaker. The entire cycle of the four levels of Speech from the Supreme to the Corporeal explicate in sonic form the dynamism of pure 'I' consciousness (ahaṁbhāva). The dynamism of this male ego is feminine Speech. At the highest level they are one but in order to become manifest, that is, articulated, the feminine energy of Speech must proceed from the male ego. In this way, the creative dynamism of Abhinavagupta's ‘superego’ replicates in metaphysical terms the theme common to innumerable Tantric myths of the emergence of the goddess from the god, that is, of the cosmogonic will from transcendent, pre-cosmic (male) Being. The SvT, which Abhinava quotes, is typical in this respect.

---

[1] PTv p. 5. The translation is by Jaideva Singh. The additions in square brackets are mine. Note also that the first sentance appears in the text after the following paragraph.

This concept of the division of Speech into levels was largely due to the influence of Bhartṛhari, the grammarian and philosopher of language, who probably preceded the development of the Tantras. He taught that there are three levels - Corporeal (vaikharī) speech, the mental Speech of the Middle One (madhyamā), and the intuitive creative Speech of the One who Sees (paśyantī) and that this belongs to the Word Absolute (śabdabrahman). Several centuries later the Kashmiri Somānanada extended Bhartṛhari's concept of Speech by adding a Supreme (parā), fourth level. Somānanada conceived this level to be the energy of Śiva as the pure propensity or exertive force that impels the lower levels of Speech and manifestation that takes place through them. The conception reaches it complete form with Somānanada's disciple, Utpaladeva, who presents the Supreme level of Speech as the reflective awareness of absolute 'I' consciousness. This major insight builds on Somānanda's conception that was probably inspired by the Śivasūtra 'discovered' by Vasugupta a generation before him. There, probably drawing from Tantric doctrine (whose exact source has not yet been identified), Bhairava is characterized as being the same exertion (udyama) which Somānanda takes to be the power of Supreme Speech.

Utpaladeva's extension of his teacher's insight was the final philosophical formulation of influences on the concept of Speech that developed in the context of Tantric symbolic representations of ritual and Yogic practice, along with those expounded in the treatises of independent philosophical and theological schools. Although we do sometimes find references to four levels of Speech in other traditions, references to this fourth level as 'supreme' may not precede Somānanda. Certainly, the references to these four levels and associations made with Tantric cyphers in the Śrīvidyā tradition[1] and in the Kashmiri tradition of the Kālīkrama founded by Jñānanetra, post-date Utpaladeva. Thus, having examined the concept of the nature of Speech found in Bhartṛhari's treatise on the philosophy of language and Sanskrit grammar, the Vākyapadīya, and compared it to the ones found in the Śaiva Āgamas, especially, the Kālottara Filliozat is of the opinion that:

> We may venture the hypothesis of a historical sequence from the concept of a threefold partition of speech to the concept of a fourfold partition. The former is the result of a philosophical investigation of the essence of speech for its own sake. The Vaiyākaraṇas [Grammarians] are content with this concept, as the cardinal object of their inquiry is speech. The Tāntrikas have done a similar investigation, as evidenced in the Kālottara [āgama] and have reached the same result, a threefold conception. However, speech was no more the main object of their philosophical quest. They have conceived diverse relationships between speech thus represented by other concepts such as bindu, nāda, Kuṇḍalinī, etc. These notions belong properly to Tantric thought.[1]

[1] YHṛ 1/36-41 translated in intro. vol. 1, p. 295-296; see also ibid. p. 717-718. There we see how the four levels of Speech have been integrated into the Triangle by commandering the sacred seats for their residence.

It is a noteworthy fact that we find several references to four levels of Speech with the Supreme as the highest in the Jayadrathayāmala. The conception of these levels is not that of the Pratyabhijñā of Utpaladeva. Nor is the highest level of Speech the 'exertion' Somānanda describes. So it is hard to say whether the JY precedes or post-dates Somānanda. The following passages drawn from the JY give us an idea of how these levels are conceived there. Notice that in the first of these the goddess Speech is related to the Vedas. Also, the goddess of Speech is here said to be 'waveless' in the sense of free of the 'waves' of thought. The same is said of Kubjikā as the Transmental which, in another passage, the JY explicitly identifies with the supreme level of Speech.[2]

> Caṇḍakāpālī Kālikā, the goddess of the tradition (mateśvarī) is mounted on the tradition. Properly consecrated in the Veda, she shines with the thousands of syllables (of all the mantras). Fourfold, according to the division of Speech, she is manifest in due order. Parā is born as the first womb, full of bliss and joy. She is free of all thought (prapañca), waveless and undisturbed. Then in the form of (Speech) that Sees (paśyantī), she is adorned with the three energies. The triad there (at that level), consisting of will, knowledge and action is in a potential state (garbhībhūta) and abides undivided. Then (when) knowledge becomes slightly prominent out of this (triad with respect to the other energies), the goddess, the mistress of Kula abides in the form of Speech that Sees. (When) the two, will and knowledge, are prominent, she is perceived as the Middle (Speech). O mistress of the gods, Speech arises in accord with the category of its manifestation. When that same supreme energy (is in a state in which) will, knowledge and action (are all three) prominent and is as if endowed with an embodied condition (vikharatva), (Speech) is the Corporeal One and it is called the 'vehicle of meaning' (sphoṭa).[3]

---

[1] Filliozat 1994: 478-9.
[2] JY 2/3/20cd-21 quoted below on p. 32.
[3] vede samyak samāsnātā [k: sumāsnātā] sahasrākṣarabhāsurā |
mateśvarī matārūḍhā [g: manā-] caṇḍikāpālikālikā ||

Here, as in several other places, the JY displays a knowledge of philosophy not common in other Bhairava Tantras. Is this because it was redacted in the intellectually fertile atmosphere of Kashmir? 'Sphoṭa' is a technical term drawn from the Sanskrit philosophy of language. It literally means 'a flash' or 'outburst' and is the eternal, that is, non-temporal and imperceptible, element in words that serves as the vehicle of the idea that bursts upon the mind or 'flashes' in it when words are heard. It serves to explain how we perceive the entire meaning of a sentence at once even though we only hear the words one at a time. The JY explains that those who move only on the first two levels of Speech, that is, verbal and conceptual, are bound. This is because without the higher levels of Speech they cannot reach out beyond words and their meanings into the reality they represent and from which they originate. The result is that these fettered souls move restlessly in the world of words and meanings tormented by countless doubts without being able to enjoy the repose that comes from the insight of the higher levels of Speech:

> Due to their ignorance those who reflect on their own essential nature (have) views that are those of the fettered. As they do not know Śiva's non-dual (nature) tell (me) that on the basis of (sound spiritual) knowledge. Their view is devoid of tranquillity (aramyaka) and so is devoid (of this spiritual) knowledge. Knowledge devoid of tranquillity is that which is contemplated by the activity of speech in the midst of the hundreds of doubts (aroused) by words and (their) meaning. Those who are (in such doubt) are not free. The word which originates from the power of the breath in the void of the body is understood by the activity of Speech called the Middle One and the Corporeal. In this way that (Speech) is purely thought and (both) word and meaning are present. This universe consists of that and by the reversal (of the descent from the higher levels of Speech) it is caturdhā vāgvibhedena vyaktā sā kramayogataḥ |

---

parā prathamagarbhotthā [gh: -gabhotthā] sollāsānandanirbharā ||
*sarvaprapañcarahitā [k, kh: -tāṁ] nistaraṅgā nirākulā [gh: ni * kulā]* |
tataḥ paśyantirūpeṇa triśaktiparimaṇḍitā [kh: -manditā] ||
garbhībhūtaṁ [k, kh, gh: kharvī-; g: kharvobhūta] trayaṁ tatra icchājñānakriyātmakam |
nirvibhāgasthitaṁ yasmād [gh: yasmā] jñānodriktaṁ [k, g: jñānāt-; kh, gh: jñānotsiktaṁ] tu kiñcana ||
tadā paśyantirūpā sā sthitā [all MS: gītā] devī kuleśvarī |
icchājñānadvayodriktā [all MSs: -dvayādriktā] viviktā madhyamā hi sā ||
vāg udeti sureśāni tasyā vyaktiprabhedataḥ |
icchājñānakriyodriktā [k: -kriyā-] yadā saiva parā kalā [g: karā] ||
vikharatvam ivāpannā [k: -pivāyantā; kh gh: -paṁnā] sphoṭākhyā vaikharī hi sā |
JY 3/11/15-21ab.

> liberated. They are not considered to be liberated because (they have not) attained the supreme (level of Speech) and the one that sees (paśyantī). They do not know that bliss and it is doubt that is active (spandate) in them, devoid as they are of tranquil (niḥspanda) and innate knowledge. They are not free and so reside in the ocean of (mere) verbal knowledge (śabdajñāna).[1]

The aggregate of the phonemic energies of Speech collectively and individually termed 'mātṛkā' is presented in the JY concretely as the four levels of Speech.[2] Thus they appear as a single, compact and well formed group. Concomitantly they may also form a part of other evolving groupings as we find in the following passage. Notice also that the supreme level of Speech is here also implicitly identified with the Transmental:

> That radiant energy (tejas) is endless and it is that Supreme Goddess, the supreme energy and the Transmental (manonmanī). The mobile and immobile (universe) is pervaded by her. In a gross form that goddess is called 'mātṛkā'. Her energies are without end and fall from her iconic form. The pervasive lord (vibhu) is energy because (he / she) pervades (all things) and the energy of the Lord (prabhuśakti) is mātṛkā. The energies beginning with Vāmā are the eight energies. (The others are) Vidyā, Māyā, Sarasvatī, Paśyantī, Madhyamā and, in due order, (the one) called Vaikharī. Vaikharī is the energy of the Lord (prabhuśakti) the subtle form of which is the middle (Speech) whereas

---

[1] svasvarūpavicārāṇām ajñatvāt paśudṛṣṭayaḥ ||
śivādvayam ajānanto [k: -jānaṁno] brūhi taj jñānasaṁśrayāt |
aramyakam atas teṣāṁ jñānam uktam ataḥ sthitam ||
śabdārthaśatasaṁdehe vāgvṛttyā [k, kh: -vṛtyā] yat tu bhāvitam |
ye sthitās te na muktāḥ [k, kh: muktā] syur aramyaṁ jñānam eva tat ||
śarīravyomamarutāṁ prabhavaḥ śabda eva [k: evaṁ] yaḥ |
adhigamya savāgvṛttyā madhyavaikharisaṁjñayā ||
evaṁ saṅkalpamātraiṣā [k: -mātraiśaḥ; kh: -mātreśaḥ] śabdārthāv api saṁsthitau |
tanmayaṁ jagad etac ca pratyāvṛtyā vimuktavān ||
manyante na vimuktās te parapaśyantyalābhataḥ [kh: paraṁ; k, kh: -lābhatāṁ] |
tad autsukyam ajānantaḥ śaṁkātattvam [saṅketatvam] athaiṣu yat ||
tat spandate tu [k, kh: du] niṣpandanisargajñānavarjitāḥ |
na muktā eva te tasmāc chabdajñānārṇave sthitāḥ || JY 1/9/223cd-229.

[2] The four appear in ṣaṭka 4 as the contents of an aspect of the Vitality of Gesture (mudrāvīrya). There we read:

> The Supreme, (the Speech of) Vision, the Middle One and the Corporeal which is the fourth - their manifestation is said to be, for each part, 'mātṛkā'.

parā paśyanti madhyamā vaikharī yā [k: cā] caturthikā || tāsāṁ vyaktir yathā [kh, g: vyaktiyathā] proktā pratibhāgena mātṛkā | JY 4/1/29cd-30ab.

> the (Speech) that sees (paśyantī) is undivided and is established at the extremity of emission (visarga).[1]

The philosophically sophisticated Kashmiri Kālīkrama, is derived from the one taught in the JY. It also understands the descent of scripture and the teachings as taking place in stages marked by the development of Speech from Supreme (parā vāc) to corporeal (vaikharī).[2] However these are understood in the manner they are expounded in the Kashmiri Śaiva texts. The scripture progressively descends into the world through these stages. Similarly, according to the Kubjikā Tantras, the higher more internal levels of Speech are within the Yoni from which the transmission begins before it extends outside, down into the outer world. Here the transmission takes place through the series of liberated teachers who move freely through the Void of the Absolute as Skyfarers. At one with it and each other, they are deployed on the ladder of the higher, inner states of Speech and consciousness. These are the masters of the Divine Current (divyaugha).

The doctrine of the four levels of Speech is known to the Kubjikā Tantras but finds scant application.[3] Even so, the ancient notion, which goes back to Vedic times, that the world is created by Speech is basic. From the transcendent absolute being emerges the energy of the Will, which, called Beyond Mind (unmanī), is the first and most elevated form of Speech. Theologically, this is the goddess set in relationship with the god. She is the Yoni at the End of the Twelve which is Teacher's Mouth, replete with Speech in the form of the letters of the alphabet and their energies. The former is the god Assembly of sounds and the latter the goddess Mālinī. These archetypal forms conjoined with their energies

---

[1] anantaṁ tad bhavet [k: -vat; kh: laṅgaven] tejas tataḥ sā parameśvarī ||
manonmanī parāśaktis tayā [kh: -thā] vyāptaṁ carācaram |
sthūlarūpeṇa [k, kh: sthala-] sā devī mātṛkā sābhidhīyate [k: mātṛkaṁ sya?- kh: mātṛka syavi-] ||
anantāḥ śaktayas tasyā [kh: saktaṁ ṣastasyā] nipatanti [kh: nietanti] svamūrtitaḥ [kh: svapnarnnitaḥ] |
vyāpakatvād vibhuḥ śaktiḥ prabhuśaktiś ca mātṛkā [k, kh: -kī] ||
*vāmādyāḥ śaktayo [k: śaktiyo; kh: śaktiṣo] hy aṣṭau [kh: dyasau] vidyā māyā sarasvatī [kh: sāpāsa * * ?] |
*paśyantī [k, kh: paśyanti] madhyamā krame [k: kra *; kh: tka ] vaikharīty abhidhīyate [kh: vaikharītva-] ||
vaikharī [kh: ?] prabhuśaktiḥ syāt sūkṣmarūpā [kh: sṛṣṭya-] tu madhyamā |
nirvibhāgā tu [k: svavi- -nu; kh: suvibhāgāṁ nva] paśyantī visargānte [k, kh: -nta] pratiṣṭhitā ||
JY 2/3/20cd-24.

[2] MP (1) comm. verse 2.

[3] One of the rare instances were the levels of Speech are mentioned in the Kubjikā Tantras has been quoted above in intro. vol. 1, p. 217. There we are told that the Command is impelled by Speech whereas the commentary says it is the other way around. In the second case the supreme level of Speech is not ultimate. In the first, it is not uniquely primary, but serves to impell the Command which, in this system, is so.

are the 'atomic' constituents of words and, by extension, of their meanings which are both ideal and the external objects, qualities and actions that words denote. The flow of the transmission from this fecund source is, from this point of view, the streaming of the goddess in union with the god who, uniting, blend and combine aspects of their being to form scripture and with it, the entire transmission.

We may compare this conception with the one we find in the Ajitāgama, which is typical of the Siddhānta Āgamas in general. Bhat summerizes the chapter in the Ajitāgama concerned with the creation of the scriptures (tantrāvatārapaṭala) as follows:

At the beginning of creation, sound was born from supreme Śiva, the phonemes were born from sound and the mass of words from the phonemes. [. . .] The vowels are considered to be seeds (bīja), the consonants as matrixes (yoni). The mass of texts that give knowledge issued from these fifty phonemes. Of the two forms of Brahman, the supreme one (parabrahman) and the Word Brahman (śabdabrahman), the former, which is beyond speech and thought, is supreme Śiva. The latter, that can be described and be an object of meditation, is the form called Sadāśiva, whose body is the syllable OṀ. Sadāśiva, whose source is supreme Śiva, is the source of all things. From him comes Maheśvara, from Maheśvara comes Rudra, from whom comes Viṣṇu, from whom comes Brahmā, the final grandfather of the world. After having created the main lords of the world, Sadāśiva, for the benefit of the world, taught from his five faces the scriptures, the Veda etc.. This light of speech (knowledge) dispels the darkness (ignorance) of the world." The text goes on to explain the origin of the Siddhānta Āgamas as uttered by Sadāśiva's five faces. Sadāśiva then created ten sons who learnt and transmitted the ten Śivāgamas and eighteen Rudras to transmit the Rudrāgamas, thus accounting for the full complement of 28 Siddhānta Āgamas and the manner of their initial transmission. [1]

The Worship of the Scripture

We have seen that the Kubjikā tradition, like other Tantric traditions, is very conscious of the prestige of the spoken word and accords ample precedence to it with respect to the written. This accords with an ancient attitude that goes back to Vedic times. However, when the Veda was finally committed to writing after being transmitted with meticulous care and precision by word of mouth for centuries, the written text was not considered to be as sacred and powerful as the spoken word of the Veda. The development of the Purāṇas and Tantras marked the growth of the sanctity and power of the scripture in its concrete, written form. It is hard to say to what extent, if any, this was the result of contact with Islam. However, even without any external influence it is can be understood as a logical development coherent with the pervasive belief in the power of sacred objects, the maṇḍalas and talismans, that draw their power from the sacred letters, syllables and words inscribed on them. It is common practice in Tantric traditions of all kinds to venerate the sacred text. Tantric Buddhists in Tibet and the Himalayas, for example, maintain the practice they received from India to this day. Describing the main temple attached to the Buddhist monastery of Jiwong above the little hamlet of Phaphlu in Solu, Snellgrove has occasion to remark on the importance of the sacred texts kept in such monasteries:

[1] Intro. to the Ajitāgama p. 3-4.

> Neatly stacked around the walls of this sanctuary are the 108 volumes of the Tibetan Canon and the 225 volumes of the canonical commentary. These books are placed here primarily as objects of devotion, for they represent the buddha-word. Books in fact possess far greater sanctity than images and shrines, for it is by the word that the form is given life. Thus they may be placed above and to the side of the images, but never below them.[1]

Most, if not all, Śaiva Tantric traditions advocate the worship of their scriptures to varying degrees. Siddhānta ritual, for example, provides for a place in the sacrificial area, called Yogapīṭha, where the Āgama is placed and worshipped.[2] Nor is this practice confined to the Tantras. The Purāṇas also provide for their own worship when they are taken out in procession during festivals. We even find prescriptions for their public worship. Purāṇa is itself a deity and is worshipped as the embodiment of these scriptures. The embodiment of scripture in iconic form is well known to Mahāyāna Buddhists who commonly worship Prajñāparamitā not only as a goddess who embodies enlightened wisdom, but also the scripture with that name. One form of Kuleśvara is described in the MBT holding the Śrīmata in his hands.[3] The Śrīmata itself may be worshipped as the deity. Thus the MBT prescribes its own worship as a Bhairava who is the iconic form of the Mata (matamūrti). One may suppose that he is Manthānabhairava but this is not stated. As are all the major deities, he is girt with mantras. Specifically, he is associated with the eight sacred seats worshipped in a special way in the YKh.[4] As the embodiment of the teaching transmitted in the scripture that issues from the seats, he is attended and worshipped by the [1] Snellgrove 1995: 227.

[2] Concerning the Yogapīṭha and the various meanings of the term, see below, p. 40 ff..
[3] īdṛśaṁ cintayed rūpaṁ kaulīśaṁ śrīkuleśvaram ||
āgamaṁ śrīmataṁ haste mahāyogadharaṁ śubham | YKh (1) 16/164cd-165ab.
[4] See intro. vol. 1, p. 697 ff..

guardians, Yoginīs and other divine beings who reside there. As the embodiment of the Śrīmata, he holds the thirty-two syllable Vidyā and the entire Kulāgama of which it is the essence. He possesses and governs it just as he does the eight Kulas of the Mothers from which all the Kulas are ultimately derived. This is how he is described:

> (The god of the Śrīmata) is very powerful. He has seven faces with twenty-one red, beautiful round eyes and is adorned with thirty-two arms. His pride is the Moon and Sun and (his) necklace (kaṇṭhaka) is made of (Navātman), the ninefold Command. He is adorned with the necklace of the constellations and anklets of the planets. His face is big (like that of the demon) Ghaṇṭārāva and wears a snake as a sacred thread. The garland of wild flowers (vaḍa) around (his) neck is the deposition of the eighty-four (syllable mantra). The girdle is (the mantra called) Twelve Verses that envelops (him), the Lord of the Worlds. The jewelled necklace round his neck is made of the (group of) eight (mantras dedicated to) Sarasvatī. He is endowed with the group of eight Kulas and is adorned with Śambhu's thirty-two (syllable mantra). (He holds) the thirty-two syllable Vidyā and the Kulāgama in (his) hand is beautiful. O lord of the gods, his (two) earrings are adorned with the gods of the Aggregate of Sounds (Śabdarāśi) and Mālinī. He sits on a ghost (as his) throne and (his) body adorns the (universe consisting of the) Six Paths. He is the god surrounded by a hundred Rudras and adorned with the eight sacred seats. There is (a group of) ten million (Rudras around) the upper face. Above that is the second (group). The third is in the eastern face. There are ten million in the northern one and ten million in the western (face) that liberates at the end of the Age of Strife. As it is said to be supreme, the Western Transmission is in the western (face).
>
> One should think of the iconic form (mūrti) of the Mata to be brilliant as crystal. It is adorned with the Twelve Transmissions and the three lines (of teachers). It is guarded by Bhairava and surrounded by five hundred (Bhairavas). Above are twelve more and the Mata is in front. Guardians (kṣetrapa), Yoginīs, heroes, Siddhas, servants (ceṭaka), attendants (dūtika) and the guardians of the quarters are all present (in attendance) surrounding your Mata. O god, they always protect the Śrīmata (provided) that is not devoid of a teacher. (The Śrīmata) is the beginning and the end (of the teachings) and is attended by the lineage (santāna) of the Siddhas. It is the (scripture of the) Western (transmission) and pure, it bestows liberation.[1]

The worship of the Tantra is so basic and important that the KMT and ṢSS conclude with its worship. The ŚM goes further by describing how it is to be worshipped and copied at the beginning of the text and concludes with a section

---

[1] *saptavaktraṁ mahātejaṁ bhujadvātriṁśaśobhitaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: bhujā-; kh: bhūjādvāṁtriṁ * śo-]* |
netraiś caivaikaviṁśaiś ca [k: -ścaiveka-; kh: naitraiścaivaika-; gh: netreścaiveka-; ṅ: -kaviśaiśca] raktaiś caiva [k: rakteścaiva; gh: raktaścaiva; ṅ: rakṣauca] suvartulaiḥ [k, kh, gh: tu-; ṅ: turvartulaiḥ] ||
candrasūryakṛtāṭopaṁ [kh: candu-; ṅ: -ṭoṣaṁ] navājñākṛtakaṇṭhakam [ṅ: -kaṁṭakaṁ] |
nakṣatrahāraśobhāḍhyaṁ [ṅ: nakṣatragrahakṣobhāḍhyaṁ] grahair nūpuraśobhitaṁ [k, kh, gh: grahainū-; ṅ: gradairnūpura-] ||
ghaṇṭārāvaviśālāsyaṁ nāgayajñopavītinam [k, gh: -tanaṁ; kh: -pavīrtanaṁ] |
caturāśītivinnyāsā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -mahānyāsā] vaḍamālā gale [k, kh, gh, ṅ: mate] gatā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: matā] ||
mekhalā dvādaśaiḥ ślokair āvṛtaṁ [k, gh: ślokail āvṛtaṁ; kh: ślokailo vṛtaṁ] bhuvaneśvaram |
sarasvatyāṣṭakaṁ kaṇṭhe maṇimālāsudīpitam ||
kulāṣṭakasamopetaṁ [k, kh, gh: kulamaṣṭasamo-; ṅ: kulasaptasamopetaṁ] śambhudvātriṁśaśobhitam [k, kh, gh: -sobhitam] |
*vidyā [k, kh, gh, dvātriṁ; ṅ: * ] dvātriṁśakā pāṇau [ṅ: yānau] śobhitaṁ ca kulāgamam ||
*śabdamālinidevaiś ca [ṅ: -māli ; k, kh, gh, ṅ: deveśaṁ] bhūṣitau karṇakuṇḍalau [k, gh: karṇaṁkuṇḍalau] |
pretasiṁhāsanāsīnaṁ [kh: -śihā-; gh: pretasi-; ṅ: pretasiṁhāsanāśīnaṁ] ṣaḍadhvakāyabhūṣitam [k, kh, gh: ṣaḍadhvaṁ-; ṅ: ṣaḍarva-] ||
śatarudrāvṛtaṁ devaṁ pīṭhāṣṭakavibhūṣitam |
ūrdhavaktraikakoṭis tu [k, kh, gh: -vaktrekakoṭistu; ṅ: -vaktrekakoṭimva] tasya ūrdhve dvitīyakam [ṅ: -kā] ||
*tṛtīyaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -yā] pūrvavaktre tu ekā koṭiś ca [k, kh, gh: kādaśa; ṅ: * * *] vāmane [k, kh, gh: vāmanā; ṅ: * * ] |
*paścime ca tathā koṭiḥ [k, kh, gh: koṭi] kalisyānte ca mokṣake [k, gh: mokṣaka; kh: mokṣā ; ṅ: -kāḥ] || [This and the next two lines are missing in MS Ṅ.]
*kathitaṁ [k, kh, gh: kathitā] ca pareṇaiva paścime paścimaṁ kramam [kh: kraṁ ] |
śuddhasphaṭikasaṁkāśāṁ [gh: śuddhaphaṭika-; k, kh, gh, ṅ: -śaṁ] matamūrtiṁ [k, kh, gh: -mūrti] vicintayet ||
kramadvādaśaśobhāḍhyaṁ [ṅ: ekaikādaśa-] paṅktitritayabhūṣitam |
bhairavai [k, gh: bhairave; kh: bherave; ṅ: bhairavaiḥ] rakṣitaṁ caiva [ṅ: caivaṁ] śataiḥ [k, gh, ṅ: śatai] pañcabhir āvṛtam ||
dvādaśādhika - ūrdhve tu agratas tiṣṭhate [k, kh, gh: tivyate] mataṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: mate] |
*kṣetrapā [ṅ: kṣe * pā] yoginīvīrāḥ siddhāś ceṭakadūtikāḥ [ṅ: -kā]* ||
*diśāpālāś ca te sarve [k, kh, gh, ṅ: +saṁ] sthitā āvṛtya [k, kh, gh: * vṛtya; ṅ: ciṁtya] te matam [gh: -te]* | *rakṣanti satataṁ [ṅ: * tataṁ] deva śrīmataṁ gurvavarjitaṁ [k, ṅ: guruvarjitaṁ; kh: guruvajitaṁ]* ||
ādyaṁ ca nidhanaṁ caiva siddhasantānasevitam |
paścimaṁ mokṣadaṁ śuddhaṁ . . . . || YKh (1) 20/2-14.

in which the worship of the ŚM is extolled and described. We find the same at the end of our own text, the Kumārikākhaṇḍa, and elsewhere there and in the other sections of the MBT.[1] YKh (2) declares:

> By worshipping and reading (the scripture), one who is devoted to the Kula tradition (krama) is successful (siddhi). O god, if it is touched or read by one who has not had a Kaula initiation and does not possess the Rule (samayā) both (he and the one who showed him the scripture) go to hell and they remain (there) until a myriad of fire offerings have been made (on their behalf). Even when they live in the world of transmigration they suffer and have no joy.[2]
>
> O god, the part (of the transmission) beginning with KĀ (kādibheda), the great Mata, is very hard to acquire. O goddess, this supremely astonishing Tantra is very hard to acquire. The land in which this (scripture) is present is purified. What (to say) of one in whose town or house it is. * * * * (?) The town becomes equal to a sacred seat (pīṭha) (while) that house is a Yogapīṭha and one should go (there only if) he has (been given the teacher's) command (to do so). (The scripture) of the Supreme Lord (pārameśvara) should be worshipped first (by the one) who begins the practice of Yoga. The place where that divine and rare scripture (āgama) is present is worshipped by the gods if it is (kept) most secret.[3]

---

[1] YKh (1) ends with KMT 25/189-199 then comes KMT 25/221 with which this khaṇḍa ends. See below p. 38, note 1 and p. 84-85 for translation.

[2] pūjanāt paṭhanāt siddhiḥ kulakramaratasya ca | kuladīkṣāvihīnasya samayārahitasya ca ||
sparśanāt [k: sparśayat; kh: sparśa.a] paṭhanād deva ubhau narakagāminau [k, kh: -nī] |
tiṣṭhatas [k: niṣṭaṁti; kh: tiṣṭhanti] tāvato deva yāvad āhutasaṁplavaḥ ||
jīvamānā hi [k, kh: pi] saṁsāre duḥkhitāḥ [k, kh: -tā] sukhavarjitāḥ [k, kh: -tā] |

[3] *sudurlabhataraṁ [k, kh: -labhenataraṁ] deva kādibhedaṁ [kh: kādibhe ] mahāmatam ||
yatredaṁ tiṣṭhate deśe sa deśaḥ pūtatāṁ vrajet |
kiṁ punaḥ puramadhye tu gṛhe vā yasya tiṣṭhati ||
yā [kh: ya] ?) vṛddhāti sa vai vāthī [kh: māthā] puraṁ [k, kh: pura] pīṭhaṁ samaṁ bhavet |
tad gṛhaṁ yogapīṭhaṁ tu gantavyaṁ cājñayānvitam ||
yogaṁ samārabhed yo [k, kh: yā] vai pūjyo.adyaḥ [k, kh: -.adyam] pārameśvaraḥ [k, kh: - ram] |
yatrāsau tiṣṭhate sthāne divyāgamaṁ sudurlabham ||
devaiḥ saṁpūjyate taddhi [k, kh: so.ahi] yadi gopyataraṁ bhavet | YKh (2) 6/16cd-20ab.

YKh (2) 6/16cd-20ab = KMT 25/192cd-195. KMT 25/1-195 correspond to KuKauM 7/37cd ff and so these verses are also found there. The complete section concerning the Tantra and its worship in the KMT is KMT 25/189-199.

The country in which it is (found) partakes of (every) worldly benefit (bhukti), so what to say if it is in the middle of the city and within the heart when it has become a part of the household Acquiring a Tantra in the past could not have been easy. The Tantras themselves frequently say that they are hard to find. Not only did bookshops not exist, a Tantra could not be simply borrowed or bought from individuals who possessed a copy. Nowadays the injunction to secrecy repeated time and again in the Tantras of all schools may appear to be a manner of speaking - just a recurrent cliché. However, this was certainly not the case for the initiated. The scripture of the goddess is an embodiment of her Command, the most sacred and powerful core of the tradition, in visible form. Just as the gaze of the deity is empowering, that of the uninitiated is profane and causes a terrible loss of power. Accordingly, the major Kubjikā Tantras conclude with an admonition to keep them secret. Thus the ṢSS says concerning itself:

> It should all be kept hidden from the uninitiated (but) should be revealed to the (initiates) born in the Kula. O goddess, (the power of) the Command certainly becomes extremely intense by the grace of the rays (of the deity) for one who observes the Rules and (protects the scripture from) the gaze (of the uninitiated). This is the Command of the supreme goddess.[1]

The reason for the secrecy is to maintain the sacred power of the Tantra, not just to keep it for oneself and selfishly enjoy the benefits of its presence. The house in which it is kept is a temple. Even if it is only accessible to initiates, like all temples it is of spiritual benefit to the whole community. Indeed, the entire land in which a copy of it exists is free of misfortunes.[2] To see the scripture is no less than to have a vision of the deity:

(gṛhāvasthagata). O mistress, the city of he who possesses it is like a sacred seat. And that house is the sacred seat of Yoga that should be honoured by those who belong to the tradition. KMT 25/192cd-194ab.

[1] paśūnāṁ gopayet sarvaṁ kulajānāṁ prakāśayet || samayān pālate yas tu tasyājñā cāvalokanāt |
atitīvratarā [k kh: -varā] devi prasādena marīcibhiḥ ||
jāyate nātra sandeha ityājñā pārameśvarī | ṢSS 50/112cd-114ab = KuKauM 7/266cd-268ab.

Chapter 50 (the last one) of the ṢSS is an expansion of the last chapter of the KMT which ends just one line before this one. The abrupt ending of the KMT leads one to suppose that some portion of it has been lost. Both the ṢSS and the ŚM end with sections concerning the sanctity and secrecy of the secripture, as does the YKh. It is not impossible, therefore, that the ṢSS has preserved the missing ending of the KMT.

[2] kathitaṁ caiva deveśi ṣaṭsāhasraṁ [k, kh: -sahasra] matottamam ||
tiṣṭhate yatra deveśi taṁ deśaṁ nirupadravam | ṢSS 50/117cd-118ab.

> Those disciples are pure and belong to the tradition (kramika) who have seen this Śrīmata. They are liberated although still alive while the others, (although) alive, are (as if) dead.[1].

The Kubjikā Tantras, as do esoteric traditions in general, frequently warn that both those who reveal the sacred secrets of the tradition and those to whom they are told will suffer dire consequences. Fortunately, the Tantra provides for an interesting and, for modern potential practitioners, a significant exception. What happens if you just happen to read the scripture or walk into a secret ritual by mistake? No one has told you anything. You have simply found out by yourself. Will you suffer? No, on the contrary:

> He who hears or reads this Kula scripture, the Śrīmata (by chance), or who, due to the negligence (of those performing a ritual) is unnoticed and sees the extraction of the mantras, is initiated that very moment and enters the Western House.[2]

The presence of the scripture is so powerful that one of the rules (samaya) an initiate should observe is that all the rites (anuṣṭhāna) and inner practices should be performed in front of it.[3] The Command of the deity for one who does so is very intense. By seeing it or touching it, sin is destroyed. One who obtains the Śrīmata sees the Śāmbhava plane.[4] The true Kula teacher (ācārya) is one who knows it[5] and he who knows it, knows the entire tradition. The teaching that is transmitted verbally accompanies that of the scripture. The spoken and the written word work together. Moreover, just as Bhairava receives the Command from the goddess, he also receives the transmission of the teachings. Concretely, this is the scripture. In the same way, after the neophyte has passed through the rites of initiation and been inwardly purified, the teacher gives him the scripture by dictating and carefully explaining it. Thus, just after receiving initiation, the neophyte resolves: "I will write the Śrīmata".[6] He then worships the book (pustaka) he will copy and the materials he uses to do so.[7]

The act of copying, if done in the prescribed way, is itself an initiation the signs of which, outer and inner, the neophyte exhibits and experiences.[8] However,

---

[1] KuKh 30/205.
[2] KuKh 30/201cd-202.
[3] KuKh 37/10c.
[4] YKh (1) 27/58ab.
[5] KuKh 42/74-75.
[6] śrīmataṁ tu likhiṣyāmi KuKh 30/31c.
[7] KuKh 30/119cd-121.
[8] KuKh 30/15.

if it is not done properly many bad omens, diseases and obstacles arise.[1] The way this is done is described in chapter 30 of our text where parallel sources have been collected together in the notes to which the reader is referred.

The Yogapīṭha

Identified with the entire Saṁvartāmaṇḍala, the Seat of Yoga, contains the six parts (prakāra) or Kulas of the Krama.[2] More specifically, the Seat of Yoga is the triangular core of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala[3] which, as usual, is treated as emblematic of the entire maṇḍala.[4] Repleat with all the twenty-five principles of existence,[5] it is where the goddess resides[6] and has been revealed in a special way in Koṅkaṇa.[7] As it is the source and ground of the tradition, the teaching of the Kubjikā Tantras is called the transmission of the sacred seat of Yoga (yogapīṭhakrama).[8] As the source and ultimate repository of the teachings, generated by reflecting (vicāra) upon it,[9] the name suits the quintessential core of the maṇḍala. This is especially because it is the inner counterpart of the outer Yogapīṭha, which in the course of Siddhānta ritual is the place where the scripture is kept and worshipped.[10] Similarly, just as the physical, material support upon which the Kramamaṇḍala is drawn is called the Seat of Yoga, in the same way the inner Seat of Yoga is considered to be the ground of the Krama. The ṢSS and commentary explain:

> O goddess, one should draw the Śrīkrama in a fine house (on a piece of ground that) has been smeared (with cow dung)  and pure, has been scented with perfume and incense. Or (for that purpose) one should fashion the Seat of Yoga (yogapīṭha) (which can be made of) gold, silver, copper, wood, bell metal, or clay.
>
> (Commentary): One should draw the Śrīkrama in a beautiful house and on beautiful (auspicious) ground. Or else worship (arcana) (can take place) by means of these supports of the rite (pūjādhāra) that

---

[1] KuKh 30/2cd- 4abc cf. KuKh 57/90-91ab.
[2] KuKh 58/96cd-97ab.
[3] yogapīṭhaṁ pūrvoktatrikoṇam adhomukham Ṭ MS K fl. 99b.
[4] KuKh 7/97ab, 26/62, 27/29-30ab; see notes to 2/18 and 7/46.
[5] Ibid. 46/1 ff..
[6] Ibid. 26/62.
[7] Ibid. 38/29.
[8] Ibid. 10/33.
[9] Ibid. 58/98cd-99ab.
[10] See notes to KuKh 27/29-30ab. This is also called the Sacred Seat of Yoga in the mantra dedicated to it in Siddhānta ritual which is: OṀ HĀṀ YOGAPĪṬHĀYA NAMAḤ | OṀ HĀṀ HAUṀ VIDYĀPĪṬHĀYA NAMAḤ | ŚSP I p. 227.

serve as the Seats of Yoga (yogapīṭha), made of gold, silver, copper, wood and clay.[1]

Traditional Accounts of the Origin of the Scriptures and the Manthānabhairavatantra

The Kubjikā Tantras have occasion to describe the 'descent of the scripture' and the stages through which it takes place on several occasions. The first passage we shall examine is called the Sūtra[2] concerning the Descent of the Scripture of the Transmission (kramāgamāvatārasūtra). It is found in both recensions of the Yogakhaṇḍa of the MBT.[3] It is introduced by the god who says that he is frightened by the world of transmigration (saṁsāra), the great and terrible ocean of Māyā, crooked with the waves of countless tormenting thoughts, and petitions the goddess to save him. As the scriptures have been created by the goddess out of compassion for the suffering of sentient beings to free them from the round of rebirth, she responds by telling him about the way they have come to earth, as follows:

> O Lord of the Heroes, great lord! I am pleased with your excellent devotion. The Khañjinīmata that extends for a billion (verses) (śatakoṭi) has been explained (to you). In this way (as the Khañjinīmata), that Śāmbhavī energy, which is endless, has become infinite.[4] The (threefold state namely that) pertaining to Śiva (śāmbhava), Śakti (śākta) and individual existence (āṇava) has come

---

[1] ālikhec chrīkramaṁ devi suveśmani pralepite [k kh: -taṁ] ||
 * * * tamaṁ śuddhe [k kh: śuddhaṁ] gandhadhūpādivāsite* |
yogapīṭhaṁ [k, kh: pīṭhe] tu kartavyaṁ haimaṁ vā raupyajaṁ tu vā ||
tāmrajaṁ dārujaṁ vāpi kāṁsyajaṁ mṛṇmayaṁ tathā | ṢSS 40/29cd-31ab.
vyākhyā - śrīkramaṁ suśobhanagṛhe suśobhanabhūmau [k: śu-] lekhanīyam uta hemaraupyatāmradārukaiḥ [k kh: -kāṁ] samṛṇmayair etaiḥ [k kh: -mayaiḥ -] yogapīṭhabhūtaiḥ pūjādhāraiḥ arcanam ||

[2] According to the colophon of YKh (1) this passage is a sūtra. It reads: This is the sūtra called `the descent of the Kramāgama'. (It belongs to) the first section (ādyakhaṇḍa) in the (scripture of) twenty-four thousand verses (iti śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre ādyakhaṇḍe kramāgamāvatāro nāma sūtram). However, according to the colophon in YKh (2) this passage is a chapter (ānanda). It says: 'This chapter (ānanda) is called the Descent of the Āgama. (It belongs to the) tradition that is the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava (ityādyāvatāre mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe anvaye āgamāvatāro nāmānandaḥ).'

[3] Concerning these two recensions and the sections - khaṇḍa - of the MBT, see below, p. 103 ff.. The following passage is drawn from the YKh (1). The variants found in YKh (2) have been put in the notes.

[4] YKh (2) (2/5d) reads: ādibhūtā parāparā - 'which is the first and is both supreme and inferior'.

about by her impulse. She abides in the three worlds as will, knowledge and action.

Above Meru resides Bhairava, tranquil and free of defects. Supreme, he is rich with the jewels of countless qualities and is encompassed by millions of Rudras. He has heard all of this (scripture) that extends for a billion (śatakoṭi) (verses). The Khañjinīmata is the divine tradition (anvaya) that has come down through the series (of teachers). Coming (originally) from Ādinātha (the First Nātha), it was brought down (into the world) and transmitted (avatārita) to Mitra. From Mitra is was transmitted (avatārita) to the venerable Ṣaṣṭhanātha. Half of that (was received) by Caryanātha and half of that again (was transmitted to) Uḍunātha. Half of that (belonged to) Bṛhatkantha and half of that (was transmitted to) Gaṇādhyakṣa. That remnant is the Khañjinīmata that has come (down) by way of Akula(nātha). (The version consisting of) 125,000 verses was brought down (into the world) by (the teacher) called Ciñca(nātha).

It was brought down onto the surface of the earth in order to grace (his) disciples. Whatever there is that is more than this was brought down into the middle of the land of Bhārata by the assembly of Siddhas by the Yoga of the transmission (kramayoga) of good lineages (suśreṇi). Dependent in this way on the Siddhas, the (state) free of thought constructs (was realised) on the Island (of the Moon) again and again (sakṛt sakṛt).

(It consists of four parts - pāda - namely) Kriyā, Caryā, Jñāna[1] and Yoga which is the fourth. It was brought to the tenth Siddha called Kaṇṭhanātha. It was sealed in the netherworld by the great soul called Bimba(nātha) and was obtained by the goddess's permission and placed in the (snake) Vāsuki's house. O Kuleśvara, he guarded it carefully for three Ages (yuga)[2]. O Lord, the well concealed convention called (the Convention of the) Flower has been explained.

The Caturviṁśatisāhasra (the scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses), that is, the Khañjinīmata which is hard to acquire, was brought onto the surface of the earth by the venerable Karālanātha. Three and a half thousand verses were brought (into the world) by Tumbura. (This was) the Tantra, the venerable

---

[1] In KuKh 30/106 dravyam ('substance') replaces 'jñānam' ('knowledge'). This is also the reading in YKh (2). Concerning the four parts into which an Āgama is theoretically divided see below, p. 95.

[2] The scripture was, therefore revealed in this, the fourth Age namely, the Age of Strife (kaliyuga). Cf. YKh (2) 7(8)/32.

Kulālikāmata, that was known on the southern path (dakṣiṇe mārge) (i.e. in South India). It is called the Ratnasūtra and is accomplished in the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha).[1]

The Scripture of a Billion Verses (śatakoṭi)

We begin our analysis of this complex passage with a schematic representation of the stages through which the scripture passes in the course of its transmission. The last two stages are the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses which is, as we shall see, the Manthānabhairavatantra. This is followed, according to this account, by the Kulālikāmata, which is the Kubjikāmata consisting of three and a half thousand verses.

---

[1] tuṣṭāhaṁ [k: tuṣṭohaṁ] tava vīrendra atibhaktyā mahāprabho [kh: deveśa kathayāmi savistaraṁ] |
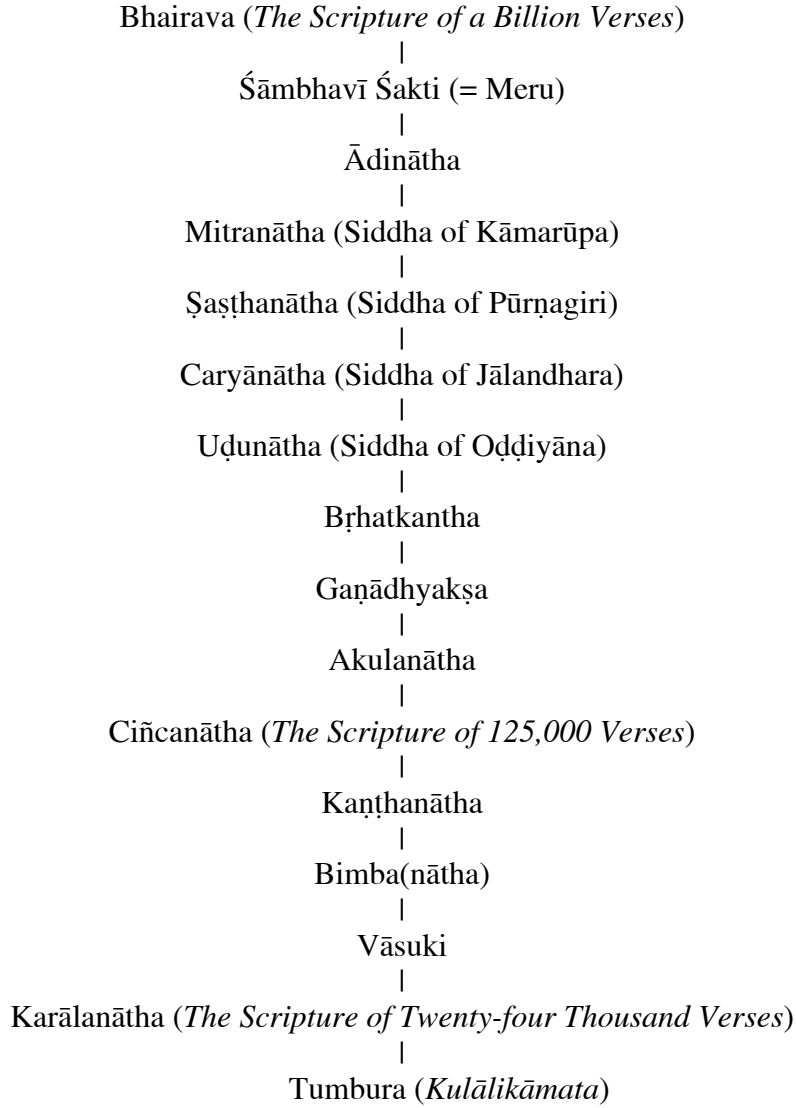
śatakoṭipravistīrṇaṁ [kh: -ṇe] vyākhyātaṁ [kh: -te] khañjinīmatam [kh: -manī] ||
evaṁ sā śāmbhavī śaktir anantānantatāṁ gatā [kh: ādibhūtā parāparā] |
tasyāḥ [k: taśyā] sampreraṇāyātaṁ [k: saṁpreṇāyātaṁ; kh: sampreraṇāyātaṁ] śāmbhavaṁ [all MSs śā.bhava] śāktam āṇavam [k: śāṁbhavaśāktāktam āṇavaṁ; kh: śāktataṁ āṇavānvayaṁ] ||
icchā jñānī kriyākhyā [k: kriyāsyā] ca saṁsthitā bhuvanatraye [k: -trayā; kh: trisvarūpataḥ] |
merūrdhve saṁsthitaṁ śāntaṁ bhairavaṁ vigatāmayaṁ [k: vimātā-; kh: vikatā-] ||
anekaguṇaratnāḍhyaṁ koṭirudrāvṛtaṁ [k: -vṛta] param |
tena śrutam aśeṣo 'yaṁ [k: śrūmaśeṣo.ayaṁ] śatakoṭipravistaram [k: śatakoṭisuraṁ] ||
pāramparyāgataṁ divyaṁ anvayaṁ khañjinīmatam |
ādināthāt [k: -nāthā] samāyātaṁ [k: vaśāyātaṁ] mitrasyaivāvatāritaṁ [kh: mitranāthena tacchrutam] ||
mitrasyaiva tu pārśvāc ca ṣaṣṭhanāthāvatāritam [k: śrīthaṣṭanāthā-] dhīmatā] |
tadardhaṁ caryanāthena uḍunāthe [k: ūhnanāthe] tadardhakam ||
tadardhaṁ bṛhatkanthasya gaṇādhyakṣe [k: gaṇāvekṣe] tadardhakam |
taccheṣaṁ akuleneti āyātaṁ khañjinīmatam || [kh: caryārdhaṁ oḍanāthena vṛddhakanthe tadardhakam tadarhjakaṁ ||]
sapādalakṣam ekaṁ tu ciñcākhyenāvatāritam |
śiṣyānanugrahārthāya [k: śikhyā-] ānītaṁ pṛthivītale [kh: ājñākulaparvate] ||
ato 'dhikaṁ [k: asaudhikaṁ] ca yat kiñcit siddhasaṅghāvatāritam |
siddhādhīnaṁ tathā dvīpe nirvikalpaṁ sakṛt sakṛt ||
suśreṇikramayogena [k: nirśreṇīkramayogena] bhāratavarṣamadhyataḥ [k: bhārate-] |
kriyā caryā tathā jñānaṁ [k: dravyaṁ] yogapādaṁ caturthakam ||
ānītaṁ daśame [k: daśama] siddhe [k: nāsti; kh: daśame siddhe] kaṇṭhanāthena saṁjñayā |
pātāle mudritas tena bimbākhyena mahātmanā ||
devyādeśena samprāptaṁ sthāpitaṁ vāsukīgṛhe |
tena [k: nāsti; kh: tena] saṁrakṣitaṁ [k: -ta] yatnāt [k: yatnā] yugās trīṇi kuleśvara ||
saṁketaṁ kathitaṁ nātha suguptaṁ [k: saptakaṁ; kh: suguptaṁ] puṣpasaṁjñakam [k: sparśasaṁjñakaṁ; kh:] | [. . .]
śrīmatkarālanāthena [k: śrīmatkarālakaṁthena; kh: śrīmatkalālakanāthena] anītam avanītale |
caturviṁśitisāhasraṁ durlabhaṁ khañjinīmatam ||


The scripture emanates from Śāmbhavīśakti. This is the triadic energy that encompasses the entire range of reality, namely: 1) transcendent Śiva who is the ultimate cause of all things, 2) his power through which all things are brought into being, sustained and destroyed and 3) the sphere of finite, individual existence. The goddess abides in these three spheres of being as the powers of will, knowledge and action, respectively. This triad is the 'supreme face' of the deity, that is, the sixth one above the five faces of Sadāśiva. This 'supreme face' is essentially the Trika triad which Jayaratha explains in his commentary on the Tantrāloka as follows:

> Maheśvara is (present) there also along with his power which has his same nature. Uniting, one attains the supreme realisation, which is his supreme face, the abode of the flow of emission (visarga), beautiful with the cosmic bliss that arises by the unfolding of the Absolute (anuttara). Undivided from the subsequent faces (that emerge at lower levels), it is the seed of all (things). That is considered to be the wave (of consciousness), the Nameless, the Essence of the Supreme (power) (parā) that has come forth from the pulsation of the Heart. That is the supreme and subtle Triad (trika), endowed with the undivided (oneness) of all the energies.[1]

The Kubjikā Tantras represent this triad as the sides of the triangular Yoni, pregnant with the seeds of Speech. Also called Meru - the mythical mountain at the centre and apex of the world, it is located at the End of the Twelve above the head.[2] This is the level from which emanation pours forth out of the transcendent and with it the scriptures. Accordingly, the texts and all the elaborate colophons of the MBT repeatedly affirm that the scripture comes down to earth 'along the Path of Meru' (merumārga). In the following passage from the KRU we are told that Meru is the maṇḍala of the transmission (krama) of the goddess. It is the first of all the sacred seats, that is, the original source of all the scriptures:

> The supreme sky (nabhas) is pervasive and free of (all sensorial) qualities, including sound and the rest. It should be known to be the supreme space (parākāśa) which is (the ultimate) reality (tattva), namely, the Void (śūnya) free of imperfection. It is the lineage (santāna) called the Path of Meru in the Kula teaching. O goddess, I am the Great Meru and the omnipresent, supreme space. O great goddess, that beginningless transmission (krama) originated from its presence. That is called the First Seat (ādipīṭha), the beginningless Kramamaṇḍala.[3]

---

sārdhas trīṇi sahasrāṇi ānītās [k: anitā-] tumbureṇa tu [kh: tumburaṇāvatāritā] |
veditaṁ [k: niveditaṁ] dakṣiṇe mārge tantraṁ śrīkulālikāmatam || [kh: saṁsāraṁ kaulike mārge śrīmatkaulālikāmataṁ ||]
ratnasūtram iti proktaṁ siddho 'sau dakṣiṇāpathe |
YKh (1) 12/33-44, 45ab, 47-49ab (labelled K) = YKh (2) 2/4cd-18 (labelled Kh).

[1] Comm. on TĀ 1/1.

[2] See KuKh 8/5-7ab, for a definition of the Path of Meru in these terms.

[3] śabdādiguṇanirmuktaṁ vyāpakaṁ paramaṁ nabhaḥ [g: mahat] |
parākāśeti vijñeyaṁ śūnyaṁ tattvam anāmayam ||
santānaṁ merumārgeti [g: -mārgreti] proktaṁ yat kulaśāsane [k kh: sāsane] |
*so 'haṁ devi [k, kh: * ] mahāmeruḥ parākāśaś ca [kh: -kāśasva] sarvagaḥ ||
tacchakāśāt [g: -śān] mahādevi anādikramasaṁbhavaḥ |

In this reference Bhairava identifies himself with Meru. In the passage we are examining, he is above it, implying that the triadic goddess is Meru. Either way, the Path of Meru, whether that of the god or the goddess, is regularly mentioned in the long colophons at the end of the chapters of major Kubjikā Tantras. Commenting on the meaning of these colophons, the Ṭīkā summerizes the main points for us. The Path of Meru is the maṇḍala of the goddess, which is described concisely in the first five verses of the ṢSS with which the KuKh also begins:

> In this way everything is the same as universal bliss. Dakṣa's sacrifice (sattra) has come from the Path of Meru, that is, from the End of the Twelve above the head which is the location (sthāna) of Samvartāmaṇḍala. (What) the Path of Meru is should be grasped (grāhyāt) from the five verses of the Ṣaṭsāhasra. The same is said there itself: `Meru is said to be the head and the body is the earth.'[1] Thus Meru is the Wheel called Unborn (Aja).[2]

Similarly, the Kashmiri Kālīkrama, also called Mahānaya, the Great Teaching, identifies the source of its scripture and teachings as the goddess's triangular Yoni. Thus in the Yonigahvaratantra we read concerning the origin of the Great Teaching:

> In the beginning, all this was a Void, unmanifest and without support. Then the Light arose and from the Light, Resonance (dhvani). Resonance became the Word and the Word became Sound. From Sound arose the Point and from the Point, a Lotus. Then on the back (of the Lotus) (emerged) a Triangle, very brilliant and of the nature of bliss. Thus on the back of that was the Wheel, that is, the Triangle of the energy of austerity (tāparūpin). The Great Teaching was brought down by the process of bliss and austerity (hlādatāpakrama). Thus the supreme Yoni in the centre in the form of the (triangular) letter E was ādipīṭhaṁ tad evoktaṁ anādikramamaṇḍalam || KRU 2/44-46.

---

[1] This reference is drawn from ṢSS 1/28ab which reads: śiro meruḥ samuddiṣṭaṁ; cf. ibid. 1/39b: meruś caiva śiraḥ smṛtam. Similarly in the KRP (7/7a) we read: śiraś ca merunāmānaṁ.

[2] evaṁ sarvaṁ [kh: sarva] sarvānandasamam | merumārgān mastakopari dvādaśāntāt [k: -mastakoparād-; kh: -māgāt- -mastakoparāt-] saṁvartāmaṇḍalasthānāt [k kh: savantā-] dākṣaṁ [kk: dṛkṣaṁ; k: dṛkṣa] sattraṁ [k kh: rāttaṁ] merumārgaṁ ṣaṭsāhasrāt [k kh: -sāhasryāt] pañcaśloka-madhyād [kh: -madhyāt] grāhyāt | tathā tatraivoktaṁ meruḥ śiraḥ samuddiṣṭaṁ [kh: samudiṣṭaṁ] śarīraṁ pṛthivī smṛtā || evaṁ meruḥ ajākhyaṁ cakram | Ṭ MS K fl 1a.

The Wheel of the Unborn (ajacakra) is the Mouth of the Unborn (ajavaktra) also called the Mouth of the Teacher (guruvaktra).

> most excellent. There in the middle arouse a spark, very powerful and brilliant. From the Spark arouse a full (and complete) Sound (rāva). From (that) Sound arose the (lunar) goddess present in the New and Full (Moon).[1]

The goddess is both the scripture and its source, just as she is the tradition itself and the transmission of liberating grace propagated through it and their source. The following passage drawn from the YKh eulogizing the goddess and the god is, effectively, a commentary on the passage we are examining. One of the recensions of this section of the MBT begins with it. As if to stress that Kubjikā, the goddess praised at the beginning of her Tantra, is the triadic goddess of the Trika, she is not named directly. Instead she is presented in her triple aspect as the supreme Triad of goddesses, Parā, Parāparā and Aparā, who govern the 'three principles' (tattvatritaya) of the Trika:

> I salute that (goddess) called Parā who is the supreme will (parecchā) subtle, unchanging, called Supreme (Parā), Middling (Parāparā), and Inferior (Aparā). Hard to understand (durbodhā), she can be realized (only) by means of awakened consciousness (bodha). She is the Pure Plane and devoid of the qualities (of Nature) (guṇa), she is the Void (kha). Eternal bliss, (all the beings in) the ten directions bow (to her). She who is supreme and well know is on the plane of the three paths (i.e. the Yoni) in the beginning, middle, and end (of all things).
>
> The Khañjinīmata, which is the divine Tradition of Vakrikā (vakrikāmnāya) that came down through the sequence of the series (of teachers) and extends for a billion (śatakoṭi) (verses) has been emitted (by her).[2]

Transcendental Bhairava is beyond that, in the End of the Sixteen. Thus the YKh goes on to explain that:

---

[1] YGT fl. 34b quoted in ASB cat. vol. 1, p. 109.

[2] *yā sūkṣmā nirvikārā [k, kh: -kā ] aparaparaparā yā parākhyā parecchā *durbodhā [k, kh: dūrvoma] bodhagamyā paramaśivamayī [k: -mayīr] nirguṇā [k: * guṇā]* khasvarūpā [k, kh: svasvarūpo] | *nityānandasvarūpā [k: * * * * svarūpā] suragaṇanamitā [k, kh: stuti-] vakrikākhyā prasiddhā* ādau madhyāvasāne [k: -vasthāne; kh: -vaśāne] trividhagatiyutāṁ [k, kh: -tā] tāṁ [kh: nāṁ] parākhyāṁ [k: -khyaṁ; kh: -khāṁ] namāmi || śatakoṭipravistīrṇaṁ [k, kh: śatkoṭi-] pāramparyakramāgatam divyaṁ śrīvakrikāmnāyaṁ paścimaṁ [kh: + khaṁ] khañjinīmatam || YKh (2) 1/1-2.

The god Bhairava, who destroys phenomenal existence, resides above Meru.[1] Without beginning and end, tranquil, he is the agent of emanation and withdrawal.

Delighted by the divine bliss that is Khañjinī's gift, he is made of countless wonders and, endowed with endless qualities, he whose form is the bliss of the (primal) cause (of all things) bestows knowledge and understanding.

(His) mind solely intent on meditation (dhyāna), he is sustained by (his) power (śakti). Established within (the Absolute) devoid of beginning and end, the universe (disappears and) becomes darkness (tamobhūta). Devoid of emanation and withdrawal, time and moment, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra, Īśvara, and Sadāśiva[2] and the Eight Bhairavas,[3] he is the lord and (universal) cause.

He, the god who is both supreme (para) and inferior (apara), brings about emanation and withdrawal. He is the primordial seed, the supreme principle, pervasive and everywhere present (sarvatomukha). In (his) differentiated aspect (sakalībhūta), sustained by meditation and well controlled, (he abides) as the time (which is) the multifarious procession (of things) and as the extensive procession of time.[4]

---

[1] Kh: Bhairava who destroys phenomenal existence is comfortably seated on the peak of Meru.

[2] These gods are also called the Five Instruments (pañcakaraṇa). Their sonic form are the Five Praṇavas and they preside over the Five Elements.

[3] The Eight Bhairavas and their consorts the Eight Mothers preside over the directions. Their absence implies that space, as well as time, is absent within Bhairava.

[4] merūrdhve [k: merurddhe] saṁsthitaṁ [k: -tā] devaṁ [k: devī] bhairavaṁ [k: bhairavī] bhavanāśanam [k: -nāśanī] | [kh: merupṛṣṭhe sukhāsīnaṁ bhairavaṁ bhavanāśanaṁ ||]
anādinidhanaṁ [k: -ne] śāntaṁ [k: śānaṁ] sṛṣṭisaṁhārakārakam ||
khañjinyā varadānena divyānandena nanditam |
anekāścaryaracitaṁ [k: anakā-; kh: bharaṇād bhairavākāraṁ] anantaguṇaśālinam ||
vidyābodhavidhātāraṁ [kh: ājñābodha- k: -vimatāraṁ] kāraṇānandavigraham |
dhyānaikacetasaṁyuktaṁ [k: vyānenaretasāyuktaṁ;] śaktyādhiṣṭhitavigraham [k: śaktyādhiṣṭitaṁ * * *; kh: śaktyādheṣṭinavigrahaṁ] ||
anādinidhanāntasthaṁ [k: anādimādimaṁtasthaṁ] tamobhūtaṁ [k: tamorūtaṁ] carācaram | [kh: anādinidhanaṁ devaṁ sarvaṁ [+ ca] saṁhṛtya saṁsthitaṁ || tasminneva]
sṛṣṭisaṁhārarahitaṁ [k: sṛṣṭisahābharahitaṁ] kālavelāvivarjitam ||
brahmā viṣṇuśca rudraśca īśvaraśca sadāśivaḥ |
bhairavāṣṭakalokaiśca varjitaṁ kāraṇeśvaram ||
yo.asau parāparo [k: -rau] devaḥ [k: devo] sṛṣṭisaṁhārakārakaḥ | [kh: candrādityagrahairdhyānaṁ nirālokaṁ nilālokaṁ carācaraṁ ||] sadāśivaḥ -śivaiḥ ||
bhairavairlokapālaiśca varjitaṁ kāraṇeśvaraṁ ||
yā sā vanantamityāhuḥ cintakāraṇamavyayaṁ ||]
ādibījaṁ paraṁ tattvaṁ vyāpakaṁ sarvatomukham |
sa eva sakalībhūtaṁ dhyānadhiṣṭaṁ suyantritam ||

> (Whereas) she, the Mother (of the universe), is the supreme Light seen within the heart. There, in the middle (of the heart) one can see (her) the primordial energy, the Transmental (manonmanī).
>
> Devoid of all the principles of existence (tattva), she is incomparable and without form. Abiding there, in the centre, one can see the goddess (kuṇḍalinī) whose form is coiled (kuṇḍalākṛti). Kubjikā is that supreme goddess (parā devī), the first (ādibhūtā) (of all things) in the universe. [. . .] Full of the Three Principles, she has issued forth in countless modes.[1]

The Khañjinīmata

Khañjinī appears only once in the KMT and ṢSS as the name of the scripture.[2] It is much more common in the MBT, both as a name of the goddess and of her scripture. There Khañjinīmata is the initial most elevated form of the Transmission of the Skyfarers (khecarakrama), that is, the Divine Current. Accordingly, the following verse that concludes an entire chapter in our text dedicated to an exposition of the Divine Current, celebrates the Khañjinīmata, both as the tradition and the scripture:

> (One) certainly (achieves) liberation when one attains the Transmission of the Skyfarers (khecarakrama), that is, the compendium (saṁgraha) of the Khañjinīmata. This is the Command on the Śāmbhava plane.[3]

The Divine Current is the flow of the Transmental energy of the goddess through the Void in the form of her pure internal emanation. According to the scriptural genealogy we are examining, it is the form in which the scripture was transmitted in the first three Ages (yuga) up to when Vāsuki, the divine snake, received it. The scriptures transmitted subsequently are distinguished, in name at anekakramakālena bahukālakrameṇa tu | [kh: saṁsthitaṁ devadeveśaṁ bahukālakrameṇa [-kālā-] tu ||] YKh (1) 12/3-9ab (labelled K) = YKh (2)1/3-9ab (labelled Kh).

---

[1] *yā mātā [k, kh: * ] sā parā jyotiḥ [k, kh: jyoti] icchāśaktisvarūpiṇī [k: śchā-] |
dṛśyate [k, kh: paśyate] tatra madhyasthā parā ādyā manonmanī ||
sarvatattvavihīnā sā anaupamyā [k, kh: -mya] nirākṛtiḥ [k, kh: -kṛti] |
tatra madhyasthitā devī dṛśyate kuṇḍalākṛtiḥ ||
vakrarūpadharā devī ādibhūtā carācare |
tattvatritayasaṁpūrṇā [k, kh: tasyatritayasaptarṇā] bhedānekair visarpitā [k, kh: sadānekair-] |
YKh (2) 1/11-13ab, 15ab.

[2] See KMT 20/57 and ṢSS 14/59d.

[3] KuKh 57/105-106ab = YKh (1) 36/108.

least, from their predecessor. Elsewhere, as with the other names, the Khañjinīmata is both the MBT of 24,000 verses[1] and the original scripture of a billion (śatakoṭi) verses, that is, the whole tradition (anvya) transmitted through the series of teachers (pāramparāgata).[2] The KMT is called 'Khañjinīmata' once in the ṢSS,[3] never in the KMT itself or in the ŚM. According to the MBT, the Khañjinīmata is the MBT, which should be carefully distinguished from the Kubjikāmata, otherwise known as the Kulālikāmata[4] because:

> what was not said in the version (kalpa) (called) Kulālikāmata (consisting of) three and a half thousand (verses) has been taught in the great Āgama (bṛhadāgama), the Khañjinīmata, belonging to the division beginning with KĀ (otherwise called) the Śrīmata and King of Matas, consisting of twenty-four thousand (verses).[5]

The first teacher – Ādinātha - of the Khañjinīmata is Bhairava himself who, empowered by the goddess, is the first propagator of the teachings. He brings the original scripture into the world in its most extensive form. Here, as in the KMT and elsewhere, it is said to extend for a billion verses (śatakoṭi). Thus in the KMT we read: 'This, the Tantra of the Supreme Lord (pārameśvara) extends for a billion (verses) (śatakoṭipravistīrṇa). It will have countless divisions, primary and secondary of many kinds.'[6] This figure is a standard one for an original scripture. The TS, for example, attributes the same length to the original

---

[1] The Khañjinīmata consisting of 24,000 verses is hard to acquire (caturviṁśatisāhasraṁ [k, kh, gh: -viṁśitisā-] durlabhaṁ khañjinīmatam) YKh (1) 12/47cd. It word appears three times with this meaning in YKh (2). For example: It is hard to understand the Khañjinīmata which is (the scripture of) 24,000 (verses) (caturviṁśatisāhasraṁ [k: -sra] durbodhaṁ khañjinīmatam |). YKh (2) 6/26ab = YKh (2) 12/45ab, quoted below. See also YKh (1) 27/73-74ab where it is called the 'great scripture' (bṛhadāgama) that contains the KMT. It even appears in a colophon as a synonymn of the MBT, the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses: ājñāpārameśvare khaṁjinīmate śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre avvākramabhāṣite (g: athā-) ṣaṭtṛṁśadvṛt yadhikāro nāma sūtraṁ samāptam || YKh (1).

[2] *tena śrutam [k, kh, gh: śrūm] aśeṣo 'yaṁ [ṅ: -ṣodyaṁ] śatakoṭipravistaram [k, kh, gh: śatakoṭi * suraṁ; ṅ: -ra]* |
pāramparyāgataṁ divyaṁ anvayaṁ [gh: -ya] khañjinīmatam || YKh (1) 12/36cd-37ab.

[3] *atra devi sphuṭaṁ divyaṁ * * śrīkhañjinīmate* || ṢSS 14/59cd.

[4] Concerning this name, see below, p. 70 ff..

[5] noktam adhyuṣṭasāhasre [k: -madvyaṣṭha-; gh: noktamadhvaṣṭa-; ṅ: noktamahyaṣṭa-] kalpe [ṅ: kalpa] kulālike mate |
śrīmate matarāje ca [all MSs: na] caturviṁśasahasrake [g: -sāhasrake] ||
bṛhadāgame kādibhede [g: + bhede; ṅ: -da] nirṇītaṁ [all MSs: nirmitaṁ] khañjinīmate [g: -ta] |
YKh (1) 27/79-80ab.

[6] KMT 25/189.

form of the Siddhayogeśvarīmata.[1] The JY attributes this number of verses to the Mahāsaṁohanatantra, a Tantra that is regularly said to belong to the left current (vāmaśrotas) and the JY says is one of its sources.[2] Clearly, this figure is symbolic. When one wishes to express that something is so extremely large or so extensive that it is virtually infinite, one says that it numbers or extends for a 'billion'. We find an example of this usage in the following line in the JY: 'extending for a billion, Māyā is said to be endless.'[3] Similarly, Ananta (the Endless One), the serpent who supports the world, is said there to be: 'Ananta, whose nature is Karma and extends for a billion.'[4]

Parallel to the successive descent of the scripture, the line of transmission (anvaya) is formed progressively in a series of stages. The scriptures are initially transmitted through the transcendent progressively marked by the stages of the development of Sound (nāda). This is the Divine Current (divyaugha), also known as the Convention of the Flowers (puṣpasaṁketa). This is followed by the Current of Accomplished Ones (siddhaugha) and finally by the Current of Men (mānavaugha). The Current of Accomplished Ones is divided into the three lineages (oli) or transmissions (krama) founded by the three Siddhas who received the teachings in three sacred seats (pīṭha) or, according to the other, parallel, fourfold scheme, there are four seats – including Jālandhara from which the teaching is spread by Caryānātha. These four transmitted the teachings in the four Ages.

According to other accounts, the scriptures are propagated in the three lineages founded by three of these Siddhas. Thus we see repeated in this context a discrepancy that reappears regularly in the Kubjikā Tantras between a threefold and fourfold scheme. Moreover, note that in the account we are examining it appears that the normal order of the transmission has been reversed. Usually, the teaching is said to appear initially in Oḍḍiyāna, which is accordingly normally called the First Sacred Seat (ādyapīṭha). The presiding Siddha there is Oḍīśa, also called, Uḍunātha. Then the transmission proceeds, Age after Age, in each of the following seats. Although unusual, this change is not only found here. We find the same reverse order in another reference according to which it is the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses, that is, the MBT, that is transmitted by them.[5] The

---

[1] siddhayogeśvarītantre śatakoṭipravistare | TS 1/13ab.

[2] mahāsaṁmohane tantre śatakoṭipravistare |
tatra khyātaṁ yatra yogaṁ saṁkṣepād iha kathyate || JY 4/50/11.
Similarly:
mahāsaṁmohane tantre śatakoṭipravistare |
purākhyātaṁ punaś cādya tantrarāje jayadrathe || ibid. 4/49/102cd-103ab.

[3] śatakoṭipravistīrṇā māyānantā prakīrtitā | JY 1/9/471ab.

[4] śatakoṭipravistīrṇam anantaṁ karmarūpiṇam || JY 1/21/32cd.

[5] YKh (2) 7(8)/21.

same is implied in the following passage. It is drawn from a hymn - the Ādyoghadaṇḍaka - intoned by Bhairava when he saw the goddess emerge from the Liṅga. The goddess's Command transforms Bhairava into Mitranātha who receives the scripture and so is the first Siddha to propagate the teachings:

> O goddess! You have playfully, by simply churning, extracted (uddhṛtya) the Kaula nectar and, having done so, extracted the Śrīmata consisting of 125,000 verses. In this way, (the god) Assembly of Sounds (śabdarāśi) has played with you in the couple formed from the union with Mālinī. O goddess! The reality (symbolized by the triangular letter AI) generated by the conjunction of the letters A and E is you, O Ocean of the Yoni! When Mahābhairava, the god and lord, was aroused and seen by (your) lotus-like faces (adorned with) the garland of (sacred) verses and the rest, the complete Command was imparted (to him) in the course of (his) descent (into the world) in the four Ages. O goddess, the Āgama of 24,000 (verses) you transmitted to Mitranātha (in this way) is the great Śrīmata established by you in the Siddhakaula and, O goddess, (transmitted through the lineages of) the Child, Youth and the Aged along with the transmission of the Command (ājñākrama).[1]

According to the Kramāgamāvatārasūtra quoted above, Mitra was the first Siddha to receive the original extended form of the scripture. This he handed down to the following Siddhas of the sacred seats and the size of it halved with each transmission. In this case, although said to originate directly from the 'Ocean of the Yoni', that is, the triangular letter E, the scripture transmitted to Mitra is the

---

[1] *devi [k, kh, gh: davi] śambhuratnākaraṁ [k, kh, gh: chaṁbhuratnākaraṁ; ṅ: yachaṁbhuraṁnārakaṁ] tat [k, kh, gh: ta] tvayā līlayā mathanamātreṇa [k, kh, gh: -mātre *] uddhṛtya kaulāmṛtam uddhṛtaṁ [k, kh, gh: -mṛtamuṁḍaddhṛtaṁ] lakṣapādādhikaṁ [gh: * *? padā * *; ṅ: -pādedhikaṁ] śrīmatam | śabdarāśis tathā māliniyogayugme [gh: mālinī-; ṅ: -nāṁ] tvayā krīḍitaḥ [all MSs: -tam] | devi akārārthaikārasaṁyogāt [k: ahakārārthekārasaṁyojñā; kh: ahaṁkārārthekārasaṁ-; gh: ahaṁkārārthekārasaṁyojñā; ṅ: a ikāra īkāraṁ] yat tattvam utpadyate [k, kh: yatra tvam utpadyate; gh: yatvam utpadyate] | tat svarūpam asi [k, kh, gh, ṅ: svarūpā * si] yonyārṇave [k, kh, gh: yonyāṇaive; ṅ: yonyarṇava] ślokamālādivakrāmbujaiḥ [k, gh: sthākamālādivaktrāṁvujaiḥ; kh: sthokamālādivaktrāṁvujaiḥ; ṅ: -vakrānujaiḥ] kṣobhya [k, kh, gh: kṣotya] devaṁ [ṅ: deva] mahābhairavaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: tathābhairavaṁ] vīkṣitam nāthaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: nātha] caturyugāvatāre [k, gh: cāturyugīdivyaṁ; kh: cāturyugīdivya; ṅ: cātuyugādivya] saṁpūrṇājñā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: saṁpūrṇa-ājñā] pradattā [k, kh, gh: pradaṁtā] yac caturviṁśasāhaśrakaṁ [k, kh, gh: yeccaturviṁśasāhaśrikaṁ; ṅ: -sāhasrikaṁ] āgamaṁ [k, kh: āgmaṁ; gh: āgme] devi tvayā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: * taṁ] mitranāthāya [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -nāthasya] saṁkrāmitam tat [k, kh, gh: ta] tvayā sthāpitaṁ siddhakaule [kh: -kaula; ṅ: -kaulaṁ] mahāśrīmatam | bālakaumāravṛddhaṁ tathā devi [k, kh, gh: + satkhecaraṁ; ṅ: + sarsvacaraṁ |] ājñākramam* || Part of the Ādyoghadaṇḍaka in chapter 12 of YKh (1)

MBT, the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses. He then passes it on directly. Note also that in both accounts Mitra is portrayed as the first 'earthly' Siddha, as he is the myth in the KMT. Moreover, the usual serial order of the lineages through which the scripture is transmitted is reversed.

The Lakṣapādādhika – the Mata of 125,000 verses

Next, the version of the scripture in 125,000 verses is transmitted from Ciñcanātha to the following three teachers. This category of scripture is sometimes called the Pure Division (vimalabheda) of the scripture.[1] This modality is found in most accounts of the descent of the scripture[2] as it is in the colophons of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa. It is called the Kubjinīmata in the KuKauM and is said to be the source of the scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses.[3]

This is the only place the Mata of 125,000 verses (lakṣapādādhika) is mentioned in the KuKauM. It is not mentioned at all in the ṢSS. [4] The ŚM does not refer to the scripture of a billion verses (śatakoṭi), but does mention the scripture of 125,000 verses several times as one of its sources. Most of the first chapter of the ŚM consists of a long prose commentary on the Saṁvartāmaṇḍalasūtra with which the KMT begins. It concludes with a statement that this is a condensed explanation and refers to the Mata of 125,000 verses[5] where it is explained at length. The first part of chapter five of the ŚM is an exposition in code of the long Trikhaṇḍā Vidyā personified in the goddess

---

[1] See colophon of the Ṭīkā quoted below on p. 77.

[2] See, for example, KuKh 68/119.

[3] O goddess, the (scripture of) 125,000 (verses) is called the Kubjinīmata. Above that is the Kulatantra which penetrates the profound meaning of the scripture (grantha). O goddess, I have told you (this, the scripture of) 24,000 verses.

lakṣapādādhikaṁ devi yad uktaṁ kubjinīmatam ||
tasyordhve kulatantraṁ [ṅ: -taṁtre] tu [ṅ: nāsti] gūḍhagranthārthabhedakam |
kathitaṁ tava deveśi [ṅ: deśi] caturviṁśasāhasrakam ||

KuKauM 7/279-280ab; see also KuKh 30/174cd-175ab.

[4] This is the verse quoted in the previous note from chapter seven of the KuKauM that is drawn from chapter 50 of the ṢSS, which is an expansion of chapter 25 of the KMT. There it replaces the reading caturviṁśatisāhasra– of the KMT.

[5] I have explained the teaching concerning the Saṁvartāsūtra in brief. I have explained it extensively in the Mata of 125,000 verses. O benevolent one, out of love for you the essence of the essence has been revealed. Those who do not know (the meaning of the) Saṁvartā (sūtra) do not know the Śrīmata.

saṁkṣepeṇa mayā khyātaṁ saṁvartāsūtranirṇayaṁ [ṅ: saṁvarttāstatra-] |
vistareṇa mayā khyātaṁ lakṣapādādhike mate ||
sārāt sārataraṁ bhadre tava snehāt prakāśitam |
saṁvartāṁ [g, ṅ, ch: saṁvartā] ye na jānanti na te jānanti śrīmatam || ŚM 1/120-121.

Trikhaṇḍā Bhairavī. The ŚM concludes by saying that this was previously explained in the Mata of 125,000 verses.[1] The Yoginīs governing the fifty letters of the Mālinī alphabet are listed in chapter seven of the ŚM. After that their iconic forms are described in detail which, we are told, has already been done previously in the Mata of 125,000 verses.[2] As Kubjikā is herself frequently identified with Mālinī, this alphabet is, of course, well known, to the KMT.[3] However, even though the names of the Yoginīs governing the letters are listed more than once,[4] their form is not described. The ŚM, which has a special penchant for iconography, is the [1] O fair faced lady, one should know (the Vidyā) according to the division of the letters through the teacher. I have explained it previously in the Mata of 125,000 verses.

---

varṇabhedena jñātavyā deśikena varānane |
pūrvam eva mayākhyātaṁ lakṣapādādhike mate || ŚM 5/48.

This Vidyā is taught in chapter five of the KMT which is drawn from chapter six of the TS. See chart in Goudriaan and Schoterman 1986: 490 ff.. Concerning the deposition (nyāsa) of Trikhaṇḍā on the body, the KnT claims that the personified Vidyā Trikhaṇḍikā Śivā and its visualized form is taught independently in the compendium (saṁgraha) called Śrīmata:

(The Vidyā) Trikhaṇḍikā Śivā has been explained by indicating the place (on the body where the letters are located), but not according to another teaching (mata). (This Vidyā) is only known in the Śrīmata. By virtue of the sixfold deposition, this (Vidyā) has a visualized form (mūrtidhyāna) that has been described independently in the compendium (saṁgraha) (called) the Śrīmata.

*sthānanirdeśataḥ [g: -śa ] kathitā [k kh: kathite; g: kathito] yat trikhaṇḍikā śivā ||
nānyamatānusāreṇa [g: mānyematā-] kevalā śrīmate matā |
ṣoḍhānyāsavaśāc ceyaṁ mūrtidhyānasamāyutā ||
uktā svatantrataś ceyaṁ śrīmate saṁgrahe tv iyam | KnT 1/130cd-132ab.

Neither the deposition nor the the visualization of this goddess is mentioned in the KMT. However, we find a description of the deposition of a brief form of the Vidyā called Trikhaṇḍāhṛdaya in chapter five of the ŚM where it said to have been kept hidden in the KMT (śrīmate ca mayā gopyaṁ trikhaṇḍāhṛdayaṁ param | asmin matottare devi sugopyaṁ prakaṭīkṛtaṁ [prakaṭāmi te] || ŚM 5/112). In chapter six of the ŚM the visualized form of Trikhaṇḍā is described and the deposition of her limbs and faces. This section ends with the statement: 'O fair faced lady, I have not told this secret to anyone. It has been hidden in all the Tantras and it has been revealed to you today' (na mayā kasyacit khyātam idaṁ guhyaṁ varānane | gopitaṁ sarvatantreṣu tavādya prakaṭīkṛtam || ŚM 6/113). Perhaps the KnT intends the ŚM by the expression 'the compendium (saṁgraha) called Śrīmata'.

[2] āsāṁ [g: asyāṁ] mūrtīḥ [kh g: mūrtti] pravakṣyāmi yathākramam udāhṛtam |
pūrvaṁ ca kathitā bhadre lakṣapādādhike [g: -kaṁ] mate | [kh: missing*]* ŚM 7/131.

[3] See Schoterman 1977: 161 note 63, 935-936. Concerning the role of Mālinī in the process of creation, refer to Padoux (1975: 254-260).

[4] These names are found in chapters 14 and 24 of the KMT. See Schoterman 1981: 215-218 for a list based on ṢSS 7/5-38.

only Kubjikā Tantra recovered so far that describes them. Following and expanding the layout of the KMT, the ŚM describes at length the Wheels (cakra) in the body. After talking about the states associated with the Wheel of Unstruck Sound, the text goes on to declare that this was already taught in the Mata of 125,000 verses and that the most essential part of that teaching has been explained in the ŚM.[1] The same is said about the Vidyā of the goddess Mahantārī.[2] Similarly, the KuKh refers to the Mata of 125,000 verses as the source not only of the MBT, the version of the Mata in 24,000 verses, but also of specific teachings.[3]

One could argue that these references are evidence for the concrete existence of the Mata of 125,000 verses. However, this is unlikely. It is more likely that, as it was considered to be especially authoritative,[4] the redactor(s) of the ŚM and KuKh exploited its mythical existence as a front to justify the insertion of new teachings - a ploy the redactor(s) of the ṢSS chose not to use.

The Caturviṁśatisāhasrasaṁhitā - the Scripture of Twenty-Four Thousand Verses

The first stages of the transmission, up to the Vāsuki took place in the first Age (kṛtayuga). Acting as snake gods normally do, Vāsuki (also called Śeṣa), guarded this treasure and concealed it up to the present Age of Strife (kaliyuga). The Kubjikā Tantras tireless repeat (as do the Kaula Tantras of all schools), that this is the Age when the teachings are propagated in special way. In the concluding passage of the KuKh we read:

---

[1] This, the division of the states, has been explained in the Mata of 125,000 verses. O benevolent one, (its) most (condensed) essence is clear here in the Matottara.

avasthābhedam ity uktaṁ lakṣapādādhike mate |
atra sāratamaṁ [k: sārataraṁ] bhadre saṁsphuṭaṁ ca matottare || ŚM 15/179.

[2] The great Vidyā Mahantārī has been described to you in the Mata of 125,000 (verses). There it is properly (and fully expounded), here it is discussed (just) a little.

mahantārī [kh: mahattārī; g: mahaṁtārā] mahāvidyā lakṣapādādhike mate |
varṇitā [kh g: varṇitaṁ] tatra te [kh g: me] samyak atra [g: triṣu] svalpam [g: rūpam] udāhṛtam ||
ŚM 26/95.

[3] The aggregate of the meaning of the scripture (saṁhitā) should be know from the instructions of the teacher. (Its) extent has been previously explained in the scripture (mata) of 125,000 (verses). It has been received in a concise form here, in (the Scripture) of Twenty-four Thousand (Verses) (caturviṁśatsahasra). O Fair One, I have told you the sūtra of the sixfold deposition. KuKh 24/120cd-122.

[4] See KuKh 68/119, also quoted below, p. 71.

> This is the Tree of the goddess Kubjikā, namely, (the scripture of) Twenty-four Thousand (Verses). It was placed in the hands of King Śeṣa in order to bring about (the liberation of the fettered). I will bestow (the initiation by) piercing along with the Command (only) to the man who correctly understands (all) that the goddess has said. This scripture should be given to him (only) when (his) ability (to grasp and apply it) is evident (and without doubt). The king of the snakes sustains it with (his) head, in accord with the orders (given to him by the goddess). Then, O Bhairava, in order to grace and save the devotees (of the goddess), the universal lord (viśvadeva) brought it into the great seat of the letter OṀ, adorned with Siddhas and Yoginīs.[1]

On this note the KuKh ends, leaving us in no doubt that the scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses - the Caturviṁśatisāhasra - is none other than the MBT. Caturviṁśatisāhasra is indeed one of the most common names out of the several we find for the MBT in our sources. Names like Vakrikāmata and, even more so, Śrīmata, are ambiguous. According to the context, they may denote any one of what are conceived to be the versions of the same scripture. Thus virtually all the names of the KMT also denote the MBT. This usage underscores that there is only one scripture and that it embodies the entire tradition which goes by the same name. This scripture and tradition is, first and foremost, the Kubjikāmata. This is what we actually observe, even though it effectively reverses the perception of the Tantras themselves who view the KMT as the final stage of the development of the scripture. It is clear that the ṢSS and the ŚM are derived from the KMT. They are direct expansions of its contents and function, effectively, as commentaries on it. This is less clear at first sight in the case of the MBT. However, this perceived distance is overcome in this way, thus ascribing a status to the MBT that is equal to that of the KMT itself.

It is important for these Tantras to maintain their common identity. It is also essential for them to establish their own individual one. This is achieved by referring to their length. Thus, Caturviṁśatisāhasra is the most distinctive name of our text. We find support for this view in the colophons of the MBT. These vary in length and complexity from the long elaborate ones we find in the KuKh right down to short labels that are hardly more than the name of the section and the text. When reduced to a minimum we find the colophon will invariably refer to the parent text simply as Caturviṁśatisāhasra.[2] This name is so specific that the AS and KaKauM implicitely identify themselves with it by adopting it.

---

[1] KuKh 69/32cd-34.

[2] One of the many examples in the YKh (1) reads: iti śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre kādibhede śrāddha-

It is one of several names in the colophons at the end of chapters of the MBT and is almost invariably found in all of them. The name appears in several short colophons of the Siddhakhaṇḍa of the MBT.[1] The colophons of YKh (1) invariably refer to it simply as (śrī) caturviṁśatisāhasra, omitting the appellation 'saṁhitā' at the end.[2] Most colophons of the YKh are short and in almost every case this is the only name that appears in them. The long colophons of the Kulakaulinīmata which, as we shall see, identifies itself with the MBT, always specify that this is the name of the Tantra (caturviṁśatisāhasre tantrābhidhāne) presumably to ensure that this proper name is not confused with an adjective.[3] Similarly, all the colophons of the AS refer to it as the Caturvimaśatisāhasraka or

---

vidhisūtram |

1 The second colophon of the SKh, for example, simply states: iti caturviṁśatisāhasre nyāsasūtram. In the few long colophons of the SKh we also find the full form, i.e. (śrī)caturviṁśatisāhasrasaṁhitā as we do in the colophons of the KuKh.

2 In many of the short colophons there, when we find more than simply C*aturviṁśati-sāhasra*, it is mostly preceded, but also sometimes followed, by a reference to the Kādibheda informing us that the Caturviṁśatisāhasra belongs to it. The YKh (1) tells us that the MBT is a Kaulikā saṁhitā, that is, a 'collection' or 'compendium'. The entire scripture is also referred to in this way. For example we read that: 'The meaning of the collection (saṁhitā) has been taught in the (scripture of) 24,000 (verses)' (saṁhitārthaṁ vinirdiṣṭaṁ caturviṁśatsahasrake || YKh (1) 16/149cd). However, although the appelation 'saṁhitā' is significant, it is often omitted. The colophons of the YKh (1) invariably have the short form of the name, whereas the long colophons of the KuKh have the long. However, the short form of the name appears in the short colophons (of chapters 48, 49, 52 and 53), if it appears at all. The reason for this seems to be that these chapters are amongst those drawn from other sources that escaped the attempts of the redactor(s) to make the colophons uniform. This may have been the work of scribes rather than the redactor(s) of the text. Thus we notice that in some cases a manuscript will supply the long colophon in place of the short one (e.g. the colophon of KuKh 53) or, at least, a brief version of the long one (e.g. the colophon of KuKh 49). Similarly, we notice that in some cases when a chapter is drawn wholesale from another part of the MBT where the colophon of that chapter is short, it is furnished with a long colophon when integrated into the KuKh (e.g. the colophon to KuKh 57). However, this is not always done. We find several short colophons that are simply directly imported along with their corresponding chapter. As most of these have been traced to other parts of the MBT, it is probable that the other chapters of the KuKh with short colophons were also taken from other parts of the MBT or its original source.

3 A typical colophon in the KuKauM begins: this is (chapter so and so) of the Caturviṁśati, which is called a Tantra. It is a descent (to earth of) the Śrīkulatantra, the venerable Kulakaulinīmata, which is (part of) the descent of the (scripture consisting of) 90 million (verses) (navakoṭi) belonging to the tradition of (the scripture) consisting of one billion (verses) (śatakoṭi) (brought to earth) in the sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava.
iti śrīmahāmanthānabhairavayajñe śatakoṭipravistīrṇe anvaye navakoṭyāvatāre śrīkulakaulinīmate śrīkulatantrāvatāre caturviṁśatisahasre tantrābhidhāne.

There are very few variants in the colophons of the KuKauM, none of which entail any significant change in the meaning. The most common is the reading -pramāṇe in place of -pravistīrṇe. The uniformity of the colophons of the KuKauM suggest that they were checked in the course of the final redaction.

Caturviṁaśatisāhasrikā. We also occasionally find manuscripts of sections of the MBT with this name.[1] Moreover, this name appears regularly also within the text of the MBT[2] which refers to itself as the Śrīmata and the Vakrikāmata of twenty-four thousand verses.[3]

In fact the name 'Manthānabhairavatantra' is not common in the text itself and does not appear in any of the colophons. [4] Even so, this is the name by which this text is commonly known to Newar initiates in the Kathmandu Valley. It is also the name attributed to it by the compilers of the manuscript catalogues starting from Haripraśāda Śāstrī at the beginning of the twentieth century. Chintaharan Chakravarti, who produced the catalogue of Tantric manuscripts preserved at the Asiatic Society in Calcutta, admits in relation to a manuscript of the Tantra that 'the name of the work is not clear'.[5] But although the manuscript is called Caturviṁśatisāhasrikā on a covering leaf of the manuscript, Chakravarti chose to retain the name Manthānabhairava[6] given to it by Śāstrī who made the original notes for the catalogue. Similarly, Buddhisāgara Śarmā who compiled the catalogue of manuscripts deposited in what is now the Nepalese National Archives library was probably also guided by Śāstrī who notes this name in his catalogue.[7] The original cause of this error is probably a misreading of the long colophons, which state that the Tantra was revealed in the course of the great sacrifice of Manthānabhairava.[8] This mistake is an old one. Kālidāsa, a paṇḍita at the court of king Jagatprakāśamalla who ruled in Bhaktapur between 1643 and 1672, tells us that he was requested by his patron to transcribe a complete copy of 1 An interesting example are two manuscripts (numbered 1487 and 1488) of the KuKauM deposited in Mahārāja Mansingh's library, the Pustak Prakash in the fort at Jodhpur called Caturviṁśatisahasratantra. I am grateful to David White for having brought the existence of these manuscripts to my attention.

---

2 For example in KuKh 30/40 we read: This is the secret, the wealth of the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses (caturviṁśatsahasraka). It should not be given to those who are not devotees and to those whose deeds are cruel.

3 KuKh 30/104cd-105.

4 The colophon of chapter 22 of the AS appears to say that it a part of the Śrīmanthānabhairava (śrīmanthānabhairava avvāmatasaṁhitāyāṁ), but this may well be an error for 'śrīmanthāna-bhairavayajñe'. All the colophons begin with ity ādyāvatāre except those of chapters 14 and 18. In the latter we find ity ājñāpārameśvare instead. All the colophons except those of chapters 8-14, 18, and 21 say that the text is part of the 'tradition (that originated) in the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava' (mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe anvaye) or just the 'sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava'.

5 In actual fact the manuscript is one of the KuKauM which identifies itself with the Caturviṁśatisāhasra. Not prejudiced by prior errors, the compiller of the handlist of manuscripts in Jodhpur, notes this, the correct name.

6 Chakravarti 1940: vol. 1 p. 23.

7 See bibliography.

8 The long colophons and some short ones begin: iti mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe.

the 'Manthāna'.[1] Clearly, by the 17th century this was the common name for the text. Mukundarāja, who wrote a commentary on some the sūtras in the Kumārikākhaṇḍa, refers to it as the Manthānamata[2], Manthānatantra[3] or, more often, just Manthāna[4] and even Manthānabhairava.[5]

But although the popularity of this name was probably the result of an error, it is not unknown to the texts. The MBT refers to itself as the 'great Manthānabhairava' in at least two places[6] and says that it is the king of scriptures (mahāmanthānabhairavarāja).[7] The name is derived, it seems, from the 'division' (bheda) of the scripture called Manthānabhairava in which we are told various things are taught.[8] Or it may be the entire Kubjikā tradition itself.[9] The MBT refers several times to the 'division of the Churning Bhairava'. This 'division' (bheda) or category is understood in a number of ways. In one sense it is a type of a number of practices. These may involve, for example, the 'churning' (manthāna) of the vital breath or consciousness itself to awaken it to the higher experience of the divine. 'Churning' is a an evident euphemism for the sexual act, well exemplified in the following passage from the lost Kramodaya:

---

[1] See below, notes to p. 351 for the colophon of the AS.

[2] iti mukundarājaprākāśite manthāne mate yā sā śaktisūtravyākhyā yathāmatinirūpitā | (fl. 5b).

[3] Mukundarāja refers to the Mālinīstava on which he comments and is a part of chapter four of the KuKh as being in the 'Manthānatantra' (fl. 9a).

[4] ākhyeti | tatra maṁthāne yādṛśatvenākhyātā | ibid.. Mukundarāja regularly refers to the MBT as Manthāna e.g. manthāne mṛgyam - fl. 10b and iti manthāanasaṁketoddhāre mukundarājoddhṛte devadūtasaṁvāde kriyāsūtrārthaḥ fl. 10b. At times he introduces the passages on which he comments by saying that they are part of the 'Manthāna' (e.g. bottom of fl. 4a). The colophon to his commentary on the Mālinīstava reads: iti manthānoktamālinīṭīkāyāṁ mukundakṛte saṁkṣepaḥ. In this way Mukundarāja implicitely distinguishes the version of this hymn found in the KMT from the one in the KuKh which is 'uttered in the Manthāna(bhairavatantra)'.

[5] maṁthānabhairavatantre maṁgalācaraṇaṁ saṁvarttā

[6] haramaulīti [k: -liti] vikhyātaṁ mahāmanthānabhairave [k, kh: -va] ||

YKh (2) 14/82ab = YKh (1) 16/75ab.

tat padaṁ paścimāmnāyaṁ mahāmanthānabhairave [kh: -vaṁ] | YKh (2) 27/5ab.

[7] YKh (2) 6/24a quoted below on p. 82-83.

[8] For example we read in YKh (1) 43/104cd: kulavāgeśvarī khyātā bhede manthānabhairave |

The goddess concludes this section concerning Tripurabhairavī / Kāmeśvarī saying that this 'has been explained according to the Path of the Left in the Manthānabhairava division (of the scripture). O god, I have spoken of the reality (tattva) hidden in all the Tantras.'

ākhyātaṁ vāmamārgeṇa [k, gh: -na] bhede [k, gh: bheda] manthānabhairave |
khyātaṁ tattvaṁ [k, g, gh, ṅ: tatva] mayā deva sarvatantreṣu gopitaṁ [k, gh: mopitaṁ] ||

YKh (1) 43/170.

[9] That plane is the Western Tradition, the Great Churning Bhairava.
tat padaṁ paścimāmnāyaṁ mahāmanthānabhairavam [k: -ve] | YKh (2) 27/5ab.

> Women of all castes are without doubt Yoginīs. The Yoni is purified like the body and the Liṅga like the Self. Having deposited (nyāsa) the nine-letter mantra on the Yoni, and the seventeen-letter mantra on the Liṅga one should unite with the Yoginī (melapa). In order to worship the Wheel of the Teachers (gurucakra), one should establish it with the nine-letter mantra, like Liṅga and pīṭha. The individual soul (puruṣa) in the state of (the union of) Śiva and Śakti is considered to be the 'churner' and he should 'churn' his own consort (śakti), the semen and the blood, like honey.[1]

Elsewhere we have had have occasion to describe it in relation to the 'churning' of the sexual act of which this practice has been understood to be an internalization. This process generates the maṇḍala and hence emanation. In terms of the parallel production of the scripture, it is described as follows:

> When the Transmental plane has been attained and the mind has assumed the state beyond mind and the consciousness of the mind-stuff (cittacaitanya) has been churned in the division of the Churning Bhairava (one attains) the Self. The form (of the Self) is Bhairava and is free of the delusion of thought constructs. Full of the rays (of consciousness), it pulses radiantly in the form of Bhairavī and Bhairava. The Path of Meru, which is both supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent), is the lineage (of the tradition that emerges) in between them.[2]

The Wheel of the Four Siddhas, that is, the Yoni in the centre of the maṇḍala from which the teachings of the lineages founded by the Siddhas proceed is generated by 'churning' the transcendent Bhairava in the centre.[3] In this way the goddess who is the power of bliss assumes the form of the triangle (trivalī) of the division of the Churning Bhairava in the great Bhairava sacrifice.[4]

---

[1] LĀS vol. 1, p. 38 quote 3.
[2] unmanāyāḥ pade [k: pada] prāpte manaś [kh: mano] conmanatāṁ [k: cānma-] gate |
mathite [k: maghite] cittacaitanye bhede manthānabhairave ||
ātmānaṁ bhairavākāraṁ vikalpamohavarjitam |
bhairavībhairavākāraṁ sphurantaṁ kiraṇākulam [k, kh: kiriṇā-] ||
tayor madhye [k, kh: tayo-] tu santānaṁ merumārgaṁ [k, kh: -mārga] parāparam |
YKh (2) 30/2-4ab.
[3] *manthānaṁ [k, kh: manthānāṁ] bhairavasya [kh: bhaira * sya] paśumalakṣayakṛt siddhacatvāricakraṁ* | YKh (2) 31/8c.
[4] tena ānandaśaktis tu trivalīkṛtavigrahā ||
*mahāmanthānabhedasya [kh: mahāmanthā * bhedasya] mahābhairavayajñake [k, kh: -yajjakai]* |
YKh (2) 33/14cd-15ab.

The same process generates the hexagram around the triangle into which the sacred seats are projected. A symbol of the multiplicity of manifestation generated through the goddess's emanation, she abides in the centre in pure oneness:

> And the mistress of the sacred seats manifests division by means of the six (seats) and her nature is non-duality and is well established on the plane of non-duality. She is merged (in oneness) and by the churning of the six seats is established (there) progressively.[1]

The application of this power in this way is called 'churning'. Like 'churning' it is a dynamic, recurrent process. Like milk that is churned produces the butter, which is its most condensed and best part, in the same way, the ocean of the goddess's energies of Speech (mātṛkā) produces the scripture and with it, the tradition. However, note that although the scripture produced thereby could appropriately be called the Tantra of the Churning Bhairava - Manthānabhairava - the passage in which its production is described in this way prefers to call it the Compendium of Twenty-four Thousand verses.[2] This, along with Śrīmata and other names, is one of the main ones. Manthānabhairava is secondary.

The scripture is generated by the 'churning' of the Drop (bindu) in the centre of the maṇḍala. This is the 'Division of the Churning Bhairava'. The KuKh calls the Drop in the centre of the maṇḍala the abode of Manthānabhairava within which resides his consort Manthānabhairavī. She is Kulakaulinī - the goddess of the Kula – who is the energy of all the divisions of the teachings.[3] Again:

> When the support of knowledge develops the ball (generated from the process of) churning is (formed). And that is this modality of the Drop that is said to be disembodied. Divided into supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanence) that is said to be the Lord.[4]

---

[1] pīṭhānāṁ [k, kh: pīṭhanāṁ] nāyikā [k, kh: nāyakāṁ] caiva ṣaḍbhir bhedaprakāśinī [k, kh: -prakāśinām] ||
sā cādvaitasvarūpiṇī [k: cāddhenasvarūpiṇa; kh: coddhenasvarupiṇī] advaitapadasusthitā [k: adaitapadasuṣṭitā; kh: adaitapadamuṣṭitā] |
vilīnā ṣaḍipīṭhānāṁ manthāne kramaśaḥ [k, kh: kramadho] sthitā || YKh (2) 34/2cd-3.
[2] KuKh 57/87cd-91ab = YKh (1) 36/90-93.
[3] KuKh 3/50.
[4] *jñānālambanasaṁvṛddhau [k, gh: -nasiddhauyaṁ; ṅ: jñānālaṁbarasiddhau *] manthānagolakaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: manthānaṁgo-; g: manthanaṁgolaka] bhavet [g: * ] || sa ca binduprakāro 'yaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: ya] aśarīraṁ [g: asarīra] prakīrtitam | parāparavibhāgena īśvaraṁ tam udāhṛtam [g: tamudādbhutaṁ] || YKh (1) 35/46cd-47cd.

After describing the collocation of the mantras of the deities in the maṇḍala the YKh concludes: 'The great soul resides in the beginning (of emanation) in order to protect the Seat of Knowledge (vidyāpīṭha) and in this way the great Manthānabhairava has arisen in the centre (of the maṇḍala).'[1] Accordingly, the maṇḍala is named after the Churning Bhairava who presides over it in the centre.[2] This Bhairava is seated on Kailāsa which is on the peak of Meru in the End of the Twelve. He embodies the entire original scripture consisting of seventy million verses that belongs to the lineage (anvaya) generated by the sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava.[3] Thus the entire Kubjikā tradition is identified with this 'division'. So we read in our text:

> The descent (of the teaching) has taken place in the past within the division (of the tradition called) Manthānabhairava (the Churning Bhairava). It is the division beginning with `KĀ',[4] the ocean of truth, that has emerged from Śiva's Command (śāmbhavājñā), merely by knowing which (initiates attain) omniscience in every Age.[5]

Elsewhere also the KuKh refers to the Manthānabhairavāgama as the extensive form of the scripture that is subsequently reduced in the course of its transmission.[6] The colophons of the version of the Śrīmatottara called Gorakṣasaṁhitā associate the latter with the scripture of 70 million (saptakoṭi) that has been brought down to earth by the energy of Svacchandabhairava and come forth from the 'mahāmanthāna'[7] - the 'Great Churning'.

It is also a way of referring to a 'division' or school of the Kubjikā tradition represented by the MBT described as 'the collection (saṁgraha) (of the teachings) of the division of the (scriptures called the) Churning (manthāna) Bhairava, the Kaulika (scripture) of the Thousand Elders (sahasrajyeṣṭha) which is the division beginning with KĀ (kādibheda).'[8] The division of Manthānabhairava has twenty-

---

[1] tiṣṭhaty [k, gh: tiṣṭa; g: tiṣṭhaś, ṅ: tiṣṭhamv] ādau [g: ścādau; ṅ: mvādau] mahātmānaṁ [g: -māna; ṅ: madā-] vidyāpīṭhasya [g: -pīṭhaṁ] rakṣaṇe ||
tathā [g: ?] madhye [k, g, gh, ṅ: madhya] samutpannaṁ mahāmanthānabhairavam [k, gh, ṅ: -va; g: ?] | YKh (1) 42/113cd-114ab.

[2] This is the Yoga of the Great Transmission within the maṇḍala of the Great Churning.

mahākramasya yogo 'yaṁ mahāmanthānamaṇḍale | SKh 11/46ab.

[3] KuKh 61/103cd-104ab..

[4] Concerning the Kādibheda, see below, p. 71-73.

[5] KuKh 68/36-37ab.

[6] KuKh 39/55cd-58ab.

[7] A typical colophon of the GS begins: iti śrīmahāmanthānavinirgate saptakoṭyarbude svacchandaśaktyāvatārite gorakṣasaṁhitāyāṁ.

[8] KuKh 7/3.

seven divisions.[1] Indeed, a specifying feature of the Krama taught in the MBT is that it consists of twenty-seven mantras.[2] When the tradition shifted to Koṅkaṇa,[3] it came to be called the City of the Moon - Candrapura - after the name of its capital city. Similarly, the Kubjikā tradition there came to be called the division (bheda) of Manthānabhairava,[4] presumably because the MBT was redacted and propagated there.

> It is called Candrapurya. This is the House (tradition) in the Ocean of Kula (scriptures). The deity of Kula is fashioned by churning the original form of the division (of the letters i.e. the triangle of letters) (bhedabimba). Manmatha (the god of love), the Point, arises in the end of the thirty-two (syllables of the Vidyā) and is split up (there). By splitting (it apart) and rubbing (one feels) content, (from which) one infers (and thereby experiences one's own innate) bliss. The division of the churning (of consciousness) has been explained and the Wheel of the Point has been revealed.[5]

The Śrīmata and the Kubjikāmata

The scripture of 24,000 verses, that is, the MBT, is regularly called 'Śrīmata'[6] as is the scripture of 125,000 verses[7] and the original scripture variously said to extend for 50 million, 70 million (saptakoṭi), a billion (śatakoṭi) or even a trillion (lakṣakoṭi) verses.[8] This, the original, most extensive form of the [1] KuKh 53/6 = YKh (2) 24/20cd-21ab.

---

[2] For a brief outline of the various forms of the Krama see KuKh vol. 6, appendix 8.

[3] Concerning the shift of the Kubjikā tradition to Koṅkaṇa, see below, p. 276 ff..

[4] KuKh 17/4.

[5] candrapuryaṁ [gh: -rya] samākhyātaṁ gṛham etat [ṅ: -setat] kulārṇave || mathanād bhedabimbasya ghaṭitā kuladevatā |
manmathaṁ jāyate bindur [all MSs: vindu] dvātriṁśānte [k, gh, ṅ: -te; g: -nta] vibheditaḥ [k, gh, ṅ: -naṁ] ||
*bhedanād [k, gh, ṅ: bhedatā; g: bhedanā] gharṣaṇāt [k, gh: dyasanā; g: hrasanāṁ; ṅ: ghasanā] tṛptim [k: gasi; gh, ṅ: * si] ānandamanumīyate* |
manthānabhedam [k, gh: mānthana-; ṅ: mānthāna-] ākhyātaṁ binducakraṁ prakāśitam ||
YKh (1) 28/70cd-72.

[6] KuKh 30/2cd-3; cf. ibid. 57/90-91ab and also ibid. 30/117 where the Śrīmata is said to be the lamp of Kula.

[7] YKh (1) (MS K fl. 55a) (quoted above also): *devi [k, kh, gh: davi] śambhuratnākaraṁ [k, kh, gh: chaṁbhuratnākaraṁ; ṅ: yachaṁbhuraṁnārakaṁ] yat [k, kh, gh: ta; ṅ: tat] tvayā līlayā mathanamātreṇa [k, kh, gh: -mātre *] uddhṛtya kaulāmṛtamuddhṛtaṁ [k, kh, gh: -mṛtamuṁḍa-ddhṛtaṁ] lakṣapādādhikaṁ [gh: * *? padā * ; ṅ: -pādedhikaṁ] śrīmatam |

[8] The colophons of the KRU attribute a length of 50 million (pañcāśatkoṭi) verses to the original scripture which is there called the Kubjikāmata or, in some MSs, Vakrikāmata. The colophon of Śrīmata is the 'oral Āgama' (mukhāgama) that included the entire oral tradition (mukhāmnāya). The form of the original scripture is not forgotten. Even when the written text is meant, it should be 'heard' rather than read.[1] In one place, at least, the MBT claims that this, the original form of the Śrīmata, is the original Kula scripture retrieved from the sea by Matsyendranātha, the founder of Kaulism. Brought to earth onto the Island of the Moon (candradvīpa), it was explained in Kāmarūpa.[2] Similarly, we read that the Island of the Moon is the place where the original scripture was revealed in the colophons of the ŚM.[3] The same is the case with the second version of the Matasāra[4] and the Siddhapañcāśikā.[5] Although the final colophon of the KMT attributes its place of origin to Oḍiyāna, the association of the original scripture with the Island of the Moon makes sense. For one thing, the Kaulism founded by Matsyendranātha is considered to be the previous tradition (purvāmnāya) of which the Kubjikā cult is the subsequent one the first paṭala, for example, reads: 'This is the first chapter (and it concerns) the descent (of the deity into the world). (It is) in the venerable Kularatnoddyota which is in the venerable Kubjikāmata that extends for 50 million (verses) and has come forth from Ādinātha.

---

ity ādināthavinirgate [k kh: -nirggata] pañcāśatkoṭivistīrṇe [kh: -vistīrṇṇa] śrīmatkubjikāmate [k: -vakrikāmate; g: śrīmadvakrikāmate] śrīkularatnoddyote [k kh: -ratnodyote; g: kularatnodyote] prathamāvatārapaṭalaḥ [g: -tārapaḥṭalaḥ] ||

This unique figure underscores the peculiar position of the KRU in relation to the rest of the corpus. Certainly redacted after the KMT and possibly before the MBT, it does not subscribe to the common paradigms. These are either a billion or 70 million. Billion is the figure in the KMT (see above, p. 51 and below, p. 75) and the YKh quoted above, p. 48. No reference is made to an original scripture in the colophons of the KMT or in the ṢSS and ŚM that follow it closely. The MSs of the ŚM that call it Gorakṣasaṁhitā differ in this respect (see below, p. 327 ff.). 70 million is the figure in the KuKh in general. According to the KuKh (30/74),the Śrīmata, which consists of seventy million (saptakoṭika) (verses), is the knowledge of (this) sixfold (reality). It is the oral tradition of the gods, a teaching with profound meaning'. The Śrīmata of seventy million verses is also mentioned, for example, in KuKh 61/103cd-104ab and KuKh 68/117-118, quoted below, p. 71. This is the figure we find in all the long colophons of all the sections (khaṇḍa) of the MBT and in the colophons of the AS whereas those of the KuKauM prefer 100 billion (lakṣakoṭi). See below, p. 76 and 77.

[1] KuKh 36/114cd-115ab.

[2] See KuKh 57/89-91ab = YKh (1) 36/91cd-92 and KuKh 58/98cd-100ab = YKh (1) 28/102-3.

[3] The colophons of the ŚM are analysed below, p. 326-327. The colophons of the version of the ŚM called Gorakṣasaṁhitā do not refer to the Island of the Moon. As the Gorakhanāthīs, who must have appropriated the ŚM and renamed it, consider Gorakhanātha (i.e. Gorakṣa) to have been the disciple of Matysendranātha, this is surprising.

[4] *iti śrīśrīmatasāre [kh: * śrī-]śrīcandradvīpavinirgate śrīmahābhairavāvatārite yugasiddhāvatāro nāma prathamaḥ [kh: ājñāprasādaḥ prathamaḥ] paṭalaḥ* ||

[5] The last colophon of the Siddhapañcāśikā reads: iti siddhapañcāsikāyāṁ candrapīṭhavinirgatāyāṁ mūlanāthāvatāritāyāṁ divyājñāguṇaprakāśikāyāṁ kulālītantramūlagatāyāṁ pañcamaḥ paṭalaḥ ||

(paścimāmnāya). Moreover, the goddess emerges from the Liṅga on the Island of the Moon.

The Śrīmata is the entire Kubjikā tradition[1] that has come into the world to liberate everybody. It is the Divine Mata which is the Khañjinīkula, also called the Western Tradition,[2] that has come down through the transmission of the root lineage (mūlānvaya).[3] It is the ancient purport of the scripture realised by assiduous devotion to it. Indeed, the Śrīmata, called Śrīkujāmata in the following passage of the ŚM, is not just one Kaula tradition. It is the entire Kula tradition that colonizes in one sweep the entire range of Śaiva ascetic schools and traditions:

> Kubjikā is established as the source (yoni) of the Kula path. The Śaiva, Pāśupata, Bauddha, Mauśalin (Pāśupata) intent on ritual, (the ascetic) with staff and animal hide (as his seat), one (who wanders) naked and other (ascetics) who belong to the lowest castes, they are all in the Kula fold and Kula is, indeed, the Śrīkujāmata.[4]

Just as the entire tradition of the Śrīmata is called the Kubjikāmata,[5] as is the Tantra, conversely the KMT, as the quintessence of the tradition, also refers to itself as the Śrīmata, which is far too great to grasp all at once:

---

[1] KuKh 2/17.

[2] paścimākhyaṁ mataṁ divyaṁ śrīmataṁ khañjīnīkulam || YKh (1) 12/30ab

[3] KuKh 4/8-10ab. According to KuKh 45/64b: The Śrīmata is the Western House. Again: 'One should know that the lineage (santāna) is the Śrīmata and the clan (gotra) Bhairava. The field (of operation) is the (mantra called the) Five Jewelled One (used to consecrate the Kaula offerings) and the transmission (krama) is said to be the Śrīmata.

santānaṁ śrīmataṁ jñeyaṁ gotraṁ [k, gh: gotra] bhairavam [gh: -s] eva ca |
gocaraṁ pañcaratnaṁ ca kramaṁ śrīmatam ucyate || YKh (1) 4/248.

[4] kubjikā kulamārgasya yonibhūtā [g: -rūpā] vyavasthitā [kh: vyavasthitāḥ] ||
śaivaṁ pāśupataṁ bauddhaṁ mauśalinyaḥ [k: mausaliṁcaḥ-; g: mauśalinya] kriyāparāḥ [k: -padāḥ] |
daṇḍājinaṁ tathā nagnaṁ ye cānye [kh: cānya] cāntyajātayaḥ [g: cānta-] ||
sarve te kulam āśritya kulaṁ [g: kula] vai śrīkujāmatam [kh: -gamaṁ; g: svī-] |
ŚM 20/176cd-178ab.

[5] For example we read in YKh (2):

(The goddess) is independence and, without support, (her) form is that of an unbroken circle. The lord of yogis who thinks (of her thus) is accomplished (siddha) in the Kubjikāmata.

kaivalyā tu nirālambā akhaṇḍamaṇḍalākṛtiḥ [k, kh: -ti] |
cintayed yas tu yogīndro sa siddhaḥ kubjikāmate || YKh (2) 20/12.

(This is) the prosperous (ṛddhisaṁpanna) science (vijñāna) filled with the circle of knowledge (jñānamaṇḍala). Thus it (i.e. the KMT) is called the Śrīmata, which bestows (both) worldly benefits and liberation. O dear one, it is the knowledge which is the essence of the Tantras and so, devoid of ritual procedures (anuṣṭhāna), it is the vessel of (all forms) of worldly benefits and liberation if the wise man conceals it thus.

Those who do not possess the Śrīmata[1] are deluded by incomplete knowledge. They have no sight and so, like the blind men and the elephant, they divide (it up).

(Their situation is as follows). Hearing that an elephant has come, he is surrounded by a crowd of blind men. By whoever and wherever the elephant is touched, whether the tail, ears, feet, back, trunk, belly, or stomach, he is called by whatever he seems to be. Touching his tail they say: "this elephant has the form of a flywhisk." Those who touch (his) ears (say that it is a) winnowing fan (sūrpā). One who touches (his) feet (thinks) it is a threshing floor (khala). Those standing (near his) belly (think) that (it) is a wall and those standing behind (that it is) a house. (Those who touch) two of (its) legs (think) that both are pillars and that there are two pestles attached to the elephant's tusk. In this way the (whole) crowd of blind men is deluded and they argue with one another.

Others who can see and observe them fighting with one another begin to laugh. Hearing that (the blind men) are surprised. Now hearing great laughter, (they ask) "why are we being derided?" Those who can see said: "O you deluded people, don't fight! O blind men! The form of the elephant (appears) to you to be other than it is. All (these things you) have touched are the limbs of an elephant. (Your) vision is obscured by a cataract. Go and visit a doctor so that you may see this great elephant of the venerable Current of (the teachings of the goddess) Kubjā with all its limbs."

(Worldly) knowledge is like the elephant of the blind men. The world is devoid of the transmission of the Command (ājñākrama) and that transmission (krama) is in the Kubjinīmata. What I have told you is beyond dispute. Like the elephant with all its limbs. Like the example here of the elephant and (its) limbs the other teaching (jñāna) (found) in the (Tantras of) the right, left and upper Kaulika (ones) is erroneous. It is present here devoid of error. The entire ocean of Kula,

---

[1] There can be no doubt that the Śrīmata here is concretely the KMT, not just the teachings in general.

> which is the bliss of the Command, present in (the Tantras) of the right, left and upper Kaulika one, has been imparted to you (completely, not in parts) on the analogy of the elephant's body.[1]

The elephant is the Current of the Kubjā teachings and its limbs represent the Tantras of the other schools. Kubjā's current (ogha) of scriptures contains the other streams of the scripture of the Śaivāgama. These flow in three channels - to the left, to the right and upwards. The teachings of all the Tantras are contained in the Command through which they are understood and their fruits are attained. The transmission of the Command takes place through the Śrīmata which, also called here the Kubjinīmata, is the KMT. Just as the KMT places the previous Kaula tradition above the Śaivāgama below itself, similarly according to the following passage from the ṢSS, the upper Kaula current is that of the teachings that precede it. However, these are not those of the previous Kaula traditions. They are the teaching of the KMT the ṢSS has absorbed and contains. The ṢSS maintains that they are essentially the teachings concerning the Yoni which, 'unmanifest' in the KMT, are clarified in the ṢSS. In this way the ṢSS also claims to be the place where what has been concealed in the KMT is revealed:

> Those who are accomplished in the Vedas are above (the state of the) fettered soul. The fettered condition above (them) is found in the (state attained through the Tantras) of the Left. The (Tantra of the) Left (is that of the fettered with respect to) the Path of the Right and the Right (is such in relation to) the Kula teaching. Kula is in the Ocean of the Yoni and (the true nature of) the Yoni (is revealed) in the venerable Kubjikāmata. (The Yoni) is unmanifest (avyaktā) (in the Kubjikāmata which is the scripture of) three and a half thousand verses, whereas it is manifest and established here (in the ṢSS). Thus, I have not told the Tantra that has been hidden above (on the higher planes of existence) to anybody. It has been revealed to you today (by me with my) mind penetrated by the Void (nabhasāviṣṭacitta).[2]

---

[1] KMT 20/68-81ab = ṢSS 31/139-152ab.

[2] vedasiddhāḥ [k kh: -siddhā] paśoś cordhve [k kh: paśuśco-] ūrdhve vāme [k kh: -ma] paśutvatā |
vāmaṁ [k kh: vāme] dakṣiṇamārgasya dakṣiṇaṁ kulaśāsane ||
kulaṁ [KMT taṁ tu] yonyārṇave līnaṁ [k kh: hīnaṁ] yoniḥ [k kh: yoni] śrīkubjikāmate |
avyaktādhyuṣṭasāhasre [k kh: -dvyaṣṭasāhasre] vyaktā cātra [k: -ścātra] pratiṣṭhitā [k: -tāḥ] ||
atordhvaṁ [KMT ato.arthaṁ] gopitaṁ tantraṁ kasyacin na mayoditam |
nabhasāviṣṭacittena tavādya prakaṭīkṛtam || ṢSS 25/56-58. ṢSS 25/56-57ab = KMT 16/28-29ab; ṢSS 25/57cd, where the ṢSS makes this special claim is missing in the KMT and ṢSS 25/58cd = KMT 16/30cd. See Heilijger-Seleen 1994: 262.

The ŚM reproduces only the first two verses of the passage we are examining. It then adds this extra verse: 'It is illumined by the knowledge of Śakti and destroys the net of Māyā. The destroyer of darkness (tamas), it is free and so, O beloved, this is the Śrīmata'.[1] Here, as in the ṢSS, by 'Śrīmata' is meant the KMT. However, those who read this and didn't know that this passage (along with more than half of the ŚM) is drawn from the KMT, would think that 'Śrīmata' is a name of the ŚM itself just as those reading the ṢSS would think that it is the ṢSS. Indeed, the possible confusion is fostered by the ŚM, which although revealed to clarify the hidden meaning of the Śrīmata, that is, the KMT, it is itself a Śrīmata. The confusion arises between the ṢSS and the KMT also because, as with the ŚM, they both have the same name.[2] Thus, when the ṢSS enjoins the worship of the Śrīmata, it is hard to say whether the KMT is meant or the ṢSS itself.[3] Similarly, when the ṢSS reproduces a line from the KMT that says: 'Those who do not (manage) to acquire the Śrīmata make a mistake at every step (they take)' - it is not possible to say whether the KMT is meant or the ṢSS.[4] Possibly to avoid confusion, the name Śrīmata occurs much less in the ṢSS than it does in the ŚM. Changes in the name or ulterior specification also help in avoiding ambiguity. Thus, in one place the ṢSS refers to the KMT as the Śrīmatkubjimatottama[5] or as the Śrīmata of 3,500 verses.[6] The ṢSS also refers to a version of the Kubjīmata which is 24,000 verses long as the source of a particular teaching that is not in actual fact found in the KMT[7] or, for that matter in the MBT. Moreover, it is generally clear throughout the ŚM that the Śrīmata is, concretely, the KMT. In no case is the word Śrīmata used in the ŚM to denote any other text nor is it used in a general sense to mean, as it does in other sources, that particular school itself. Like the ŚM, half of the ṢSS is drawn directly from the KMT and, like the ŚM,

---

[1] śaktijñānapradīptaṁ tu [g: śaktī-; k: -pradīpastu; kh: -pradīptastu] māyājālanikṛntanam [k: -jñānanikṛntanaḥ] ||
tamadhvaṁsavinirmuktaṁ tenedaṁ [g: tenadaṁ] śrīmataṁ priye | ŚM 25/53cd-54ab.

[2] The colophons of the ṢSS generally begin - iti śrīṣaṭsāhasre śrīmate.

[3] itīdaṁ maṇḍale dhyānaṁ [k: -lādhyātaṁ; kh: -lādhyānaṁ yaṁ] nirdiṣṭaṁ kubjinīmate |
kuryāt pradakṣiṇaṁ kubji apasavyavivarjitam [k kh: apasavye] ||
śrīmatasyāgrato devi tad eva kramasannidhau | ṢSS 49/17-18ab.

[4] śrīmataṁ ye na vindanti teṣāṁ bhrāntiḥ [k kh: bhrānti] pade pade ||
ṢSS 49/54cd = KMT 25/25cd.

[5] śaktivaktraṁ tad evoktaṁ śrīmatkubjimatottame || ṢSS 10/146ab.

[6] śrīmate ca varārohe pañcatriṁśaśate [k kh: pañcaviṁśaśate] mate || ṢSS 21/16cd.

[7] All this has been explained there in the auspicious and venerable Kubjīmata of twenty-four thousand verses. Here it has been just somewhat mentioned. O great goddess, (this) the heart of the Supreme Lord should be kept secret.

caturviṁśatisāhasre śrīmatkubjīmate śubhe [k, kh: drume] ||
samastaṁ tatra vyākhyātam atra kiñcid udāhṛtam |
gopanīyaṁ mahādevi hṛdayaṁ pārameśvaram || ṢSS 42/69cd-70.

the ṢSS also calls the KMT the Śrīmata when referring to it as its source[1] and this is the name of the KMT in its concluding colophon.

The Kulālikāmata

Kulālikā - the Potter Woman - is one of the many names of the goddess Kubjikā.[2] Accordingly, the KMT refers to itself in most of the colophons at the end of each chapter as the Kulālikāmnāya, that is, the Tradition of the (goddess) Kulālikā.[3] Thus the Kulālikāmata is the KMT itself which is three and a half thousand verses long.[4] Occasionally, the scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses, that is the MBT, is also called Kulālikāmata.[5] This Kulālikāmata is the last and highest in a list of the sixteen Mata Tantras.[6] It is the highest in a hierarchy of scriptures ranging from those of the Buddhists.[7] Again, the entire scripture in all its forms is also sometimes called Kulālikā,[8] as is the whole tradition in the account of the descent of the scripture we will examine next. The goddess is speaking:

> Now (I will talk about the scripture) called the venerable Kulālikā according to the division of (its various) types.[9] 1) The first division is devoid of the three Transmissions (krama). 2) Next comes (tasya ūrdhve) comes the division beginning with `KĀ' the extent of which is seventy million (saptakoṭi) (verses). It is called the `collection of sūtras' and it has been brought down (into the world) by the First Lord (Ādinātha). It has emerged from the seventy million (verses) and is the main one of all the Tantras. 3) The essence of that (is the scripture of) two and a half million (koṭipāda) (verses). 4) then

---

[1] For example in the following places:
śrīmate ca sureśāna dvātriṁśākṣararūpiṇī |
kaulikena tu saṁyuktā vinayena samanvitā || ṢSS 17/1.
śrīmate pañca cakrāṇi ṣaṭkūṭaṁ tripurārṇave || ibid. 20/19cd.
ṣaḍadhvayajanaṁ [k kh: -jananaṁ] devi śrīmate saṁprakīrtitam | ibid. 47/143cd.

[2] See Schoterman 1981: 7-9 and intro. vol. 2, p. 105 ff..

[3] They begin: iti kulālikāmnāye śrīkubjikāmate. Some colophons, like the one quoted in the next note, read the synonym Śrīkubjikāmnāya in place of Kulālikāmnāya. This expression has been translated as the `Tradition of the Female Potters'. My translation is supported by the analogous expression – Kulālīkula (KuKh 24/35) - referring to the Kubjikā school.

[4] See YKh (1) 27/73-74ab.

[5] See KuKh 68/27-32ab and 68/120.

[6] KuKh 68/27-32ab.

[7] KuKh 68/103.

[8] KuKh 68/116cd.

[9] See KuKh 68/27-32ab and 68/117 ff..

> comes (the scripture consisting of) 125,000 verses. Amongst all the scriptures it is the (greatest) authority (pramāṇa), particularly in the Western Tradition. 5) I have brought down (to earth) the great Kulālikāmata for you. It is, in short, the arising of the Transmission (kramodaya) and it stands above the Sacred Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha).[1] Beyond mantra and Vidyā, it is free of divisions, the sphere of rajas and (its mantras) are devoid of Vedic syllabic sounds (jāti),[2] all (forms of) meditation, and the practice of Tantra (tantrācāra). It wields authority in the three Lineages (oli). The essence of the essence, it is like clarified butter taken from the milk (of the scriptures). The scripture numbering twenty-four (thousand verses) is the root. It has come down through the transmission of the root tradition (mūlānvayakrama). (Consisting of) three sections (khaṇḍa), it is the (tradition of) Parā's Group of Six (parāṣaṭka) and is sustained by a special Command.[3]

The descent of the scripture from its original transcendent source 'devoid of the three transmissions' that is, the three lineages of the Aged, Youth and the Child is described here as taking place in four stages namely:

1) The scripture of 70 million verses.
2) The scripture of two and a half million verses (koṭipāda).
3) The scripture of 125,000 verses.
4) The Kulālikāmata, which here is the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses, that is, the MBT which, as we shall see, consists of three sections (khaṇḍa).[4]

Although 'Kādibheda' - 'the division beginning with KĀ' - is quite a common expression in the later Kubjikā Tantras, it is not found in the KMT, the ŚM,[5] the KuKauM or the late CMSS. Although known to the ṢSS, the term only

---

[1] This is the centre of the maṇḍala. See note to 3/55cd-56ab. Concerning the mudrāpīṭha, which is sometimes said to be the category of scripture to which the Kubjikā Tantras belong, see below, 98-100, 102, 118, 315 and 384.
[2] Concerning the six types (jāti) and the sphere of rajas, see intro. vol. 2 p. 260 ff..
[3] KuKh 68/116cd-123.
[4] See below, p. 91.
[5] Although the term 'kādibheda' does not appear in the ŚM it does in the colophons of the MSs of the ŚM which refer to the text as the Gorakṣasaṁhitā. A typical colophon of the ŚM reads:
iti śrīmatottare śrīkaṇṭhanāthāvatārite candradvīpavinirgate yoginīguhyakumārikākhaṇḍe . . .
The equivalent colophon of the so-called Gorakṣasaṁhitā reads:
śrīmahāmanthānavinirgate saptakoṭyarbude svacchandaśaktyāvatārite gorakṣasaṁhitāyāṁ śatasāhasrakhaṇḍāntargataśrīmatottarakhaṇḍe kādibhede kulakaulinīmate navakoṭyavatārabhede appears in those chapters that have no counterpart in the KMT. I have not been able to locate an explanation anywhere in the Kubjikā Tantras for this way of referring to the Kubjikā tradition and its scriptures. The following is my own explanation which, although very plausible, is just a supposition.

Each of the fifty phonemic energies is symbolically located in an internalized sacred seat (pīṭha) of the goddess within her triangular Yoni[1] identified with mount Meru. They are arranged there in such a way that the four main seats are located in the corners and the centre. The goddess in the End of the Twelve above the head, in the form of her triangular womb faces downwards indicating that she is intent (unmukhā) (lit. 'facing towards') emanation. The bottom corner of this triangle houses the first letter of the alphabet, which is A. This is also the location of the sacred seat Kāmarūpa. This is the point where the Transmental makes contact with the spheres below and the downward flow of energy erupts into immanence. This is also, by the same token, the place where the teachings enter the sphere of manifestation. Thus, they are said to come down by the path of Kāmarūpa. Abbreviated, this is the part or division (bheda) of the triangle beginning with the letter KĀ.

We read in all the long colophons of the MBT and other Kubjikā Tantras that the teachings come down through the path of the 'division beginning with KĀ'. The energy in the Triangle pours down along this, the Path of Meru, into the body and the worlds. Viewed in what might be called the 'immanent' perspective, the four seats are also within the body. According to some modalities, they may be stationed along the vertical axis of the body with Kāmarūpa at the upper extremity. From this perspective also the flow of the Transmission from the Triangle passes down through Kāmarūpa along the Path of Meru and spreads progressively into the other sacred seats. In this way the inner Kāmarūpa functions symbolically like the outer one which is said to be the place where the teachings came down to earth in the present, Kali Age. Oḍḍiyāna is called the First Seat (ādyapīṭha) because this is where the teachings originally appeared in the first of the four Ages (kṛtayuga). In this, the fourth Age, they were transmitted in Kāmarūpa. Accordingly, the KuKh declares: 'the teaching (saṁketa) commences with (the sacred seat whose name) begins with KĀ and, endowed with all the qualities, that is Bhairava's maṇḍala'.[2] The convention that governs the deployment, nature and power of the mantras and the teaching of the Kubjikā Tantras the maṇḍala contains and represents, begins with KĀ, that is, Kāmarūpa. Thus, as the AS says in the following passage, the Division beginning with KĀ is the entire tradition (the paścimāmnāya):

śrīkaṇṭhanāthāvatāre vidyāpīṭhe yoginīguhye

[1] These are noted in KuKh 6/212cd-219ab and 51/16cd-22.

[2] KuKh 1/5d.

> The category (of Śaiva teachings) beginning with KĀ is both Kula (Śākta) and Akula (Śaiva). It is the essence of the family (santāna) of the Command (present also to some extent) in the Tantras of the Left and the Right as well as in the tradition (santati) of the previous (Kaula) tradition (pūrvāmnāya). Free of the sphere of rajas and devoid of the deceit (of empty) ritual (kriyāḍambara), (it is) the Kulāgama, knowledge of the Self and the great vitality, which is realisation (pratyaya). It descends into the universe in accord with the modality of emission (sṛṣṭinyāya).[1]

One of several common classifications of the Tantras we find in them is into those of the Right and Left with Kula above in between. This is the set up, for example, in the Netratantra. Chapter ten of the NT is dedicated to a description of the worship of the deity of the Tantras of the Right (dakṣiṇasrotas). This is Svacchandabhairava. The following chapter, which describes the worship of the deity of the Tantras of the Left (vāmasrotas), is dedicated to Tumburu.[2] The Kula tradition (āmnāya) is governed by Bhairava who is worshipped in the midst of the Eight Mothers. In his commentary on the NT, Kṣemarāja relates their worship to that of Matsyendranātha and the Kula teachers of previous ages that belong to the previous Kaula tradition.[3]

At the highest level, the tradition 'beginning with KĀ' (kādya) is identified with the 'neuter' absolute (napuṁsaka). This is the goddess in her supreme, undifferentiated (niṣkala) form. It is the highest in an ascending gradation of traditions that begins with the Buddhist ones.[4] Elsewhere it is identified with the entire scripture transmitted initially from the goddess through the three lineages of Siddhas. In this perspective it is the second 'division' that follows the first in which the scripture is still contained in the godhead and so is not yet differentiated into the three transmissions.[5]

---

[1] vāmadakṣiṇatantreṣu (-dakṣiṇā-) pūrvāmnāye (-yaṁ) ca santatau || ājñāsantānasarvasvaṁ kādibhedaṁ kulākulam |
rajamaṇḍalanirmuktaṁ (-muktaḥ) kriyāḍambaravarjitam ||
kulāgamaṁ ātmajñānaṁ pratyayātmāmahaujasam |
sṛṣṭinyāyena jagati (jagat) avatāraṁ prakurvate || AS 28/67cd-69.

[2] Concerning Tumburu and his role as the Bhairava presiding over the left current of the Śaivāgama, see Dyczkowski 1988: 36-37.

[3] See comm. on NT 12/1. The fact that these teachers are not mentioned may well be an indication that NT precedes Matsyendra or, at least, the instauration of his worship as the original teacher of Kaulism.

[4] KuKh 68/139cd-140.

[5] See KuKh 68/117-118.

We may perhaps identify this aspect of the division beginning with KĀ with the initial or 'first' (ādi) one brought down into the world onto the Kaula mountain when in a previous incarnation the goddess was Dakṣa's daughter.[1] This is the original transmission of the scripture consisting of 70 million verses, which is the Mata - the transmission and doctrine as well as the scripture - Bhairava ardently desires to receive from the goddess.[2] It is the entire scripture that has emerged from the Śāmbhava Command (śāmbhavājñā), which is specifically related to Manthānabhairava[3] both generically as well as the specific 'collection' (saṁgraha) of the teachings of the MBT.[4] Thus the commentary (Ṭīkā) on sections of the MBT and the ṢSS identifies the 'Division beginning with KĀ' that is called the 'Pure One' (Vimala) with the scripture consisting of 24,000 verses.[5] Similarly, the colophons of the MBT equate the two and, in some of them, the Division Beginning with KĀ is itself the name of the MBT.[6] So the god says: 'O goddess, the scripture bestowed by the complete Command (consisting of) 24,000 (verses) is the Division beginning with KĀ transmitted by you to Mitranātha.'[7] It is the transmission (krama) of the 'Division beginning with KĀ' that is worshipped in the maṇḍala.[8] He who is attentive to this transmission awakens to the entire teaching (mata).[9]

The 'First Division' (ādibheda) and the 'Division beginning with KĀ' of the scriptures are not always equated. In one place in YKh (2) Śrīnātha asks the goddess for the teaching concerning Ādinātha's Śāmbhava nature that is in accord with the 'Kādi Āgama' and is free of the 'First Division' (ādibheda).[10] Perhaps

---

[1] Comm. on ṢSS 43/13-15.
[2] KuKh 4/5cd-6ab.
[3] KuKh 68/36-37ab.
[4] KuKh 7/3.
[5] See below, p. 77.
[6] Many colophons of the YKh (1) read: iti caturviṁśatisāhasre (śrī)kādibhede or iti (śrī)kādibhede śrīcaturviṁśatisahasre. A few simply read: iti śrīkādibhede or just iti kādibhede
[7] *devi tvayā [k, kh, gh, ṅ: * taṁ] mitranāthāya [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -nāthasya] saṁkrāmitam saṁpūrṇājñāpradattāgamaṁ catuviṁśasāhasrakaṁ [kh: catu ? śasā-; YKh (1): *saṁpūrṇājñā pradattā (k, kh, gh: pradaṁtā) yac caturviṁśasāhasrikaṁ (k, kh, gh: yeccaturviṁśasāhaśrikaṁ) āgamaṁ [k, kh: āgmaṁ; gh: āgme] kādibhedaṁ (YKh (1): missing) tvayā devi mitranāthāya saṁkramitam* || YKh (1) (chapter 12) MS K fl. 55b = YKh (2) MS Kh folio 2b.
[8] Normally, the Circle of Teachers is worshipped first, then the Circle of the Krama. Thus, in the following lines the Ṭīkā implies that the transmission (krama) is the Kādibheda:

The meaning is that, as before, one should worship all the Circle of Teachers. Then the transmission of the Kādibheda should be worshipped according to the prescribed procedure.
gurumaṇḍalaṁ pūrvavat [kh: pūrvat] sarvaṁ [kh: sarva] pūjayed ity arthaḥ | tataḥ kādibhedakramaṁ [k: kāli-; kh: kālibhedaṁ] saṁpūjyaṁ vidhinā | Ṭīkā (MS Kh fl. 1b-2a).
[9] KuKh 68/37cd-8ab.
[10] sāṁpratam śrotumicchāmi ādināthasya nirṇayam [k, kh: nirnnayaṁ] || ādibhedavinirmuktaṁ kādyāgamasamanvitam |

what is meant here is that this particular teaching belongs to the MBT and not the earlier Kubjikā Tantras, namely, the KMT and its most closely related texts. These are indeed distinct from the MBT and could well be defined as the 'first division' of the Kubjikā scriptures. Elsewhere, however, the distinction applies to the entire Kula tradition which is associated with both.[1]

The Saptakoṭi – the Scripture of Seventy Million Verses

According to most versions in the KuKh, the first form of the scripture consists of 70 million verses (saptakoṭi).[2] Other sources say that it consisted of a billion (śatakoṭi),[3] probably following the KMT.[4] A third variant presents the original scripture as consisting of a trillion (lakṣakoṭi).[5] The first of these three is

---

mantratantrakriyātītaṁ [k: -tatra-; kh: mantratantrakriyākriyā-] saṁsphuraṁ śāmbhavaṁ vada ||
YKh (2) 19/8cd-9.

[1] The Kula tradition is radiant. It is the eternal teaching of Kula (kuladarśana). It has been uttered in the fourth age and is associated with Ādi and Kādi.

saṁsphurantaṁ [k, kh: sasphuranta] kulāmnāyaṁ śāśvataṁ kuladarśanam [k, kh: - darśana] |
caturthe tu yuge proktaṁ [k, kh: proktā] ādikādisamāyutam || YKh (2) 27/14

[2] See KuKh 39/55cd-58ab.

[3] One wonders whether sapta- of the expression saptakoṭi may not be an error for śata- in the expression śatakoṭi, or vice versa.

[4] According to KMT 25/189 The KMT itself does not refer to it, even so one wonders whether one of these divisions is the one 'beginning with KĀ'.

[5] See KuKh 39/55cd and YKh (2) 6/24. The sequence is summerized in the Ṭīkā in the following passage which is, effectively, a commentary on YKh (2) 6/23ff. quoted below, p. 82-83:

1) The entire collection (of teachings) of the Western Tradition consisting of a trillion (lakṣakoṭi) (verses) is born there (from the Wheel of the Unborn). 2) Then (the teachings consisting of) a billion (śatakoṭi) (verses) is extracted from that. 3) Its essence consists of two and a half million verses. 4) Out of the midst of that come the three Lineages (oli), that is, the teaching (śāsana) of the Eldest, Middle One and Child. 5) Then out of the midst of that (comes the scripture) of 125,000 (verses). 6) The essence of that, like the clarified butter extracted from milk, is (the Tantra of) Twenty-four Thousand (Verses). (Finally) this collection (saṅgraha) of sūtras is the essence of that. This venerable Śrīmata was uttered from that so that Śrīkaṇṭhanātha can worship (anuṣṭhāna). Then, from (his) presence all exercise (their) authority. It is for this reason that this is said to be a special doctrine (viśeṣadarśana).

tatrotpannaṁ sarvaṁ lakṣakoṭipramāṇaṁ paścimānvayasya saṁgraham | tatas tasyoddhāraṁ [kh: tataḥ tasyo-] śatakoṭipramāṇam [k kh: saptasaptakoṭi-] | tatsāraṁ koṭir ekā lakṣapañcaviṁśatyadhikā | tatra madhyāt olitrayaṁ jyeṣṭhamadhyamabālaśāsanam [k kh: -madhyasa-] | tatas tanmadhyāl lakṣam ekaṁ pañcaviṁśatisahasrādhikam | yathā dugdhād [k: dadhnā; kh: daghnā] ghṛtaṁ gṛhyate sārabhūtaṁ tathā [k kh: nāsti] tatsāraṁ [k kh: yatsāraṁ] caturviṁśatisāhasram || tatsāram idaṁ sūtrasaṁgraham | tasmād idaṁ 1kb) śrīśrīmataṁ śrīkaṇṭhanāthasya anuṣṭhānārtham udāhṛtaṁ [kh: -nāthasyā-] kathitaṁ ca | tatas tatsakāśāt [kh:

the one generally preferred by the MBT, the long colophons of which invariably refer to the entire tradition as the scripture of seventy million (saptakoṭi) verses. The KuKh explains:

> Seventy million (verses) (saptakoṭi) is the extent of Her tradition (anvaya) that has emerged (in this way). The Manthānabhairavāgama has descended down from (the scripture of) a trillion (verses) (lakṣakoṭi). The essence extracted from within it is (this) tradition of seventy million (verses). (This) scripture, pure as clarified butter, is enveloped in the creeper of the network of ritual (kriyā). This secret is the essence, the most excellent Śaiva teaching (śāsana). This is the division of the first descent (into the world of the scripture). It is the teaching (nirṇaya) concerning the path of emanation.[1]

Apart from the common name Śrīmata,[2] the scripture consisting of 70 million verses is also called Pārameśvaramata.[3] In the following passage in the Ṭīkā it is called the Kālikāmata where the Division beginning with KĀ is identified with the MBT rather than this scripture:

> The extent (parisaṁkhyā) of the Āgama in this Western Tradition is as follows. First of all the root Āgama, a million billion (koṭilakṣa) (number of verses) in extent, (which represents) the descent (of the teaching) of the first kind (ādibheda) born of the great sacrifice of Manthānabhairava, is the root tradition (mūlāmnāya). Then the Kālikāmata (also) called the Kālikārṇavā, the extent of which is 70 million (verses) is what was extracted from it. Then, the Caturviṁśatisāhasra (the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses), the division beginning with KĀ, called Vimala ('Pure')[4] originated from there. Then, what was extracted from that is the collection of 107 sūtras.[5]

---

tataḥ stat-] sarva adhikāraṁ [k: sarvādhikāraṁ] kurvanti | tena kāraṇena (1khb) idaṁ viśeṣadarśanaṁ kathitam |

[1] KuKh 39/55cd-8ab.

[2] KuKh 30/74.

[3] KuKh 30/94-5. However, according to the KMT the Tantra called Pārameśvara is the original one that consists of a billion (śatakoṭi) verses. See below, p. 85.

[4] The MBT is called Vimalottara - 'Supremely Pure' - in AS 28/78 quoted below, p. 93.

[5] asmin paścimāmnāye āgamasya parisaṁkhyā yathā | prathamato [k kh: -taḥ] mūlāgamaṁ koṭilakṣapramāṇam ādibhedāvatāraṁ mahāmanthānabhairavayajñodbhavam mūlāmnāyam [k kh: + mūlāmnāyaṁ] | tatas tasyoddhāraṁ saptakoṭiprāmāṇaṁ kālikārṇavābhidhānaṁ [k, kh: kālikārṇā-] kālikāmatam | tatas tatrodbhūtaṁ [kh: -tāṁ] vimalasaṁjñā-kādibhedaṁ caturviṁśati-

One wonders whether 'Kālikāmata' may not be a mistaken reading for 'Kulālikāmata' but this reading is confirmed in the final colophon of the Ṭīkā which states:

> The commentary (ṭīkā) on the (scripture of) twenty-four thousand (verses), called the 'collection of sūtras' in the Pure Division (vimalabheda) which extends for a hundred and twenty-five thousand (verses) in the Kālikārṇavāgama consisting of seventy million (verses) extracted from the tradition (anvaya) that is the essence of (the scripture of) a trillion (lakṣakoṭi) (verses) belonging to the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava, is complete.[1]

It appears that the MBT is also called Kālikāgama in YKh (1). There, with reference to the Kaula Gāyatrī mantra, we read: 'It should be given to one who is devoted to the Yoni of the Virgin (goddess) and intent on the Kālikāgama and to one who is consecrated and the teacher (bodhaka) of the Kālikāgama.'[2] The AS refers to an ascending hierarchy into which the aspirant should be initiated. This begins with the scripture of 24,000 verses. It is followed by those consisting of 125,000, 70 million (saptakoṭi) and a billion (śatakoṭi). Thus the aspirant rises progressively, retracing in reverse the stages and states through which the scripture has past in its descent into the world. Finally he reaches the highest scripture, the original one - the supreme Mata, also called Siddhamata or Anāma.[3] Anāma - the Nameless - appears to have a symbolic meaning also. According to the KuKh, above, beyond the scripture of 70 million verses, is the first division (bheda) or form of the scripture. Defined apophatically, as it were, it is said to be 'devoid of the three transmissions' (kramatrayavivarjita). It is not, in other words, transmitted through the lineages but is still present as a vast potency within the womb (yoni) of the scriptures and, indeed, all of Speech and what it denotes in a form beyond speech and hence 'without name'.[4] This original scripture is also sāhasram [k kh: -sāhasryam] | tatastasyoddhāraṁ adhikasaptaśatakaṁ sūtrasaṁgraham | Ṭ MS K fl.183b-184a. See below, p. 110 ff. concerning the sūtras of the MBT.

---

[1] ityādyāvatāre mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe lakṣakoṭipramāṇe tatsāramānvayoddhṛtasaptakoṭi-kālikārṇavāgame [k kh: kālekarṇikāgame] lakṣapādādhike vimalabhede caturviṁśatisāhasre sūtrasañgrahābhidhāne ṭīkā samāptā |

[2] kumārīyonibhaktāya [k: kumārīyogibhakṣāya] kālikāgamatatparaḥ [k: kārikāgamatatparā] | atraiva cābhiṣiktaś ca [k: dhābhiṣiktaśca] kālikāgamabodhakaḥ || YKh (1) 39/177cd-178ab

[3] śrīmate matarājendre caturviṁśasahasrike ||
lakṣapādādhike deva saptakoṭisuvistṛte [-vismṛte] |
śatakoṭimaye siddhe anāmākhye [-khyā] pare mate ||
yadi sudīkṣito [sphuṭdīkṣitā] deva etāvan mātrayogataḥ [devāvanmātra-] |
AS 6/238cd-240ab. Concerning the Anāma- or Anāmā- mata see also below, p. 86.

[4] See KuKh 68/117.

sometimes said to consist of a trillion (lakṣakoṭi) verses. Thus the KuKh[1] refers to the Manthānabhairavāgama as the original scripture of which the essence consists of 70 million verses as having more that a trillion (lakṣakoṭi) verses. However, in this reference the 'first descent' of the scripture into the world is also identified with the version in 70 million verses. Thus, the preceding longer version is, in this view also, transcendent.[2] The following verses follow after a list of Tantras. These extend up to the Equal One (samanā) which is the first in the series of emanations down from the Transmental (unmanī), that is, the Command (śāmbhavājñā). Thus, the text implies that this is the transcendental source of the highest scripture:

> (These Tantras) pervade the principles (of existence) and it is here that (their) equality (samatā), starting from the beginning, (is experienced). They are established in all of Śambhu's letters up to (the level of) the Equal One (samanā). Thus, the pure teaching concerning the group of six (ṣaṭka) is the great sound (absolute). It is the descent of Parā's group of six. Beyond the (various) types (of Vedic syllables) (jāti), it is of six kinds. Beyond the belly of Mahāmāyā, (the highest scripture) always stands above the Tantra. Of the lineages (oli), it is the Western Tradition, the arising of the Transmission (kramodaya), which is authoritative in itself. Beyond Māyā, it is within the first arising which is the aspect above the Equal One (ie. the Transmental). The descent (of the teaching) has taken place in the past within the division (of the tradition called) Manthānabhairava (the Churning Bhairava). It is the division beginning with `KĀ', the ocean of truth, that has emerged from Śiva's Command (śāmbhavājñā), merely by knowing which (initiates attain) omniscience in every Age.[3]

Similarly, the AS explains:

> The pervasion, manifest (mudraṇa) and transcendent (amudraṇa), that has come forth from the Flower (i.e. the Drop) of the Command and crosses over into the Supreme State is taught to be the (deity's) command (ādeśa). The supreme accomplishment (is achieved) by its (sacred) Sound (rava) from which the scripture of) 70 million has come into being. It is the division (of the scripture called) the Churning Bhairava, the Kulāgama of the (deity) who generates

---

[1] KuKh 39/55cd.
[2] See KuKh 39/55cd-58ab.
[3] KuKh 68/32cd-37ab.

time. The essence of that is (the scripture called) the Pure One of the Division beginning with KĀ and is said to belong to the Division Beginning with KĀ. The essence (of that is the scripture of) 125,000 verses. The essence is the collection of the previous (scripture). (Its) expansion that has come onto the plane (of realisation) (bhūmikā) is (the scripture of) 24,000 (verses). The churning of its doctrine on the Path of the Command is the transmission of the teachers (gurukrama).[1]

The Uttaraṣaṭka and Parāṣaṭkāvatāra

The MBT is the teaching concerning Parā's Group of Six - the Parāṣaṭka. The sixfold character of the unfolding of the energies of the goddess, the creation of the world and the transmission of the teachings are aspects of the unique character of this tradition which is accordingly sometimes called 'the descent of (the teaching concerning) Parā's Group of Six (p*arāṣaṭkāvatāra*).'[2] Groups of six characterize the goddess who is frequently said to possess six aspects (ṣaṭprakarā), in her expanding, developing state (vikāsinī). There are six groups of six when she assumes the aspect of Parā (the Supreme).[3] They are arranged in the six seats at the corners of the hexagram of the goddess's maṇḍala. Thus, when referring concretely to the goddess's six aspects the standard formula is that it is the group 'beginning with the sacred seats' (pīṭhādi).[4] These six are, essentially, the six main topics with which the Kubjikā teachings are concerned and so stand for the tradition as a whole. Moreover, the six may also be understood to be the six sacred seats that are the source of the tradition. The Ṭīkā explains:

---

[1] mudraṇāmudraṇavyāptir ājñāpuṣpād [-rājñapuṣpa] vinirgatā [-taṁ] |
saṁkramati parāvasthāṁ [-sthā] tadādeśaṁ [-diśca] praśasyate ||
tadraveṇa [tadravena] parā siddhiḥ [siddhi] saṁjātaṁ [saṁjñātaṁ] saptakoṭikam |
manthānabhairavaṁ bhedaṁ [-da] kālakartṛkulāgamam [kālakartrī-] ||
tatsāraṁ [saṁsāraṁ] kādivimalaṁ [kābhividalaṁ] kādibhedasya ucyate |
lakṣapādādhikaṁ sāraṁ sāraṁ pūrvasamuccayam ||
prasaraṁ [prasāraṁ] bhūmikāyātaṁ caturviṁśasahasrakam |
tasya [tasyā] siddhāntamathanaṁ [sahanaṁ] ājñāmārge [-rga] gurukramam || AS 27/11-14.

[2] This is the name we find for the MBT in the colophons of chapters 26, 28 and 29 YKh (2). These read: *iti śrīparāṣaṭkāvatāre caturviṁśatisāhasra * * * * * * * * [kh: -viṁśati * * * -]* || 26; *iti śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre parāṣaṭkavatāre mahāyogasūtraṁ [k: * * * * * * * * * * ] || 28; iti śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre kādibhede parāṣaṭkāvatāre divyaughapadasiddhānāṁ [k: divyogha-; kh: + * * (?)] yogam ||. The same occurs in the colophon to chapter 12 of the SKh that reads: iti parāṣaṭkāvatāre parādevyākhecarīstavam.

[3] See intro. vol. 1, 320 ff..

[4] See, for example, KuKh 2/10b.

> Moreover, due to the great churning of this (the Saṁvartāsūtra, the essence of the scripture) its pervasion (i.e the matters with which it deals) is of many kinds, (these are, in particular) 1) the sacred seat, 2) the body (piṇḍa), 3) the seed-syllable (bīja), 4) the transmission (krama), that is, the Sequence of Twenty-eight and the rest 5) conduct, that is, Kula conduct (kulācāra), 6) the Sacred Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha), which is the (triangular) Yoni and the (hexagonal) sixfold (reality). Or else the six are the sacred seats of Kāmarūpa, Pūrṇa, Jālandhara, Uḍḍiyāna, Trisrota and Gesture. Thus the sixfold (reality) has been explained.[1]

A similar name for the MBT is the Uttaraṣaṭkabheda[2] - the Division of the Higher Group of Six. In his commentary, the ṛjuvimarśinī on the NṢĀ, Vidyānanda quotes an Uttaraṣaṭka four times. Each of these references have been traced to a passage in chapter five of the KuKauM.[3] However, this may well have imported into the KuKauM from another text that may not have been a Kubjikā Tantra. In the following passage in YKh (1), 'uttaraṣaṭka' is defined as the six aspects of the tradition (anvaya), that is, the major topics or teachings (āmnāya), transmitted through it:

> There is the teaching (āmnāya) of the teachers which is the first, the teaching of the transmission (krama) is the second. The third is the teaching of (the goddess) Kujā. The forth is the teaching of the Kula. The fifth is the teaching of the goddess. The sixth is the plane of oneness (samarasa). The tradition learnt by Śrīkaṇṭha is sixfold. This is the family (santāna), the first division, the western tradition of the venerable (goddess) Kujā. (This), the highest group of six (uttaraṁ ṣaṭkaṁ), is hard to acquire. He who knows it is a (true) yogi.[4]

---

[1] anekadhā tathā asya mahāmanthānād [k: -nā; kh: -maṁthānāt] vyāptiḥ [kh: vyāpti] yathā pīṭham [k kh: pīṭha] piṇḍam [k kh: piṇḍa] bījam [k kh: vīja] kramam [k kh: krama] aṣṭāviṁśakramādi | ācāraṁ [k kh: ācārāṁ] kulācāram [k kh: -rām] |
mudrāpīṭham iti yoniḥ saṣaḍvidham | ṣaḍ vā yathā kāmarūpam | pūrṇapīṭham | jālandharapīṭham [kh: jālāṁdhara-] | uḍḍiyānapīṭham [kh: ūḍḍiyāna-] | trisrotapīṭham [kh: triśrottapīṭhaṁ; k kh: + iti] mudrāpīṭham iti ṣaḍvidhā kathitam || Ṭ MS K fl. 1a.
[2] See KuKh 39/17cd-19ab.
[3] These references are on pp. 10, 70, 231 and 271 of the ṛjuvimarśinī; they correspond to KuKauM 5/43-44, 28cd-29ab, 8cd and 6cd, respectively.
[4] gurvāmnāyaṁ tu prathamaṁ kramāmnāyaṁ dvitīyakam || [Mising in MSs k, gh, and ṅ]
*tṛtīyaṁ tu kujāmnāyaṁ [k, gh: kṣajāmnāyaṁ] kulāmnāyaṁ [k, gh: nāsti; ṅ: * * * ] caturthakam [ṅ: catuṣṭakaṁ] |
pañcamaṁ devyāmnāyaṁ ṣaṣṭhaṁ [g: ṣaṭa.] samarasaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: samaraṁsa] padam [k, gh, ṅ: pada] ||

We find a description of the main Goddess of the Command (ājñāmūladevī) who in the right and left of one of her two pairs of arms bears the right (dakṣiṇa) and left (uttara) group of six.[1] I have not found any references to the 'right group of six'. However, in one place in the KuKh, the goddess imparts a teaching she acquired in the past which she says is the 'division of the left group of six' (uttaraṣaṭka).[2] She then goes on to describe the formation of the Triangle which, as usual, is said to be in 'six parts' with reference especially to the Hexagram. This is called the monastery (maṭha) in six parts.[3] It is has been explained in the scripture of seventy million verses.[4] As in all major Tantric traditions, the main deity's maṇḍala is the core of the teaching. The uttaraṣaṭka is therefore an important 'division' (bheda), that is, part of the teaching. Indeed, it appears to be emblematic of the entire tradition and, in a special way, that of the MBT, which expounds this teaching. This possibility is supported by the presence of a similar and much more common name - the Vimalabhedottaraṣaṭkanirṇaya - the Teaching concerning the Pure Division of the Higher Group of Six which appears in a good number of colophons.[5] It is also just called Vimalottara.[6]

Finally, another cognate, but much less common way of referring to the MBT is as the Pure Ucchuṣma Division (vimalocchuṣmabheda).[7] Ucchuṣma is an epithet of Agni, the god of fire, and means 'one whose crackling becomes manifest'. We have seen that it is the name of a forest where a Yoginī called Ucchuṣmā resides that the goddess visits in her tour. It is located in the region of Kāmarūpa which is where the scripture in this Age of Strife was revealed.

---

anvayaṁ ṣaḍvidhaṁ yasmāc chrīkaṇṭhena upārjitam [g: upājjitaṁ] |
santānedaṁ [g: -da] purā bhedaṁ [g: bheda] śrīkujāpaścimānvayaṁ ||
durlabhaṁ [g: -bha] cottaraṁ [g: cottara] ṣaṭkaṁ yo jānāti [gh: nānāti] sa yoginaḥ |
YKh (1) 27/69cd-72ab.

[1] adhikāre sthitā sā tu caturbāhurmahāprabhā [k: -humahāprabhāṁ; kh: -humahā-] |
dakṣiṇottaraṣaṭkau [k, kh: -ṣaṭkā] tau dakṣiṇottarayoḥ [k, kh: -yo] kramāt || YKh (2) 28/23.

[2] KuKh 39/17cd-19ab.

[3] KuKh 39/64ab.

[4] KuKh 39/67.

[5] The name Vimalabhedottaraṣaṭkanirṇaya appears in the colophons of chapters 4, 47, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65, 66, and 69 of the KuKh, chapter 40 and the final colophon of YKh (1), chapter 1 of YKh (2) and chapters 1, 2, 3, 6, 14, 15, 16, 20 and 28 of the AS.

[6] AS 28/78 quoted below, p. 93.

[7] See AS 28/66 quoted below, p. 92.

The second version of the Sūtra concerning the Descent into the World of the Scripture (Āgamāvatārasūtra)

We now turn to the following account of the descent of the scriptures drawn from YKh (2):

> The great sūtra has emerged in the western tradition (which is that of the) Śāmbhava (state). Fashioned from three and a half (verses), it is the essence (of the teaching imparted in this) school (mata). It is authoritative (pramāṇa) and is a sūtra.
>
> The pervasion of the great Manthānabhairava, the king (of scriptures), is in the unqualified (transcendent). It is the collection (saṁgraha) consisting of the ten and a quarter million verses belonging to the transmissions of the sacred seats and bodies (pīṭhapiṇḍa).
>
> The essence that has been extracted from the middle of that (is transmitted) in (the school which is) the teaching of the three lineages (olitritayaśāsana). The descent of the (scripture consisting of) 125,000 quarter (verses) is like the clarified butter extracted from milk.[1] (It is) the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses (Cāturviṁśatisāhasra) that is, the Khañjinīmata which, hard to understand, is said to be the venerable Śrīkaṇṭhanātha's own (form of) worship (anuṣṭhāna). All authority (adhikāra) proceeds from its presence.
>
> Thus, it is said to be a particular (teaching) that is free of the sphere of rajas and (its mantras) are devoid of Vedic syllabic sounds (jāti), nor (does it) accept (the worship of) Liṅgas. Free of all (outer) supports, beyond it (as its source and goal) is the Stainless (absolute) (nirañjana). (This), the great teaching (mahāmata) is higher than all Tantric practice (tantrācāra). It is the tradition of the Śāmbhava (state) that has came down through the series (of masters). Come unseen, it gives success in the Age of Strife. O god, it gives liberation and worldly benefits and is sealed in the first sacred seat. It is the venerable Ciñciṇīkula within the venerable Kadamba Cave. It was placed there by the God of the gods in accord with the Rule.[2]

---

[1] Cf. KuKh 68/119, quoted above.

[2] śāmbhave paścimāmnāye mahāsūtraṁ vinirgatam |
*vṛttādyuṣṭaṁ [k, kh: vṛtta * ṣṭaṁ] mate sāraṁ pramāṇaṁ sūtralakṣaṇam* ||
mahāmanthānarājasya vyāptis tasya alakṣake [k, kh: anakṣake] |
pīṭhapiṇḍakramānāṁ [k, kh: -ṇaṁ] tu pādakoṭis tu saṁgraham ||
tanmadhyād uddhṛtaṁ [k: tanādhyāduddhṛtaṁ] sāraṁ olitritayaśāsane |

Rūpaśiva begins his commentary - the Ṭīkā - on passages from the ṢSS and MBT with an explanation of a variant of this sūtra. Judging from the Ṭīkā, which comments systematically on the part of the sūtra translated here from YKh (2), it appears that the initial part of the sūtra Rūpaśiva saw has been omitted. This referred to the first stages of the descent of the scripture which begins with the scripture of a trillion verses (lakṣakoṭi) followed by the one consisting of 70 million.[1] The redactor of YKh (2) chose to replace this with some verses drawn from the KMT which refer to the scripture of 24,000 verses. These he fills out with standard outlines of the main lineages through which it was transmitted. Below we shall have occasion to review the entire passage of the KMT from which these verses are drawn and compare it with this version.

The first point to note in this presentation is the important role played by the Saṁvartāmaṇḍalasūtra. Placed at the very beginning of the KuKh and consisting of three and a half verses, this sūtra describes concisely the goddess's maṇḍala. As with all other major Tantric traditions, the maṇḍala - the worship of the deities within it, its internalisation and other manipulations - is the quintessential teaching of the Kubjikā Tantras. The original form of the scripture is said, as we shall see in detail later, to be a collection of sūtras of which this is considered to be the main one. Just as the teachings concerning the maṇḍala are those concerning the goddess which pervade her scripture, similarly, the 'root' sūtra pervades the others. Indeed, like the cause which precedes and pervades its effects, it is implicitely presented as the immanent source of the entire scripture. As Rūpaśiva puts it:

> The path of the Western tradition was born from the great (sacrificial) field, namely, the great sacrifice (yajña) of Manthānabhairava. (It was) 'fashioned out of three and a half (verses)'. It is due to (that sacrifice) that (this), the root sūtra called Samvartā

---

lakṣapādāvatāraṁ tu dugdhād [k, kh: daddhnā] ghṛtam ivoddhṛtam ||
cāturviṁśatisāhasraṁ [k: -sra] durbodhaṁ khañjinīmatam |
*śrīmac chrīkaṇṭhanāthasya svānuṣṭhānam udāhṛtam [kh: svānusthānam udāhṛ ?] ||
*tatsakāśāc ca [k: sakāmāc ca] sarvaṁ * adhikāraḥ pravartate* |
viśiṣṭaṁ [k: viṣat] tena cākhyātaṁ rajamaṇḍalavarjitam ||
jātibhedavinirmuktaṁ na ca [k: va] liṅgaparigraham |
sarvādhāravinirmuktaṁ tasyottīrṇaṁ [k, kh: tasro-] nirañjanam ||
tantrācārasya sarvasya uparisthaṁ [k, kh: -stha] mahāmatam |
śāmbhavaṁ saṁpradāyaṁ tu pāramparyakramāgatam ||
adṛṣṭavigrahāyātaṁ kalikāle tu siddhidam |
muktidaṁ bhuktidaṁ deva ādipīṭhe tu mudritam ||
śrīkadambaguhāyāṁ tu sthitaṁ śrīciñciṇīkulam |
sthāpitaṁ devadevena kṛtvā samayapūrvakam || YKh (2) 6/23-31.

[1] The passage from the Ṭīkā is quoted below on p. 77.

> (maṇḍalasūtra) of the root collection (mūlasaṁgraha) (of the teachings) belonging to the Path of the Great Churning (Bhairava) is pervasive.[1]

The first sacred seat, where the teachings were revealed for the first time, is Oḍḍiyāna.[2] It is also called Oṁkārapīṭha. It is the Point (bindu) symbolically located in the centre of the Triangle representing the Yoni. The Kadamba Cave is the Void within it that is formed when the Point splits apart to emit the Divine Sound (nāda) from which the scripture and, indeed, the entire universe, is said to develop. According to some accounts, the Liṅga in which goddess received the initiatory Command (ājñā) is within the Kadamba Cave. Perhaps this is also where the snake Vāsuki kept the scripture hidden for the first three Ages in order to reveal it in this one.[3] Note also that in this passage, the MBT is identified with the entire tradition - here called the Ciñciṇīkula - that is within the Void of the Point in the Centre of the Yoni. The MBT emerged out of the Point in the present Age of Strife. Presumably, the previous, more extensive, forms of the scripture belong to earlier Ages.

The Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses and the Kubjikāmata

We turn now to the KMT and see what it has to say about the creation of the scripture, there generically called the Current of the Transmission (kramaugha):

> This, the Tantra of the Supreme Lord (pārameśvara), extends for a billion (verses) (śatakoṭipravistīrṇa). It will have countless divisions, primary and secondary of many kinds. O fair lady, here in this age (there is the scripture of) 24,000 verses which consists of a collection of sūtras. However, it is not clear and (so), gracious lady, you should make it (so). However, reveal it in the four sacred seats by (your) Command in such a way that it remains very secret. O goddess, this Tantra is very hard to acquire and is supremely astonishing.[4]

---

[1] paścimāmnāyamārgasya [k kh: + apaścimāmnāyamārgasya] utpattiḥ mahākṣetrān mahāmanthānabhairavayajñād [kh: -kṣetrāt; kh: -yajñāt] vṛttam adhyuṣṭakam [kh: avyuṣṭakaṁ] iti vastutrayasarvapramāṇasya [k kh: -sārva-] mūlasūtrasya saṁvartābhidhānasya mūlasaṁgrahasya asya mahāmanthānamārgasya tataḥ vyāptiḥ | Ṭ fl. 1a.

[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 33.

[3] Cf. YKh (1) 12/42, quoted above, p. 43.

[4] śatakoṭipravistīrṇaṁ tantredaṁ pārameśvaram |
asya bhedopabhedāś ca bhaviṣyanti hy anekadhā ||

One of the names of the tradition and its scripture is Pārameśvaramata. According to the KuKh this comes from Sadyojāta, the western mouth of Sadāśiva. Its initial form consists of 70 million verses and then progressively contracts to 50 million, 100,000, 1,000, 100, 50 and just 25 verses.[1] Although the details differ, as often happens, the intention is clear - the tradition is concerned not only to derive its scripture from the goddess but, at a more fundamental level, from the god. Parallel to the exoteric Āgamas of the Śaiva Siddhānta, Sadāśiva utters from his five faces the esoteric scriptures of the Mata. Just as the goddess's essentially Śaiva identity is never forgotten, similarly, although the Mata scriptures extol the goddess, they are derived from the same source as the Śaiva scriptures and are part of them. The Kubjikā tradition acknowledges this connection right from its inception. Moreover, free of the complexity of the later accounts, we have here a straight forward descent in three stages. The scripture of a billion verses came first, then that of 24,000 and finally the KMT, which is revealed secretly in the four sacred seats, because the previous one was too obscure. That this is the meaning of the text is confirmed by the concluding colophon of the KMT which states:

> This is the venerable Teaching of the (the goddess) Kubjikā (śrīkubjikāmnāya) (contained) in the (Scripture of) Twenty-four Thousand (Verses as) the best essence of (its) essence. It has emerged from the venerable sacred seat of Oḍiyāna, (consisting of) twenty-five chapters (paṭala) and three and a half thousand (verses) (this), the Śrīmata, is complete.[2]

Also called the Kubjinīmata or Anāmāmata, the Mata of the goddess Anāmā (the Nameless One),[3] the KMT is the essence of the earlier scripture. Too

---

atra kalpe (KuKauM, ṢSS: ādikalpe) varārohe (YKh (2): tasmin vārāhakalpe tu) sūtrasaṁgrahalakṣaṇam |
caturviṁśatisāhasraṁ [KuKauM: lakṣapādādhikenaiva] kintu tat (KuKauM: kiṁ tat; YKh (2): su; ṢSS kintu taṁ) prakaṭaṁ nahi ||
kartavyaṁ tu tvayā bhadre kintu pīṭhacatuṣṭaye | (YKh (2): missing)
prakāśayasva (KuKauM, YKh (2): prakāśāya) cājñāto (KuKauM: svatantrāś ca; YKh (2): mamājñāyā; ṢSS: tantrājñāṁ [k: -sthāṁ]) yathā (YKh (2): yadi) gopyataraṁ bhavet ||
sudurlabhataraṁ (ṢSS tad-) devi tantredaṁ paramadbhutam (YKh (2): caturviṁśatisahasrakam) |
KMT 25/189-192ab = ṢSS 50/69cd-72 = KuKauM 7/222-225ab; KMT 25/190-191 = YKh (2) 6/11-12; KMT 25/191cd-192ab = YKh (2) 6/13.

[1] KuKh 30/94-95.

[2] iti caturviṁśatisāhasre sārāt sārataraṁ śrīkubjikāmnāyaṁ śrī-oḍiyānapīṭha-vinirgataṁ pañcaviṁśatipaṭalaṁ sārdhas trīṇi sahasrāṇi, śrīmataṁ parisamāptam.
See also YKh (1) 27/73-74ab.

[3] See intro. vol. 2, p.101ff. concerning Kubjikā as the goddess Anāmā.

sacred even to utter, it is studied, kept and venerated in the written form. As the KMT goes on to say: 'This is the collection of the essence (sārasaṁgraha), the Anāmāmata. One should not utter it and if one does one should recite (a purifying mantra) 100 million times'.[1] The meaning of this passage is quite clear and unambiguous and would have remained so, where it not for the subsequent redaction of the MBT and its claim to be the scripture that preceded the KMT.

The variant readings, additions and omissions in these few lines from the KMT found in the other three sources in which they appear (i.e. YKh (2), the KuKauM and ṢSS) tell us a great deal about their concerns and understanding of the history of the tradition and its scripture. Let us begin with the version in the KuKauM. The ŚM which, like the ṢSS, contains most of the text of the KMT, avoids controversies and unnecessary self-ascriptions and so simply omits the passage. The Śrīmatottara, as its very name implies, understands its relationship to the KMT, that is, the Śrīmata quite clearly as its continuation - uttara. It does not need to insert itself in the Current of the Transmission (kramaugha) at some other point, which both the ṢSS and the KuKauM need to do for their own reasons.

Chapters 49 and 50, the last two of the ṢSS, are an expanded version of the last chapter of the KMT. They are chapter seven of the KuKauM. The version in the KuKauM agrees with the reading in the ṢSS which shifts the time of the appearance of the scripture from this Age as we find it in the KMT, back to the First Age (ādikalpa). However, the scripture revealed is not the Caturviṁśatisāhasra, as it is according to both the KMT and the ṢSS, but the one consisting of 125,000 verses.[2] The reason for this is that the KuKauM presents itself as the Caturviṁśatisāhasra which clarifies the meaning of the teachings of the scripture of 125,000 verses. The agenda of the ṢSS, on the other hand, requires the independent existence of the Caturviṁśatisāhasra and so leaves the reading as it is. To see how this works we turn to another few lines that occur twice in the ṢSS, once in chapter 45 and again at the end of the ṢSS. They are not found in the KMT, but are reproduced in chapter 7 of the KuKauM with variants that are especially significant in this context. The version in the ṢSS says:

> (The scripture that consists of) twenty-four thousand (verses), which is said to be the Kubjinīmata, contains in its last section (ūrdhvakhaṇḍa) the disclosure of the profound meaning of the (whole)

[1] KMT 25/206-7.

[2] The KuKauM says: 'O fair lady, in the first age (the scripture of) which consists of a collection of sūtras (is represented) by the one consisting of 125,000 (verses).

> book. And, O mistress of the gods, it is said to be the Ṣaṭsāhasra, the most excellent Mata.[1]

Although the ṢSS is clearly an expansion of the KMT, it chooses to associate itself with the scripture of 24,000 verses. It claims to be part of the last section of it which, according to a variant reading, is called 'Siddhakhaṇḍa'. This is in fact the name of one of the three sections (khaṇḍa) of the MBT. Manuscripts of this section of the MBT exist, but there is no sign there of any connection with the ṢSS. Either way, there is clearly a conscious attempt on the part of the redactor of the ṢSS to arrogate the authority of the MBT to the ṢSS by associating it concretely with it. It is very unlikely that the redactor happened to guess the name of a section of the MBT so there is little reason to doubt that the redactor of the ṢSS referred concretely to the MBT rather than the mythic scripture consisting of 24,000 verses mentioned in the KMT. Clearly, the MBT enjoyed considerable prestige for the redactor(s) of the ṢSS. Indeed, according to the following passage in the ṢSS this is the scripture revealed by Tūṣṇīnātha, the First Siddha (ādisiddha) of the Kubjikā school:

> All this has been explained in the auspicious and venerable Kubjīmata of twenty-four thousand verses. Here it has been just somewhat mentioned. O great goddess, (this), the heart of the Supreme Lord should be kept secret. O fair one, this division is the Kādi division that has come forth from the First Face (ādivaktra) and has come, O mistress of the gods, through the tradition of Tūṣṇīnātha.[2]

The redactor (s) of the KuKauM wished to pass off the KuKauM as the MBT. Thus, it replaces the reference to the scripture of twenty-four thousand verses with that of 125,000 and the reference to the Ṣaṭsāhasra with one to the scripture of twenty-four thousand verses implying thereby its identity with it. Thus the passage reads in the KuKauM:

> (The scripture consisting of) 125,000 (verses) is said to be the Kubjinīmata. Above it is the Kulatantra which is the disclosure of the profound meaning of the (whole) book. O mistress of the gods, it is

---

[1] See below, p. 88 note 1 for the Sanskrit of this passage.

[2] caturviṁśatisāhasre śrīmatkubjīmate śubhe [k, kh: drume] ||
samastaṁ tatra vyākhyātam atra kiñcid udāhṛtam |
gopanīyaṁ mahādevi hṛdayaṁ pārameśvaram ||
etad bhedaṁ varārohe kādibhedaṁ [k kh: -bhedair] visarpitam |
ādivaktrād viniṣkrāntaṁ pāramparyakramāgatam ||
tūṣṇīnāthasya deveśi * * * * * * * * | ṢSS 42/69cd-72a.

said to be your (scripture that consists of) twenty-four thousand (verses).[1]

Now let us see what has happened in the version of the text we are examining in YKh (2). This short passage, followed by a few additional lines, prefixes the long passage we examined in the previous section. There the first two sentences have been omitted. This is because the scripture is conceived to have originated from the Saṁvartāsūtra, not from an original version in a billion verses. Moreover, a couple of significant variant readings and the omission of another line transforms this passage into the following:

> In this, the (present) Age (which is that of) of Vārāha, (there is the scripture of) 24,000 verses which consists of a collection of sūtras. However, it is not clear. Reveal (it) at my Command if it is most secret. (The scripture of) 24,000 verses is very hard to acquire.[2]

The redactor of the YKh (2) did not want to deal with the whole extent of the scripture. His specific concern was the origin of the Caturviṁśatisāhasra (the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses), that is, the MBT. The KMT refers to 'this Tantra' and goes on to extoll the benefits for the country, town and one's home of possessing a copy of 'this Tantra' which is, clearly, the KMT itself. Similarly, as one would expect, the YKh (2) exalts the MBT as 'hard to acquire' and precious. The following lines added to this passage go on to assert that this is the original scripture uttered by the goddess. This is the scripture transmitted through the three lineages and is the source of the KMT:

> (The scripture) of Twenty-four Thousand (Verses) has been uttered in the division (of the transmission) beginning with KĀ. The Ratnasūtra was extracted (from it) in the Deccan (dakṣiṇe pathi) by the Lord (nātha). One division has been fashioned there (namely that of) the Aged, Youth and Child. Divine, (the scripture of) Twenty-four Thousand (Verses) has been brought down (into the world) by (the

---

[1] caturviṁśasahasraṁ tu (KuKauM: lakṣapādādhikaṁ [all MSs except kh, g: lakṣaṁ-]) yad uktaṁ kubjinīmatam || *tasyordhvakhaṇḍe yat proktaṁ (*ṢSS 50/116c: tasyordhve siddhakhaṇḍaṁ tu; KuKauM: tasyordhve kulatantraṁ tu) gūḍhagranthārthabhedanam | kathitaṁ caiva (KuKauM: tava) deveśi ṣaṭsāhasraṁ [k, kh: -sahasra] matottamam (KuKauM: caturviṁśasahasrakam) || ṢSS 50/116cd-117 = KuKauM 7/297-298.
[2] See previous note for the Sanskrit of this passage.

> goddess) Kujā. Its authority (pramāṇa) has been explained to those who hold office (adhikāra) in the three lineages (oli).[1]

The Ratnasūtra is the KMT, concerning which the MBT declares: 'The venerable Kulālikāmata Tantra has been revealed on the southern path (i.e. South India). It is (also) called the Ratnasūtra and is successful in the Deccan'.[2] This statement can be taken to mean that the KMT was originally revealed in the Deccan. More likely the sense is as I have translated which implies that it was imported into the Deccan from elsewhere and then 'made known'. We will see that there is no evidence that the MBT predates the KMT. Rather, there are numerous indications to the contrary. We will see that the MBT was redacted in Koṅkaṇa in the Deccan to which there are only passing references in the KMT. Despite statements to the contrary, like the one above, we do find one or two references that indicate that the MBT considers itself to be independent of the KMT and subsequent to it. Thus, we read:

> (What was) not said in the age (of the scripture) consisting of 3,500 (verses), that is, the Kulālikāmata, has been taught in the Śrīmata, the king of Matas, the great scripture (bṛhadāgama), that is, the Khañjinīmata, of 24,000 (verses).[3]

At the same time, it seems that the MBT seeks to appropriate the KMT. We shall see that a large part of the MBT is divided up into sūtras. Was the KMT called the Ratnasūtra (a name that appears only in the YKh) in order to suggest that the KMT is actually one of the sūtras of the MBT? We have seen that the KMT itself refers to a scripture of 24,000 verses 'which consists of a collection of sūtras'. While we may take this to be evidence for the prior existence of the MBT,

---

[1] *cāturviṁśatisāhasraṁ [kh: -sāha ] ākhyātaṁ kādibhede hi [k, kh: -da si] ||
ratnasūtraṁ tu nāthena uddhṛtaṁ dakṣiṇe pathi |
bhedaikaṁ kalpitaṁ tatra vṛddhakaumārabālakam ||
kujāvatāritaṁ divyaṁ cāturviṁśasahasrakam [k, kh: -ke] |
pramāṇaṁ tasya cākhyātaṁ olitrayādhikāriṇām || YKh (2) 6/20cd-22.

[2] *veditaṁ [all MSs: niveditaṁ; 2: saṁsāre (k: -raṁ; kh: * sāraṁ)] dakṣiṇe [ṅ: -ṇā] mārge tantraṁ [ṅ: maṁtraṁ] śrīkulālikāmatam [gh: srīkulāṁlikāmataṁ]* |
ratnasūtram iti proktaṁ siddho 'asau [k, kh, gh: siddhāsau; ṅ: siddhāso] dakṣiṇāpathe || 46 ||
YKh (1) 12/48cd-49ab = YKh (2) 2/18. This is the conclusion of the Kramāgamāvatārasūtra (quoted above on p. 42-43).

[3] noktam adhyuṣṭasāhasre (k: -dvyaṣṭha-) kalpe kulālike mate |
śrīmate matarāje ca (k g: na) caturviṁśasahasrake (g: -sāhasrake) ||
bṛhadāgame kādibhede (g: + bhede) nirnīṭaṁ (k g: nirmitaṁ) khañjinīmate (g: -ta) |
YKh (1) 27/79-80ab.

it is possible that the redactors of the MBT inserted this passage into the KMT later or modelled their text to accord with the statements in the KMT in order to guarantee its authority. An indication that there was an attempt to do this is the fact that the result only partially conforms to its pre-determined form as a 'collection of *sūtra*s'. In actual fact, the MBT is not uniformly structured in this way. As we shall see, although a large part of the YKh is indeed divided into *sūtra*s, and may have originally been entirely so, only some parts of the KuKh are *sūtra*s, many of which are drawn from the YKh. The fact that entire sūtras found in one section (khaṇḍa) also appear in another is a clear indication that parts of the MBT were redacted separately at different times and by different people. Moreover, for this same reason, the text does not uniformly consist of *sūtra*s. The Ṭīkā's account of the 'descent of the scripture' explains this by saying that the sūtras originated from the scripture of 24,000 verses which implies that it was not all made of sūtras.

Again mirroring the manner in which the KMT conceives itself to be, the MBT refers to itself as the collection of the essence (sārasaṁgraha) and says that it is the Śrīkhageśīmahāmata.[1] As Khageśī (the Bird Goddess) is Kubjikā[2] this name is virtually a synonym of Kubjikāmata.[3] However, although the MBT does sometimes claim to elucidate what was taught in a previous age (pūrvakalpa), in no case are these teachings found in the KMT.[4] Indeed, the MBT, unlike the ŚM and ṢSS, is not directly related to the KMT. The KMT belongs, as the above passage implies, to an earlier age (kalpa) - which is, of course, the reverse of how things would be if the MBT were to be the source of the KMT. There are indeed passages in the MBT that can be traced in the KMT, but these were probably drawn by the MBT from the KMT, not vice versa. An initial impression one has is that generally these passages do not fit so well where they appear in the MBT as they do in the KMT. In some cases, as in the one we have examined, the passages in the MBT have been somehow adapted to their context there. However, this may be a false impression as the MBT as a whole is more disordered and less systematic in its presentation than the KMT. While it is difficult to argue on the basis of impressions, we notice several developments in the MBT as a whole and within it with respect to the KMT that are clear signs that it post-dates the KMT.

---

[1] See KuKh 30/90-91.

[2] KuKh 6/31ab and ibid. 31/48.

[3] Cf. the name Vakrikāmata: caturviṁśatisāhasraṁ śrīmataṁ vakrikāmatam KuKh 30/105ab.

[4] kathitāḥ (k g: -tā) pūrvakalpe tu prakaṭāḥ (k g: -ṭā) khañjinīmate ||
tāḍave 'pi (?) ca te (k: sāṁḍave pivate) ślokāḥ (k g: -kā) śrīmate prakaṭīkṛtāḥ (k: -kṛtā; g: -kṛte) |
YKh (1) 35/30cd-31ab.

The Structure of the Manthānabhairavatantra

The Three Sections (khaṇḍa) of the Manthānabhairavatantra

We now turn our attention to the structure of the Manthānabhairavatantra, focusing first of all on the three sections (khaṇḍa) into which it is divided. These are mentioned at the end of the following passage drawn from the end of the concluding chapter of the Ambāmatasaṁhitā that, like the KuKauM, passes itself of as a part, if not the whole of the MBT. We find summarized in this passage virtually all the main features of the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses attributed to it in the passages we have examined drawn from the original, authentic MBT. It comes just after a long list of Tantras and the goddess is speaking:

> It was spoken by the Lord who resides in the Wheel (cakravartyeśvara). It was not spoken in the transmission of the three lineages. (The mantras of) all those (Tantras include) the utterance of Vedic syllables (jāti). They are not part of the venerable Śāmbhava Kula. How can they be (part of) the western tradition (paścimānvaya) that is within Bhairava who is free of defects, that is, in the principle of the Command called the Transmental which is the ocean of the sixfold (ṣaṭprakāra) Mata? How can they possess the accomplishment (siddhi) that has come through the transmission of the series (of teachers)?
>
> At the beginning during the divine Kṛta Age, the Kula tradition was of many kinds. All this secret, that is, the sequence of planes (bhūmikākrama), (was) Mālinī (nādiphānta). It was emitted in three parts and so your Tradition of the Siddhas (siddhāmnāya) is threefold. Just as they have no future (existence) up to the end of the age (yuga), similarly these (scriptures) of the Tantric (rather than Kaula) kind (tantrabheda) have no line (of teachers transmitting them). Their supreme (condition) (paratva) is unclear, so how can the threefold (impurity) be purified?
>
> (The MBT is) the Pure (vimala) (scripture) in six modalities (ṣaṭprakāraka) preceded by the supreme Assembly of Sounds (śabdarāśi).[1] It is the descent (into the world) of the group of six relating to (the goddess) Parā. Beyond (the six) types (of Vedic ritual

[1] Further ahead in the AS (28/100ab) we read that the scripture, which is the transmission of the three lineages (olikrama) 'is the threefold expansion. It is the manifestation of the transmission of the aggregate of words (prasaraṁ trividhaṁ jñātvā śabdarāśikramodayam).'

ejeculations) (jāti), it is the manifestation of the transmission (kramodaya). (In other words the teaching) is free of the (Vedic syllables) OṀ and the rest and devoid of the syllables 'namaḥ'.

May (this supreme reality known) as the Śāmbhava Kaula, that impels the Kaulika Command be manifest (saṁsphuret)! (It is) the teaching of the three lineages that has come (down) as the transmission (krama) (handed down through) the series (of teachers). It is the school (śāsana), the Kubjikā tradition (āmnāya). It is the stainless (absolute) (nirañjana) beyond (the differentiated) energy (kalā) (that gives rise to creation and bondage).

It is the Pure (vimala) Ucchuṣma category (of Śaiva teachings), that is, the tradition of the transmission (kramānvaya) of the emanation of the group of six. It is the ultimate (paścima) (tradition) which, with its secret (teaching) is on the supreme plane of authority. It is the same energy, free of Māyā,[1] that bestows that (very) grace in (the Siddhānta scriptures) divided into (the group of) ten and (the group of) eighteen (Āgamas) and (in the scriptures) generated by the Five Brahmās (the deities of Sadāśiva's five faces).[2] [. . .]

The Manthānabhairava category (of the scriptures) is the complete (pūrṇa) category (of scriptures that is transmitted) when the Night (of Māyā) is ending.[3] The essence of the tradition (taught in the scripture of) 70 million (verses) is the (scripture of) ten and a quarter million quarter (verses).

O Śambhu, the compendium (saṁgraha) consisting of 125,000 verses that has come (down through) the transmission (krama) within the western, that is, the root tradition is praised by those who have accomplished the Command (ājñāsiddha). Again, a part (pariccheda) of it is the clear (sphuṭa) transmission (krama) of (the scripture of) twenty-four (thousand verses) (jinasaṁkhyā). The Command, that is, the Transmental, is supreme and (perfectly)

---

[1] In other words, the goddess who is the spiritual energy that is the source of the Kubjikā Tantras also impells the god Sadāśiva to utter the Siddhānta scriptures from his five mouths. In that case, however, that energy is not 'free of Māyā' as it in the Kubjikā tradition.

[2] See Dyczkowski 1988: p. 32 ff..

[3] The Night of Māyā ends at the end of the Kali Age, which is when the teachings are propagated in a special way. The 'Practice of the Night' may also be implied here which involves union with the embodiment of the goddess at night while reciting mantras. The KuKh (30/177d-178ab) declares: This is the scripture of the Siddhakula. This is the Kaulika teaching established by the practice that takes place at night (niśācāra).

tranquil. (Attained) by abandoning the (lower) six (wheels), it is above the three (transmissions).[1]

(This scripture) was imparted to Śrīnātha[2] in order to establish the Kubjikā Kula. It has come from the invisible form (of the transcendent) and is transmitted as the realisation of the Siddhas (siddhapratyaya). Born as (the teaching) of Ādinātha, divine and transcendent, it is (a veritable) sacrifice (offered to the deity's) energies (kalādhvara). The Lord (nātha) brought it down (to earth) by the grace of the Śāmbhava Command.

(The teaching) is the accomplished abode of the Siddhas and it extends from Śiva up to the earth. In order to (dispense) grace everywhere, it has been sealed (mudrita) in the first sacred seat (ādyapīṭha). Initially it was hidden for three ages (yuga) at the root of a Kadamba (tree).[3] It was retrieved in (the cremation ground called) Karavīra when it was made manifest in the fourth (Age).

Omniscience (is attained) in each age by the knowledge of an omniscient one. (This is the scripture called) Supremely Pure (Vimalottara) which, part of the Śaiva teachings, is the authority (pramāṇa) of the Rudra (scriptures), Vedas and the other categories of Śiva's (scriptures) (as well as that of) the Tantras of the Right and the Left. It is (the MBT) the Teaching of the Three Sections (khaṇḍatritayaśāsana), the penetration (of the energy of) realisation (imparted by) the venerable teacher.[4]

---

[1] Cf. KuKh 68/117..

[2] Śrīnātha is Ādinātha, the first Siddha to propagate the teachings.

[3] The reader will recall that in an account we examined previously the scripture is also said to have been hidden for the three Ages first in the netherworlds and then by the snake Vāsuki. The Kadamba tree stands outside the Kadamba Cave where the goddess herself is said to have received the Command when she was hidden there in a Liṅga. The maṇḍala itself, located at the End of the Twelve above the head, is called the Tree. In other words, it seems that the text is telling us that the teachings remained hidden in a latent state in the Drop (bindu) in the centre of the maṇḍala - the root of the Tree.

[4] cakravartyeśvarenoktaṁ noktaṁ olikramatraye |
jātyuccāreṇa [-occāreṇa] te sarve na te śrīśāmbhave kule ||
kutas te paścimānvaye [-mavaśye] bhairavānte nirāmaye |
ājñātattve unmanākhye [-khyaṁ] ṣaṭprakāre matodadhau ||
bhavet [nayet] teṣāṁ kutaḥ siddhiḥ pāramparyakramāgatā [-gataṁ] |
ādau kṛtayuge divye kulāmnāyam anekadhā ||
nādiphāntam idaṁ [tāditāntamidaṁ] sarvaṁ rahasyaṁ bhūmikākramam |
tribhedabhinnaṁ sṛṣṭaṁ te siddhāmnāyam iti tridhā ||
yugāntaṁ yāvad bhaviṣyaṁ yathā teṣāṁ na vidyate |
tathā te tantrabhedāś ca pāramparyavivarjitāḥ [-taṁ] ||

The Compendium of Twenty-Four Thousand (Verses) (Caturviṁśati-sahāsra), better known as the MBT, is preserved in about 80 manuscripts. In actual fact these manuscripts contain three texts that identify themselves as the Compendium of Twenty-Four Thousand (Verses). They have reached us in disorder. Due to their common self-ascription, separate texts and sections of them are not clearly identified. We know that this was the state of the text already in the 17th century from a scribe's colophon at the end of one of the manuscripts. There the scribe tells us that he is called Kālidāsa. A Brahmin attached to the royal court of Bhaktapur in the reign of Jagatjyotirmalla (1614 to 1635 CE), he was commissioned by him to transcribe the MBT because it was in disorder.[1] Indeed, the disorder was so great that this colphon comes at the end not of a part of the original MBT, but of the Ambāmatasaṁhitā which, like the Kulakaulinīmata, identifies itself as a part of the scripture of Twenty-four Thousand (Verses).

---

paratvaṁ [paratra] na sphuṭaṁ teṣāṁ trividhaṁ śuddhyate katham |
śabdarāśi paraṁ pūrvaṁ vimalaṁ ṣaṭprakārakam ||
parāṣaṭkāvatāraṁ [-vayāgaṁ] tu jātyuttīrṇaṁ [-ottirṇaṁ] kramodayam |
.okārādivinirmuktaṁ namoṅkāravivarjitam ||
saṁsphuret [sasphure] śāmbhavaṁ kaulaṁ kaulikājñāpravartakam |
pāramparyakramāyātaṁ olitritayanirṇayam ||
śāsanaṁ kubjikāmnāyaṁ kalātītaṁ nirañjanam |
vimalocchuṣmabhedaṁ tu ṣaṭkasṛṣṭikramānvayam [ṣaṣkaṁ-] ||
paścimaṁ sarahasyaṁ tu adhikāre [-ra] pare pade |
daśāṣṭādaśabhinne tu pañcabrahmodbhave ca [-bhrātodbhavena] vā ||
saiva māyojjhitā [-taṁ] śaktiḥ [śaktyā] kurute tad anugraham | [. . .]
manthānabhairavabhedaṁ [-bhede] pūrṇabhedaṁ niśi kṣaye |
saptakoṭyanvaye [-koṭyānvayaṁ] sāraṁ koṭipādasamuccayam ||
anvaye paścime śaṁbho mūlānvaye kramāgatam |
saṁgrahaṁ lakṣapādaiś ca ājñāsiddhaiś ca [-siddhaśca] vanditam ||
paricchedaṁ [paricchede] punas tasya [-tasyā] jinasaṁkhyākramaṁ sphuṭam |
unmanājñā parā śāntā ṣaṭtyāgāt [-tyāgas] tritayopari [-parā] ||
kubjikākulam āsthāya śrīnāthasya niveditam |
adṛṣṭavigrahāyātaṁ saṁkrāntaṁ siddhapratyayam ||
ādināthasya saṁjātaṁ [saṁkṣeyā] divyātītaṁ kalādhvaram |
śāmbhavājñāprasādena nāthena avatāritam ||
śivādyavaniparyantaṁ siddhānāṁ siddhavāsaram |
anugrahārthaṁ sarvatra ādyapīṭhe tu mudritam ||
pūrvaṁ kadambamūle tu gopitaṁ [gopi] tu yugatrayam |
karavīre [-vīraṁ] samāsādya caturthe prakaṭe kṛte ||
sarvajñajñānamātreṇa [sarvajñaṁjñāta-] sarvajñatvaṁ yuge yuge |
vedādiśivabhedānāṁ rudrāṇāṁ śivaśāsane ||
dakṣiṇottaratantrāṇāṁ pramāṇaṁ vimalottaram |
śrīgurupratyayāveśaṁ [-guruṁ-] khaṇḍatritayaśāsanam || AS 28/57-67ab, 70-78.

[1] See below, 351-352.

The original MBT (to which we refer with this name) is in fact, as the above passage suggests, divided into three large sections (khaṇḍa). In several places the MBT says of itself that it consists of four parts (pāda) called kriyā, caryā, jñāna, and yoga.[1] These same four parts are those into which the Siddhānta Āgamas are supposed to be divided. Ideally, their names suggest their contents. The kriyāpāda is the section dealing with ritual. The caryāpāda deals with right conduct, vows, penances and the like. The jñānapāda deals with metaphysics, cosmogony, and basic principles such as the nature of the soul, the fetters that bind it, deity and the like. The yogapāda should deal with Yoga. In actual fact, this division into four parts is largely theoretical. Even so, some attempt is made by many Siddhānta Āgamas to follow this scheme or, at least, they acknowledge its theoretical existence. Bhat explains:

It is said that the Āgamas should in theory consist of four sections into which their various topics are arranged: jñāna, kriyā, yoga and caryā. In practice, one does not always find this arrangement. Suprabheda and Kiraṇa are the only two Āgamas we have with their four sections. The manuscripts of the other basic Āgamas (mūlāgama) that we have managed to recover mostly contain only the kriyāpāda. In the Rauravāgama there is a section called in the colophons 'rauravasūtrasaṁgraha' and 'vidyāpāda' which is, effectively, a condensed form of the jñāna and yogapāda. In the version of the Ajitāgama we possess, the second paṭala deals with Śiva's essential nature (śivasvarūpa), which is actually a subject relevant to the jñānapāda. Several of the *āgama*s we possess contain in the same way in their kriyāpāda some *paṭala*s taken from the jñānapāda. There are other examples of a mix of subjects from different *pāda*s. [. . .] As the material of the jñānapāda and yogapāda is used directly to gain a correct understanding and for the purpose of the kriyāpāda, it matters little if it is treated in separate *pāda*s; it can all be presented together. As far as the mūlāgama is concerned, the kriyāpāda is the most important section.[2]

Bhat refers here to the main 28 Āgamas (mūlāgama). The secondary Āgamas (upāgama) may follow the theoretical model more closely, as do for example, the Mataṅgapārameśvara and the Mṛgendrāgama. Even so, the theoretical division into four is rarely faithfully observed. Nonetheless, the prestige of this division into four *pāda*s persisted. The Sarvadarśanasaṁgraha, which was written in the early 14th century, defines the Siddhānta Śaiva system

---

[1] See KuKh 30/106 and 69/28cd-29ab. Also: kriyā caryā tathā jñānaṁ [k: dravyaṁ] yogapādaṁ caturthakam | YKh (1) 12/42cd same line in YKh (2) 2/11cd. Note the reading 'dravyam' in the MSs of all the sources is defective. See note to the Sanskrit text of KuKh 30/106ab.

[2] Intro. to the Ajitāgama vol. 1 pp. 2-3.

as 'the great Tantra in four parts'. Similarly, the Śivapurāṇa describes it having four parts (catuṣpāda).[1] Desai surmises that two remarkable images of Sadāśiva with four legs (catuṣpāda) were probably inspired by a pun on the word pāda which means both a division of the Śaivāgama and 'foot'.[2]

It is hard to understand how the MBT could have been perceived to have been divided in this way. In fact, it is simply a claim to the same prestige, extent and authority for the MBT as a Siddhānta Āgama was felt to have. A realistic division of the MBT we find in the texts is into three sections (khaṇḍa). It is as the KuKh says: 'the Śrīmata, the king of Matas, the Great Kula in three sections (khaṇḍatraya), consisting of twenty-four thousand verses.'[3] The concluding colophon of YKh (1) confirms this division into three sections[4] as does the KuKh.[5] The order in which the three sections are listed in the sources is invariably the same as we find in this reference in our text, the Kumārikākhaṇḍa:

> I have spoken this truth in the venerable Section Concerning the Virgin Goddess (consisting of) six thousand verses (which is a part of the Scripture of) Twenty-four Thousand (Verses), the best of Matas. In the beginning comes the Section Concerning the Virgin Goddess (kumārikākhaṇḍa). The Accomplished Section (siddhakhaṇḍa) is the second one. The third is the First Section (ādyakhaṇḍa) and, O pervasive one, it consists of four parts (pāda).[6]

The same sequence is observed in the rite of offering lamps (ārati) to the scripture. The concluding part of this rite consists of the offering of three lamps, one for each of the three sections of the scripture, in the aforementioned order.[7] The three sections represent the so-called 'seats' (pīṭha) into which the Śaivāgama is divided according to a system of classification that developed in the Bhairava Tantras. The 'seats' are actually four, here reduced to three to coincide with the number of sections of the MBT. They are the seats of Gesture (mudrā), Mantra

---

[1] ŚP (vāyavīyasaṁhitā) 2/10/30.
[2] Desai 1996: 60.
[3] KuKh 30/2cd-3; cf. KuKh 57/90-91ab.
[4] The end of this colophon reads: . . . śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre avvākramabhāṣite (-sāhasrañcathā-kramabhāṣite) śrīmate khaṇḍatrayapramāṇe (k: ṣaṇḍa-) . . . |
[5] See last colophon of the KuKh.
[6] KuKh 69/28cd-29ab.
[7] anyadīpāni trīṇy evaṁ mate 'smin pārameśvare ||
prathamaṁ kumārikākhye tu [g: va] khaṇḍe [kh: khaṇḍa] mudrālaye param ||
aparaṁ [g: aspaṣṭam] siddhakhaṇḍe tu mantramārge vidhīyate ||
parāparaṁ [k kh g: -re] tṛtīyaṁ ca ādye vidyākule smṛtam ||
dakṣe caiva tathā madhye āgamasyāpi cottare ||
dīpatrayam idaṁ proktaṁ yavamātrapramāṇakam [g: -kāṁ] || From the SKh 31/23-25.

and Vidya. The extra one, not mentioned here, is the Seat of Maṇḍala.[1] We find this system of classification in the BY and in the JY, where it is most extensively applied and manipulated as a symbolic cipher. It was well known to Abhinavagupta who, probably inspired by the importance given to this set of four in the BY and the JY, dedicates four separate chapters to them, one for each seat, in his Tantrāloka.

By worshipping the MBT and its three sections, one worships the entire Śaivāgama. The Siddhakhaṇḍa of the MBT teaches:

> In the same way there are another three lamps (taught) in this Mata of the Supreme Lord. One is in the section called the Virgin (Goddess). It is the supreme one (para) and is in the Abode of (the Tantras belonging to the seat of) Gesture.
>
> The inferior (apara) one is in the Accomplished Section (siddhakhaṇḍa) and is prescribed (for the Tantras) on the Path of Mantra. The third is supreme-cum-inferior (parāpara) and is said to be in the Vidyā Kula in the First (Section). They are (placed) on the right, the middle and to the left of the scripture, (respectively). This is said to be the triad of lamps, the size of just a grain of wheat. The wicks (of the lamps) are said to be white, yellow and red, (respectively). (Offered) along with meat one should light (them) all with the Vidyā of the Lamps.[2]

Another rite dedicated to the three sections of the scripture is outlined in YKh (2) where we read:

> The Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha) is within one's own centre, that is, within the Śrīmata in the Western Transmission (paścime krame). It should be worshipped in the Ciñciṇīkula in the course of the [1] See Dyczkowski 1989: 49-51, 55. There I point out that the Kubjikā Tantras as a whole are mostly linked to the mudrāpīṭha. This view appears to be supported by the very first sentance in this reference.

---

[2] anye dīpāni trīṇy evaṁ mate 'smin [g: matesmiṁ] pārameśvare |
ekaṁ [k kh g: prathamaṁ] kumārikākhye tu [g: va] khaṇḍe [kh: khaṇḍa; khaṁḍa] mudrālaye param ||
aparaṁ [g: aspaṣṭam] siddhakhaṇḍe tu mantramārge vidhīyate |
parāparaṁ [k kh g: -re] tṛtīyaṁ [g: tritīyaṁ] ca ādye vidyākule smṛtam ||
dakṣe caiva tathā madhye āgamasyāpi cottare |
dīpatrayam idaṁ proktaṁ yavamātrapramāṇakam [g: -kāṁ] ||
śvetāḥ [k kh: śvetā; g: svetā] pītās [g: pītā] tathā raktā varttayaḥ parikīrtitāḥ [g: -tā] |
piśitaiḥ [kh, g: piśitā] saṁyutāḥ [g: jyasaṁyutā] sarve jvālayed [g: jvālā ca] dīpavidyayā ||
SKh 31/23-26.

common Sacrifice of the Rule (samayāyāga) along with the god of bliss, Navātman, accompanied by (his) consort. One should worship the Siddha Section (siddhakhaṇḍa of the Tantra) in the midst of the Mother's Book (avvāpustaka). Your Five Praṇavas are in the beginning and then (comes) the lord of Vidyās (i.e. Navātman). That is the nature of the entire current of the transmission of the Command up to (one's own teacher's) sandals. To the right of that is Kaumāra, the leader (nāyaka) of the sections (of the Tantra). The supreme Kumārikā of the forty-two (syllables of her Vidyā) is there in due order. (She is) pure consciousness and her nature is awakened consciousness (bodha). Indeed, she is said to be Kālikā in Himavat's temple. She descends (into the world) on the beautiful Island of the Moon. The authority of the Siddhas is Kālikā who is called Kubjikā. May Kālī, who is the venerable Kubjikā, of the previous Avvāmata, protect (you).

Worship that on the path of the left by means of the sequence of (mantras called) the Five Jewels. The supreme (goddess) in the First Section (ādyakhaṇḍa) of the (Tantra of the) Siddhas is the venerable Amarikā by name. She is (the goddess) Parā (Supreme) and has three natures. (She) should be worshipped in the First Section (ādyakhaṇḍa).[1]

The Kumārikākhaṇḍa (comes) in the beginning. The Siddhakhaṇḍa is the second and the Ādyakhaṇḍa is the third in the Śrīmata (that is) the Vakrikāmata. One should always worship the three Sections and then their three sacred seats.

The Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha) is the first. the Seat of Mantra is the second. The Seat of Knowledge is the third,[2] there, where the leaders of the Siddhas (reside). (The goddess in the first seat) is Gesture (mudrā) who, in the form of Moon, Sun and Fire is the mistress of the book (granthanāyikā). Conjoined with the Drop, (she is) the Great Gesture, the Gesture that seals the universe.

---

[1] The MSs read: ājñākhaṇḍe 'in the Section of the Command'.

[2] Cf: The Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha) is the first. The Seat of Mantra is the second. The Seat of Knowledge is the third, in accord with the order in general cases. O knower of Kula, one should worship the Kulālyambāmata in the three seats in the Ciñciṇīkula that is common (to all three) by means of the Vidyārājeśvara (mantra).

mudrāpīṭhaṁ tu prathamaṁ mantrapīṭhaṁ dvitīyakam ||
vidyāpīṭhaṁ tṛtīyaṁ [g: tritīyaṁ] tu sāmānyeṣu anukramāt |
vidyārājeśvareṇāpi sādhāre ciñciṇīkule ||
kulālyambāmataṁ [k: kulālyāṁvā-; kh: mūlālyā-; g: kulālyaṁvāmataṁ] pūjyaṁ triṣu pīṭheṣu [kh: pāṭheṣu] kaulavit | SKh 5/77cd-79ab.

After that comes the Seat of Mantra, which is in the middle of the Siddhakhaṇḍa. The second one pertains to the Praṇavas. Extract (the goddess's Vidyā), which is the universal (sāmānya) one. O Śambhu, this is the Seat of Vidyā, extract it in the Ādyakhaṇḍa. One should worship Gesture, Mantra and Vidyā in (these) three places. The three sections (of the Tantra) pertaining to the seats should be worshipped by the teachers. The three, Indra and the rest, should be worshipped with flowers and knotted garlands. [. . .]

(This) secret beyond the world should be worshipped constantly in a concealed place in front of the (Maṇḍala of the) Transmission and before the Maṇḍala of the Teachers. (Worshipped) in the aforementioned way (the scripture) always gives Siddhas liberation. [. . .] Thus it is called a sacred seat - the leader who is the Kaumārīkhaṇḍa.[1]

---

[1] mudrāpīṭhaṁ [k: - pīṭha; kh: (?)] svamadhye [kh: (?)] tu śrīmate paścime krame ||
navātmānandadevena [k, kh: navātmādanda-] śaktyādisaṁsthitena ca |
sādhāre samayāyāge pūjayec ciñciṇīkule ||
*avvāpustakamadhye [kh: avvāpusta * madhe] tu siddhakhaṇḍaṁ prapūjayet* |
ādau te praṇavāḥ pañca vidyārājeśvaraṁ tataḥ ||
ājñākramaughasakalaṁ pādukāntaṁ tu tanmayam |
tasya dakṣiṇadigbhāgo kaumāraṁ khaṇḍanāyakam ||
mahāpraṇavayogena dvau [k, kh: dau] catvāriṁśatāṁ kramāt |
parā kumārikā tatra [k, kh: stastā] cinmātrā bodharūpiṇī ||
sā vai śrīkālikā proktā himavantasya [k, kh: himavantaṁsya] mandire [kh: -raṁ] |
avatāraṁ prakurute candradvīpe manorame ||
adhikāraṁ tu siddhānāṁ kubjikā nāma kālikā |
kālī śrīkubjikā pātu pūrvva - avvāmatasya tu ||
vāmamārge yajed yat [k, kh: yan] tat pañcaratnakrameṇa tu |
ādyakhaṇḍe tu siddhānāṁ nāmnā śrī - amarikā parā ||
parā sā trisvarūpā tu ādyakhaṇḍe [k, kh: ājñā-] prapūjayet |
ādau kumārikākhaṇḍaṁ siddhakhaṇḍaṁ dvitīyakam ||
ādyakhaṇḍaṁ tṛtīyaṁ tu śrīmate vakrikāmate |
*yajet khaṇḍatrayaṁ nityaṁ teṣāṁ pīṭhatrayaṁ [kh: traṁ ] punaḥ ||
mudrāpīṭhaṁ tu prathamaṁ mantrapīṭhaṁ [k: matra-] dvitīyakam |
vidyāpīṭhaṁ [k, kh: - pīṭha] tṛtīyaṁ tu tatra ye siddhanāyakāḥ [k, kh: siddhi-] ||
somārkānalarūpeṇa mudrā sā granthanāyikā [k, kh: granthināyakā] |
*binduyuktā [k: -yu *] mahāmudrā mudrayā mudritaṁ [k: * dvitaṁ; kh: vṛddhitaṁ] jagat* ||
mantrapīṭhaṁ bhavet tasmāt siddhakhaṇḍasya madhyataḥ |
praṇavānāṁ dvitīyaṁ tu sāmānyaṁ taṁ samuddharet ||
vidyāpīṭham idaṁ śambho ādyakhaṇḍe samuddharet |
mudrā mantraṁ tathā vidyā triṣu sthāneṣu [k, kh: sthānepra] pūjayet ||
pīṭhānāṁ khaṇḍatritayaṁ pūjanīyaṁ tu [k: pūjanīyostu; kh: pūjanīyāstu] deśikaiḥ |
indrādis trīṇi yaṣṭavyāḥ [k, kh: draṣṭavyā] puṣpasragdāmagranthibhiḥ [k: -sugdāma-] || [. . .]
lokātītaṁ rahasyaṁ tu gopyasthāne prapūjayet ||
kramāgre maṇḍalāgre ca gurūṇāṁ nityam eva hi |

This dense passage requires some analysis. Firstly, we notice that in these passages, the Kumārikākhaṇḍa - the Section of the Virgin Goddess - enjoys a special prestige as the 'leader' and is invariably mentioned first out of the three sections of scripture. The goddess is Kālikā. This is the identity of the Virgin Goddess - Kumārikā - before she unites with Bhairava. It is the initial form the goddess assumes to bring the scripture into the world. This is said to be the 'previous' Avvāmata, which is, presumably, related to the 'previous tradition' linked to Matsyendranātha.

The three sections of the scripture are associated with three of the four 'seats' or groups[1] into which the Bhairava Tantras are classified by the BY and JY. This implies that they are the sources of all the scriptures that issue from these seats. The Kumārikākhaṇḍa is linked to the Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha), the seat sometimes associated with the entire Kubjikā tradition.[2] Gesture - mudrā - is the goddess herself and, as such, she is the mistress who governs and leads the scripture (granthanāyikā). Thus, the association of this section with the Seat of Gesture implies its particularly intimate connection with the goddess. The same association is maintained in the Khecarīstava of the SKh that opens with:

> I salute the Seat of Gesture with (its) eighty-four divisions which, supreme, is in the section (of the MBT) called the venerable Virgin, the abode of the (goddess as) Gesture (mudrā). I salute the venerable Kubjikāmata by the distinction between the pervaded and the pervader which, by the union of the (transmissions of the) three sacred seats is manifold and (its) knowledge is very extensive.[3]

---

prāguktavidhinā nityaṁ siddhānāṁ mokṣadāyakam || [. . .]
tena pīṭhaṁ samākhyātaṁ kaumārīkhaṇḍanāyakam || YKh (2) 29/34cd-48, 50cd-51, 52cd.

[1] The maṇḍalapīṭha is omitted.

[2] Wherever an affiliation with a particular seat is mentioned in the colophons of the Kubjikā Tantras we almost always find that they are linked to the Vidyāpīṭha (concerning which see Sanderson 1988 and Dyczkowski 1988: 53ff.). The Śrīmatasārasaṁgraha is an exception. The colophons of chapters one, four and five of this short text consisting of just five chapters affiliate it to the Mudrāpīṭha, the KMT and the tradition of Kulālikā. There is one possible reference in the KMT itself which may be understood to mean that the KMT associates itself with the Tantras of the Mudrāpīṭha. However, the connection is most clearly made in the JY. See Dyczkowski 1988: 104 ff . concerning the pīṭha classification, especially according to the JY see ibid. p.119-120 concerning the Mudrāpīṭha and the KMT.

[3] śrīmatkumārikākhye [g: śrīmatkumārikā?] tu khaṇḍe [g: khaṁḍa] mudrālaye param [k kh g: parā] ||
caturāśītibhedais [g: -sīti-] tu mudrāpīṭhaṁ namāmy aham ||
pīṭhatrayasamāyogān [kh: pītatatra-; g: -yogāt] nānājñānaṁ supuṣkalam [kh: tu-; g: sapu ? ? kaṁ] || [This and the previous line are repeated in MS G.]
vyāpyavyāpakabhedena naumi [g: maunaumi] śrīkubjikāmatam || SKh 23/1-2.

One would expect the Ādyakhaṇḍa (also called the ādikhaṇḍa[1]) - the First Section - to occupy, as its name suggests, the prestigious first place. Even so we invariably find that the Kumārikākhaṇḍa comes first. Even when the YKh (1) refers to the sections of the MBT, instead of praising itself as the most excellent out of them, we are surprised to find that it yields its own pride of place to the Kumārikākhaṇḍa, which it says is 'supreme'[2] and declares that the first and foremost goddess, Kubjikā herself, is established and attained (siddhā) in this section.[3] However, although the Kumārikākhaṇḍa enjoys this privilege, from other points of view the Ādyakhaṇḍa is treated as the best of the three. Significantly, it is linked to the Seat of Vidyā, the most extensive and prestigious of the seats from which the Bhairava Tantras have issued and with which the Kubjikā Tantras are most commonly associated. Here Parā - the Supreme - is the presiding goddess. Kubjikā is specifically called Parā in numerous contexts, thus assuming the role of all the Great Goddesses of the Bhairava and Kaula Tantras in general, and the supreme goddess of the Trika in particular. Reference to the triple nature of Parā indicate that she is Kubjikā herself.[4] As such she is worshipped as Amarikā,[5] rather than Kālī.

Are these three the three parts of the MBT? The answer to this question bears on the relative chronological order of the KuKh in relation to the YKh and the SKh. The quote from the Khecarīstava can be taken to mean that the Kumārikākhaṇḍa is none other than the Kubjikāmata. That would explain the special prestige of this section of the MBT. It would explain why both the SKh and YKh (2) are prepared to place it before themselves. It would also explain why some of the colophons of the Gorakṣasaṁhitā recension of the ŚM and of the AS associate themselves to the Kumārikākhaṇḍa. Finally, the particular association with the Mudrāpīṭha would also make sense as the KMT is regularly linked to that whereas the succeeding Tantras are associated with the Vidyāpīṭha. Just as the AS, which we know cannot be earlier than the SKh or YKh (2), has assumed this

---

[1] Cf. KuKh 69/29. There instead of ādyakhaṇḍa we find ādikhaṇḍa.

[2] The supremely astonishing secret (is found) in the supreme section (of the MBT) called Kaumārī.
kaumāryākhye pare [k: kaumāryāredvyapare] khaṇḍe [k: khaṁte] rahasyaṁ paramādbhutam |
YKh (1) 34/134cd Quoted below in full on p. 105.

[3] How is she, (the goddess) Nityaklinnā who is very loving (suraktikā) in the division of the lineages? How is she in the division (of this scripture), she who is the first Accomplished One (siddhā) in the Kumārikākhaṇḍa?

ulibhede [kh: -bhedaṁ] kathaṁ sā [k: nāsti] tu [k: tasya] nityaklinnā suraktikā [k: -kāḥ; kh: tu raktikā] |
ādyā kumārikākhaṇḍe siddhā [kh: kaumārasiddhasya] bhede [k: bheda] kathaṁ sthitā [k: -tāḥ] ||
YKh (1) 16/5.

[4] Concerning Kubjikā's triple nature see vol. 2, p. 135.

[5] Concerning this name of the goddess, see intro. vol. 2, p. 100-101.

name for itself, similarly the KuKh of the MBT may well have been named this way to give it a veneer of antiquity and authority. It is not clear if the passages that are common to the KuKh and the other two sections of the MBT originally belong to the KuKh or not. In one case it is fairly certain that a passage is drawn from the SKh.[1] While it is unclear whether the few passages common to YKh (2) are taken from it, there can be no doubt that YKh (1), from which KuKh draws extensively, precedes it.

Another way in which the Ādyakhaṇḍa is given a special place transpires from the association of the three sections of the scripture with the three Siddhas and the sacred seats from which they propagated their transmission. These are not specified directly in the passage we are examining, even so we may presume the following set of correspondences:

1. Table of Correspondences with the Three Sections of the MBT

Section	Kumārikā	Siddha	Ādya
Position	Right	Middle	Left
Seat	Mudrā	Mantra	Vidyā
(Siddha and seat)	(Mitranātha - Kāmarūpa)	(Ṣaṣṭhanātha - Pūrṇagiri)	(Oḍḍīśa – Oḍḍiyāna)
Goddess	Kālikā	?	Amarikā

These correspondences seem probable in the light of other parallel correspondences between the two types of seats we find in our sources as noted in the following table:

2. Table of Correspondences between the Sacred Seats and Classes of Scriptures

Sacred Seat	Oḍḍiyāna	Jālandhara	Pūrṇagiri	Kāmarūpa
Age	Kṛta	Tretā	Dvāpara	Kali
KuKh[2]	Māyā of Yogatantra	Vidyā	Mantra	Mudrā
KRU[3]	Mudrā	Maṇḍala	Mantra	Vidyā
YKh[4]	(Maṇḍala)	Vidyā	Mantra	Mudrā
SP[5]	Ājñā	Mantrādhāra	Mantra	Mudrā

---

[1] See below, p. 264-265.
[2] KuKh 42/20-26ab and table there in note 34.
[3] KRU 10/56cd-69.
[4] System of four seats with 16 units each. See intro. vol. 1, p. 666ff. for exposition and p. 672 for table of seats.
[5] Saṁketapaddhati quoted by Vidyānanada in his commentary on the NṢA, p. 219ff..

If the correspondences in the previous tabulation are correct the reason why the Kumārikākhaṇḍa is considered to be the supreme one is because it is the section of the MBT revealed in this Age and so the best suited for it. This is the section in which the teachings are transmitted in this Age of Strife by Mitranātha from Kāmarūpa. So from this mythical perspective, the Ādyakhaṇḍa was the first section to be revealed in the first Age. The Siddhakhaṇḍa came after, followed by the Kumārikākhaṇḍa. And this was, in all probability, the actual order in which they were redacted. Let us see why.

The Yogakhaṇḍa

The Ādyakhaṇḍa is probably the section of the MBT called Yogakhaṇḍa of which there are two recensions. For ease of reference I have retained this name, although it appears to be mistaken. Buddhisāgara Śarmā, who compiled the catalogue for the National Archives of Kathmandu (formerly called the Vīrapustakālaya and before that the Darbar Library), names the manuscripts of this section of the MBT in this way.[1] Presumably he followed the opinion of H.P. Śāstrī who compiled the first descriptive catalogue. This name appears on the cover sheet of one of the manuscripts.[2] Moreover, out of the colophons of the YKh (1) (all of which he lists in his catalogue), four refer to this section of the MBT as the Yogakhaṇḍa[3] and one as the Yogapāda.[4] However, three colophons

---

[1] tantraviṣayakaḥ caturtho bhāgaḥ tasyāyaṁ dvitīyakhaṇḍaḥ op. cit. pp. 60-63.

[2] NAK no. 3-164 = NGMPP reel no. A 176/3.

[3] The first of these four colophons reads: iti śrīkādibhede śrīcaturviṁśatisahasre vidyāmāhātmye [-k: mahātmye] japyādhikāro [k: javyā-] nāma yogakhaṇḍe [k: -khaṇḍa] ǁ 18 ǁ

At the beginning of chapter 19 Śrīnātha asks the goddess to tell him the Dhyānasūtra. In response, the goddess describes the three visualized forms of the goddess who govern the three lineages in as many *sūtra*s. The one that describes the form of the goddess who presides over the lineage of the Child ends with the following colophon:

iti śrīkādibhede śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre devyāmūrtidhyānaṁ [-k: na] yogakhaṇḍe [k: -khaṁḍaḥ] ǁ 19 ǁ

The next section begins with the visualized form of the goddess in the Middle lineage. It ends with this colophon:

iti śrīmadhyamolidevyāmūrtidhyānasūtraṁ yogakhaṇḍe [*k: yoga * ] ǁ

However, the colophon of the third sūtra of this series in which the supreme goddess (parā devyā) who presides over the lineage of the Aged is described does not refer to it as part of the Yogakhaṇḍa. It simply reads:

iti śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre parādevyāmūrtidhyānasūtram [k: -murti-vyāmūrtiṁdhyāna-sūtraṁ] ǁ

The fourth colophon, which refers to this section of the MBT as the Yogakhaṇḍa, reads:

iti śrīkādibhede caturviṁśatisāhasre yogakhaṇḍe [k: yogaṣaṁḍe] mudrādhikāro nāmānandaḥ [k: -naṁda] ǁ 24 ǁ

[4] iti śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre mṛtasaṁjīvanīvidyā [k: -] yogapade ǁ (23)

do refer to it as the Ādyakhaṇḍa.[1] as does the text itself and, in one place as Ājñākhaṇḍa.[2] It nowhere refers to itself as the Yogakhaṇḍa in the body of the text.

The colophons of the other Khaṇḍas are generally silent about their identity as, indeed, is the text itself, except at the end. The final colophon of the KuKh states simply that 'the venerable Kumārikākhaṇḍa is complete'.[3] The name 'Siddhakhaṇḍa' appears just twice in the body of the text of the SKh.[4] The only significant place where the SKh is identified as such is in the final colophon which simply states that the Siddhakhaṇḍa has ended.[5] One could argue that this colphon is an addition by some scribe and not an integral part of the text. Whether this is the case or not, the form and contents of the SKh support its inclusion amongst the original sections of the MBT. Particularly significant in this respect is the key role sūtras play in structuring the text which, as we shall see, is a characteristic feature of the redaction of the MBT as a whole and of its earliest portions in particular.

If the so-called Yogakhaṇḍa was in fact the 'ādyakhaṇḍa', that is, the first section of the MBT to be redacted, why is it no longer the first? The simple reason is that the Kumārikākhaṇḍa came to enjoy a position of particular prestige. In the following passage from the AS, the YKh is characterized as the 'compilation (samuccaya) of the division of the Aged'. The excellence of the KuKh lies in its exposition of the meaning of the sūtras that formed part of the original text:[6]

> Initially, the meaning of the sūtra was presented, in accord with the supreme sense of the tradition in the Kumārikākhaṇḍa, that is, in the tradition (santāna) associated with Meru. The descent (of the teaching), radiant (rājita) with the Mālinīstava, that has come into the

---

[1] iti śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre ādyakhaṇḍe kramāgamāvatāro [k: -gamāvatā] nāma sūtraṁ || 12 ||
ityādyāvatāre mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre ādyakhaṇḍe gurukramādhikārasūtraṁ || 22 ||
*iti śrīkādibhede [k: * kādi-] caturviṁśatisāhasre [k: missing]* ādyakhaṇḍe *[k: missing] saptāviṁśatikramoddhārasūtram [g: * * * * kramoddhārasūtraṁ]* || 40 ||

[2] In the following two lines both ādya- and ājñā- khaṇḍa denote the same part of the MBT unless this is a scribal error:

ādyakhaṇḍe tu siddhānāṁ nāmnā śrī - amarikā parā ||
parā sā trisvarūpā tu ājñākhaṇḍe prapūjayet | YKh (2) 29/41cd-42ab.

[3] śrīmatkumārikākhaṇḍaṁ samāptaṁ

[4] evaṁ gurumukhāt prāpya siddhakhaṇḍaṁ [k g: -khaṇḍa] vidhānavit || SKh 11/48.
aparaṁ [g: ?] siddhakhaṇḍe tu mantramārge vidhīyate | Ibid. 31/24ab.

[5] iti śrīsiddhakhaṇḍaṁ samāptam.

[6] The KuKh incorporates a number of sūtras from the YKh and it does in fact explain some of them. See concordance for details.

> House (of the Kubjikā tradition) and the supreme compilation (samuccaya) of the division of the Aged is with relation to that.[1]

Virtually all the colophons of the AS identify it as the scripture consisting of twenty-four thousand verses, that is, the MBT. The prestige of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa is such that in one, of them it is identified with the entire scripture of twenty-four thousand verses.[2] This usage probably precedes the compilation of the KuKh. Thus, in the following passage in YKh (1), we find the same identification is made:

> There is nothing superior to the scripture of the Command and nothing superior to the transmission of the sacred seats. There is nothing superior to the mouth of the teacher. The rest should be abandoned like rotten meat. Having said this, all has been said (concerning) the destruction of the fear inherent in transmigratory existence. (This is) the supremely astonishing secret in the most excellent Khaṇḍa called Kaumārī. O Great Lord, one should not give (this, the) Matarāja to (just) anyone.[3]

It is, of course, possible that this chapter, or part of it, was taken from the KuKh and incorporated into YKh (1). Just a glance at the concordance in the last volume is enough to see that the KuKh shares a great deal of material in common with the YKh. However, we shall see that this has been drawn by the KuKh from the YKh, not the other way around. Thus, it is possible that 'Kumārikākhaṇḍa' was a name for the entire MBT. Another possibility is that the name 'Kumārikākhaṇḍa' is a generic expression for the entire Kubjikā tradition. This is the meaning, it seems, in a few colophons of the Śrīmatottara according to which

---

[1] anvayaparabhāvena [ānāvaya-] sūtrārthaṁ viniveditam ǀ ādau kumārikākhaṇḍe [-khaṇḍaṁ] santāne merumāśrite [meruvāśritaṁ] ǀǀ avatāraṁ gṛhāyātaṁ [gṛhayātaṁ] mālinīstavarājitam ǀ tatsaṁbandhena ca paraṁ vṛddhabhedasamuccayam ǀǀ AS 10/147-148.

[2] (This, the twenty-fifth chapter) concerning the feast day (parva(n) commemorating) the root descent (of the teachings into the world) is complete. (It is part of) the venerable Kumārikākhaṇḍa which is the Ājñāpārameśvara, the venerable (scripture consisting of) 24,000 verses belonging to the first descent (of the teachings) in Bhairava's sacrifice.
ity ādyāvatāre bhairavayajñe śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre ājñāpārameśvare śrīkumārikākhaṇḍe mūlāvatāraparvasambandhaṁ samāptaṁ ǀǀ 25 ǀǀ

[3] ājñāśāstrāt paraṁ nāsti pīṭhakramāt [k: pīṭhacakramāt] paraṁ na hi ǀǀ guruvaktrāt paraṁ nāsti śeṣaṁ tyajyaṁ palālavat ǀ ity uktaṁ sakalam uktaṁ [k: śakalaṁmokṣa; g: sakalaṁmokta] saṁsārabhayanāśanam ǀǀ kaumāryākhye pare [k: kaumāryāredvyapare] khaṇḍe [k: khaṁte] rahasyaṁ paramādbhutam ǀ na deyaṁ yasya kasyāpi matarājaṁ maheśvara [g: ?] ǀǀ YKh (1) 34/133-135ab.

it was brought down to earth by Śrīkaṇṭha, where it emerged on the Island of the Moon in the Vidyāpīṭha. It belongs to the Kumārikākhaṇḍa, which is the secret of the Yoginīs.[1]

The Sūtras of the Manthānabhairavatantra and its Divisions

Now we have outlined the broad, overall structure of the MBT, we can turn our attention to the smaller divisions within the larger framework of the text. Reflective of its own structure and the principles that govern the ordering and layout of its contents, the MBT itself tells us that apart from its major divisions into (actual) sections (khaṇḍa) and (ideal) parts (pāda),[2] it is also divided into smaller units. The division of Tantric texts in general and the nomenclature relating to their divisions is very varied. Abhinavagupta explains that according to the SYM a Tantra can be divided into eight parts called Pāda, Mūla, Uddhāra, Uttara, Bṛhaduttara, Kalpa, Saṁhitā and Kalpaskanda. The SYM, quoted by Jayaratha, distinguishes between them simply on the basis of their length - the pervious ones in this list being shorter than the subsequent. In fact, however, these terms do not refer only to the parts of a Tantric text. They also refer to the types of passages in it. For example, an 'Uddhāra' is a section devoted to the 'extraction' (uddhāra) of mantras. Again, some terms refer to the whole of a Tantric text understood as a part of a larger one. A mūla - 'root' Tantra is, as the name implies, the main one of a tradition. Uttara or Bṛhaduttara Tantras are understood within a specific tradition to be 'subsequent' and 'extensive subsequent' (the literal meaning of these two terms) supplements of the 'root' Tantra. A Kalpa Tantra is one that is understood to be a part or phase in the 'descent' of the scripture of that Tantric tradition as is a Kalpaskanda. The Saṁhitā - a common term for Tantras of all sorts - is a 'collection' (saṁhitā) of the teachings.

Instead of offering such 'empirical' explanations of what these terms concretely indicate, Abhinava transforms the divisions and their types into eight stages on the path of consciousness expansion, thus:

> A pervasive element functions in all of them, namely, the Absolute (anuttara). It is said that in these parts, the three goddess [Parā, Parāparā and Aparā of Trika Śaivism] are progressively present in three modalities in a fully expanded form. The ninth moment is free of all limitation and so is not counted separately.

---

[1] These are the colophons to chapters 2 and 3 of theŚM and MS Kh of chapter 22.

[2] Concerning the standard division of Śaiva Āgamas into four *pāda*s, see above, p. 95.

However forced this interpretation may seem, the nomenclature used to denote divisions in Tantric texts does sometimes imply that they induce or embody higher states of consciousness. This is also the intention behind the denotation of the chapters in the MBT as *ānanda*s,[1] literally 'blisses' and adhikāras - 'authorities'. Another such word is bhūmikā that can also mean 'plane' of existence or a level in a series of yogic states.[2] There are seven chapters in the KuKh called *bhūmikā*s.[3] The term bhūmikā normally means 'introduction' but in this context it means 'explanation' or 'commentary'. Thus, chapter 58 of the KuKh is called mūlasūtrabhūmikā and is indeed essentially an explanation of the mūlasūtra.[4] In this case an ānanda contains an explanation of the sūtra and so the distinction between them is functional and significant. As expositions of the aspects of reality represented by the parts of the maṇḍala and the Krama projected into it, these commentaries are also occult expositions of the elevated states of consciousness represented by them and to which they give access. Thus, YKh (1) confirms that this is also the meaning of the term bhūmikā:

> Grasped from the matters with which the explanation is concerned (bhūmikārtha) and known (the teaching that) illumines the intellect this is, without a doubt, what removes error (bhrānti) with regards to the Yoginīs. Without knowing the teaching of the matters with which the explanation is concerned one does not get liberation.
>
> Nor does worldly experience (bhukti) come to an end. This, the essence of the Kula of the root tradition, that is, of the transmission of the Youth, is considered to be the Kaulakrama.
>
> What is grasped of the meaning of the explanation (bhūmikārtha) is hard to understand by all yogis. It is grasped once known correctly by means of the current of the sequence of the hundred sūtras (śatasūtrakrama). Those devoid of the meaning of the explanation make mistakes at each step.

---

[1] Mukundarāja simply says that: ānanda means chapter (ānando 'dhyāyārthaḥ | SamP fol. 3a). Goudriaan notes several other words for chapters in Tantric texts, especially the late compendiums (nibandha). He writes that: 'There are Kalpas, Paricchedas 'Sections', Prakāśas 'Rays', Ullāsas 'Illuminations', Taraṅgas 'Waves', and many others. A popular principle is that of adapting the term 'chapter' to the title of the whole work. Thus the Mantraratnākara and the Mantramahodadhi, two 'Oceans of Mantras' are divided into 'Waves'; the Śivārcanacandrikā 'Moonlight of Śiva Worship' into 'Rays'; the Saubhāgyakalpadruma 'Fabulous-Tree of Delight' into Skandha 'Branches'; the Bhuvaneśvarīkalpalatā 'Wish-granting Creeper of Bhuvaneśvarī' into Stabakas 'Bunch of Flowers'. See also Renou 1957, especially p. 26ff..

[2] Cf. the Sivasūtra (1/12) that says: vismayo yogabhūmikāḥ - the planes of union are wonder.

[3] These are chapters 57, 58, 60 and 61 to 64.

[4] Out of the three versions of the mūlasūtra (in chapters 26, 38 and 42 of the KuKh) this bhūmikā, also found in chapter 28 of YKh (1), is on the one in chapter 26 of the KuKh.

If one who recites mantra does not possess the Command he is not a saviour and does not liberate (others). The teacher (who does not know it) makes a mistake concerning the maṇḍala and the Krama at (each) step. Then the disciple is not liberated from the bondage of the ocean of transmigratory existence. Therefore one who craves for Kaula knowledge should abandon error (bhrānti). Explain the initiation, otherwise (both the disciple and teacher) will dwell in hell. The path (gati) of the Western House, that is, the Kaula of the first (and foremost) tradition of one who assumes authority without having well understood the emergent (meaning) of the scripture (śāstra) is, for that reason, severed at the (very root) in (his) mind and ego.

He who applies himself to spiritual observance (anuṣṭhāna) once known this, the meaning of the saṁhitā, is one who possesses the authority (to do so). He knows (how to make) progress (vikāsa), otherwise never. One who is devoid of the knowledge of the explanation (bhūmikā but) explains the saṁhitā (nonetheless) and makes up the explanation by himself and (so) degrades (it, goes to) hell.[1]

---

[1] uddhṛtaṁ bhūmikārthebhyo [k, gh: -kānviśvaḥ; g: -rthebhya; ṅ: -rthesva] jñātvā buddhiprakāśakam [k, ṅ: buddhiḥ-; g: prakārakaṁ; gh: vuddhiḥprakāśakaḥ] ||
yoginīnāṁ [k, g, gh, ṅ: yoginānāṁ] na sandeho [k, gh: saṁdehod] bhrānticchedam idaṁ [k, gh: graṁthichedamidaṁ; ṅ: bhrantiched-] param [g: padaṁ] |
bhūmikārthopadeśaṁ [g: bhūmikāsyopadeśan] tu ajñātvā [g: gratvā] naiva [g: neva] muktibhāk ||
bhukticchedo [ṅ: mukti-] na [k, gh, ṅ: sa] cāstīti kaumārasya kramasya [gh: kramāsya] ca |
mūlānvayakulasyedaṁ [gh: -syadaṁ] sāraṁ kaulakramaṁ [k, g, gh, ṅ: -kramā] matam [g: metaṁ] ||
durvijñaṁ sarvayogīnāṁ bhūmikārthasamuddhṛtam [gh: -rthaṁ-] |
śatasūtrakramaughena [k, gh: -kramognena; g: satasūtrakramoghena] samyag [k, gh, ṅ: samya; g: samyak] jñātvā pragṛhyate ||
bhūmikārthavihīnānāṁ [k, gh: bhūmikārthaṁvi-] teṣāṁ bhrāntiḥ [sarve: śāntiḥ] pade pade |
*yadi nājñādharo [k, g, gh, ṅ: cā-] mantrī [k, gh: sa *; ṅ: * *] na [k, gh: ; g, ṅ: sa] trātā [k, gh: trāto; g: vāṁto; ṅ: bhrāto] na ca [k, gh, ṅ: naiva] mocakaḥ [k: mocaka] ||
ācāryasya pade bhrāntir [k, g, gh: bhrāṁti] maṇḍalasya kramasya [gh: vamasya] ca |
tadā [k, gh, ṅ: tathā] śiṣyo na mucyeta saṁsārārṇavabandhanāt ||
tasmād bhrāntiṁ [k, g, gh, ṅ: bhrāṁti] parityajya kaulajñānābhikāṅkṣiṇaḥ |
dīkṣāvyākhyānakaṁ [gh: dīkṣāyā-] kuryād anyathā nārakī bhavet ||
avijñātvodayaṁ śāstraṁ [g: sāstraṁ] adhikāraṁ karoti yaḥ |
tena mano 'hamkāre [k, g, gh, ṅ: hakāre] tu chinnamūlagatir bhavet ||
prathamānvayakaulasya paścimasya gṛhasya ca |
saṁhitārtham idaṁ jñātvā anuṣṭhānaṁ karoti yaḥ [k, gh, ṅ: ya] ||
so 'dhikārī [ṅ: sā-] vikāsajño 'nyathā [k, gh, ṅ: vikāśa-; g: vikāsastu anyathā; k, gh: -nyavo] na kadācana [g: -naḥ; ṅ: kadrācane] |
bhūmikājñānanirmuktaḥ saṁhitārthasaṁbodhakaḥ [k, gh, ṅ: -sabodhakaḥ; g: -mavodhakaṁ] ||

The Structure of Colophons of the Manthānabhairavatantra and its Divisions

Goudriaan points out that:

> The colophons (puṣpikā) in Tantric texts are liable to growth in size by the inclusion of different subdivisions of the tradition. This feature is found especially in manuscripts of the older Original Tantras. Thus, the text known as the Brahmayāmala declares its adherence to a Srotas [current of scriptures] (Bhairava), a Tantra (Mahābhairava), a Pīṭha (Vidyā), a Yāmala (Brahma) and a Mata (Picu), the latter characterized by a number of ślokas [verses]. Other intricate colophons are found in the Jayadrathayāmala, the Gorakṣasaṁhitā, Manthānabhairavatantra, Uttaratantra of the Rudrayāmala etc. A typical elaborated colophon may also include: a. the title of a 'basic text', e.g. 'Kulārṇava' b. an epithet as a characteristic, e.g. Mahārahasya 'Great Secret'; and c. an indication of the relation of the text in question to the 'basic' text, e.g Sāroddhāra 'Extract of the Essentials'.[1]

The following is a typical example of the most extended form of the long colophons we find throughout the MBT:

> This is chapter 'X' called concerning 'X'. It belongs to the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava in the tradition (anvaya) that consists of seventy million (verses) that has emerged on the Path of Meru and (extends) for a hundred and twenty-five thousand (verses). It has been brought (down to earth) into the first sacred seat along the path of the Seat of Knowledge (vidyāpīṭha). It is the ultimate purport of the Pure Six (Thousand Verses) (vimalaṣaṭka) in the division beginning with `KĀ' in the venerable scripture of twenty-four thousand (verses) (caturviṁśatsahasra-saṁhitā) (known as) the Svāminīmata of the Supreme Lord's command as uttered within the Tradition of the Mother (avvākrama).

There are often, as one would expect, minor variants in the order of words, one or more elements may be missing and variants in the words themselves (such as 'ambākrama-' for 'avvākrama-') but these are not worth investigating here. Worth noting in passing is the diversity in the extent of the colophons. The minimal form is found at the end of some *sūtra*s. This consists simply of the svayaṁ bhūmikākartā ca [k, gh: bhūkīnakartā ca; g: bhūkānakartā ca] dūṣako [k: dūṣiko] nārakī bhavet | YKh (1) 33/113cd-123ab

---

[1] Goudriaan 1981: 24.

indeclinable 'iti' that marks the end of statements, followed by the name. Often the 'iti' is followed by 'caturviṁśatisāhasre'. Less often it is followed by just 'kādibhede'[1] and sometimes by both.[2] A typical medium length colophon reads just the first sentence of the long colophon.[3] Sometimes we find just the first three words and the last in this series.[4] Finally, we notice that the long colophon is found only in the MBT and the version of the ŚM called Gorakṣasaṁhitā. Otherwise, apart from the ŚM whose colophons are of medium length, the chapters of other Kubjikā Tantras bear just short colophons. Moreover, they are in almost all cases simply called paṭalas.

Chapters are occasionally also called vidhi or vidhāna that is, a 'precept' or 'ordinance' relating to ritual or yogic practice. The main types, however, along with sūtras[5] are ānandas and adhikāras. The word adhikāra, in this context, in common Sanskrit usage means a topic or subject and, by extension, a paragraph, or minor section of a text. In other words, theoretically, an adhikāra should be a subdivision of a chapter. However, in actual fact, unlike *sūtra*s, which do occasionally form parts of chapters, *adhikāra*s, apart from one exception,[6] do not. On the contrary, we find the occasional chapter called adhikāra.[7] However, the colophons of the KuKh almost always conflate them. Thus, most chapters of the KuKh refer to themselves as an ānanda whose concern - adhikāra - is the particular subject of that ānanda which appears as the title of that chapter.[8] In a

---

[1] For example in the SKh: ityā dyāvatāre kādibhede pūjāpaddhatisūtram ||

[2] An example of this type of colophon in YKh (1) is: iti śrīkādibhede śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre śrīmatapūjārcanavidhiḥ [k: śrīmaṁtrapūjārcanevidhiḥ] || 20

[3] One example is the colophon of the fourth chapter (ānanda) of YKh (1).

[4] For example the following colophon in the SKh: ity ādyāvatāre mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe [kh: -bhairave-] śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre [kh: -sahasre] śaktyavatārasūtram [k kh g: śaktyā-] ||

[5] In YKh (1) we read: In this way, there are ānanda(s), adhikāra (s), and sūtra(s) in the (Tantra of) Twenty-four Thousand (Verses) in the triple language (tritayabhāṣā). (There, there are) three Khaṇḍas, four Pādas, Ānandas, Adhikāras, and Sūtras. The contents (artha) of (this) Kaulika saṁhitā, belonging to the western tradition (anvaya), has (thus) been declared

*ānandam adhikāraṁ [k, gh: -kāraś; ṅ: ānandamadhi * rañ] ca tathā sūtraṁ [g: sūtra] vidhīyate* ||
evaṁ tritayabhāṣāyāṁ caturviṁśasahasrake [g, ṅ: cāturviṁśa-] |
khaṇḍatrayaṁ [g: -ya] catuṣpādaṁ [k, gh: catuḥ-; g: catu-] ānandādhikārasūtrakam ||
saṁhitārthaṁ [g, ṅ: -rtha] samuddiṣṭaṁ [g: samudiṣṭa] paścimānvayakaulikam |

YKh (1) 38/23cd-25ab.

[6] A passage in YKh (1) ends (after verse 38/25ab) with this colophon: This is the adhikāra called the description of the sūtrādhikāra (iti sūtrādhikāravarṇano [g: -kāravarṇa] nāmādhikāraḥ ||). In the body of the text it is called the sūtrādhikāra (evaṁ sūtrādhikāraṁ tu yo jānāti sa bodhakaḥ || YKh (1) 38/22cd). As we find a list of 107 sūtras in this adhikāra, it may have been felt to be inappropriate to call it a sūtra. It is quoted below, see p. 123 ff.. Here then, is the exception that proves the rule.

[7] For example, KuKh 48 and 50. The former is the 'kramasūtrādhikāra'.

[8] The first chapter, for example, is called śrīnāthapraśnādhikāro nāmānandaḥ - the chapter few instances we find all three together.[1] The odd chapters called '*adhikāra*s' are almost all associated with sūtras so we find chapters that are called sūtrādhikāra - 'concerning (a particular) sūtra'. Moreover, the nomenclature is not always consistent. We notice amongst the sūtras listed in a long passage quoted below from the YKh (1) a number of *adhikāra*s. Again, in one instance at least, a sūtra is referred to as an ānanda.[2] Sūtras enjoy a special prestige. According to the JY:

> Now (whatever) indicates the meaning of any Tantra is thus rooted in speech (śabdamūla) and the root of that is the short sūtra which, secret, discerns the secret (of the Tantra which is that) reality (attained by) the renouncer who practices Stillness (nirācārāvadhūta) by the sequence of the movement (of the breath) from one vital channel to another. (The sūtra) discerns the sacrifice of the (energies of) the letters, which is union (yoga) with the energies of seed-syllables and the Point. It is praised in the Yoginīkula as the gathering (ākarṣa) of the nectar which is the life of mantra. A secret sūtra is said to be one that expounds the outer and inner, spiritual meaning. It is intent on the grammar of the sequence of the movement (of the vital breath) (sañcāra) in both those who have been successful and those who have not. It is said to be the remedy for the (kind of) reflection that is detrimental to success.
>
> That which is rich with reflection on the coming and going (of the vital force) comes from a Nayasūtra. The Uttara (kind of) sūtra is one that explains the meaning clearly of what has been indicated by (these) three (types of) sūtra (but is) not understood (ānanda) concerning (adhikāra) Śrīnātha's Enquiry.

[1] For example, the SamP quotes the Sṛṣtisūtra in full and glosses it. The colophon reads: iti sṛṣṭikramasūtrādhikārānandaḥ. The sūtra is introduced with the words: atha tatraiva sṛṣṭikramasūtrānandaḥ prakāśyate. The KuKh (42/26ab) refers to it simply as a sūtra.

[2] For example we are told in one place that: The Root Sūtra is a chapter (ānanda) consisting of three and a half (verses) - ānandaṁ mūlasūtraṁ tu sārdhavṛttatrayaṁ tathā | YKh (1) 28/105ab. Chapter 28 of YKh (1) is reproduced in the KuKh as its chapter 58. There the equivalent line says: Bliss (ānanda) (belongs to) the Root Sūtra and is within (its) three and a half (verses) – (ānandaṁ mūlasūtrasya sārdhavṛttatrayeṣu ca |). KuKh 58/101cd. If I have understood the meaning of the version of this line in YKh(1), it appears that the redactor of the KuKh did not and therefore altered it. If I am right, here is another piece of evidence that the source of this passage and the others like it found in the KuKh were drawn from the YKh, not the other way around.

Again, the very last colophon of YKh (1) is of the typically long, elaborate sort we find in the KuKh. The chapter it concludes is said to be an ānanda, although it is in fact a sūtra. It is, we are told, the 'description concerning the sūtra of liberation (achieved) at the End of the Sixteen (ṣoḍaśāntamuktisūtrādhikāravarṇane kramodayo nāmānandaḥ). It probably corresponds to the last sūtra in the list of sūtras quoted below (p. 123 ff.) from YKh (1) where it is simply called the muktisūtra.

correctly. The Uttarottara (type of sūtra) is one that is fully complete with all things and explains the meaning (apprehended in the condition) free of thought constructs. Its purpose is to (give rise) to a conception of the clear meaning of the intended sense in the Uttara (type of sūtra) that has been rendered unclear by mistake.

Those who know the (various) categories of sūtra consider the fifth (kind) to be the mixed (saṁkīrṇa) (type of sūtra). It indicates a broad sense (sūcaka), it defines (abhidhāna), explains (gamaka) and makes a doctrine known (prakāśaka). It clarifies what has been indicated (by another) (sūtra). A sūtra that has these four (types) is called 'mixed' (miśra).

The (sūtra) that summerizes the previous (teachings) and indicates (the teaching) that will be (delivered) chapter by chapter is said to be a saṁkīrṇa (sūtra). After the statement of (this type of) sūtra there is a break (and the subject changes).

One who reflects on (the nature of such sūtras) says that the invariable relationship (between a sūtra and its meaning is thus) fivefold. The coherence (saṁbandha) of a sūtra is by virtue of its being a sūtra and (that of) an utterance is in the meaning (vākya). The desired sense that is expressed by a brief indication even in the absence of a (fully articulated statement) in order to hear what the mind desires is mental because (even though not articulated) it is a condition of speech.

A 'break' (at the end of a topic) is the conclusion of the subject indicated (sūcita) (by a sūtra). The subsequent statement brings the discussion to an end.

The wise man, having grasped the sūtra which relates to a single topic should unfold (its meaning) in order to awaken the disciple and having developed the subject to make the meaning clear even if it is at a lower level (nīcastha) (but) is not in contradiction with what has been said by those who know all (the scripture).[1]

---

[1] athātaḥ śabdamūlaṁ tu sarvatantrārthasūcakam ||
tatmūlaṁ [kh: tan-] svalpasūtraṁ ca guhyaṁ guhyavivecakam |
nirācārāvadhūtārthaṁ nāḍīnāḍigatikramāt ||
bindubījakalāyogavarṇayāgavivecakam |
mantrajīvāmṛtākarṣaṁ yoginīkulakīrtitam ||
guhyasūtraṁ tad uddiṣṭaṁ bāhyādhyātmārthavācakam |
siddhāsiddheṣu saṁcārakramavyākaraṇe ratam ||
siddhahānivicārāḍhyapratyānayanaṁ kīrtitam [k, kh : -vicārāddhyaṁ-] |
gamāgamavicārāḍhyaṁ [k : -ddhya] nayasūtravinissṛtam ||
sūcitaṁ yat tribhiḥ sūtrair anirṇītaṁ ca [k: missing] tattvataḥ |
sphuṭārtham avadat tatra sūtram uttaram ucyate ||

The Kubjikā tradition in general and the MBT in particular stress that the knowledge of the sūtras that is especially important. The Ṭīkā assures us that:

> The fruit (is attained) immediately in a moment by simply reflecting on the meaning (sūtrārtha) of the Saṁvartāsūtra, the Mahāvarṇa and other sūtras. There can be no doubt about this. Or else, whoever studies (lit. 'reads') just the bare meaning of the sūtras is the lord of the sacred seat. Again, he who knows the meaning of the bare meaning of the sūtras is himself Kuleśvara directly visible. Whoever worships is the Lord of the Heroes of the Siddhas and is the beloved of the Yoginīs.[1]

The unique status accorded to sūtras and the often inconsistent and arbitrary manner of naming chapters and passages in the MBT we have noted previously is a clear sign that alterations and additions have affected the structure of the text. Moreover, the comparative simplicity and constancy of the division

---

uttare 'bhihito yo 'rthaḥ pramādād asphuṭīkṛtaḥ |
tatsphuṭārthavikalpārthaṁ nirvikalpārthavādi ca ||
sarvavastususaṁpūrṇam uttarottaram ucyate |
sūcakaṁ cābhidhānāḍhyaṁ [k, kh : -dyaṁ] gamakaṁ ca prakāśakam ||
saṁkīrṇaṁ [k, kh: sa ṅkīrṇa] pañcakaṁ sūtraṁ sūtrajātivido viduḥ |
asūcitaṁ leśayāpakṛṣyārthaṁ [k: leṣayāya-] kurute sphuṭam ||
taccaturṣvapi saṁmiśraṁ miśrasūtram udāhṛtam |
bhūtasya saṁgrahaṁ kuryād bhāvi yat tasya sūcanam ||
paṭale paṭale yac ca tat saṅkīrṇam udāhṛtam |
sūtravākyam ataś caiva paricchedo hy anantaraḥ ||
pañcadhā nityasaṁbandhaḥ proktaḥ [kh: prokto] sūtravicāriṇā [k, kh: vaktrā-] |
sūtrataḥ sūtrasambandho vācokto vācyagaḥ [k,kh: vācyaga] smṛtaḥ ||
sūcanād vākyahīne 'pi yo 'artho [k: yorthaṁ; kh: yortha] 'bhigadate [kh: bhirgadate] priyaḥ [k,kh: priyaṁ] |
manobhilaṣitaṁ śrotuṁ vaktṛtvān mānaso hi saḥ ||
sūcitārthasamāptis tu pariccheda iti smṛtaḥ |
tadanantaroktiyuktir yā sā vācantavidhāyinī [kh: vācānta-] ||
ekārthagamakaṁ sūtram [k: sūtraṁm] āhṛtyonmīlayed budhaḥ |
vṛddhimānakṛte 'rthasya nīcasthām api yad bhavet ||
arthavispaṣṭatāṁ kartuṁ sarvajñair abhibhāṣitam [k: sarvajñar avibhāṣitam] |
dṛṣṭāntatve 'viruddhaṁ hi śiṣyasaṁbodhanāya tu || JY 1/40/182cd-197.

This chapter of the JY is called the 'teaching of the Brahmayāmala in that of the venerable Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī' (śrīkālasaṅkarṣaṇyāṁ brahmayāmalanirṇayaś catvāriṁśatimaḥ paṭalaḥ) into sūtras suggests that this was the original manner in which the text was divided. This view is supported by the colophons that betray a substantial number of examples of *ānanda*s that were originally sūtras, which we shall have occasion to note when we come to the summaries of the contents of the MBT. Moreover, there are possible examples of what may be free floating *sūtra*s. Perhaps the Kramasūtra, otherwise known as the Root Sūtra, was once such. This could, perhaps, explain the existence of a short tract called the Kriyāsūtrādhikāra[1] ('Concerning the Sūtra of Action') part of which is a commentary on it. Separate sūtras are found in two early palmleaf manuscripts. Closer examination of the manuscript collections in Nepal may well reveal more. If these are in fact independent sūtras and not just fragments or parts copied for someone's personal convenience their existence supports the hypothesis that the oldest parts of the MBT were sūtras that were at some point collected together.[2] The incorporation of one or more sūtras into the body of an ānanda lends further support to view that these *ānanda*s, at least, were built up around sūtras which were their original nucleus. The texts themselves also lend weight to this view. In the following passage that comes after the Sūtra of Thirty-six (Verses) the goddess says in YKh (1):

[1] phalaṁ sadyas tatkṣaṇāt sūtrārthasya saṁvartāsūtrasya tathā mahāvarṇādisūtrasya cintanamātrāt phalaṁ tatkṣaṇād bhavati | tasya na cātra sandehaḥ | *athavā yaḥ kaścit sūtrārtha-mātrapāṭhakaḥ sa [k: saḥ; kh: so] pīṭheśvaraḥ yaḥ [kh: ya] punaḥ sūtrārthamātrasyārthaṁ jānāti sa [k: saḥ] svayam [kh: svam] eva kuleśvaraḥ sākṣād [kh: sākṣā *] bhavati [kh: * vati]* | kaścit pūjakaḥ sa vīrendraḥ siddhānāṁ tathā yoginīnāṁ vallabhaḥ | Ṭ folio 183b of MS K.

> Once heard the three sections (khaṇḍa) and established in the ladder-like row (of teachers), the entire (teaching) is (presented) in the Mata of 125,000 (verses) by means of (the tradition) that has come down (through the ages) (āgama). I have threaded together the thirty-six (verses that are) the great sūtra of the (tradition transmitted through the) series (of teachers) (pāramparya). [. . .]
>
> O fair-faced one, the treasure-house of the tradition of the scripture (āgamāmnāya) is indeed hard to understand. I have known the meaning (of the scripture) fashioned into sūtras by (my) ocean-like intellect. The western transmission proceeds by means of Sargas

---

[1] See bibliography for the surviving MSs of this text.

[2] One MS is called Pūjāsūtranirṇaya and is NA no. 4-323vi Karmakāṇḍa 83 = NGMPP reel no. A 56/19. It is a palmleaf MS, sixteen folios long. The other MS is catalogued as Manthānabhairavatantram. It is NA 1-1697-7/5vi Śaivatantra 140 = NGMPP B 27/12. It is a palmleaf MS the script of which is practically the same as that of the oldest MS of the MBT which belongs to the reign of Guṇakāmadeva Ī (1186-1195 CE). Twenty-one folios long, it begins abruptly on folio 22b. The end is missing. At the end of the fourth folio, numbered 25a, we find a typical long colophon of the MBT which concludes with the words: pūjāpaddhatisūtrādhikāro nāmānandaḥ. It corresponds to what is now the first section of the SKh which in the colophons is simply labelled: ity ādyāvatāre kādibhede pūjāpaddhati-sūtram. This is followed by an identified section after which begins the Kriyākālaguṇottara on the sixth folio of the MS. The numbering of the folios begins here from 1. It is not, however, part of a different MS as the text starts from the second line of this folio.

> ('Creations'), Ūrmis ('Currents'), Taraṅgas ('Waves') and the like[1] propagating its (scripture consisting) of 3,500 sūtras.[2] [. . .] Knowledge is acquired in the first utterance, like a cry in the forest. And known (entirely at) once in this way, O Bhairava, knowledge is mounted onto sūtras.[3]

According to the KMT the main feature of the scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses, is that it is a collection of sūtras (sūtrasaṁgrahalakṣaṇa).[4] The KuKh says that the 'collection of sūtras' (sūtrasaṁgraha) is the scripture of 70 million verses which is derived directly from the first, most extensive one that exists in an ideal form as the transcendental source of all scripture.[5] However, the YKh describes the MBT as the 'current of the Transmission (kramaugha) of the hundred sūtras'. Through them the aspirant gains a knowledge of the planes of Yoga and so can engage in Kaula practice (caryā).[6] The author of the Ṭīkā reverses these views to one which is more consonant with what we do actually find. According to him, the sūtras were drawn from the MBT, the scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses. Implying both that they enjoyed, in some sense, an independent existence and that the MBT is not made up entirely of *sūtra*s. In fact the division into chapters and sūtras of the sections (khaṇḍa) of the MBT is not consistent. This is probably due to the manner in which the text was compiled. The MBT is not the work of a single person. It developed in the hands of various redactors at different times and in more than one place. This is true not only of the MBT as a whole, but also of each of the sections (khaṇḍa) into which it is divided. This is apparent from anachronisms we sometimes discover in the texts. The YKh, which we will argue is not just the first khaṇḍa of the MBT, was the earliest form in which it was redacted. It contains references that appear to be of a

---

[1] Sarga, Ūrmī and Taraṅga are all words used to denote chapters or sections of Sanskrit texts in general (see above, p. 107, note 1).

[2] This scripture is, I suppose, the KMT which consists of this number of verses. The use of the term sūtra in this sense here serves to underscore the importance of the text of the KMT.

[3] saupānapaṅktim āsthāya khaṇḍatrayaśrute sati | yenāgamena sakalaṁ lakṣapādādhike mate ||
pāramparyamahāsūtraṁ ṣaṭtriṁśad grathitaṁ mayā | [. . .]
āgamāmnāyabhāṇḍāraṁ durbodhyaṁ tu (g: duvodhasya) varānana ||
vṛttasūtrārthaviditaṁ mayā sāgarabuddhinā |
sarga [g: sāga?] ūrmitaraṅgādyaiḥ sarati [k g: sarenti] paścimaṁ [g: -ma] kramam ||
tasya sūtrasahasrāṇi adhyuṣṭāni pravartate | [. . .]
prāṅgire jñāyate jñānaṁ araṇye ruditaṁ yathā |
sakṛdjñāte tathā jñānaṁ sūtrārūḍhaṁ ca [k g: sa] bhairava [k: -vaḥ] ||
YKh (1) 39/40-41ab, 43cd-45ab, 50.

[4] KMT 25/189-192.

[5] KuKh 68/116cd-118.

[6] YKh (1) 33/116 = KuKh 65/16.

later date than other parts of the MBT. For example, in a passage in YKh (1) dealing with other schools and Kaula traditions (āmnāya) in relation to that of the goddess Kubjikā we are told that it is only in the latter that one can achieve liberation by means of the five so-called 'makāras' i.e. meat, fish wine, parched grain, and sexual fluids (maithuna).[1] Moreover, Jainism is criticized for being a school (darśana) without them.[2] The KuKh knows only the earlier group of three makāras[3] as does the ŚM.[4] This suggests that this part of YKh (1) was compiled after these two sources. Moreover, this section of the YKh is concerned with the division of Kaula schools into four *āmnāya*s of which the KuKh and ŚM are no less oblivious than the KMT.

The root sūtra, from which the noun sūtra is derived, means, according to Monier-Williams, 'to string or put together; to contrive effect, produce, compose; to put in the form of a sūtra, teach as a sūtra or aphorism.' The noun sūtra primarily means a thread. The sacred thread Brahmins wear is a type of sūtra. However, it may also be a connecting thread or ligature and so, by extension, it also means, again according to Monier-Williams:

> that which like a thread runs through or holds together everything, rule, direction; a short sentence or aphoristic rule, and any work or manual consisting of strings of such rules hanging together like threads. These sūtra works form manuals of teaching in ritual, philosophy, grammar etc.: e.g. in ritual there are first the *Śrautasūtra*s, and among them the *Kalpasūtra*s, founded directly on śruti. They form a kind of rubric to Vedic ceremonial, giving concise rules for the performance of every kind of sacrifice. Other kinds of sūtra works are the *Gṛhyasūtra*s and Sāmayācārika or *Dharmasūtra*s. These led to the later Dharmaśāstras or 'law-books'. In philosophy each system has its regular text-book of aphorisms written in sūtras by its supposed founder. In vyākaraṇa or grammar there are the celebrated sūtras of Pāṇini . . . with Buddhists, Pāśupatas etc. the term sūtra is applied to the original text books as opposed to explanatory works.

---

[1] One cannot attain liberation in the Five Makāras by means of other systems. Liberation by means of the five (sacrificial) substances abides in the Western (transmission), the tradition (anvaya) of the Śrīkrama.

makārapañcake [gh: makāraṁ] muktiṁ [gh: muktiṁr] na vindyed anyadarśanaiḥ [k, kh, gh: vidyed anyadarśanai] |
pañcadravyaiḥ sthitā muktiḥ paścime śrīkramānvaye || YKh (1) 4/192.

[2] makārapañcanirmuktaṁ darśanaṁ ca dvitīyakam | YKh (1) 4/200ab.

[3] KuKh 12/38b.

[4] ŚM 10/119c-25.

Thus, when the MBT - the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses - is said to be a 'collection of sūtras' one implication is that it is a basic and particularly important scripture. Essentially, the function of a sūtra is simply to give information and it is defined accordingly: (It is a) 'sūtra' because it is by this that (the teaching) is expounded (sūcita)'.[1] When this information is conveyed in a short, compact, sūtra with a minimal use of words, we may translate the word as 'aphorism'. However, this is never the form of any of the sūtras in the MBT. We find that the term is used in the MBT to refer, for example, to individual verses which summarize important, essential teachings.[2] Sometimes just a few such verses may be collectively called a sūtra.[3] We observe the same usage in Tantras of other schools[4] and independent treatises.[5] However, it may also denote any section, more or less long, that functions in this way.

Similarly, in common usage not all sūtras are short, pithy aphorisms. Many major Buddhist scriptures are called sūtras although they are far from being short and concise. Therefore, we should not be surprised to find that the term sūtra can be applied to various formats and types of sections of a Tantric text. Indeed, we find that entire Tantric texts are sometimes called *sūtra*s. According to the JY, there are fifteen such major texts - called *mūlasūtra*s. These are said to be

---

[1] KuKh 26/53: anena sūcitaṁ (iti) sūtram.

[2] After twelve verses in sragdharā describing the goddess and her sacred seats, we find the following statement in YKh (2) chapter 30: These twelve sūtras have come forth from the Kaulika Command. ity ete dvādaśa sūtrāḥ [k: sūtrā] kaulikājñāvinirgatāḥ [k: -tā]. Cf. above, p. 115 where the verses of the KMT are also said to be sūtras.

[3] One example is KuKh 48/12cd-14ab. These verses correspond to ŚM 24/38cd-40ab, which is their source. According to the Ṭīkā (fol. 87b), these verses are the Gurumaṇḍalasūtra. They supply a concise description of the Gurumaṇḍala which the Ṭīkā uses as the basis of its extensive decription of the same. See below intro. vol. 2, appendix 2. In the passage quoted above from the YKh we find a reference to a scripture consisting of 3,500 *sūtra*s. There seems little reason to doubt that the KMT is meant here that consists of 3,500 verses. And so here too sūtra means 'verse'.

[4] For example, in his commentary, the Ṛjuvimarśinī (p. 63), on the NṢĀ, Śivānanda refers to just two and a half verses of the text on which he comments as a sūtra (sārdhena sūtreṇa cakraśeṣam āha)

[5] Rāmakaṇṭha's commentary on the Spandakārikā¸ for example, is called Spandasūtrāvalī - the Row of the Thread of the Ultimate Purport of Spanda. Rāmakaṇṭha explains why he has chosen this name. He says: 'Someone threaded (the teachings) together with his extending intellect. Some others made of it two threads, while the Row of the Thread of the Ultimate Purport of Spanda has been composed by bringing both together in accord with the tradition. Thus I will thread together the jewel-like ideas of the learned, pierced by the thunderbolt tip of the power of the Lord's grace, so that both may be complete.' The first thread - sūtra - in this case is the Śivasūtra revealed by Vasugupta. It is the first Kashmiri Śaiva text and consists of short aphorisms. The second thread is the Spandakārikā, written soon after, probably by his disciple Kallaṭa. This too Rāmakaṇṭha calls a sūtra even though it consists of fifty-one verses (śloka). See Dyczkowski 1992: 74.

Tantras that belong to the Vidyāpīṭha.[1] Similarly, according to the JY, there are three *sūtra*s, that is, Tantras that belong to the Mudrāpīṭha, namely, the Hṛdbheda, Mātṛbheda and the Kubjikāmata.[2] The inclusion of the KMT here perhaps relates to one of its other names, that is, Ratnasūtra.[3] A sūtra may include more than one Tantra. Thus, according to the JY, at least two such sūtras are divided into two by two of the eight Bhairavas.[4] One of these is the Svacchandabhairavasūtra which is said to have come down in two parts - one taught by Asitāṅga and the other by Svacchandabhairava. Although the other Tantras are probably just imaginary, we do possess an important and extensive Tantra named after the latter Bhairava which is, from the JY's point of view, one half of a sūtra.[5]

Similarly, the TS refers to a version of the Siddhayogeśvarītantra that consists of a billion verses (śatakoṭi) as the 'root Tantra' (mūlatantra) or 'great sūtra' from which two other sūtras have emerged. One of them is the TS itself while the other was probably the actually existing SYM.[6] Similarly, Vidyānanda in his Jñānadīpavimarśinī, refers to the Tantra on which he comments as the mūlasūtra[7] i.e. Root Sūtra, which amounts to saying that it is the Root Tantra of the Śrīvidyā tradition.

The division of Tantric texts prior to the tenth century into large sections called sūtras is not uncommon. According to the JY, the Brahmayāmala, a text that runs into about 12,000 verses, is divided into seven *sūtra*s.[8] The Niḥsvāsatattvasaṁhitā is divided into five *sūtra*s. Each of them are a complete

---

1 evam etāni sūtrāṇi vidyāpīṭhe maheśvari |
daśapañca siddhāni mūlasūtrāṇi sarvataḥ || JY 1/40/11.

2 mudrāpīṭhaṁ [-pīṭha] tridhā bhinnaṁ sahasrāṣṭādaśānvitam ||
mantrāṇāṁ saṁkhyayā devi śatāṣṭottarakalpagam |
hṛdbhedo mātṛbhedaś ca tathānyaṁ kubjikāmatam ||
mudrāpīṭhaṁ tu sūtrāṇi trīṇi bhinnāny anekadhā | JY 1/36/28cd-30ab.

3 See above, p. 89.

4 This principle operates in relation to the rest of the Bhairavas. Accordingly, chapter thirty-seven of the first ṣaṭka of the JY is called the teaching concerning the Bhairava *sūtra*s. (bhairavasūtranirṇaya)

5 svacchandabhairavaṁ sūtraṁ dviṣkandham iva āgatam |
asitāṅgena bhedena svacchandena ca bhairavi || JY 1/36/36.

Similarly, further ahead in the same text, another sūtra is said to have been divided into two by another pair of the eight Bhairavas:

athātaś ca sūtraṁ tu dviṣkandhaṁ tad api smṛtam |
caṇḍena ruruṇā cāpi dvābhyāṁ tad avadhāritam || ibid. 1/37/1.

In this way two sūtras are formed. The one created by Caṇḍabhairava is said to consist of eighteen chapters - here called *kalpa*s: caṇḍabhairavasūtrasya kalpadvādaśakaṁ priye | ibid. 1/37/9ab.

6 siddhayogeśvarītantre śatakoṭipravistare |
mūlatantre mahāsūtre sūtradvayavinirgatam [g: dā-] || TS 1/13.

7 Jñānadīpavimarśinī p. 52.

8 brahmayāmalam etad dhi sūtrair bhinnaṁ tu saptabhiḥ | JY 1/40/9cd.

whole and may be treated independently of the others.[1] Like the five currents of scripture (srotas) that come from Sadāśiva's five faces, the five sūtras are also said to be five currents (srotas) that, read together form the one saṁhitā (lit. 'collection'). According to the NTS itself, the function of the sūtras is to structure the text and hold it together by a common thread (sūtra):

> It is said that a sūtra is a declaration (sūcanā) (of the teaching) and is the most important part (pada) (of a text). All this (Tantra) is pervaded by that like a group of jewels on the thread (sūtra) (of a necklace).[2]

The KuKh refers to scripture (āgama), as a 'sequence of sūtras' (sūtrakrama).[3] It is this that is transmitted from teacher to disciple. As such it is identified with the Kulakrama itself, that is, the transmission of the Kula teachings. The KMT says: 'The scripture (āgama) there (in that case) means the sūtras and the procedure (vidhi) is enjoined (coditā) there'.[4] Sometimes just individual sūtras are imparted by the teacher to his disciple.[5] Sūtras also serve an important ritual function. Bhairavī, who is the Samayā Vidyā, is worshipped by reciting the Root Sūtra to her.[6] It is common in Newar liturgies to recite the Saṁvartāmaṇḍalasūtra when the deity is invited to come and occupy the place prepared for it (āvāhana). Clearly, a sūtra is invested with a special sanctity and power in its own right, not just because it is a part of the scripture. It is the vital component of the scripture that lends access to it. Thus the Root Sūtra is worshipped along with the goddess's principle (samayā) Vidyā at the culminating point of the rite that empowers the initiate to study the scripture (kulāgama).[7] Accordingly, only if the disciple has the right moral prerequisites, knows the lineage of teachers and the maṇḍala and has studied the Root Sūtra, is he allowed access to the oral tradition (mukhāgama).[8]

The teaching not only developed by combining sūtras and extending them. The teaching also develops at the level of the *sūtra*s. A good example is the development of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍalasūtra. It is built up from the first verse at the beginning of the KMT, which does not refer to it as a sūtra, although the ŚM

---

[1] See Bagchi 1975: 93.

[2] sūcanā sūtram ity āha sūtraṁ nāma padaṁ param |
tena sarvam idaṁ vyāptaṁ sūtre maṇigaṇā iva || NTS quoted by Bagchi 1975: 93.

[3] KuKh 5/6.

[4] KMT 4/56ab: āgamas tatra sūtrārtho vidhis tatraiva coditā

[5] See, for example, KuKh 30/46cd-47.

[6] KuKh 49/53.

[7] KuKh 30/216..

[8] KuKh 30/234cd-235ab.

does. It assumes its fullest form in the KuKh and in the ṢSS[1] by accommodating later developments in the transmission of the Kubjikā Tantras. As it describes the basic form of the Kramamaṇḍala of this school, this sūtra is particularly important. However, even so, the tradition does not refer to it as the most important Sūtra. This honour is reserved for the Root Sūtra (mūlasūtra), which said to be the first one.[2] This sūtra has three variant forms that are presented separately in chapters 26, 38 and 42 of the KuKh. Although, it is possible to trace various developments in the three versions, their main concern is the description of the central triangular core of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala - the Yoni, and the production of the hexagram that surrounds it. Moreover, out of the three, only one (in chapter twenty-six) refers to the presence of the three Transmissions (krama) in the maṇḍala. The focus is essentially on the sacred seats and the Siddhas who reside in them. Thus this sūtra is also called Yonimūlasūtra[3] - i.e. the Root Sūtra of the Yoni and is said to teach the doctrine concerning the Kulayoni.[4] Could it be that when this, the first sūtra, was composed, the maṇḍala consisted of just the triangle, the universal symbol of the goddess, in which only the sacred seats and their deities were worshipped and from which subsequently emanated the hexagram?

A later development does not cancel out what has gone before. It supplements it. The emphasis in the opening verse of the KMT is that the goddess is present in (every) part (pada) of the Transmission (kramapadanihitā) and the maṇḍala is described as essentially (tattvataḥ) consisting of the six groups of mantras that are projected into the hexagram that surrounds the central triangle. The full form of the sūtra then devotes two and a half verses to the remaining parts of the maṇḍala, namely, the three circles drawn around the hexagram where the lineages of the teachers are worshipped and the eight Mothers.[5] It also refers

---

[1] See note to KuKh 1/1.
[2] KuKh 26/6.
[3] This is also part of the the name of chapter 38.
[4] KuKh 38/1.
[5] One should worship Gāyatrī in the middle (of the maṇḍala) and the group of eight Kulas on the girdle. Then, (one should worship) the Current of the Persons once in an anticlockwise movement outside the group of eight Kulas in the second girdle. Then one should worship the group of eight Siddhas anticlockwise. After that one should worship the ninth (Siddha) along with the threefold division (of the three original Siddhas). Outside that are the sixteen Siddhas on the third girdle.

gāyatrīṁ [g: gāyatrī] pūjayen madhye [kh: -mantrī] mekhalāyāṁ [kh: -lāyā] kulāṣṭakam [g: -stakaṁ] || [g: + pūjayet yaś ca vāmāvarttaparicamāt | ]
*vāmāvartena [g: nāmāvartteṇa] saṁsthāpya puruṣaugham [k, kh, g: puruṣo-] ataḥ param [k: padaṁ; kh: * ] |
kulāṣṭakasya bāhye tu dvitīyāyāṁ tu mekhalām ||
siddhāṣṭakaṁ yajet paścād [g: paścāt] vāmāvartaparibhramāt |
navamaṁ pūjayet paścāt sa tridhābhedasaṁyutam [g: tripādena saṁyutaṁ] || to the 'remaining maṇḍalas' which, according to the SKh,[1] are twenty-eight that are drawn around the main maṇḍala. Clearly, the maṇḍala has undergone a great deal of development both in its form and, especially, in its content. We find some confirmation that this development has indeed taken place in stages by the persistence of the earlier form of the maṇḍala. Thus, in one place the text instructs that a maṇḍala be drawn 'in accord with the previous tradition' (pūrvakrameṇa) as explained by the Root Sūtra.[2] Chapter fifty-eight is, in its own way, an explanation of the Root Sūtra, which is praised as the essence of the most extended form of the scripture. Significantly, it is said to have been 'uttered on the great island'[3] that is, 'retrieved' (uddhṛta) from the Island of the Moon[4] and explained at length (nirṇīta) in Kāmarūpa. The sūtra in chapter 51 of the KuKh is also said to have come from the Island of the Moon. Implied in these statements is the link between the later Kaula tradition (paścimāmnāya) of the Kubjikā Tantras and the earlier one (pūrvāmnāya) founded in this Age (kaliyuga) by Matsyendranātha who also revealed the scripture on the Island of the Moon.[5]

Thus, it appears that the teachings of the Kubjikā Tantras were, in part at least, transmitted at an early stage of their development in the form of *sūtra*s, that is, in short passages, sometimes set to a complex metre, usually sragdharā, but mostly in simple śloka. At one stage some of them may have had an independent existence and served as concise focalizations of doctrine. Indeed, originally, they may have been transmitted purely orally, just as even after a Tantra was redacted, the sūtra was the form of the teaching that was to be learnt, along with the mantras and the secret nomenclature (saṁjñā) of the system, directly 'from the teacher's mouth'.[6] Amenable to explanation and expansion, they served not only as a way of recalling and transmitting the teachings, but also as nuclear formulations of doctrine (sūtrākāropadeśa)[7] that served as points from which to tadbāhye ṣoḍaśa [g: ṣoḍaśā] siddhāḥ [k kh g: siddhā] tṛtīyāyāṁ [g: vi-] tu mekhalām |

---

SKh 4/149cd-152ab.

[1] SKh 7/99cd. See KuKh 48/81cd-82, note 53.

[2] KuKh 33/62.

[3] KuKh 58/99cd-100ab.

[4] KuKh 58/102.

[5] This scripture is in each house of Yoginīs in Kāmarūpa. O fair-eyed one, (this) great scripture was brought down to earth on the Island of the Moon, O Nātha, (that) is said to be in Kāmākhya.

kāmarūpe imaṁ śāstraṁ yoginīnāṁ gṛhe gṛhe | KJN 12/10cd.
candradvīpaṁ mahāśāstraṁ avatīrṇaṁ sulocane | kāmākhye gīyate nāthe KJN 12/12abc. See intro. vol. 2, p. 319 ff..

[6] KuKh 39/121-122ab.

[7] See KuKh 38/28a.

expand and build up a Tantra. The knowledge of these didactic sūtras (upadeśasūtra) was essential.[1]

The versions of the Root Sūtra (mūlasūtra) are a good example of this type of Sūtra. Apart from the three versions in the KuKh we find others. Popular not only because they focused on the principle or 'root' teaching, concerning the core of the maṇḍala, they lend themselves well to expansion through the explanations that invariably accompany them. Another example is the Santānasūtra that constitutes the first part of chapter seventeen of the KuKh.[2] The rest is an explanation of it. The Santānasūtra is a list of sixteen 'conventions' (saṁketa) or essential points of doctrine, concerning the lineage of the transmission, its nature, founder, and the core of the maṇḍala from which it originates. Recited at some point in the Krama ritual, the adept would memorize this sūtra and so recall these 'conventions' and the explanation he has received from his teacher. As is probably the case with many others, if not all, such *sūtra*s, the disciple was originally taught an explanation by his teacher that in the course of time was set to writing and became the second half of this chapter. In this way the 'convention' (saṁketa) is another device through which the text can stimulate reflection on the part of the redactor and so develop the text through his hand. As nuclear constituents of sūtras they are compact units that can be inserted wholesale into the body of a text or around which the text can develop.

This type of sūtra is a useful mnemonic device. Examples are the sūtras that list the 'conventions concerning the (secret Kaula) language' (bhāṣāsaṁketakasūtra),[3] the meaning of which is transmitted down through the line of teachers.[4] The simplest form of this 'Kaula language' (kaulabhāṣā) is already found in the KMT. Mantras are 'hidden' in this way by simply writing them in reverse.[5] In the MBT Kaula language is more complex. However, in most cases, it is hardly more than a series of abbreviations of deities or other entities. A bhāṣāsūtra is number 14 in the list of 107 sūtras found in YKh (1), which we may take as an indication that this type of Kaula language was part of the earliest developments after the KMT. These sūtras and their 'saṁketas' more or less explicitly purport to be part of the oral teachings transmitted in abbreviated code so they could be kept hidden and more easily remembered. The texts repeatedly admonish that the knowledge of these and other 'saṁketas' is essential in order to

---

[1] See KuKh 48/93cd-94ab and KuKh 65/16.
[2] KuKh 17/2-7.
[3] KuKh 28/106-107.
[4] sūtrasaṁketabhāṣārthaṁ pāramparyakramāgatam | KuKh 30/185cd.
[5] An example is found in KMT 7/30 where the six limbs of the goddess's Vidyā are presented in this way. 'This.' says the KMT, 'has been stated with a confirming sign in Kaulika language' (etat kaulikabhāṣāyāṁ kathitaṁ tu sapratyayam |) KMT 7/33ab.

be a teacher or indeed, as we read in the very last line our text, to receive the Kulāgama.

The several Kramasūtras we find in the SKh and elsewhere are another example of the mnemonic 'saṁketa' sūtra. A variety of 'pūjāsūtra', that is, one dealing with the essentials of ritual, they list the names or groupings of mantras, as do 'oghasūtras' (an 'ogha' being a particular group of mantras) and 'nyāsasūtras' that list the names of group of mantras that are deposited (nyāsa) on the body. These too are often followed by an 'explanation' which is, simply, the presentation of the mantras, sometimes directly in full, as happens in the Siddhakhaṇḍa[1] of the MBT, or in code.

Although it is likely that many sūtras existed prior to the redaction of the texts that incorporated them, they also continued to be written after the Tantras were redacted and they underwent development as doctrine developed. At this stage some may well have been written expressly for a Tantra. Anyway, there can be no doubt that in the earliest phases of its redaction the MBT developed by the accretion of *sūtra*s. We are fortunate that the redactors of the YKh chose to leave us a concrete picture of the text they had compiled in the form of what is, essentially, an index. There are two such indexes. The one recorded below is found in the first recension of the YKh. The Ṭīkā[2] tell us that a collection of 107 sūtras was extracted from the scripture of 24,000 verses. The figure appears to be realistic. We would expect 108 or some other symbolic number if it were not. Moreover, in the following passage, called the 'chapter concerning the *sūtra*s' (sūtrādhikāra),[3] we find that this is indeed the number of sūtras listed. As an aid to cross referencing they have been numbered:

> Next I will tell (you) the (names of) the sūtras in due order. 1) (The first is) the chapter concerning Kumārikā (Kumārikādhikāra), 2) the second, the Compendium of Principles (Tattvasaṁgraha), (then comes) 3) the (Sūtra concerning) the Descent of the First Siddha (Ādisiddhāvatāra), 4) (the Sūtra of the) Convention concerning the Nine (syllable mantra) (Navasaṁketaka), 5) the (Sūtra) concerned with the Explanation (Bhūmikādhikāra) is another, 6) the Root Sūtra (Mūlasūtraka), 7-8) the two Lineage sūtras (Santānasūtraka), 9) the Seed Sūtra (Bījasūtra), 10) (the Sūtra of the goddess) Taraṅginī,[4] 11) the Skyfarer (Khecarasūtra), 12) the Great Sūtra of the Rule

[1] Concerning which see below, p. 205 ff..
[2] The passage is quoted above on p. 76.
[3] iti sūtrādhikāravarṇano [g: -kāravarṇa] nāmādhikāraḥ || [ṅ: ?] This is part of chapter 38 of YKh (1).
[4] Here as in other places, I prefer the reading of MS G which is the oldest. The other three MSs read Karaṅginī (MS K and ṅ) and Karaṅkinī (MS Gh).

(Mahāsamayasūtra), 13) the Kulasūtra, 14) the (Sūtra of the Secret) Language (Bhāṣāsūtra) and 15) (the Sūtra of the Secret) Signs (Chomāsūtra), 16) the Śaktisūtra, 17) the Śiva (sūtra), 18) the Guru and 19) Devasūtras, 20-2) the sūtras concerning the Three Lineages (ogha), 23-25) the three Pujāsūtras, 26) the Balisūtra,[1] 27) the (Sūtra of the) Sequence of Teachers (Gurukramasūtra), 28) the (Sūtra of) Authority (Adhikārasūtra) and 29) the Sūtra concerning the Prior (Tradition) (Pūrvasūtra), 30) the Sūtra concerning the Garland Mantra (Mantramālāsūtraka), 31) the Sūtra concerning the Depositions (Nyāsasūtra), 32) the Sūtra concerning the Observances (Caryāsūtra), 33) the most excellent Maṇḍala(sūtra), 34-36) the triad of sūtras concerning the Iconic Form (Mūrtisūtra) is another, then comes 37) the Sūtra concerning Liquor (Alisūtra), 38) the Navātman (sūtra), 39) the Sūtra concerning the Undifferentiated (Aspect of the Deity) (Niṣkalasūtra), 40) the Great Śāmbhava (sūtra) (Mahāśāmbhava), 41) the Śāmbhava (sūtra) (Śāmbhava), 42) the Sūtra concerning Knowledge (Jñānādhikārasūtra), then comes 43) the (Sūtra of the) Ocean of the Yoni (Yonyārṇava), 44) the Sūtra concerning the Purification of the Fire (Agnisaṁskārasūtra), 45) the great (Sūtra concerning) the Circle for the Extraction (of Mantras) (Uddhāramaṇḍala), and then, O god, 46) the Sūtra of the Command (Ājñāsūtra), 47) the Sūtra of the Tradition concerning the Scripture (Āgamāmnāyasūtraka), 48) Nirvāṇasūtraka and another is 49) the Well Formed Sūtra (Vṛttasūtra), 50) the Sūtra concerning the (Mantra called) Twelve Verses (dvādaśaślokasūtra), 51-53) the three (sūtras concerning the) Thirty-two (syllable Vidyā) (Dvātriṁśikāsūtras), 54) the Sūtra concerning the (Inner) Wheels (Cakrasūtra),[2] 55) the Sūtra of (the Goddess's Six) Faces (Vaktrasūtra), 56) the Sūtra of (the Goddess's Six) Limbs (Aṅgasūtra), 57) the Sūtra of the Heart of the Skyfaring (Goddess) (Khecarīhṛdayasūtra), 58) the Sūtra concerning Gesture (Mudrāsūtra), 59) the Kulālikā(sūtra), 60) the Sūtra concerning (the letters that are the) Fifty Jewels (Pañcāśadratnakasūtra), and 61) the (the Sūtra of the) Convention concerning the Nine (syllable mantra) (Navasaṁketaka),[3] 62) the Sūtra concerning the Unmanifest (Avyaktasūtraka) is another, 63) the Sūtra concerning the Fifty Principles (Tattvapañcāśasūtraka), 64) the (Sūtra concerning the) Five Worlds (Bhuvanapañcaka), followed by 65) the

[1] Cf. sūtra 94 in this list.
[2] Cf. sūtra 67 in this list.
[3] Cf. sūtra 4 in this list.

Caryāsūtra, then 66) the Sūtra Marked by Sound (Nādāṅkita), followed by 67) the Sūtra concerning the (Inner) Wheels (Cakrasūtra),[1] then 68) the Sūtra concerning the Sacrifice (Yajñasūtra), 69) the Sūtra of the Sacred Sites (Kṣetrasūtra) and 70) the (Sūtra) concerning the Enclosure (Parigraha), 71) the Sūtra of the Vidyā of Thirty-two (syllables) (Dvātriśadvidyāsūtra), and 72) the Sūtra concerning the Meru Grid (Meruprastārasūtraka). 73) (The Sūtra concerning) the extraction of all the Sūtras in the western Kulakaula.

(Then come) the great 74) Sūtra concerning the Sacred Thread (Pavitrakasūtra), 75) the Sūtra concerning Initiation (Dīkṣāsūtra), 76) (the Sūtra) concerning the Destruction of Impurity (Malakṣayādhikāra), 77) (the Sūtra) concerning Yoga (Yogādhikāraka), 78) the (Sūtra) concerning the Initiation by Piercing (Vedhadīkṣādhikāra) with 79) the (Sūtra concerning) Initiation into the Transmission (Kramadīkṣā) as the second, another is (the pair of Sūtras concerning) 80) Chastisement (Nigraha) and 81) Grace (Anugraha), 82) the (Sūtra concerning) the Transition through the Parts (of the Transmission) (padasaṁkrāmaṇa), 83) the Sūtra of Light (jyotisūtra), 84) the Sūtra of the House (gṛhasūtra), 85) the Bhairavaśekhara(sūtra), 86) the Sūtra concerned with the form of the Triple Vidyā (trividyākārasūtra), and then 87) the Sūtra of the Current (of the Transmission (oghasūtra), 88) the Sūtra of the Six Parts (of the Maṇḍala) (ṣaṭprakārasūtra), 89) the (Sūtra) formed from the Group of Eight Seats (vṛttapīṭhāṣṭaka), 90) the Sūtra of the Sixfold (Deposition) (ṣoḍhāsūtra) and 91) the Śabda and 92) Mālinika(sūtras), 93) the Great Sūtra of the Wanderer in the Night (mahāniśāṭanasūtra), 94) the Balisūtra,[2] 95) the (Sūtra) of the Sound at Night (niśārava), 96) the (Sūtra concerning the) Installation (Pratiṣṭhā) of the Kula Goddesses, 97) the Sūtra concerning the Characteristics of Firepits (Kuṇḍalakṣaṇasūtraka),[3] 98) the Sūtra concerning the Characteristics of a Teacher (Ācāryalakṣaṇasūtra), 99) the (Sūtra concerned with) the Characteristics of Disciples and Yoginīs (Śiṣyayoginilakṣaṇa), 100) the (Sūtra) concerned with the Guardian of the Field (Kṣetrapālādhikāra), 101) the Great Sūtra concerning Non-duality (Mahādvaitasūtraka), 102) the Sūtra concerning the Wheel of

[1] Cf. sūtra 54 in this list.
[2] Cf. sūtra 26 in this list.
[3] Three MSs read kulalakṣaṇasūtrakaṁ - 'the Sūtra concerning the characteristics of Kula'. However, I prefer the reading of MS G which is the oldest and most authoritative.

Cāmuṇḍā (Cāmuṇḍācakrasūtra) and then 103) the (Sūtra concerning) the Descent (of the Scripture into the World) (Avatāra), 104) the great Kulakaulasūtra, 105) the Sūtra of the Sixteen Questions (Ṣoḍaśapraśnasūtraka), 106) the Root Sūtra (Mūlasūtra) of the Sūtras, and then 107) the Sūtra concerning Liberation (Muktisūtra).

He who knows (this), the chapter concerning the Sūtras (sūtrādhikāra), is one who awakens (others). He is said to belong to the tradition (anvayīka) and awakens to (the meaning) of the king of Matas.[1]

---

[1] *athātaḥ saṁpravakṣyāmi [g: -vakṣāmi] sūtrāṇāṁ [gh: sūtrāṁ ] ca yathā kramam |
kumārikādhikāraṁ [k, gh, ṅ: -ra] tu [k, g, gh, ṅ: prathamaṁ] dvitīyaṁ tattvasaṁgraham ||
ādisiddhāvatāraṁ [g: ādiśiddhā-] tu navasaṁketakaṁ [g: -taka] punaḥ |
bhūmikādhikāram anyaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: adhyaṁ] tu tathāpi [g: tathā vai; ṅ: tathāvi] mūlasūtrakam ||
santānasūtrakau dvau [gh: ghai] tu bījasūtraṁ tathaiva ca |
*tathā taraṅginīsūtraṁ [k, ṅ: karaṅginī -; gh: karaṅkinī-] khecarañ ca tathāparaṁ [*This quarter missing in MSs k, gh, and ṅ] ||
*mahāsamayasūtraṁ tu [k, gh, ṅ: ] kulasūtram [k: kṛ ||*-; gh: phra *-; ṅ: ku -] ataḥ param |
bhāṣā chomā [k, gh, ṅ: chorma] tathā sūtraṁ śāktasūtraṁ [k, gh: sākṣa-] śivaṁ tathā || (This and the following five lines are repeated in MSs k, gh and ṅ)
*gurudevau [k, gh: śukadeva; g, ṅ: gurudeva] tathā sūtre [k, g, gh, ṅ: sūtrau] sūtraṁ oghatraye [k: u?dvyatraye; gh: udvyatraye; ṅ: * * traye] tathā* |
pūjāsūtratrayaṁ [ṅ: -śūtratrayaṁ] cānyaṁ [g: cānya] balisūtraṁ [k, gh, ṅ: daliśūtraṁ; g: dalisūtra] gurukramam ||
adhikāraparvasūtraṁ mantramālā [g: mantramīlā] ca sūtrakam |
nyāsasūtraṁ [g: -sūtra] tathā caryāsūtraṁ [g: -sūtra; ṅ: khuryā?-] maṇḍalam uttamam ||
mūrtisūtratrayaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: -dvitīyaṁ; g: -tatratrayaṁ] cānyaṁ alisūtram [k, gh: -śūtram] ataḥ param |
nyāsasūtraṁ [g: -sūtra] tathā caryāsūtraṁ [g: -sūtra] maṇḍalam uttamam ||
mūrtisūtratrayaṁ [g: mūrtitatratrayaṁ] cānyaṁ alisūtram ataḥ [ṅ: alistatramataḥ) param |
navātmā niṣkalaṁ [all MSs: niḥkalaṁ] sūtraṁ mahāśāmbhavaśāmbhavam ||
jñānādhikārasūtraṁ tu yonyārṇavam ataḥ param |
*agnisaṁskārasūtraṁ tu [k, gh: tur] mahā - uddhāramaṇḍalaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: * rddharamaṇḍalaṁ]* ||
ājñāsūtraṁ tathā [g: tuthā] deva āgamāmnāyasūtrakam |
nirvāṇasūtrakaṁ [g: nirvāna-] cānyaṁ vṛttasūtram [g, gh: vṛta-] ataḥ param ||
dvādaśaślokasūtraṁ [g: dvādaśloka-] tu tathā dvātriṁśikātrayaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: dvātriṁśakā-] |
cakrasūtraṁ [k: bahu-; gh: vaṅga-] vaktrasūtraṁ aṅgasūtraṁ tathaiva ca ||
*khecarīhṛdayaṁ [gh: -hṛ * yaṁ] sūtraṁ mudrāsūtraṁ [gh: muddhā-] kulālikā* |
*pañcāśadratnakaṁ [k, g, gh, ṅ: pañcāsad-] sūtraṁ navasaṁketakaṁ [k, gh: * * saṁketakan; ṅ: * vāsaṁketakaṁ] tathā* ||
avyaktasūtrakaṁ [k, gh: avyaktā-] cānyaṁ tattvapañcāśasūtrakam [k, gh, ṅ: cānyaṁpaṁcāśa-] | *bhuvanapañcakaṁ [k, ṅ: -pañcāśakaṁ; g: bhuvanam-; gh: -pañcāśaka] sūtraṁ [k, gh: * ; ṅ: nāsti] caryāsūtram [k, gh: cārya-] ataḥ param ||
tathā nādāṅkitaṁ [k, ṅ: -kṛtaṁ; g: -te; gh: -kṛta] sūtraṁ cakrasūtram ataḥ param |
tathā ca yajñasūtraṁ [g: japya-; ṅ: yaya-] tu kṣetrasūtraparigraham [g: khetrasūtra-] ||
dvāviṁśadvidyāsūtraṁ [g: dvāviṁśa-] ca meruprastārasūtrakaṁ [k, ṅ: maru-; gh: maruddha? stāra-] |

The following sūtra is found in both recensions of the YKh. It is essentially a shorter version of the one above. The numbers following the sūtras in this list are those of the serial order in which these sūtras appear in the above passage:

> Next I will expound the teaching of all the tradition (sarvāmnāya) by knowing which one understands the sequence (krama) (of the sūtras) in the Śrīmata. (The first sūtra concerns the mantra known as the) Heart of the Skyfaring (Goddess khecarīhṛdaya) (57) and the (Sūtra) of the Gesture of the Skyfaring (goddess) (khecarīmudrā) (58). The Twelve Verses (50) that have come to the tradition of the transmission (kramāmnāya). The venerable Mālinī, the Great Vidyā (12) and the (Sūtra concerning the letters that are the) Fifty Jewels (60). The Rite of the Transmission (kramapūjā), the Śaktisūtra (16), the Śivasūtra (17) and the (Sūtra of the) Sequence of Teachers (gurukrama) and the Command of the Samayāvidyā. There are those who explain the Ājñāsūtra (46). (There is) the Santānasūtra (7,8), (the Sūtra of the) Thirty-two (syllable mantra) (51-53), (the Sūtra of the) Convention concerning the Nine (syllable mantra) (saṁketanavaka) (4, 56), (the Sūtras) of the (Secret) Language (bhāṣā) (14), Signs (chommā) (15), and Gestures (mudrā) (58). (the Sūtra of the) Seed of Emanation (sṛṣṭibīja) (9), the Pervader (vyāpaka), the great Sūtra Marked by Sound (nādāṅkita) (66) and the Sūtra of (the uddhāraṁ [g: uddhāra] sarvasūtrāṇāṁ [k, gh, ṅ: sarvataṁtrāṇāṁ] kulakaule tu [g: ca] paścime ||

---

pavitrakamahāsūtraṁ dīkṣāsūtraṁ tathaiva ca |
malakṣayādhikārañ [k, gh: sala-] ca tathā yogādhikārakam ||
vedhadīkṣādhikāraṁ tu kramadīkṣā dvitīyakam [g: ditī-] |
nigrahānugrahaṁ cānyaṁ padasaṁkrāmaṇaṁ tathā ||
jyotisūtraṁ gṛhasūtraṁ [k, gh, ṅ: gṛhaṁ-] sūtraṁ [k, gh, ṅ: sūtra] bhairavaśekharam [g: -sekharaṁ] |
*trividyākārasūtraṁ tu [g: -dhikārasūtraṁ *] oghasūtram [k, gh, ṅ: * ] ataḥ param ||
ṣaṭprakāraṁ tathā sūtraṁ vṛttapīṭhāṣṭakaṁ [g: vṛta-] tathā |
*ataḥ soḍhā [k, gh: ataṣo-; g: antayoṭā; ṅ: ataḥ ṣo ] tathā sūtraṁ śabdamālinikaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: śaktimāṇinikaṁ] tathā ||
*mahāniśāṭanaṁ sūtraṁ balisūtraṁ [k, gh, ṅ: * * * ] niśāravam |
pratiṣṭhā [g: pratiṣṭā; ṅ: pratiṣṭho] kuladevīnāṁ kuṇḍalakṣaṇasūtrakam [k, gh, ṅ: kulalakṣaṇa-; g: -sūtraṁ] ||
*ācāryalakṣaṇaṁ sūtraṁ śiṣyayoginilakṣaṇam [k, gh: ṣyayo-; g: -yoginī-; ṅ: sidhya-] |
kṣetrapālādhikāraṁ tu mahā - advaitasūtrakam [g: -ka] ||
cāmuṇḍācakrasūtraṁ tu avatāraṁ punas tathā [g: punaḥ tathā] |
kulakaulamahāsūtraṁ ṣoḍaśapraśnasūtrakam [k, gh, ṅ: ṣoḍaśaṁ agniśūlakaṁ; g: -prasna-] ||
mūlasūtrañ ca sūtrāṇāṁ muktisūtraṁ [g: muktistatra] tathāparam |
evaṁ sūtrādhikāraṁ tu yo jānāti sa bodhakaḥ ||
anvayīkaḥ sa vikhyāto [k, gh, ṅ: samākhyātā] matarājaprabodhakaḥ [k, gh: mantrarājaḥ-] |
YKh (1) 38/1-23ab.

> goddess) Taraṅginī (10). (There is the) first undivided Gesture and the Nine (Sacrificial) Substances,[1] the (Sūtra concerning the) division between duality and non-duality (101?) which is free of doubt and the collection of qualities. He who knows all this pertaining to the Command is a (true) yogi.[2]

According to the second recension of the YKh this is the Sūtra of All the Tradition (Sarvāmnāyasūtrādhikāra). All the manuscripts of the first recension call it the pūrvāmnāyasūtra, which means either ‘the sūtra of the previous tradition’ or ‘the previous sūtra of the tradition’. While the first possible translation makes no sense in this context, the latter suggests that this was an early sūtra that, like the longer one noted above, listed the contents of the YKh at the stage of development when it was written. Even if the difference in the names is simply the result of a scribal error, we arrive at the same possible interpretation. This is the sūtra of all the tradition as it was at the time of its compilation. The possibility that this is an earlier ‘index’ of the sequence of sūtras is supported by the fact that virtually all these sūtras appear in the longer list. Perhaps then we have here a record of the condition of the YKh when it consisted of just 19 sūtras. We get another hint here that at this early stage the sūtras existed independently from the statement that: ‘there are those who explain the Ājñāsūtra’. This suggests that there were other teachers who chose to teach other sūtras.

---

[1] The Kramadravyādhikārasūtra is passage 57 in YKh (1).

[2] ataḥ paraṁ pravakṣyāmi [k, gh, 2 kh: pravakṣāmi] sarvāmnāyasya [sarve: caryāmnāyasya] nirṇayam [k, gh: va-] |
yena vijñātamātreṇa śrīmate [2 k: śrīmataṁ; 2 kh: ?] buddhyate kramam [2: kramāt] ||
khecarīhṛdayaṁ caiva mudrā caiva tu khecarī | [2 kh: ?]
dvādaśāni tu ślokāni kramāmnāyam upāgatāḥ [k, gh, ṅ: -tā; 2 k, kh: kramāmnāyaṁ; 2 k: mukhādgataṁ] || [2 kh: ?]
śrīmālinī [k, gh: -nalinī; 2 kh: ?] mahāvidyā [2 kh: ?] ratnāḥ [k: ratnāt; 2 k: ratnā; 2 kh: rannā] pañcāśam eva [2: pañcāśad eva] ca |
kramapūjā śaktisūtraṁ [k, g, ṅ śaktistatra; 2 kh: ?] śivasūtraṁ [k, g, ṅ: * * * *; gh: -sūtra; 2 kh: ?] gurukramam || [This and the previous three lines are repeated in MSs K, G, and ṅ]
samayavidyāyāś cājñāṁ [sarve: samayavidyā tathā; 2: samayavidyā tathā cājñā] ājñāsūtraṁ vadanti ye [gh: vadanni ye; sarve: ye + prabho] |
santānasūtraṁ [ṅ: saṁbhāva-] dvātriṁśat saṁketanavakaṁ punaḥ ||
bhāṣā [k, gh: bhāvā; ṅ: bhoṣā] chomā ca [k, ṅ: cca; gh: tra] (from here to niḥsaṁkhyāguṇasaṁgraham is taken from YKh (2) 11/34d-36ab) mudrā ca sṛṣṭibījaṁ ca vyāpakam [1: dṛṣṭiśca (k, gh, ṅ: dṛśīca)] |
nādāṅkitaṁ mahāsūtraṁ tathā sūtraṁ [2 kh: (?)] tāra"ginī [2 k: taraṅgiṇi; 2 kh: (?)] ||
ādyāvicchinnamudrā ca navadravyās tathaiva ca | [2 kh: (?)] dvaitādvaitavibhāgaṁ [2 k: dvetādveta-; 2 kh: * * * *(?) vibhāgañ] ca niḥśaṁkaṁ [k, gh: niḥsaṁkaṁ] guṇasaṁgraham [k, gh, ṅ: -saṁgrahā; 2: -haḥ] ||
ājñāyās tu [all MSs: ājñāyāṁ tu; 2: ājñāyā ca] idaṁ sarvaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: sarva] yo jānāti [k, gh: janāti] sa yoginaḥ [k, gh, ṅ: yogina] | YKh (1) 27/1-7ab = YKh (2) 11/31-37ab.

The Structure and Recensions of the Yogakhaṇḍa

The 'collection of sūtras' consisting of 24,000 verses to which the KMT refers and we have discussed above,[1] may have already been in the process of being written when the KMT saw the light of day. However, it must have taken at least a generation and probably more for the text to be consolidated into the 'collection of sūtras' planned in the KMT. This took place in Koṅkaṇa, in the western region of the Deccan. Thus, it is probably not a coincidence that at this stage the adjective paścimāmnāya that described the Kubjikā tradition in the KMT as the 'subsequent', 'final' or 'ultimate' (paścima) Kaula tradition became a proper name meaning 'the Western (paścima) Tradition'. The 'collection of sūtras' was, I believe, ultimately to became the first of the two recensions of the YKh that have come down to us.

This and the Siddhakhaṇda appear to be the oldest parts of the MBT and amongst the first Kubjikā scriptures to have been redacted in Koṅkaṇa. The evidence for this view is that, as we have seen, the standard form and details of the lineages of teachers we find in later sources, namely, the Nine and Sixteen Nāthas, is still in a preliminary, undeveloped stage in these sections of the MBT. Their absence in the SKh is even more striking than in the YKh (1). A version of the Krama ritual is described in the SKh in great detail with all its mantras. As usual, this is integrated with the worship of the teachers. However, although the mantras of a series of teachers are taught, those mentioned there and their groupings are not the standard ones that developed later. Although this is just circumstantial evidence, we may nonetheless hazard to say that here we have another part of the 'original' MBT redacted in the Koṅkaṇa region prior to the formation of the subsequent lineages of teachers or, at least, the development of their legendary existence. In sharp contrast to this situation, the KuKh, drawing from earlier sources, outlines their names and origins in some detail. Moreover, we find what appears to be even a more developed account in YKh (2).

One of the major problems the editor of the MBT must face is the disorder in which the text has been transmitted. This is especially the case with the YKh. This disorder is most clearly apparent in the lack of consistency with which the redactors and scribes have divided it up into chapters and sūtras. This is most probably because the sections (khaṇḍa) of the MBT have been subjected to several redactions by more than one person. Evidence of this are the colophons, which in some cases were probably not written by the redactors of the text.[2]

I generally try and maintain the division of the text into chapters (ānanda), as the last of the series of redactors intended. However, this has not always been possible. In the following summary of the contents of the YKh we will observe numerous examples of inconsistencies in the division of the sūtras into chapters and other details that are the remaining traces of the redaction of the text. Thus, some sūtras appear in more than one version indicating that they were revised by different hands. The repetition of more than one version of a sūtra in the same text suggests that more than one person worked on it and either failed to notice this or saw that each of the versions made their own novel contribution and so decided to make use of all of them.[1]

---

[1] See above, p. 115.
[2] See below, p. 225.

References to the teaching of individual sūtras reinforce the impression that the text was originally fragmented. Again, it is not uncommon for sūtras to have the same name. There are, for example, three sūtras concerning the lineage (santānasūtra)[2] and two balisūtras that are all quite different from one another. Is this because they were written by different people who did not know that the names they were giving to their sūtras were not new? We also find evidence for how individual sūtras may have developed. The section (numbered 114) called Ekavīrāpūjākrama is mostly in prose. One wonders whether such prose sections were not more common in earlier redactions, supplying the raw material that was subsequently set into verse.

Three of the four most complete manuscripts of YKh (1), all end abruptly at the end of chapter 43.[3] As Buddhisāgara Śarmā, who compiled the catalogue for what is now the National Archives in Katmandu, only had time to examine colophons, he lists these manuscripts as those of a separate section of the MBT. This he called the Navanityādhikāra, which is in fact only the name of their last chapter, not the whole khaṇḍa.[4] Only manuscript G continues further. This may well be the result of a loss in the transmission of the text. However, it is not impossible that the three manuscripts represent an earlier recension. The final colophon of the other MSs is not found in MS G which contains a substantial amount of additional text.[5] This is all divided into sūtras with no attempt to order them into chapters or indeed to present them in any systematic way. Is this because they had not been integrated into the final redaction?

---

[1] A prime example of this phenomenon are the three versions of the Root Sūtra in chapters 26, 38 and 42 of the KuKh. The sūtras dealing with the qualities of adepts and teachers in YKh (1) is another.

[2] See entry (15) and notes.

[3] These are MSs K, Gh and Ṅ. See bibliography for details.

[4] These are MSs K, Gh, and Ṅ. See bibliography for details Manuscripts.

[5] The extra portion in manuscript G consists of seventeen and a half extra palmleaf folios. Moreover, just after the break in the other manuscripts there appears to be a substantial drop out in MS G. The folio there of manuscript G is numbered 165b. It is followed by one numbered 186b. So it seems that 21 folios are missing.

The sūtras are useful markers that help us to get an idea of the way the text has been redacted. Accordingly, in the following accounts of the contents of the MBT we note when a sūtra in the text coincides with one in the list of 107 sūtras presented above. 36 at least of the list of 107 sūtras are names of sūtras found in the first recension of the YKh. There are 16 more in the second recension. The SKh has 7 sūtras, out of which 3, at least, are mentioned in the list. Many of the *sūtra*s of the KuKh are taken directly from the YKh. A few of those not drawn from the YKh are in the list.[1]

As we go through YKh (1) we notice that the number of sūtras whose names appear in the list of 107 sūtras decrease up to chapter thirty-eight from which point onwards we find only a few. Moreover, that chapter opens with the sūtra in which those names are listed. Is this because this sūtra was compiled as a sort of table of contents and placed at the end of the text when it had developed to there through successive accretions? Conversely, the Sūtra of Questions and Answers (Praśnottarasūtra), which consists of a long series of questions that are, essentially the subjects of the MBT, may well have come at the beginning of an earlier recension of YKh (1).[2]

There are a several references to the KMT in the YKh,[3] leaving us in no doubt that it was well known to the redactors. However, despite its authority, they largely chose to ignore it as a source. An interesting exception is found at the end of MS G. There we find a few verses that form a part of the concluding section of the KMT.[4] These verses refer to the scripture of 24,000 verses[5] and admonish the initiate to worship it and keep it hidden from those who are unfit to see it. Thus they serve to bring the YKh to an end in the standard way all the major Kubjikā Tantras do. However, one gets the impression that these verses were added there simply to conclude in some way a poorly redacted text. Thus although the last colophon is a long one, it does no more than refer to the Ṣoḍaśāntamuktisūtra as the subject of the chapter[6] even though the end of that sūtra was signalled before.

---

[1] See below, p. 224-229 and summary that follows.

[2] This is entry (11) in the summary of YKh (1) below on p. 141.

[3] The Kubjikāmata is mentioned twice in YKh (2) (7/16d and 20/12d). See also references above, p. 115 and below, p. 291 where it is called the scripture of 3,500 verses and the Ratnasūtra, above, p. 43.

[4] These are YKh (1) 56/8-17. These correspond, with gaps, to KMT 25/189-199 and KMT 25/221 with which this khaṇḍa ends. In the KMT the goddess is addressed by the god. In the YKh it is the other way around. The gender of the vocatives in the two case are therefore different. These variants help us to determine which of the two texts is the original source. Thus, here we find the vocative varāroha [lit. 'having fine hips'] corresponding to the feminine varārohe in the KMT. As this appelative is not appropriate for the god, we may conclude that YKh (1) has drawn this passage from the KMT, not the other way around.

[5] See above, p. 85-86 where a part of this passage from the KMT is translated.

[6] The colophon ends with ṣoḍaśāntamuktisūtrādhikāravarṇane kramodayo nāmānandaḥ

In short, YKh (1) was originally, and basically remained, a collection of sūtras rather than a single, coherently redacted text.

A Summary of the First Recension of the Yogakhaṇḍa

This section of the MBT presents the rites of the Bhairavakrama and the Śrīkrama. These are on the Path of the Right. The Tripurākrama is also described, but in much less detail in just one chapter (43). This is on the Path of the Left. We find here a blend of powerful Kaula rites and rich mysticism. The latter appears in the form of expositions of the series of principles and states leading up to the highest, which is the Śāmbhava plane. The Kaula rites address, in varying degrees, the two parallel concerns of magical control, which is secondary, and liberation, which is primary. As a whole, the KuKh and SKh present markedly milder procedures than YKh (1).

Chapter One: Concerning the Consecration (of Idols and Liṅgas) (Pratiṣṭhādhikāra) (1-4)[1]

The first part of this chapter deals with the rites of installation of a Liṅga. This begins with the ritual bathing of the officiator and the Liṅga that is to be installed. This is followed by worship and depositions (nyāsa), the recitation of hymns such as the Mālinī- and Māyāstavas[2] and then offerings to the fire (1-13).

The shape of the firepits dug in the eight directions are described next and the manner in which the offerings are made. These should be at least 108 and include clarified butter. (14-19ab)

Next comes the preparation of the argha vessel and the sacrificial pap. The latter is probably simply boiled rice as we are told that in order to prepare it one must milk the milk-like water of the Gaṅgā, Yamunā and Godavarī. This is done in the company of the adepts (sādhaka), sons of the Samaya, teachers, and Yoginīs. (19cd-22)

Lamps along with liquor (ali) and animal (bali) offerings are made in the directions in order to remove obstacles. This is followed by a procession in which the patron (yajamāna), his wife, architect (śilpin) and attendents go seated on elephants and chariots to temples and houses around the town. (23-28)

---

[1] The colophon is long and is clearly one of an ānanda, even so, it may originally have been the Pratiṣṭhāsūtra. Entry 96 in the list of sūtras says that it is concerned with the consecration of the goddesses of the Kula (pratiṣṭhā kuladevīnāṁ). However, the subject of this long section is the installation (pratiṣṭhā) of Liṅgas.

[2] See chapter 4 of the KuKh for the Mālinīstava. A Māyāstava is found in chapter 24 of the KMT. Another one is found in chapter 19 of the AS. The first is translated in intro. vol. 2, p. 22-24 and the second is ibid. appendix 1.

Then a Liṅga is installed and is worshipped along with the teacher, virgins, yogis and adepts. One should satisfy the teacher generously. The sponsor should say: `Today my birth has become fruitful, today my rites have become fruitful, today I am free. O Lord, I have taken refuge (at your) feet!' Thus he manifests his desire to receive the necessary initiation that comes next. This, the 'the Initiation of Liberation which is devoid of letters' involves the merger of the 50 Principles into Śiva. These principles are listed in the sūtras concerning Emanation and Conjunction of the Principles (entries 27 and 28). (29-39)

The next topic is the installation of an idol (mūrti) of Bhairava. He is surrounded by groups of energies. Although not expressly stated, these are clearly all Yoginīs. The text begins by listing the names of these energies and their locations around the god with the names of the 17 energies of the Moon and the 12 energies of the Sun. (40-46) These are followed by the energies of Sarasvatī, Herambā, Bahuka, and Anaṅga which are 8, 4, 8 and 5, respectively. (47-52) Perhaps these are the 25 energies that are said to belong to Mālinī. We are told that Bhairava has 38 energies and Śuṇḍikā has 64. However, while the names of those of Bhairava are not listed those of Śuṇḍikā are given next. The energies of Bhairava and Mālinī together make 63. If Śuṇḍikā is added to them they make 64. Thus, with these and the energies of Śuṇḍikā, we have two sets of 64 Yoginīs.

Śuṇḍikā's energies are worshipped in groups of eight in the primary and secondary directions in relation to Bhairava's faces. Said to be 'the destroyers of death', they are, like the other groups of energies listed next, protectors (53-65).

The goddesses of the six limbs of Bhairavī's mantra that is to be deposited on the officiator's body, are listed next. They are worshipped in conjunction with the sacred seats. In this case, as we find repeatedly throughout the YKh, they are eight. Each one is worshipped with the complete set of 64 components (see below) in eight jars set in the directions. (66-69)

The goddesses of the directions, born from the eight seats, that should be worshipped in them and the primary and secondary doors (of the pavilion?), are listed next. They are also to be worshipped and installed in iconic form in towns and villages as well as the outer sacred seats and other places best suited for practice (siddhasthāna). Worshipped, they give great accomplishments (siddhi) just as, if they are not, they bring many troubles. (70-77ab)

The iconic form of eight Maṅgalā Yoginīs in the seats set in the eight directions are now described, one by one (77cd-98ab)

Next the iconic forms of ten guardians of the field (kṣetrapāla) located in the ten directions are described. They protect from obstacles in the sacred seats, fields, and towns. They are all great kings, who are very powerful and brave. They are worshipped with the five Kula substances. Each one is accompanied by the eight goddesses who guard the doors. All other guardians who reside in the places of accomplishment become propitious and give what one desires when they are worshipped. (98ab-133)

Now follow a series of mantras. These are simply written out complete in prose. The mantras are addressed to the following: 1) The Guardian of the Field (kṣetrapāla) 2) The series of Vidyās used to worship the goddesses who guard the quarters (dikpālikā) mentioned above. 3) Pañcākṣaravidyā: This consists of five Vidyās that are used to worship the Yoginīs mentioned in them. 4) Mantras to worship the eight Bhairavas and their energies that are Bhairava's eight faces. (134-136ab)

Next comes the Sūtra concerning Bhairava's Visualized form (Bhairavadhyānasūtra) (1).[1] Here Bhairava's eight faces are described first (136cd-142) and then his iconic form (mahāmūrti). (143-152ab). The next short section is called the Wheel of the Sixty-four Energies in the Eight Faces of the Great Form of Bhairava (mahāmūrtibhairavasya vaktrāṣṭake catuḥṣaṣṭi-kalācakram) (2). Said to be Vidyās (vidyārūpa), who bestow accomplishment in Kulakaula, they are arranged in eight groups of eight - one for each of Bhairava's faces - in a manner typical of the sixty-four Yoginīs. We notice that three great goddesses are amongst them namely, Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī (uppermost face), Tripurā (northern face) and Guhyeśvarī (in the north-east). (152cd-163)

The next topic is the pavilion and the firepits used for the sacrifices. This subject is discussed, we are told, in the 'great ocean' (mahārṇava) (of the original Tantra) consisting of 125,000 verses. First the ground is carefully cleaned. It should be free of grain, chaff, hair, bones, pieces of wood and stones. The ground is selected, marked out with thread and the pits are dug. Their shapes are listed and the number of offerings to be made according to the size of the pit. (164-179ab)

The triangular Yonikuṇḍa is treated in some detail. The Eight Mothers are projected and worshipped within and around the pit along with the eight sacred seats to which they belong. The Kramamaṇḍala is drawn above the pit and the Krama is worshipped there. (179cd-192ab)

The measurements of the encompassing girdles for pits of varying sizes are listed next. (192cd-198ab) This is followed by a list of the eight directions where pits can be placed with the corresponding magical acts for which they are used. These eight pits give their various accomplishments according to the different substances offered and the mantras recited. (198cd-203ab)

The deities deposited and worshipped in the quarters around the pit are listed next. These are basically the Five Nāthas who represent the Five Elements and three others. Kujā is in the middle of the Circle, along with Kubjīśa. (203cd-205)

---

[1] The Bhairavaśekharasūtra is entry 85 in the list of 107 sūtras.

Next comes the Sūtra concerning the Purification of the Fire, the Pit and the rest (Agnikuṇḍasaṁṣkārādyanukramasūtra) (3).[1] As the name suggests, this sūtra deals with the series of purifications (saṁskāra) of the firepit and the fire. These are performed after worshipping the site (vāstu) along with the deities of the doors and directions (206). They are simply listed, beginning with the examination of the ground. (207-212)

The purification and rites of transition of the fire (agnisaṁskārakalpana). The rites performed when bringing and placing the fire in the pit are hardly more than simply listed. The culmination of the rituals is the deposition of the goddess's Vidyā (here called Amāvidyā) that serves to generate the iconic form (mūrti) of the fire which is the goddess herself. (213-226)

After this sūtra come procedures (vidhi) to purify the Yonikuṇḍa (227-234ab) (yonisaṁskāravidhi), the big and little spoons used to pour clarified butter into the fire (śrukśruvasaṁskāravidhi) (234cd-238) and the clarified butter itself (ghṛtasaṁskāra) (239-244). Next comes a passage on the Koṅkaṇa Weapon (astra). The sixth and last limb of every mantra is the weapon of that mantra. This, the weapon of the goddess's thirty-two syllable mantra, is considered to be the foremost of all of them (astrarāja). It possesses the energy (tejas) of four other mantric weapons. The first of these is embodied in the god Piṅgala, whose visualized form is described. He is in the south-east. Next come the weapons of Aghora in the south, the sword (khaḍga) of Brahmā in the west and Caṇḍikā's weapon in the north-west. It protects from obstacles and calamities, drives away fierce animals, ghosts and demons and frees from sin. It is given first in code and then in full. The text enjoins that it should be repeated with every mantra or any object of meditation in order for that to be fruitful. (245-276ab)

Chapter Two: The location, visualization and repetition of the aspects of mantra (Mantrāṁśakajāpyadhyānasthāna) (5)[2]

This chapter deals with the various types of mantras. They may be male, female or neuter. They can be accomplished (siddha), young, old, lower (mandra), wicked, proud of their youth, sullied, nailed, burnt or fumigated (dhūmitā). These mantras are fruitless. They may have been paralysed, with void bodies, cruel, or tranquil (saumya), and possess the energy (tejas) of weapons. They may be of a low order (kṣudra), averse, heroic, badly established or proud of wealth. (1-4)

Then follows a list of the names of the mantras one should know. Fourteen are names of weapons, some of which are in the plural. Then comes burning,

---

[1] 44: Agnisaṁskārasūtra.

[2] 68: Jāpyasūtra; But cf. chapter 18 below.

flooding, murder, expulsion, paralysis, and deformation (vikala). A teacher should know these mantras. (5-8)

Next the goddess talks about the classes of letters (9-17ab) and then goes on to explain these terms (17cd-26ab). The three modalities (gati) of mantras namely, Āṇava, Śākta, and Śāmbhava are described next (26cd-30ab). Then six types of mantras are defined according to the placement and arrangement of their syllables (30cd-33ab).

Next the goddess explains how the form of the mantras with names for weapons, as listed above, are different from one another according to the number of syllables that constitute them. Their names are indicative of their function. For example, the `Dagger' mantra cuts up the beings who create obstacles, the 'Saw' is also used for cutting and so on. (33cd-40)

Then we are told that there are many mantras in the western Kulakaula. In order for adepts to be successful, they should be uttered correctly. Nor will they bear fruit without the teacher's Command. The utterance of a mantra which is devoid of Śakti, Vyāpinī, Samanā, and Unmanā is fruitless. It is like carrying milk in a broken vessel. (41-44)

Mantras are then variously named according to the number of syllables they contain. (45-48ab) The Vidyā of the goddess must be immersed in the energy of the Command - this is the location (sthāna) of power (śakti). It should be recited there within the Triangle in the End of the Twelve, which is the Unborn Face (ajavaktra) and the plane of the Neuter absolute. In this way, this and other mantras are successful (siddha). (48cd-69ab)

Chapter Three

This chapter begins with a short section consisting of just a list of sacred sites (6). It is not labelled separately but may well have been a sūtra. Moreover, it appears to be misplaced. It functions effectively as a preface to the exposition of the eight primary sacred seats, which are the first set described in detail in chapter fourteen and fifteen (entries (41) to (46)). Then come the secondary seats (upapīṭha). Amongst them we find Koṅkaṇa which suggests that this list was compiled before the final redaction of the YKh, which consistently praises Koṅkaṇa as the place where the MBT was revealed. Worth noting also is that Nepal is another member of this group. After the eight *saṁdoha*s one expects a set of secondary ones just as a set of secondary fields (upakṣetra) is listed after the primary ones. The goddess announces that she will list the eight Doors (dvāra) but then only the eight secondary ones are listed. It appears, therefore that the original source listed eight sets of eight of which two sets have been lost. (1-11)

Next come the Group of Eight Houses (Gṛhāṣṭaka) (6), the eight Great Places (mahāsthāna) where the Mothers (mātṛkā) reside. Although the text assures us that they exist in the outside world, it is entirely concerned with their inner location within the yogi's body. The yogic or metaphysical identity of the low-caste women who are the embodiments of the eight Mothers residing there are described in the same way (12-26). Then come the secret names of these places (27-29ab) and a description of the how the pilgrim to these places should be and how he should behave.[1] (29cd-38ab)

The Sūtra of the Method of Offering Libation (Tarpaṇavidhisūtra) (8)

The next topic is the lustration of the beings in the gathering of yogis and Yoginīs (melaka), sacred seats, fields, maṇḍala and in the middle of the Wheel. Lustration should be offered in these places with water mixed with meat, liquor, Kuśa grass and sesame seeds. The gods who are fierce, tranquil and valorous, are all pleased by this. These beings are now listed. They include the sages (muni), gods Brahmā and the rest, Bhairava and the other deities (like him), ghosts, spirits, Piśācas, Khecaras, Bhūcaras, constellations, planets, stars, snakes, Kinnaras, Rākṣasas, Vidyās, and mantras. The offering of libation gives accomplishment and destroys sin. The ancestors are helped and one attains the merit one desires. Śiva, Śakti, the energies, mantras, Vidyā, Vidyeśvaras, the Siddhas and the Lords of Kulas should all be satisfied. Then the goddesses to be satisfied include Kubjikā, the Supreme Mother, the Mother of Seed, Vajrā, Siddheśvarī, Sandhyā, Gāyatrī, the mistresses of the Kulas, Asitā, Ekavīrā, Stambhanī, Mohanī, Vasā, Puṣṭikarā, Māraṇīśī, Bhakṣaṇī, Tvaritā, Tārā, Vasundhārā, Sumaṁgalā, Siddhā, Ambikā, Brahmamaṅgalā, Trikhaṇḍā, Tripurā, Nityā, Mālinī, Kuṇḍamālikā, Dhyānā, Cāmuṇḍā, Caṇḍā, Mārtaṇḍabhairavī, Siddhayogeśvarī, Raktā, Samayā, Raudrī, Brahmī, Kunālikā, Saṁjīvinī, Candravidyā, Kālasaṁkarṣaṇī, Pratyaṁgirā, Jamā, Jambhā, Vijayā, Kaulinī, Patākinī, and all the other Nityās[2] born from the Mothers. (38cd-51ab)

Libation are made to the beings who reside in the heavens, hells and on the surface of the earth, to the heroes mounted on Bhairava with supreme, gross and subtle bodies. Also to constellations, planets, Yakṣas, Ceṭakas, ghosts, sacred seats, the four fields, Saṁdohas, Tantric reunions (cakramelāpa), the Vidyās of the twelve sequences, those who reside in the eight times eight, the proud guardians of the field, the Dikcaras - all those born of Brahmā. (Other beings include) the Sarasvatīs (note the plural!), fathers, mothers, teachers amongst the relatives of the gods, Kapila, Bodha, Pañcaśikha, those (ghosts) who are born

---

[1] See notes to KuKh 14/1-2ab.
[2] Concerning the Nityā Yoginīs, see intro. vol. 1, 229 ff..

from celestial calamities (gaganotpāta), those born from bad wombs, Gandharvas, Kinnaras and the like. (The list of beings continues to include) Ḍāmaras, Ḍākinīs, Kūṣmāṇḍās, Kaśmalācarās, Hāvyās, Hūṁḍas, Hūhuka, evil omens (śakuna), animals, birds, people, gods, and the 16 Siddhas of the Age. (51cd-62ab)

The water is mixed with sesame, cardamom (aliphala), scent from Kashmir, and flowers. It should be offered with the left hand in a copper or any other vessel that is not made of gold. All the adepts are freed from obstacles by offering lustration and all their undertakings are successful (62cd-64). This section concludes with a list of occasions when this should be done and where (65-69ab).

The Animal Sacrifice (balikrama) that is a part of the teaching concerning All the Accomplishment (attained by means of) the Sacrificial Pap (sarva-carusiddhiśāsane balikramaḥ)[1] (9)

The next topic is animal sacrifice (bali). This should be performed in the typical sites, such as cremation grounds, and solitary places, where Kaula adepts (sādhaka) observe their vows and recite mantras. It may also be offered to the Kramamaṇḍala and to a particular Liṅga worshipped by Kaulas called 'Siddhaliṅga'. This is done on special days (parvan). (69cd-73ab)

The first part of this long section deals with the offerings made to the Yoginīs in the eight sacred seats noted above. Eight vessels should be prepared and filled with, amongst other things, Kaula sacrificial substances and liquor (ali). Squares are drawn for each vessel surrounded with eight seed-syllables, one for each of the directions (73cd-82). The vessels representing the seats are then placed in them. The directions corresponding to each seat are listed and the goddess Parā who is born of the eight seats and engenders the state of pervasion is described (83-87). Note that in this case the worship of the seats does not take place in the triangle or hexagram of the maṇḍala but in the eight directions, independently of the maṇḍala. This explains why the number of seats has grown to eight. This set up mirrors in its own way Siddhānta ritual. In some Siddhānta temple rituals, beings to whom bali is offered are worshipped in a separate maṇḍala called balipīṭha. They are the kind of beings we see here - Mothers, ghosts, various types of demonic beings and wrathful deities including Bhairava himself. In the Siddhānta they are propitiated to be protectors of the main deity - the god who is worshipped in the Liṅga.

Now the goddess goes on to state the mantras for the mistresses (nāyakī) of each of the sacred seats. They all have a common preamble in which the goddess is invoked as one who destroys obstacles and bestows accomplishments.

[1] This may be one of the two balisūtras (entries 26 and 94) noted in the list of 107 sūtras.

She is requested to accept and eat the offerings of liquor and the sacrificial meat and is worshiped as the mother Mahāraktacāmuṇḍā. The section specific to the particular goddess of a sacred seat begins and ends with the syllable AIṀ (between verses 87 and 88). After the mantras comes a stotra invoking various beings to come and take the bali offering (89-100ab).[1]

The next part of this section on bali begins with a list of the beings worshipped by means of the bali offering (balyarcana). They are said to assume many animal forms, some of which are listed. Making fearsome sounds, they come to eat the bali. If they are not satisfied the entire nation is in turmoil. (100cd-102)

Now follows a list of omens with their consequences. The bali offering is laid on the ground, the animals that may come to eat it and the directions they may come from are listed with their significance. Then the guardians of the directions are listed systematically from east to north-east ending with the guardian of the field in the middle who is `extremely frightening' (sudāruṇa). (103ab-112)

Next comes a list of the animals that should be offered on particular lunar days (balikrama) (113-117) followed by a list of the benefits of making these offerings. Generally these are longevity and freedom from diseases and evil influences both planetary and supernatural. That such rites were meant for kings and those who aspired for political power is evident here. Thus, we are told that a person who makes these offerings obtains a great kingdom. Moreover, all mantras become propitious. Thus, by implication, one who is already a king manages to bring his subjects and others under his control. (118-130)

The text moves on to deal briefly with how and where bali is offered on the Great Night (mahārātri), first to the three Transmissions and then Gaṇeśa, Vaṭuka and the Wheel of the Mothers. One should worship (anuṣṭhāna) by means of the bali offerings to the sacred seats (pīṭhabaliprayoga). The text concludes that 'once known the purification of the mantras, one should begin to practice Yoga.' (131-141ab)

The Sūtra concerning the Sacrifice of the Victim which is a part of the Prescription concerning the Sacrificial Pap (carukavidhāne paśuyāgavidhi-sūtram) (10)[2]

The god asks about the practice (sādhana) that is not harmful to living beings. The goddess goes on to talk again about the ritual offering of meat, wine and caru.

---

[1] See notes to KuKh 11/33cd-34ab.
[2] This may be one of the two balisūtras (entries 26 and 94) noted in the list of 107 sūtras.

Caru is normally simply rice boiled with milk or just water. Although it may also be more elaborately prepared for Siddhānta ritual, it is invariably vegetarian and of relatively secondary importance. Here, as in other Bhairava and Yoginī cults, it is mostly cooked meat, mixed with garlic and onions. Despite the common Brahminical aversion to such food, it is considered to be the most spiritually valuable. As the Tantra says: 'it is equal to human flesh (nāraja) and there is nothing as special as it is.'[1] Conscious of the common rules regulating food, the goddess begins by saying that `one should ingest what should not be ingested - there is no defect ....'.[2] One should do this in accord with the ritual procedure (krama) and make the bali offering. (141cd-144)

The text goes on to describe how to prepare the maṇḍala and the mantras projected into it. One should bring a sacrificial animal (paśu) there and its vital constituents (dhātu) should be offered to the goddess in the prescribed order and manner. In this way the officiant is freed of evil influences. However, the text warns that he who slays a victim without observing this sacrificial procedure does not get the accomplishment of either this or the other world. Another ominous warning hints at human sacrifice. We are told that he who kills a boy by mistake as a bali offering gets no fruit thereby and what good work he may have done before is destroyed. (145-159ab)

The sūtra concludes that eating the caru in this Age of Strife is like drinking the Soma of the Vedic sacrifice. It warns that it should be kept secret and not be given to Tāntrikas, that is, to those who belong to the Tantric sects that do not perform animal sacrifices and consume the sacrificial meat. (159cd-165ab)

The Sūtra of Question and Answer (Praśnottarasūtrādhikāra) (11)

Despite the name of this sūtra it consists solely of a long series of questions that, although not exhaustive, cover most of the important matters taught in the MBT. The MBT refers to this as the first sūtra of the compilation (saṁhitā).[3] This could indeed have been the case. The rest of the saṁhitā being dedicated, in theory at least, to replying to these questions. Is this sūtra related to the Sūtra of the Sixteen Questions (Ṣoḍaśapraśnasūtraka) that is entry 105 in the list of 107 sūtras? (165cd-213)

---

[1] YKh (1) 11/12.
[2] YKh (1) 11/55cd-74ab justifies the use of meat and the way it should be consumed.
[3] The last two lines of this sūtra say: 'This is the sūtra of questions and answers. It is the first one of the compilation and is justified by experience (sapratyaya). He who knows it is a teacher in the Kulakrama of the western tradition.'
iti praśnottaraṁ (k: prasnoṁtaraṁ) sūtraṁ saṁhitādyaṁ sapratyayam |
yo vetti (k: veṁti) paścimāmnāye (k: -ya) sa ācāryaḥ kulakrame |

The Sūtra of the Twelve Verses concerning the (Lord of the) Tree (Vṛkṣadvādaśakasūtra) (12)

This sūtra (which extends from verse 215 to 230) is repeated again further ahead[1] but is not in the list of 107 sūtras. It is also found in the KuKh.[2] The reader is referred to the notes there for details. The sūtra describes Ādinātha, also called Vṛkṣanāyaka or Ciñcanātha. He is swathed in the great mantras and energies of the Kubjikā Tantras. Enveloped by the 81 pādas of Navātman, which are the energies of the teachers, he is in their midst as the archetypical teacher.

The Sūtra of the Transmission of the Teacher (Gurukramasūtra) (13)

The G*urukramasūtra* begins after the Vṛkṣadvādaśikasūtra, coupling them together. The former, we are told by the god in the introductory verses, deals with the Āṇava form of the teacher and this sūtra with the Śākta and Śāmbhava. However, this may well just be a devise to link two separate sūtras together. Thus, in the introductory verses at the very beginning of the next sūtra, we are told that the Transmission the teacher is fourfold not threefold. Moreover, although two forms of the teacher are described analogous to those of the deity namely - sakala and niṣkala - these two aspects are not explicitly said to be Śākta and Śāmbhava. The entire sūtra is quoted in the notes to chapter 51 of the KuKh to which the reader is referred. (231-295)

Chapter Four

The Sūtra concerning the God (Devasūtra) (14)

The Gurusūtra and the Devasūtra are paired together in the list of 107 sūtras (entries 18 and 19) and, continguous, they do indeed mirror each other in content even though the manuscripts indicate that a new chapter begins here. Just as the previous sūtra described the metaphysical identity of the teacher, this one goes on to describe that of the deity. As one would expect, the two descriptions are similar in many essential respects and are closely linked. The sūtra acknowledges this, explaining that liberation can only come from both - the teacher and the god - together (2) because as gurudeva they are essentially one. Thus he is said to sit 'on the seat of Gurunātha' (1-4)

The god here is called Śrīdeva, an echo of the name Śrīnātha, which is what the god is most commonly called when dialoguing with the goddess. His

[1] See YKh (1) 16/236cd-249.
[2] KuKh 51/1-14ab.

iconic form (mūrti) is threefold: Supreme (parā), middling (parāparā) and inferior (aparā). While reminding one once again of the Trika roots of the Kubjikā tradition, in this context this threefold division is derived from his three forms as both god and teacher in the three lineages that are said to flow from him. He is depicted as residing in the Void within the Triangle above the head (5-13) The sūtra concludes:

> (This is) where everything consists of Space (ākāśa) and is the Cavity (vivara) that is the nectar of Fire (vāḍava). There, in the Void above, is the Supreme God. (There) the light of the Moon (candrāṁśu) certainly oozes (nectar). (The energy of the) Full Moon (pūrṇamāsā) is present (there) as the teacher's being (gurutva) on the plane of the Skyfarer.[1]

Concerning Kula and Kaula

Next comes a hymn to Kaula. Composed in nine verses it is called the Nine Kaulas (navakaula). Kaula is the transcendent, apophatic absolute 'devoid of own (phenomenal) being' (niḥsvabhāva) beyond all predication as either being or non-being, sensations, the Wheels and foundation etc. and mantras. (14-25ab)

This followed by the Eight Kulas (kulāṣṭau). Here Kula is presented as the Nameless - the supreme principle into which all the lower ones dissolve away. It is the goddess Kuṇḍalinī who is the 'essence of Kaula'. As the Octet of Kula, that is, the Eight Mothers, it is of eight kinds.[2] (25cd-42)

The Sūtra concerning the Lineage of Siddhas (Siddhasantānasūtra) (15)[3]

This sūtra describes the adept who is practicing correctly (43-50), one who is not (51-56ab), the accomplished adept - Siddha (56cd-68) and one who is not (51-56ab). The sūtra ends with a list of sacred sites best suited for practice (siddhasthāna), concluding that those born in these places are easily successful. Those who are not, even though they belong to this Kulakaula do not make

---

[1] yatrākāśamayaṁ [k, gh: -mṛyaṁ] sarvaṁ vivaraṁ vāḍavāmṛtam ||
tatrordhve khe paraṁ devaṁ candrāṁśu kṣarate dhruvam |
pūrṇamāsā [k, kh, gh: pūrṇā-] gurutvena saṁsthitā khecare [k, kh, gh: -rai] pade ||
YKh (1) 4/11cd-12.

[2] See intro. vol. 2, p. 291-296 where these passages are translated.

[3] The list refers to two *Santānasūtra*s (entries 7 and 8). A different Santānasūtra is found in chapter seventeen of the KuKh, of which the SamP supplies a brief commentary. Another Santānasūtra is found in KuKh 53 which is probably drawn from YKh (2) 34 (see below, p. 198).

contact with the Śāmbhava (plane) (70-75). Chapters nine and twenty-five deal with the same subject.[1]

The next topic is the Octet of Kula consisting of the group of eight types of Yoginīs (yoginyaṣṭakulāṣṭaka).[2] They are listed first along with the corresponding gestures made when worshipping them (76-82ab). Next come the occasions and fruits of the worship of each type. As is normally the case with such deities, the Tantra concludes by warning that although they bestow boons when they are worshipped, if they are not, they cause trouble (82cd-85).

After a brief digression concerning the worship of those born in the Yoginīkula namely the teacher, initiates and Kumārīs (86-96ab), the eight gestures belonging to the Yoginīkula are listed. This is followed by a list of the psychological categories corresponding to the eight groups of Yoginīs namely: 1) Ego 2) Mind 3) Intellect 4) Delusion 5) Deviousness (kauṭilya) 6) Deceitfulness (dambhaka) 7) Great Delusion and 8) Death (kṛtānta). They form the throne (siṁhāsana) of the deity associated with the five seats consisting of Ananta, Kūrma, Māyā, Arca, and Pretaka (96cd-103ab).

After forming the seat, one can begin the five day rite of adoration, the main elements of which are described next. It begins by making a tilaka with the help of the Klinnā, otherwise known as Kālī, type of Yoginī. She is dark with black eyes. Her thighs are like that of a crow and she has a large belly. One should take her sexual fluids (kṣataja) along with musk (rocanā) and make a beautiful tilaka from it (103cd-107).

This is followed by the worship of Klinnā's Wheel (108-111). Next the goddess goes on to list the names of the mantras used to worship each group of Yoginīs (112-115).

Then the goddess declares that the following four goddesses, who are identified with four of the eight Yoginīs, reside in the body of the adept: 1) Kākinī 2) Śākinī 3) Bhāruṇḍī and 4) Cakriṇī. They are then described one by one (116-128) and the months when they should be worshipped are listed (129-130ab). They are worshipped in the four main sacred seats progressively from Oḍḍiyāna onwards (130cd-131). This passage ends with an admonition to worship the various kinds of members of the Kula, including the Yoginīs. Content, they will give the caruka by which the adept attains the state of Flight, supreme and inferior. In the form of time, the Yoginī differentiates (all things) (kalanī). She is said to be their energies and manifests (kalayantī) the entire universe (132-137ab).

---

[1] See summary of chapter twenty-five where the three versions are compared.
[2] Cf. YKh (1) 25/58 ff.

The Sūtra concerning the Sacrificial Food (Carukādhikārasūtra) - the Yoginī's Milk (16).

The next topic is the sacrificial food (caruka). Through this the adepts achieve success. The gods suffer for its sake. Now comes the following enigmatic line: `Destruction is milk and has milk as its root. One should place milk in milk'.[1] This is the unequalled secret. It is made in the breasts of Yoginīs and so one should always drink this milk. The Self is purified by it. It always nourishes and is auspicious. The Flower (i.e. menstruation) is generated from the milk of the four sacred seats. One should practice (the rite) with that. Milk flows speedily, while destruction (kṣaya) is the Kākinīkula. It is emanated by the movement of the Moon (soma). One should abandon the movement of the Sun. The secretion (kṣara) should be united with the secretion (i.e. blood should be mixed with milk). The juice (rasa) has as its root bodily secretion. By this method, one certainly attains the state of Flight. In six months one attains success in the sacred seat. In a year, one no longer suffers, in three, one attains union (melāpaka), in six the state of Flight, and that of Bhairava in eight, in six the immortal and undecaying. The sūtra concludes that if the adept desires accomplishment (siddhi), he should wander about at night, practicing the observance of the Rule (samayācāra) (137cd-146).

The Sūtra concerning the Secret Gestures and Language (Mudrāchomā-saṅketakādhikārasūtra) (17)[2]

This sūtra deals with the secret sign language (chomāsaṁketabhāṣā) Yoginīs make in an assembly where they meet their male counterparts (melāpa). Yogis may travel great distances to attend these meetings, where they acquire the knowledge of the Yoginīs. They take place in the sacred seats and other sacred Kaula places, at crossroads, in cremation grounds, and under solitary trees, where the eight types of Yoginīs come in divine form and tell their devotees what is auspicious and inauspicious for their future. (147-150)

The secret gestures (mudrā) Yoginīs make when adepts meet them in these places and what they mean are listed next.[3] (151-174ab)

---

[1] kṣīramūlaṁ kṣayaṁ kṣīraṁ kṣīraṁ kṣīre niyojayet

[2] Bhāṣā and Chomā sūtras are listed together as 14 and 15. In the same way in chapter 42 of the KuKh two short passages concerning secret language (*bhāṣ*ā) and signs (chomā) follow directly one after the other (KuKh 42/26cd-60ab and 42/60cd-64ab). However, they are not called sūtras there. YKh (1) (4/147 ff.) relates the two by referring to them together as the Chomāsaṁketa (Secret Convention).

[3] See KuKh vol. 8, appendix 4, where this passage is quoted in full.

Concerning Vakrā in the Tradition of the Six Philosophies (Ṣaḍdarśanāmnāye vakrādhikāraḥ) (18-23)

The first part of this long section is concerned with the relative grading of other schools in relation to the Kubjikā Tantras. These include the six systems (ṣaḍidarśana) – Bauddha, Jaina, Vaidika (bhaṭṭa), Saura, Vaiṣṇava, and Śaiva. Along with them there are four Kaula schools - the *siṁhadarśana*s – graded in a hierarchy up to the Kubjikā Tantras. There the goddess is Parā who is the mother of all the systems (darśana) and the (ultimate) end (avadhi) of the path of liberation (174cd-193ab). The six systems are described next in more detail. At the end comes the statement: 'This is the group of six systems deployed in a (graded) sequence of authority. The remaining (lower) principles are not established in authority. (He who follows them) travels from below upwards and one who is above does not go down. He who knows (this) progressively upward union (yoga) is a (true) teacher.' (193cd-215ab)

After an introductory presentation of the four Kaula traditions (āmnāya) (215cd-223) come a series of sūtras dealing successively with the western (paścima) (18), eastern (pūrva) (19),[1] southern (20) and northern traditions (uttarodaya) (21) in detail. These are completed by the Śāmbhavakramasūtra (22) which gives a concise description of the Śāmbhava tradition.[2] At the end of the Transmental, it is the highest plane of existence. Beyond the fifty worlds the Śambhava Lord resides there with Śāmbhavīśakti. He is the final dawning of reality (paścimodaya)[3] (224-276ab).

After this sūtra a few verses conclude that the western House is the Śāmbhava House and something is said about the god Śambhu and his role in the origin of all four Kaula traditions, especially the one of the goddess Kubjikā, his wife and Dakṣa's daughter in a previous life (276cd-289ab). (23)

The rest of the chapter is dedicated to a few points concerning the basic liturgy of the particular Kramamaṇḍala (pūjācakrakrama) taught in the YKh (1) in eight-four parts. The qualifications required to see and worship it are listed first. The Yoga of the Wheel should be practiced by the Kaula adept in the usual solitary and sacred sites. The magical acts related to the directions are listed next and the ones that are achieved by worshipping the Krama during the three times of the day (sandhyā). The Tantra stresses that knowledge of the tradition and wealth

---

[1] The passage in which the pūrvāmnāya is described must also have been a sūtra, although it is not specifically labelled as such. The colophon simply says: iti pūrvagṛhāmnāyam. As these traditions are also called Houses (gṛha) perhaps the gṛhasūtra which is 84 in the list of 107 sūtras consisted of all these sūtras together.

[2] This sūtras are translated in intro. vol. 2, p. 379-380.

[3] tatrasthaṁ śāmbhavaṁ nāthaṁ [kh: nāthāṁ] paścimāt paścimodayam || YKh (1) 4/274cd.

is attained on the plane beyond thought constructs. Presumably then success in achieving these worldly magical goals is attained on the lower level where thought constructs operate (289cd-315ab). The offerings are listed next. The consumption of sacrificial food – caru – consisting of liquor and buffalo is especially important. One should eat fish, liquor and cooked meat (pala) and drink the 'three kinds of wine' (surā) with all one's feeling (sarvabhāva) without being stingy,[1] as directed by the teacher. By just eating this way one attains equality with Bhairava.[2] Here again the stress is on transcending thought, which in this case is that concerning eating these things. For as the Tantra teaches: 'The bondage of the fool who has (many) thoughts (vikalpasahita) is not destroyed anywhere.'[3] (315cd-324) The chapter concludes with the importance of worshipping an eight year old virgin (kumārī) as Parā and a six year old boy as Vaṭuka (325-329).

Chapter Five: The Tradition concerning the Assembly (Cakrāmnāya) (24)[4]

The teachings of this chapter are said to belong to the previous Kaula tradition (pūrvāmnāya) (1). They were first imparted by Uḍīśa who learnt them from the goddess in the house of Dakṣa. The previous tradition is also related, as usual in the Kubjikā Tantras, to Matsyendra (here called Macchanda). In the form of a fish he ate the remains of the sacrificial food (kaulikacaru) offered in the assembly (cakra) that was thrown into the ocean of milk just as, according to the legend, he swallowed the Kula scripture.[5] Thus, these teachings are singularly important and fundamental.

This sūtra explains how the cakra is to be worshipped. Here, as in many other instances, the use of the term cakra is intentionally ambiguous. It can mean either a sacred diagram in which divine beings are worshipped or an assembly of male and female initiates. That the latter is also meant here is apparent from the opening injunction which states that the Kaula partner (dūtī) should enjoy sex (rameta) in order to obtain the sacrificial substance (dravyārthe) by which the Siddha is worshipped first in the (rites of the) sacred days, on pilgrimage, wandering at night and the Mahāsamaya gathering when the sacrificial food (caru) is eaten. In this way all (one's) works become successful. (2-7ab)

The Five Siddhas of the five main sacred seats are worshipped first, then eight, one at each of the eight watches of the day. The Mahābhairava couple are

---

[1] āharet sarvabhāvena vittaśāṭyavyavivarjitaḥ [k, kh, gh: -śāvya-] | YKh (1) 4/318ab.

[2] tena prāśitamantreṇa bhairavasamatām̐ [k, kh, gh: bhairave-] vrajet | Ibid. 4/322ab.

[3] vikalpasahite mūrkhe [k, kh, gh: mūrkhai] na pāśo nāśyate [k, kh, gh: paśodrasaye] kvacit || Ibid. 4/324cd.

[4] The Cakrasūtra (MS K: Bahusūtra) is entry 54 in the list of 107 sūtras.

[5] See intro. vol. 2, 320? ff..

worshipped in the seat of Oṁkāra for seven nights and then all the initiates and teachers of the Śrīkrama and beings in the 'eight times eight' sacred seats. Maṅgalā is in the middle of the Wheel who is worshipped by Krodhamuni, that is, Uḍīśa.[1] Possibly this is the Siddha to which the above passage refers. They are worshipped in the middle of the Wheel of Eight times Eight sacred seats where the initiates, teachers and Yoginīs along with the Kulas of the Śrīkrama are worshipped.

Maṅgalā is also worshipped in the Kālīkrama in the centre of a Wheel of Sixty-four Yoginīs. Although this Wheel is quite different both in content and structure, the archetype is clearly the earlier Wheel which is the core of the cult of the BY.

Caste distinctions are abolished, meat and wine is offered and consumed and participants sing and dance. Most important of all is the consumption of the Kaulika sacrificial pap (caru) by whose power (prabhāva) spiritual knowledge and bliss is transmitted through the Kula of the line of teachers (pāramparya). (7cd-69)

Chapter Six: The Tradition of the Worship of the Wheels in the Non-duality of Accomplishment and the Means (to its attainment) in Relation to (Kaula) Practice (caryādhikāre siddhisādhanādvaite cakrapūjāmnāyaḥ) (25)[2]

This is one homogenous chapter in which sixty Wheels of Worship (pūjācakra) are briefly described. They consist mostly of Yoginīs and, in lesser numbers, Kulācāryas, Siddhas and guardians including Vaṭuka, Kumāra and Bhairava. The great majority of them serve to protect the worshipper. A few are also meant for more spiritual attainments like the Wheel that Destroys Sin (pāpaghnacakra), concerning which the Tantra says that one should always drink the heroes' drink (vīrapāna) (that is, wine) there and thus gradually attain liberation.[3] It is worshipped to gain knowledge. Another interesting example is the Wheel of the Great Calamities (mahādurghaṭṭakacakra), also called the Wheel of the Universal Monarch (viśveśvaracakra). This is a simplified version of the main maṇḍala of the Brahmayāmala, which houses the four goddesses, Raktā, Karālā, Caṇḍākṣī, and Mahocchūṣmā, along with the eight Bhairavas and the divine

[1] Concerning the identity of Krodha Muni, that is, the sage Durvāsa, with Uḍīśa, see intro. vol. 2, p. 440.

[2] Was this chapter originally the Cakrasūtra (entry 54) or part of it. Was it the Caryāsūtra (entry 32)?

[3] vīrapānaṁ [ṅ: -pāna] pibennityaṁ vrajenmokṣaṁ [k, kh, gh: dvrajen-] śanaiḥ śanaiḥ ||
*jñānasya [k, kh, gh: jñātasya] prāpaṇārthe tu pāpaghnaṁ [ṅ: pā * ghnaṁ] pūjayed bhṛśaṁ* |
Ibid. 6/127cd-128ab.

couple in the centre. It is said to be sustained within the Accomplishment of Desire (icchāsiddhi).[1] An army is paralysed by the power of this Wheel. (1-170)

Chapter Seven: The Attainment of the Fruits of Making Gifts and the like (Dānādiphalāvāpti) (26)

The merit of making a gift to Yoginīs, Bhairavīs, heroes, Vaṭukas, Kumārikās and, in particular, Krama yogis is like feeding millions of Brahmins learned in the Veda. The same basic formula in relation to offerings made to followers of other schools applies to extolling the offering of a range of gifts to initiates (kramika) and yogis of the Yoginīkrama. 'The fruit gained by those who fall in battle during a lunar or solar eclipse (and have died thus) without a thought, is gained by washing the feet (pādaśoca) of the members of the tradition (kramika)'.[2] Other meritorious actions include seeing their left over food (ucchiṣṭa), filling their cup with liquor and offering gold, elephants and land to those who protect the Śrīkrama. (1-35ab)

Next comes a long description of how the deities and other divine beings and the eight sacred seats are present in the body. The fifty worlds and countless Siddhaliṅgas are in the heart of a Kulācārya and the energy of the liturgy (krama) of eight times eight sacred sites is in every pore of his skin. In this way, the Tantra concludes, the teacher is Bhairava directly visible who abides as the Yoginī, the supreme energy who bestows Innate Bliss (sahajānanda). (35cd-58)

Chapter Eight: Concerning Penance (Prāyaścittādhikāra) (30)

The first two sūtras of this chapter are the Sūtra* of Emanation (Sṛṣṭisūtra) (27) and the Sūtra* of the Conjunction of the Principles (tattvasaṁghātasūtra) (28) (1-24). The order of emanation and withdrawal of a series of fifty metaphysical principles are listed in these sūtras.[3] They mark the stages in the process of initiation which is one of progressive merger of lower, gross principles into higher, subtle ones. Perhaps this is why the order in which

---

[1] raktā karālacaṇḍākṣī mahocchūṣmā [k, gh: mahosūṣmā] caturthikā [k, ṅ: -kāṁ] |
bhairavāṣṭakasaṁyuktā [ṅ: -saṁyuktāṁ] yugmaṁ [ṅ: yugma] caivāparaṁ smṛtam ||
mahādurghaṭṭakaṁ [kh: -dūrghaṭūkaṁ; gh: -durghadrakaṁ; ṅ: -durghaṭakaṁ] cakraṁ icchāsiddhyāvadhiṣṭhitam [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -siddhyāmadhiṣṭitaṁ] | Ibid. 6/93-94ab.
[2] candrasūryasya grahaṇe saṅgrāme sanmukhāhatāḥ ||
patitā nirvikalpāś ca yat phalaṁ tais [k, kh, gh: tes] tu prāpyate |
tat phalaṁ pādaśocena [k, kh, gh: pādaśaicaina; ṅ: pādaśaucena] kramikānāṁ kuleśvara [gh: -raḥ; ṅ: -rā] || Ibid. 7/29cd-30.
[3] The various systems of principles (tattva) found in the Kubjikā Tantras is discussed in relation to chapter 13 of the KuKh where a system of just 25 principles is taught.

they are listed in the first sūtra is reversed (vyutkrama). Although the two series are similar there are also substantial differences. Thus it seems that this is an attempt to align two different schools. The first series ends with ‘Reality’ which is both transcendent and immanent (parāpara). The penultimate principle in both cases is the Transmental:

> The (state) ‘With Mind’ reaches the Transmental and the Transmental (energy) reaches Bhairava and Bhairava attains (his transcendental aspect) Beyond Mind. There everything dissolves away. This Principle by which everything (samasta) is pervaded, is Unmaneśvara. It is the divine plane of the Neuter (napuṁsaka), free of merit and sin, loss and enjoyment, white and black, coming and going, what is to be taken up and rejected, Being and Non-being, and ritual - that is the supreme reality according to the Krama teaching. The scripture teaches that there is nothing higher than this.[1]

These sūtras are followed by the Sūtra* concerning Omens (Ariṣṭādhikārasūtra) (29) with which they have no apparent connection. First a number of omens are listed. When these things take place, ‘everything’, as the Tantras says, ‘becomes upside down’ (viparīta) (25-34ab). The goddess goes on to explain the remedies for these bad omens and the means by which negative forces can be quelled (śānti). For example, she begins by talking about lightning. This is dealt with systematically by going through the directions around the village or town where it may fall, the consequences and the rites of pacification (śānti) that should be performed (34cd-49). Again, if a fire spontaneously breaks out in a village without apparent cause, it is remedied by offering human flesh or beef (mahāphalgu) into a triangular firepit. Many bad omens are remedied by making 100,000 fire offerings in a cremation ground with the three kinds of

---

[1] samanā [ṅ: svamatā] conmanāṁ [k, kh: -naṁ; gh: comanaṁ; ṅ: vonmanaṁ] yāti [gh: yāṁti] unmanā bhairave pade ||
bhairavaṁ conmanaṁ [k, kh, gh: -nā] yāti tatra sarvaṁ vilīyate |
*yena vyāptaṁ [k, kh, gh: -pta] samastaṁ vai tattvedaṁ [ṅ: tatvaṁvau] conmaneśvaram [gh: conmanośvaraṁ; ṅ: * nmanaiśvaraṁ]* ||
napuṁsakapadaṁ divyaṁ [ṅ: vāvyaṁ] puṇyapāpavivarjitam |
hānabhogavinirmuktaṁ [k, kh, gh: dāna-] śvetakṛṣṇavivarjitam || [This and following two lines missing in MS ṅ.]
gamāgamavinirmuktaṁ heyopādeyavarjitam | [ṅ: nāsti]
bhāvābhāvavinirmuktaṁ kriyākāṇḍavivarjitam ||
hānabhogavinirmuktaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: dāna-] taṁ [gh: nāsti] paraṁ kramaśāsane [k, kh, gh: kramaśāśane; ṅ: -sāsane] |
asmāt [k, kh, gh: asyāt] parataraṁ [gh: parattaraṁ] nāsti iti śāstrasya [k, kh, gh: sāstrasya] niścayaḥ [k, kh, gh: -yaḥ] || Ibid. 8/20cd-24.

honey, liquor, meat, and human fat (mahāghṛta) along with bones as fuel and milk (50-64ab). As usual the benefits are listed next. Amongst them are victory in battle and fame in the king's court (dvāra). (64cd-71ab)

Next comes a section concerning penance (30) to atone for transgression of the rules and so maintain the spiritual status achieved through initiation. By doing this one attains accomplishment (siddhi) and by omission, bad karma (duḥkṛta). The goddess now gives a long list of bad actions and then prescribes the number of times the mantra should be repeated, which generally runs into many millions. The time to do it, the goddess says again and again, is during the full moon (71cd-150ab).

Chapter Nine: The Sūtra of the Practice (ācāra) of Siddhas and Yoginīs (Siddhayoginyācārasūtra) (31)

This sūtra deals with the various types of initiates and those who are fit to be associated with the tradition. The same subject is treated again in chapter 25. The first topic is the moral and spiritual qualities of a teacher (deśika) and what he should know. This includes knowledge of the Tantras of other schools (paratantrajña). Moreover, he is said to be 'intent on wandering to the sacred seats' (pīṭhabhramaṇatatpara) thus stressing again their importance and, above all, their literal outer existence (1-15). Then come the characteristics of a false teacher (16-23), those of a true and false Yoginī (24-34), the types of initiates (35-39),[1] the virgin boy - Kumāra and girl - Kumārī who embody the deity (40-48). The sūtra closes with an assurance that the initiate is free to eat and drink whatever is offered in the rite. The power of the sacrificial pap (caru) is extolled as a protection against witches (śākinī) and demonic beings and the means by which the adept attains the plane of the Skyfarer. (49-53)

Next comes the Sūtra* of the Great (Bhairava)[2] Couple (Mahāyāmalasūtra) (32). The benefits obtained by the power of the Wheel (cakraprabhāvataḥ) are listed first. These range from freedom from obstacles to liberation and a long life free of disease. (54-57) This maṇḍala, consisting of Eight times Eight seats is, presumably, the main one. It consists of the group of eight Bhairavas (beginning with) Asitāṅga and the group of eight Mothers beginning with Brahmāṇī. In the centre is Svacchandabhairava and Bhairavī thus confirming that the eight headed Bhairava of this section of the MBT is a form of Svacchanda. (58-65ab)

---

[1] See KuKh 31/6-7ab and notes.

[2] This short sūtra of eleven verses is introduced with the words: Next I will talk about the great Bhairava couple atordhvaṁ saṁpravakṣyāmi mahābhairavayāmalam YKh (1) 9/54ab.

This chapter closes with a vidhāna that is, a 'method' or 'prescription' namely, the Method of Worshipping Śikhārāja (Śikhārājavidhāna) (33). Śikhārāja is another form of Svacchandabhairava. He is the deity of Kubjikā's topknot - śikhā - hence this name. His mantra, called Śikhākāmeśvara, is of three kinds - Navātman, the three syllable mantra and the Mantrarāja of thirty-two syllables. Thus it is said to 'take three steps' (trivikrama). This mantra is the lord of the Bhairavakrama accompanied by the sequence of eight wheels and 64 energies. The Mantrarāja is the mantra of Svacchanda consisting of 32 syllables. It is said to be 'mounted on the plane of Tantric practice' (tantrācārapadārūḍha) and is 'devoid of the Kulakrama'. The Tantra warns that 'on this, the Siddha Path, it is fruitless (if) worshipped according to Tantric practice (tantrācāra)'.[1] The Five Praṇavas are added to the beginning and end to 'unlock it' and remedy this defect. Then it is also called Ekavīra because by repeating the Śikhānātha mantra 100,000 times one wanders about freely on the earth up to the end of the fifty worlds[2] and one becomes a Solitary Hero (ekavīra). He can also be coupled with the 'Bhairavī of 32 syllables', that is, the Vidyā of Kubjikā who, accompanied by 32 attendents (dūtī), is emanation.

Worship of Śikhānātha leads to the liberated condition of flight by the practice of Kramayoga. Otherwise, by repeating the mantra with 100,000 fire offerings the adept becomes the 'king of the world'. (65cd-116ab)

The 32 names of Śikhānātha are listed next. The more interesting ones are: Aṣṭavaktra, the Ocean of the Sixty-four Energies (catuḥṣaṣṭkalārṇava), Tumburu, Bahurūpa, Vyādhibhakṣa, Candragarbha, and Amṛtīśa (116cd-120ab). The first two relate him to the maṇḍala of the YKh, the third to the Tantras of the Left Current (vāmasrotas), the following two to Svacchandabhairava and the last two to Mṛtyuñjaya. Thus he includes the main Bhairavas of the Bhairava Tantras and identifies them directly with the Bhairava of the MBT.

Next come the names of the 32 Bhairavas and Dūtīs who, embodying the syllables of the mantras of the couple, are their attendents. (120cd-128ab) They are worshipped in a Wheel of thirty-two spokes. There is also one couple, namely, Śiva and Śakti. Then, in the middle, one should offer sacrifice to the Solitary Hero, the lord of the eight Śivas. The mantra may also be written and tied around the head. (128cd-142ab)

---

[1] niṣphalaṁ [k: bhiḥphalaṁ] siddhamārge.asmin [k: mārgeśmiṁ] tantrācāraprapūjitam |
YKh (1) 9/75ab.

[2] See note 80 to KuKh 2/40-41.

Chapter Ten: The Sūtra concerning the Krama (Kramādhikārasūtra)[1] (34)

This short sūtra is concerned with the Krama ritual (kramayāga). This is the actual worship of the Krama (kramārcana) of the goddess which should not be confused with the previous rites that are a part of the Bhairava Krama. This sūtra lists the places where it can be performed (kramasthāna) and the occasions (1-11ab). It can be done either to grace (anugraha, dakṣiṇa) or chastise (nigraha). Listed next are the directions in which the worshipper should face according to the various occasions, places and purposes. Amongst the latter may also be that of the destruction of one's enemies, paralysis and enmity between opposing parties and countering others' magic (11cd-17). It concludes with an admonition to distinguish between one who performs the rites according to the tradition and so is a true member of it (kramika) and one who does not and so is devoid of the Krama (akramin) (18-28ab).

Chapter Eleven: The Sūtra of the Sacrifice concerning the Wheel (Cakrādhikārayāgasūtra)[2] (35)

This sūtra does not describe the rite, as its name suggests, only what is considered to be the most important part of it. This is the sacrificial food - caru. The caru prepared for Siddhānta rites is generally rice boiled in water or milk. Sometimes, it is prepared more elaborately, but even so is always strictly vegetarian. In this case, it is prepared from meat. Accordingly, the sūtra begins by listing the animal flesh and other ingredients of the caru (1-6ab), the times to make and consume it (6cd-8ab), and the relative value of each ingredient. We are told that 'onion is said to be equal to human flesh (nāraja) and there is nothing as special as it is'[3] (8cd-12). Next comes a list of the kinds of meat suited for a particular month (13-17ab), a recipe for the preparation of caru, to whom and how it should be offered (17cd-24), and its power (25-29). After listing to whom it should and should not be given and again extolling its benefits (30-35ab), the sūtra continues with the definition of fourteen names for meat (35cd-55ab). This is followed by a long passage admonishing the correct use of the caru with the right attitude. We even find a few chilling hints of cannibalism:

---

[1] An independent text called Kramasūtrādhikāra exists in manuscript (see bibliography). It is quite different from this short sūtra of just 27 verses. The former contains, amongst other things, the Root Sūtra.

[2] If we emend yogādhikāraka, which is entry 77 of the list of sūtras, to Y*āgādhikāra*, it refers to this sūtra.

[3] palāṇḍur [k, kh: palāṁḍuṁ; gh: palāṁḍu; ṅ: parāṁdu] nārajaṁ tulyaṁ viśeṣaṁ [k, kh, gh: viśaiṣaṁ] naiva vidyate | Ibid. 11/12ab.

> One should offer human flesh to the Liṅga and the idols. If one offers (it) on the sacred days, that fierce one (is capable of) destroying (the entire) universe. (This should be done) once he has offered it to one who is well established in the Great Rule as (an offering) to please (him). One should not eat it out of greed. By viewing (the offering) as a fettered soul would, it does not give success. One should always take up (the flesh) of a man (pauruṣeya), otherwise (one goes to the) three hells. A sinner should not eat the meat (pala) of yogis (or that of) a woman. This would destroy all accomplishment (siddhi), (however) great, earnt in seven lives. (The flesh of a) hero fallen in battle and cooked on a funeral pyre is always auspicious. It should not be spoilt during the sacrifice and it bestows boons in (the gatherings of) initiates (samaya). Or else one should certainly kill (at least) one śūdra in the course of a sacrifice (paśuyāga). If one desires long life and success (siddhi), one should not eat children and women (or the flesh) of ascetics, those who observe vows and Brahmins.[1]

Finally the sūtra (74cd-83) prescribes how to worship the eight Mothers with the caru prepared from the flesh of various animals. These include the flesh of a king. This is the secret Octet of Kula, also called the Octet of Pratyaṅgīryā - the apotropaic form of the goddess. The sūtra concludes: 'It should be

---

[1] liṅgasya pratimānāṁ ca nṛpalaṁ ca pradāpayet ||
sa [k, gh: saṁ] raudraḥ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: raudraṁ] saṁhared viśvaṁ [k, kh, gh: visvaṁ] yāvat parvena dāpayet |
datvā tuṣṭipradānena mahāsamayasaṁsthite ||
nāharel lolyabhāvena [k, kh, gh: nāharelo-; ṅ: nāharelaulyabhā-] paśudṛṣṭyā [k, gh: -dṛṣṭā] na siddhidam |
*pauruṣeyaṁ [ṅ: pau * reyaṁ] sadā grāhyaṁ [k, gh: grāhṛṁ] anyathā narakatrayam [k, kh, gh: na * katrayaṁ]* ||
*yogināṁ pāpakarmastho [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -karmmasthāṁ] nāharet [gh, ṅ: -re] * [ṅ: ca] striyāḥ [k, kh, ṅ: striyāṁ] palam [ṅ: phalaṁ]* |
hanate vipulāṁ siddhiṁ [gh, ṅ: siddhi] saptajanmany upārjitām [k,kh, gh: -janmatyupārjitaṁ] ||
saṅgrāme patitaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -tāṁ] śūraṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: śūrāṁ] citipakvaṁ [ṅ: vitiyankṛṁ] sadā śubham [ṅ: śubhāṁ] |
na duṣyaṁ yāgakāle [k, kh, gh: ṣāgakālai] tu samayeṣu [gh: samayaṣu] varapradam ||
*athavā paśuyāge [k, gh: paśuyogo; kh: -yogau; ṅ: -yogān] * śūdram [k, kh, gh: paṁśūm] ekaṁ hanet [k, kh, gh, ṅ: hane] dhruvam* |
yatīnāṁ [k, kh, gh: atināṁ] ca vratīnāṁ [k, kh, gh: pratīnāṁ] ca brāhmaṇānāṁ [k, kh, gh: brāhmaśānāṁ] śiśustriyān ||
nāharet siddhikāṅkṣī ca yadīcchec cirajīvitaṁ [k, kh, gh: yadicheccira-] | YKh (1) 11/66cd-72ab.

worshipped on the battle field. The king becomes victorious and the adept lives a long time.'[1]

Chapter Twelve: The Hymn to the Primordial Current (Ādyoghadaṇḍaka-stotra) (36)

The second recension of the YKh[2] starts from here and coincides with YKh (1) up to almost the end of chapter fifteen (46).[3] After a verse in sragdharā praising the goddess as Parā, Parāparā and Aparā comes a description of Bhairava in abstract theological terms (2-9). This is followed by a similar one of the goddess, clothed in sonic energies, mantras, metaphysical principles and the Krama (9-15). Seeing this theophany, Bhairava is astonished and intones the Hymn to the Primordial Current (36) modelled on the Mālinīstava he utters in the KMT to evoke the goddess out of the Liṅga. After briefly describing the goddess again in similar terms, comes the Sūtra of the Descent of the Kramāgama (kramāgamāvatārasūtra) (37) quoted above (33cd-49ab).[4]

Chapter Thirteen: The Group of Four Sacred Seats Divided into the Sixty-four Divisions of the Śrīpīṭha (Śrīpīṭhacatuḥṣaṣṭibhedabhinnapīṭhacatuṣka) (38)

This is chapter three of YKh (2) where it is called Pīṭhāvatārasūtra. This sūtra consists of just nine verses set in śardūlavikrīḍita and is the first of a series concerned with various configurations and forms of the sacred seats.[5] The one described here consists of the usual four seats - Oṁkāra (also called Oḍḍiyāna), Jālandhara, Pūrṇagiri and Kāmarūpa - each of which has sixteen constituents, thus making sixty-four all together.

---

[1] kulāṣṭakaṁ suguptedaṁ [k, kh, gh: śu-; ṅ: sugusṭedaṁ] pūjayed raṇabhūmiṣu ||
vijayī bhavate rājā [k, kh, gh: drātā] sādhakaś cirajīvitaḥ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -taṁ] |

Ibid. 11/78cd-79ab.

[2] Chapter 12 of YKh (1) is divided into two parts. The first ends with the Ādyoghadaṇḍakastotra. This is followed in the YKh (1) with the line: Having composed the prose poem concerning the first current (of the teachings) it was brought down (to earth) by the Lord. (ādyogha-daṇḍakaṁ kṛtvā nāthenaivāvatāritam). Instead of this line in YKh (2) we find a long colophon according to which this passage is a chapter (ānanda) in its own right called Ādyāvatāradaṇḍaka.

[3] See intro. vol 1, p. 666 ff. concerning the four, six and eight seats.

[4] See above, p. 42 ff.. The second half of chapter 12 of YKh (1) is chapter 2 of YKh (2) which is called Āgamāvatāra. While the colophon here of YKh (2) is a long one and the passage is referred to as an 'ānanda'. The colophon in YKh (1) is short and the same passage is considered to be a sūtra. The Āgamāmnāyasūtraka is entry 47 in the list of 107 sūtras.

[5] These, along with others, are analysed in intro. vol. 1, p. 666 ff..

Next comes the Sūtra concerning the Descent of the Seats of the Transmission (kramapīṭha) which is a part of the Description of the Great Form (mahāmūrti) of the Goddess[1] (38). This is chapter four of YKh (2), called the Sūtra of the Goddess's Great Form (Devyāmahāmūrtisūtra). It opens with a list of six seats, namely, the previous four along with Candra and Trisrota. These are projected into the seed-syllable AIṀ, the parts of which are in the corners of the hexagram around the central triangle where the four seats are located. Perhaps the idea here is that this seed-syllable, which is in the centre of the Triangle and is an aspect of the Great Form (mahāmūrti) of the goddess, is also represented by the surrounding hexagram. In this way it encapsulates, as it were, the central Triangle, internally and externally. The Tantra concludes that: 'The group of six sacred seats has emerged supported by the Great Form (of the Goddess)'. (11) [2]

The description of the Great Form of the goddess continues with the location in her body, internally and externally, of mantras beginning with those of the Kramas (11-25). Similarly, ten systems (darśana) are projected along the length of her body beginning with the Buddhist in the big toe of the left foot progressively up to her own, which is the 'last tradition' (paścimāmnāya) located in the End of the Sixteen (26-29).

Chapter Fourteen: The Sūtra of the Teaching (Upadeśasūtra)[3]

The first half of this sūtra consists of a list of triads that correspond to the three Principles (tattva), Vidyā, Self and Śiva, that constitute the goddess's metaphysical identity. The second half presents the goddess as the embodiment of the three divisions of the transmission and its components. It ends with the statement: 'he who knows the (reality of) three kinds is liberated and liberates (others).'[4] (1-12ab)

The Upadeśasūtra is followed by the Transmission of the Sacred Seats (Pīṭhakrama) (41-45). This consists of eight seats, that is, the previous six along with Nāda (Sound) and Avyakta (Unmanifest). Each one consists of sixty-four entities. These are listed at the beginning of the description of each one in two verses set in sragdharā followed by a detailed list in the following verses set in śloka[5] (12cd-89). Although most of the sixteen constituents of the four seats

---

[1] mahāmūrtivarṇane kramapīṭhāvatārasūtram |

[2] nirgataṁ pīṭhaṣaṭkaṁ tu mahāmūrtyāvadhiṣṭitam [gh: -ṣṭhitaṁ; ṅ: mahāmūrtā] ||
YKh (1) 13/11cd. Cf. 15/72-80ab.

[3] The name of this short sūtra is found only in YKh (2).

[4] trividhā yo vijānāti sa muktaḥ sa ca mocakaḥ | YKh (1) 14/12ab.

[5] After the description of Oṁkārapīṭha, the first seat (ādyapīṭha), a short colophon follows in YKh (2) which declares that it is the Oṁkārapīṭhanirṇayasūtra that belongs to the section (adhikāra) dealing with the Khecarakrama (concerning which see intro. vol. 2, p. 434-435 and 450-451).

described previously are amongst them, this system of seats is not just an expansion of the previous one. The six seats are worshipped in the hexagram whereas the eight seats are projected onto the eight petals of the lotus that surrounds it and so are a separate set.

Chapter Fifteen: Concerning the Great (modality of the) Sacred Seats (Bṛhatpīṭhādhikāra) (46)

The first half of this chapter concludes the exposition of the eight sacred seats with a description of the last four.[1] The equivalent chapter (ānanda) in YKh (2) ends here and is called 'Concerning the Sacred Seats Divided into Sixty-four Divisions - a Description of the Liturgy (pūjākrama) of the Kula Tradition'.[2] Thus, in accord with the theoretical model, YKh (2) presents the entire section dealing with the sacred seats in a single chapter divided into sūtras. This may well have been the original form of the text, although it was probably a single long sūtra, not a 'chapter' (ānanda). Thus, entry 89 in the list of 107 sūtras is called 'the (Sūtra) of the Group of Eight Seats (vṛttapīṭhāṣṭaka)'. The name of this sūtra suggests that at an earlier stage of redaction, before the division into chapters was introduced, there may well have been eight sūtras - one for each seat - clumped together as one.

The following passage (73-79) is set in sragdharā. It is missing in YKh (2), which suggests that it is an interpolation. Each of the six seats is briefly described again and the goddess and the Siddha who reside there are praised. An interesting feature of this presentation is that the goddess in the first four seats sings the four Vedas.

YKh (2) also supplies a colophon after the description of Jālandhara which states that it is the Jālandharapīṭhasūtra. The other seats are described in the same way. The next seat is Pūrṇapīṭha. However, YKh (2) concludes the description with the statement that it is the Kāmākhyapīṭhasūtra. This is obviously a mistake for Pūrṇapīthasūtra. The following seat is Kāmākhya. YKh (2) has no colophon after this, whereas the colophon in YKh (1) says that it is the sūtra called 'Concerning the Kula Liturgy' (Kulakramādhikāranāmasūtra).

[1] After the description of Kāmarūpa, that of Trisrota follows in the same format up to verse 18 of the next section. Nothing marks the end of it either in YKh (1) or YKh (2). The same is the case for the next pīṭha - Candrapīṭha – which is described up to verse 35. It is implicitely identified with Candrapura. We are told that: The goddess in the beautiful city of the seat of the moon is an unbroken circle. (candrapīṭhapure ramye devī cākhaṇḍāmaṇḍalam 15/21ab). Then comes Nādapīṭha up to verse 54 where it is identified with the city of Kuluta. Then from there to verse 72 comes the description of Avyaktapīṭha. This seat appears to be associated with mount Kaumāra which is 'on the top of Meru' (kaumāre merumūrddhani 15/72cd). At this place comes a long colophon in YKh (2) declaring that the passage is a chapter (ānanada) the name of which is noted in the body of this summary.

[2] pīṭhādhikāraṁ catuḥṣaṣṭibhedabhinnaṁ kulāmnāyapūjākramavarṇano nāmānandaḥ

Chapter Sixteen: The Tradition (Transmitted through) the Series (of Teachers concerning) the Primordial (ādya) Navātman (Ādyanavātmā-pāramparyāmnāya) (47)

This chapter corresponds to chapter 14 of YKh (2). There it is called the Sūtra of the Extraction of the Thirty-two (syllable Vidyā) of the Goddess and Aghora (dvātrīṁśaddevyā tathā aghorasyoddhārasūtram), which is in fact the subject of this chapter. The colophon in YKh (1) refers to the last passage of this chapter which is missing in YKh (2). It deals with the seed-syllable Navātman embodied in Vṛkṣanātha, the first teacher. He is eulogised in the last twelve verses of this chapter, which are the Vṛkṣadvādaśakasūtra that appears earlier in the text.[1] Such oversights are clear indications that the text of YKh (1) is the product of more than one redactor. The absence of this passage in YKh (2), where it is replaced by another that neatly concludes this chapter, is probably the result of a more careful redaction of the second recension. It is also possible that the redactor drew from an earlier, uncorrupted common source.

This sūtra opens with an exposition of the sonic form of the goddess as the collective whole of the fifty energies of the letters of the alphabet and, especially, as the thirty-two syllables of her Vidyā. As such, she is Śikhāmaheśvarī, a name that is presumably derived from her identity as the consort of Aghora who is also called Śikhāsvacchandabhairava. The Tantra goes on to describe the triangular grid (prastāra) of letters (said to be the rays of the goddess) called Meru (15-28ab).[2] The secret names of the fifty letters are listed next (28cd-34).[3] These names identify the letters of the thirty-two syllables of the Vidyā that are 'extracted' from the grid. They are the syllables of the Kulakrama, each with its own metaphysical identity. The seventeenth syllable is the 'great abode of liberation', the nineteenth, the Yoginīkula, the twentieth is auspicious and the remover of great sin. The formation of the twenty-second syllable marks the emergence of the goddess's Command. The twenty-third is the syllable of the Supreme Lord (parameśvara). The twenty-seventh is as brilliant as the risen sun. The twenty-ninth is a ray of the Command (35-86ab). The Five Praṇavas are added to the beginning and the end of it in order to make this into the version of the Vidyā consisting of forty-two syllables. Accordingly, they are extracted next. (86cd-97).

After a brief description of the metaphysical and theological identity of the parts of the syllables of the Vidyā (98-107ab), they are presented in reverse divided into the eight parts (pada) of the Vidyā (108cd-109ab). A division into

---

[1] See entry (9).

[2] The way the Meruprastāra is drawn is described in YKh (1) 38/41 ff. See also KuKh 8/7cd ff..

[3] Cf. with the names of the letters in the Meruprastāra according to KuKh 8/34cd-40ab.

sixteen parts is also possible (19cd-111ab).[1] Next comes the extraction of the śākta form of the Aghora mantra of Svacchandabhairava - the Aghorā Vidyā - by means of the same code (111cd-144ab) and its fruits (144cd-152). This Vidyā, which like the Samayā Vidyā of the goddess and the Aghora mantra, consists of thirty-two syllables, is considered to be so important that the verses in which its extraction is described are called the Ādisūtra. The Vidyā itself is 'the meaning of the verses' (ślokārtha).[2]

The rest of this sūtra concerns Bhairava, the Lord of the Kula (kulīśa). The two mantras Aghora and Ghorā are Śiva and Śakti. They are essentially one and mutually sustaining. Even so the goddess reminds the god that he has been awakened by her. In other words the mantra of Aghora is only effective if conjoined to that of the goddess (153-158).

Bhairava's Parāpara form is described next. Here, as in the earlier visualizations, he has eight faces. Moreover, he holds the Śrīmata in one of his hands. In effect he is a form of Svacchanda Bhairava who is the god of the Śrīmata or, to be more precise, of the Yogakhaṇḍa. He is worshipped in the middle of the maṇḍala along with Trikhaṇḍā, the supreme form of the goddess Kujā. She is like an unbroken stream of nectar that flows into the sacrificial vessel. He is worshipped as the original Siddha surrounded by the sixteen Śāmbhava Siddhas in the centre of three encompassing circles representing Mitra, Ṣaṣṭha and Oḍḍīśa, the Siddhas of the three lineages. In this form Bhairava is Śrīnātha, the first teacher and god worshipped in the middle of the Circle of Teachers (gurumaṇḍala) (159-176). The Tantra goes on to describe the eight faces of Mūrtinātha with Śāmbhavī Umā as the ninth beyond them and their seed-syllables (177-195ab). These are followed by the six limbs (ṣaḍaṅga) (195cd-196). This section concludes with Navātman, the god's sonic form (mūrti) seated on Vāgbhava – the Great Jewel (197-201ab). The chapter ends with the Vṛkṣadvādaśakasūtra.[3]

[1] The Vidyā of the goddess is presented in both forms in the KuKu as well. See KuKh 10/11-12 for the division into eight and ibid. 9/31cd-35 for that into sixteen. See also, YKh (1) 17/3-7ab

[2] so.api [k, kh, gh: sopa] śrīvatsa vijñeyaḥ [k, kh, ṅ: -yaṁ; gh: vijñayaṁ] śrīmaccandrapureśvaraḥ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -raṁ] |
yasya kaṇṭhasya ślokārthaṁ ādisūtraṁ [k: adisūtra; ṅ: -tra] maheśvara [ṅ: -raḥ] ||
YKh (1) 16/150cd-151ab.

[3] The Vṛkṣadvādaśakasūtra is reproduced in the first half of chapter 51 of the KuKh.

Chapter Seventeen: Concerning the Faces and Limbs in the Description of the Vidyā of the Aged (Goddess) (vṛddhāvidyādhikāravarṇane vaktrāṅgādhikāraḥ) (48)

As the name of this chapter suggests, it is concerned with the Vidyā of the goddess. Here she is called Vṛddhā, and Jyeṣṭhā, the Aged One and Eldest. This name suggests to the initiate that it is the oldest, original form of the Vidyā and that it is the Vidyā of the first of the three transmissions (krama), which is that of the Eldest.

First the Vidyā is presented in sixteen parts (pada) in the reverse order and then the seven seed-syllables that accompany it (1-21). After this comes the division of the Vidyā onto her six faces and their description (22-39ab) and then the six limbs (39cd-49). The two depositions, those of the faces and the limbs, are the Twelvefold Deposition, which along with that of the Transmission of Twenty-seven, is particularly powerful (50-60).

Chapter Eighteen: Concerning the Glory of the Vidyā and the Method of its Repetition (vidyāmāhātmye jāpyādhikāraḥ)[1] (49)

The sūtra opens with a brief, truncated account of how the maṇḍala of the Garland Mantra (mālāmantra) should be drawn (1-4ab). This is followed by a presentation of the Vidyā as the Goddess (4cd-10) and then by a list of what it can do. There are two aspects of its power. She can be either destructive (saṁhāriṇī) or 'on the path of emanation' (sṛṣṭimārga). In the latter aspect the Vidyā bestows liberation. It brings peace (śānti) and fulfilment (puṣṭi). In the former aspect it is used in black magical rites. Then it deludes, kills, brings others under one's control, attracts, and paralysis. Although it has these magical applications, the Vidyā is supremely spiritual. As such it is said to be the best in all the Kramas, which it is why it is always successful (11-13ab). Moreover, it is essentially Kuṇḍalinī who leads to the supreme state of realisation:

> When recited, the Vidyā is the great Siddhā and inwardly (antaraṅgena) Kālikā. She is completely full and is recollected by mind and speech in the maṇḍala of magical action (karmacakra). Having established (her) form, burning with flaming rays (kiraṇa), one should lead it in the form of consciousness in half the (time it takes to) close the eye, to the supreme (reality) Beyond the Fourth.[2]

---

[1] This may be the Jāpyasūtra which is entry 68 in the list of 107 sūtras (but cf. entry 2 above).

[2] japtā vidyā mahāsiddhā antaraṅgena [k, gh: aṁtaraṁgetaraṁgena; ṅ: antaraṁga na] kālikā [ṅ: kaulikā] ||

The Tantra goes on to list the worldly benefits and yogic powers one gains by reciting it various thousands of times. With 100,000 repetitions one achieves liberating flight. The Tantra explains how it should be taught and where it should be recited and concludes with a succinct account of how the inner repetition of mantra is done that bestows the flight of the liberated state (16-44ab). The chapter closes with an interesting passage concerning the inner rosary called the Divine Sūtra (Divyasūtra) (50).

Chapter Nineteen

This chapter consists of four sūtras (50-53) that describe the form in which the goddess is visualized in the three lineages and her formless (niṣkala) aspect.[1] Śrīnātha asks the goddess to tell him the Dhyānasūtra. In response the goddess describes the three visualized forms of the goddess governing the three lineages in three sūtras. The first sūtra is called the Visualization of the Goddess's Form (Devyāmūrtidhyāna) (50).[2] It is a description of the form in which Kubjikā is visualized in the Lineage of the Child. Then comes the Sūtra* of the Visualization of Kubjikā's form in the Middle Lineage (Śrīmadhyamolidevyāmūrti-dhyānasūtra) (51) and the Sūtra* of the Visualization of the Goddess's Supreme Form (Parādevyāmūrtidhyānasūtra) (52). These three are probably the triad of sūtras in the list of 107 sūtras called the Three Sūtras concerning the Form (of the goddess) (mūrtisūtratraya) (numbered 34-36). These are followed by the Sūtra of the Teacher's Instruction concerning the Formless (aspect) (Gurūpadeśaniṣkalasūtra) (53) in which the transcendental aspect of the goddess is described. It probably corresponds to the Sūtra concerning the Formless (Niṣkalasūtra) which is entry 39 in the list.

āpūrṇā [gh: āpūrṇa; ṅ: āpūrṇī] karmacakre [k, kh, gh: karṇacakre] tu saṁsmṛtā [ṅ: saṁsmṛtvā] manasā girā |
*saṁsthāpya nimiṣārdhaṁ [ṅ: ni * -] tu jvalatkiraṇarūpiṇīm [k, kh: -ṇī; gh: -kira * rūpiṇī; ṅ: jalaṁkiraṇa-]* || cidrūpākārarūpeṇa [ṅ: -kararūpeṇa] turyātītaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -te] padaṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: paraṁ] nayet | YKh (1) 18/13cd-15ab.

[1] See intro. vol. 2, p. 165 ff.. where these sūtras have been translated.

[2] The colophon at the end of this sūtra, which consists of just twenty-nine and a half verses reads: iti śrīkādibhede śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre devyāmūrtidhyānaṁ [-k: na] yogakhaṇḍaḥ || 19. The number 19, found in all the manuscripts, indicates that this is a separate chapter. However, this makes no sense as this sūtra is the first of a series of four. I have therefore extended this chapter up to the end of this group of *sūtra*s. The Devyāmahāmūrtisūtra which is reckoned to be the fourth chapter of YKh (2) and corresponds to the last part of chapter 13 of YKh (1) (see above, entry 39), should not be confused with this one.

Chapter Twenty: The Way of Worshiping the Śrīmata (Śrīmatapūjārcana-vidhi)[1] (55)

The next topic is the contemplation and worship of the Śrīmata. Knowing this, one achieves the Matarāja. First comes a description of the visualized form of the Bhairava who embodies the Śrīmata. This Bhairava has seven heads, not eight as does the god of the Bhairava Krama (1-9). The Mata, that is, the scripture itself, is described next 'as brilliant as crystal' and guarded by 500 Bhairavas (10-13). The following passage concerns the protection and care of the Śrīmata. Note that amongst those belonging to other traditions who should not be shown the scripture are Somasiddhāntins (14-21). A description of how the Śrīmata should be worshipped (arcana) and the benefits of doing so concludes this sūtra (22-48).

Chapter Twenty-one: The Venerable Sūtra of Thirty-two (verses concerning the goddess) consisting of Thirty-two (syllables). (Śrīdvātriṁśikāsūtra)[2] (56)

This interesting sūtra opens with a portrayal of Kapālīśabhairava drinking many kinds of liquor and divine drinks (1-12ab). Amongst them we find vijaya, a drink prepared from marijuana. References to vijaya, are common in the later Kaula sources from about the thirteenth century onwards. Knowledge and use of this intoxicant was probably introduced into the subcontinent by Muslims. Kapālīśa is said to 'play in sixty-four different ways in the world'. This allusion to his sixty-four energies alerts us that he is the god of the Bhairava Krama taught in this section of the MBT.

After presenting the purifying and liberating form of the god, we turn to the main subject - his consort the Thirty-two lettered Vidyā. Inwardly, each syllable is a sacred seat and so the Vidyā is fit for the Yoginīs who attend the gatherings in the sacred seats and similar places. We are again reminded of its power in rites of black magic for which the Vidyā is visualized as being of various colours according to the desired result. It should be visualized in the form of the Moon if one desires wealth and like the Sun to obtain the Command (12cd-22). In order for the Vidyā to be effective it must have a location (sthāna). Accordingly, the eighteen places in the body and beyond into the End of the Twelve where the Vidyā is located are listed next (23-28ab).

After referring to the three forms of the goddess in the lineages of the Aged, Youth and Child as Raktā or Ambā, Klinnā or Siddhā, Nityā or Ghorā, respectively, come thirty-two forms of the Vidyā each written out in full. In these

---

[1] Is this one of the Pūjāsūtratraya (entries 23-25 in the list)?
[2] The list refers to three sūtras (51-53: dvātriṁśikātraya) concerning the Vidyā of Thirty-two syllables.

permutations the goddess is commonly referred to as Kubjikā, Bhagavatī, Cāmuṇḍā, Aghorāmukhī, and sometimes as Ghorā. After this comes the short Sūtra* Concerning the Thirty-Two (Syllable Vidyā) (Dvātriṁśasūtra) (57) in which the benefits and powers, yogic and magical are listed for each of the forms of the Vidyā.[1]

Chapter Twenty-two: The Sūtra concerning (the Sacrificial) Substances of the Krama (Kramadravyādhikārasūtra) (58)

This sūtra is chapter 13 of YKh (2) where it is called the Sūtra of the Sacrificial Substances and the Flowers used for Purification (dravyasaṁskārapuṣpāṇāṁ sūtram). It lists the flowers and other offerings that are considered to be auspicious and inauspicious and their spiritual and magical properties (1-23ab).

Next comes the Sūtra concerning the Transmission of the Teachers (Gurukramādhikārasūtra) (59). This sūtra is an explanation of the following lines: `It is said that there are five in the Siddhānta, four in the area of the Left, and three in the Right. There are said to be two in the eastern tradition while the teacher is the only one in the Kujā Āgama in the western tradition (olikramāmnāya).'[2] These lines have already appeared twice before at the beginning of the Vṛkṣadvādaśakasūtra which is also found in the first half of chapter 51 of the KuKh. They are completely out of context there. Moreover, they add an extra verse and a half to the sūtra which, as its very name says, is just twelve verses long. This sūtra, on the other hand, is solely dedicated to an explanation of these lines. Thus there can be little doubt that they were somehow taken from this sūtra and suffixed to the beginning of the Vṛkṣadvādaśakasūtra by mistake.[3]

Chapter Twenty-three: The Sūtra concerning the Rules (Samayādhikāra-sūtra)[4] (60)

This sūtra lists the Rules (samaya) an initiate must observe. The same subject is treated more extensively in chapter thirty-seven of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa (1-11ab). Next come the Sūtra* dealing with the Seven Rebirths

---

[1] See KuKh vol. 4, appendix 2.

[2] siddhānte pañcakaṁ [kh: pacakaṁ; ṅ: caṁpakaṁ] proktaṁ catuṣkaṁ vāmagocare ǀ *dakṣiṇe [k, kh, gh: * kṣiṇe] trikam ity āhuḥ pūrvāmnāye dvikaṁ matam* ǀǀ paścimolikramāmnāye gurum ekaṁ kujāgame ǀ YKh (1) 22/24-25ab = KuKh 51/1-2ab.

[3] This sūtra has been quoted in full in the note to KuKh 51/1-2ab.

[4] Entry 12 in the list of sūtras is the Mahāsamayasūtra.

(Janmādhikārasūtra) (61) (11cd-29ab) and the Visualization that Resurrects the Dead (Mṛtasaṁjīvanīdhyāna) (62). The latter is one of several sūtras that describe a visualization (dhyānasūtra). Especially beneficial for the sick and the short lived, it is also meant for Siddhas, Yoginīs, the king, teacher and, of course, oneself. Inspired by similar visualizations centred on the medicine god Mṛtyuñjaya Śiva, the Conqueror of Death, it is centred on the image of streaming nectar that flows from the energies of the Moon at the End of the Twelve and fills the body (29cd-46). The subject of the next sūtra is the seventeen syllable Vidyā that Resurrects the Dead (Mṛtasaṁjīvanīvidyā) (63). It describes how the maṇḍala of the Vidyā should be drawn on a birch leaf along with the Thirty-two syllable Vidyā of the goddess, Navātman of the god and other seed-syllables and the rites that should be performed. The adept who wears this talisman does not suffer an untimely death. He is free of disease and old age and is protected from ghosts, demons and his enemies. (47-80ab)

Chapter Twenty-four: Concerning Gesture (Mudrādhikāra)[1] (64)

This sūtra consists of 104 verses. They describe eighteen ritual gestures (mudrā) that are varieties of Khecarī, the Skyfaring Goddess, the Supreme Energy who energizes both their external and inner forms.

Chapter Twenty-five: Concerning the Signs of Practice (sādhana), Accomplishment (siddhi), Kaula practice (caryā), the Yogi, Kumārī, Teacher (ācārya) and Yoginī[2] (65)

The first part of this chapter (verses 1-57) is very similar to the Sūtra of the Practice (ācāra) of Siddhas and Yoginīs (Siddhayoginyācārasūtra) (31) which is the first part of chapter nine (9/1-53). Here and there we find virtually the same lines. The rest appears to be a rewriting of the same sūtra. The topics follow one after another in the same way in both cases, that is, descriptions of the true teacher (25/2-18ab = 9/1-15) and the false one (25/18cd-26ab = 9/16-23) followed by those of the true (25/26cd-35 = 9/24-30ab) and false Yoginī (25/36-41 = 9/30cd-34). Then comes a description of the four types of initiate (25/42-50 = 9/35-39). The sūtra concludes with a description of Kumāra (25/51-56 = 9/40-41) and Kumārī (25/57 = 9/42-48). The former is treated more extensively in this sūtra and the latter in chapter nine.

The version of the sūtra in this chapter is a fully fledged chapter (ānanda) that closes with the standard long colophon. Its name is a long version of the name of the sūtra, thus confirming the close relationship between them. One wonders whether the sūtra is a brief, earlier version of the ānanda which developed from it. Evidence supporting this possibility is the relationship this chapter has with chapter four. There we find the Sūtra concerning the Lineage of Siddhas (Siddhasantānasūtra) (15) (4/43-75), which describes the adept who is practicing correctly (4/44-50), the Siddha (4/56cd-68) and one who is not (asiddha) (4/51-56ab). The essential points made there are repeated in this chapter (25/97cd-113). In addition, chapter twenty-five adds a section on the three types of yogi - Śāmbhava (25/114-122), Śākta (25/123-124ab) and Āṇava (25/124cd-125). After a short passage dealing with good places to practice (siddhasthāna) (4/69-75), which has no counterpart in chapter twenty-five, the Siddhasantānasūtra of chapter four goes on to talk about the Octet of Kula (kulāṣṭaka) (4/76-85). There the treatment is quite brief. Although it does contain material not found in this chapter, the subject is not treated systematically and with the thoroughness we find here. The Siddhasantānasūtra continues with the worship and characterization of the four type of initiates, concluding with a brief mention of Kumārī (4/86-96ab). Several of these few line are virtually the same as 25/43cd-57, and similar to 9/35-39. However, both versions in chapters nine and twenty-five are more systematic. The Sūtra of the Practice (ācāra) of Siddhas and Yoginīs (Siddhayoginyācārasūtra) in chapter nine ends there, whereas chapter twenty-five continues with a passage concerning the Octet of Kula (kulāṣṭaka) (25/58-97ab). This is presented in three forms. The first is the Octet of the Rule (samayāṣṭaka) which consists of the eight types of Yoginīs. The second is the group of eight low caste women who represent the Eight Mothers in their sacred sites. These are the eight Yoginīs 'born in the sacred field' (kṣetrāṣṭaka). The third set are the Eight Mothers themselves.

---

[1] The Mudrāsūtra is entry 58 in the list.
[2] The Ācāryalakṣaṇasūtra and the Śiṣyayoginīlakṣaṇa are entries 98 and 99, respectively in the list.

The more disordered Siddhasantānasūtra, reverts back to talking about the eight Yoginīs (4/96cd-101) after having talked about the four types of initiates (4/86-96ab). Then other kinds of Yoginīs are briefly described (4/108-111) after which the topic again reverts to the eight Yoginīs (4/112-115). The sūtra ends with a section on four Yoginīs said to be in the body which are identified with four of the eight Yoginīs (4/116-137ab). However, in chapter 25, after discussing the eight Yoginīs, the subject reverts to the true and false Siddha (25/97cd-107ab and 107cd-113) to conclude with the three types of yogi and the Yoginī. The passage on the eight Yoginīs, inserted as it is into the middle of another topic, is clearly an interpolation there as it is in the Siddhasantānasūtra, although this is less evidently so there.

In brief, there are substantial similarities in the layout and contents of the Siddhayoginyācārasūtra, the Siddhasantānasūtra and chapter twenty-five. However, the latter is more inclusive and systematic than the sūtras, although it does suffer from discontinuities, notably, the insertion of the passage concerning the eight Yoginīs. We may conclude that chapter twenty-five is essentially a reworking of the Siddhayoginyācārasūtra and Siddhasantānasūtra. Moreover, we may hazard to suggest that the former sūtra, which is well ordered and one-pointedly concerned with one basic topic, is an edited version of the latter. As each version contains material the others do not, instead of selecting one of the three, or integrating them into one, all three versions were incorporated into the final text.

Chapter Twenty-six: Concerning the Hymn to the One (Goddess and her) Twelve (aspects namely, her Six) Faces and (Six) Limbs (Vaktrāṅga-dvādaśaikāstavādhikāra)[1] (66)

This chapter begins with a hymn to the goddess in thirty-three verses set in Śārdūlavikrīḍita.[2] She is represented, in the typical manner of these rich and complex hymns, simultaneously in her sonic, mantric form and as the goddesses she incorporates into her body with which she is identified as a complex whole. The passage that follows is accordingly concerned with her sonic source - the grid of Meru which is 'the abode of the fifty Siddhas who (govern the letters and) belong to the temple mountain of Sumeru whose form is a Liṅga.'[3] After listing the names of the letters,[4] the goddess is again eulogized in seventeen verses as present within the letters, seed-syllables, and major sacred seats associated with them, all of which are her body. These divine forms are 'the Śāmbhava plane which is all things (samasta) manifest and unmanifest. It is the Kaulika transmission of the Command (ājñākrama) and the sacred Skyfarer in the Void which is both divine (transcendent) (divya) and otherwise (adivya) (who is the Divine Fire) Saṁvarta, the abode of the universe'[5] and the goddess. After this comes a hymn addressed to the goddess's six faces and six limbs.[6]

Chapter Twenty-seven

This chapter begins with the Sūtra of the Previous Tradition (pūrvāmnāyasūtra)[7] (67). It lists in just eight verses the sūtras one should know

---

[1] This sūtra may be the Vaktra- and Aṅga – sūtras which are 55 and 56, respectively in the list.
[2] Each quarter (pāda) consists of nineteen syllables as follows: - - - ^ ^ - ^ - ^ ^ ^ - - - ^ - - ^ -
[3] liṅgākārasumerumandiragireḥ paṁcāśasiddhālayaṁ || YKh (1) 26/42cd.
[4] These verses are quoted in commentary to KuKh 8/34cd-40ab, which is concerned with the same subject.
[5] vyaktāvyaktasamastaśāṁbhavapadaṁ ājñākramaṁ kaulikaṁ divyādivyasudivyaśūnyakhecaraṁ saṁvartaṁ viśvālayam | YKh (1) 26/59ab.
[6] This has been translated in notes 33 ff. of KuKh chapter 29.
[7] This sūtra is YKh (1) 27/1-8ab. The same passage is found in YKh (2) 11/30cd-37 with which that chapter ends. The colophon there reads: iti caturviṁśatisāhasre sarvāmnāyasūtrādhikāraḥ. As there is a separate colophon that closes the previous passage in chapter 11 of YKh (2), this colophon refers only to this sūtra. As this sūtra is not about the pūrvāmnāya, it is possible that this to be a true member of the tradition (anvayin) and a bearer of the command of the Śrīkrama. The rest of the chapter consists of three sūtras. The first is the Sūtra of Emanation and Withdrawal *(Sṛṣṭisaṁhārasūtra)[1] (68). Like the Sūtra of Emanation (Sṛṣṭisūtra) (27) and the Sūtra of the Conjunction of the Principles (Tattvasaṁghātasūtra) (28), this one also describes a series of stages of emanation and merger. In this case emanation ranges from the Unmanifest (avyakta) to the Triple World and withdrawal from the Wheel of the Universe (viśvacakra) to the reality Free of Defects (nirāmaya) beyond the Unmanifest. It concludes with ten verses on the highest state beyond the Transmental (8cd-39).

Next comes the Sūtra of the Tradition of the Scripture *(Āgamāmnāyasūtra) (69). No colophon marks the end of this sūtra of thirty odd verses (27/40-72), the last line simply declares that this is the Āgamāmnāyasūtra of the Ciñciṇī Kula.[2] The same sūtra with a few additions is chapter seven of YKh (2), where it is called Pāramparyāgamāmnāyasūtra. This sūtra extols the importance of the seed-syllable Navātman as the sonic form of the First Teacher and the transmission of its power through the teachers of the tradition in Koṅkaṇa and the Deccan. Without it scripture alone would be useless. In the second recension it is followed by a few verses defining the essential elements of the tradition.[3]

Next comes the Sūtra of the Hermitage of the Lineage *(Santānāśramādhikāra)[4] (70). The Hermitage of the Lineage is the Circle of the Teachers (gurumaṇḍala), which this brief sūtra (73-82ab) purportedly describes. In fact this sūtra consists only of an enumeration of the groups of mantras that constitute the Mahākrama. First amongst them is the Transmission of Twenty-eight, the basic form of the Krama. Said to be common to the three lineages (oli), it is in the middle of the Great Maṇḍala. This is probably the maṇḍala of the eight sacred seats, which in this way accommodates the Kramamaṇḍala in the centre of it.

---

is a misreading of the name sarvāmnāya. It begins with a declaration by the goddess that she will expound the teaching concerning the caryāmnāya – 'the tradition concerning practice' which may equally well have been the original name of this sūtra. However, as we have seen (above p. 128), there is reason also to accept the reading as it stands. It has been translated above on p. 127-128.

[1] In YKh (2) this sūtra is called sṛṣṭisaṁhārakūṭasūtrādhikāra. YKh (2) 11/1-30ab. The order of this and the previous sūtra are reversed in YKh (2) with respect to that in YKh (1).

[2] āgamāmnāyasūtredaṁ [k: -statredaṁ] ākhyātaṁ [k: ākhyāṁtaṁ] ciñciṇīkule ||

YKh (1) 27/66cd.

[3] Translated in intro. vol. 1, p. 326.

[4] See entries 7 and 8 of the list of sūtras. See above entry 12. The colophon reads: iti caturviṁśatisāhasre santānāśramādhikāravarṇano [k: -varṇane] nāma sūtram || 27 ||. Although the colphon is numbered 27 to indicate that it marks the end of the entire chapter 27, it actual relates to just the eight verses (YKh (1) 27/67-75) of this sūtra with which this chapter ends.

Chapter Twenty-eight: Concerning the Explanation of the Sūtra (Sūtrabhūmikādhikāra) (71)

This chapter is reproduced in chapter fifty-eight of the KuKh. There it is an ānanda, not a sūtra, and is called an Explanation (bhūmikā) of the Root Sūtra. The Root Sūtra is entry (6) in the list of 107 sūtras. Although there as many as three versions of it in the KuKh, it is not amongst the sūtras of the YKh. This is surprising as this, its explanatory sūtra, is listed (as entry (5)) amongst the 107 sūtras. The Root Sūtra may have been lost in the course of the redaction of YKh (1) or else it was amongst the sūtras that formed the original nucleus of the KuKh.

Concerning this and the following chapters incorporated into the KuKh, the reader is referred to the annotated translation of the corresponding chapters in the KuKh.

Chapter Twenty-nine: Concerning the Plane (bhūmikā) of the Siddhas (Siddhabhūmikādhikāra) (72-74)

The three parts of this chapter are reproduced in the KuKh as chapters 59, 60 and 61. Chapter 59 of the KuKh is called Concerning the Plane of the Four Sacred Seats (pīṭhacatuṣkabhūmikādhikāra). The equivalent in YKh (1) is simply called Concerning the Authority of the Explanation (Bhūmikādhikārādhikāra) (72).[1] Chapter 60 of the KuKh is called Concerning the Plane of the Sacred Seats (Pīṭhabhūmikādhikāra). Due to a lacuna in the sole manuscript of this part of the text of the YKh (1) the colophon is missing (73). The name of the third part of this chapter (74) is as noted above, whereas chapter 61 of the KuKh is called Concerning the Plane of the Siddhas and the Goddess (Siddhadevyābhūmikādhikāra).[2] This chapter explains the first unit of the Krama, namely, the four sacred seats.

---

[1] There is only a very short colophon in YKh (1) here so even though it is called an ānanada I treat it as the first of three sūtras that make up this chapter, the end of which is signaled, as usual, by a long colophon.

[2] Chapter 59 of the KuKh corresponds to YKh (1) 29/9-97. Verses 12cd to 191 of chapter twenty-nine of YKh (1) are found only in MS G. MSs K, Gh and Ṅ resume from 192. KuKh 60/1-92ab, with some omissions and changes in the serial order of the verses (see note to KuKh 60/32ab), correspond to YKh (1) (MS G) 29/97cd-186. One folio of MS G is illegible. It may well have contained the remaining eight verses at the end of chapter 60 of the KuKh and the colophon (73) along with the first sixteen verses of chapter 61 of the KuKh, the rest of which corresponds to the remaining part of chapter 29 of YKh (1). YKh (1) 29/188-268ab (which is the end of the chapter) corresponds to KuKh 41/17cd-101ab (which is also the end of the chapter there).

Chapter Thirty: Concerning the Sūtra of the Five Jewels (Pañcaratnasūtrādhikāra) (75)

This and the following two chapters deal with the remaining five of the six groups of mantras that constitute the Sequence of Twenty-seven (saptaviṁśaktikrama), namely, the groups of 5, 6, 4, 5 and 3. Chapter 30 of YKh (1) corresponds to chapter (ānanda) 62 of the KuKh which is called Concerning the Explanation of the Five Jewels (Pañcaratnabhūmikādhikāra). Thus, in the course of its transfer from YKh (1) to the KuKh this sūtra has been restored to its original status as a bhūmikā, that is, an 'explanation'[1] and it is indeed one, in this case, of the series of mantras called the Five Jewels (pañcaratna).

Chapter Thirty-one: Concerning the Plane (bhūmikā) of the Group of Six (Ṣaṭkabhūmikādhikāra) (76)

This chapter of YKh (1) corresponds to chapter (ānanda) 63 of the KuKh where it is called the Plane of the Sextet of the Command (Ājñāṣaṭkabhūmikādhikāra).

Chapter Thirty-two: Concerning the Stainless Pentad and the Triad (Vimalapañcakatrikādhikāra) (77)

Chapter 32 of YKh (1) corresponds to chapter 64 of the KuKh where it is called the Plane of the Five and the Triad (Pañcatrikabhūmikādhikāra).[2]

Chapter Thirty-three: The Teaching concerning the Planes of the Octet of Kula (Kulāṣṭakabhūmikānirṇaya) (78)

The first part of this chapter (i.e 33/1-99) ends with a short colophon stating that it is an ānanda.[3] It is chapter 66 of the KuKh. The last verses of this chapter explain the importance of the *bhūmikā*s ('explanations' and 'planes') and so concludes the six bhūmikās that extend from chapter 28 to 33[4] concerning the six components of the Sequence of Twenty-seven of the Transmission of the Youth (kaumārakrama).

---

[1] See above, p. 107 concerning the definition of a bhūmikā.

[2] The colophons of these chapters in the KuKh are all long ones, whereas in the YKh (1) they are short.

[3] iti caturviṁśatisāhasre kulāṣṭakabhūmikānirṇayo [g: bhūla-] nāmānandaḥ

[4] The colophon (after 33/123ab) here confirms that this unit is now complete. The colophon reads: saptāviṁśabhedakrame bhūmikādhikāravarṇanaṁ samāptam i.e. The description of (the section) concerned with the explanations (bhūmikā) belonging to the transmission of twenty-seven divisions is complete.

Chapter Thirty-four: The Sūtra concerning the Skyfarer (Khecarasūtra) (79-81)

This sūtra is number 11 in the list of sūtras. It is chapter 30 of YKh (2). There it is called the Sūtra (concerning) the Command of the Skyfarer composed in Twelve (verses) (Khecarājñādvādaśavṛttasūtra). It is a hymn in twelve verses set in sragdharā addressed to the goddess to whom the Command of the Skyfarers (khecarājñā) and Bhairava bow. She is, as the Tantra says:

> consciousness (vijñāna), the supreme (goddess), superior (transcendent) and inferior (immanent), and Bhairava's will applied (niyuktā) within the End of Sound above the maṇḍala, (where she is) endowed with the parts of the Transmission (kramapada) and is the light that has emerged (utthitā) within Śiva (śivānte). Due to the contraction (of finitude), she wanders in the lotus of the three worlds.[1]

The final verse declares that: 'the Command contemplated in the three worlds is in the City of Gems', that is, in maṇipuracakra in the navel. It is a hexagram that contains the sacred seats, the Siddhas and the Six Yoginīs. The goddess is worshipped there in each of its parts.

After this comes the Sūtra of Twelve Verses dedicated to Vakrikā (Vakrikādvādaśaśloka) (80). They describe the five centres in the body - the Root, the navel, the heart, the throat and the uvula - where the Five Praṇavas are located within which the goddess resides as their inner energy.

The next section begins with a list of the six currents (ogha) that constitute the sixfold Divine Current (divyaugha). They are: 1) Guru 2) Krama 3) Vidyā 4) Kula 5) Puruṣa and 6) Divya. This is the Supreme Group of Six[2] (27-28). The following verses describe the Six Wheels in the body where the six are projected and the Krama is worshipped by the movement of Kuṇḍalinī through them. (29-33)

Next comes the Sūtra concerning the Plane of the Skyfarer (Khecarabhūmikā) (81). It focuses on the 'Command of the Skyfarer that has emerged in the form of the fifty principles'.[3] They are the fifty goddesses who

---

[1] yā sā vijñānabhūtā para - aparaparā bhairavecchā niyuktā [k, gh: bhairavasthā niyukto; ṅ: bhairavesthā niyukto]
*nādānte [g: nādāte] maṇḍalordhve [k, gh: maṁtralorddha; g, ṅ: maṇḍalorddha; 2: k: maṇḍalārddha; kh: maṇḍalorddha] kramapadasahitā [g: kramapadisahitā] utthitābhā [g: uthitābhā; 2: kh: utthitā ] śivānte | saṁkocāt saṁcarantī tribhuvanakamale [g: tribhuvanaṁ-] YKh (1) 34/1abc.

[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 320.

[3] tattvapañcāśarūpeṇa khecarājñā vinirgatā || YKh (1) 34/100cd.

govern the letters in the triangle of the goddess. Their names are listed in chapter eight of the KuKh. They are described both as individual manifestations of the goddess and as phases or aspects of her energy that moves in the Void of consciousness and operates in various ways purifying, vitalizing, awakening, expanding and radiating light, life and bliss. Thus, as the Tantra promises: 'Those who realise this secret are freed from the bondage of phenomenal existence. The glory of the arising of the innate nature is supreme. They attain Bhairava's liberation by the means of the stainless nature (nirañjanasvabhāva).'[1]

Accordingly the stainless nature of the goddess is revealed next in a beautiful hymn to the goddess (102cd-127ab). As she is praised, her essential metaphysical identity is described in the following verses with which the hymn begins:

> For one whose mind sports in the beginning (of emanation) on the beginningless plane of the Skyfaring (goddess), pulsating, she is unconditioned. (She is) Śiva's state (śāmbhava) on the great Śāmbhava (plane). She is the awareness of the bliss of the essential nature (svabhāva) (of all things) and is free of the Principles and the qualities (of Nature). She resides within the plane of the unsupported and is the plane of existence (bhūmikā) of the Supreme Goddess (parameśvarī). Perpetually merged within the centre of the maṇḍala, she is established in the state Beyond Mind (unmanatva). Free of inhalation and exhalation, she certainly bestows liberation. Within the unsupported (transcendental reality) the mind is forcefully freed of desire for Māyā. One certainly attains liberation by abandoning all duality. Above is expansion (prasara), below vision (dṛṣṭi), while the Kaulinī of consciousness (caitanya) is in the middle. He who reaches the unsupported is a Kaula, he is a skyfarer.[2]

---

[1] ye [k, g, gh, ṅ: yad] budhyanti [gh: vudhyati] rahasyedaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: rahasyaṁdaṁ] te muktā [k, gh: nukṣā] bhavabandhanāt [g: -vadhanāt] |
svabhāvodayanāmaṁ tu māhātmyaṁ [g: mahātmā] paramātmakam || nirañjanasvabhāvena mokṣaṁ [g: mokhyaṁ; gh: -kṣa] yāsyanti bhairava [g: bhairavaḥ] | YKh (1) 34/101-102ab.
[2] yasya cittaṁ [gh: citaṁ] ramed ādau anādikhecarīpade [k, gh, ṅ: ānādiṁ-] ||
lolībhūtā [k: līlā-; gh: nīlā-; ṅ: lolā-] na [k, g, gh, ṅ: ma] vicchinnā [k, gh, ṅ: vachinnā] mahāśāmbhavaśāṁbhavī [k, gh, ṅ: mahāsāṁbhavasāṁbhavaṁ; g: -sāmbhavam] |
*guṇatattvavinirmuktā [g: guṇavanta-] svabhāvānandacetasā [gh: svabhā -] ||
anāśrayapadāntasthā bhūmikā pārameśvarī |
maṇḍalānte sadā līnā unmanatve vyavasthitā ||
*śvāsocchvāsavinirmuktā [kn ṅ: śvāsochāsavinirmukto; g: śvāsaucchāsa-; gh: -vinir * *] muktidā [g: bhukti ] sā na saṁśayaḥ [gh: -ya] |
nirālambe mano [ṅ: mato] māyā nirāśīkṛta yatnataḥ ||

The sūtra concludes appropriately with a few verses concerning the inner rite.

Chapter 35: Concerning the Plane of Saṁvartā (Saṁvārtabhūmikādhikāra) (82)

This chapter deals with the dynamism of the energy of the goddess that operates in the centre of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala. Both the Full Moon and the New, repleat with all her energies, the goddess flows up into the immanence of the maṇḍala and into the Void above it. She is both the lunar Kālī and Saṁvartā - the Fire that consumes the worlds and from which they are generated. As the very first verses say:

> She who is (both) supreme (transcendental) (parā) and immanent (aparā) bliss, the Unmanifest, transcendent, supremely existent, and subtle and whose abode is the Bliss of Stillness and is omniscient, eternal, primordial, beyond action and (yet) ever active, is the Transmental, Kālī, the energy of consciousness (citkalā). This is the Lineage of the Divine Current (divyaughasantati).
>
> Above, within the reality without defects, (She is) the will (icchā) which is the vital Self (haṁsa). She knows the mantra, which is mad with the passion for expansion. She is the power of consciousness (cicchakti) and her nature is consciousness (bodha). Established in the End of the Sixteen, she pervades the Void and discerns (cinoti) (reality) in the Darkness (of Māyā).[1]

---

sarvadvandvaparityāgād [k, ṅ: -gā; g: -dvaṁdvaparigān; gh: -dvadvaṁparityāgā] mokṣaṁ [gh: mokṣa] yāti na saṁśayaḥ [k, gh: -ya] |
ūrdhve prasaram adho [k, gh, ṅ: praśara-; g: prasaramādho] dṛṣṭir [k, g, gh ṅ: dṛṣṭi] madhye [gh: madhya] caitanyakaulinī [g: -kaulikī] || *yo [g: śo] yasyati [g: madhyati; ṅ: * syati] nirālambaṁ [g: -laṁba] sa kaulīśaḥ [k, gh: -ma; g, ṅ: -sa] sa [k, g, gh, ṅ: na] khecaraḥ* | Ibid. 34/102cd-107ab.

[1] yā sā parāparānandā [ṅ: -nantā] yā [g: nāsti] sā [g: nāsti] avyaktarūpiṇī |
atītā sattamā [k, ṅ: saṁtanā; g: ?; gh: maṁtatā] sūkṣmā [g: ?] nirānandapadāśrayā [k, gh: -yaṁ; g: ?; ṅ: -ya] ||
*sarvajñā śāśvatī [k: pāśva ; g: sāsvatī?; gh: yāśva; ṅ: sāśva] ādyā [k, gh, ṅ: ājñādyā; g: adyā] kriyātītā [k, g, gh: -te; ṅ: -bhīte] sadoditā |
*unmanā citkalā [k, ṅ: citakalā; gh: cittakalā] kālī etad divyaughasantatiḥ [k, ṅ: vivyaumasaṁtatī; g: devyāmasaṁ * ?; gh: vivyaumasatatī] ||
ūrdhve nirāmaye tattve icchā haṁsasvarūpiṇī | [g: ?]
prasaronmattamantrajñā [ṅ: praśaron-] cicchaktir [g: cicchakti-; ṅ: cichakti] bodharūpiṇī [k, gh: vādha-; ṅ: vedhi-] ||
*cinoti [gh: vi-] ṣoḍaśāntasthā [g: -śātasthām; gh: -śātasthā] timire [k, gh, ṅ: miti; g: timite] śūnyavyāpinī [ṅ: śūnya * vyāpinī]* | Ibid. 35/2-5ab.

This chapter expounds the Śāmbhava state and 'the energy Śāmbhavī elucidated in the Ciñciṇīmata' (6) and the manner in which it displays itself in and through the Kramamaṇḍala. The focus is on the centre through which the goddess flows as the power of the Transmental, creating and dissolving away the cosmic maṇḍala through the phases in which it unfolds and retreats back into itself.

Chapter Thirty-six: Concerning the Explanation of the Divine Current which belongs to the Method of the Skyfarer of the Śrīmata in the Transmission beginning with the Transmental (unmanādikrame śrīmatakhecaravidhi-divyaughabhūmikādhikāraḥ) (83)

This chapter expounds in detail, step by step, the eighteen phases of the activity of the energy of the Command within the transcendent. Each phase an energy and power-holder, it is part of the Lineage of the Divine Current presented in more general terms in the previous chapter. It is reproduced in the KuKh as chapter fifty-seven.

Chapter Thirty-seven: The Sūtra concerning the Method (vidhi) of Emanation and Withdrawal (Sṛṣṭisaṁhāravidhisūtra) (84)

The god wants to know about emanation and withdrawal and especially about the plane between them (1-5ab). The goddess begins by outlining the visualized form of Śrīkaṇṭha who is identified with the Earth (5cd-13ab). He is in the centre of a series of polarities understood as aspects emanation and withdrawal that are on his left and right, respectively (13cd-17ab). The goddess Raudrī moves along these three 'paths'.

The Path of Emanation begins in the east and, moving clockwise, ends in the north-east. When the goddess assumes a fierce form (raudrarūpa), she withdraws her emanation moving in an anti-clockwise direction beginning with the east and ending with the south-east. Brahmā is emanation which takes place progressively beginning with Brāhmaṇī, the first of the Eight Mothers, and moves through them progressively in each of the primary and secondary directions. Indra and the other deities of the directions, reside there. Strung along the circuit are the eight sacred seats worshipped successively in the forward order (anuloma). The Tantra admonishes that this is the order that should be observed, not the reverse one (viloma). This is a general principle. The Saṁvartāmaṇḍala should also to be worshipped in the same way in accord the modality of emanation (sṛṣṭinyāya).[1] The black rites (kṣudrakarman) are performed by worshipping the deities beginning in the south-east. The Six Yoginīs, Ḍākinī and the rest, bestow their grace when worshipped in the forward order, whereas in reverse 'they eat the fat and flesh of the enemy'[1] (29).

[1] See KuKh 1/1.

The Tantra goes on to explain that: 'the gross is associated with ritual (karmakāṇḍa), the subtle consists of thought and that which is devoid of thought is said to be supreme'[2] (32). The supreme reality is the goddess who, in the form (vigraha) of AIṀ, is the emanation (sṛṣṭi) of all the elements (bhūta). Residing in the middle of the maṇḍala, she is Śāmbhavī, the New Moon. When she is the Full Moon, she bestows both liberation and worldly benefits. She is also the Vidyā of thirty-two syllables. By adding the Five Praṇavas at the beginning and end she is the Full Moon and the New Moon when recited in the reverse order, without them.[3] The same energy moves through the Six Wheels within the body. It moves in the forward order (anuloma) from the Topknot to the feet. Then, after this has been experienced, the rite of adoration, which takes place in both the maṇḍala and the body, is performed in the reverse order (vilomāt) in such a way that the energy finally merges into the plane of the goddess (45-47). The sūtra concludes with the various benefits of worshipping in the eight directions successively marked by the eight sacred seats, the eight Mothers and their eight energies. (51-57ab)

The Sūtras of the Faces of the Goddess (Vaktrasūtras) (85-90)

The following section is called Concerning the Limbs and Faces of the Goddess *(Devyāvaktrāṁgādhikāra)[4] (96). The first part deals with the goddess's faces. Perhaps, originally there was just the one sūtra of the (Goddess's Six) Faces (vaktrasūtra), which is entry 55 in the list of sūtras, that has been split into six *sūtra*s, one for each of the goddess's faces. They are the 1) Parāvaktrasūtra, 2) Amaravaktrasūtra, 3) Pūrvavaktrasūtra, 4) Uttaravaktrasūtra, 5) Dakṣiṇavaktra-sūtra, and the 6) Paścimavaktrasūtra. These describe the goddesses face as Parā (the Supreme) at the top, the Immortal (amara) face below and the eastern, northern, southern and western face (which is the one in front), respectively (57cd-106).

---

[1] vilomena te śatror bhakṣayanti vasāmiṣam || YKh (1) 37/29cd.

[2] sthūlaṁ [k: sthalaṁś; gh: sthaleś; ṅ: -laś] ca karmakāṇḍasthaṁ sūkṣmaṁ cintāmayaṁ bhavet | cintayā [g: cintāyā] rahitaṁ yac ca tat paraṁ parikīrtitam || Ibid. 37/32.

[3] amā sā saṁpuṭe hīnā saṁpuṭasthā tu pūrṇimā || Ibid. 37/49cd.

[4] According to the colophon, this is a separate chapter (ānanda). It does not also include the previous sūtra that deals with quite a different topic.

The Sūtras of the Limbs of the Goddess (Aṅgasūtras) (90-95)

Similarly, the Sūtra of the (Goddess's Six) Limbs (aṅgasūtra), which is entry 56 in the list of sūtras, may have been split up into the following six sūtras that describe the goddess's six limbs. They are her Heart, Head, Topknot, Armour and Eye, which are described in the 1) Devyāhṛdayasūtra, 2) Śiraḥsūtra, 3) Śikhāsūtra, 4) Kavacasūtra, and 5) Netrasūtra. The last section of this chapter (ānanda) deals with the goddess's Weapon, the sixth limb[1] (107-168ab).

Chapter Thirty-eight: Concerning the Sūtras (Sūtrādhikāra) (97)

This section is where the names of the 107 sūtras are listed (1-25ab). The verses in the next section are numbered separately in the MSs from one onwards. The first is set in śārdūlavikrīḍita. The following six are set in vasantatilaka. All the remaining verses are set in sragdharā. [2] These seven verses are numbered separately from one to seven and were probably a separate unit. Here the goddess is called Khañjinī who, along with Śrīnātha, governs the Transmission of the Skyfarers (khecarakrama). This is pure consciousness. The Divine Current (divyaugha) is also called the Current of the Flower (puṣpaugha) because it flows through the Point in the centre of the maṇḍala where the goddess resides as the uninterrupted Command which is the Flower of Knowledge, that is, the Transmental (unmanā). She is Śāmbhavī, the Nityā Malinī who is venerated in these verses in the Transmission of the maṇḍala of the Teachers of the Command. Encapsulated by the Five Praṇavas, she is the Vidyā of the Full Moon (25-31)

All the following verses up to the end of this chapter are also in sragdharā. The first twelve of them are numbered separately in the MSs. The first six (33-38) present the goddess as Śāmbhavī, 'the mother of liberation' who resides in the End of the Sixteen. She is in the six sacred seats of the hexagram and is accompanied by eighteen phases. These are the Skyfaring Siddhas of the Divine Current of the Flower. Then come three verses praising the Vidyā who, divided into sixteen pairs of syllables is the sixteenfold Command preceded and followed by the Five Praṇavas, identified with the five sacred seats. Her Vidyā is given in the reverse order. Here it is:

---

[1] Although this section begins with the goddess saying: Next, O Kuleśvara, I will talk about the Western Weapon (ataḥ parataraṁ vakṣye [g: vakṣe] paścimāstraṁ [g: -mātraṁ] kuleśvara), it is not labelled, as one would expect, 'astrasūtra'. The chapter simply ends here.

[2] Each quarter of the metre Śārdūlavikrīḍita consists of nineteen syllables, as follows: - - - | * * - | * - * | * * - | - - * | - - * | - / *). Each quarter of Vasantatilaka consists of fourteen syllables: - - *| - * * | * - * | * - * | - */-. Each quarter of Sragdharā consists of twenty-one syllables: - - - | - * - | -, * * | * * * | * -, - | * - - | * - - .

BHAGAVATI GHORE HSKHPHREṀ ŚRĪṀ KUBJIKE HRĀṀ HRĪṀ HRAUṀ ṄAÑAṆANAME AGHORAMUKHI CHĀṀ CHĪṀ KIṆI KIṆI VICCE[1]

How the Meru grid (prastāra) is drawn is described next (41-44). A series of thirty-two verses in sragdharā follow numbered separately, in each one of which a syllable of the Vidyā is given in the code names of the letters of Meruprastāra.[2] The metaphysical identity of each one, as an aspect as well as the totality of the flowing, lunar goddess who is the entire thirty-two syllable Vidyā is described and eulogized (45-68).

The Vidyā is stated in its entirety in reverse in the next verse (69). The following verse eulogizes the syllables of the goddess (70). She is praised as Nityaklinnā (71). She is praised as Kālakubjī present in the wheels and apex of the axis of the body (72) and as Rudraśakti (73). She is invoked as Kaulinī, who is the Command, and Saṁvartā (74). She is Khañjinī who is 'the stainless Kālī, the dense black sound (ravā) well accomplished in the End of the Sixteen'[3] (75). She is Kāpālinī who, unmanifest, pulses radiantly (prasphurantī) like the autumn moon (76). Next comes a eulogy of the Five Siddhas (77) and the maṇḍala with six parts (78) and the Triangle with its seats (79-83ab).

Chapter Thirty-nine: The Sūtra of (the Hymn) in Thirty-six Verses (ṣaṭtrṁśadvṛttyadhikāro nāma sūtram) (99)

This sūtra is a hymn in thirty-six verses set in sragdhāra followed by a postscript of twenty-nine ślokas[4] eulogizing its importance and effectiveness especially if recited in front of the maṇḍala. The first two verses praise Nirvāṇa. It is perfectly pure consciousness (caitanya) and the uncreated and undying Sound (rava) of the Lords of Mantras and Vidyās. It is attained on the path of the Siddhas. Intensely brilliant, it emerges spontaneously from the mouths of the teachers. The deity is the lord of the wise (sādhvīśa). It is unfailing knowledge, aesthetic delight (vitaritarasa) and complete insight (parijñānamātra) (1). Incomparable, it draws strength from itself (svaprabhāva) and, inaccessible to any means of knowledge, is solely one's personal experience (svānubhāvaikamātra) (2).

---

[1] Cf. YKh (1) 16/100ff and 17/3-7ab. See chapters 9 to 12 of the KuKh which deal with the goddess's Vidyā and its varieties.

[2] See KuKh 8/34cd-40ab and YKh (1) 34/34 ff..

[3] sā kālī niṣkalaṅkā asitaghanaravā ṣoḍaśānte prasiddhā || Ibid. 38/75d.

[4] Although this passage ends with a long colophon, it is not numbered as a separate chapter.

The next two verses are dedicated to Bhairava and the following ten (5-14) to the goddess who is variously named according to aspects of her metaphysical (niṣkala) nature. As 1) Kulālī[1] she is the bliss of the Command and Kuṇḍalinī. As 2) Saṁvartā, she is the all consuming Fire of Time (kālāgni). As 3) the goddess of the Tradition (Āmnāyadevī), her body is the Skyfarer and threefold, she is the Supreme Power (parā śakti). As 4) Kālī she is identified with Rohiṇī, the goddess of the constellation by that name, auspicious for those who seek victory in battle and the 'plane of victory' itself. 5) She is the threefold Nityaklinnā,[2] the Triangle aflame with the Point (bindu) and light of the Void. Finally, she is 6) Śāmbhavī who is -

> Śambhu's energy (śakti) who, when awakened, destroys the fear of phenomenal existence and is endowed with (the powers to) attract, paralyse, (arouse) passion (rati), control, melt, delude and (bestow) the Command of bliss (āhlādājñā). She is the stream of the qualities (of Nature). She rotates anti-clockwise and fills all things with the juices (generated by) the churning of passion (mada). Profound, she (has a) pulsing (lola) stick-like body whose form is crooked (kuṭila) and moves by the power of the lightning flash of consciousness (bodha).[3]

Next come the teachers. They are generated from the goddess and are aspects of her nature. First come the Five Siddhas and then the Kaula teachers of the cosmic Ages and their consorts. Belonging to the previous tradition (purvāmnāya), they prefigure the Siddhas who propagated the teachings of the subsequent (paścima) tradition. Similarly, the Five Siddhas who govern the five gross elements preceded them. They are linked by their common identity as the five cosmic forces. Next come the lauds of Vajrabodhi, who is identified with the First Siddha and then Vatsagulma.[4]

After these thirty-six verses the text returns to śloka. We are told that the cause and agent (kāraka) of the Principles is the goddess who is the supreme group of six (parāṣaṭkā). As she is the one universal cause, she is present

---

[1] See intro. vol. 2, p. 107-108 where some of these verses are translated.
[2] See intro. 2, p. 242-243.
[3] vāmāvartyā [g: -vartā] bhramantīṁ [g: -ntī] madamathanarasaiḥ pūrayantīṁ [g: -ntī] samastaṁ [g: -stad]
gambhīrām bodhavidyudbalacalakuṭilākāralolāṅgayaṣṭim [g: bhoda-] | āhlādājñāsamohadravaṇavaśaratistobhamākarṣaṇādyair [g: -dajñā- -vasarati- -dyai] yuktām vande guṇaughāṁ [g: guṇaugha] bhavabhayadalanīṁ [g: -nī] bodhitāṁ [g: -nā] śambhuśaktyā || Ibid. 39/14.
[4] See intro. vol. 2, p. 499 ff..

everywhere, as a part of the group of six (37). These are the six aspects of the goddess. They are not outer, iconic forms, rather they are aspects of her profound metaphysical identity. It is this knowledge, above all, that is transmitted in the teaching of the MBT, not ritual. Liberation is the goal and this can only be achieved by attaining the state which is the goddess's essential nature. Thus, after outlining the form and transmission of the Mata,[1] the sūtra concludes: 'It is said in the Vakrikāmata that he who reads (this), the entire meaning of the Mata, with good faith is a liberated soul and possesses the Command' (55).[2]

Chapter Forty: The Sūtra of the Extraction of the Maṇḍalas of the Teachers (Gurumaṇḍaloddhārasūtra) (100)

This sūtra deals with the extraction of five mantras for the maṇḍalas of the five elements beginning with Earth up to Space (1-133ab). The extraction is done variously in the reverse or forward order, mostly in the code of the `Extraction of the Chalk' (khaṭikoddhāra),[3] that is, the grid of Meru (merumaṇḍalaprastāra). Another code is derived from the sonic iconic form of the goddess Mālinī. The goddess begins by announcing that she will expound the kramoddhāra of the maṇḍalas. These should be worshipped first and then the lineage of the transmission (kramasantati) (1-2). The five maṇḍalas are those of the Five Nāthas who are the first teachers represented by the Five Praṇavas projected into the centre of the maṇḍalas. These should be present at the beginning and end of each mantra. Thus the five maṇḍalas are an important part of the worship of the Krama and its maṇḍala. Worshipped together, they form the nucleus of the Gurumaṇḍala. A sixth maṇḍala completes the Gurumaṇḍala which is described next. The extraction of a secondary mantra from the Merugahvara associated with those of the Circles completes this topic (133cd-155). The sūtra moves on to the extraction of the Kaulika Gāyatrī, the Vidyā of twenty-four syllables (caturviṁśatikā). It is in three parts of eight syllables each. These are the Vidyās, Vajrā, Anāyakā and Mālinī (156-173ab). The sūtra concludes that this teaching should only be given 'to one who is devoted to the Kumārīs and yogis and intent on the Kālikāgama. One who is consecrated here and a teacher (bodhaka) of the Kālikāgama. One attains Mahatārikā once abandoned the Tāntrika state (bhāva)'.[4] [1] Quoted above on p. 115.

---

[2] suśraddhayā ca sakalaṁ matārthaṁ yaḥ paṭhiṣyati |
ājñādharaḥ sa muktātmā ity uktaṁ vakrikāmate || Ibid. 39/55.
[3] evaṁ te maṇḍalāḥ pañca (g: nāsti) khaṭikoddhāre (k: ṣaṭikodvāre) prakāśitāḥ (k: -tā) |
YKh (1) 40/123cd.
[4] kumārīyogibhaktāya [k, gh: kumārīyogibhakṣāya; g: -yoni-; ṅ: kumārīyogi-] kālikāgamatatparaḥ [k, ṅ: kārikāgamatatparā; gh: kārikāgamatatpara] ||
atraiva [ṅ: + va] cābhiṣiktaśca kālikāgamabodhakaḥ |

Chapter Forty-one: The Sūtra of the Extraction of the Sequence of Twenty-Seven (Saptāviṁśatikramoddhārasūtra) (107)

The colophon says that this is a sūtra. Even so, I treat it as a separate chapter (ānanda) subdivided into sūtras, which is more appropriate. It deals with the extraction of the mantras that make up the Transmission of Twenty-seven, into which `the inner principle is divided' and is the form of the specific Krama taught in the YKh. A separate sūtra is dedicated to each group. The yogic planes (bhūmikā) and their permutations corresponding to each group were taught in an occult way in the bhūmikās in chapters twenty-nine to thirty-two. Here we find the mantras of the Krama presented in code. The code is in most cases derived from the Meru grid which here is called the Merugahvara (rather than Meruprastāra). It is also called the Khaṭikā. This word literally means 'chalk' probably with reference to the powdered chalk used to draw it. As usual, this triangular maṇḍala is drawn first (3-9ab). Then the teacher should extract the letters from it one by one as indicated by the text.[1] An important feature of these mantras is that the entities of each group to which they refer are projected into the Wheels (cakra) of the subtle body. These may be six Wheels or just three depending on the number of mantras in each group.

The names of the sūtras speak for the mselves. They are:

1) The Sūtra of the Extraction (of the mantras of) the Group of Four Sacred Seats (Pīṭhacatuṣkoddhārasūtra) (101) (9cd-74)

2) The Sūtra of the Extraction (of the mantras of) the Group of Five Jewels (Ratnapañcakoddhārasūtra) (102). These are a series of mantras dedicated to the myriads of Yoginīs in the sky, space, the wind, the mortal world, and the world of snake gods (75-142).

3) The Sūtra of the (mantras of the) Six (Ṣaṭkārasūtra) (103). These are the mantras of the Six Yoginīs, also called the Group of Six Mothers (mātarīṣaṭka), who govern the vital constituents of the body (dhātu). They may be worshipped in two modalities. One is to grace, which nourishes, and the other is restraint, which punishes the enemy. In this case, they are worshipped in the latter modality as the Sextet of Restraint (nigrahaṣaṭka). This, the Tantra tells us, is quite proper as the use of this modality in the Krama makes one 'hard to look at' by one's enemies. As they differ in this respect from the others (that all serve to grace), these mantras are extracted from a different grid called the Vajraprastāra[2] (143-194).

---

tyaktvā [k, gh, ṅ: tyaktā] ca tāntrikaṁ bhāvaṁ sādhayen mahantārikām [k, gh, ṅ: mahatāritā] ||
Ibid. 40/177cd-178.

[1] See the introduction and notes to chapter eight of the KuKh for an explanation of how this is done.

[2] See Schoterman 1981: 189 ff. for a description and diagram of this grid drawn from the ṢSS and

4) The Sūtra of the Group of Four Siddhas (Siddhacatuṣkasūtra)[1] (104) (4) (195-206).
5) The Sūtra of the Extraction (of the mantras of) the Pure Pentad (Vimalapañcakoddhārasūtra) (105) (5) (207-230ab).
6) The Sūtra of the Triad of the Command (Ājñātrikasūtra) (106) (6). This sūtra concludes with the extraction of two ancillary mantras and the declaration that 'the essence of the secret of the Yoginīs has been revealed.'[2] (230cd-269ab).

Chapter Forty-two: The Extraction of the Mantras Required to Purify the Substances Offered in the Rite of Adoration (Pūjādravyasaṁskāra-mantroddhāra) (107)

This long passage is not labelled as a sūtra or separate chapter (ānanda). However, like the previous sūtras, it is concerned with the extraction of a series of mantras and so has been treated as a separate unit. The previous chapter dealt with the mantras of the Krama, this one deals with a set of sixteen mantras used to purify the sacrificial offerings. They are: 1) the mantra used to fashion the maṇḍala (maṇḍalikamantra) (13-19); 2) Navātman (20-28ab); 3) Devīdūtī, also called Bhairavadūtī Vidyā, used to purify the sacrificial vessel and the sacrificial substances in it (28cd-47ab). The following mantras serve to purify and 'give life' (saṁjīvanī) to 4) the vessel for the sacrificial water (toyapātra) (47cd-50), 5) the flowers offered in the rite (51-57), 6) the sandalwood (58-65), 7) the lamp (66-69); 8) the incense (70-75), 9) the sacrificial food (naivedya) (76-88), and 10) the libation (argha) (89-95). 11) The next mantra is used to worship the Vidyāpīṭha (where the scripture is placed) (96-97ab). The next two mantras 12) and 13) are uttered when eating caru (97cd-100ab). The last three mantras are used 14) to separate the rite into sections (pūjāvidhāraṇa) (100cd-102), 15) throw away the remnants of the offerings (nirmālyakṣepaṇamantra) (103-107ab) and 16) consecrate the skull (viśvāmitrakapāla) (107cd-112ab).

After the colophon come five terse verses that summerize very briefly the form of the rite and the offerings. Their function is, as the text says, to define the 'convention' (saṁketa) that establishes the form of the rite and are, effectively, a sūtra (saṁketa) (108). Once the offerings have been made `the great soul' is invoked to stay firm in order to protect the Vidyāpīṭha where the scripture is kept its commentary.

[1] One would expect a colophon here saying 'iti siddhacatuṣkasūtram' in accord with the general form of presentation. Nonetheless, this is clearly one of this set of sūtras.
[2] yoginīnāṁ ca [g: nāsti] sarvasvaṁ [gh: -sva] rahasyaṁ saṁprakāśitam [k, gh, ṅ: sapra-] || Ibid. 41/268cd.

and worshipped. And then, in the middle, presumably of the Vidyāpīṭha, Manthānabhairava manifests.[1] Thus his direct relation with the Tantra is evident.

Chapter Forty-three: Concerning Tripurābhairavī

There is no colophon at the end of the previous passage although the subject changes abruptly. Accordingly, I treat this as the beginning of a new chapter dedicated to the cult of the goddess Tripurabhairavī which the Tantra calls the Tripurākrama taught in the following passages, numbered (1) to (8).

This long section is introduced by three and a half verses in sragdharā which describe the outpouring of energy from the Triangle out into the sacred seats in the six corners of the surrounding hexagram. This is the Yoni (bhaga) identified initially with Yakṣiṇī Raudrī who is 'aroused by the five arrows' of the god of love. Called the excellent abode of the Three Cities (tripurapura), it is the tripartite unitary energy of the Transmental. However, instead of being identified and praised as usual as the goddess Kubjikā, it is lauded as Ekavīrā, whose six aspects are projected into the sacred sites located in the corners of the hexagram. These seats are the usual four along with Kulūta and Ujjayanī.[2] Thus Ekavīrā, an aspect of Tripurabhairavī, is dovetailed into Kubjikā's essential attributes whilst avoiding her characteristic association with Candrapura which regularly figures in the expanded format of six seats.

This section, dedicated to the goddess Tripurabhairavī, as are the chapters dedicated to her in the KuKauM, are important for the historian of South Asian religions. This goddess, who still continues to be worshipped independently,[3] is an immediate precursor of her well known namesake Tripurasundarī, the goddess of the Śrīvidyā tradition. We have seen that the triangle in the centre of her maṇḍala, the famous Śrīcakra, is essentially Kubjikā's Triangle. In this passage we find it still in place, as it were, in the hexagram and identified with Tripurasundarī's precursor who is, in her turn, implicitly equated with Kubjikā, the goddess who embodies the energy of the Transmental.

---

[1] tiṣṭha [k, gh: tiṣṭa] ādau [g: ścādau; ṅ: mvādau] mahātmānaṁ [g: -māna; ṅ: madātmānaṁ] vidyāpīṭhasya [g: -pīṭhaṁ] rakṣaṇe ||
tathā [g: ?] madhye [k, g, gh, ṅ: madhya] samutpannaṁ mahāmanthānabhairavam [k, gh, ṅ: -va; g: ?] | YKh (1) 42/113cd-114ab.

[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 665-666, for translation of this passage and diagram.

[3] Tripurabhairavī is worshipped for example in Benares where she has a small temple close to a ghāṭ named after her. There her presence is represented, as gods and goddesses commonly are, by a brass mask. A piece of cloth hangs from her lips which is said to be the remains of the garment worn by a victim offered to her she is believed to have eaten. Concerning Tripurabhairavī see intro. vol. 2, p. 216 ff..

The following passage describes the 'visualization of the thirty-six principles' (ṣaṭtriṁśattattvadhyāna) beginning with Earth and ending with Śiva (5-21ab). This is the body (piṇḍa/preta) pervaded by Vāgbhava, Kāmarāja and Śakti, which are the three syllables of Tripurabhairavī. Above that are six ascending levels of Unstruck Sound. By 'abandoning the six' one attains the liberated condition of the Transmental in the End of the Twelve, which is the City of the Moon, the abode of Kubjikā's tradition (paścimāmnāya). The last six stages are six aspects of the goddess Tripurabhairavī arranged in the hexagram with Ekavīrā in the central triangle as the seventh beyond where liberation is attained (21cd-36). The Mata refers to this as the 'descent of Tripurabhairavī'[1] who is thus essentially Kubjikā, the energy of the Transmental and the Śāmbhava state (40).

Then comes what the text calls her 'staff' (daṇḍa) and the Deposition of the Fifty relating to Tripurā (pañcāśattripurānyāsa), that is, fifty Yoginīs corresponding to the letters. In this way the adept acquires the goddess's body.[2] The Tantra calls this the Tripurādhārasūtra (1)[3] (41-70).

After projecting thirteen of these fifty goddesses into as many sacred seats (71-81), the next passage begins concerning the mantras of the 'great transmission of Ekavīrā' (ekavīrāmahākrama) (82-83ab). It opens with the root mantra of Ekavīrā followed by the projection of the goddess's six limbs (aṅgaṣaṭka) (2). These are a series of six mantras all of which refer to the goddess as the Yoni (bhaga). This is followed by the mantras of the five 'great arrows' (mahābāṇapañcaka) (3), then a deposition of sixteen mantras on the body (ṣoḍaśakalānyāsa) (4) and ends with the mantras accompanying four ritual gestures (mudrācatuṣṭaya) (5), all of which are related to Kāmadeva.

Next come a series of visualizations (dhyāna) of aspects of this goddess. First comes her 'root form' (mūlasvarūpa) as Kuleśvarī. She is Śāmbhavīśakti, Bhairavī and Kāmeśvarī who, as the energy of passion (kāmaśakti), is in the Point. She is Ekavīrā whose first descent into the world is in the Western House and is the arousing and passionate Bhairavī in the 'northern face'.[4] We note that according to the description of Kubjikā's form with six faces in chapter 29 of the KuKh,[5] this face is indeed Tripurā. She is the Kuleśvarī of this Kula She is alone,

---

[1] *ity avatāraṁ [k, gh: itye-] prathamaṁ jñātvā tripurabhairavīṁ [g, ṅ: -vī; gh: -bha * vī]* ||
YKh (1) 43/40cd.

[2] kulanyāse [k, gh, ṅ: -vyāse] kṛte samyak devyādehadharo bhavet |
tena dehena [g: dehana] siddhyati [k,g, ṅ: -yanti] muktirasti [k, gh: bhuktirasti; ṅ: bhuktiramvi] kulāgame || Ibid. 43/69cd-70ab.

[3] tripurādhārasūtro 'yaṁ YKh (1) 43/70c.

[4] niṣkalā sakalā sā tu ekavīrā mahābalā ||
avatāraṁ tu prathamaṁ kurute [g: kauṅkaṇe] paścime gṛhe |
bhairavī uttare [k, gh: uttara] vaktre kṣobhaṇī sarvakāmikā ||
sā tu mūlasvarūpe tu madirodadhimadhyataḥ [g: ma i ro-] | YKh (1) 43/89cd-91ab.

[5] See KuKh 29/49.

without a consort (ekavīrāvidhāna). After describing her inner nature, the text goes on, as usual, to describe her outer form. She has one face and four arms. She holds five arrows in the left hand and a bow in the right (83cd-101ab). We are not told what she holds in the other two hands; they probably hold a noose and gaud, as does Kāmeśvarī, who is still commonly depicted and worshipped by the Newars in this form as Tripurā.[1]

As her name suggests, she has three aspects. These correspond to her three syllables: Vāgbhava, Kāmarāja and Śakti. The first is the energy of the will that emerges from Śiva within Vāgbhava as the white Sarasvatī. She has one face and four arms. She holds a book and a rosary, makes the gesture of knowledge and holds a waterpot (101cd-104ab). The second is Kulavāgeśvarī who belongs to the division of Manthānabhairava. According to the prescription (vidhāna) of Ekavīrā, she is red and holds a fetter and goad, bow and arrows. She is linked to Kāmarāja (104cd-107). The third form is Viśveśvarī and her syllable is Śakti. She is white like crystal and has four arms. Only two are described. These are the gesture that grant boons and free from fear. (108-110)

These are the three aspects of Ekavīrā. The other three Bhairavīs are Kumārikā, Klinnā and Mahantārikā. The first is the goddess of the 'first division'. She is related to Vāgbhava and corresponds to the Transmission of the Child of the Śrīkrama. The second is the goddess of the 'division of the youth' (kaumārabheda) who is linked to Kāmarāja and corresponds to the Transmission of the Youth. Mahātārikā is old (vṛddhā) and so corresponds to the Transmission of the Aged. These are the forms of Tripurā in the hexagram. Kuleśvarī alone, as Ekavīrā, is in the middle of the first triangle surrounded by her three aspects corresponding to the seed-syllables on the corners of the triangle. presumably, these may be worshipped in the triangle alone. The hexagram is formed by adding the other three who are in the corners of the second triangle. So this Krama is 'sevenfold'

Kumārikā has one face and is red and 'comes into being in the great forest of lotuses within the Liṅga with the western face'.[2] She utters all the scriptures and is blood-red. She 'oozes and is ecstatic, with her mind formed from the energy of the consciousness of passion'.[3] She is mounted on a 'ghost' and is seated on a solar disc. She holds a skull, trident and scalpel in her right hands and an ascetic's staff, mirror and citron (bījapūraka) in the left (111-126).[4] Thus she is virtually the same as the form of Tripurā described in the KuKauM.[5]

---

[1] For a modern Newar image of Tripurasundarī as Kāmeśvarī see Dyczkowski 2004: plate 6.

[2] mahāpadmavane jātā liṅge [k, g: liṅgaṁ; gh: liṁga] vai paścimāmukhe [k, g: paścimāṁ-] | YKh (1) 43/116ab.

[3] sravantī ullasantī ca kāmacitkalacetasā || Ibid. 43/123cd.

[4] The text says Kumārikā has four arms but lists these six attributes in her hands.

[5] See below, p. 346 ff..

Mahāklinnā, also called Tripurā Klinnā, belongs to the second division, which is that of the Youth (kaumāra). She is also red and oozes (sravantī) into the Kramamaṇḍala,[1] filling it with her blissful energy. 'Not troubled by passion' (akāmārtā) she sports with Kāmadeva, the Lord of Love (Kāmarāja), who is on her left in Kāmarūpa. She has five faces and twelve arms. With her six right hands she hold a book, makes the gesture of knowledge, holds a noose, the bow of passion, makes the gestures of bestowing boons and Yoga. With her left hands she holds a rosary made of a garland of severed heads, an ascetic's pot (kamaṇḍalu), noose, goad and makes the gestures of fearlessness and Yoga. A garland of Yonis hangs from her neck and she sits on a ghost in the middle of the lunar orb and is accompanied by Kāmadeva (126-142).

Mahantārikā, who is 'penetrated with tamas'[2] and is 'very red' (mahāraktā), is the goddess of the third division, which is that of the Transmission of the Aged. Alone, without Kāmadeva, she is mounted on a Great Ghost. She has six faces and eighteen arms. Unfortunately, we are not told what she holds. She is within the maṇḍala of the New Moon. She resides in the Nandana forest as do all the forms of Tripurabhairavī but, fiercer than the other forms, she wears a garland of severed heads and lives in cremation grounds and solitary places. Free of the illusion of passion and the God of Love (Kāmadeva), she is without passion when her nature is not passion and she is passionate when it is.[3] (143-163)

To conclude, the Tantra explains that: Kuleśvarī, Kumārikā, Mahāklinnā and the Mahantārikā are the four types of Tripurā who are worshipped along with the three types of Bhairavī. The seven, Ekavīrā, Vāgeśvarī, Kāmeśvarī, Viśveśvarī, Bhairavī, Klinnā Bhairavī and the aged Bhairavī, Mahantārikā are her names when she is projected into the hexagonal maṇḍala with Ekavīrā in the centre. This passage concludes with the statement:

> (Thus, this) has been explained according to the Path of the Left in the Manthānabhairavatantra as in a division (bheda) of nine and seven which is in the transmission of the great Nityā. I (the goddess) have spoken about (this) reality (tattva) hidden in all the Tantras. The sevenfold Dhyanasūtra (7) that belongs to the Tripurākrama has been taught (in this way).[4]

---

[1] saṣaḍaṁgā [ṅ: ṣaṁḍaṁgā] akāmārtā śravantī kramamaṇḍale || YKh (1) 43/129cd
[2] mahāntatamasāviṣṭhā [k: mahāṁtaṁtamasā-; g: mahāntaṁ--viṣṭān; gh: mahātaṁtamaṣā?-; ṅ: mahāntaṁ tamasāviṣṭā] bhairavī [k, gh: -vīṁ] mahatārikā [k, g, gh, ṅ: -kāṁ] || Ibid. 43/143cd.
[3] *kāmamāyāvinirmuktā [g: kāmanāya-; ṅ: kāmarāgavinirmuktā] kāmadevavivarjitā [g: -deva * jitā] sadā [ṅ: nāsti]* || [k, gh: nāsti]
akāmākāmarūpeṇa [g: akāmāt-] kāmarūpeṇa kāmikā | Ibid. 43/148.
[4] navasaptakabhedena mahānityākrame [k, gh: mahānitya-] sthitam ||

The concluding verses list the benefits. An interesting one is that the adept does not feel fear whether in the court of a king or a cremation ground. In short: 'if in the midst of enemies the body of the Vidyā is without stain (nirañjana) (one has both) worldly benefit and liberation otherwise (neither) develop'.[1]

This consideration leads to the next topic which is the Liturgy of Ekavīrā (ekavīrāpūjākrama)* (114) (8). Entirely in prose, it begins with the drawing of the Prabhāmaṇḍala and the worship of nine Yoginīs by means of which the Vidyā can be purified. Then comes the method of worshipping the house (gṛhayāgavidhi) in which the rite is performed. This consists of projecting a set of eight mantras into various parts of the building. The manner in which the maṇḍala of the Tripurākrama is drawn and worshipped is described next. This consists of a lotus with eight petals in the centre of which is Ekavīrā who, also called Maṅgalyā, is surrounded by her aspects, which form part of the Tripurākrama.

After the series of mantras comes a long prose section describing the external worship (pūjā) of the Nine Nityās. This is coupled with the inner ascent through the stages of Unstruck Sound, that is, Kuṇḍalinī, that mark the rise of the vital breath.[2] After this comes the liturgy (krama) of Ekavīrā proper, first in verse, which then reverts to prose. The main subject here is a description of the stages in the development of Sound beginning with the vowel A I E and the syllable AIṀ. This is coupled with the movement of the breath. Then the offering of lamps is described which ends with the Samayavidyā of Bhagamālinī, the main goddess (pradhānā) of Kāmarūpa. After a few more concluding ritual actions, the next rite begins. Then come a series of mantras and depositions for the worship of Kumārī that is called the Kulakumārikākrama.

Concerning the Sacrifice of the Nine Nityās in (the section) called Ekavīrā Tripurā (ekavīrātripurābhidhāne navanityāyāgādhikāra)

The chapter[3] concludes with the worship of Nityaklinnā and the mantras for the Nine Nityās associated with Tripurā. They are: 1) Kulanityā 2) Vajreśvarī ākhyātaṁ vāmamārgena [g, ṅ: -ṇa] bhede [k, gh: bheda] manthānabhairave |

khyātaṁ tattvaṁ [k, g, gh, ṅ: tatva] mayā deva sarvatantreṣu gopitaṁ [k, gh: mopitaṁ] || saptadhā dhyānasūtraṁ ca nirṇītaṁ tripurākrame | Ibid. 43/169cd-171ab.

[1] arimadhye yadā [k, gh, ṅ: yatna; g: yanna] bhaved [k, gh: bhavad] vidyādehaṁ niraṁjanam |
*tadā [g: sadā] bhogaṁ ca mokṣaṁ ca anyathā naiva [g: ?; ṅ: nai ] vardhate [g: ?] ||
Ibid. 43/179cd-180ab.

[2] It concludes with the statement: This, the excellent sacrifice (dedicated to) Tripurā has been explained according to the division of the places (that mark the stages of Sound).
ity uktaṁ sthānabhedena tripurāyāgam uttamam || Ibid. 44/2cd.

[3] This chapter is numbered forty in the manuscripts.

3) Tvaritā 4) Kurukullā 5) Lalitā 6) Bheruṇḍā 7) Nīlapatākā 8) Kāmamaṅgalā and 9) Vyomavyāpinī.

All the MSs except one end here. Although there is the long final colophon which marks the end of a text, it is clear that the text has been cut short. The numbering of the folios of the sole manuscript[1] that continues further indicates that twenty-one folios are missing after the previous colophon. So it is not possible to ascertain what has been lost there. The remaining part of the text consists almost entirely of short sūtras. The first three sūtras deal with the mortuary rites performed for a deceased initiate (kulaśrāddha). Through this rite (śrāddha) a worshipper of the Krama is liberated. They are: (115) the Sūtra dealing with the Funerary Rites (antyeṣṭisūtra), (116) the Sūtra concerning the Prescription for the Offerings to the Ancestors (śrāddhavidhisūtra), (117) the Sūtra concerning the Prescription for the Offerings to the Ancestors in Another Way. (aparapakṣaśrāddhavidhi). Next comes the Pañcapraṇavasūtra which is reproduced in chapter 54 of the KuKh. This is followed by the Dvādaśāślokasūtra*. The core of this disordered sūtra is reproduced in the KuKh[2] and is commented in the Ṭīkā.[3] Dvādaśaśloka is a name for the syllable HSKHPHREṀ. After the first introductory verse that refers to this as the Single Peak Syllable (ekākṣarakūṭa), six mantras are presented for the six sacred seats that correspond to the six letters of this seed-syllable. Then the syllable is extracted in code. The Caitanyamāhātmya is a brief eulogy of the power of this syllable, which is also called Caitanyakūṭa.

The next passage is called A Description of the Glory of the Repetition of the Vidyā in the Prescription concerning the Current of the Vidyā (vidyaughavidhāne japamahātmyavarṇanam). It is labelled as a separate chapter (ānanda). All of it up to the last but one line is largely reproduced in the KuKh.[4] Most of this passage is also found in the ŚM,[5] although a few verses there are not in the same order. It is followed by the Sūtra* of the Teaching of the Convention (Saṅketanirṇayasūtra) The first verses of this sūtra, in which the goddess questions the god concerning the nine 'conventions', is found in the KuKh.[6] This sūtra supplies replies to these questions. An unlabelled passage[7] comes next

---

[1] This is MS G. See bibliography.
[2] KuKh 9/2cd-9ab.
[3] See notes to the translation for details.
[4] See KuKh 12/22cd-42 and notes. The colophon in YKh (1) reads: iti śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre vidyoghavidhāne [vidyāgha-] japamahātmyavarṇe kramodayo nāmānandaḥ. The colophon in the KuKh ends: vidyāmāhātmyavarṇanādhikāre kramodayo nāmānandaḥ.
[5] See notes ibid. for details.
[6] See notes to KuKh 39/113-115ab, where this sūtra has been quoted and translated.
[7] Folio 196 of the MS is illegible. It contained the end of this section and the colophon. Perhaps this passage was called melakasūtra or the like.

concerning the inner assembly (melaka) of Yoginīs and Siddhas. This is the projection of the sacred seats into the centres within the body coupled with the higher principles that are traversed in the upward ascent of the breath. After this comes the Sūtra* concerning Gestures *(Mudrādhikārasūtra) This sūtra deals with *mudrā*s mostly in terms of the movement of the vital breath, location of the metaphysical principles, the sacred seats and the like. The next unlabelled passage[1] is in sragdharā.[2] It integrates the material of the Saṁvartāsūtra and the Root Sūtra which describe the progressive emanation of the parts of the Sequence of Twenty-eight and the formation of the maṇḍala. Next comes the Sūtra* concerning the End of the Sixteen (ṣoḍaśāntamuktisūtra). A few lines at the beginning of this sūtra are missing. It describes the sixteen stations up to the End of the Sixteen beginning with the Wheel of the Foundation.[3] The last passage which concerns the same sūtra (ṣoḍaśāntamuktisūtrādhikāra) begins with a few beautiful verses describing the black lunar goddess who resides in the End of the Twelve. This is followed by the concluding verses of the KMT with which this khaṇḍa ends.[4]

The Second Recension of the Yogakhaṇḍa

There are two recensions of the Yogakhaṇḍa. Although a substantial part of the second recension of the YKh is common with the first recension - enough for us to speak of two recensions - we also find there important contributions to the development of the doctrine of the Śrīmata in twenty-four thousand verses. Amongst them is the extensive development of the goddess's myth in novel perspectives.[5] Another is the full development of the lineages of teachers.[6] We should not be mislead by the name I have given this text. Its high quality and the numerous passages drawn from it that are incorporated into the KuKh and other Kubjikā Tantras, amply attest to its importance and substantial individual identity. Unfortunately, only two manuscripts have been recovered so far. They are very closely related and both start and break off in the same places, suggesting that one may well be the copy of the other, or that they are both copies of the same original. About half the text is common to the first recension from which the second appears to have been derived. The places where the two tally are recorded below in the notes to the summary of YKh (2).

---

[1] Folio 200b, where this section ends along with the colophon, is illegible.
[2] The first four verses are in the notes to KuKh 2/7cd-8ab. The rest are in the notes to KuKh 26/25.
[3] See intro. p. vol. 1, p. 417 ff. for a translation.
[4] These are KMT 25/189-199, 221.
[5] See intro. vol. 1, p. 157 ff..
[6] See intro. vol. 2, p. 536 ff..

Both recensions are built up in the same disordered manner out of sūtras loosely arranged into chapters. The first five chapters of the second recension correspond to chapters 12 to 15 of the first recension. Even though the material is essentially the same, (although there are a good number of substantial variants) and presented in the same order, the divisions between the sūtras and chapters differ in several instances. This may be because their earlier fragments - sūtras and *stotra*s - existed initially independently or as part of an earlier recension. These chapters are mostly concerned with a description of the eight sacred seats. YKh (1) is particularly fond of the system of eight sacred seats where it is presented in numerous ways as the main maṇḍala of the Bhairavakrama that is worshipped and expounded in parallel to that of the goddess, the Śrīkulakrama. This is not the case in the YKh (2) or, indeed, in any other Kubjikā Tantra.

The passages that are common to the two recensions of the YKh may be the result of a reworking and supplimentation in the second recension of these passages drawn from the common source of both, namely, the original sūtras. The presence of additional sūtras in the second recension is for the same reason and because new ones were written after the compilation of the first recension. There are evident developments in the teachings of this recension, with respect to the first one. For example, we have observed that the first recension hardly refers to the lineages of Siddhas established after the first transmission. The situation in the second recension is much more developed. There they are presented in an extensive and systematic manner. Thus one can surmise that the final redaction of the second recension post-dates that of the first one.

The substantial number of chapters YKh (2) shares in common with YKh (1), especially those that describe the eight pīṭha system, YKh (2) are a clear sign that it was intended to be aligned to YKh (1). Indeed, it is not unlikely that it was redacted with the intension either of inserting it into YKh (1) or as an alternative, authoritative version. The divisions of the sections into sūtras and *ānanda*s is another sign that this was intended. Hardly more than a quarter of the material in the second recension is found only there. What is not common to the first recension is found mostly in the Kumārikākhaṇḍa. While it is probable that the second recension is drawing from the first, it is more likely that the KuKh is drawing from YKh (2). The KuKh may have drawn from a common, original source which may have been a more complete version of the YKh that contained all the extra material found in the second recension, but this is unlikely. Some, at least, of the extra sūtras must be later than those of the first recension. When we find the same material in both recensions, it is usually presented in a more ordered and polished manner in the second one, although the division of the text there also is not entirely coherent. The reader is referred to the summary of the first recension for accounts of chapters and sūtras common to the second one and to the corresponding passage in the KuKh and translations where they are noted.

Summary of Contents

1) The Hymn to the First Descent (Ādyāvatāradaṇḍaka)
2) The Descent of the Scriptures (Āgamāvatāra)

These two Ānandas are two parts of chapter (ānanda) 12 of YKh (1) and so may be treated conveniently together. As the usual introductory dialogue between the goddess and the god is missing, it is possible that this recension did not originally begin here. However, one does not get this impression. The text does not start abruptly as if after a sudden break. On the contrary, it opens with a verse in praise of the goddess that may be taken to be the standard maṅgalācaraṇa.[1] It goes on to describe in theological terms first Bhairava and then the goddess. The god is astonished to see the goddess in an elevated state and intones a hymn to her modelled on the Mālinīstava. Although her emergence from the Liṅga is not mentioned here, it is clear that this is meant to be a re-enactment of that primal theophany. As in the original myth, the goddess is pleased by the hymn and imparts the Command to the god. However, in this case there is an extra crucial detail. The goddess transmits the scripture to him. The Sūtra of the Descent of the Krama Scripture (kramāgamāvatārasūtra)[2] which describes the stages in which the scripture was 'brought down to earth' follows naturally after this. In YKh (2) this sūtra is presented as a fully fledged chapter (ānanda) with a long colophon and called Āgamāvatāra as is the hymn and the preamble that precedes it. There is no break in YKh (1) between the hymn and the sūtra. After the hymn in YKh (1) the goddess responds by saying that she is pleased and goes on to describe herself again briefly, declaring that the hymn is part of all the transmissions (krama). The god then tells her that he is frightened and pleads to be saved from the 'terrible ocean of saṁsāra'. This is missing in YKh (2). There the second chapter begins directly after the hymn with the goddess's declaration that she is pleased with the god and then goes on to impart the sūtra. We find the same lines in YKh (1) but there they are redundant. She has already said that before. In YKh (1) the hymn is called Ādyoghadaṇḍakastotra - the Hymn to the Primordial Current. In YKh (2) it is called Ādyāvatāradaṇḍaka - the Hymn to the First Descent implying that it is not only the 'descent' of the goddess into the world but also of the scripture. In short, one gets the impression that the redactor of YKh (2) has tidied up the text. However, was it originally drawn from the first recension or from another common source?

---

[1] YKh (2) 1/1 ff. = YKh (1) 12/1 ff.. See intro. vol. 2, p. 130-131.
[2] Most of this sūtra has been translated above p. 42 ff..

3) 3) The Sūtra concerning the Descent of the Sacred Seats (Pīṭhāvatārasūtra)

The third ānanda of YKh (2) corresponds to chapters 13 to 15 of YKh (1) where the eight sacred seats are described.[1] In keeping with the generally more ordered arrangement of the material in this recension, an ānanda is made up, as one would expect, of sūtras related to a single subject. This, the first sūtra, is the first part of chapter 13 of YKh (1). It lists the sixty-four units that constitute the basic four sacred seats.

5) 4) The Sūtra concerning the Great Iconic Form of the Goddess (Devyāmahāmūrtisūtra)

This sūtra describes the six sacred seats and their arrangement in the hexagram. It corresponds to the second part of chapter 13 of YKh (1).

5) The Sūtra of the Teaching (Upadeśasūtra)

This sūtra corresponds to chapter 14 of the first recension.

6) The Sūtra of the Teaching concerning the Sacred Seat of Oṁ which belongs to the Khecara Transmission (khecarakramādhikāre oṁkārapīṭhanirṇayasūtraM)

This and the following four sūtras constitute the Transmission of the Sacred Seats (pīṭhakrama). They expound the group of eight sacred seats and cover the remaining part of chapter 14 and most of chapter 15 of the first recension.

7) The Sūtra concerning Jālandhara (Jālandharapīṭhasūtra)

8) (The Sūtra concerning Pūrṇagiri) (pūrṇagirisūtra) colophons mark the end of the passages dealing with the seats Oṁkāra, Jālandhara and Kāmarūpa each stating that it is the sūtra concerning that particular seat. However, there is no such colphon at the end of the passage dealing with Pūrṇagiri. Similarly, the conclusion of the sūtras concerning the remaining four seats after Kāmarūpa are also missing.

[1] See intro. vol. 1, p. 666 ff..

9) The Sūtra of the Sacred Seat Kāmākhya (Kāmākhyapīṭhasūtra)

5) 10) A Description of the Liturgy of the Kula tradition divided into Sixty-four divisions with relation to the Sacred Seats (Pīṭhādhikāracatuḥṣaṣṭhibhedabhinnakulāmnāyapūjākramavarṇana)

The entire section dealing with the eight seats is marked by a concluding colophon as the end of an ānanda. While, one would think that it should be numbered, it is not, whereas the Oṁkārapīṭhasūtra is numbered as the fifth. I have therefore moved that number to the end of the colophon of this ānanda. This minor emendation sets the rest of the numbering, as we find it in the manuscripts, in relative order. Nonetheless, however, some inconsistencies remain. These are due, as this case exemplifies, to the irregular division of the text into sūtras and ānandas.

Note also that although it makes good sense to order these sūtras into a single chapter, the title of the chapter is not entirely congruent with its contents. The 'division into sixty-four' refers to the group of four sacred seats each of which contains sixteen units. This is the subject of the first sūtra in this series (i.e. the sūtra concerning the Descent of the Sacred Seats). Thus the corresponding passage in first recension is called that 'the group of four sacred seats divided into the sixty-four divisions of the Śrīpīṭha' (śrīpīṭhacatuḥṣaṣṭibhedabhinnapīṭha-catuṣka).

6) 11) The Sūtra concerning the Descent of the Scripture (Āgamāvatārasūtra)

The sūtra proper is prefaced with a few verses concerning the Ninefold Krama (1-10). The sūtra, a part of which has been translated above,[1] concerns the revelation of the scriptures (11-29).

7) 12) The Sūtra of the Tradition of the Scripture belonging to the Lineage of Teachers (Pāramparyāgamāmnāyasūtra)[2]

---

[1] See p. 42 ff..

[2] YKh (2) 7/2-3ab; 5cd-9; 13cd-24; 26cd; 27ab; 28-29ab; 29cd-30ab = YKh (1) 27/ 38cd-39; 40-44ab; 46-58ab; 59cd; 59ab; 60-61ab; 62. The last line of YKh (2) 7 is missing in YKh (1) 27. Just after the last line in YKh (2) comes this colophon: iti caturviṁśatisāhasre pāramparyāgamām-nāyasūtram || 7 ||

Instead of that last line YKh (1) read pūjayet tat prayatnena sarvasvañ ca nivedayet | (k: nāsti) 27/63ab. Then after a short digression, the last line of this passage in the YKh (1) declares that this is the āgamāmnāyasūtra (āgamāmnāyasūtredaṁ [k: -statredaṁ] ākhyātaṁ [k: ākhyāṁtaṁ] ciñciṇīkule || YKh (1) 27/66cd). See above, p. 166.

This sūtra is the second of three that constitute chapter 27 of the first recension. There no colophon marks the end of it although the last line, missing in the second recension, notifies the reader that it is the Āgamāmnāyasūtra. It is followed by a few verses that have little connection with the sūtra. In the second recension the sūtra appears as a compact whole. This is achieved by adding verses to the end that relate well to the subject, namely, the importance of the scripture. The core of this addition is drawn from the last chapter of the KMT where the scripture of 24,000 verses is mentioned. The purpose is to identify it with the MBT. Again one gets the impression that the sūtra was drawn from the first recension and them redacted with more care (30 verses).

8) 13) The Sūtra of the Teaching concerning the Seat (Āsanāmnāyasūtra)

This sūtra describes the formation of the seat upon which the officiant sits. It is essentially a maṇḍala of the quarters guarded by five lions for the main directions and the centre and eight lions and Mothers around them. It serves to generate a divine body (divyadeha) for the officiant who does this by depositing the six limbs of the Vidyā on his body and its vital constituents (dhātu) while sitting on the seat (1-28ab)

9) 14) **(?)

The colophon of this sūtra or chapter is missing and so we do not know its name. The topics discussed in it are the drawing of the maṇḍala (1-11), the projection of the sacred seats and the Krama of Twenty-seven Divisions into the maṇḍala (12-16), the projection of the sacred seats into the directions and six limbs (17-21), the projection of the Sixteen Teachers (puruṣa) into the maṇḍala and the body along with their worship in the directions (22-37ab)

10) 15) The Sūtra concerning Liberated Worship (Nirvāṇapūjāsūtra)

These nineteen verses layout a series of homologies with the parts of the body, senses and the like and the objects, offerings and rites of purification and adoration.

11) 16) Concerning the Sūtra of the Peak syllable of Emanation and Destruction (Sṛṣṭisaṁhārakūṭasūtrādhikāra)

This and the following sūtra are also found in the first recension (1-30ab, 30cd-37).[1]

17) Concerning the Sūtra of all the Traditions (Sarvāmnāya-sūtrādhikāra)

12) 18) The Liturgy of the Wheel of Klinnā (Klinnācakrapūjākrama)

This rite is also called Śāntayoga or Bhagayāga. It is essentially Kaula ritual intercourse (maithuna). The maṇḍala is drawn first and food offerings are made to the deities in it and the Kaula partner. The text continues:

> Once (the female partner) has been made blissful with mantras, worship the secret place (guhyasthāna). Consecrating it with the three seed-syllables of the Liṅga, touch it. O lord of the gods, first of all insert the right index finger. Move the tongue around there and insert the Liṅga. Then by means of (the movement of the vital breath called) the weapon of intercourse (helādaṇḍanaya) merge into the supreme power. Contemplate one's own Self in the form of Bhairava and that beautiful Yoni (bhaga). The expert should kiss (the consort's) eyes and ears with vigour (yatnāt) and slowly kiss (her) navel, heart, and throat. O lord of the gods, one should contemplate the divine form (mūrti) (of the Yoni) until it flows (with sexual juices). Then having produced the mixture of male and female fluids (kuṇḍagola) along with five nectars (of the bodily fluids) and worshipped the Krama and the scripture, O Bhairava, the Kula yogi, along with (his) partner (dūtī), should eat it with effort.[2] [1] This sūtra is also found in YKh (1) 27/9–39 which corresponds to YKh (2) 11/1-30ab and YKh (1) 27/1-8 corresponds to YKh (2) 11/30cd-37. See above, p. 128 for a translation.

---

[2] mantreṇānanditāṁ kṛtvā guhyasthānaṁ prapūjayet |
liṅgabījatrayeṇaiva abhimantrya [k, kh: abhimantrā] ca saṁspṛśet ||
prathamaṁ tāvad deveśa dakṣiṇāṁ tarjaniṁ [k, kh: tairjani] kṣipet |
rasanāṁ [k, kh: resanā] lolayet tatra liṅgaṁ paścād vinikṣipet || *helādaṇḍanayāstreṇa [k: - nayastreṇa; kh: helādaṇḍenayasreṇa] parāśaktyāṁ [k: -śakte; kh: (?) rāśakte] layaṁ nayet |
ātmānaṁ bhairavākāraṁ subhagāṁ [k, kh: śubhagā] tāṁ [k, kh: sā] vicintayet || akṣāṁś ca cumbayed yatnāt tāsāṁ karṇau [k, kh: karṇo] vicakṣaṇaḥ | *nābhiṁ ca [k, kh: nāsti] hṛdayaṁ [k: -ya; kh: hṛ * (?)] kaṇṭhaṁ [k: +ca; kh: (?)] cumbayet [k: cumvaye; kh: (?)] śanaiḥ [kh: (?)] śanaiḥ ||
yāvad [k: yāva] dravati [kh: (?)] deveśa tāvad [k: tava; kh: tavan] mūrtiṁ vicintayet |
saṁśritya kuṇḍagolaṁ tu pañcāmṛtasamanvitam ||
pūjayitvā kramaṁ pūrvam āgamaṁ [k, kh: pūrvaṁmā-] kulayoginaḥ |
paścāt taṁ prāśayed yatnāt [kh: yannāt] saha dūtyā ca bhairava || YKh (2) 12/7-12.

The section concludes with a brief reference to the worship of Viddhicakra, also called Bhagacakra, that contains ten Klinnā Yoginīs and five Puruṣas (1-20ab)

19) The Sūtra concerned with the Worship of the Goddesses who preside over the Sixty Years (Ṣaṣṭisaṁvatsarādhikāriṇīdevīnpūjādhikārasūtra)

This sūtra teaches how the goddesses and gods presiding over the cycle of sixty years are to be worshipped. The topic includes: the names of the Sixty Years in the Age of Strife in the Deccan[1] (21cd-27ab), the names of the Sixty Years and the auspicious and inauspicious events associated with them in accord with their names (27cd-43), the goddess in authority over each of the years (44-53ab), the way to worship the sixty goddesses at inauspicious times (53cd-57), the goddesses worshipped each year and the benefits of doing so (58-88). They should be worshipped in their corresponding year on the eighth and fourteenth of the bright fortnight of each lunar month. They give accomplishment (siddhi), liberation and bestow boons.

13) 20) The sūtra of the Sacrificial Substances and the Flowers used for Purification (Dravyasaṁskārapuṣpasūtra)

This short sūtra of just 19 verses is the same, apart from a few lines missing at the end as the Sūtra concerning the Krama (Sacrificial) Substances with which chapter twenty-two of the first recension begins.

14) 21) The Sūtra of the Extraction of the thirty-two (syllable Vidyā) of the Goddess and Aghora (dvātrīṁśaddevyās tathā aghorasyoddhārasūtram)

This sūtra is virtually the same as chapter 16 of YKh (1).

15) 22) The Teaching concerning the lineages of the Divine and other currents in the Descent of the Four Ages (caturyugāvatāre divyaughādi-pāramparyāmnāya)

This chapter is dedicated to a description of the lineages of teachers.[2]

The mantra is: AIṀ GUHYAKUBJIKE HRĪṀ HA HA HA

[1] *ṣaṣṭisaṁvatsarāḥ [k, kh: -rā] khyātāḥ [k: -tā; kh: -sarā * (?)] kalau vai dakṣiṇāpathi || YKh (2) 12/43cd. Concerning the cycle of Sixty Years, see KuKh 32/1-15 and note.

[2] See intro. vol. 2, 536 ff. where most of this chapter has been translated.

16) 23) The Descent of Śrīnātha in the Authority of the Divine Command (divyājñādhikāre śrīnāthāvatāraḥ)

This chapter is essentially a version of the goddess's myth. Although recognisable as such, it is retold with considerable differences in many details.[1] (1-240)

24) The Daṇḍakastotra, a Kaulika (stotra dedicated) to Vaiṣṇava bliss (daṇḍakastotraṁ vaiṣṇavānandakaulikam)

This is Śrīkaṇṭha's hymn to the goddess when she appears out of the Liṅga. She is praised as Viṣṇu and other deities, many of whom are mentioned in the original Mālinīstava on which it is modelled. It is in prose and inserted between verses 143 and 144

17) 25) The Descent of the Siddhanāthas and concerning the Observance of the Initiation Performed in relation to the Years (siddhanāthānāmāvatāre sāṁvatsarakramadīkṣānuṣṭhānādhikāraḥ)

This chapter, like chapter 15, is concerned with the line of teachers (gurupaṅkti), otherwise known as the Current of Teachers (gurvogha). In the initial preamble the teachers are delineated in their standard groups of three along with the Nine and Sixteen Nāthas initiated in Koṅkaṇa (1-10). Next come the three lineages (oli), their founding Siddhas and their transmissions (krama) in relation to the three sacred seats of the intellect, mind and ego and the forms of the Command that operate in them (11-35ab). The following topics are: cosmogony and the generation of Navātman in relation to the Divine Current (35cd-40), the descent of the Couple, Śrīnātha and Ciñcinī (yugmāvatāra) (41-44ab), the Current of the Persons (puruṣaugha), namely, the Nine Siddhas, their location in the subtle body and worship (44cd-61). Next come the sixteen disciples of the three Persons. Externally, they are the sixteen disciples in Koṅkaṇa in the Kali Age (70cd). Full of the sixteen energies of the lunar vowels, they are in the Supreme Self (62-65). The inner locations of the Sixteen Persons are listed next (66-70), the distribution of the sixteen in the three Olis (71-2) and conclusion (73-79). Next come the birthdays and places of descent of the Nine Siddhas (80-95), the birthdays (abdodaya) of the Sixteen Siddhas (96-112ab), the location of the Teachers in the maṇḍala where they are worshipped (112cd-117), the liturgy (krama) of the worship of the groups of the lineages of teachers (118-

[1] This chapter has been translated in intro. vol. 1, p. 157 ff..

121) and, finally, the convention (saṁketa) concerning the places in the body where the disciples are projected (122-126ab).

18) 26) Concerning the Rite of Restraint and the Worship of the Venerable Group of Six (Śrīṣaṭkakramapūjānigrahādhikāra)

The topics of this chapter are the Five Jewels[1] (1-20), the group of six peak syllables (kūṭaṣaṭka), the Six Wheels and the Six Yoginīs[2] (21-48ab), the worship of the Six Yoginīs (48cd-52ab), the drawing of the hexagonal maṇḍala (52cd- 56ab), the projection of the seats onto the hand (56cd-57), and animal offerings for the rite that restrains the wicked (nigraha) (58-75ab).

19) 27) The Descent of the Śāmbhava Command (Śāmbhavājñāvatāra)

The first six verses of this chapter deal with the Vow of Knowledge (vidyāvrata). Drawn originally from the TS, they are also found in the KuKh.[3] As there is no connection with what has gone before and what follows, it appears that these verses are misplaced here. This is all the more apparent as Śrīnātha now goes on to say that he has heard what was discussed in the previous chapter and wants to know more, namely, the teaching concerning the Śāmbhava state of Ādinātha which is 'beyond mantra and Tantra' (7-12). The goddess responds by telling him about the inner teaching (adhyātma) that should be kept secret. This is Khecarīmudrā (13-34), which is the Transmental (31).[4] Next comes inner, mental worship of the Transmental (35-39ab), the excellence of a true yogi (39cd-42), in praise of the mother and Śrīnātha (43-4), concerning the Āgama (45-50ab), the goddess Kālikā and Kumārikā, the Śāmbhavājñā, and the Skyfaring goddess who is the lunar energy of the Void (khakalā) (50cd-54).

The goddess is pleased with the god's praises. Penetrating one another, they are an inseparable couple. She is the seventeenth energy and the couple is the eighteenth. The true nature of the Divine Current can only be taught by the goddess to one such as Bhairava, who is truly devoted to her and is in his last birth. The goddess extols Bhairava and describes his inner nature as Navātman (55-85). The Goddess Khecarī declares her excellence and describes her subtle metaphysical nature. She goes on to describe herself as the energy of [1] Concerning the group of mantras called the Five Jewels, see chapter 62 of the KuKh.

---

[2] Concerning the Six Yoginīs, see chapter 63 of the KuKh.

[3] KuKh 14/1-6.

[4] Here Kubjikā is implicitly identified with the goddess Kālī who is 'in the middle of the twelve suns and abides as the twelve (forms of) light (bhāsā)' (dvādaśārkādimadhyasthā bhāsā dvādaśasaṁsthitā || YKh (2) 19/33cd). These are the Twelve Kālī's of Anākhyacakra - the most important Wheel of the Kālīkrama.

HSKHPHREṀ. She is the energy who binds and liberates (86-90ab). Born to Dakṣa and reborn in the mountains to marry Bhairava in the Void for the sake of emanation. Her differentiated (sakala) form is clothed with the network of energies (90cd-94). The undifferentiated (niṣkala) form is neither male nor female. The essence of all the energies, she is established in the Transmental. Subtle like a woollen fibre, she emits the three worlds by means of Viṣṇu's Māyā. She is Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī[1] (95-101).

The goddess describes her iconic form and her essence, which is Mind beyond Mind. She is Vaiṣṇavī, Guhyakaulinī and Khecarī (102-109ab). The goddess now talks to the god, tells him who he is and describes him (109cd-117ab). Śrīnātha responds by describing himself (117cd-122ab). Śrīnātha now modestly tells the goddess how she is in relation to him (122cd-134). Then the god falls at the goddess's feet with eyes full of tears in adoration. Seeing him in this condition the goddess lifts up the god and, telling him to not feel shame, enlightens him as to his true eternal nature. (135-146ab).

20) 28) The Sūtra of Twelve Verses (Ślokadvādaśakasūtra)

These twelve verses describe Kubjikā as Kuṇḍalinī in the centres in the subtle body and as the Skyfaring Goddess - Khecarī - in the Void beyond.

21) 29) The Great Sūtra (Mahāsūtra)

This sūtra, consisting of six and verses and an extra line in śragdharā, is another description of the maṇḍala. In many respects it is an expanded version of the long Saṁvartāsūtra and serves, effectively, as a commentary on it. In this version the units of the Krama, the deities, Siddhas and other elements of it are located in the maṇḍala and concisely described in the usual cryptic style of these texts. It deals mostly with the hexagram. This is described first, then the lotus with eight petals around it, followed by the inner triangle with Siddhanātha, that is, Bhairava, in the middle.

22) 30) The Sūtra that explains the Descent and Re-birth of the Goddess (Devyāvatārapunarjanmāvabodhasūtra)

This is a short hymn to the goddess set in seven verses in sragdharā. Her form and activity in the End of the Twelve is described and how nectar rains down from the Cavity of Brahmā. She is also present in the Six Wheels and is

---

[1] sṛjantī bhuvanānīha [k, kh: -nāstrīṇi] trīṇy ahaṁ [k, kh: sṛjantī] viṣṇumāyayā ||
kālasaṁkarṣaṇī ghorā amoghāghorarūpiṇī [k: amāghā-] | YKh (2) 19/99cd-100ab.

Kuṇḍalinī, the Command of the Skyfarers (khecarājñā). She descends into Dakṣa's sacrifice and Voidness. She moves within the Void by means of the Six Wheels. She is the energy of the Triangle and is called Koṅkaṇā. She is the Yoni, the Mother, Nityā and graces the whole universe. She is manifest in the Triangle amidst the three Siddhas. She is Carcikā, the Skyfarer and the Mother of the Three Worlds (tribhuvanajananī).

23) 31) The Sūtra called the Description of the Iconic forms relating to the Six, Ḍākinī and the Rest (Ḍādiṣaṭkādhikāramūrtivarṇanasūtra)

This sūtra is a hymn to the Six Yoginīs.[1] One verse in sragdharā is dedicated to each one, all of whom are equally said to be the 'mother of the three worlds'. A seventh verse is dedicated to the one called Kuṇḍalā who 'on the seat of the Command' is within these six modalities and on the path of liberation. The last verse is in praise of the Divine Skyfaring (khecara) Liṅga.

24) 32) The Sūtra of the Meruprastāra consisting of the fifty sacred seats (Pañcāśatpīṭhameruprastāra)
33) (Gahvarakramasūtra)

The first ten verses of this chapter correspond to the second half of chapter 51 of the KuKh,[2] which draws its name from this sūtra. The following four and a half verses deal with the same subject and can be read in continuity with the previous sūtra even though they are considered in both YKh (2) and the KuKh to be separate sūtras.[3] The MSs of YKh (2) signal that another sūtra ends there but its name is missing. The manuscripts of the KuKh label these verses simply 'the Sequence of the Grid' (gahvarakrama) which is presumably the name of the sūtra.

34) The Main Sūtra of the Lineage (Pradhānasantānasūtra)

This sūtra, consisting of just 15 verses, and the following one are found in the KuKh. The colophon in YKh (2) is a simple short one whereas in chapter 53 of the KuKh it the usual long one. There the chapter is simply called Concerning the Sūtra of the Lineage.[4]

---

[1] See chapter 51 of the KuKh concerning these Six Yoginīs.
[2] KuKh 51/15cd-26ab.
[3] They correspond to KuKh 52/1-3ab.
[4] santānasūtrādhikāro nāmānandaḥ. See below, concerning other lineage sūtras.

25) 35) The Sūtra concerning the Maṇḍala which is the Object of Worship (Ārādhyamaṇḍalasūtra)

This sūtra is only nineteen verses long. It is chapter 55 of the KuKh.[1]

26) 36) The Sūtra of the Fifty Verses Concerning Kaula (Kaulapañcaśikāsūtra)

This sūtra presents fifty explanations of the meaning of 'Kaula' in as many verses (1-48).[2] In these definitions Kaula is presented as the supreme yogic state and hence ultimate reality realised in a number of ways. The first two verses can serve as an example of the tone of this sūtra:

> Once known the teaching of one's own Kula, (the state of) pervasion prevails by the practice of the Yoga of Concentration (samādhi). That is (the reality called) Kaula of the votaries of (the doctrine of) Kaula.
>
> (The reality that is realised in the body) beginning from the toe and ending with the topknot by contemplating the (body consisting of the) six aspects (through which Kuṇḍalinī moves in the Six Wheels)[3] is that Kaula (reality) of Kaulikas and the complete conquest of death (kāla).[4]

27) 37) (?)

The name of this sūtra is not legible in the two available manuscripts. At the beginning of the following sūtra the goddess says that she has heard the Ādisūtra, which may be the name of this one. It consists of thirty-six and a half verses. The goddess begins by describing her own metaphysical nature (1-3ab). The sūtra goes on the explain that the supreme plane is the Paścimāmnāya (3cd-5), Pentads - the Five Brahmās – and the path of emanation is fivefold separately

[1] The colophon of chapter 55 of the KuKh simply says: iti śrīkādibhede ārādhyamaṇḍalavidhāna-sūtram.

[2] MS Kh numbers the verses of this sūtra from 1 to 50 which confirms that this was the original number of verses. However, due to scribal errors some numbers are missing and with them, presumably, the two verses that would make the full compliment of fifty.

[3] The body is said to be Kula and the body consists of the six aspects.
kulaṁ śarīram ity uktaṁ śarīraṁ ṣaṭprakārakam | YKh (2) 26/49cd.

[4] svakulasya vicāraṁ tu jñātvā vyāptiḥ [k, kh: vyāpti] pravartate |
samādhiyogasyābhyāsāt taṁ [k, kh: tāṁ] kaulaṁ kaulavādinām ||
aṅguṣṭādiśikhāntaṁ vai ṣaṭprakāravicāraṇāt [k, kh: -prakārai-] |
taṁ kaulaṁ kaulikānāṁ ca kālasya [k, kh: kālāsyā; k: + pari] parivañcanam || YKh (2) 26/1-2.

in each particular division of it (6-11), the Kula tradition at the end of the Age of Strife and the goddess's descent into the world (12-16), liberation is attained at the extremity of the three Voids and the End of the Sixteen (17-20ab), the Four Siddhas who have authority in Koṅkaṇa (20cd-27), the sixteen disciples and their countless spiritual descendents, the descent of the scripture when barbarian rule is established and conclusion (28-37ab).

28) 38) The Topknot Sūtra of the Kādi Division (Kādiśikhāsūtra)

The name of this sūtra is explained in the body of the text. This is the Topknot Sūtra, the sūtra which is above (the other) sūtras (of the MBT).[1] It is forty-seven and a half verses long. The Topknot - Śikhā - is the goddess herself:

> The Topknot of (the Transmissions) of the Child, Youth, Aged and that of Mātaṅga, the Skyfarer, abides in the sequence sūtras, that is, in the Supreme Brahman which is called Śaiva. She is the supreme Command, the energy called Bhaga (i.e. the triangular Yoni) which is the threefold modality.[2]

This sūtra is dedicated to the goddess in her two aspects - undifferentiated (niṣkala) and differentiated (sakala). The first is her essential 'waveless', (nistaraṅga) tranquil form within Śaṁkara in the centre of eight-spoked Nirvāṇa Cakra at the end of the Topknot in the End of the Twelve. She is Ciñcinī, the Mother of the universe, the Void, and consciousness established in the Śāmbhava state.

> She is realised to be beginningless consciousness and is well known in the Ciñciṇī Kula. She is Vakrikā (and as Kuṇḍalinī) her form is crooked. She is the Moon with beautiful radiant energy. Pervasive in her supreme form she stands at the head of (all) the transmissions.[3]

The differentiated (sakala) form is the main Goddess of the Command (ājñāmūladevī). She is the one syllable mantra and is within each living being (jīva). She is visualized as having four arms. In the right hand she holds a jar full

---

[1] śikhāsūtram idaṁ sūtraṁ sūtrāṇām upari sthitam | YKh (2) 28/46ab.
[2] bālakaumāravṛddhasya [k, kh: -kaumāla-] mātaṅgakhecarasya [k, kh: mātaṁgokha-] ca |
parabrahmaṇi [k: -brahmavi; kh: -ni] śaivākhye śikhā sūtrakrame sthitā ||
ājñā sā paramā śaktir bhagākhyā yā gatis tridhā [k, kh: gati-] | YKh (2) 28/26-27ab.
[3] anādibodhasaṁsiddhā prasiddhā ciñciṇīkule |
vakrikā kuṭilākārā candrarūpā [k: andra-; kh: aṁḍarūpā] sutejasā ||
vyāpinī pararūpeṇa kramāṇāṁ mūrdhni saṁsthitā | YKh (2) 28/8-9ab.

of lunar nectar and in the left a blooming lotus filled with nectar. The other two make boon-bestowing and fear dispelling gestures (9cd-25). As the Command she is both the threefold energy of the Yoni (bhaga) and the Point that sprinkles the four transmissions with its current of energy. She is the supreme Kubjikā who resides in the Moon. This is the Transmission of the Topknot (Cūlikākrama) which is the measure (pramāṇa) of the deity whose body is the Vidyā. This visualization (dhyāna) of Kujā is the supreme plane of reality. Also called Kujā Yoga, it is the supreme goal. Those who attain it are liberated. (26-48ab)

29) 39) The Sūtra concerning the Great Sacrifice (Mahāyāgasūtra)

This sūtra concerns the inner Yoga associated with the performance of the fire sacrifice (mahāyāga). First the Kramamaṇḍala is prepared in the sacrificial area (yāgamandira) (lit. 'the temple of the sacrifice') followed by the preparation of the firepits representing the Moon, Sun and Fire by the utterance of seed-syllables (1-6ab). Once reached the Transmental level externally in this way the sacrifice is performed within the body. This begins with the piercing of the Foundations (ādhāra) in the subtle body of the officiant by the rise of Kuṇḍalinī until it reaches the End of the Twelve. Next the lunar nectar generated from the energy there is described (6cd-15). Then come six depositions onto the body. These are: 1) the Root deposition (mūlanyāsa). This is the purification of the hands (karaśuddhi) accomplished by two kinds of depositions onto the hands (16-23). 2) Kujā's deposition from the feet to the head (24ab). 3) and 4) The deposition of the goddess's faces and limbs (24cd-25). 5) The deposition of the sixfold energy (ṣoḍhā) (26). 6) The deposition of the mantra called the Twelve Verses and summary (27-29).

The six depositions generate the sixfold body of Kujā endowed with which the sacrifice (yajana), including Yoga, visualization and austerity can be performed. As the text says: 'all the worship associated with the Krama is accomplished by means of Kujā's body'[1] (30-33).

The worship of the three Khaṇḍas of the Āgama (34-52ab)[2] is followed by that of the Svacchandatantra, Bhairava (who reveals the Mantramārga), the five lords of the lineages (olinātha) and the maṇḍala (52cd-56ab). Next comes the projection of the Five Praṇavas onto the body and hands, the worship of Olinātha (the teacher of the universe) and the ninefold Gurumaṇḍala. Once this has been done the worship of the Transmission (kramārcana) can take place (56cd-61ab).

---

[1] kramāyātārcanaṁ [k: kramayātā-; kh: kramacātārccanaṁ] sarvaṁ kujādehena siddhyati ||
YKh (2) 29/32cd.

[2] This passage is quoted and translated above, p. 98-99.

30) 40) The Yoga of the Siddhas who are on the Plane of the Divine Current (Divyaughapadasiddhayoga)

The colophon does not specify that this is a sūtra. Moreover, it appears that two distinct passages have merged into one. The first passage concerns spiritual authority (adhikāra), that is, the sphere in which the energy of the Command operates. It opens with a brief account of the descent of the Great Transmission (mahākrama) from the Transmental down to the Abode of the Vehicle of Power (śaktiyāna), that is, the Triangle in the End of the Twelve where the goddess, as the essence of authority (adhikāratā), is the teacher in the three lineages (1-6). Descending further, the text refers to projection into the body from the head to the feet of the threefold reality and knowledge along with the sequence of letters, the seats and the 28 energies (7-9). Next come the 28 Oghas, the names of which are simply listed. These are subsidiary groups of mantras used in the worship of the Krama[1] (10-17). The list of units to be worshipped along with the Krama continues. These are the 86 divisions, the line of teachers, the limbs and faces of the Puruṣas (presumably the Nine and Sixteen Nāthas), the maṇḍalas, seats and pillars of the maṇḍala (18-20ab). Next comes a list of the set of ten teachings (āmnāya) one should know to be a teacher (20cd-24) and the six descents (avatāra) (25-29ab).

The following verses up to the end appear to constitute a separate passage which is named, as noted above, in the colophon. We find it at the beginning of chapter 69 of the KuKh.[2] Śrīnātha asks the goddess for the Command. She responds by ordering him to grace the world by means of the Command. Then comes a list of the Siddhas in the Ages and the day and lunar month when they received the Command. These include the fifth Siddha - Piṅgalarudra - who will come into the world at the end of the Kali Age (29cd-45ab). This Siddha went to Candrapura in the South India where other four Siddhas came into the world in the four Ages. (29cd-55)

31) 41) The Sūtra of the Goddess set in Twelve Verses (Khecarājñā-dvādaśavṛttasūtra)

This sūtra corresponds to the first twelve verses set in sragdharā of chapter 36 of YKh (1). There it is called the Khecarasūtra.

---

[1] aṣṭāviṁśatir oghānāṁ [k, kh: -oghāni] mantrarūpā [k, kh: matra-] prakāśitāḥ |
YKh (2) 30/17ab.

[2] YKh (2) 30/29cd-39ab, 42cd-55 = KuKh 69/1-24 to which the reader is referred. The passage missing in the KuKh (i.e. YKh (2) 30/39cd-42ab) is also missing in MS K of YKh (2). It refers to the evil portents and wars that will take place at the end of the Age of Strife to protect the Dharma. It appears to be an interpolation.

32) 42) The Sūtra of the Goddess set in Twelve Verses (Devyādvādaśavṛttasūtra)

The first twelve verses of this sūtra, set in sragdharā,[1] are a beautiful hymn to the goddess Kubjikā. She is eulogized in her maṇḍala where she is present in the mantras and its parts as various goddesses. This is followed by five and a half ślokas listing typical places where Kaulas practice (vīrasthāna) and this hymn is best recited and its fruits. (1-17ab)

33) 43) The Eternal Sūtra (Śāśvatasūtra)[2] This consists of 26 verses.

34) 44) The Sūtra of the Group of Six relating to Parā (Parāṣaṭka-nirṇayasūtra)

This sūtra is also found in the KuKh and the first recension of the YKh.[3] 35) 45) Both MSs break off before the end of the following chapter.

The Siddhakhaṇḍa

The Siddhakhaṇḍa differs considerably in its layout from the other two sections of the MBT. About two thirds of it is taken up by the presentation of mantras projected onto the body of the adept and those of the Krama projected onto the maṇḍala he worships. A specific feature of this section of the MBT, from which it derives its name, is that these mantras are all given in full, not in code. Thus, this is the section of the MBT dealing with 'siddha', that is, 'completed' mantras - 'siddha(mantra)khaṇḍa'. When mantras are not 'siddha' in this sense, they are kept hidden in a coded form and need to be 'completed' to be useable. There are various codes that we will have occasion to discuss elsewhere.[4] In the KuKh the mantras are denoted by short abbreviations,[5] as they are in the sūtras of the Siddhakhaṇḍa and elsewhere, for example, in the Ṭīkā. However, in the SKh, as in the Ṭīkā, after they are presented in this abbreviated 'sūtra' form, they are given in full. In those cases, the complete mantras are integral parts of the texts. The Ṭīkā is a commentary and so there this is as one would expect. The

[1] They are followed by the statement: 'these are the twelve sūtras that have come forth from the Kaulika Command (ity ete dvādaśa sūtrāḥ [k, kh: sūtrā] kaulikājñā vinirgatāḥ [k, kh: -tā] | YKh (2) 31/13ab).
[2] The MSs read: śamlatsūtram
[3] YKh (1) 29/169cd ff= KuKh 60/75-100.
[4] See chapter eight of the KuKh and the notes there.
[5] Concerning the use of abbreviation in the Kubjikā texts, see KuKh 2/28, note 54.

anonymous commentator of the ṢSS assists us in the same way in his commentary. In other cases, for example in some manuscripts of the ŚM, the full mantras have been inserted into the text by a learned scribe but are not really a part of it. Finally, we do occasionally come across mantras presented in full in the main body of the text.

Here we find a prototype of the liturgical text (paddhati) which, in practice, came to virtually replace the Tantras from which it is derived. A major concern of most Tantric texts is ritual. However, what they require for their performance and how they are to be executed are often presented in the Tantras in a manner that does not allow immediate application. Mantras are commonly in code and the rituals are simply outlined without exact prescriptions for their actual performance. Much was left to the teacher who transmitted the procedure he learnt from his teacher to his disciple. Thus, the Siddhakhaṇḍa, we are told, is obtained 'from the teacher's mouth' because success (siddhi) is only possible in that way.[1] However, as time passed, conditions changed and it became increasingly difficult for aspirants to spend the many years required to study the Tantras and to hear them explained. Thus, liturgical manuals (paddhati, pūjāvidhi) came to be written that furnished step by step instructions as to how rituals should be performed. Resolving many practical difficulties at a stroke, it is not surprising that, despite its obvious conceptual deficiencies, liturgical literature of this sort ultimately effectively replaced the Tantras themselves.

Despite the importance of liturgical literature for practicing Tantrics, very little research has as yet been done on it apart from Brunner's extensive work on the Siddhānta Somaśambhupaddhati. Although the earliest Tantric texts may well have been just collections of mantras, the absence amongst the earliest surviving Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava manuscripts of liturgical manuals is remarkable. Abhinava, writing in the first quarter of the 11th century, declares that there are many liturgical texts (paddhati) for the many traditions (srotas) of Śaivism.[2] Perhaps further research will uncover some of them. However, even if they existed in Śaivite or Vaiṣṇava Tantric circles in the 11th century or earlier, there can be no doubt that they were rare. This is a striking fact if we consider the immense proliferation of such texts subsequently. The details of these developments can only be learnt by specialised studies of single traditions to observe how this took place in specific cases. Such studies will, moreover, allow us to emerge out of the ideal world of the scriptures and their commentaries and the actual practice of Tantric cults, or at least their rituals.

---

[1] evaṁ gurumukhāt prāpya siddhakhaṇḍaṁ [k g: -khaṇḍa] vidhānavit |
guruvaktreṇa [g: -na] caikena [kh: -vaktrabhavaikena] siddhir bhavati śāśvatī [g: sāśvatī] ||
SKh 11/48.

[2] TĀ 1/14.

In the context of the Kubjikā Tantras we can observe the early formation of this type of text taking place in the Tantras themselves. The Siddhakhaṇḍa is an example of this phenomenon. However, although the mantras are presented in full, directions for the performance of the rituals are very brief. The most developed early example of a liturgical manual in the Kubjikā tradition is the Kubjikānityāhnikatilaka. This is an independent work by an author who takes care to make himself known and so distinguish his work from the anonymous Tantras.

A Summary of the Siddhakhaṇḍa

The division into sūtras is a prominent feature of the structure of the SKh, as it is of the YKh. About a third of the SKh consists of hymns. The rest is concerned with the presentation of mantras, both in groups and individually, and depositions (nyāsa) of them onto the body. These are systematically arranged in groups within sections and subsections that are labelled at the end with the name of the mantra, group of mantras or deposition. Although the SKh is divided up in this way into many passages, I have divided it into chapters. Four of these have a long colophon that contain to varying degrees most of what is found in the colophons of the KuKh. The others are short.[1] Four of the chapters are called '*sūtra*s'. One is called an ānanda, as are most of the chapters in the KuKh. The name of one chapter ends with sūtrādhikāra, one with sūtrānanda and one with just adhikāra. The remaining three, which are all concerned with the presentation of the mantras of the Kramas, are just the names of the chapters.

1) The Sūtra concerning the Liturgy of the Rite of Adoration (Pūjāpaddhatisūtra)

The SKh opens with the statement that the deity will explain the teaching of the Pūjāsūtra.[2] It consist of 212 and a half ślokas. It is called the Pūjāpaddhatisūtra in the colophon[3] and belongs to the Kādibheda. This may be a name of the MBT. However, it is not impossible that this sūtra originally existed independently and was affiliated to the Kubjikā corpus, which is designated here generically as the Kādibheda belonging to the 'original descent (of the scripture into the word)' (ādyāvatāra). We do in fact find the Pūjāpaddhatisūtra as an isolated fragment in a (12th or 13th century?) palmleaf manuscript.[4] However, the [1] Two of them simply say iti śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre, to which one adds kādibhede followed by the name of the chapter. Eight of them begin with ity ādyāvatāre seven of which continue with mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe.

---

[2] athātaḥ saṁpravakṣyāmi pūjāsūtrasya nirṇayam [g: nirnarṇṇayaṁ] | SKh 1/1ab.
[3] ity ādyāvatāre kādibhede pūjāpaddhatisūtram.
[4] NAK MS no. 1/1697 - 7/5 reel no. B 27/12.

colophon in that manuscript is the typical long one we find at the end of most chapters of the KuKh and the sūtra is converted, as it were, into a chapter (ānanda) that deals (adhikāra) with this sūtra.[1]

According to YKh (1), there are three Pūjāsūtras.[2] Section nine of the SKh is the Mahākramapūjāsūtra concerned with the worship of the transmission (kramārcana). A longer and more complex rite, the Mahākramārcana, was probably meant to be performed, as modern Newars still do, on special occasions, not daily. This Pūjāsūtra describes the basic rite prescribed (vidhi) for both the regular (nitya) and occasional rites (naimittika). In the former case it is done in brief in the latter extensively. As it is such a basic rite, it is worth summarizing the contents of this chapter in more detail.

The rite is performed by the initiate in a 'temple of the sacrifice' (yāgamandira) to which only he and other initiates have access. He begins with the purifying ablution. After he has bathed and made offerings, at the juncture of the day (sandhyā), he enters the temple and takes his seat in it (1-12ab). Then he deposits the deities onto the hands and body and makes a preliminary purification of the place and the offerings (12cd-15ab). The maṇḍala is drawn and the sacrificial jar is prepared. Ciñcinīnātha as Navātman and the goddess as the Vidyā are worshipped in it. The area is cleaned with the sacrificial wine in the jar (15cd-27). The maṇḍala is prepared with the purified substance in the jar and its five seats with the Five Praṇavas (28-39ab). This is followed by the purification and worship of the jar (called mantrapātra lit. 'vessel of mantra'), which is filled with the Five Sacrificial Substances[3] and meat. Then Rudraśakti is visualized as Śaśinī who is projected into the jar and fills it with nectar (39cd-50). The Five Nāthas and the Five Yoginīs representing the five Commands and the Five Elements are placed in five maṇḍalas around the Śambhumaṇḍala (51-71ab), which is then worshipped (71cd-74ab). Now the movement of energy within the adept first burns away (dahana) his impurities and then nourishes (āpyāyana) his pure body (74cd-84). This is followed by an analogous 'divine bathing' (divyasnāna) of the directions. This takes place by visualizing the supreme energy (kalā) and iconic form of the goddess of the adept's lineage (oli) and inwardly sprinkling his body with nectar (85-89ab). This is followed by the depositions of groups of mantras (oghanyāsa) (89cd-96) along with the limbs and faces of the goddess on the fingers of the hands and the five limbs of the body (97-111ab). Finally the adept contemplates himself as Bhairava surrounded by the eight Yoginīs (111cd-112).

Once the sacrificial area, maṇḍala and jar and the adept have been purified in this way, he can proceed with the rite of adoration. This begins, as usual, with the

---

[1] The colophon ends: pūjāpaddhatisūtrādhikāro nāmānandaḥ ibid. folio 25a.

[2] See above p. 124.

[3] See KuKh 29/43, note 30.

worship of the teachers. This is called Kramayoga and relates to the Great Current (mahaugha) of teachers from the Transmental to Śrīnātha (113-114ab).[1] The six parts of the Krama of Twenty-eight is then projected along the axis of the body from the heart down to the feet (114cd-118ab) and the six parts of it are worshipped in the six Wheels of the subtle body starting from the Command between the eyebrows down to the Foundation (ādhāra), in due order. Then the six parts of the Krama are worshipped on the face and the body by projecting the twenty-eight deities of the Krama into them (118ab-131). The goddess of the Kula is invoked and she is worshipped here with her faces and limbs. The Eight Mothers (kulāṣṭaka), the Nine Siddhas who are associated with Brahmāṇī, the Sixteen Siddhas in the Foundation, the girdle of the maṇḍala and the eight fields outside it, set in the directions, are worshipped next (132-136ab). After worshiping the Supreme Energy and projecting the limbs and faces onto the body, the icon of the goddess is placed on the syllable Vāgbhava (AIṀ) in the centre of the maṇḍala and the six faces and limbs of the goddess are energized with mantras (sakalīkaraṇa) (137cd-143ab). The vessel is filled with liquor (ali) and a liquid offering (arghya) is made to the goddess (143cd-145). The Principle of the Command (ājñātattva) is projected onto the six faces and limbs and worshipped (146-7) in the sacred seats (148-149ab) as is Gāyatrī in the middle and then the Eight Mothers (kulāṣṭaka) on the first, the nine Siddhas on the second and the sixteen Siddhas on the third girdle surrounding the triangle and hexagram in the centre of the maṇḍala (149cd-152ab). Once the main maṇḍala has been worshipped in this way, offerings are made to the 28 subsidiary maṇḍalas[2] and other groups (ogha) around the couple (yugma) in the centre of the maṇḍala. The offerings are described next (152cd-158ab). The goddess's Vidyā and other mantras are recited repeatedly (japa) at the end of the rite of adoration. This is followed by the contemplation (dhyāna), which is a vision of the supreme principle. Leading to the descent of the Vidyā in union with Śrīnātha (158cd-162ab).

The remaining rites concern the liquor and meat offerings along with lamps and their consumption by means of which the adept acquires magical and yogic accomplishments and even attains liberation. They begin with the offering of lamps to the Vīras, Yoginīs, Vīreśas and the Krama. The preparation of the lamps and the sacrificial food (caru) (162cd-164) and how it is cooked in a copper pot (165-8) is described next. A large lamp is fashioned with six faces in the company of the consort (dūtī), above which is placed a seventh one (169-170ab). The size, placement and colour of the remaining lamps in the triangle and the hexagram and those for the faces and limbs are outlined next (170cd-179ab). Next comes the preparation of a lamp with human or bovine fat (mahātaila) mixed with meat and the offering of the lamp to the three lineages, the Śāmbhavamaṇḍala (179cd-183ab) and to the Eight Mothers (kulāṣṭaka), Yoginīs and the rest (183cd-5). A triangular Yoni (bhagākāra) is made in the middle of the Kramamaṇḍala with vermillion and worshipped by placing a lamp on it and lighting it (186-7). Kneeling, the adept makes animal offerings (bali) to the Yoginīs and the rest and bows to the Krama (188-192). This is followed by a salutation to the goddess, the recitation of hymns (193-195ab) and the worship of young virgins (195cd-8). Vessels full of liquor are then offered to the Samayins and Vīras (199-201ab). Then, sitting on the 'tortoise seat' he consumes the 'lamps', meat, liquor and sacrificial food (caru) (201cd-207). Finally, the concluding rites include the dismissal of the deity and a plea for forgiveness of offences (208-211).

---

[1] This is also called Divyaugha. See intro. vol. 2, p. 408 ff..

[2] Concerning these maṇḍalas see KuKh 48/81cd-82 and notes.

2) The Sūtra of the Depositions (Nyāsasūtra)

The following section of the SKh is quite long. It begins with the Nyāsasūtra which may be the same as the thirty-first entry in the list of 107 sūtras. This consists of just nineteen verses (ślokas)[1] in which the names of 47 depositions (nyāsa) are listed. The projection of mantras onto the body, gross and subtle, serve to purify it and transform it into that of the deity whose body is made of mantras (mantratanu). Thus identified with the deity, the adept is ready to undertake the sacrifice, that is, the worship of the Krama. First come a series of preliminary depositions (1-7ab). These are followed by those of the Transmission of the Elders (7cd-10) the Youth (11-12ab), the Child (12cd-13ab) and universal ones (13cd-19).

The depositions listed in the sūtra, are then presented in full in a long passage that follows. This concludes with six forms of Gāyatrī mantra (called gāyatrīṣaṭka) dedicated to six founding Siddhas.[2]

Then comes a short passage of just three ślokas which describes the visualized forms of the goddess at the three times of day. It is simply labelled the 'three iconic forms of the (three) times of day'.[3] Was this originally a short sūtra?

3) The Sūtra concerning the Body (Dehasūtra)

The next part of the SKh opens with the god remarking: 'how can one who does not possess a divine body, sacrifice with the body of a fettered soul (paśu)?'[4]

---

[1] These verses end with the colohon: iti caturviṁśatisāhasre nyāsasūtram

[2] These are: 1) Mitranātha - Śrīkaṇṭha; 2) Ṣaṣṭhanātha - Śrīkumāra; 3) Śrīcaryanātha - Śrīnandirudra; 4) Oḍḍanātha [MS K: Odunātha; MS Kh: Oḍunātha] - Durvāsa; 5) Tūṣṇīśanātha - Sadyojāta; 6) Vṛkṣanātha - Śrīciñciṇīnātha

[3] The colophon reads: iti sandhyāmūrtitrayam

[4] divyadehavinirmuktaḥ [k g: -mukto] paśudehena kiṁ yajet [g: jayet] | SKh 3/1ab. The play on

Accordingly, he requests the goddess to tell him about the Sūtra of the Body (dehasūtra), the visualization and the crooked form of the goddess as Kuṇḍalinī. The goddess then responds by saying: 'O Śambhu, this is the best of sūtras that has been generated by Śambhu's will.'[1]

From these references it appears that these 10 odd verses are the Dehasūtra. They explain how the three forms of the goddess that are worshipped in the three lineages (oli) are related to the depositions and so, implicitly, their projection into the body. The concluding colophon calls it the 'division of the iconic forms (of the goddess in the) lineages' and presents it as a part of the Nyāsasūtra, [2] although the previous colophon had already signalled the end of this sūtra.

4) The Sūtra of the Descent of Śakti (Śaktyavatārasūtra)[3]

This may be the Śaktisūtra, which is the sixteenth in the list of 107 *sūtra*s. This sūtra, which is 38 verses long, describes the process of 'nourishment' (āpyāyana) or the 'generation of nectar' (amṛtīkaraṇa) in the body previously transformed into mantras by the depositions. This takes place in two phases. First the goddess, as Kuṇḍalinī, the energy of the New Moon (amākalā), rises and pierces through the centres of the body and so burns away impurities and comes to rest in the extremity of the Transmental in the End of the Twelve. This is followed by the second phase, which is the one described here, in which she, as the Full Moon, rains down nectar.[4] After the adept has been purified in this way, he is ready to begin the worship of the Transmission (kramārcana). Accordingly, the opening line of the following chapter announces the beginning of the next part of the rite, namely, the worship proper (pūjākhaṇḍa).[5] The sūtra closes with nine mantras to the Siddhas who govern the nine letters of the seed-syllable Navātman, so that worship can take place by the grace of Vṛkṣanātha, the first Siddha who is embodied in this seed-syllable.[6] words here cannot be translated into English. The word 'paśu' literally means 'fettered one'. The word originally denoted the sacrificial victim who is tied to the sacrificial post. So the god is asking here: how can the sacrificial victim offer the sacrifice?

---

[1] dehasūtraṁ tathā dhyānaṁ kuṭilārūpakaṁ [g: kuṭikāṁlārūpakaṁ] tathā ||
idaṁ [k kh g: eṣa] sūtravaraṁ śambho śambhor icchāsamudbhavam ||

[2] The colophon reads: *iti caturviṁśatisāhasre nyāsasūtre [k: -sūtra; kh: nyāsa * ; g: nāsti] olimūrtivibhāgaḥ. The visualized form of the goddess Kubjikā is described in KuKh 29.

[3] The colophon reads: ity ādyāvatāre mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe [kh: -bhairave-] śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre [kh: -sahasre] śaktyavatārasūtram [k kh g: śaktyā-] ||

[4] The passage has been translated in note 95 to KuKh 13/111.

[5] athāntaraṁ [g: atha anaṁtaraṁ] pūjākhaṇḍaṁ [k: -khaṇḍa] prārabhyate tad yathā || SKh 5/1.

[6] The Nine Nāthas worshipped in these mantras are 1) Kulanātha 2) Anantanātha 3) Kadambanātha 4) Vimalanātha 5) Advaitanātha 6) Tūṣṇīśanātha 7) Samayanātha 8) Śilāśekharanātha 9) Śāmbhavājñānātha.

The next two chapters are long *sūtra*s. They describe the worship of the Krama. This takes place in several modalities. The first part of the following chapter describes in brief the components of the first form of the Krama and how it is to be worshipped. This is followed by 'another teaching of the Kramasūtra'. The first of these chapters is called the sūtra of the Teaching concerning the Sequence of the Ten Currents (Daśaughakramanirṇayasūtra) and the second that of Twelve Currents (Dvādaśaughanityakramasūtra). A 'current' (ogha) in this context means a group of mantras.

5) The Sūtra of the Teaching concerning the Sequence of the Ten Currents (Daśaughakramanirṇayasūtra)

This sūtra begins with a few lines praising Raudrī, the 'mother of awakening' (prabodhajanani) and is followed by the Six Parts of the Bālakrama of Twenty-eight Units (1-9ab), the seat of 28 maṇḍalas and the 42 syllable Vidyā (9cd-11ab), the eight depositions that form Kujā's body which is the abode of the Self (11cd-13), a list of nine teachings (saṁketa) required to worship the Krama (14-18), salutation, prostration, circumambulation and conclusion of the first Kramasūtra (19-25). Now comes another teaching of the Kramasūtra.[1] This begins with the formation of the Gurumaṇḍala and projections into it. Śrīnātha is worshipped in the centre with flowers. Formation of the subsidiary maṇḍalas to the right and left that serve as the seats for Vaṭuka and the Yoginīs and the five maṇḍalas in front, along with the maṇḍala of the mudrāpīṭha (26-42), and two bali offerings to Vaṭuka and the Yoginīs (43-45). The burning away (dahana) of the officiator's impurities by the rise of Kuṇḍalinī is described next (46-53ab), which is followed as usual by the phase called 'nourishment' (āpyāyana) (53cd-55ab). Next comes Kujānyāsa the first part of which is the deposition onto the hands of the Six Faces and Limbs (55cd-59), followed by their projection onto the body (60-66), visualization with Yonimudrā, the projection of the Five Praṇavas into the seats prepared for the five offerings (67-70), and the projection of the six limbs into the offerings (71-74ab).

Next comes the worship of the scripture. This begins with the projection of the three parts of the Trikhaṇḍā Vidyā into the seats and the main maṇḍala (74cd-76) followed by the worship of the Kulāgama - the Kulālyambāmata (77-79ab).

[1] Or is another Kramasūtra meant? The first set of teachings end with the statement: 'The Kramasūtra, that has come through the transmission of the root lineage, has been spoken'. kramasūtraṁ samākhyātaṁ mūlānvayakramāgatam | SKh 5/25ab.
Now I will explain another teaching of the Kramasūtra.
athānyaṁ [k: athānyat] saṁpravakṣyāmi kramasūtrasya nirṇayam || SKh 5/26ab.

Then comes the worship of the Gurumaṇḍala[1] and the lineages of Siddhas (79cd-81ab). Then the Krama and its subsidiaries are projected onto the body (81cd-101ab), followed by the waving of lamps to the goddess Kujā and the offering of lamps to the Āgama (101cd-107ab). Then comes the repetition of the main mantra (japa) at the end of the rite of adoration (pūjā), then visualization which is the vision of the supreme principle (107cd-109ab), worship of Mahāsamayabhairavī with Yonimudrā, the Mūlasūtra and hymns, prostrations, circumambulations of the maṇḍala, recitation of Gāyatrī and bowing to the Krama (109cd-115). Seated on his 'tortoise seat' (kūrmāsana) the officiant finally consumes the caru (116-117). To conclude, the officiant rinses his mouth, bows to the Vidyā, dismisses the occupants of the maṇḍala, withdraws the flux of mantras into his heart, removes the maṇḍala, draws a square, offers flowers in it and leaves (118-123).

6) The Sūtra of the Twelve Currents (Dvādaśaughanityakramasūtra). The same rite is described in this sūtra as in the previous one with some variants. It consists of 85 verses.

7) After these two sūtras have outlined the ritual procedure, the SKh continues with a presentation of the mantras mentioned or alluded to in the sūtras that are required for it.

This section deals with the mantras of the preliminary rites common to all forms of the Krama that prepare for its worship. These include mantras for the internal and external preliminary ablutions (sabāhyābhyantarasnānavidhi), the offering of water (tarpaṇa) to the deities of the directions (lokapāla), those of the Five Praṇavas, and the nine planets (navagrahadeva). This is followed by the worship of the door (dvārapūjā) and the house (gṛhapūjā) where the ritual is performed and the procedure for the fashioning of the maṇḍala (maṇḍalanirmāṇavidhi). Then come the purification of the six kinds of sacrificial offerings (ṣaḍvidhadravyasaṁskāravidhi) and the worship of the vessel containing the sacrificial liquor (viśvāmitrakapālapūjā and alipātrapūjā). Animal sacrifices (balidāna) are offered to Vaṭuka, the Yoginī, the protector of the place (sthānakṣetrapāla), and the lord of the cremation ground (śmaśānādhipati) in the south, north, east and west, respectively and to the Yoginīs in all the sacred sites. The Vidyā of Mahābhairavī Juṣṭacaṇḍālī[2] the consort of the god (devāṅganadūtī)

---

[1] It contains the verses, probably originally from the ŚM, found also in the KuKh (48/12-14ab) and commented in the Ṭīkā that refers to them as the Gurumaṇḍalasūtra (Ṭ MS K fl. 87b). These describe succinctly the manner in which the Gurumaṇḍala is laid out. See intro. vol. 2, appendix 2, where the Gurumaṇḍala is described in detail.

[2] The visualized form of Juṣṭacaṇḍālinī Kubjikā is described in KuKh 49/23cd-43. See there and notes for details. She is born from the hair of Kubjikā's head and presides over this limb of her body.

is stated next and the Kula Gāyatrī. Then come the mantras for the worship of the Vidyāpīṭha where the Āgama is placed. Then those of the sixteen Śāmbhavasiddhas and the five Śāmbhava teachers and those used to worship the five teachers and the Five Dūtīs of the Śambhumaṇḍala. This is followed by the goddess's Vidyā of thirty-two syllables (dvādaśākṣarī),[1] the deposition of the goddess's six faces (vaktraṣaṭka), the deposition of the energies of sixty-four Yoginīs associated with the six faces (vaktraṣaṭke catuḥṣaṣṭidevatā-yoginīkalānyāsa), and the mantras of the six gestures associated with the six faces (vaktranyāsamudrāṣaṭka). After the mantras related to the six faces come those of the deposition of the goddess's six limbs (ṣaḍaṅganyāsa), the six gestures relating to the deposition of the limbs (aṅganyāsamudrāṣaṭka), projection of the thirty-two goddesses of the Vidyā onto the body (dvātriṁśabhedamātṛnyāsa), deposition of the sacred seats of the nasal syllables in the goddess's Vidyā (pīṭhānunāsikanyāsa), the deposition of the twelve Yoginīs (divyayoginī-dvādaśāṅganyāsa), purification of the sacrificial vessel (pātrasaṁskāra), and the mantras of the five seats (āsanapañcaka).

8) The Three modalities of the Liturgy of the Lineage of the Child (Bālolikramatraya)[2]

Next comes the worship of the Krama of each lineage beginning with that of the Child. Each of them are in three modalities, namely, those of the Elders, Middle and the Child. Schematic summaries in verse listing the groups of mantras are appended to each section. They are dedicated to both deities and teachers. They are worshipped serially by reciting the mantras dedicated to each one. These are all *Kramasūtra*s. The first part of the text which deals with the worship of the Krama is made up in this way of a series of *Kramasūtra*s[3] that introduce and conclude the series of the groups mantras that are given in full.

9) The Three modalities of the Liturgy of the Middle Lineage (Madhyamolikramatraya)

10) The Three modalities of the Liturgy of the Lineage of the Elders (Jyeṣṭholikramatraya)

---

[1] Chapters ten to twelve of the KuKh deal with the goddess's Vidyā, to which the reader is referred.
[2] The Krama of each of the three lineages includes the worship of all three. Thus each Krama is in three modalities.
[3] Chapters 48 and 50 of the KuKh are also Kramasūtras, see below. p. 265-267.

11) The Mahākramasūtra

After presenting the mantras and rites of the three lineages, the SKh moves on to the Mahākrama which is a liturgy common to all the lineages and is especially linked to the Mahāmanthānamaṇḍala.[1] This is an occasional rite that should be performed on special days (mahānaimittika) of the lineages (oliparvan) and teachers (guruparvan). The latter are the teachers' spiritual birthdays. The former are the fourth, eighth and fourteenth days of the lunar month, the equinoxes, the transition of the sun into the northern hemisphere and the fourteenth of Śiva's night.[2] After briefly describing how the Gurumaṇḍala should be made and prepared, the sūtra lists the location of the groups of mantras (ogha) within it. It ends with the simple statement that this is the Mahākramasūtra. However, the main, medium length colophon[3] comes at the end of the following section in which the mantras are listed and to which it refers as a 'chapter' (ānanda) 'concerning the Mahākramasūtra'. The format is the same as that of the previous sections. The mantras are listed first. At the end of each set of groups of mantras a few verses list their names with an occasional cursory comment. Possibly the original form of these and the preceding chapters were just these verses in between which the 'accomplished' - siddha - mantras were inserted later.

12) The mantras begin with those of the four 'pillars' of the maṇḍala (khambhacatuṣka). Then come those for the preparation of the adept's seat (ātmapretāsana) and projections into it (pūrvādibrahmaśilānyāsa). Next the mantras of the Yogapīṭha where the scripture is kept and the mantra invoking the goddess Parā into the wheel of thirty-two energies of the goddess's Vidyā in the centre of it (avatāravidyā). Then come four groups (ogha) of four mantras dedicated to the four seats, Siddhas, trees and Samayadevī that are placed in the four directions.

After groups of four come five groups of five, namely, the mantras of the Jewels, (ratnapañcakam), the five mantras of the energy that Pervades the Void of the Arising (of the Goddess) (udayavyomavyāpinī), the Five Pure Ones (vimalapañcaka), the Five of the Mahantārī of the Rule (samayamahantārī-pañcaka), and the Five Siddhas.

---

[1] mahākramasya yāgo 'yaṁ mahāmanthānamaṇḍale | SKh 11/46ab.

[2] caturthī cāṣṭamī caiva tathaiva ca caturdaśī [g: caturdasī] ||
viṣuve [g: visuve] caiva saṁkrāntau tathā caivottarāyaṇe |
śivarātrau caturdaśyāṁ oliparvasu [k, kh, g: -eṣu] śaṅkara || SKh 11/9cd-10.

[3] ityādyāvatāre mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe anvaye saptakoṭipramāṇe [k g: nāsti] merumārgavinirgate [k g: nāsti] lakṣapādādhike [k g: nāsti] śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre [k: -sahasra] saṁhitāyāṁ kādibhede [k g: nāsti] mahākramapūjāsūtrādhikāro [k: mahākramasūtrādhikāro; g: mahācakaṁpūjā-] nāmānandaḥ |

Then comes what is called the group of six mantras of Restraint of the Lineage of Deceit (chadmavallīnigrahaṣaṭka). Actually there are seven mantras in this group. They are dedicated to the seven Yoginīs concerned with the magical rite of restraint (nigraha). In these mantras they are linked to the Siddhas of the main sacred seats. Perhaps this is why this is called the 'lineage of deceit' (chadma) as the Siddhas are engaged in this way. These are followed by Two mantras belonging to the Mahākrama for use in rites of restraint (nigraha). One is dedicated to mother Kālasaṅkarṣaṇī and the other to the Khecarī Samayavidyā in its modality used for restraint. A few verses follow that appear to be out of place, dedicated to animal sacrifice (balikarma) in which the animals offered are listed.

Then come six mantras of the Pure Sportive Goddess engaged in dispensing grace (vimalavilāsinyanugrahaṣaṭka), the Life-giving (saṁjīvanī) Vidyā, six mantras of the Command (ājñāṣaṭka), the Five Siddhas, the Six Mothers (ambāṣaṭka) and Gestures (mudrāṣaṭka). Then come three groups of three mantras dedicated to the goddesses Sundarī, Kubjikā and Vimalavilāsinī ending with one dedicated to Paramahaṁsa Śrīnātha.

After the presentation of the mantras projected into the triangle and hexagram in the core of the maṇḍala come those of the surrounding eight petal lotus. There we find first eight groups of eight (aṣṭāṣṭaka). These groups are arranged on the petals of a lotus beginning with 1) the Eight Mothers (kulāṣṭaka)[1] who are on the eastern petal along with eight attendant Yoginīs. Then come the groups of eight 2) Mālinīs: south; 3) sacred fields (kṣetra): west; 4) Vīras: north; 5) Bhairavas: south-east; 6) Cremation grounds: north-east; 7) Goddesses: south-west; 8) Mothers (ambā): north-west and eight Svabhāvasiddhas.[2]

The mantras for the worship of the six faces and six limbs of Kubjikā, the goddess of the thirty-two syllable Vidyā (dvātriṁśadevyāvaktrāṅgapūjā), are then, presumably, projected into the hexagram. Then come the mantras of the Nine and Sixteen Siddhas and the worship of the thirty-two goddesses of the syllables of the Vidyā in association with thirty-two sacred sites (dvātriṁśati-kramamekhalāpūjā). These three sets are possibly to be projected into the three 'girdles' between the hexagram and the lotus.

Finally comes the second Group of Eight times Eight (aṣṭāṣṭaka). In some versions of the maṇḍala, there are two more lotuses beyond the one of eight petals. The first of these consists of sixteen petals and accomodates the thirty-two

---

[1] The Eight Mothers in this case are: Brahmāṇī, Māheśvarī, Kaumārī, Vaiṣṇavī, Vārāhī, Indrāṇī, Īśvarī, and Cāmuṇḍā.

[2] There are some discrepancies with the summary in verse that follows this layout. There the cremation grounds are said to be in the south-west, whereas in the full account they are said to be located in the north-east. Again, two entries are missing in the summary. Devyā is in the south-west and Ambā is in the north-west. Finally, the last group of eight is not given a direction. Indeed, as a ninth group of eight, it does not seem to belong to the eight groups of eight.

goddesses of the syllables of Kubjikā's mantra arranged in pairs. Further out is a sixty-four petal lotus for the sixty-four Yoginīs. However, in this case, they are arranged in eight groups that attend (paricāradevatā) on the eight Mothers and so are to be worshipped in the eight petal lotus. The rite concludes with mantras for the subsidiary maṇḍalas (ṣaḍaśītimaṇḍalakrama) normally drawn around the main maṇḍala. In this case they are eighty-six.

The sūtra ends with a list set in verse of the twenty-eight groups of mantras (ogha) of the Mahākrama and the nine teachings (āmnāya) integrated into the Mahākrama, concerning the groups of mantras and deities for particular occasions (naimittikaparvan).

13) The Offering to the Sacred Sites of the World (Kṣetrāvalībhūcakrabali)

This section is not found in one of the manuscripts and may be an interpolation. It begins with seven verses on the importance of reciting the Vidyā to get rid of evil beings, which does not fit the rest of this section which is the Vīrāvalīstotra. Consisting of fourteen verses in sragdharā it is, essentially, a list of sacred places and sites where Siddhas reside and bestow 'divine accomplishment' (divyasiddhi). After listing a number of such accomplishments, the hymn closes with a eulogy of Kubjikā who is the goddess that resides with various identities in the main seats. She is herself the main 'guardian of sacred places in this universe'[1] and, especially, Kaulinī who resides in Koṅkaṇa.[2] It concludes in the usual way with an enunciation of the benefits (phalaśruti) of reciting this hymn and making animal offerings (balidāna) on special days (mahāparvan).

14) The Venerable Great Liturgy of Khecarī (Śrīkhecarīmahākrama)

This Krama is often presented as a fourth one along with the basic three of the Eldest, Youth and the Child. As it belongs to the transcendent lineage of the Skyfarers, unlike the other three, it has no modalities.

15) The Daily and Occasional Worship of the Great Transmission (Nityanaimittikamahākramapūjā)

This Krama liturgy, like the one described in the Mahākramasūtra above, is common, it seems, to all the lineages and so has no modalities. Moreover, unlike that liturgy it can also be performed on a daily basis. An interesting and significant feature of this liturgy is that there is no maṇḍala or outer icon. It appears that all the mantras are projected into the body. Even so, they are considered to be acts of worship (pūjā) and depositions (nyāsa). The difference, it seems, depends on the phase of the liturgy and the function the rite serves in it. Depositions are part of the essential preliminaries that serve to purify the officiant by transforming his body into that of the deity whose limbs are the attendent deities deposited on the body. The deities in this 'divine body' are worshipped in this phase.

---

[1] kṣetrapālī jage 'smin. Vīrāvalistotra 11d.
[2] kaulinī koṅkaṇasthā [k, kh: -sthe]. Ibid. 12d.

This liturgy (krama) begins with the Worship of the Great Liturgy consisting of Thirty (triṁśātmakamahākramapūjā). These are the mantras invoking the Siddhas and goddesses in the Six Wheels, the Sixteen Foundations, the Five Voids and the Three Targets (lakṣa) in the body. The reader is referred to chapter 25 of our text where they are explained. Note that the thirty-two goddesses of Kubjikā's Samayā Vidyā[1] are appropriately worshipped in the Wheel of the Command of which the goddess and her Vidyā are embodiments.

After this comes the Worship of the Lineage of Sixteen (santānaṣoḍaśātmakapūjā) in which eighteen (not sixteen) Siddhas are worshipped in as many places in the body. Then forty-nine Siddhas and their consorts (but with no mention of their locations in the body) are the objects of the Worship of the Great Liturgy of the Command of the Twelve Verses (dvādaśaślokājñāmahākramapūjā).

Thus, once the deities in the body, and the macrocosm it represents, have been worshipped along with the Siddhas, who are the forty-nine teachers that impart the spiritual energies of the letters, the stage is set for the worship of the goddess. This begins with nine mantras dedicated to nine Cāmuṇḍās. Collectively they are called the Liturgy of the Samayā, that is, Kubjikā the main goddess (samayā) of the tradition. We are told that it accords with the triadic division of the goddess's Vidyā.[2] Presumably, the nine Cāmuṇḍās are the forms of Kubjikā who preside over the three modalities of the liturgies (krama) of the three lineages. Then come the basic (samayā) Vidyās of the three lineages (samayātrika) and that of the fourth lineage (kulamātaṅginīsamayavidyā). These are followed by Trikhaṇḍā. The KMT draws this important Vidyā from the Tantrasadbhāva[3] and so is originally a Trika Vidyā. Nonetheless, the KMT and the later Kubjikā tradition consider it to be the 'great' or extensive form of Kubjikā's Vidyā (bṛhatsamayā).[4] It is divided into three parts - khaṇḍa - and hence its name.

---

[1] See KuKh 11/12cd-16ab and notes.

[2] samayāvidyātrikabhedena samayākramam. Note, by the way, that the masculine noun 'krama-' is treated as neuter in the SKh, as it is in general in the Kubjikā corpus as a whole, and the MBT in particular.

[3] KMT 5/1-30. See note 1 of KuKh 23 and note 31 of KuKh 29.

[4] The colophon of chapter five of the KMT in which the Trikhaṇḍā is presented refers to is as 'the

Then comes a short projection of seed-syllable mantras (ambādvādaśikā), salutations and prostrations with five and eight limbs (pañcāṅga- and aṣṭāṅga-namaskāra), worship of the Yoginīs in the body (mātṛkāpūjā) and the mantras that accompany the consumption of the sacrificial meat and pap (phalgucarukabhakṣaṇavidyā, carukaprāśanavidyā, prasādavidyā). The rite concludes with the usual plea to the goddess for forgiveness.[1]

The Hymns of the Siddhakhaṇḍa

After the presentation of the mantras used for the worship of the Krama, which takes up about three quarters of the SKh, it continues with the following fourteen hymns that can be recited in front of the Krama projected into the goddess's maṇḍala or anything that is felt to embody the goddess's presence such as a Liṅga, or even a yogi or renounciate (yati).[2]

16) 1) Salutation to the Five Praṇavas (Pañcapraṇavanamaskāra)

The first hymn is dedicated to the innermost triangular core of the Kramamaṇḍala. Despite the name of this hymn, these five important seed-syllables are not overtly mentioned. Instead we find two verses (śloka) praising Kubjikā, who is represented by the first of the Five Praṇavas in the centre of the Triangle. Then come four verses in sragdharā praising the four Siddhas in their respective sacred seats within the Triangle who are implicitly represented by the other four Praṇavas.

17) 2) Salutations to the Six Aspects (Ṣaṭprakāranamaskāra)

Three and a half verses in sragdharā are dedicated to praising the six seats in the corners of the hexagram.

18) 3) Salutations to the Eight Limbs of the Goddess (Devyāṣṭāṅganamaskāra)

---

extraction of the extensive Samayā' (bṛhatsamayodhāra).

[1] The colophon reads: ity ādyāvatāre [g: ityāvatāre] mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe anvaye saptakoṭipramāṇe merumārgavinirgate lakṣapādādhike ādyapīṭhāvatārite vidyāpīṭhamārge [g: -mārgaṁ] [g: + vinirgate] vimalabhedottaraṣaṭkanirṇaye kādibhede ājñāpārameśvare śrīcatur-viṁśatisāhasre nityanaimittikamahākramapūjādhikāraḥ [g: -kramakhecaracakrapūjādhikāraḥ] ||

[2] yogīyatikramasyāgre [kh: -yate-] liṅge vā maṇḍalāgrataḥ ||
siddhyate cābda-m-ekena paṭhitena śubhā gatiḥ [all: subhāṁ gatim] | SKh 24/50cd-51ab.

Eight verses in sragdharā praise the Mother Kubjikā - Śrīkubjikāmbā - along with her main attendents, the Six Yoginīs and the Eight Mothers (mātṛkā) in the sacred seats projected into the hexagram and the eight petals of the lotus that surround it, respectively.

19) 4) Twelve (Verses in Praise of) the Mother and Prostration to (her) Twelve Aspects (Ambādvādaśadvādaśāṅgadaṇḍavannamaskāra)

Each verse of this hymn praises one of the following twelve forms of the Mother as: 1) Kubjikāmbā, 2) Nityā, 3) Kanyā, 4) Mālinī, 5) Candreśvarī, 6) Koṅkaṇāmbā, 7) Bhairavī, 8) Kaulinī, 9) Ratneśvarī, 10) Maṅgalāmbā (also called Śavarī), 11) Kujā, who is the 'crooked' (kuṭilā) or 'coiled' (kuṇḍalākārā) Kuṇḍalinī, and 12) Tripurāmbā.

20) 5) Twelve (Verses Dedicated) to the Mother (Ambādvādaśikā)

This hymn in twelve verses (śloka) is dedicated to Śrīkubjāmbā in the form of her Vidyā and the seed-syllables mantras enshrined in the triangle and hexagram in the core of her maṇḍala.

21) 6) Twelve (Verses Dedicated) to the Mother of the Hymn to the Krama (Kramastotrāmbādvādaśikā)

Despite its name, this hymn consists of twenty-one verses (śloka). The theme is that of the previous hymn.

22) 7) Twelve (Verses Dedicated) to the Mother (Ambādvādaśikā)

This hymn eulogizes the goddess as Kuṇḍalinī present in the inner Wheels and as the Transmental, Bliss, and the Command at the End of the Twelve

23) 8) Hymn to the Supreme Goddess, the Skyfarer (Parādevyākhecarīstava)

The goddess is praised in this hymn in thirty-two verses in her abstract aspect within the Voids, Foundations, Wheels and beyond them. She is related to the Great Transmission (mahākrama), that is, the Śāmbhava state whose will manifests as the three lineages and, indeed, as all things. The hymn concludes:

> The Great Transmission, free of change (nistaraṅga) is (attained) by the realisation of omniscience. It is the procedure

(vidhāna) concerning the sacred seats and fields, hard to acquire even by the gods. I praise (that reality whose) form is the Neuter (absolute) devoid of male and female gender. It is the supreme plane that has one form and is both with and without form. Everything has come forth by its will, (the lineages of) the Child, Youth and the Aged and they come to an end there where that energy plays.[1]

24) 9) Hymn to Bhagamālinī (Bhagamālinīstava)

The goddess is praised in this beautiful theological hymn in thirty odd verses (śloka) as the Divine Womb - Bhaga. As the Skyfaring Goddess (Khecarī), she is represented by various goddesses who are forms of her. As the Six Yoginīs, she is present in the Six Wheels in as many aspects. Beyond the Fourth state, above the Wheels, she is Ciñciṇī in the Wheel of the Skyfarers in her triple form as the three goddesses of the Trika, that is, Parā, Parāparā and Aparā. At the same time, this Hymn to the Transmission (kramastotra) is the 'treasure chest of the Kālikākrama'. Thus the goddess is portrayed as the source and embodiment of the main Kaula schools and their goddesses.

25) 10) The Hymn to the Mistress of the Gem (Ratneśvarīstava)

The goddess of this Hymn is Kuṇḍalinī, Ratneśvarī - the Mistress of the Gem - who resides in the 'middle of the Gem' that is, in the navel centre (maṇipura) from where she rises. Praised with 'supreme devotion' the devotee invokes her to save him. The hymn opens with the following lines that set the tone for the rest of the hymn:

> You are praised with supreme devotion in body, speech and mind. (You are) Mahāmāyā, supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent). (You are) Parā, Parāparā and are intent on the supreme nature. O Mistress of the Gem! Save me![2]

---

[1] sarvajñānāvabodhena nistaraṅgaṁ mahākramam || pīṭhakṣetravidhānaṁ tu devānām api durlabham |
vande napuṁsakākāraṁ strīpuṁliṅgavivarjitam [g: strīpulliṁga-] ||
sākāraṁ tu nirākāraṁ ekākāraṁ paramaṁ [k kh: paraṁ] padam |
tasyecchānirgataṁ [g: -tā] sarvaṁ bālaṁ [g: vāla] kaumāravṛddhakam ||
nidhanaṁ yāti tatraiva yatra sā ramate kalā | SKh 23/11cd-14ab.

[2] stuto 'si [kh: stunomi; g: stutomi] parayā bhaktyā kāyavākcittagocare [g: -vākvacitta-] | parāparā mahāmāyā aparā ca parāparā ||
parasvabhāvaniratā trāhi ratneśvareśvari [k: -rīṁ; g: ratnesvare-] mama || SKh 25/1-2ab.

26) 11) The Prose Hymn to the Goddess (Devyādaṇḍaka) composed (avatārita) by Caryānātha

27) 12) The Hymn Uttered by the Venerable and Great Skanda (Śrīmahāskandaproktastava)

28) 13) The Great Hymn in Prose (Mahādaṇḍastuti) by Krodhamuni

29) 14) The Hymn to Mālinī (Mālinīstava)

The last four hymns are set in the open prose metre of the Mālinīstava Bhairava intones in front of the goddess's Liṅga in the KMT and the KuKh to evoke her presence. Modelled on that, they are similar in style and content. Indeed, this is the last crowning hymn of the series. Interspersed with seed-syllables, this is the form of the Mālinīstava we find in the KuKh. It is attributed to Mitranātha in the colophon.[1] Perhaps we should understand the hymn to have been composed not only by Bhairava, the First Teacher (ādinātha) but also, more specifically, the Siddha who propagated the transmission that proceeds from Kāmarūpa in the last of the four Ages. Analogously, the first of these four hymns is attributed to Caryānātha who is the Siddha associated with the sacred seat of Jālandhara. There he sings this hymn to the goddess of the sacred seats.[2] Perhaps these are meant to be the hymns that were sung to the goddess in the Liṅga by the Siddhas in the four Ages.

The relationship of the mythical authors of the other hymns with the remaining three sacred seats is not immediately apparent. However, the connection is clearly established in the mantras of the SKh. Our attention is drawn to this detail by Vidyānanda, the south Indian author of the commentary Artharatnāvalī on the root Tantra of the Śrīvidyā tradition, the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava. There he explains that Krodhamuni ('the Angry Sage') is another name for Durvāsas who was known for his short temper. Indeed, myth portrays him as the embodiment of Śiva's anger. Mani explains:

Once a quarrel arose between Brahmā and Śiva which developed into fighting. At the sight of Śiva seething with rage the Devas ran off frightened, and Pārvatī also got frightened. She told him 'durvāsam bhavati me', ('it has become

---

[1] The colophon reads: iti sabījamālinīstavarājaṁ [k kh g: -ja] mitranāthakṛtam [g: -nāthekṛtaṁ].

[2] The hymn closes with: O goddess, mistress of (all the) sacred seats, who in Jālandhara is the mistress of the Net of Time! I, Caryānātha, bow (to you) Kubjeśvarī!

pīṭhapīṭheśvari devi jālandhare jālakāleśvari caryānātho hy ahaṁ naumi kubjeśvarīm || impossible for me to live happily with you'). Realising that it was his momentary anger which made life miserable for Pārvatī Śiva decided to transfer this trait of his character to someone else. [. . .] Śiva deposited his anger, which had caused unhappiness to Pārvatī, in Anusūyā. The child born out of that aspect of Śiva to Anusūyā was Durvāsas. The name Durvāsas was very apt as the child was born out of the anger of Śiva which had made life miserable (durvāsa) for Pārvatī.[1]

The author of the Mahādaṇḍastuti declares that he is Durvāsas.[2] He, along with Skanda and Śrīkaṇṭha (i.e. Śiva), are praised in mantras as Oḍḍīśanātha, Ṣaṣṭhanātha and Mitranātha. Vidyānanda notes that this is how they appear in modified forms of the Gāyatrī mantra dedicated to them which he says are taught in the MBT (the Kādibheda).[3] These mantras are in fact recorded in the SKh as are others that confirm these associations.[4] In other words, it would be clear to an

[1] Mani 1984: 256; the original source is chapter 44 of the Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa.

[2] At the end of the stuti the author thanks the goddess: 'You are always the way, intelligence and passion of myself, Durvāsas.'

tvaṁ gatiḥ [kh g: gati] tvaṁ [kh g: stvaṁ] matiḥ [kh: matiṁ; g: mati] tvaṁ [kh g: stvaṁ] ratiḥ [kh: rati tvaṁ] sadā mama durvāsasya.

[3] Vidyānanda writes: 'The Vedic sage (ṛṣi), the venerable ascetic Krodhamuni is called Durvāsas in the world. This triad can be clearly known in the Gāyatrī of the Lineages which is in the MBT (kādibheda) that describes the three lineages'. After quoting the main parts of the three Gāyatrīs, Vidyānanda goes on to say: 'In daily life (these three are known as) the venerable Durvāsas, Subrahmaṇya (i.e. Skanda), and Mahādeva.'

loke ṛṣir iti śrīmatkrodhamunibhaṭṭāraka iti śrīmaddurvāsasa evābhidhānam | tad idaṁ tritayaṁ kādibhede olitritayanirūpaṇe oligāyatryāṁ spaṣṭaṁ jñāyate | [. . .] śrīdurvāsaḥsubrahmaṇya-mahādevā laukike. NṢA p. 222.

[4] The SKh records a set of six (ṣaṭka) Gāyatrī mantras dedicated to these three Siddhas along with Caryānātha, Tūṣṇīnātha and Vṛkṣanātha. The first three are also recorded by Vidyānanda. The variants there are noted in round brackets:

AIṀ MITRANĀTHĀYA VIDMAHE ŚRĪKAṆṬHĀYA DHĪMAHE TAN NO SIDDHIḤ (KUBJIḤ) PRACODAYĀT ||
AIṀ ṢAṢṬHANĀTHĀYA VIDMAHE ŚRĪKUMĀRĀYA DHĪMAHE TAN NO LAKṢMĪḤ PRACODAYĀT ||
AIṀ OḌUNĀTHĀYA VIDMAHE DURVĀSĀYA (ŚRĪDURVĀSASE) DHĪMAHE TAN NAḤ KAULĪ (KAULIḤ) PRACODAYĀT ||

Kubjī is the goddess of the Gāyatrī mantra dedicated to Vṛkṣanātha in this series. As Vṛkṣanātha is one of the names of the First Nātha, it is appropriate that the goddess herself be associated with him just as she is associated with Mitranātha, the first Siddha of this Age of Strife.

The link between these three gods and the Siddhas is reaffirmed in two sets of mantras, belonging to two different modalities of the Krama, dedicated to a group of five Siddhas (siddhapañcaka). These are:

initiate that these four hymns to the goddess were composed by the first propagators of her teachings. Moreover, the order in which they are presented corresponds to that in which the teachings were transmitted from the four seats in the four successive Ages (yuga).

The text concludes with a description of the emergence of the goddess from the Liṅga evoked by Bhairava's intonation of the Mālinīstava. This would be an appropriate place for the SKh to end and perhaps at some stage of its redaction it did indeed end here. However, the text continues in a somewhat haphazard way with a sūtra that describes the rite of the offering of the sacred thread (Pavitrārohaṇavidhāna) during the rainy season to atone for transgressions of the Rule committed during the year.[1] This is followed by the Sūtra of the Teaching concerning the Lamps (Dīpāmnāyasūtra). This brief sūtra describes how lamps are to be offered in the rite of the 'waving of lamps' (ārati) to the Krama in the maṇḍala, especially the sacred seats there, and to the three sections of the MBT.[2] We have seen that prescriptions for the manner in which the scripture should be worshipped is the way the early Kubjikā Tantras end. Although the YKh does not end in this way, the KuKh does. Finally, this section ends, as does Krama ritual in general, with the mantras recited when offering lamps and eating the meat offered with them.[3] The colophon concludes that 'the section concerned with the rite of adoration (pūjākhaṇḍa) is complete'[4] that began with section five of the SKh.

However, the manuscripts continue for another few folios. These contain first a sūtra (called Japavidhāna) that explains how mantras should be repeated.

---

1) AIṀ 5 ŚRĪKAṆṬHADEVA HSKHPHREṀ ŚRĪMITRANĀTHA ŚRĪMADANĀJÑĀ ŚRĪBINDUDEVĪ - AVVĀPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI ॥ ITI SVĀDHIṢṬHĀNE ॥
AIṀ 5 ŚRĪSKANDADEVA HSKHPHREṀ ŚRĪṢAṢṬHANĀTHA ŚRĪŚAVARIKĀJÑĀ ŚRĪKAMALĀDEVĪ - AVVĀPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI ॥ ITI MAṆIPURE ॥
AIṀ 5 ŚRĪDURVĀSADEVA HSKHPHREṀ ŚRĪ - OḌḌĪŚANĀTHA ŚRĪSAMAYĀJÑĀ ŚRĪ - UDAYADEVĪ - AVVĀPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI ॥ ITI ANĀHATE ॥

2) AIṀ 5 ŚRĪDURVĀSADEVA HSKHPHREṀ ŚRĪ-OḌḌĪŚANĀTHAPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI ॥
AIṀ 5 ŚRĪSKANDADEVA HSKHPHREṀ ŚRĪṢAṢṬHANĀTHAPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI ॥
AIṀ 5 ŚRĪŚRĪKAṆṬHADEVA HSKHPHREṀ ŚRĪMITRANĀTHAPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI॥

[1] Kedar Raj Rajopadhyaya of Bhaktapur informs me that this is still the practice amongst Newar initiates.
[2] See above, p. 96 ff..
[3] Perhaps similar Vajrayāna rites explain why 'lamp' – dīpa – is a code word in for 'meat' in the Buddhist Tantras.
[4] iti [kh: missing] caturviṁśatisāhasre [kh: missing; g: caturvisati-] pūjākhaṇḍaṁ samāptam ॥

Much of this is drawn from the KMT, which has taken it from the TS.[1] Additional passages have been inserted here and there. Neither of the source texts refers to this passage as a sūtra. As we know the source of the text in the KMT, there can be no doubt that in this case a sūtra has been redacted from earlier sources not cast in that form. Moreover, it appears to be just tacked onto the SKh with no effort to integrate it into the text. The following and last section consist of groups of mantras that the concluding verse tells us belong to the Krama of the Middle Lineage. It looks as if someone dropped a manuscript and failed to replace the folios correctly. This was then copied as it was and a short concluding colophon, which simply says that the Siddhakhaṇḍa is finished,[2] was added to bring it to an end.

The Kumārikākhaṇḍa

Now we have an idea of the layout, structure and contents of the YKh and SKh, we are ready to turn our attention to the Kumārikākhaṇḍa. Here we will focus on how the KuKh has been constructed, outlining its contents only where this is relevant to this purpose. We shall argue that, like the other two sections of the MBT, the core of the KuKh was originally made of sūtras. This is in keeping with the general principle that the Kula teachings (kulakrama) the goddess imparts to the god, according to the KuKh (and the MBT in general), is the 'sequence of sūtras' (sūtrakrama).[3]

The concluding part of the KuKh outlines the broad structure, actual and ideal of the MBT. We find similar passages in the YKh. These emphasize, as we have seen, the role of sūtras in the structure of the text, which is not the case in the KuKh although it contains a good number of them. Nonetheless, the Newar Mukundarāja perceived that the sūtras of the KuKh were a particular important part of it. Accordingly, he selected nine of them, all of which are found only in the KuKh, and wrote a commentary on them called Saṁvartārthaprakāśa.[4] Probably these sūtras, and others that, like them, not found in other sections of the MBT, are a part of the original nucleus of this khaṇḍa. Indeed, a good number of their names, like those of the SKh, appear in the lists of sūtras found in the YKh noted earlier. If they are indeed the same, it seems that there was an older original pool of sūtras from which the three khaṇḍas developed. The YKh retained the lion's share. The SKh expanded a few sūtras concerned with ritual, essentially, the

---

[1] KMT 5/103 ff and TS 6/184 ff.

[2] iti śrīsiddhakhaṇḍaṁ samāptam || Normally the final colophon is long and elaborate. Moreover, in this case the Tantra to which the khaṇḍa belongs is not even mentioned.

[3] itaḥ sūtrakramaṁ śambho dīyate tat kulakramam | KuKh 5/6ab.

[4] See below, concerning the Saṁvartārthaprakāśa.

worship of the Krama (kramārcana) which is its special concern. The redactors of the KuKh were more ambitious and laborious. They sought to produce a complete, integral text.

If the oldest, original nucleus of the KuKh was made up of sūtras, this is not immediately apparent because, like the other khaṇḍas of the MBT, the KuKh has largely been re-structured into ānandas. Moreover, it has been supplemented extensively - more than a third of the text - by importing passages, in many cases entire chapters, as well as sūtras, from other sources. These are, in the order of the extent the KuKh has drawn from them: other sections of the MBT - especially the YKh, the KMT, TS, ṢSS, AS and the ŚM.[1] This is a departure from the rest of the MBT proper which draws nothing or very little directly from other sections or outside. Even the KMT, which is an important source for the KuKh, is not represented in the rest of the MBT. The only substantial exception is a version of the Mālinīstava in the SKh drawn from chapter 4 of the KMT. However, even in that case it is supplemented by the addition of seed-syllable mantras and several extra lines of text.

The loose, question and answer format of virtually all Tantric texts make them particularly liable to disorder. The danger of this happening increases with the size of the text. At the same time, this open framework also allowed redactors the freedom to build a complex presentation of doctrine and practice. Amongst the texts of the Kubjikā corpus, the KMT and its expansions, the ṢSS and ŚM, are the most successful in this respect. This is partly due to their ordering into chapters. The redaction into chapters, called ānandas in the MBT, is a more convenient format than that into sūtras and is compatible with that of the KMT, ŚM and ṢSS, allowing the KuKh to import entire chapters wholesale (with the usual modifications), directly from these sources. Quite a few sūtras remain embedded in chapters as a result of an attempt to standardize this format. At the same time, several also survive in their original sūtra form, especially in the last quarter of the text, which draws extensively from the YKh.

Even though the KuKh has a more coherent overall structure than the YKh, it appears to be the work of more than one redactor. For one thing, the text and the colophons were probably written by different people whose knowledge of Sanskrit was not equally good. This appears to be the case as the Sanskrit of the colophons is generally more correct than that of the text. For example, the noun adhikāra-, which is normally masculine and always treated as such in the colophons, is invariably neuter in the body of the text. Moreover, we notice also that the Sanskrit of the short colophons, which come at the end of sūtras, is not the same as that of the long ones. For example, the regular form of the numeral viṁśati- ('twenty') in the word 'śrīcaturvimśatisāhasra-' –'the venerable scripture of Twenty-four Thousand (verses)' is replaced in the long colophons, but not the short ones at the end of sūtras, with the common deviant form viṁśat formed on the model of the numerals thirty (triṁśat), forty (catvāriṁśat) and fifty (pañcāśat). This suggests that the short colophons were written by a third party or the author of the sūtra. While most of these sūtras are drawn from other parts of the MBT, the discrepancy between the Sanskrit of the text and the long colophons suggests that the writer(s) of these and the text were not the same. Clumsy or mistaken division of chapters may support the view that a different person tried to tidy up the redaction of the text in this way.[1]

---

[1] The reader is referred to the concordance in vol. 14 for details.

There was probably only one final redactor who sorted through the text to make it coherent and systematic. The fact that in the course of transferring a sūtra or chapter the Sanskrit has been subject to fairly uniform corruption throughout adds to the impression that the last phase was the work of just one person. Alternatively, it may have been the work of a teacher and his disciple who learnt the same corrupt Sanskrit from him. It is not surprising that a text suffers loss or is corrupted when making the transition from its original source to another. However, while comparison with the source text does reveal, as one would expect, the presence of such errors, there are also numerous consistantly corrupt Sanskrit forms that must have been intentional. Nor can we doubt that the corruptions to which I refer are consistent. The detailed documentation of the deviant forms found in our text, recorded in the critical apparatus of the Sanskrit edition, confirms that this is in fact the case.

The shift from the sūtra to the ānanda form is a valuable marker that helps us to understand how the MBT has been redacted. This is especially true of the KuKh which, while it contains a considerable amount of original material, is also the Khaṇḍa that has drawn the most from other sources. It is also the Khaṇḍa that has been most coherently redacted. This is largely due to its adaptation of the division into ānandas. Out of the sixty-nine colophons of the KuKh, fifty-nine are essentially the same long colophon we find at the end of the first chapter and have described above.[2] Apart from the short colophon of chapter 13, which is that of an ānanda, the remaining eight short colophons are those of sūtras. Again, one ānanda is called a sūtra.[3] To these we may add the so-called ten 'bhūmikās' drawn from YKh (1) where they were originally sūtras.[4]

Moreover, we notice that all the chapters that are not called ānandas except one (that is, 29) appear from chapter 48 onwards. This may well be

---

[1] Examples are between chapters 11 and 12, 14 and 15, 50 and 51.
[2] See above, p. 109 ff..
[3] The sūtra colophons are 48, 49, 50, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 67 and the ānanda-cum-sūtra colophon is 51.
[4] These are chapters 57 to 66 of the KuKh. See the concordance for the correspondences between the KuKh and YKh (1).

because they were hurriedly inserted into the text just before the concluding chapter or two. This is also the least original part of the KuKh, virtually all of which is found in the other two Khaṇḍas and was most probably drawn from them. Conversely, while a good amount of material is drawn from other sources in the previous chapters, the sūtras we find there are mostly unique to the KuKh. Moreover, they are embedded in ānandas or transformed into them. The variants in one manuscript of two colphons illustrates how a sūtra can be transformed into an ānanda by simply altering its name.[1] Chapter twenty, for example, which deals with the Triple Vidyā, is an ānanda in the KuKh but appears as a sūtra in YKh (1). Again, chapter 29 is a sūtra, although it has the long colophon of an ānanda.

The redactors of the YKh did also overlay the original loose sūtra format with that into ānandas. However, they were less concerned to set the text into a single compact whole, probably because the generally self-contained nature of the sūtras and the many they had to deal with made the task difficult. The KuKh on the other hand is clearly an attempt to redact a single, coherent text. This is most successfully achieved in those parts where the author(s) did not shy away from integrating the sūtras with their own writing.

The sūtras are not only embedded in chapters, they are framed and sustained by chapters or substantial passages that were written to create a complete coherent text. However, although the redactor(s) made a good start in the first half or so of the KuKh, as the text goes on it looses its initial coherence to give way increasingly to the loose sūtra form. At the same time, the KuKh draws increasingly from other texts. Although use is made of other texts throughout the KuKh these, along with the original core sūtras are relatively well integrated into a single and coherent, albeit very ramified, teaching.

The same themes are taken up repeatedly, another sign that the text was written in bits and pieces. Although they are not mere repetitions, there is an abiding danger that they may become so. We have seen, in the context of our discussion of the symbolism of the sacred seats, that despite the implied 'objectivity' of the symbolic constructs each presentation invariably differs from all the others in a few or more details. This may well be because several people made their own contributions without bothering to standardize the result. These divergences may also be understood, as no doubt the tradition itself understood them, to be the result of the uniqueness of personal experience. From that perspective their diversity is not an imperfection; on the contrary, it testifies to the living experience transmitted through the teachings. This same principle of experiential unity in diversity assists in ordering the text of the KuKh. The three versions of the Root Sūtra (mūlasūtra) in chapter 26, 38 and 42 may be cited as typical examples. Although essentially the same sūtra, variations in the text and additional information in the commentaries that accompany each version provide fresh insight into their theme - one to which the Kubjikā Tantras return repeatedly - namely, the core of the goddess's maṇḍala. The three versions and their explanations - sometimes supplied in separate sūtras - may well be the work of three different people. The existence of at least two other versions and independent commentaries shows that the Root Sūtra was particularly popular. The redactor makes use of these three versions to encapsulate portions of the text, placing them in it in such a way that they conclude the sections that precede them and introduce the ones that follow. Like the Saṁvartāsūtra, which is also a 'root sūtra', with which the KMT, ṢSS and KuKh begin, it describes the goddess's maṇḍala and so is particularly suited to this purpose.

---

[1] The colophon to chapter 52 reads: iti kādibhede [gh: ityādyāvatāre kādibhede; ch, j, jh: iti śrīkādibhede] śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre [All MSs except gh: * catur-] ādināthasūtram [gh: -sūtro nāmānandaḥ] || The colophon to chapter 53 reads: iti śrīkādibhede caturviṁśatisāhasre pañcāśad-bhedabhinnaṁ santānasūtradhikāram || MS Gh has a long colophon and names it: santānasūtrādhikāro nāmānandaḥ.

The division of the text into units, large and small in this way, which is probably the result of multiple redactions, encourages disorder and lack of coherence. The subject of chapter seven, for example, namely, the teachers and lineages of the tradition is taken up again in chapter forty-six, which is drawn from chapters forty-three and forty-four of the ṢSS. The subject is taken up again in chapters fifty-six and fifty-seven. The former is simply an account of the Sixteen Siddhas with little or no context. The latter, which is drawn from chapter thirty-six of YKh (1) and is concerned with the Divine Current of teachers, is similarly free-floating. Occasionally a few verses are repeated. However, this is not due to scribal error. When this occurs, for example, in chapter three, in both places the verses are an integral part of the text.[1]

Even so, despite such imperfections, the redaction of the KuKh is certainly much better than that of the other sections of the MBT. Indeed, an attempt has been made to make the KuKh a complete self-contained, unitary text, even though it makes no claim to being more than a section of the MBT. We have seen that the YKh moves from one subject to another spontaneously, free to do so by the loose format that sūtras permit. On the other hand, the presentation in the KuKh is relatively ordered and systematic. Moreover, it takes care to cover the essentials of the cult. The presence of chapters dealing with initiation, for example, is in sharp contrast with the virtual absence of this subject in the YKh or the SKh. This is not because this topic was reserved for this section of the MBT. Rather it reflects their divergence of concerns. On the whole, the sūtras give the impression that they were compiled to suit particular interests and purposes. When the topic is more complex and extensive they can multiply systematically. A simple example is the group of sūtras concerning the goddess's faces and limbs. However, even so, the sūtra format is not well suited for the development of long texts if they are to have a single, coherent structure. Nonetheless, themes do recur regularly in many of the sutras. A major one, for example, in the YKh is the maṇḍala of the eight sacred seats.

[1] Cf. KuKh 3/1-2 and KuKh 3/30-31.

Apart from the layout of the KuKh we also notice a marked difference in the content with respect, especially, to the YKh. One that is particularly striking is the interest the YKh has in black rites and the concerns that impel their performance, which are virtually absent in the KuKh and the SKh. Related to this is the presence in the YKh of kings, their troubles and ambitions.

As the text has been translated and extensively annotated we are not as much concerned in the following brief synopsis of the KuKh with its contents but rather with the way it is structured. The detailed index of contents at the beginning of each volume of the translation and edition will guide the reader through the text. Here we shall present a broad outline of the structure of the KuKh to show how the text has been constructed by the placement and integration in the body of the text of the sūtras that possibly formed its original, seed core. In addition we shall take note of the numerous passages imported from other sources which, like the presence and function of the sūtras, is one of the most striking features of the KuKh. The specific details concerning these sources have been collected in the concordance in the last volume. They are mentioned again as they occur in the critical apparatus of the Sanskrit text. The reader will also find detailed comparisons of the sources where this is required either there or in the notes to the translation.

The Contents and Structure of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa

Chapters One and Two: Śrīnātha's Inquiry and the Response to the Inquiry

The KuKh opens grandly as does the ṢSS and KMT with the Saṁvartāmaṇḍalasūtra. The commentator Mukunda explains that these are the benedictory verses (maṅgalācaraṇa) with which a scripture or Sanskrit treatise normally begins.[1] Thus, this is the beginning of the entire Manthānabhairavatantra of which the KuKh presents itself implicitly in this way as the first of its three sections.[2] Moreover, as an expanded version of the first verse of the KMT,[3] the KuKh mirrors, as does the ṢSS, the manner in which the [1] manthānabhairavatantre maṅgalācaraṇaṁ saṁvartā kumārikākhaṇḍe SamP fl. 3a. Cf. KuKh 30/26-27ab.

[2] See KuKh 69/28cd-29ab and above, p. 101.
[3] See note to the English translation for a comparison of the the version in the KuKh and ṢSS with

KMT begins. In this way the KuKh stresses the link it seeks to establish between itself and the KMT which the very name - Kumārikākhaṇḍa - common to both,[1] promotes.[2]

The short version of the sūtra at the beginning of the KMT concisely describes the maṇḍala into which the Krama is projected, in the course of paying homage to the divine couple it enshrines. In addition, the extended version in the ṢSS and KuKh extols the teachers in Koṅkaṇa, the seat of authority, and its capital Candrapura, the residence of Śrīnātha, the first Siddha, both identified with the expanded maṇḍala. Thus it registers the major developments in the tradition that took place after the redaction of the KMT.

Just as the ŚM comments on the short version in a long prose section inserted into the first chapter of ŚM, similarly, the second chapter of the KuKh is a commentary on the long version of the s*ūtra*.[3] This, along with the Sūtra, could well have been written independently. The Saṁvartāsūtra is commonly recited by Newar initiates when they perform the rites of the goddess Kubjikā. This may well have been the case early on in the development of the cult. It is not surprising, therefore, if commentaries were written on this sūtra. They explain the metaphysical identity of the deities of the mantras of the Sequence of Twenty-eight (aṣṭāviṁśatikrama) projected into the maṇḍala and the energies, principles and Yogic states that are the inner counterparts of its contents.

As the ṢSS is an extended version of the KMT, it makes sense that it should begin with an extended version of the Saṁvartāsūtra with which the KMT begins and retain the same Krama of which the units outlined in the sūtra are clearly twenty-eight. This Krama is presented systematically in chapter forty-three of the ṢSS along with the lineages of teachers unknown to the KMT. Although a large part of it has been incorporated into chapter forty-six of the KuKh, the Krama taught there fits badly with the Krama taught in the rest of the KuKh. This is either the one lifted directly from the YKh or its own versions, many of which consist of twenty-seven units, as does that of the YKh.

---

the one in the KMT.

[1] See above, p. 102.

[2] Note that neither the KMT nor the ṢSS, that are totally devoid of sūtras, refer to it as a sūtra. However, at beginning of its prose commentary on it the ŚM says that the first verse of the KMT is the first sūtra of the Śrīmata (śrīmatasyādisūtraṁ tu śrūyatāṁ kathyate 'dhunā | ŚM 1/114cd) and even calls it the Saṁvartāsūtra (saṁvartāsūtrasyārthaṁ vyākhyāyate yathā). We may note in passing that this is one of several indications that suggest that this commentary was not originally part of the ŚM. The Ṭīkā also refers to it as a sūtra (see note to the English translation).

[3] Mukundarāja says: teṣāṁ arthavijñānaṁ yathā | manthānabhairavatantre maṅgalācaraṇaṁ saṁvarttā kumārikākhaṇḍe śrīśrīnāthaḥ [śaśrīnāthaṁ] prativaktā | vākyaṁ maṇḍalānte ka kartety ādi praśnaṁ [praśne] prathamānandaḥ | taduttaraṁ dvitīyānande | SamP fl. 3a.

We may therefore surmise that the expanded version that comes at the beginning of both the ṢSS and the KuKh is drawn by the later from the former. Although the possibility of a third, common source cannot be excluded, this is not likely. In short, the ṢSS precedes the KuKh, as it seems all the other major Kubjikā sources do except, perhaps, the AS, with which the KuKh also shares passages in common.

Chapters Three to Six: Dakṣa's Curse and Grace, Concerning the Mālinīstavarāja, Śrīnātha's Consecration with the Command (ājñābhiṣeka) and the Pervasion of Śrīnātha's Sacred Seat of the Command (ājñāpīṭha)

The previous two chapters described the outer form of the maṇḍala. The first part of chapter three is concerned with its inner core in the End of the Twelve (dvādaśānta) above the head. This is the triangular Yoni and the Point or Drop (bindu) in the centre which is the goddess's Liṅga. The goddess who is the vitalizing energy of the Transmental (unmanī), bliss and grace, resides here. From her inner, lunar dynamism radiate the streams of emanation, the scriptures, the teachings, the lineages of teachers and the divine Command (ājñā) which empowers them, just as the deity itself does, with authority (adhikāra).

Now the stage has been set by the description of the inner, most elevated aspect of the goddess's Liṅga. The text proceeds with her myth that begins with the destruction of Dakṣa's sacrifice and the goddess's self-immolation in her previous birth as Umā, Dakṣa's daughter and continues in the next three chapters in a loose, diachronic manner.

We have seen that the Kubjikā Tantras contain several versions of the myth that narrates the origin of the goddess, Bhairava's initiation, and the founding of the sacred seats. The version in these four chapters of the KuKh, despite several novel features, is recognisably modelled on the one in the KMT. This is especially apparent in the dialogue between the god and the goddess, the first imploring the other for her grace, which she gives when she finally emerges from the Liṅga. Although these passages are not copied directly from the KMT, they are clearly inspired by it.

As in the KMT, the goddess is induced to emerge from the Liṅga by Bhairava's Mālinīstava. An extended version of this important hymn is part of chapter four. This is also found in chapter 29 of the SKh and 28 of the AS. While it is very likely that the AS is later than the KuKh, one wonders whether the SKh is the original source of this hymn or the KuKh. The KuKh presents the Stava in the context of its own re-working of the goddess's myth. In the SKh it is the fourth of four hymns each uttered by a Siddha of one of the four Ages.[1] Thus, it is not well set in a substantial context as it is in the KuKh. It is introduced with a few verses that present the god before the Liṅga imploring the goddess. They end with the two verses that introduce this hymn in the KMT. The first few verses that follow the hymn are also found in the KuKh. However, they stop short of the description of her emergence from the Liṅga, which in the SKh is built up around the core of the few verses that describe it in the KMT. The KuKh reserves the description of this central event for the following chapter,[1] which it presents in its own words. In the AS all of the verses following the hymn are simply omitted and the next topic begins abruptly with little connection with what has gone before. So there it is obviously an imported insertion. In short the most coherent version is the one in the SKh. Both the hymn itself and the narrative that frames it are neat expansions of the original in the KMT. One gets the impression that the KuKh tailored this version to its own needs. The alternative, apart from a third older source, would be that the SKh drew it from the KuKh and polished it up, aligning it more perfectly with the KMT. This seems less likely. The KuKh refers to the SKh in its concluding chapter. The SKh appears to refer to the KuKh also, but this reference, as we have seen above, is not certain. We notice another extensive passage in common with the SKh in chapters 48 and 50 where it is clear that the SKh is the source.

[1] See above, p. 219-220.

In this version of the myth, after the goddess has emerged from the Liṅga, Bhairava visits the seats, and finds the goddess there. Although this is the reverse of the original myth, the KuKh does not want to completely contradict the prime authority. Thus the redactor tacks on the last few verses of the story from the KMT that briefly relate how the goddess went to other places after visiting the main seats. However, here she travels to the sites of the sacred geography of the Yoni outlined in YKh (2), which again seems to be the source.

Chapter Seven: The Authority of the Venerable City of the Moon.

Chapter seven concludes with the statement: ‘this is the sūtra of the City of the Moon. It is the introductory sūtra (of this scripture) (pratijñāsūtra). It is the first in this Kula scripture (śāstra). (What) follows is its subsequent (continuation) (uttara).’[2] The noun pratijñā means an 'assertion', 'declaration', 'affirmation' or 'proposition to be proved'. In this context a pratijñā is an initial introduction to a topic and implies a promise or a pledge (which is another meaning of this word) to deal with the subject extensively in what follows. One wonders how this is the first sūtra. Does it mean that this was the one with which the earliest version of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa began? It is possible that the first six chapters (2 + 4) were prefixed to the first sūtra of the original core sūtras of the KuKh embedded in chapter seven.

[1] KuKh 5/29ff.
[2] KuKh 7/98cd-101ab.

The name of this chapter confirms that it is concerned with City of the Moon.[1] This is one of the names for the goddess's Triangle in the End of the Twelve. A description of this Triangle is indeed the subject of the first half of this chapter (up to KuKh 7/56). The second half, however, deals with the lineages of Siddhas. It begins with the declaration that: 'The Hermitage of the Siddhas of the lineages (olisiddhāśrama) has come forth into the mortal (martya) (world) from the City of the Moon.'[2] We have seen that the prototypes of the 'historical' groups of Nine and Sixteen Siddhas who spread the teachings were the Siddhas who governed the nine letters of the syllable Navātman and the sixteen vowels. As the description of the Triangle in the first part stresses the projection onto and into it of the letters identified with Siddhas, there is a double link between the two passages. Even so, they may well have been originally distinct. This possibility is further supported by the fact that while the first part of this chapter is devoid of passages common to other sources, the second part contains several. There are references to the Divine Current common with the SKh and the projection onto the body of Nine Siddhas and several lines concerning them and the Sixteen Siddhas common with YKh (2). It seems therefore that this passage was integrated into the original introductory sūtra. This supposition finds some confirmation in a strange anomaly at the end of this chapter. The final lines prior to the concluding verse quoted above list the things an adept must know to be a true disciple belonging to the tradition. These are essentially the things related to the City of the Moon described and defined in this chapter except the Nine and Sixteen Siddhas. Then, following the verse quoted above, which one would expect to be the concluding one, another few lines are dedicated to a similar list that does include them.[3]

Chapters Eight to Twelve: The Enounciation of the Vidyā according to the Teaching Concerning the Meruprastāra. The Consciousness of the Vidyā according to its Divisions as Full and the Rest. A Description of the Glory of the

---

[1] The colophon of chapter seven declares that: This is the (seventh) chapter, which is the emergence of the transmission (kramodaya) with regards to the description concerning the Venerable City of the Moon.

[2] KuKh 7/57-58ab.

[3] They figure as 'the Siddhas of the Lineages (oli), the three persons and the Sixteen Siddhas'. The 'three persons' are the Siddhas of the three main sacred seats. I take the Siddhas of the Lineages to be the Nine Siddhas. See KuKh 7/99cd-101ab and cf. with KuKh 7/95cd-98ab. Notice also that several items are repeated in the two lists, perhaps because the later redactor wanted to fill out the second one more to better hide the integration of the Nine and Sixteen Siddhas into the new list.

Vidyā. The Way to Offer Libation and Repeat the Vidyā. Another description of the Glory of the Vidyā

Chapter eight begins, as do two other chapters (27 and 59) of the KuKh, with the same lines in which the god declares that he wants to know the knowledge that is the 'essence of the Western tradition'. In this case it is the Meruprastāra. In the second reference it is a form of the Gurumaṇḍala and in the third the Sequence of Twenty-seven. Chapter 59 is drawn from YKh (1), thus illustrating how such standard phrases are a feature of the Sanskrit style transmitted through the tradition.

In accord with common usage, the rite of adoration (pūjā, arcanā) of the deity is preceded by that of the teachers.[1] Accordingly, the following chapters from eight to twelve concern Kubjikā's Samayā Vidyā, the primary sonic form of the deity. The redactor may also have perceived a continuity between this and the previous chapter from another point of view also. The goddess's Triangle - the City of the Moon - is here in the form of a grid of letters called the Meruprastāra. The way this is to be drawn is explained first in the usual way and then the letters of the Vidyā are extracted from it. Thus, the Vidyā, like the teachers, also emanates from the Triangle. This and the following three chapters go on to explain how the Vidyā is divided into parts, its six 'limbs' (aṅga) and faces, the goddesses who embody its the letters, its projection into the maṇḍala, recitation and benefits.

Most of the text of these chapters is unique to the KuKh although the subject recurs, as we shall note, several times and is treated in a similar way throughout the Kubjikā corpus. We notice also that there are no sūtras in these chapters. Thus, they were presumably written 'freehand' with the occasional help of other Kubjikā sources we shall now examine. The first of these is found at the beginning of chapter nine. This is an exposition of the important seed-syllable HSKHPHREṀ. The substance of this passage is drawn from the Dvādaśaślokasūtra, which is found in YKh (1) [2] where the treatment is more thorough. A few more lines from this sūtra regarding the deposition of this seed-syllable in the subtle body are drawn from it in chapter eleven.[3] Clearly, this sūtra was the prime authority concerning this seed-syllable. Here it appears as the main seed-syllable of the goddess in the place of Vāgbhava, the syllable AIṀ. It appears in the Saṁvartāsūtra and is known to the ṢSS, as one would expect if it is the source of this sūtra. However, it is not known to the KMT and is not extensively treated in the ṢSS, which merely presents it as a Kaula alternative to AIṀ, the seed-syllable of the goddess in the KMT. The Dvādaśaślokasūtra may well be the earliest authoritative source for the formulation and application of this

---

[1] Cf. KuKh 7/2cd-93.
[2] KuKh 9/2cd, 3cd, 5cd-10, 11cd-19ab, = YKh (1) 48/15cd, 16ab, 17-22ab, 22cd-30ab.
[3] KuKh 11/21-23ab = YKh (1) 48/2-4ab.

syllable in the Kubjikā sources. This is quite possible considering the importance accorded to it by the ṢSS and its cursory treatment there, which suggests that it had already been expounded before. If so, this is evidence that the YKh in some form already existed when the ṢSS was written.

Next in chapter ten we notice a passage in common with YKh (1). This is a eulogy of the benefits (phalaśruti) of depositing the six limbs and faces of the goddess's Vidyā in the maṇḍala and on the body. In both cases they come at the end of a visualization of the goddess and her limbs and faces. In the KuKh the presentation of the faces and limbs is quite brief compared to the one in the YKh (1), which is quite extensive. However, despite the difference in length and a few details,[1] the redactor was confident that the two versions are equally powerful. This appears to be common practice. We find a similar adoption of the eulogy of the fruits of repeating the goddess's Vidyā at the end of chapter eleven of the KuKh, an appreciable part of which is drawn from the ŚM.[2]

In chapter eleven we observe a more subtle use of sources. After an exposition of the goddess's Vidyā and seed-syllable the text goes to talk about the way it should be recited. This is to be done when worshipping and offering libations to the maṇḍala into which the Krama and the Vidyā has been projected along with a jar placed in front of it.[3] This is followed by the worship of young virgin girls after which the Vidyā is recited repeatedly (japa). The procedure is essentially a condensed version of one described in the ŚM from which a few lines here and there have been drawn. The Ṭīkā comments on the version in the KuKh but the indebtedness of the latter to the ŚM is further evidenced by verses in common with it eulogizing the power of the Vidyā that comes after the description of the rite in chapter nine of the ŚM, just as it does in the KuKh.

KuKh 12/24-42 corresponds to a passage in the YKh (1). According to the colophon in YKh (1),[4] it is an ānanda but the short form of the colophon and the nature of the passage suggests that it was originally a sūtra. Recognisably the same passage is also found in the ŚM. There it is well set into the body of the text, unlike its counterpart in the YKh (1), where it is an entire independent chapter or sūtra that is only loosely connected with what precedes and follows. Indeed, the passage appears misplaced in the YKh (1). The previous passage there is

---

[1] See chart in notes to KuKh 10/37cd-39.
[2] KuKh 11/65cd-71ab = ŚM 9/77-82. KuKh 11/74cd-77ab = ŚM 9/83-86ab.
[3] KuKh 11/24-54.
[4] This is the chapter called the arising of the transmission with regards to the description of the greatness of the repetition of mantra in the procedure concerning the current of the (goddess's) Vidyā and is a part of the venerable Caturviṁśatisāhasra.

iti śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre vidyaughavidhāne (g: vidyā-) japamahātmyavarṇe kramodayo nāmānandaḥ || concerned with an exposition of the seed-syllable HSKHPHREṀ (caitanyakūṭa). However, this one begins with a question concerning not this syllable but the goddess's Vidyā. As in the KuKh and the ŚM, Śrīnātha asks why the practice of the Vidyā is not always effective.[1] The deity replies that the reason for this is due to peoples' moral weakness and goes on to list their vices. In the ŚM the context expands into a list of good moral qualities of a teacher and disciple and their defects. The version in the KuKh is closer to the one in the YKh (1) and so may have drawn it from there. If so, this is surprising. The KuKh follows in a loose, abbreviated way the procedures outlined in chapter nine of the ŚM. Moreover, it also outlines the powers obtained by reciting the Vidyā at the end of chapter eleven, in a way that loosely follows the same chapter of the ŚM. In chapter twelve, the KuKh continues to follow the layout in the ŚM. However, the passage it quotes follows the version in the YKh more closely than the one in the ŚM.[2] It seems strange that the redactor of the KuKh should suddenly switch to another parallel source. However, he may well have done so. The version in YKh (1) concludes that a Vidyā drawn from another Tantra or one that contains Vedic syllables (jāti) cannot be effective. This statement is retained in the KuKh but is missing in the ŚM because the form of the Vidyā in the KMT which the ŚM follows does contain one.[3]

The question is: did the ŚM draw this passage from YKh (1)? Unlike the KuKh, the YKh is singularly devoid of passages common to other sources. It would be strange for someone to lift a passage like this that is not saying very much just to leave it free-floating as it is in YKh (1). It would be much more understandable if the redactor of the ŚM, who was working on a very well knit text, were to take it and work it into his exposition. Most of the ŚM was written before the shift to Koṅkaṇa[4] and so predates the YKh. It is possible, therefore, that some part of the YKh already existed prior to that.

Chapter Thirteen: Concerning the Destruction of Impurity

This chapter is divided into two parts. The first part deals with the basic principles relating to the nature of bondage and liberation. This involves an exposition of a structured view of reality, which could be characterized as a form of

---

[1] muktim etat prabhāvo 'yam vidyayābhyasanād bhavet |
abhyāse 'pi kṛte [g: abhyāsāvikṛte] devi na ca siddhyanti sādhakāḥ ||
tat kim artham mahādevi śaṁśayaṁ [g: -ya] cchetum arhasi | YKh (1) 50/1-2ab.

[2] The passage in question is KuKh 12/24-42, which corresponds to ŚM 9/110 ff. and YKh (1) 50/3-20. KuKh 12/31cd-33 is missing in ŚM but not in YKh (1). However, KuKh 12/37 is missing in YKh (1) but not in the ŚM.

[3] KuKh 12/42-43ab.

[4] See below, p. 302 ff..

theistic, monistic Sāṁkhya. The one reality is divided into two aspects. One is the Person, who is identified with Śiva. The other is Prakṛti identified with Śakti or Mahāmāyā, which consists of the twenty-four principles described in Sāṁkhya. This view is integrated with a doctrine of Karma which, supported by Māyā, feeds the innate impurity (mala) that sullies the soul (1-57). This is removed by Mahāmāyā who, as Kuṇḍalinī, acts in the subtle body leading the yogi through to the highest yogic states in which Māyā, and with it Karma and all impurity, is destroyed (58-109). The second half of this chapter is the Devyākramasūtra (110-143), which describes the inner Consecration of the Command. This takes place in two stages. The first is the rise of Kuṇḍalinī, which burns away impurity. The second is her descent in the form of vitalizing lunar energy that, nectar-like, inwardly consecrates the yogi. The two phases are represented by the waxing and waning of the Moon. Essentially the same process is described in the SKh as the inner result of the deposition of mantras onto the body. Here it is called the 'inner sacrifice'[1] and the 'Consecration of the Command'.[2] The latter name implies that this is the consecration Bhairava received from the goddess. The Saṁvartāsūtra refers to a 'sixteenfold consecration of the Command'. The Ṭīkā describes this form of initiation, the core of which is drawn from the procedure taught in the Svacchandatantra. It is modelled on the standard form of the initiatory rites taught in the Siddhāntāgamas.[3] This sūtra, which teaches a more Kaula form of initiation, may well be one of the core sūtras of the KuKh. It is couched in the characteristic Kaula praxis based on the activity of Kuṇḍalinī and framed by a system of twenty-five principles, which is characteristic of the Kubjikā tradition.

Chapters Fourteen and Fifteen: Concerning (Kaula) Conduct (caryā) and About the Section (of the Scripture) concerning (Kaula) Conduct (caryāpāda)

Chapters fourteen to sixteen deal with the practice that follows initiation. This is essentially the observance (caryā) of the Vow of Knowledge (vidyāvrata), which consists of wandering to sacred sites where Siddhas and Yoginīs meet whilst assiduously repeating the goddess's Vidyā. The presentation is in two parts. The first extends through chapter fourteen up to verse 13 of chapter fifteen.[4] This was originally chapter 15 of the Tantrasadbhāva. It is so popular with the votaries of the

---

[1] KuKh 13/111.
[2] Ibid. 13/152.
[3] See appendix 1 of KuKh vol. 4.
[4] The entire passage corresponds to chapter 15 of the TS, which is 148 verses long, and KMT 25/29-171. The first thirteen verses of chapter 15, concerning the various types of Kaula consorts, concludes the previous chapter and so would be better placed there. Like chapters 11 and 12, here is another example of the clumsy division of chapters suggesting that it was done by a second party, not the redactor of the text.

Kubjikā Tantras that it was first incorporated into the KMT. It is found in its expansion, the ṢSS (but not the ŚM), the KuKauM and the AS. A comparison of the variant readings in these sources suggest that although the redactor of the KuKh took it from the KMT, he may well have also consulted the original version in the TS, unless the manuscript of the KMT he used was closer to the TS than the ones available to us now. We have had occasion to discuss the Vow of Knowledge elsewhere in this introduction.[1] The reader can consult the concordance and the notes to the Sanskrit text and translation for a detailed comparison of these sources.

The translation and notes present a detailed picture of the Vow of Knowledge. Here we may ask ourselves why it is such a popular part of the Kubjikā teachings. One reason is that it is a part of the Tantrasadbhāva, a Tantra from which the Kubjikā Tantras draw a great deal. Another more basic reason is that it is an inner transposition of the kind of observance (caryā) that is basic to the earlier forms of Śaivism. These are the Pāśupata and allied schools that were the predecessors of the Siddhānta Āgamic cults, on the one hand and those of the Bhairava Tantras, on the other. In the earliest forms, as far as we can gather from our textual sources, the Śaiva cults they taught were largely meant for the renouncer or the householder who would periodically take up his way of life. This consisted in the observance of vows to live the wandering life and the constant repetition of mantra along with rites that could be performed 'on the road' or internalized. One of the features of the emergent Kaula modalities of practice was the development of a coherent pan-Indian sacred geographies. This development was a necessary correlate of that of the Yoginī cults. These first emerged in the textual sources in the early Bhairava Tantras of the Vidyāpīṭha of which the first major milestone was the Brahmayāmala. The cult of the BY is as yet singularly devoid of an extensive sacred geography. The next major development is marked by the cults of the Siddhayogeśvarīmata first and then the Tantrasadbhāva, both belonging to what came to be called Trika. The SYM left ample space for the literal outer performance of the practices (sādhana) it taught. The most powerful of these, like those of the BY, were meant for the cremation ground. As in the BY, Yoginīs and other such powerful ambivalent beings were invoked there with offerings of human blood and other bodily fluids along with meat and liquor. Penetrating and taking possession of the one who recites mantra, they empowered him with supernatural powers and could induce visions that culminated in expanded, liberated states of consciousness. While the cult of the Tantrasadbhāva maintained this praxis as an open possibility, it fostered the development of the Kaula modality. In terms of the pantheon of divine forms this meant the further evolution of systematically ordered groupings into 'families' - 'Kulas', prefigured in the BY. Thus in the TS we find a minimal definition of this term, which came to be stratified with many layers of meaning, as simply 'a collection of deities'

[1] See intro. vol. 1 p. 480 ff..

(devatāsamūha).[1] These 'deities' are the Yoginīs along with their consorts and companions who live in villages, towns and the countryside and reflect in their nature and location the countless local deities who still inhabit rural and traditional urban India. Hand in hand with their emergence in large numbers and groups, amenable to projection and worship in symmetrical geometic figures and the body, are the sacred geographies that locate them in the South Asian macrocosm. Right from their inception, it seems, these developments evolve hand in hand with techniques of internalisation that allow the inward projection of the outer world and its sacred geography. This principle of internalisation is a cardinal feature of the Kaula modality. Even so, I believe that just as outer ritual did in fact continue, despite the provisions for its internalisation, the outer sites did exist and pilgrimage to them did take place. Be that as it may, the Vow of Knowledge taught in the TS provided interior equivalents for every aspect of the outer practice in a complete and sophisticated way in the context of its own application of the paradigms of the Kaula modality. The Kubjikā sources evolved their own applications, including their own sacred geographies which were very similar to those of the TS and other allied schools (including Buddhist ones), but nonetheless distinctive. The formulation of the observance (caryā) of the Vow in the TS suited the Kubjikā sources well and so was repeatedly framed in the context of their own particular applications.

Thus, following directly after the Vow of Knowledge of the TS comes the Vratasūtra that extends up to the end of chapter fifteen.[2] Here we observe how later Kubjikā doctrine is integrated into the earlier one and the Trika Kaulism of the TS by the simple addition of this sūtra in which four Vows are outlined corresponding to the transmissions (krama) of the four lineages (oli) of the Kubjikā teachings.

Chapter Sixteen: The Section Concerning the Vidyā

Following the exposition of the interior dimensions of the observer of the vow, his person, the features of his vow, and the kind of places he visits, chapter sixteen focuses on the sacred sites to which he wanders begging alms. There he meets Yoginīs who, if they are pleased, unite with him and offer him the sacrificial food (caru) that gives him magical and yogic powers (siddhi) and even liberation. It opens with a passage on the practice of begging alms in the eight centres of Kula where the Eight Mothers reside and are worshipped. The bulk of this passage consists of two series of mantras dedicated to the Mothers. After the first series[3] comes the second taught in the Sūtra of the Octet of Kula.[1] This sūtra

---

[1] kulaṁ samūham ity uktaṁ devatānāṁ yaśasvini | TS 14/63ab.
[2] i.e. KuKh 15/15-44 - verse 15/14 concerning the ritual use of wine seems misplaced here.
[3] KuKh 16/1-15.

is amongst the nine selected by Mukundarāja and, unique to the KuKh, may well be one of its original sūtras.

The Eight Mothers, their worship and all that relates to them, are a major topic in the Kubjikā Tantras as they are in all the Bhairava and Kaula traditions. In this context they figure as the deities of the sacred sites (kṣetra) where they reside embodied in woman of low caste the observer of the Vow of Knowledge meets and worships in the course of his inner and outer pilgrimage. Implicit in this account is their placement in the goddess's maṇḍala arranged on the eight petals of a lotus around the core described in the previous chapters. The pilgrim who journeys through the inner maṇḍala out from the centre and the worshipper of the outer maṇḍala, having completed the round of the primary seats (pīṭha) first in the Triangle then in the Hexagram, circumambulates the goddess in the centre within this circuit.

The rest of the chapter is dedicated to the Hymn to the Sixty-four Sacred Seats (pīṭhastava)[2] which eulogizes the sixty-four places on the outermost circuit of the maṇḍala populated by as many Yoginīs and guardians. This version of the classic Kaula paradigm of Eight Mothers from which emanate sixty-four Yoginīs is specifically Kubjikā doctrine. The TS knows this paradigm. Indeed, it contains the earliest representation of it recovered up to now. The Kubjikā tradition, however, not only prefers to ignore the TS in this case and establish its own sets of sixty-four Yoginīs, it also generates its own sacred geography for them. The first twenty-four of these seats correspond to a set in chapter 22 of the KMT from which the verses are drawn.[3] The same is reproduced in chapter 34 of the ṢSS and some parts in chapter six of the AS. Parallel passages are found in KRU, ŚM and Ṭ. Although not literal reproductions of the text in the KMT they present essentially the same material in their own way. In the ŚM and the Ṭ the seats are part of the Khecarīcakra in the End of the Twelve, as they are in the KMT. The KRU presents the seats as the Sequence of Twenty-four deposited on the body as a part of the Transmission of the Aged. The following forty seats are peculiar to the Pīṭhastava of the KuKh. A noteworthy feature of this set is that the first place is accorded to Nepal. There the Yoginī is said to be Guhyakālī and her consort Paśupati, which is one of the earliest references to this important couple still venerated in Nepal as the presiding deities of the country. The Pīṭhastava is reproduced by Vimalaprabodha[4] in his Kālīpañcakramārcana. This text is of

---

[1] KuKh 16/16-23. Just after verse 23 we read: iti kulāṣṭakakulacaryāsūtrādhikāraḥ

[2] KuKh 16/24-138.

[3] These twenty-four seats are drawn originally in a modified order from the TS. Concerning this and the references from other sources mentioned further ahead, see KuKh vol. 4, appendix 8.

[4] The earliest dated manuscript of this text belongs to the 12th century. The main deity of this Kramārcana is Guhyakālī. We would expect it to be Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī, whom the Kālīkrama taught in Kashmiri sources universally acknowledges as the supreme form of Kālī. Guhyakālī is the unique importance as it is the sole liturgy recovered so far of the Kashmiri Kālīkrama - a system that was constructed by internalizing the outer ritual. It is likely that the Pīṭhastava there, was taken from the KuKh.

Chapter Seventeen: The Venerable Sūtra of the Lineage (Śrīsantānasūtra)

This chapter is the Sūtra of the Lineage (śrīsantānasūtra). It presents a succinct exposition of sixteen key terms or 'conventions' (saṁketa) of the Kubjikā Tantras. The text refers to them collectively as 'the essence of the Kaula teachings that has emerged from the Kulakrama'.[1] These are introduced in the form of a series of questions to which the rest of the sūtra supplies the answers. The quality of this dense and interesting sūtra stimulated Mukundarāja to write a short commentary on it. The AS reproduces the first verses containing the questions but most of the replies differ, a sign of the importance attributed to these key terms and the variety of their possible meanings. Two Santānasūtras are amongst the 107 sūtras listed in YKh (1). We have seen that the Siddhasantānasūtra is part of chapter four of YKh (1).[2] There are two others that are closely related. One is this one and the other one is in chapter 53 of our text. Also called the Prajñāsūtra,[3] it is also found in the second recension of the YKh. There it is called the 'main (pradhāna) Santānasūtra' in the colophon. In just fifteen verses it transmits the 'hidden meaning' (gūḍhārtha) of the sixteen conventions. The meaning is indeed obscure and would be hardly intelligible were it not for the other Santānasūtra that explains it, albeit somewhat cryptically. It is possible therefore that this Santānasūtra was written after the one in YKh (2).

Chapters Eighteen to Twenty-four: The Sequence of the Deposition of Mālinī, the Assembly of Sounds (śabdarāśi), Concerning the Triple Vidyā, the Five principle form of Kālī of a later development of the Kālīkrama that is popular amongst Newar initiates. Although many early forms of Kālī are extensively worshipped by the Newars, judging by the manuscript evidence and what we know of contemporary practice, this particular form of the Kālīkrama is not well known in the Kathmandu Valley. Even so, a number of short Kashmiri Kālīkrama tracts along with the JY have been recovered from Nepalese manuscripts which testify to its early presence in the Valley. It is unlikely that this Kramārcana as it stands was compiled in Kashmir. There would be little need there to import a Newar goddess into a Kashmiri liturgy. It is much more likely that its final form was redacted in Nepal or nearby where the worship of Guhyakālī was popular. Thus, although the Krama worshipped in this Kramārcana essentially corresponds to the one expounded in an internalized form in the Kashmiri Mahānaya sources, it is in all probability an adaptation of a Kashmiri liturgy in accord with Newar preferences. If so, Vimalaprabodha may have been a Newar or a Kashmiri immigrant into the Kathmandu Valley.

---

[1] KuKh 17/7.

[2] YKh (1) 4/45-75.

[3] KuKh 53/15-16ab.

Principles, Concerning Ṣoḍhā; Concerning Tadgraha and the Samayā Vidyā and the Casket of the Sixfold Deposition

The order (krama) in which the teachings are presented in the KuKh is inspired by the sequence (krama) of the liturgy of the goddess and her maṇḍala. Chapters eight to twelve dealt with the goddess's Samayā Vidyā and its projection into the core of the maṇḍala. The following chapters discuss the peregrination of the adept in the sacred sites that surround that inner core. Now that the maṇḍala has been prepared and worshipped in this way, this and the following six chapters up to twenty-four deal with the mantras the adept needs to project onto his body to prepare him to perform the sacrificial rite (yajana).[1] We have seen that the rite taught in the SKh follows the same pattern. After preparing the outer sphere of the rite and worshipping there, the officiant turns to the body - the instrument of ritual action. Energized and transformed into a repository of divine forms, the ritual agent is restored to his original pristine liberated condition in which the deity is installed in the supreme state and highest metaphysical place. Thus he is made the beneficiary of the deity's activity which generates the Command that authorizes and empowers him to worship effectively by sharing in the deity's condition.

Thus these chapters, which are all concerned with this phase of the liturgy, are encapsulated into a single sub-section. In the beginning of chapter eighteen it is called generically, as are its counterparts in the SKh, simply the Sūtra of the Depositions (nyāsa)[2] and at the end of chapter twenty-four, more specifically, the Sūtra of the Sixfold Deposition.[3] Thus the KuKh follows the model we have already noted is exemplified in the SKh. However, instead of simply presenting the series of letters, syllables and mantras of each deposition in the dry, direct manner of the SKh, they are couched in code and accompanied by an account of the inner movements and nature of the deity's energy and the spiritual states to which they give rise. The many details easily distract us from the intent of the redactor, who assists us by setting out his program in the beginning of chapter eighteen where he lists the two sets of six depositions.[4] Borrowing an expression from our text, we may say that these chapters collectively form a single Kaulika sūtra.[5] But this, it seems, is a structural feature of the text cleverly devised by the redactor on the model of other nyāsasūtras, rather than an actual sūtra. Indeed, this series of chapters may have originally been sūtras.

---

[1] KuKh 18/21-2ab.
[2] KuKh 18/4,17cd-18ab.
[3] KuKh 24/120cd-122ab.
[4] KuKh 18/18cd-22ab.
[5] KuKh 24/116cd-117ab.

Chapter eighteen may have been a sūtra that the redactor modified to bond it, and the others that follow, together. It deals with the deposition of the letters and the deities of the alphabetic goddess Mālinī. It concludes with a depostion of her six faces and limbs.[1] Chapter nineteen follows the same pattern in its presentation of the deposition of the Assembly of Sounds (śabdarāśi), Mālinī's male counterpart. An additional deposition is taught there not recorded in the set listed at the beginning of the previous chapter. This is the projection of Navātman, which is the seed-syllable of Śabdarāśibhairava. Chapter twenty deals with the triple Vidyā - Parā, Parāparā and Aparā - which is the basic triad of Vidyās from which the Trika school draws its name. Here it is a chapter (ānanda) simply called 'Concerning the Triple Vidyā (Trividyādhikāra)', but originally it could well have been the Trividyādhikārasūtra, which is the eighty-sixth sūtra in the list of 107 sūtras of YKh (1).[2] Chapter twenty-four is called 'the Casket of the Sixfold Deposition' in the colophon, although it refers to itself as the Sūtra of the Sixfold Depositions.[3] These six depositions are described in both this chapter and the previous one together.[4]

Chapter Twenty-five: The Fifty (Verses) concerning Kula

The name of this chapter is appropriate, although one wonders at first why it is called this. Ostensibly it deals with the inner dimensions of the subtle yogic body - the Six Wheels, the Sixteen Supports, the Three Signs and the Five Voids through which Kuṇḍalinī, and with it the yogi's consciousness, ascends to the highest state. A closer reading reveals that these 'places' and their corresponding states, house the Siddhas who constitute the Siddhakaula which, when its true, fundamental nature is realised, is experienced as the Transmental.[5] The fifty Siddhas who govern the letters are distributed in the Six Wheels.[6] Sixteen Siddhas governing the vowels are within the Sixteen Supports[7] in the vital constituents of the body. The Three Signs - mind, intellect and ego - house the three Siddhas who founded the three lineages (oli), here equated with the qualities of sattva, rajas and tamas.[8] The Five Voids are the residence of the Five Siddhas governing the gross elements. Nine Kulas, which include the six founded by the disciples of Matsyendranātha along with three others, implicitly correspond to the Nine

---

[1] KuKh 18/91-104.
[2] YKh (1) 38/17c.
[3] KuKh 24/120cd-122ab.
[4] See note to KuKh 18/21-22ab.
[5] KuKh 25/55.
[6] Ibid. 25/22cd-28.
[7] Ibid. 25/29-36ab.
[8] Ibid. 25/36cd-37.

Siddhas. They complete the paradigmatic configuration of Siddhas the tradition also represents in other contexts as the legendary incarnate teachers of the Kubjikā tradition.

Chapter Twenty-six: The Hymn to Māyā that is a part of the Description of the authority of the Root Sūtra

Now the adept has generated his 'divine body' (divyadeha) and with it the Command and gone on to worship the Siddhas of the Kula in its innermost dimension, he is ready to worship the Kramamaṇḍala, that is, the goddess who is within it and is herself the maṇḍala charged with the Krama. This is described in the Root Sūtra with which this chapter begins. It is said to be the first sūtra (ādyasūtra, pūrvasūtra),[1] that is, the first Root Sūtra of the Transmission (kramādyamūlasūtra). Consisting of just three and half verses, as are the coils of Kuṇḍalinī, it describes the Triangle from which emanation proceeds.[2] The KuKh records that there are three versions of this sūtra[3] of which this is, as the text tells us, the first. Probably considering this to be the basic form of the sūtra, Mukundarāja chose to comment on this version. The other two are in chapters 38 and 42.[4] The former is the most elaborate and longest of the three. It is essentially an expanded version set in the same sragdharā metre and refers to itself as the 'secondary sūtra'. However, although a derivative sūtra it nonetheless claims to be the Root Sūtra as well.[5] It is such an important and popular sūtra that we find other variant forms of it in at least three other texts of the Kubjikā corpus.[6] Indeed, it was considered so characteristic of the entire Kubjikā tradition that a version of it is quoted by Śrīpuṇḍarīka in his commentary on the Kālacakratantra in order to refute it.[7] The KuKh, at least, accords exceptional status to the Root Sūtra. The scripture can only be given to who knows, amongst other things, the Root Sūtra.[8] It is considered as basic as the teaching concerning the teachers and the Krama itself, along with which it should be taught.[9] The student bows to it, as he does to the Gurumaṇḍala, before commencing the study of the scripture.[10]

[1] KuKh 26/6b and 26b.
[2] KuKh 26/2; see also KuKh 42/2.
[3] KuKh 42/6ab.
[4] The three sūtras begin at KuKh 26/3, 38/1 and 42/7.
[5] KuKh 38/35ab.
[6] These are CMSS 1/4-6 and AS 25/5-6 and the first verse of the Kramasūtrādhikāra. The versions have been collated in the Sanskrit text and discussed in the notes of the translation.
[7] Vimalaprabhā vol. 3, p. 146-7. Śrīpuṇḍarīka refers to his source as the Mūlasūtra.
[8] KuKh 30/234cd-235ab.
[9] KuKh 30/46cd-47.
[10] KuKh 30/215cd-217ab.

Although it is sixth in the list of 107 sūtras and YKh (1) includes an explanatory sūtra (bhūmikā) of it (that is reproduced in chapter 58 of the KuKh) it is not found there. The explanatory sūtra specifically declares that it is an explanation (bhūmikā) of the 'essence of the Root Sūtra' which is three and a half verses long.[1] According to the explanatory sūtra, it has been 'retrieved (uddhṛta) in a concise form from the Island of the Moon'.[2] Apart from the symbolic sense, we may see in this statement a claim to its origin in Koṅkaṇa. However, the sūtra it explains makes no reference to Koṅkaṇa or its related symbols. Although it is too short to make much of this silence, it is not impossible that this important sūtra was written before the shift to Koṅkaṇa. Even so, it is quite possible that it formed a part of the original nucleus of the KuKh.

As there are so many versions of the Root Sūtra, it is hard to say which one, if any of them is the original one, although as we shall see when we come to the version in chapter 38, we may be able to arrange them in an approximate chronological order. In two places in the YKh (1)[3] we find verses that contain practically the same expressions found in the Root Sūtra and much of the content. Did these or similar verses serves as prototypes for the Root Sūtra? The second of these two instances is particularly interesting as we find in those verses a combination of elements of the Root Sūtra and the short version of the Saṁvartāsūtra related to each other in such a way that one gets the impression that the former emerges, as it were, from the later. This is quite understandable. Both sūtras describe the same maṇḍala. The Saṁvartāsūtra largely concentrates on the contents of the hexagram into which the six parts of the Krama are projected. The Root Sūtra, on the other hand, is more concerned with the goddess's triangle - her fecund womb - bhaga - and the Point - her Liṅga - and the how the hexagram is generated from them. Thus the two sūtras supplement each other.

The goddess's Yoni, the Root Sūtra describes, generates emanation and the most elevated states of consciousness, even as it triggers off deepening trains of associations. No wonder the Root Sūtra, has been explained in as many ways as are its versions. Indeed the explanations are essential. The Root Sūtra and its explanatory sūtra form a unity. The first is the revelation, the divine vision of the Yoni. The second is its realisation - the knowledge and understanding of what has been revealed. Accordingly, the explanatory Wisdom Sūtra (prajñāsūtra) follows the Root Sūtra which, identified with the 'current of the transmission'

---

[1] Ibid. 58/2, 100cd-101.
[2] Ibid. 58/102-103ab.
[3] YKh (1) 38/79-83ab and ibid. 53/5-6. These verses are translated and compared with the versions of the Root Sūtra in the KuKh in the notes to the translation of the Root Sūtra in this chapter of the KuKh.

(kramaugha), is awakened by it.[1] In short, the two go together. As the Wisdom Sūtra concludes:

> The Transmission of (the goddess's) Sūtra (sūtrakrama) has been explained, namely, the Current of the Transmission (kramaugha) that has emerged (into the world). One should perceive the sense of (its) wisdom and coherence which instructs in (the true sense of) the Root Sūtra. This is the Wisdom Sūtra of one who has been purified by the scripture. It has been taught here in this scripture (saṁhitā) in order to destroy (the individual soul's) impurity. (It is a) \`sūtra' because its by this that (the teaching) is expounded (sūcita). Moreover, it is the \`Root Sūtra' because (it is expounded from the very) root. He who does not possess the Wisdom Sūtra, (or) who understands it in another (incorrect) way, does not possess the Sūtra, nor the root (of the teaching), nor knowledge of that which is to be known.[2]

The second part of this chapter is the Māyāstava. It is one of several hymns in the Kubjikā corpus addressed to the goddess as Mahāmāyā. The colophon says that this chapter is 'dedicated to the Hymn to Māyā that forms a part of the description of the authority of the Root Sūtra'. Mukundarāja comments on both in his SaṁP implicitly confirming their close relationship. Presumably, it is meant to be recited in front of the triangular maṇḍala of the goddess described in the Root Sūtra and so praises the various forms and aspects of the goddess within it. She is the Divine Liṅga, the Neuter, Unstruck Sound, that is, the essence of Speech arisen on the path of Kuṇḍalinī. She is the first goddess of the Kramamaṇḍala and resides in the sacred seats within it in the form of the goddesses who preside over them. She is within the seed-syllable mantras and is the Full Moon. The womb of the universe, she is the energy in the vital breath that wanders in the Void. The Mother of the principles of existence, she sustains and withdraws them.

Chapters Twenty-seven and Twenty-eight: The Circle of the Transmission (kramamaṇḍala), and the Circle of the Teachers (gurumaṇḍala) and the Authority of the Triple Transmission

After the exposition of the core of the maṇḍala, its worship naturally follows. The KuKh regularly returns to the liturgy, time and again, tirelessly preparing the ground each time with the teachings of the contents of the maṇḍala

---

[1] KuKh 26/55cd-56.

[2] KuKh 26/51-54ab.

and their inner equivalents. Inspired by the need for variety, each time the presentation differs, as does the liturgy that follows. Each time we discover new features in the underlying paradigms as we witness the repeated production of novel forms from it. Thus ritual, like experience from the most mundane to the summit on the border of transcendence, and with it the cycle of emanation, remains the same and yet is constantly changing. However, while this is true for the redactor(s) of the KuKh, we notice, as one would expect, that the texts prescribe that each liturgy should be performed carefully in order to maintain its purity and excellence. The KuKh warns that the Krama taught in these chapters is the one to be followed and no other. One must worship the Krama taught in one's own lineage in the manner taught by the teacher. The teacher purifies the worshipper and only by his grace can the worship of the deity be fruitful.[1]

The worship of the Krama (kramārcana) taught in this, and the following chapter, begins, as usual, with the generation and worship of the Gurumaṇḍala. This version of the Gurumaṇḍala differs from the one outlined in chapter 48, which is based on groups of nine that emanate from Navātman. Moreover, that is projected externally into an outer maṇḍala. Although, in this case, as usual, the Guru worshipped in the centre is Navātmābhairava, there are five groups[2] governed by the Five Siddhas who, along with Navātman, are the teachers worshipped in this maṇḍala. It is worshipped in the teacher's sandals that are placed before him and internally along the axis from the base of the spine to the head.[3]

This is followed by the worship of the Krama, which is the subject of the remaining part of this chapter and the following one. This begins, as before, with the drawing of the maṇḍala, which in this case is done on a deer skin. It is in three parts corresponding to the three transmissions (krama). The triangle in the centre is the sphere of the Transmission of the Elders. The Hexagram that surrounds it is that of the Youth and the eight petal lotus and three girdles around are the sphere of the Transmission of the Child.[4] Once the maṇḍala has been prepared the officiant purifies himself with three series of depositions corresponding to the three transmissions and offers a vessel full of Kaula sacrificial offerings to each one of them. Then he worships the Krama (kramārcana, kramapūjā, kramapūjana).[5] The rites end with the repetition of the goddess's Vidyā or seed-syllable and her visualization. Significantly, the goddess concludes with the admonition: ‘One should meditate on (all this) within my Yoni. (This meditation)

[1] KuKh 28/106-111ab.
[2] KuKh 27/14-15.
[3] KuKh 27/1-26ab.
[4] KuKh 27/26cd-32.
[5] KuKh 27/33-60.

should not be directed outside.'[1] The second sentence reminds us that earlier cults, for example that of the Brahmayāmala, teach the contemplation of the physical Yoni which, if successful, leads to the vision of the universe within it. Outer worship of the Yoni continued to be a feature of some of the later Kaula cults also. Although provision for this kind of outer rite does exist in the Kubjikā Tantras,[2] Kubjikā warns that the true Yoni of the goddess is an internal reality externally represented in the maṇḍala.

The following chapter appears to have been constructed from one or two sūtras. The text refers to the first one simply as the 'previous' or 'first' sūtra (pūrvasūtra). It is followed by the Sūtra of the Command (ājñāsūtra). The first sūtra describes the Kramas of the three lineages. All three consist of twenty-seven mantras divided, into six groups of 4-5-6-4-5-3 mantras.[3] No source has been traced for this sūtra and so this may well be the basic configuration of the Kramas taught in the KuKh, as it is in the YKh. The expanded version of the Root Sūtra in chapter 38 agrees that all three transmissions are in twenty-seven divisions.[4] However, the explanatory sūtra of the version in chapter twenty-six refers to two sequences of twenty-eight. The first, 'will occur in the future'[5] and is related to Tisra, the seat of the future. It is divided into six units of 4-5-6-4-5-4,[6] as is the one in the KMT. The second is generically related to the order of emanation, rather than any lineage. This too consists of twenty-eight units, but they are divided 5-5-6-4-5-3. Are these differences the result of drawing from diverse sources?

One would suppose the Kramas taught in this chapter to be those projected into the Kramamaṇḍala described in the previous one. However, this is probably not the case. The text instructs that the Krama (including the Eight Mothers) should be worshipped, as was the Gurumaṇḍala in the previous chapter, in the teacher's sandals or in front of them.[7] The later possibility probably implies that it can also be worshipped in a Kramamaṇḍala drawn there. Is this where the deer skin is spread on which the maṇḍala is drawn, according to the method taught in the previous chapter? Places in the body are assigned to the constituents of the first Krama. As the other Kramas are configured in the same way, the same procedure is probably to be followed in their case as well. We are again reminded

[1] KuKh 27/69cd-70ab.

[2] Called Bhagayāga or Śāntayoga, it is described in a compact section in YKh (2) 12/1-16ab. It is quoted and translated in the notes to KuKh 27/68cd-70ab.

[3] Concerning the division of the Kramas for the three transmissions from the Eldest onwards see KuKh 28/39-41, 28/69cd-71, and 28/101cd-104, respectively and, collectively, 28/162cd-164.

[4] KuKh 38/26.

[5] KuKh 26/25.

[6] KuKh 26/20-25.

[7] KuKh 28/162cd-164.

of the procedure outlined for the Gurumaṇḍala in the previous chapter and its projection into the teacher's sandals. The Kramamaṇḍala is then probably reserved for the outer projection of the Kramas. While these procedures are not entirely incompatible with those of the previous chapter, it is likely that here also, independent sūtras have been juxtaposed.

Chapter Twenty-nine: The Sūtra of the Teaching Concerning the Visualisation of the Goddess's Form (Devyāmūrtidhyānopadeśasūtra)

This chapter is dedicated to the iconic form (mūrti) of the goddess enshrined in the midst of the Krama. One would expect that the goddess should be visualized and worshipped prior to the worship of her Krama. This is in fact what we find in the Newar liturgies. Her installation in the centre of the maṇḍala is normally the first thing to do after it has been drawn. Our text also enjoins that one should first know the form of the goddess and then commence her worship.[1] The worship of the Krama may also conclude with the repetition of the Vidyā together with her visualization. Perhaps with this in mind the redactor chose this order of presentation. The visualization of the goddess is presented, as in other parts of the MBT, in the form of a dhyānasūtra.[2] it is not specifically associated with any of the lineages. However, it is drawn from the first recension of the YKh where it is presented as that of the goddess of the Lineage of the Child.[3]

Neither of the other two visualized forms of the goddess described in the KuKh are explicitly associated with the Kramas either. All three forms are dark blue and red and have six faces. The one here has twelve arms and is identified with Kāmeśvarī of Kāmarūpa.[4] The form described in chapter sixty-eight[5] is also drawn from YKh (1) where we are told that it presides over the middle lineage. This form of the goddess has eighteen arms and is identified with Tripurabhairavī.[6] The form in chapter forty-nine[7] has six arms and is identified with the outcaste foreigner (barbarā) Mātaṅgī. Also called Juṣṭacaṇḍalī, she is

---

[1] KuKh 29/59-60.
[2] Although the colophon of chapter 29 is the standard long one, it does not refer to this chapter as an ānanda, instead it is called the devyāmūrtidhyānopadeśasūtra. See chapter 4 above, for this and other visualized forms of the goddess.
[3] The passage is KuKh 29/29-60 = YKh (1) 19/3-31. The colophon in YKh (1) reads: iti śrīkādibhede śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasre devyāmūrtidhyānasūtram ‖ Cf. previous note. Just after this sūtra, Śrīnātha declares: "O Khañjī, I have heard the visualization that has originated from the Transmission of the Child" (śrutaṁ dhyānaṁ mayā khañji bālakramavinirgatam) YKh (1) 19/30cd.
[4] KuKh 29/5.
[5] KuKh 68/1ff.
[6] KuKh 68/6.
[7] KuKh 49/23cd-42.

strangely ambiguous. On the one hand she is said repeatedly to be slim and beautiful. However, she is also old, decrepit (jarjarā) and frightening. She is the goddess of the Transmission of the Aged.

Chapter Thirty: The Method of Writing and Commentating (on the Scripture) and a Description of the Greatness of the Scripture of the Śrīkula.

Chapter thirty is dedicated to the method of copying,[1] worshipping and explaining the scripture. Worship of the scripture goes back to the very inception of the Kubjikā cult. It is already enjoined at the end of the KMT[2] and in all three sections of the MBT as well as the expansions of the KMT. The ŚM dedicates substantial space to this subject both at the beginning and end of it, presumably reflecting the practice of worshipping the scripture both before it is taught and after its completion. However, concerning this matter the KuKh, as usual, prefers to draw from the ṢSS that also dedicates space (although less than the ŚM) to the worship of the scripture and its transmission. Part of the text is drawn directly from the ṢSS, some is loosely paraphrased and the overall structure of the rites and their presentation is inspired by the ṢSS. [3] There are no sūtras in the ṢSS and so, as we would expect, this chapter is not derived from a sūtra.

The KuKh for its part stresses that the writing and oral explanation (vyākhyāna) ideally takes place in Koṅkaṇa in the Deccan. The knowledge of the scripture should be imparted there.[4] The ṢSS does acknowledge the connection with Koṅkaṇa in this context but not directly. Those who are fit to receive the scripture must be born from a Yoginī (yoginīgarbha) and this Yoginī is the Mother of Koṅkaṇa (koṅkaṇāmbikā).[5]

Whereas the ṢSS refers to the scripture as the Śrīmata - a name that applies to all the major Kubjikā Tantras - the KuKh refers to it specifically as the Caturviṁśatisāhasra, that is, the MBT. It is divided into three sections (khaṇḍatraya) and worshipped as such.[6] Like the ṢSS the KuKh enjoins that the version in 'five verses'[7] of the Saṁvartāsūtra should be written when one begins to copy the scripture. Thus it seems that at this stage of the redaction of the KuKh

---

[1] As the scripture is dictated by the teacher to his disciple, the chances of error are much greater. One may suppose that this is one of the reasons why the manuscript tradition of the MBT is quite corrupt. However, this need not be the case. The surviving MSs of the ṢSS, which enjoins a similar procedure, are considerably better than those of the MBT.
[2] KMT 25/192-6.
[3] See notes to KuKh 30/18 ff..
[4] KuKh 30/170-1ab, 178cd-9ab.
[5] ṢSS 3/109-110.
[6] KuKh 30/2cd-4abc, 21cd-3.
[7] KuKh 30/26, cf. ṢSS 3/30-31.

the Saṁvartāsūtra was already in place at the beginning of it. Moreover, it is clear that the KuKh was copied first. The other sections were probably copied in the order in which they are worshipped.[1] Finally, we note that the views expressed here are surprisingly tolerant in order, it seems, to allow greater access to the tradition. The Tantras are usually careful to reserve their teachings for initiates. However, here the Tantra allows a teacher to adopt the disciple of another teacher belonging to a different tradition if that disciple has sincere devotion for him.[2] Moreover, if he just happens to hear the scripture or see a rite, he becomes a member of the tradition.[3]

Chapters Thirty-one to Thirty-three: The Initiation by Piercing (vedhadīkṣā), the Characteristic Signs of Teachers and Disciples and Concerning Initiation with Seed

These three chapters deal with initiation, a subject one expect to be have been treated before going into the rites and the rest to which it gives access. A variety of initiations are described in these chapters. These can be broadly classified into two basic types. One type includes those initiations that take place by what the texts call 'piercing' (vedhadīkṣā). The teacher initiates his disciple by piercing the inner centres (cakra), 'cavities', 'supports', 'knots' and the like that are arranged along the axis of the subtle body with the energy of Kuṇḍalinī in one or other of its various forms such as mantra, the Point or Kuṇḍalinī in her serpentine form. Rising, it transports the individual soul (jīva), energizing the inner centres as it does so and progressively merging the lower sensorial and mental energies into the higher energies of consciousness up to the Transmental. In this state the yogi is instructed to contemplate the Pure Reality, which, free and eternal, is pervasive like the sky and its radiant energy, supreme and tranquil, is the essence of Nirvāṇa, the liberated state.[4] Ultimately, the initiate attains a 'direct vision of the goddess through the senses' when she pierces through all the universe.[5]

This kind of initiation is especially associated with the Kaula modality of practice and the schools based on it. Free of elaborate outer rituals, the teacher imparts it to a worthy disciple by just looking at him. The process is rapid and so devastatingly powerful that the effects are clearly outwardly visible. The disciple trembles, then his body shakes and ultimately, in the grip of violent convulsions,

---

[1] See above, p. 97 ff..
[2] KuKh 30/235cd-236ab.
[3] KuKh 30/201cd-202.
[4] KuKh 31/51cd-54ab.
[5] KuKh 31/73.

faints with the force of the energy sheering through him. This is how the goddess initiates Bhairava.[1]

The redactor of this chapter relates the Kubjikā cult to its original Kaula roots by drawing his first formulation and presentation of the varieties of this type of initiation from the Kulagahvaratantra.[2] This text appears to have been a prime authority for this subject amongst Kaulas, irrespective of their particular tradition. Thus, Abhinava refers to the same passage in chapter twenty-nine of his Tantrāloka that is dedicated to the Kaula modality of practice.[3] Although it is probable that much of this brilliant chapter on initiation is not original (perhaps all of it is drawn from the Kulagahvara?), the redactor takes care to relate the rich initiatory experiences described here to the goddess Kubjikā by repeatedly recalling that it is she who is Kuṇḍalinī, the supreme energy.[4] These references are reinforced by others to specifically Kubjikā doctrines. From their perspective the text declares that one who knows this Yoga and is devoted to the Kulakrama is consecrated in the House of the City of the Moon by the power of the Command. Gazing on this, the Tamarind Tree, Navātmābhairava assumes the form of the Nine Siddhas all of whom are Ādinātha who will come into being in the Deccan.[5]

Chapter thirty-two is quite brief. It deals with the qualities and defects of teachers and disciples. This subject, one we commonly find in Tantras of all schools, is not entirely irrelevant to the subject of initiation, but is badly placed here. Indeed, it is a needless insertion. Chapter thirty-three returns to the subject of chapter thirty-one, adding other varieties of initiation by piercing. It opens with an interesting Kaula adaptation of a Siddhānta distinction between two types of initiation, namely, 'without seed' and 'with seed'. According to the common Siddhānta view, the first type is a brief initiation meant for woman, children and the mentally disabled who cannot meet all the obligations of the fully initiated state. Its purpose is simply to dispense those 'without seed' from them without this entailing a loss of their status as Śaivites. The second is the full initiation meant for those who are qualified and fit to receive it. Our text takes up this distinction understanding it from a Kaula perspective, thus setting the tone for the Kaula syncretism with the Siddhānta model we find further ahead. Essentially, the disciples 'without seed' are here understood to be those who are not the recipients of the grace (śaktipāta) of an intensely powerful Command. Thus, they do not

---

[1] See, for example, KuKh 5/33 ff..

[2] This is quoted in KuKh 31/11cd-26. See notes there for details.

[3] See TĀ 29/239cd-241ab, 243cd-252.

[4] KuKh 31/15cd-18, 40, 60. All major Kaula goddesses reside in the subtle body in the form of Kuṇḍalinī. Even so, the votaries of the goddess Kubjikā, the humpbacked goddess, feel that she is the 'original' goddess Kuṇḍalinī who, coiled like a sleeping snake, is also 'bent over'.

[5] KuKh 31/91-94ab.

experience the states that attend the rise of Kuṇḍalinī, including the ultimate realisation of oneness, nor the visions of contemplation and communications from supernatural beings. In short, these are fettered souls (paśu).[1]

Once established that this type of initiation takes place by the Command that Pierces (ājñāvedha) and more of its varieties are outlined, we are introduced to the second type of initiation. This is the initiation by means of the Six Paths (adhvan). Just as the first type relates to the Kaula modality, this one relates to the Tantric one, that is, the basic Siddhānta model. In accord with this model the teacher leads the neophyte up along the ladder-like universe to the summit of it where he is conjoined with Śiva. This cosmic path has six aspects: three are 'objective' and the others are its three sonic equivalents. The first three, ranging from subtle to gross, are the world systems, the thirty-six metaphysical principles and the five spheres of the forces (kalā) that contain them, respectively. The corresponding sonic triad consists of the mantra of the worlds, the parts (pāda) of this mantra and the letters. Although the purpose of both types of initiation is the 'disjunction' (viśleṣa) of the metaphysical impurity (mala) that binds the individual soul, this function of initiation is more stressed in this second type. Movement along the Six Paths is marked by the progressive removal of impurity. It is the purification of the Paths. The impure Path is the 'field of Māyā'. The soul who resides within it becomes itself Māyā, bound by its own egocentric actions and is separated from the oneness of Śiva and Śakti until the way of the Pure Path is cleared.

This is achieved by this other kind of initiation also known as the Initiation by Means of the Fire Sacrifice (hotrīdīkṣā)[2] because, unlike the Initiation by Piercing, it requires outer ritual. The procedure of this Śrīyāga, is clearly influenced by the Siddhānta ritual even though it is, as our text affirms, 'a part of the Kula tradition'[3] and so is modified accordingly. A pavilion is set up and the firepit and the maṇḍalas are prepared. The Kaula character of the rite is evident as it includes the worship of Ānandabhairava in the form of Navātman and the goddess in a 'Kula jar' filled with liquor and animal sacrifice (bali) is offered to Vaṭuka, the Yoginīs and the guardians of the field.[4] The two modalities, Kaula and Siddhānta, are combined. Thus, the Initiation by Means of the Energies of the Letters (varṇadīkṣā) that follows corresponds to that of the paths of mantra and its parts. The teacher projects the letters onto the body of his disciple to paralyse the fetters that bind him and his subtle body is pierced by the rise of Kuṇḍalinī within it. The Siddhānta character of the rite is more evident in the following initiations

---

[1] KuKh 33/1-15ab.
[2] KuKh 33/20.
[3] KuKh 33/56-57.
[4] KuKh 33/87-88ab.

that take place by means of the Principles and the Forces that contain them, and the worlds. Here the deity is, as in the Siddhānta, Sadāśiva who is the 'knower' who liberates the fettered soul.[1] The Principles are thirty-six, as in the Siddhānta, rather than just twenty-five, as described in chapter thirteen. The procedure yields the same results as the Siddhānta equivalent. The soul is 'disjoined' from the fetters that have been first 'paralysed' and so the soul is liberated from them. At this point a confluence of the two modalities gives rise to a seeming contradiction. Consistant with the Siddhānta view, our text declares that although the fetters no longer bind the soul, he attains Śiva only when he dies - the expression for this is, significantly, 'when the body drops'. After all, the fetters still exist. They have only been 'paralysed'. On the other hand, the initiate displays the same signs of attainment (pratyaya) that manifest in the initiation by piercing of the Kaula modality - he shakes violently and falling on the ground, attains the 'flawless Yoga' of the liberated state.[2] The Siddhānta does refer to similar signs but only cursorily. Moreover, there they are understood to be the result of the power of mantra. More essentially, the Siddhānta's view is that liberation is achieved after death (videhamukti), whereas the Kaula view is that it can be attained while still alive (jīvanmukti). The KuKh tries to reconcile the two. One way it does this is simply by pointing out that as initiation wipes the slate clean and lends access to the observances that keep it that way, it is 'indeed like liberation'.[3] Another way is more subtle. Liberation is attained in both modalities when the 'body drops' but in the Kaula one it falls to the ground, as if lifeless because it has been freed from the fetters that bind the Self to the body and so, freed from them, it shakes and falls like a tree that has been felled.

Chapter thirty-four: The Teaching concerning the Offering to the Fire

This chapter deals with the fire sacrifice. The main phases in the procedure are outlined in the table of contents of the volume containing this chapter. Here it is sufficient to note one or two points. Firstly, the Tantra enjoins that the fire sacrifice should be offered by devout householders.[4] They perform the regular, obligatory rites (nitya), whereas the more extensive occasional rites (naimittika) are performed for them. The hexagonal fire altar with its triangular pit reproduce the goddess's maṇḍala and so the same sacred seats and Siddhas are projected into them. The goddess and the god, who are present in the maṇḍala as the Vaḍavā Fire and the Fire of Time - Kālāgni, respectively, are concretely represented in the

[1] KuKh 33/147.
[2] KuKh 33/183-185.
[3] KuKh 33/186.
[4] KuKh 34/3, 97.

sacrificial fire. While the procedures to purify the fire are the common ones we find in the equivalent Siddhānta rituals, the purification of the pit, the fire and the officiator make specific use of mantras of the Kubjikā cult. The Kaula character of the rite is, as usual, apparent in the rise of Kuṇḍalinī and the penetration (āveśa) of the deity, which is essential for its successful performance, as it is for any of the other major rites.

Chapter Thirty-five: The Emanation of the Triple Division (trikabheda) and its Authority

The cosmological myth, with which this chapter grandly begins, declares that Śiva's will that arose from the pre-cosmic oneness is the triple emission embodied in the goddess and her triangular Yoni. This divine Yoni, divided into 'upper, lower and middle',[1] corresponds to the 'three auspicious seats' within the body.[2] The modalities of the Goddess's Command, that is, the three energies of will, knowledge and action presided over by Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā and Raudrī are, by a series of permutations and combinations, the source of the groups of realities described in this chapter. Part of the yogic body that streams up into the transcendent, they are variously interconnected by their link with their common triadic source from which they emanate and is the subject of this chapter, which is thus appropriately called the 'Emanation of the Triple Division' (trikabheda).

Chapter Thirty-six: Competence for Knowledge and Wisdom

In this chapter the goddess begins by expounding the highest states of consciousness attained through profound contemplation and teaches how to maintain and cultivate the liberated state. Then she offers a prayer to Kubjikā, the Supreme Goddess and energy that 'emerges from Being and is established in the centre of the body'. The goddess bestows immediate realisation and is the mistress of Yoga. The rest of the chapter is dedicated to an exposition of the Supreme Yoga of Kuṇḍalinī and describes the way to practice in each of the Six Wheels within the subtle body.

Chapter Thirty-seven: The Practice of the Rule (samayācāra)

The Tantra affirms that in past aeons initiation brought about immediate liberation, but nowadays the bonds of Karma are much harder to break. Observance of the ritual program, even if the initiate is empowered by the inner

---

[1] KuKh 35/10.
[2] KuKh 35/24.

activity of Kuṇḍalinī, is not enough. He must also adhere to the Practice of the Rules (samayācāra) a Kaula should observe to which this chapter is dedicated. This chapter is virtually repeated in chapter 47.[1] There this passage follows after one that describes the rite whereby the neophyte receives a new name after he has been given initiation. This is when the rules the initiate should observe are normally taught to him in both the Siddhānta form of initiation and the Kaula. However, although the two passages are cogently related, they are not part of an exposition of the rites of initiation and so appear to be strangely isolated and out of context. Here also the connection with the previous and the following chapters is not tight, although it not entirely lacking.

According to the ṢSS the neophyte should be given an initiatory name after he has received a series of initiations by piercing.[2] This entitles him to know and handle the Kula substances he must offer to the goddess's Triangle into which he is admitted to receive the Consecration of the Vidyā. He is then told the rules he should observe.[3] Here, although there is no naming ceremony, the preceding chapters taught the rites of initiation. This is followed by the fire sacrifice that replaces the Consecration of the Vidyā taught in the ṢSS.[4] So the placement of this passage makes sense in both contexts, although both are incomplete in different ways. It seems therefore that although an error has occurred, resulting in the repetition of this passage, it was not a scribe's mistake but that of one of the redactors. If this is the case one wonders whether to accept this as the textus recepitus and leave it as it is. This has not been done. However, the reader should note that in this instance the editor may well have taken the liberty of editing an author not just a scribe.

The list of rules in chapter forty-one of the ṢSS (which has no equivalent in the KMT) is similar to the one in our text. Many lines and verses are the same or close paraphrases and the substance of much of the rest is essentially the same. Unless both texts have drawn from a common source, which is unlikely, the KuKh has most probably drawn from the ṢSS.

We shall have occasion to analyse these Kaula commandments in the course of the exposition in the notes to the translation. Here we may note their

---

[1] The line beginning with 37/2cd is the same as KuKh 47/28 to the end of chapter 47 in all the manuscripts.

[2] If (the disciple's) body is full of bliss by virtue of his practice of the rites and repetition of mantra, (the teacher) should make him fit (for realisation through initiation) (adhikāraḥ kartavyaḥ). His plane is in accord with the Command (he receives). Once he has been given permission and has been consecrated, he should be shown the garland of names (and given one from it).

ṢSS 17/126cd ff..

[3] ṢSS 17/158ff..

[4] See KuKh vol. 8, appendix 1 for an exposition of the Sixteen Consecrations according to the Ṭīkā and chapter 17 of the ṢSS from which the part relevant to this discussion is drawn.

most central feature, namely, the paramount importance accorded to the teacher. The teacher should be revered, worshipped and served with complete dedication, no less than the deity. It is the teacher's Command that operates in the disciple constantly and it is because of his compassion that the disciple ultimately receives the consecration that liberates him.[1]

Chapter Thirty-eight: The Root Sūtra Concerning the Womb (yoni) of the Ocean of the Kula Tradition

The core of the maṇḍala - the Point, the Triangle and the Hexagram - is described again in this chapter which contains the second version of the Root Sūtra. While the other two versions are quite similar, this one is quite distinct from the other two. It consists of thirty-five and a half verses set in sragdharā instead of three and a half. The first verse, which describes the Point and the Triangle, is largely the same as that of the other two versions. The following verses expand the contents of the Triangle from four seats to six, which thus develops into the Hexagram. Unlike the other two versions there is no added explanatory sūtra. This 'secondary sūtra', although it considers itself to be the Roor Sūtra, supplies its own explanations. Although the versions and their explanations are not in conflict, this one has a number of distinctive features. One of the most notable is the presence of Koṅkaṇa as the sixth sacred seat. Both the other versions mention only the four main seats to which the explanatory sūtra of the first one adds Tisra as the fifth. In the second version of the sūtra Tisra is replaced by Candrapīṭha, reinforcing the link with Koṅkaṇa. Moreover, neither of the other two versions, or their explanations, identify the Triangle with the City of the Moon or the Hexagram with Island of the Moon. The projection of these symbols suggests that this version of the Root Sūtra was written in Koṅkaṇa. Indeed, the sūtra specifically says that this form of the maṇḍala, the Seat of Yoga (yogapīṭha), was revealed in the world and explained there.[2] One wonders whether the other two versions of the Root Sūtra derive from an original written before the shift to Koṅkaṇa took place.

Chapter Thirty-nine: Concerning the Pure Division (vimalabheda)

This chapter begins with another description of the formation of the Yoni and it parts along with Bhairava and his power of bliss in the centre of it. This is the 'triple form', which is the City of the Moon, and the Kulakrama called Kaula

---

[1] KuKh 37/18cd-19 and ṢSS 41/22-3.
[2] KuKh 38/29.

in Koṅkaṇa.[1] Outside it is the Monastery - maṭha - in six parts.[2] The rest of the chapter is dedicated to enumerating series of groups of six, which include the four transmissions and other groups that are projected and worshipped in the maṇḍala.

Forty and Forty-one: Concerning the Venerable Knowledge and a Description of the Fitness (to Practice) Yoga

These two chapters are drawn from the first chapter of the Tantrasadbhāva, which is reproduced virtually completely. The Kubjikā tradition considered these Trika teachings to be so important that the same is also reproduced in chapters 20 and 21 of the AS, which may have drawn it from the KuKh, rather than the TS directly.

Essentially, these two chapters describe series of progressive ascents of the vital force and its energies, the stages of which are variously presented in each series and are related to the phases or energies of Kuṇḍalinī. The original nucleus of this presentation is inspired by an important passage in the SvT that deals with the 'abandonment of the causes' (karaṇatyāga), which has been discussed elsewhere.[3] This takes place in the course of the recitation of OṀ in conjunction with the upward moving vital breath. This traverses five stages corresponding to the five 'causes'. These are the gods governing the Five Praṇavas, namely, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra, Īśvara and Sadāśiva. Located along the axis of the inner, subtle body, they merge into one another, together with the sensorial and mental energies and vital forces they govern, as the vital breath moves through the phases of the utterance of OṀ. The Tantra expounds a series of parallel ascents that, like this one, are called 'abandonments' (tyāga), that entail 'abandoning' lower states for higher ones, variously understood. These overlay this one which corresponds to the five energies of the Transmental, which is the Supreme Energy that 'wanders on the Path of the Principles going through them step by step'.[4] These five energies are will, knowledge, action, consciousness and Śiva's own energy of Unstruck Sound (i.e the Transmental itself) of which they are aspects. The first four correspond to Māyā, Kuṇḍalinī, Jyeṣṭhā and Raudrī. Ultimately they all merge into Śiva, who is on the level beyond merger (layātīta).[5] This is where the knowing subject beyond the Transmental resides[6] in the place (sthāna) beyond Māyā, the Void in the End of the Twelve. Free of all ego and its relationships, this is a condition that, in phenomenal terms, is said to be Non-being. Here reality is

---

[1] KuKh 39/50.
[2] KuKh 39/64ab.
[3] SvT 4/262-266. See Dyczkowski 2004: 51ff..
[4] KuKh 40/73.
[5] KuKh 40/35cd-36, 69cd-70ab.
[6] KuKh 40/74.

established in its own true essential nature (savbhāvastha) and so, having abandoned all the lower, limited states, the yogi is liberated. The oneness and universal pervasion (vyāpti) of the supreme state is extolled beautifully in chapter forty-one

The Tantrasadbhāva has been an extraordinarily influential text in most of the major Kaula schools. This is largely because of two passages found in this chapter. One concerns the rise and activity of Kuṇḍalinī which is quoted by Kṣemarāja in his commentary on the Śivasūtra. The other is a single verse that has been quoted by Jayaratha in his commentary of the Tantrāloka and also appears in Śitikaṇṭha's Mahānayaprakāśa, which is a text of the Kashmiri Krama system.[1] It was also quoted by all the major commentators of the NṢA, the root Tantra of the Śrividyā tradition. This verse describes how the four energies mentioned above, more commonly known as Vāmā, Jyeṣthā, Raudrī and Ambikā, are distributed in the graphic representation of the letter A. In all these traditions the letter A symbolizes the primary energy of the Supreme Being. According to Abhinava's upgraded Trika it represents Anuttara. The Kashmiri Krama system considers it to be so central, that it refers to itself as the Tradition of the First Letter (ādyakṣarasaṁpradāya). Similarly, Kubjikā is also called Asvarā - the Vowel A. Moreover, all these traditions agree on this analysis of the First Letter. As the source of all the energies of the letters, it represents the Yoni, which is the form the supreme energy of Śiva assumes according to the TS, to which the later traditions subscribe. Accordingly, Jayaratha quotes this verse in the context of explaining the triangular letter E, which represents the Yoni, rather than A. This matter is of great importance for Kubjikā doctrine, which has drawn these features, along with others we have already had occasion to discuss, from the Yoni of the TS and projects them into that of its own goddess.

Chapter Forty-two: The Sūtra of the Sequence of Emanation (Sṛṣṭikramasūtra)

This chapter centres us again in pure Kubjikā doctrine, that is, the Yoni with its sacred seats taught once again in the third version of the Root Sūtra. It is followed by the Kriyāsūtra.[2] Although it may not have originally been meant to be an explanation of the Root Sūtra, it functions effectively as one. It begins with a description of the inner triangle with its sacred seats and goes on to relate the groups that make up the Krama to the Hexagram around the Triangle that has thus acquired [1] See ŚSuvi p. 26, comm. on TĀ 3/66 and MP (2) p. 30. After quoting this verse Śitikaṇṭha says: ayam ādyakṣarasaṁpradāyo yathā gurumukhe.

---

[2] KuKh 42/7-13.

more prominence. Called the first Sūtra of the Śrīkrama,[1] this appears to be another early sūtra. Mukundarāja considered it to be especially important and so commented on it as he did the Sūtra of Emanation that follows. Hardly four and a half verses long,[2] it describes the emanation of the sacred seats from Oḍḍiyāna in the centre which is the 'first manifestation of the deity'. Although the Sṛṣṭikramasūtra is a small part of this chapter, it draws its name from this sūtra, which we may therefore surmise was its original nucleus.

It is followed by a passage that declares its concern to be the secret names of the seats but these are just a short series of equivalents of the four seats.[3] This secret 'convention' (saṁketa) (i.e. teaching) is said to be the first in a series (krama) and it is in fact followed by a number of other conventions that deal with the secret language of Kula. These consist of a series of code words most of which refer to the Eight Mothers and Yoginīs. After this comes a brief passage dedicated to the secret gestures Yoginīs make to Siddhas when they meet in their sacred sites. It is possible that these loosely connected passages have been brought together here because they relate to the sacred seats. However, there may also not be any particular reason for them to be here. Thus this chapter closes with two passages that appear to be fragments of longer ones that are clearly misplaced. Such is the looseness in places of the redaction of our text.

Chapter Forty-three: The Sūtra of the Descent (of the Teachers) in the Four Ages

Here again, as usual, the exposition follows the sequence of events that take place in the rite. First the teachers are worshipped in the Gurumaṇḍala and then the Krama. Accordingly, just before a chapter on the descent of the Krama into the world, this one deals, with the descent of the teachers. This brief sūtra, which is reproduced and glossed by Mukundarāja, presents a reworking of the Gurumaṇḍala of earlier and parallel Kaula traditions in which the Yuganāthas ('Lords of the Ages') are worshipped. So instead of the fivefold scheme of the Gurumaṇḍala, which is linked to the Five Siddhas, described in chapter twenty-seven,[4] this is a fourfold one that accommodates the four Ages (yuga). The two are closely related as the four Siddhas of the Ages are identified with the first four of the Five Siddhas, although the order of correspondence is reversed. In the previous Ages various divine and semi-divine beings were initiated. In this, the fourth Age, they are men. These include the four Yuganāthas of the original scheme who, instead of being the first

---

[1] KuKh 42/10d.
[2] KuKh 42/14cd-19.
[3] KuKh 42/20-26ab.
[4] KuKh 27/2cd ff.

Kaula teachers in each of the Ages, are the Siddhas of the previous tradition (pūrvāmnāya) who were initiated into this, the subsequent one (paścimāmnāya) by Śrīkaṇṭha.[1] Along with them are four aspects of the First Nātha who descends into the world, presumably initiated directly by the goddess.

Chapter Forty-four: The Emanation of the Śrīkrama

Tirelessly our text returns to the same themes, each time presenting them in new perspectives. Here, once again, it teaches the Krama. This time it is the one in twenty-eight divisions. The exposition focuses on the goddesses of the divisions and the letters to which they correspond. The six parts of the Transmission arise from Kuṇḍalinī, the energy of the will emitted from Śiva, the omnipresent Point of pure consciousness. Combining Kubjikā doctrine with the Trika of the TS, previously taught in chapter forty, Kuṇḍalinī, the Transmental energy of Unstruck Sound (nāda), emerges not just sixfold, as usual, but also threefold as Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā and Raudrī. Initially, she generates the four seats that emanate and contain the rest of the Transmission. These are equated, as they are in the KMT, which similarly draws from common Kaula doctrine, with four Yogic states technically called Beyond Form, (rūpātīta), Form (rūpa), Word (pada) and Body (piṇḍa).[2] These modalities of sacred consciousness correspond to the four main vowels that emanate the rest of the Krama and Unstruck Sound, which is differentiated into the phonemic energies corresponding to the parts of this Krama.[3] This is encapsulated, as it is in the maṇḍala, by the Eight Mothers who govern the eight types of letters. They are aspects of Mālinī who is Parā and the encompassing, generative Yoni. From her comes the Cosmic Man made of the energies of the fifty letters and their corresponding worlds. Thus the goddess is first generated from the transcendental god who is then generated in his immanent, cosmic form from the goddess, who is the Womb of the Universe (jagadyoni) that contains him.[4]

Chapter Forty-five: The Casket of the Transmissions

This chapter opens with the Sūtra of the Primordial Descent (ādyāvatārasūtra).[5] Briefly and obscurely, it talks about the emanation of the Kulas from the energy of the 'amorous sport of Saṁvartā'. Then it continues to

[1] KuKh 43/24-5.
[2] KuKh 44/5-6ab.
[3] KuKh 44/5-35ab.
[4] KuKh 44/35cd-47.
[5] KuKh 45/1-13.

present in brief the Krama of Twenty-seven divisions that is identified as that of the Youth. This is considered to be the Divine Krama to which the other three, those of the Child, Skyfarer and Aged are related. Then comes a list of a number of Kramas, that is, series of mantras that are related to the Krama of Twenty-seven. The subject is brought to a close by extolling the Western Tradition of Sadyojāta. Explaining the extreme brevity and hence obscurity of the exposition, the Tantra declares that the teachings should be learnt from the teacher's mouth and not be set down clearly in writing.[1]

Chapter Forty-six: The Glory of Emission

This chapter is as rich as it is poorly organised. It begins with a passage that homologizes the five sacred seats with a series of pentads, including five that make up the twenty-five principles ranging from Earth to the Person around which they are arranged.[2] The following passage describes the metaphysical principles symbolized by the trees that grow in the three major sacred seats. Here the pentadic model has been abandoned in favour of a triadic one, a sign, perhaps, that these two passage were written independently. They may have even been drawn from separate sources. The scheme of twenty-five principles fits with the one outlined in chapter thirteen and may well have been an original part of the system of the KuKh.

After this, another subject is abruptly introduced by Śrīnātha's query concerning the consumption and use of sacrificial wine that is taken up in the last part of this chapter.[3] Moreover, the name of this chapter, as we shall see, relates to this subject. It is evident, therefore, that the rest of this chapter is built up by a series of interpolations. There are at least three more, apart from the first two we have just noted. The first of these is just a few verses that are not relevant to any of the previous or subsequent topics. Misplaced, they are probably the result of a redactor's oversight, rather than a scribal error.[4] The following short passage concerns the Five Siddhas and their relationship to the five elements. The subject and its formulation is such a standard one that the same passage appears earlier in our text and in the second recension of the YKh from which it was probably drawn.[5] These five are aspects of Bhairava who is the first teacher, here called Ciñciṇīnātha. The next major subject, and interpolation, is introduced in this way. This is the history of the founding of the Kubjikā cult in Koṅkaṇa beginning with the coming and exploits of the First Nātha, his disciples, the Nine Nāthas and then

---

[1] KuKh 45/66cd-67ab = KuKh 39/170; cf. above, p. 19 ff..
[2] KuKh 46/1-19.
[3] KuKh 46/27-32 connects to 46/237-308. The entire passage is 76 verses long.
[4] KuKh 46/33-36ab.
[5] KuKh 46/30cd-33 = KuKh 25/43-45ab = YKh (2) 15/23-25.

the Sixteen, along with their consorts and disciples. Most of this long passage is drawn from chapters forty-three and forty-four of the ṢSS.[1] We know this because the narrative in the KuKh is not completely intelligible without reference to the ṢSS because parts of it are missing in the KuKh and the sequence of events has been disrupted here and there. Moreover, this passage is an interpolation in the KuKh whereas it is an integral part of the ṢSS.

Chapter Forty-seven: The Practice of the Rule (Samayācāra)

This chapter, like the previous one, has been roughly redacted. The name of this chapter informs us that, was originally concerned with the rules of right conduct the initiate should observe. This is in fact the subject of most of this chapter in the manuscripts. The part of the text which is common with chapter thirty-seven (which is also called the Practice of the Rule) has been collated with it and removed from the critical edition.[2] It is prefaced by two short passages dealing with the worship of Vaṭuka and fifty Guardians of the Field (kṣetrapāla),[3] followed by another listing the names that can be given to a Kaula initiate. These passages appear to be fragmentary remnants of an exposition of the rites of initiation. Offering of animal sacrifice (bali) to the guardians and Yoginīs, not mentioned here, generally forms a part of the concluding rites leading to the naming ceremony of the neophyte after which he is taught the Rule (samaya) he must observe.

Chapter Forty-eight: The Kramasūtra

This and the following nine chapters, up to fifty-six, are all sūtras that have been incorporated into the text wholesale. This chapter deals with the worship of the Guru- and the Krama- maṇḍalas. The first part of it, up to verse 45, is largely drawn from the SKh and has been integrated with a few lines into the concluding part of this passage that ends with line 51ab. The same rite (pūjākrama), which is described in the SKh, continues in the first part of chapter 50.[4] Moreover, these two chapters are both called Kramasūtra or Śrīkramasūtra which is probably because they were originally part of the same sūtra. We have seen in the summary of the contents of the SKh that it contains several Kramasūtras that deal with the subject of these two chapters. In the SKh this Kramasūtra follows directly from another one[5] and both [1] The whole passage extends from KuKh 46/41 to 46/236 out of this 42cd-211 corresponds to ṢSS 43/12-44/78ab with some gaps and rearrangement of the order of the verses.

---

[2] See above, p. 254-255.
[3] KuKh 47/1-19.
[4] KuKh 50/1-13.
[5] The previous passage concludes with the statement:

form part of the Pūjākhaṇḍa.[1] The second of these corresponds to verses 2 to 45 of this chapter, which is called the Kramasūtra in the colophon here. Even so, the goddess declares at the beginning (in verse 2) that she will expound the sūtra of the rite of adoration (pūjāsūtra), which is the name of the first section of the SKh. One wonders how this mistake could have taken place. Possibly the manuscript of the SKh with which the redactor of the KuKh was working included the Kramasūtra in the place it is found in one of the three extant manuscripts, that is, inserted within the Pūjāsūtra. It is not impossible that the redactor of the KuKh had an earlier redaction of the SKh in front of him or even just the free floating sūtra. The presence of two versions of this Kramasūtra in two places of the SKh (in section one and six) may be taken to be a sign of the fluidity of the text at an earlier stage of its redaction.

More significant in this respect is the presence in both the SKh and here in the KuKh, of two and a half verses that are part of a long passage in the ŚM dedicated to a presentation of the Circle of the Teachers (gurumaṇḍala), which is the subject of the first part of this chapter. The Ṭīkā refers to these verses as the Gurumaṇḍalasūtra[2] and, in the course of its extensive commentary on it, describes the form and content of the Gurumaṇḍala.

According to the ŚM these verses describe: 'the Circle of Teachers, which is the same in the three lineages (oli)'[3] and serve as the nucleus of its exposition in the ŚM. These verses would have been known to learned adepts who seeing them here would understand what needed to be done. It is unlikely that these verses were drawn from the ŚM. Although the most sophisticated form of the Gurumaṇḍala is described in the ŚM, the chapter dedicated to it may well be a later addition, tacked onto the end of the text. The core of this Gurumaṇḍala is an adaptation of the Dūtīcakra described in the KMT and so is a direct derivative of the original Kubjikā teachings. However, the worship of the Nine and Sixteen Nāthas within it is a sign that part of it, at least, developed after the shift to Koṅkaṇa. Although the SKh knows about Koṅkaṇa and Candrapura, it is ignorant of these teachers. We may surmise, therefore, that the Gurumaṇḍala taught in the SKh and taken over in this chapter of the KuKh was an earlier version that preceded the one in the ŚM. This was adapted by the redactor of this chapter of the ŚM to new developments in the

---

The Kramasūtra that has come down through the transmission of the root lineage has been explained. It should be kept hidden from Tāntrikas, what to say of the disciples of others

kramasūtraṁ samākhyātaṁ mūlānvayakramāgatam |
gopayet tāntrikānāṁ hi paraśiṣyeṣu kā kathā || SKh 6/25.

[1] *athāntaraṁ pūjākhaṇḍaṁ prārabhyate * tad yathā* | SKh 5/1ab.

[2] Ṭ MS K fl. 87b.

[3] ŚM 23/41.

doctrine by adding the Nine and Sixteen Nāthas and enriched by integrating the Dūtīcakra into it.

Once the worship of the Gurumaṇḍala has been taught. It is followed by the animal sacrifice (bali) offered to the Guardian of the Field and the Yoginīs in subsidiary maṇḍalas drawn to the right and left of it, respectively. Then, after Kuṇḍalinī has been awakened, come a series of depositions that purify the officiant and prepare him for the worship of the Krama.[1]

A different passage begins here that is not drawn from the SKh. It is the Upadeśasūtra. The Gurumaṇḍala has already been described; there should be no need to do it again. However, the redactor chose to introduce another Kramārcana here and leave it intact. Accordingly, the usual worship of the Gurumaṇḍala, the bali offerings to the guardians and the depositions that precede the drawing and worship of the Kramamaṇḍala, have been retained.[2] Perhaps the redactor chose not to continue here with the ritual described in the SKh because the worship of the Krama taught there is internal and so it may have seemed appropriate that it should be preceded by its external projection into the maṇḍala and worship, which is taught in this sūtra.

Chapter Forty-nine: The Sūtra of the Visualization of the Icon for the Inner Sacrifice

This chapter appears at first to consists of just a single sūtra. The SamP, which quotes virtually all of it and glosses it briefly, refers to it as the Visualization Sūtra (Dhyānasūtra).[3] But a careful reading reveals that this chapter consists of three distinct passages, at least two of which are separate sūtras. The first passage[4] is concerned with the 'inner sacrifice' (antaryāga). This is performed by arousing the Kuṇḍalinī of Vibration (spanda) whose ascent through the metaphysical principles and their progressive merger leads the yogi into the abode of the god and the goddess with whom he unites. The bell, lamp, sandalwood, liquor mixed with sperm and the meat offered to the deity symbolize aspects of the yogi's experience.

The second passage is the Dhyānasūtra itself, also called the Sūtra of the Divine Current[5] (divyaughasūtra) which, as in the Kālīkrama,[6] is considered to be the teaching of the deity of the sacred seat. The subject of this sūtra is the

---

[1] KuKh 48/16cd-49.
[2] KuKh 48/50-63ab.
[3] SaṁP fol. 11b.
[4] KuKh 49/1-23ab.
[5] KuKh 49/41cd-42.
[6] Cf. ādidevyā.h sakāśāt prasṛtāt divyaughapūrvakamahāpravāhāt MP (1) p. 2.

visualized form (dhyāna) of the goddess Kubjikā as Juṣṭacaṇḍālī who is the goddess of the Lineage of the Eldest.[1] She has six faces and twelve arms and, represented as an outcaste sweeper (mātaṅga) and foreigner (barbarā), she dances naked in a circle of fire.

The title of this chapter leads us to suppose that the redactor intended this to be the form of the goddess the yogi should visualize when he is engaged in this inner, yogic sacrifice. However, the third part of this chapter deals with the outer worship of the Transmission (kramārcana). This is taught in another unnamed sūtra that may be imparted independently by the teacher to those disciples who are devoted him and observe the Rule.[2] Part of the Rule is, it seems, the observance of this rite. Performed at night, it is the occasional (naimittika) form the rite, rather than the regular, daily (nitya) one.

Chapter Fifty: The Sūtra of the Śrīkrama

Mukundarāja, who quotes virtually the entire chapter, calls it the Pūjāsūtra. In actual fact it is not a single sūtra, although it does deal with just one subject, which is the worship of the Krama in the body.[3] It begins with the final part of the Kramasūtra drawn from the SKh, with which chapter forty-eight begins. These verses explain how the Krama of Twenty-eight divisions is projected and worshipped in the body. The rest of the chapter is a compilation of a series of short depositions onto the body of the mantras and common elements of the Krama, including the sacred sites where the Eight Mothers reside drawn from the KMT and the TS.[4]

Chapters Fifty-one and Fifty-two: The sūtra of the Meruprastāra consisting of the Fifty Sacred Seats and the Sūtra of the First Lord (Ādināthasūtra)

The first half of chapter fifty-one[5] is the Sūtra in Twelve Verses concerning the Tree (Vṛkṣadvādaśikasūtra). It is repeated twice in chapters three and sixteen of YKh (1). The sūtra is dedicated to Vṛkṣanātha, the Lord of the Tree.[6]

---

[1] See intro. vol. 2, p. 166-168.
[2] KuKh 49/65-67.
[3] KuKh 50/1.
[4] KuKh 50/25cd-30 = KMT 25/90cd-95 = TS 15/62cd-67.
[5] i.e. KuKh 51/1-14ab.
[6] KuKh 51/1-15ab = YKh (1) 3/215-228 and YKh (1) 16/201cd–215; KuKh 51/15cd-16ab = YKh (1) 3/229 and YKh (1) 16/216. In the two places where this sūtra occurs in YKh (1) it ends with the following verse:
vṛkṣadvādaśakaṁ sūtraṁ pāramparyakramāgatam |
candradvīpād viniṣkrāntaṁ [viniḥkāṁtā] gurvāmnāyasya nirṇayam || YKh (1) 3/229 and 16/216.

According to YKh (1), which is the source of this sūtra, it describes the Āṇava form of the teacher. There it is followed by the Gurukramasūtra in which the Śākta and Śāmbhava forms are described.[1] Here, the seed-syllable Navātman, the Lord of the Tree, is presented in a few cryptic verses in association with other mantras and syllables and phonemic energies. This is the form in which he should be worshipped as Ādinātha of the three lineages along with the Krama.

The first one and a half verses of this sūtra are found at the beginning of the Gurukramādhikārasūtra in YKh (1).[2] They are completely out of context in the beginning of the Sūtra in Twelve Verses. Moreover, they add an extra verse and a half to its length which, as its name tells us, should be only twelve verses long.[3] The Gurukramādhikārasūtra, on the other hand, is solely dedicated to an explanation of these lines and so may well be their source. These three lines are as obscure as the Vṛkṣadvādaśakasūtra to which they were affixed. They contain, as does the first part of the sūtra, a series of cryptic numerical ciphers. It appears that possibly a scribe, but more probably a redactor, who was ignorant of their meaning placed them here because of the similarity of their form. This error took place in the course of the redaction of YKh (1) and was carried over into the KuKh.

The remaining part of this chapter[4] is the Meruprastārasūtra that lends its name to the entire chapter. It also found in YKh (2)[5] from which it was probably drawn. Here another error appears to have taken place. This time instead of a mistaken addition, this short sūtra has been unnecessarily broken into two parts. The first part, consisting of ten verses, is aptly called the Meru Grid of the Sacred Seats (Pīṭhameruprastāra). It lists, essentially, the fifty sacred seats corresponding to the fifty letters. These places (and verses), appear at the end of chapter six as those the goddess visited in her tour of India. According to all the manuscripts, chapter fifty-one of the KuKh cuts off just were the first part of the sūtra ends in YKh (2). The second part of the sūtra, just six and a half verses long, constitutes the first half of the following chapter. The KuKh calls it the gahvarakrama. It simple lists the 'sequence' - krama - of the beings who govern the rows of letters arranged in the 'grid' - gahvara. The name of this passage is

---

This verse corresponds to KuKh 51/15cd-16ab of the critical edition. It is found in all the MSs of the KuKh at the end of the Meruprastārasūtra where it was clearly misplaced and so has been restored to its original place at the end of the Vṛkṣadvādśikasūtra.

[1] See above, summary of YKh (1), p. 141-142.

[2] These verses are YKh (1) 22/23-24ab. The entire Gurukramādhikārasūtra corresponds to YKh (1) 22/23-44ab.

[3] These are followed by verse 51/14cd-15ab. It simply names the sūtra and so is not part of the sūtra proper.

[4] KuKh 51/16cd-26ab.

[5] YKh (2) 24/1-10.

illegible in one of the two MSs of YKh (2) and in the other only the word 'sūtra' remains of what may have been the reading 'gahvarasūtra'. At any rate this accounts for the unnecessary break in the Meruprastārasūtra which, although possibly a redactor's error, has been corrected in the edition.

Unavoidably, this change in the layout of the text reduces chapter fifty-two to just the two and a half verses of the Sūtra of the First Nātha, which simply lists the names of the Nine Nāthas who govern the letters of Navātman, the mantric form of the First Nātha.

Chapter Fifty-three: The Sūtra of the Lineage (Santānasūtra)

Also called the Sūtrasantānaka and the Wisdom Sūtra (Prajñāsūtra).[1] It is, as we have seen, probably the original Santānasūtra of which the one in chapter seventeen is an explanation.[2]

Chapter Fifty-four: The Sūtra of the Five Praṇavas (Pañcapraṇavasūtra)

This short sūtra, drawn from YKh (1), equates the Five Praṇavas with the five sacred seats, assigning a colour to each one and extolling the effects of their repetition (japa).

Chapter Fifty-five: The Sūtra of the Procedure Prescribed for the Maṇḍala of the Elders (Ārādhyamaṇḍalavidhānasūtra)

This sūtra is drawn from YKh (2). It describes how to draw a maṇḍala in which to worship one's elders (ārādhya) in the tradition. This maṇḍala, like all the major ones of the Kubjikā Tantras, has the same form as the Kramamaṇḍala and hence also of the Gurumaṇḍala, but its contents are not the same. The former contains the Krama and the later the Siddhas and the emanations of Navātman. The Maṇḍala of the Elders (ārādhyamaṇḍala) enshrines, very specifically, the line (paṅkti) of one's own teacher, which is worshipped 'in the order of emanation' that is, from the Lord of the Lineage down to him. An interesting feature of the teachings concerning this maṇḍala is the injunction that one should fashion it for those born in Koṅkaṇa,[3] privileged as they were to come from the land the goddess had blessed in a special way.

---

[1] In KuKh 53/1ab and 53/14ab, respectively.
[2] See above, p. 240.
[3] KuKh 55/19cd-20.

Chapter Fifty-six: The Sūtra concerning the Sixteen Siddhas

This sūtra describes the Sixteen Siddhas, one by one, in as many verses in their supreme, enlightened condition. As such they are sixteen aspects of the realisation of the one ultimate reality attained and experienced in sixteen ways.

As most of the contents of the preceding chapters and the following ones up to the end have been drawn from the YKh, it is probable that this sūtra was taken from there also. As these Siddhas are not known to the first recension of the YKh, it is possible that this sūtra was once a part of the second recension. Moreover, it may well have belonged to a group of sūtras that taught the inner nature of the Nine Siddhas and the other teachers.

Chapter Fifty-seven: The Plane of the Divine Current, that is, the Sequence beginning with the Transmental

This is chapter 36 of YKh (1). It expounds in detail the eighteen phases of the flow of the energy of the Transmental that constitutes the Divine Current (divyaugha). In YKh (1) it is aptly preceded by an exposition of the Śāmbhava state. This is experienced as the dynamism of the Divine Current of the lunar energy of the Goddess who burns in the centre of the maṇḍala as the Fire Saṁvartā. It is attained at the End of the Sixteen.[1] Perhaps this is why this chapter is preceded in the KuKh by a description of the states of the Sixteen Siddhas. Normally, the Divine Current represents the highest transcendental stage of the tradition, and its phases are understood to correspond to the states of a corresponding number of Siddhas. In this account, however, the phases of the Divine Current are presented as energies that are aspects of the one energy, the Transmental. Similarly, the Sixteen Siddhas are presented in the previous chapter as 'supports' (ādhāra) or planes of consciousness[2] which, by placing them here, we should, perhaps, understand that they lead to the Divine Current. In this way the maṇḍala of the Elders outlined in chapter fifty-five is completed.

Chapter Fifty-eight: The Explanation of the Root Sūtra

Chapters fifty-eight to sixty-six are a series of nine 'explanatory sūtras' (bhūmikāsūtra) drawn from chapters twenty-eight to thirty-three of YKh (1).[3] This one is an explanation of the Root Sūtra. It is the most sophisticated of all the

---

[1] See YKh (1) 35/2-5ab, translated in intro. vol. 1, p. 432-433.
[2] See also KuKh 46/181-198ab.
[3] They are called bhūmikādhikāra ānandas in the colophons of the chapters 57 to 64 and 66 of the KuKh.

explanations in our sources. It is at once as elevated and obscure as the mystical states it describes by means of symbols that lend access to the 'Lord of Yogis' to the experience of the sacred, metaphysical realities represented by the core of the maṇḍala described in the Root Sūtra.

A notable feature of this exposition is the prominence of Vāgbhava - the syllable AIṀ. This is the syllable of the Yoni. It is the syllable of the goddess who is Mudrā. The Supreme Abode, it is Space - 'the most excellent plane of existence'.[1] The Cavity (raṇḍā) of the Void, it is the energy of Mind in the Sky of pure consciousness. Itself the Liṅga of Space (khaliṅga), it is surrounded by its six aspects - the Liṅgas of Space, which are the sacred seats of the goddess projected around it in the Hexagram. The sixth is Koṅkaṇa - 'just born' it gives authority and rest there.[2] The explanation teaches the parts and aspects of the Yoni, their dynamism and interaction which generates the 'bliss of the Yoni' of the liberated state. The practice and experience of AIṀ is summarized beautifully as follows:

> (AIṀ) the seed-syllable which is the Space of the Self (ātmākāśa) is without space (nirākāśa) and is higher than the supreme. Once brought about the expansion (unmīlana) and contraction (mīlana) (of consciousness) and, that very moment, having worshipped Bhagīśa (the Lord of the Yoni) and the Yoni in one's own body as well as the deity in the Cavity of Power (śaktirandhra), the state (avasthā) arises, as before, which is the bliss of the Yoni (bhagāhlāda). By churning both in a subtle way (kiñcit) one attains supreme bliss, that is, power which is the deity of bliss. This is liberation and the supreme austerity.[3]

Chapter Fifty-nine: The Plane of the Four Sacred Seats

After the 'Root of Kula', that is, the maṇḍala constituted of this matrix of mystical states, has been established in ultimate reality, the sūtras proceed step by step to unfold in the same way how the modalities of the six parts of the Krama exist within it. The mantras of this Krama are presented in code in a series of sūtras in chapter forty of YKh (1). The following eight explanatory sūtras expound the metaphysical planes - bhūmikā - on which the sonic energies of the mantras, their components, associated deities and energies operate as they shift from one Yogic state to another. These, along with the maṇḍala, are all aspects of

---

[1] KuKh 58/39cd-40ab.
[2] KuKh 58/52cd-53ab.
[3] KuKh 58/86cd-88ab.

the unfolding of the goddess's Command. The language is highly technical and intentionally obscure. However, even though exceptionally terse, the Tantra repeatedly warns that knowledge of these planes (bhūmikā), which is the experiential 'explanation' (bhūmikā) of these mantras and the Krama of which they are a part, is essential. Like the previous chapter with which this section begins and the following ones, the text requires a careful and detailed analysis that has been attempted in the notes of the translation.

The first three sūtras talk about the first part of the transmission (krama) from which it originates, that is, the four sacred seats. The following five expound the remaining units of five, six, four, five and three that constitute the Sequence of Twenty-seven of the Transmission of the Youth.[1]

Chapter Sixty: The Transformations of the Planes of the Sacred Seats

This chapter deals with the six sacred seats and their inner equivalents, including the Six Wheels.

Chapter Sixty-one: The Planes of the Siddhas and the Goddess

This chapter deals with the six goddesses and Siddhas of the inner six sacred seats.

Chapter Sixty-two: The Plane (of Realisation) of the Five Jewels

This chapter deals with the inner equivalents of the domains of the mantras called the Five Jewels addressed to the Yoginīs of the worlds of the Sky (gagana), Heaven (svarga), Wind (pavana), Mortals (martya), and Snakes (nāga).

Chapter Sixty-three: The Plane of the Sextet of the Command

Also called the Sextet of Knowledge, the Sextet of the Command consists of the six Yoginīs - Ḍākinī, Rākinī, Lākinī, Kākinī, Śākinī and Hākinī, who are worshipped in the corners of a hexagram. The goddess herself is the seventh Yoginī who is worshipped in the centre.

Chapter Sixty-four: The Plane of the Pentad and the Triad

Chapter Sixty-five: The Category of the Self

[1] KuKh 66/1.

Chapters 28 to 33 of YKh (1) correspond to chapters 58 to 65 up to verse 22 and then chapter 66 of the KuKh. This discontinuity is the result of a redactor's manipulation of the text. Instead of just taking over these chapters wholesale from the YKh or from a common source (which seems less likely), he shifted the concluding passage of 22 verses (i.e. YKh (1) 33/100-123ab) to the beginning of chapter 65. These mark the end of the journey through the 'planes Yogis experience'[1] fashioned by the flux of the Command that generates itself into the Krama. Once the yogi has understood the planes of the Twenty-seven divisions of the Krama in this way, he attains the Supreme Plane and is liberated. Then he can, and should, lead others through the labyrinth of the Krama by means of 'initiation into the explanation' (vyākhyānadīkṣā).

The rest of chapter 65 (i.e. 65/23-75) is possibly also drawn from some other unknown source. It continues in the same way with a series of ascents leading to the Supreme Brahman, which is the consciousness of the Self in the Wheel of the Void (khecakra), where the Yogi moves on the Great Path to liberation.[2] He moves through the four sacred seats of the Yoni that now belongs to him. In each one he experiences the goddess as aspects of his liberated condition.[3] He experiences Kālī, the energy of the universal pervasion of consciousness in the Wheel of the Sky of consciousness as the oneness of Supreme Bliss through the activity and unity of Śiva, Śakti and the Self. He reaches Śiva at the end of the ascent through the Five Causes.[4] The six parts of the Krama dissolve away by the rise of Kuṇḍalinī and the yogi attains the Path of Nirvāṇa.[5] Merged in the space of the Heart, he attains the Supreme State. Once he knows the supreme, divine energy that is established in the vortexes of the psychic centres and moves through them, he is liberated. Reaching the End of the Twelve, the yogi first enters the 'eternal plane of power' which leads to the supreme, omnipresent reality. Thus:

> All disturbances cease and the supreme plane (of being) is known (completely) without a doubt. (The Yogi) attains power (bala) at each level (of being) and the knowledge of reality within his own body. This is my fixed (and certain) opinion.
>
> (The yogi) should gradually split (the subtle body) apart by means of supreme bliss, and once he has penetrated through the supreme abode with (his) intellect firmly fixed, he should contemplate

[1] KuKh 65/16.
[2] KuKh 65/23-28ab.
[3] Ibid. 65/28cd-37ab.
[4] Ibid. 65/37cd-46.
[5] Ibid. 65/47-55ab.

> the subtle and unsupported consciousness of the power of the Self. Those whose intellect (mati) is (fixed) in (that ultimate reality) free of support are, without a doubt, well established.[1]

Chapter Sixty-six: The Octet of Kula according to the Tradition of the (goddess) Vakrā

One wonders why the name of this chapter implies that it is dedicated to the Octet of Kula, that is, the Eight Mothers. It appears that this is due to some error, probably in writing the colophon. This chapter is actually a profoundly brilliant exposition of the Six Wheels in the subtle body. They constitute the maṇḍala of the Universe, the Wheel of the Yoni (bhagacakra) made manifest by the destruction of Karma on the foundation of the one reality.[2] The only place where the Mothers are mentioned is in the Wheel of the Command, the Stainless One which is their one house.[3] But this may be significant. All the Wheels are configurations of the energy of the Command that travels through them. Thus all the Wheels are the six aspects of the Wheel of the Command which is the pure consciousness of Kula.[4] Another place where they appear is the Wheel Filled with Jewels (maṇipura) in the navel. Koṅkaṇa is in this Wheel as Candrapura which is identified with the Full Moon. The Mothers who govern the eight classes of letters reside there perhaps reflecting or prefiguring their presence in the outer city of Candrapura of ancient Koṅkaṇa. We may perceive the same possible double meaning in the following statement:

> Koṅkaṇa is the support (of the Maṇḍala). It is the innate (divine) authority of the goddesses (i.e. Mothers), which gives (them) divine support.[5]

The Kubjikā tradition teaches that deities derive their status and draw their energy from the power of place (sthānaśakti).[6] This may be a maṇḍala, whether external or internally projected as much as a geographical location. It is certainly an interesting and significant claim that the Mothers are the powerful beings Kaula and other traditions consider them to be because they are in Koṅkaṇa, whether it be the outer one or its inner transposition. Perhaps this accounts for the name of this chapter.

---

[1] Ibid. 65/67cd-71.
[2] Ibid. 66/2-3, 11.
[3] Ibid. 66/27.
[4] KuKh 66/89.
[5] Ibid. 66/73.
[6] See intro. vol. 1, p. 533-534.

Chapter Sixty-seven: The Sūtra Concerning the Sequence of Principles (Tattvakramasūtra)

Also called the Fifty (Verses concerning) the Principles,[1] it is probably the Sūtra concerning the Fifty Principles (tattvapañcāśasūtraka) which is number 63 in the list of 107 sūtras. This sūtra teaches how the principles (tattva) form the body of Śiva who resides in them as the individual soul (puruṣa) fettered by impurity (mala). Several sequences of principles are outlined in the Kubjikā sources, including the standard Siddhānta sequence of thirty-six principles. Here we have two adaptations of the basic Sāṁkhya sequence of twenty-five principles, namely, the five gross and subtle elements, the five organs of knowledge and action and the group intellect, mind, ego, Nature and the Person. This is the one, with one or two additions, that is generally preferred in the Kubjikā tradition as a whole.[2] In this case the principles are twenty-seven[3] as they include Śiva and the goddess who is the Command.

Two variant versions of the sequence of principles are presented one after the other[4] giving the impression that two sūtras have been integrated into one. The first presentation equates the twenty-five principles, somewhat unsystematically one by one with the five seats, their goddesses and gods, Wheels (cakra) and Yoginīs. In the second presentation the principles are regularly arranged in five pentads, a member of each of which is located in one of the five seats. Both presentations conclude with an interesting analysis of the relationship between Śiva, his power and the individual soul (puruṣa) who resides in the body made of all the principles.

Chapter Sixty-eight: The Sūtra of the Compendium concerning Liberation (Muktisaṁgrahasūtra)

The sūtra refers to itself by this name[5] and also simply as the Sūtra concerning Liberation (muktisūtra)[6] which is the last in the list of 107 sūtras. This sūtra actually begins from verse twenty-five after a sūtra drawn from YKh (1) which describes the visualized form (dhyāna) of Tripurabhairavī, the goddess of the Middle Lineage.

---

[1] KuKh 67/48.
[2] See the notes 31 and 35 to chapter 13 concerning the various systems of principles.
[3] KuKh 67/23.
[4] KuKh 67/1-24 and KuKh 67/25-49ab.
[5] KuKh 68/141a.
[6] KuKh 68/24cd-25.

The Sūtra concerning Liberation begins with the Sūtra concerning the Observance of the Rule (samayānuṣṭhānasūtra). It begins with a list of Mata Tantras that are said to extended up to the plane of the Equal One (samanā). The MBT is beyond this, the 'belly of Mahāmāyā'. After listing some of the essential aspects of the ultimate reality embodied in the maṇḍala and mantras the sūtra concludes that unless one has realised the Divine Current of the Transmental taught in the MBT, liberation is impossible.[1] The sūtra reiterates this point by outlining the stages of realisation corresponding to the forms of liberation arranged, creeper-like, in a series that ascends to the supreme one. These are then related to the various traditions and their corresponding scriptures, the highest of which is, of course, the Vakrikāmata of the goddess Amarikā that guides to the eternal liberation of the Śāmbhava state. Thus:

> The adept who knows all the states of being should gradually ascend in stages from the Buddhist path onwards to the top, even if (this takes place) in the course of many lives. Once attained the plane of (the goddess) Kujā's Tradition, he dissolves away at the extremity of the supreme (reality). He does not return again below into life after life.[2]

Chapter Sixty-nine: Conclusion

The last chapter opens with the god who acknowledges that all the teachings have been revealed to him because of the goddess's loving compassion and her friendship towards him. Then the goddess extols the Siddhas who have descended into the world in the four Ages and the one who is to come who has taught and will teach the Root Tradition, which is the essence of the transmission (krama) that has emerged from the Divine Liṅga. The Siddhas teach in the five seats along with Bhairava himself who teaches in the sixth seat of the Moon. The Tantra ends with a promise and an enigma. The goddess promises that she will descend into Mataṅgīśa, the Siddha of the fifth seat, when a barbarian kingdom is established in the North and 'the penetration of the Command has ceased and authority has come to an end.' There in the land of Koṅkaṇa, the fifth seat, the great rite of adoration will start again. All this is spoken by the goddess in the Section Concerning the Virgin Goddess which grows with the Tree of the goddess Kubjikā, that is, the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses. It should only be explained to one who can penetrate the enigma, the 'convention' (saṁketa) concerning the Yoginī, that is, Kuṇḍalinī and her divine residence.

---

[1] KuKh 68/24cd-38ab.
[2] KuKh 68/101-102.

The Deccan, Koṅkaṇa and Candrapura

The development of the Kubjikā corpus can be divided into two major phases. The first includes the KMT and the initial redaction of the ŚM, the second most of the remaining Tantras of the Kubjikā corpus. The Tantras of the second phase repeatedly refer to the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha) and Koṅkaṇa, also called Śrīdeśa, of which it was a part, and the city of Candrapura in Koṅkaṇa. Conversely, the Tantras of the first phase hardly refer to these places at all. Thus it appears that wherever the Kubjikā tradition may have spread in the first stage of its development, it subsequently moved to the Deccan and, in particular, to the Koṅkana region along the western coast of central India, with its main centre in the area around Goa. The later tradition affirmed itself so powerfully in the Deccan that it was thought to come from there.[1] Although the main evidence to support this picture of the spread of the Kubjikā cult are the textual references, there are also traces of inscriptional and other archaeological evidence, that confirm that this is in fact so. As one would expect, the texts would have us believe that the cult was spread over a large area but references to other places are considerably less substantial than these ones.

We shall see that the references to these places, although shrouded with mythical and symbolic associations, exhibit the signs of possessing a concrete geographic identity. Moreover, references to the political and social conditions in Tantras belonging to the second phase may assist us to establish approximate dates for their development. The use of references in these texts for this purpose is ridden with difficulties, as is the case with anonymous Sanskrit sources in general. These can only be resolved by confrontation with concretely dateable non-textual data which, in the case of most Tantric sources like these is usually sadly meagre. In this case, we are especially alerted to these difficulties when we consider that Nepal, the final home of the Kubjikā tradition, where it has flourished for the past one thousand years, is barely mentioned in the Kubjikā sources. The reason for this is certainly because this, the last substantial phase of its transmission, was not attended, as were the previous ones, with the compilation of scriptures. What happened there instead was the development of a vast secondary literature in the form of liturgical works required for the performance of the rites.

Here and there we find incidental evidence for the redaction of Kubjikā Tantras in central India. For example, in one place the KuKh enjoins that a special

---

[1] With regards to a particular way of reckoning time in cycles of sixty years, Rūpaśiva says in his Ṭīkā: The (years) are reckoned (kalana) in accord with the (cycle of) sixty years conceived in the South because the Western Tradition originated there.

yata [k kh: yataḥ] idaṁ paścimāmnāyaṁ tatrotpannaṁ tadā tatra dakṣiṇāpathe ṣaṣṭisaṁvatsarakalpanā [k kh: ṣaṣṭhi-] kalitā kālasaṁkhyānusāreṇa | Ṭ MS K fl. 183a.

type of rice should offered to the fire called rājā.[1] This is probably rājānnam which is a kind of rice grown especially in Andhra. More substantial is the philological evidence indicating that Kubjikā texts were redacted the Deccan. This is the use of the word avvā, which commonly replaces the Sanskrit 'ambā' meaning 'mother', in the later Kubjikā sources. `Ammā', often suffixed to the names of goddesses, is the common form of the word in South Indian Dravidian languages. In Telagu `avvā' means `paternal grandmother'. In modern Marathi, it is an honorific suffixed to the name of older, respected women. Although this is not the modern word for mother, it had this meaning in the local vernacular in the past. It is common usage all over India to address elder women as 'mother'. This was also the practice in the past of which we find several examples in the inscriptions. In one dated 915 CE we hear of a queen called Cikkāvve who built a tank to supply drinking water to a local Śaivite temple in the Deccan.[2] Similarly, we find the names Kañcikāvve and Cāmuṇḍāvve.[3]

More significant in this context, is the use of the name Avvā in these parts of India for the mother goddess. We find one example in the Kharepatan grant dated 1008 CE made by the Śilāhāra king Raṭṭarāja who gave three villages for the maintenance of the temple of Avveśvara and refers to a Śaiva monastery in Ratnagiri district associated with it.[4] Names of women ending with -avve appear in heroic literature in Kaṇṇada that developed between the 9th and late 12th centuries. The 10th cent. poet Ranna challenges all men with moustaches to compete with Attimāvve, mother of Taila, in promoting chivalry and charity.[5] She is one of two celebrated Jain sisters in Karnataka history. The other was called Guṇḍamāvve.[6] Ranna describes at length Guṇḍamāvve's self-immolation with her dead husband.[7] A memorial stone dated 1131 from Bailandūr in Goa refers to a hero named Kagga who died defending the place. His mother was called Oḷajikāvve.[8] Inscriptions from Śravaṇa Beḷgoḷa of the 11th century refer to a Mācikāvve, Kāḷāvve and Somāvve.[9] The epithet is also found in other regions of the South. For example, we hear of the Jain Puḷiāvve who fasted to death and

---

[1] KuKh 34/76-8ab.
[2] Nandi: 18.
[3] According to an inscription dated 980 CE Kañcikāvve was the disciple of the Siddhāntin Gaṅgārāśi. Nandi: 18-19.
[4] Nandi: 9, 20 and 24 with reference to EI 3, no. 40, p. 292 ff.
[5] Settar and Kalaburgi 1982: 20.
[6] Ibid. p. 23.
[7] Ajitanāthapurāṇa 1/46-7 mentioned by Chidanandamurti 1982: 125.
[8] Gurav 1982: 219.
[9] Settar and Korisettar 1982: 286-7.

whose memorial stone is in the Candranātha temple at Vijayamanagalam-Mettupudur, in Coimbatore district.[1]

We turn now to the Kubjikā sources. When the earliest Kubjikā Tantras refer to the goddess generically as 'mother' the word used is 'ambā'. However, the later Kubjikā Tantras frequently refer to her as avvā. KMT refers to the mother of the Siddhas as avvā.[2] But this is the only occurrence of the word in the KMT. Similarly, the form 'avvā' appears in only one place in the ŚM. This is in the name of the goddess who presides over the Weapon, the last of the six limbs of the Samayā Vidyā.[3] Significantly, this goddess is Koṅkaṇā. Perhaps there where already some links with this region when the KMT was compiled and subsequently when the ŚM was written, although in the early phase of its development, the Kubjikā tradition had not yet spread substantially to the south-west.

There are only two references in the KRU, which was probably the first independent Tantra of the Kubjikā corpus to be redacted after the KMT. The consorts of one group of Siddhas (called Nāthas) listed in the KRU[4] are called 'avvās'. In the same text the names of the consorts of the Siddhas of the four Ages (yuganātha) end with 'avvā',[5] whereas in the Tantrāloka they end with 'ambā'[6] as they do in the Devīpañcaśataka[7] and the primary sources in general. Following the same line of reasoning, it appears that the KRU was written when the spread of the worship of the goddess Kubjikā to the south-west was picking up momentum. This is view is supported by other references in the KRU we shall examine further ahead.

The word 'avvā' occurs numerous times in the ṢSS, but only in chapters that have no equivalent in the KMT. A passage in the beginning of chapter 43 elaborates on the contents of the Six Wheels (cakra) in the subtle body into which the six disciples of Matysendra are projected. The names of their consorts are formed by suffixing 'avvā' to the name of the Wheel. For example, the one in the first Wheel, counting from the top is 'Ājñāvvā'.[8] The Wheels and the couples that

---

[1] Soundara Rajan 1982: 69.
[2] KMT 18/125b.
[3] The mantra is: KIṆI KIṆI VICCE KOṀKAṆĀVVĀYAI HRAḤ ASTRĀYA PHAṬ.
[4] See KRU 10/92.
[5] See KRU 11/20 ff.
[6] TĀ 29/29cd–33ab
[7] khagendranātho vijñāmbāsamāyātaḥ [g: jijñāmvā-; k, kh, g: -tau] kṛte yuge |
dvitīye [g: dvitīya] kūrmanāthas tu maṅgalāmbāsamanvitaḥ [g: maṁgalāṁmvā- -taṁ] ||
tṛtīye meṣanāthas tu kāmamaṅgalayā saha |
caturthe [g: catuthe] mīnanāthas [g: nīna-] tu koṁkaṇāmbāsamāyutaḥ || DP 3/6-7.
[8] As we find in the following reference, the six disciples of Matsyendra are initially tacitly identified with the Five Siddhas, to which one is added to complete the set of six. Thus, the first two in the series in descending order are described as follows:

occupy them with their phonemic energies and the emanation they generate are derived from the Root Lord – Mūlanātha and the Root Mother – Mūlāvvā.[1] Chapter 44 is dedicated to the Nine and Sixteen Siddhas. The names of their consorts are also suffixed with the honorific 'avvā'. Chapter 47 deals with the contents of the Krama. There also the names of the consorts of the Siddhas in the sacred seats end with 'avvā'. However, in the commentary where these names are listed again, they end with 'ambā'. It seems that the commentator, who was possibly not from the same part of India, thought he should explain or, perhaps, correct the Sanskrit. Alternatively, he may have had a different text before him, but this is unlikely. The other places where this form occurs are unique to the ṢSS. They are all, except one in chapter 30, in a passage that expands and comments on a corresponding one in the KMT.[2] Thus it appears that these and the

---

(There is) the Mother (avvā) of the (Wheel of the) Command and (the lord) Vijaya who are said to be the two, Ha and KṢa. (There is) the Mother (avvā) of (the Wheel of) Purity and Piṅgeśa whose forms are the vowels of the nature of Letter (varṇa). (There is) the Mother (avvā) of (the Wheel of) Unstruck Sound and the letters of Sādākhya, which are those beginning with Ka and ending with Ṭha. (There is) the Mother (avvā) of (the Wheel) of Gems and Ananteśa. The letters begin with Ḍa and end with Ha. (There is) the Mother of the Self-supported and Śaṁkarīśa. The letters (there) range from Ba to La. (There is) the Mother (avvā) of the Foundation and Śrīkaṇṭha (whose) letters begin with Va and end with Sa.

ājñā avvā tu vijayaṁ hakṣadvayaṁ prakīrtitam ||
*piṅgeśaṁ ca viśuddhāvvā varṇātmā svaravigraham [k: * * vigraham]* |
*anāhatāvvā [k: * * * * *] sādākhye [k kh: -khya] varṇā [k kh: -varṇaṁ] vai kādiṭhāntagāḥ [k kh: kādi * ntagāḥ]* ||
maṇi-avvā tv ananteśaṁ varṇā vai ḍādiphāntagāḥ [k kh: ṭādiṭāntagāḥ] |
svādhiṣṭhāvvā śaṁkarīśaṁ varṇā vai bādilāntagāḥ [k kh: + svādhiṣṭhāvvā śaṁkarīśaṁ varṇā vai ṭādiṭāntagāḥ] ||
ādhārāvvā tu śrīkaṇṭhaṁ [k kh: -kaṁṭha] varṇā vai vādisāntagāḥ | ṢSS 43/7cd-10ab.

[1] The supreme Nirvāṇa is not an object of knowledge and is without compare. Void (śūnya), it is omnipresent, eternal and (its) form is born from my own body. It is one's own essential nature, perpetually active and called the form of (the one supreme and) inconceivable consciousness (bodharūpa)). ... intensified (bṛṁhita) with the bliss of the Root Mother (mūlāvvā) * * * * * (?) (the Lord) emanates by means of his own will the group of six Siddhas from out of his own form (vigraha). (5-7ab) yat tat paramanirvāṇam aprameyam anopamam |

śūnyaṁ sarvagataṁ nityaṁ svāṅgasaṁbhūtavigraham ||
acintyabodharūpākhyaṁ svasvabhāvaṁ sadoditam [k: svasvabhāvorddhvoditam] |
 * * * * * * * mūlāvvānandabṛṁhitam [k kh: mulā-]* ||
sa sṛjaty eva svecchayā [k kh: sṛjatyavyayasvecchā] siddhaṣaṭkaṁ svavigrahāt | ṢSS 43/5-7ab.

[2] For example, the names of the five mantras called Ratnapañcaka are listed in KMT 18/63. The first is called Gaganāmṛtaratna – the Jewel of the Nectar of the Sky. The ṢSS explains that :

other additions were also redacted in that part of India as was the whole of the ṢSS. The trouble the redactor of the ṢSS takes to narrate at great length how the tradition was brought to Koṅkaṇa and developed there strongly supports this view.

Let us turn now to the MBT and the two texts that emulated it, namely, the AS and the KuKauM. The word 'avvā' appears frequently in the first recension of the Yogakhaṇḍa. and, in most manuscripts, commonly in the place of 'ambā' suffixed to the name of a goddess or Yoginī. The long colophons, like those of the KuKh, proclaim that the scripture has been uttered (bhāṣita) in the Avvākrama – the Transmission of the Mother. The form also appears several times in the second recension. The most striking example is a reference to the MBT as 'Avvā's book' (avvāpustaka).[1] In the manuscripts of the SKh, as in the Ṭīka, the two forms commonly appear as variant readings, especially in the many mantras we find recorded there.[2] The form 'avvā' is very frequent in the KuKh. Indeed, the KuKh explicitly states that 'avvā', not 'ambā', is the correct form of addressing the goddesses in their mantras.[3] Thus, according to the KuKh, all the relevant mantras of the Krama should invoke 'avvā':

The first is the Jewel of the Sky (gagana), which is accompanied by the sacred seat, Lord (nātha) and Mother (avvā) of the Sky.

prathamaṁ gaganaratnaṁ tu gaganapīṭhasamanvitam ||
gagananāthasamāyuktaṁ gaganāvvāsamanvitaṁ [k: gaganāṁvā-] | ṢSS 30/14cd-15ab.

Note that there is a discrepency in the reading of the two manuscripts of the very word that interests us. We find that MS Kh in the several instances where this variant occurs always reads avvā where MS K reads aṁvā. As MS Kh is an old palmleaf MS of which K is a late paper copy, it quite clear that the scribe of K emended to the standard Sanskrit form.

The other instance occurs in the following line:
pīṭhāḥ [k kh: pīṭhā] pīṭhādhipāḥ siddhāḥ [k kh: siddhā] pīṭhāvvāmnāyasaṁyutāḥ [k: pīṭhāṁvā-; k kh: -tā] || ṢSS 29/64cd.

[1] YKh (2) 29/36, quoted above, p. 98.

[2] One or other form appears erratically in MSs K and Kh of the SKh whereas the reading 'avvā' is almost always preferred in MS G. For example, on folio 84a of MS G Kubjikā is addressed as śrīkujāvvā, where MSs K and Kh read kuvjikāṁvā. Similarly, on folio 84b MS G reads: śrīkuvjikāvvā whereas MS K reads śrīkuvjāṁvāṁ and MS Kh, śrīkuvjikāṁvā. One gets the impression that the manuscript tradition represented by MSs K and Kh Sanskritises this term wherever possible as we have noted takes place with the ṢSS. An example of this tendancy is found on folio 82a of MS G. There we find the reading avvāvatāraṁ - `the descent of the mother goddess (into the world)' whereas MSs K and Kh read ādyāvatāraṁ - `the first descent (into the world)'. The latter is the lexio facilior – and hence probably an emendation - that coincides with the expression commonly found in the colophons.

The situation in the Ṭīkā is more clear cut. Of the two MSs that have been compared, MS K almost invariably reads aṁvā, whereas Kh reads almost without exception avvā.

[3] KuKh 7/34 and 28/162cd-164.

> O god, I have spoken about the twenty-seven divisions according to the threefold Transmission and their conventions. One should add the word 'avvā' to the (names of) the deities of the sandals and the sacred seats and all those in the Transmission. The Transmission should be worshipped, according to the enjoined method, within the Sandals and in front (of them).[1]

The partners (dūtī) of the Siddhas in the sacred seats are Avvās,[2] one of which is the goddess herself.[3] Indeed, each sacred seat is the 'house of Avvā' (avvāgṛha).[4] Yoginīs may also be addressed as Avvā or even called that[5] as is the goddess herself.[6] For example, the goddess declares:

> O god, the Supreme Energy is the womb (yoni) of the worlds. All that is made of Speech along with (all that) moves and is immobile has arisen there. And so these Mothers are (all) the Mother (Avvā) who is energy, the Supreme Goddess.[7]

The variant readings of this verse are indicative of a significant change. The same verse appears in the TS from which it is drawn first by the KMT. From there it is carried over into the ṢSS and, the KuKauM.[8] In these sources, the word 'avvā' is missing, whereas the MBT has such a clear preference for this word, that it is used as a distinct name of the goddess. The changes in the text we find in the version in the KuKh are too elaborate to attribute them to scribal error. Indeed, the redactor was so determined to refer to the goddess as Avvā that he has even corrupted the Sanskrit to do so. [9]

---

[1] KuKh 28/162cd-164. In other words the form of each mantra is as follows: Five Praṇavas > name of the goddess > avvā > -pādukāṁ vicce. Often the Five Praṇavas are also added, in the reverse order (cf. above 7/34-35ab), to the end of a mantra, but this does not appear to be the case here.

[2] See KuKh 6/113, 7/32-34ab and 43/22-23.

[3] KuKh 6/182.

[4] KuKh 43/4-6.

[5] KuKh 7/32-34.

[6] See KuKh 17/3, 28/151cd-152.

[7] KuKh 15/3cd-4.

[8] Concerning chapter seven of the KuKauM and its relation to the ṢSS, see below, p. 343 ff..

[9] The KuKh (15/4cd) reads: avvā tena imā mātāḥ sā śaktiḥ parameśvarī - So these Mothers are (all) the Mother (Avvā) who is energy, the Supreme Goddess. The KuKauM (7/191cd), the KMT (25/159ab), and the ṢSS (50/39ab) read: tena māteti vikhyātā kathitā parameśvarī (TS: mayā te parameśvari) - So she is called Mother and is said to be the Supreme Goddess. TS (15/131cd): So, O Supreme Goddess, I have explained to you that she is the Mother.

Note how determined the redactor of the KuKh is to alter the text so as to refer to the goddess as Avvā. Clearly, he wished to use the form 'avvā' as it was particularly dear to him and was the most distinctive way of referring to the goddess. In order to do this he has even resorted to

The Kulakaulinīmata and the Avvāmatasaṁhitā both refer to themselves as the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses, thus implying their identity with the MBT. Both are certainly main line Kubjikā sources. The AS is an exclusively Kubjikā Tantra which imports nothing from Tantras of other traditions except the Tantrasadbhāva, and that too possibly indirectly through Kubjikā sources. The KuKauM, on the contrary, as we shall see, imports a great deal from Tantras of other traditions as well as other Kubjikā Tantras, so much so that at times it is difficult to determine how much of the Kubjikā material we find in it is original. There the word avvā is found, as we would expect, in the chapters that are common with the ṢSS. It also appears once in the first chapter of what has remained of the text, which deals with the lineages of teachers.[1] We find three close to one another in mantras described in chapter 11.[2] Then two more in the remaining part of the text.[3] The absence of any references to the Deccan and the other related places may not be significant as much of the KuKauM appears to be drawn from elsewhere.

The situation in the other Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses is quite different. The very form of its name - Avvāmatasaṁhitā – that we find in several colophons, speaks for itself. There Kubjikā is called Kukārāvvā,[4] although this form does alternate with the regular Kukārāmbā.[5] The teaching of this text accord with the Avvākrama,[6] an expression that also appears in the colophons.[7] The Transmental is Kubjikāvvā who is the mother of the three worlds.[8] It also the use of a corrupt form of the feminine plural of mātṛ i.e. mātāḥ to replace the regular form mātaraḥ so as to make this line fit the metre.

[1] KuKauM 1/92cd reads: cidrūpāvvā [k gh: cidrūpādhvā; g: cihnapārthā] dvitīyakā [k kh gh: dvitāyakā] ||

[2] These are: avyāyā [kh ṅ: avyayā; gh: avyaṁyā] vyomīśvarī ca āvvāśabdam ataḥ [k: ādyā; kh: accāśavda-; ṅ: amvāśavdamataḥ] param | [g: missing] Ibid. 11/75ab.

kiṁkarānandanātheti [ṅ: kiṁkaronandanātheti] hiraṇyāvvā [k kh gh: hiraṇyaccā] padaṁ tataḥ || Ibid. 11/77cd.

nāthadevapadaṁ tadval labdhvāvvaiva [kh: lavdhaccāva; g: labhāvvā ca; gh: tadav lavdhvānvāca; ṅ: lavdhācā] padaṁ tataḥ | Ibid. 11/90ab.

[3] macchendrakasya [kh: maṁchendrakasya; ṅ: madrakasya] tu ||

kuṁkaṇāvvā [k: -dyā; kh: -mvā; ṅ: kuṁkvaṇāmvā] yutasyaiva kartavyaṁ yajanaṁ śubham | Ibid. 12/150cd-151ab.

turyāmvā [g: turyavvāṁ; gh: turyasthāṁ] dviprakāraṁ bhagavati amarī chedakī [gh: -chedakīṁ] pāśabandham | Ibid. MS G fl. 218a.

[4] tasyā [tasya] nāma kukārāvvā mahācogrā tapasvinī || AS 1/10cd.

[5] The form appears, for example, in the following mantra: HRĪṀ KRĪṀ OṀ STRĪṀ ŚRĪKUKĀRĀMBĀPĀDUKĀṀ PŪJAYĀMI || AS fl. 8a

[6] puruṣaṁ pādukāntena dīpe avvākrameṇa tu | AS 7/145ab.

[7] The colophon of chapter seven, for example, begins: ity ādyāvatare śrīmahābhairavayajñe avvāmatasaṁhitāyāṁ caturviṁśatisāhasrikāyāṁ avvākramabhāṣite refers several times to the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha) and Koṅkaṇa as the regions where the teachings have been revealed and lineages of transmission have been formed.

[8] unmanā ca makārānte kubjikāvvā jagattraye | AS 8/80ab.

The second phase of development of the Kubjikā Tantras can be located as the texts take a great deal of pride in their place of origin. This is not the case with the Tantras of the first phase. We do find much concerning the place or places of origin of the KMT and the Kubjikā school in the earlier sources that can be concretely identified. The Deccan is not mentioned even once in the KMT. There is one possible reference to the South of India. The KMT is talking about the sattvika disciple who, possessing supreme devotion and inwardly pure, 'on the Northern Path (uttaramārga), obtains all knowledge beginning with that of the Southern Tradition (dakṣiṇāmnāya)'.[1] One could argue that this is a reference to some inner yogic process, although that is not signalled in the text. It may be equally possible that the Northern Path is a generic way of referring to the Kaula tradition in the north of India and the Southern Tradition, the one in the South. The Southern Tradition (āmnāya) in early sources appears to be a way of referring to the nascent Śrīvidyā tradition which very probably did originally develop in South India.[2]

There may well have been some link with southern central India and Koṅkaṇa right from the very inception of the Kubjikā tradition. We may see evidence of this in Kubjikā's identity as Koṅkaṇāvvā[3] ('Mother Koṅkaṇā) and Koṅkaṇeśānyā ('Mistress of Koṅkaṇā'),[4] the form of the goddess presiding over the Weapon (astra), the last of the six limbs (aṅga) of her Vidyā. The attendent goddess (dūtī) of this limb is Mahāmāyā, who is identified as Guhyeśvarī, also called, Guhyakālī. The Vidyā of the limb invokes Guhyakubjikā. This is one form of the Weapon, known as Khādakāstra.[5] Koṅkaṇāvvā is invoked in the form of the Weapon produced directly from the last part of the goddess's Vidyā and so is the primary form of the Weapon[6] and, presumably, the earlier, original one. Although not mentioned again and this ascription may appear to be a minor detail, in fact it is quite significant. The six limbs are equated with Kubjikā's six faces. This limb corresponds to the uppermost face,[7] which is that of the goddess Parā,

---

[1] tasya caivottare mārge dakṣiṇāmnāyapūrvakam |
vindate nikhilaṁ jñānaṁ . . . . KMT 12/22abc.

[2] See Dyczkowski 1988: 73-75.

[3] KMT 7/39.

[4] KMT 7/18c, 30.

[5] KMT 10/20-39.

[6] The KMT clearly distinguishes between the two forms and implicitly attributes primacy to this one with the statement: In the middle of the supreme Weapon is located the very powerful Khādakāstra. KMT 10/51ab.

[7] KMT 7/43ab says that 'the serial order of the faces begins with the uppermost face in due order'

Kubjikā's supreme, undifferentiated (niṣkala) aspect. It is said to pervade the entire cosmic order below and extends from the fire Saṁvartā in the middle of her maṇḍala in the End of the Twelve up to Śiva.[1] So here we find hidden away a small but fertile seed of later developments.

There is only one reference in the KMT to the land of Koṅkaṇa.[2] It is mentioned amongst the places whose inhabitants should not be censored along with Cīna (China), Bāhlīka (Baltisthan), Baṅgāla (Bengal), Kāmarūpaka, Māgadha (in modern Bihar), Saindhava (Punjab), Lāḍa and Gujjara (Gujarat). The next line says that one should not deprecate people of low caste (antyaja) and tribals (vanavāsa) in one's own the country.[3] It is not uncommon for Tantras to prescribe that a teacher should come from particular regions or places of India and, conversely to warn against going to teachers that come from other specified places. These references may help us to get at least an approximate sense of the region where the Tantra may have been redacted.[4] However, the original text is not the KMT, it is the TS from which the KMT has drawn this passage. It is possible that in relation to the redactor of the TS, a Trika Tantra, these were outlying regions. In this way we arrive at an area that covers the north of India with the exception of modern Bengal and Bihar in the east and Punjab and Gujarat in the west. It extends up into the Himalayas and down into modern Madhya Pradesh. We know that the Trika was also known in the south of India. Sumati, the teacher of Śambhunātha who initiated Abhinava into Trika Śaivism and taught him the doctrines of the TS, is presented in the Kashmiri sources as coming from the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha). A reference to Trika Śaivites in the 10th century by the Jaina monk Somadeva in his Yaśastilaka, written in South India confirms their presence there at this time.[5] These facts are relevant because the KMT draws as much as three chapters from the TS. Subsequently, our own text, which belongs to the second phase of the development of the Kubjikā corpus, drew more from it. Moreover, there are very many details of doctrine, practice, iconography and ritual in common with Trika Śaivism not only in the KMT itself but in the (paripāṭis tu vaktrāṇāṁ ūrdhvavaktrāditaḥ kramāt). As the limbs are presented in the reverse order, the first is the last one, that is, the Weapon which corresponds to the uppermost face.

[1] The Weapon is Koṅkaṇeśānyā. The sixfold path is pervaded by her. She has six rays (ṣaḍasra) and her eyes are tawny brown. She extends from Saṁvartā up to Śiva. (KMT 7/18). The six rays may be the six syllables of this limb i.e. VICCE KOṄKAṆĀVVĀ. It is presented in reverse in KMT 7/30.

[2] KMT 5/66cd-67ab = ŚM 5/107 = ṢSS 8/160cd-161ab.

[3] koṅkaṇaṁ cīnabāhlīkaṁ vaṅgālaṁ kāmarūpakam ||
māgadhaṁ saindhavaṁ vāpi gujjaraṁ lāḍadeśakam [g: -yaṁ] |
anye 'pi deśamadhyasthā vanavāsāntajādayaḥ ||
veśyādikramaśaḥ sarve nindanāc chuddhir iṣyate | KMT 5/66cd-68ab = ŚM 5/102-103.

[4] Cf. above, intro. Vol. 2, p. 53, with reference to the cult of Svacchandabhairava.

[5] See Dyczkowski 1988: 2-3 for references.

subsequent Tantras, including our own KuKh. It is quite reasonable to assume, therefore, that many of the redactors of the Kubjikā Tantras had close links with the Trika tradition and may well have even been originally initiates.

Another piece of circumstantial evidence we may consider in this context are the sites the goddess is said to have visited in her myth. There are numerous geographical references in the KMT. Although none of them are conclusive, some, at least, may be helpful. First of all we should take care to identify the references that are proper to the KMT itself. These are, essentially, the set of places the goddess visits in her main tour. These too, however, cannot be taken literally on their face value. Even so, we may get an approximate idea of where the goddess and her cult travelled or, at least, where its founders wished it to go.

We can analyse these sites into three groups. The first consists of the first five places she visits. These are mount Kumāra, that is, Śrīśaila in Andhra, Trikūṭa possibly in Koṅkana,[1] Kiṣkindha in the region of modern Hampi, Kanyākumārī on the tip of the Indian peninsular, and a cave called Daradaṇḍi of unknown location. Thus, the first part of the goddess's tour starts with the prestigious Śaiva site of Śrīśaila in Andhra, crosses the Deccan and ends in the extreme south of India.

The next group consists of the following five places: the Western Himagahvara (Himalaya?), Karāla, Sahya forest, Kāmikā and the Mahocchuṣma forest with its river and the Nīla lakes. The sacred seats Oḍḍiyāna, Jālandhara, Pūrṇagiri, Kāmarūpa, and Mātaṅga alias Trisrota are, respectively, projected onto them. These may possibly have originally been part of a smaller regional sacred geography that marks the area in which the redactor of the KMT sought to establish his goddess. However, we are alerted to the idealized nature of these locations. Karāla and Mahocchuṣma are the male forms of the names of goddesses associated with Kāpālīśabhairava in the BY whose cult is related to the goddesses Kubjikā meets in these places. On the other hand the Sahya forest may well be located in the Sahya mountain chain, that is, the western ghats close to which the kingdom of Koṅkana was located. The following places to which the goddess travels are the sites of the Eight Mothers. They enclose an area that covers all the north-east of India and penetrates west, the nucleus of which is Prayāga and Vārāṇasi.[2] These places form a standard set in Tantras of earlier traditions colonized by the Kubjikā Tantras and so cannot tell us anything specific about the latter.

What is particularly interesting in view of the subsequent development is that the KMT also chooses places in the Deccan and even the Sahya mountains that skirt the area around Koṅkaṇa, but no great significance is attributed to them.

---

[1] See intro. vol. 1, p. 78-79.
[2] See Dyczkowski 2004: 164, map 7.

It is as if they marked out broad areas in central and South India, nothing more. Is this the part of India in which the KMT was redacted? The references, however meagre, to Koṅkaṇa are significant in this respect. An aspect, at least of the goddess, already appears as Koṅkaṇā in the KMT. Nonetheless, in view of the key importance accorded to Candrapura, the capital city of Koṅkaṇa, in the complex internal projections and symbolic associations of the later Kubjikā Tantras, it is a striking fact that there is not a single reference to it in the KMT.

Earlier scholars who have not taken note of this data have tended to locate the origin of the cult in the north of India. Thus Heilijgers-Seelen opines: 'the texts themselves are inconsistent with regard to the place of origin of the Kubjikā cult, but the basic text [i.e. the KMT] seems to locate this place somewhere in northern India in the western regions of the Himalayas.'[1] The scholar is probably following Goudriaan who maintains the Kubjikā cult was 'originally located in the Himalayan region'.[2]

However, this opinion is based on hardly more than a single reference in the KMT. All this says is that the Mountain of the Moon (śrīcandraparvata), where the tradition originated, was located to the west of mount Meru, that is, Kailash.[3] However, we cannot set much store on this reference, which may be to a 'location' in the subtle yogic body, not the outside world. The expression 'to the west of Meru' may also be translated as 'behind Meru' i.e. above it, which means in the language of these texts 'above the End of the Twelve'. On the other hand, these scholars' case is strengthened by the existence of a mountain with this name in the Garwal district of modern Himacal state in the western Himalayas. They did not know this, but were naturally biased to accepting this view for the simple reason that the presence of the Kubjikā cult is most extensively attested in the Kathmandu Valley where it has flourished for the past 1,000 years, while there are only scant notices of its presence elsewhere. The opinion of Mukundarāja, a late Newar commentator,[4] was even more prejudiced. He was so convinced that the tradition originated close to his Himalayan home in the Kathmandu Valley that he even believed that the reference to Koṅkaṇa in the first verse of the KuKh was to a 'certain place in the Himalayas'.[5] The myth of Bhairava's marriage to the daughter of the Himalaya need not detain us, it is such a common, well known myth that it cannot be used as evidence for the original location of the cult.

However, a North Indian origin is not improbable. In the KMT in the place of Koṅkaṇa and Candrapura, we find Candradvīpa, the Island of the Moon,

---

[1] Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 2.

[2] Goudriaan 1981: 52.

[3] meroḥ paścimadigbhāge | KMT 1/59c.

[4] Concerning Mukundarāja and his work, the Saṁvartārthaprakāśa, see below, p. 402 ff..

[5] koṁkaṇa iti himālayādideśaviśeṣaḥ | SamP folio 3b.

and the Stone or mountain there where the goddess assumed the form of a Liṅga, which the ṢSS calls the Mountain of the Moon (candraparvata). It is quite possible, of course, that not all the later Kubjikā Tantras were redacted in Koṅkaṇa or the Deccan. The Ciñciṇīmatasāra, for one, makes no mention of any of the places related to it, not even Candrapura. It opens with a verse eulogizing the descent of the 'light of Ciñciṇī's consciousness' onto the Island of the Moon. Candradvīpa is probably an island in the Bay of Bengal well known as the place where, according to a myth familiar to most early Kaula schools,[1] including the Kubjikā Tantras, Matsyendranātha overheard Śiva teaching Kaula doctrine to his consort. The similarity of these names, the prestige of these places and the strong lunar qualities of the goddess were added up, it seems, to create a composite mythical location made up of the combined replication of these places. Just as they combine in the symbolism of the goddess's maṇḍala – her liturgical and interior residence. In the outer world, this was located in Bengal.

The ŚM, like the KMT, is almost devoid of references to the areas to which the cult subsequently spread. The few we find there are probably the result of additions made after its initial redaction. Indeed, the ŚM warns that one should not take a teacher who comes from one of eight places beginning with the letter 'K'. Amongst them is Koṅkaṇa – the very land that is lauded in the later Kubjikā Tantras as the place where the Siddhas of the sacred seats originated![2] It is possible that most of the ŚM was redacted in the region were the KMT originated. Be that as it may, the shifting of the main centre of the Kubjikā cult to the Deccan and Koṅkana induced the references to them found in the additions that suppliment the original text.

The same took place, it seems, in the Kularatnoddyota, but in a much more substantial way. Although much of the contents of the KRU are drawn from the KMT, it is not just an expansion of it, as is the ŚM. Even so, its close adherence to the KMT suggests an early date. The references to Koṅkaṇa and Candrapura we find there are all confined to chapter thirteen, which is called the Ādisūtra. It is the only sūtra in the KRU and is a single compact unit, as are the sūtras of the Kubjikā corpus in general. These facts strongly suggest that it was inserted after the shift. Was the bulk of the KRU also redacted in the region where

---

[1] See intro. vol. 2, p. 325.

[2] gurum anveṣayed [kh: saṁtvaṣayad; g: ma-] yatnāt sarvaśāstraviśāradaḥ [kh: -daṁ] |
śrīmatottaratattvajñaḥ [g: śrīmate-] sphuṭavāksatyavādinaḥ [kh: sphūṭavacakabodhakaḥ] ||
śubhadeśasamutpannaḥ [g: -nno] śubhajātisamudbhavaḥ [g: bhujaṁgāni] |
kakārāṣṭakasaṁbhūtaṁ [g: kakāṣṭakasaṁvarte] na [k kh g: na] guruṁ kārayet priye ||
kacchakośalakāśmīraṁ [kh: -karṇāṭaṁ; g: -kauśalakāśmīra] karṇāṭaṁ [kh: kāśmīraṁ] koṅkaṇodbhavam [g: kokaṇo-] | kāmarūpaṁ tathā [k: na vā] devi [k: devī] kāṁcīkaṁ [kh: kāṁcī; g: kākīkaṁ] kolladeśajam [k: kola-; kh: kollāsamudbhavaṁ; g: comṛdeśajaṁ] || ŚM 20/19-21.

the KMT and ŚM were? Wherever that may have been, we may see some historical truth in its insistence that the cult was brought to Candrapura from the North by the first Siddha. We have seen that the account in the ṢSS simply says that he arrived there after wandering extensively over India, without mentioning where he came from or where he had been before. Possibly this is because it was written later when the cult was already well established in its new location and its earlier place of origin had been forgotten.

In the Ādisūtra we read about the transmission of the Kubjikā teachings through the lineages of teachers. We read there about Vṛkṣanātha who, although hailed as the first teacher in the later sources, is unknown to the KMT and the ŚM. The KRU describes his journey, through the North of India down to the Deccan and Koṅkaṇa.[1] This may well have been along the trade routes the dispossessed and those seeking their fortune travelled, as did Buddhism with which this Siddha was said to have had close links.[2] Significant in this regard, perhaps, is the addition, in the KMT of Trisrota to the four sacred seats as the fifth that will emerge in the future. Possibly a town in north-east Bengal,[3] one wonders whether the early redactors already saw or hoped for the development of the cult there. Indeed, the later sources consistently contrast an earlier situation in the north with a new situation in the Deccan and, especially, Koṅkaṇa.

There is, anyway, sufficient evidence that the Kubjikā tradition was also known in the North. A couple of Bengali and Maithili manuscripts of the KMT belonging to the 11th century have been recovered.[4] Although the late Kubjikātantra, which was probably written in Bengal or Assam, has no connection with the earlier Kubjikā corpus, nonetheless, its existence testifies to the lingering presence of at least a memory of the goddess Kubjikā in this part of India. A myth we have examined in a different context, relating Kubjikā to Nīlācala close to Kāmākhya in Assam is evidence of her early presence there.[5] The Saiddhāntika Jñānaśivācārya was a South Indian who settled in Vārāṇāsī sometime during the 14th century. For him the cult of Kubjikā represented Kaulism as a whole. He appears to have known the MBT to which he refers as a version of the Kulālikāmnāya in 24,000 verses.[6] Vairocana who lived in Bengal in the middle of the 13th century quotes the ṢSS in his Pratiṣṭhālakṣaṇasāra-samuccaya, thus attesting to its presence there and with it, perhaps, Kubjikā's cult. Again, there is some evidence of its presence in Kashmir from the eleventh century onwards. Abhinavagupta (c. 975-1050 CE) quotes one line from a text he

---

[1] See intro. vol. 2, p. 484 ff..
[2] See ibid. p. 492 ff..
[3] Bhattacharyya 1999 : 105.
[4] For details of these MSs, see Goudriaan and Schoterman 1988: 7 and 13.
[5] See intro. vol. 1, p. 97, note 3.
[6] Jñānaratnāvalī pp. 160-162. See Sanderson 2002: 3 and note 23.

calls the Śrīkubjikāmata. Although this line cannot be traced in the edition of the KMT, it may have been drawn from another recension of the KMT or from another Kubjikā Tantra.[1] The verses Maheśvarānanda quotes from a text he calls Śrīkubjikāmata in his Mahārthamañjarī are also not found in the edited KMT, so there may well have been more than one version of it. Whatever be the case, it is possible that the Kubjikā cult was not unknown in Kashmir in the first quarter of the eleventh century. Even if it was not present there as are early as that, clearer references in later sources testify to its presence there later on. In the 13th century Jayaratha quotes a line in his commentary on the NṢA, from an earlier one by the Kashmiri Allaṭa[2] in which Kubjikā is listed as one of the major manifestations of the goddess. He also quotes a verse in his commentary to the TĀ that has been traced in the CMSS[3] and another that refers to the Thohakāsamata of the Kubjikā tradition.[4] The KMT is quoted by Rājānaka Takṣavarta in his Nityādisaṁgrahapaddhati.[5] Sanderson reports that: 'Kubjikā is included as the Paścimāmnāyeśvarī among the other early Tantric goddesses that receive oblations in the ājyahomaḥ of the agnikāryapaddhati of the Kalādikṣāpaddhati and other practical manuals used by the Kashmirian Tantric priests; and a rock (a

---

[1] The passage says: And in the same way this same subject is taken up as the main one and taught in the venerable Kubjikāmata in (the section) dealing with the Broken Circle (khaṇḍacakra): 'Mahāmayā, who is the bliss of the Triangle is above Māyā'.

tathā ca śrīkubjikāmate khaṇḍacakravicāre amum evārthaṁ pradhānatayādhikṛtyādiṣṭaṁ māyopari mahāmāyā trikoṇānandarūpiṇī. PTv (Gnoli's edition) p. 249.

Sanderson (2002: 2) argues that 'the reference is not trustworthy. The line is not found in the transmission of our text [i.e. the KMT]. More significantly the khaṇḍacakra, from whose treatement in that text the line is said to come, is a feature of the Krama rather than the Paścimāmnāya.' He quotes from the KS, YG and MP (2) (ibid. p. 22, note 16) to establish that this is the case. However, Khaṇḍacakra is also known to the Kubjikā Tantras where this expression denotes the goddess's Triangle which is the subject of Abhinava's quote. For example in the following reference the triangular Khaṇḍacakra is described as the domain of the three Klinnā Yoginīs, in the corners of it, and Kumārī in the centre:

kulajāś ca [k, kh: kulaś ca; gh: kulās tra] trayaḥ [k, kh, gh: treyo; ṅ: krayo] klinnāḥ [k, kh, gh: klinnā] kumārakatrayottamam ||
kumāryā ca tathā caikā [gh: caivakā] khaṇḍacakraṁ prakīrtitam | YKh (1) 6/121cd-122ab.

[2] VMT p. 28.

[3] Comm. to TĀ 3/94:
trikoṇaṁ bhagam ity uktaṁ viyatsthaṁ guptamaṇḍalam |
icchājñānakriyākoṇaṁ tanmadhye ciñcinīkramam ||
These lines correspond to CMSS 5/14cd-15ab.

[4] Comm. to TĀ 29/13. See Dyczkowski 1988: 138 note 23.

[5] Takṣakavarta's date is uncertain. He quotes Somaśambhu's Kriyākāṇḍakramāvlī, which was completed in AḌ. 1095/6. The reference is on fl. 124-125. See bibliography. Sanderson 2002: 2.

svayambhuśilā) is worshipped as Kubjikādevī in Kāṭhom village, where she once had a temple.'[1] Finally, the most substantial evidence for the existence of the cult in Kashmiri in this period is the testimony of Rudraśiva, who may have been as early as the 13th century. He tells us that he compiled his Ṭīkā (also called Vidhāna) on sections of the Bṛhadāgama and the ṢSS in Kashmir.[2] To this day Kubjikā remains the family deity of a few Kashmiri Hindus, as is Siddhalakṣmī.[3]

Before examining the external evidence we have, let us take a closer look at what has happened in the textual sources. This is summed up by the inflation of the verse with which the KMT begins - the Saṁvartāsūtra. The version in the KMT describes only the bare contents of the Kramamaṇḍala, which consists solely of the groups of mantras that constitute the Krama. The expanded form of this sūtra in the beginning of the ṢSS and the KuKh, accomodates the lineages and teachers, all of whom are related to Koṅkaṇa, thus:

> The three (lineages constitute) the descent of the Siddhas in the beginning of the Age of Strife (prathamakaliyuga) and the (spiritual) authority (that was thereby established in the land of) Koṅkaṇa. These (three) had disciples (who were their spiritual) sons in the Lineage of the Nine Persons (navapuruṣakrama). Sixteen (disciples) (dviraṣṭau) (arose) from amongst them.[4]

According to the KuKh all the founding figures of the Kubjikā tradition resided in Koṅkaṇa. These include not only the First Nātha (Ādinātha) but also the founders of the three lineages in the three sacred seats who are identified implicitly with the nine letters of Navātman, the mantric form of the First Teacher in the Deccan.[5] Out of the Nine Siddhas initiated by the First Siddha, the three Siddhas who were the teachers of the Sixteen Siddhas are specifically associated with the same region variously referred to as the Deccan,[6] Koṅkaṇa[7] and Śrīdeśa.[8] Similarly, the Sixteen Siddhas are said to possess authority in Koṅkaṇa.[9] Koṅkaṇa in the Deccan is particularly the place where the Khañjinīmata, i.e. the MBT was revealed. The goddess clearly says in YKh (1) with reference to the MBT that this

---

[1] Sanderson 2002: 2.
[2] See below, p. 395.
[3] I am grateful to Paṇḍit M. L. Kokiloo for giving me this information.
[4] KuKh 1/2cd = ṢSS 1/2cd.
[5] KuKh 31/91-94ab.
[6] YKh (2) 15/83-85ab.
[7] KuKh 7/68cd-69ab.
[8] KuKh 7/69cd-71ab.
[9] ṣoḍaśaite [k, kh: -śete] mahāsiddhāḥ [k, kh: -siddhā] koṅkaṇe tvadhikāritāḥ [k, kh: -tā] ||
YKh (2) 15/ 96cd and KuKauM 1/4.

Tantra belongs to the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha). We will find numerous references in the texts. The following is a typical one. After enumerating the groups of mantras that constitute the Mahākrama projected into the maṇḍala the YKh (1) explains:

> Common in the three lineages (oli), it is in the centre of the great maṇḍala. This is the Command in the western tradition (that is) in the Śrīkrama, the Kuṭilākrama. (What was) not said in the age (of the scripture) consisting of 3,500 (verses), that is, the Kulālikamata (i.e. the KMT), has been taught in the Śrīmata, the king of Matas, the Great Scripture (bhṛhadāgama), that is, the Khañjinīmata, of 24,000 (verses). Your sons, beginning with Śrīkaṇṭha in due order, will know (all this). That Current (ogha) (of the teachings) which is hard to acquire will be made clearly manifest (prakaṭa) in the land of Bhārata. This will be the knowledge in (the Kubjikā tradition which is) the Hermitage of the Command in the Age of Strife. O god, it should be revealed in every way in Koṅkaṇa in the Deccan.[1]

The ideal convention of characterizing the shorter text as a condensation of the larger one is ignored here. Instead this passage portrays the MBT realistically as innovative with respect to the earlier KMT. We are encouraged to accept that what is asserted here is true, namely, that the MBT was redacted in Koṅkaṇa in the Deccan. We have seen that Koṅkaṇa figures in the later texts, especially the MBT itself, as a sixth sacred seat added to the five mentioned in the KMT.[2] But it is not just an extra seat. The later Kubjikā Tantras coupled the sacred land where it is located with the goddess who is worshipped as Koṅkaṇā, a typical embodiment of place as the sacred goddess who protects it.[3] Also called

---

[1] YKh (1) 27/78-82ab.

[2] See intro. vol. 1, p. 660.

[3] After mantras to the goddesses in the four sacred seats comes the following one to those in the fifth seat and other secondary ones. On the analogy of Koṅkaṇī, the goddess of Koṅkaṇa, we find Hakkaḍokī, Karṇāṭī, Lāṭadeśī, Andhrī and Draviḍī who are worshipped amongst others in the sacred sites and the solitary places commonly said to be good for practice such as a crossroad, solitary tree or the confluence of rivers.

AIṀ [G: AI] 5 [K KH G: *] HSRŪAUṀ [K G: *] ŚRĪTISRAPĪṬHANĀYAKĪ [K G: *; KH: ŚRĪTIŚŪ-] MĀTAṅGINĪ [K G: *] VEGAVATĪ [K G: *] SṚṢṬIKĀRAKĪ [KH: SVASTI-] ŚRĪ - HAKKAḌOKI [K: AHĀCHAḌOKKI; KH: HMAKKAḌOKI; G: AHĀKAḌOKI] KARṆĀṬI LĀṬADEŚI [K: LĀḌHAḌADEŚI; KH: LĀḌAḌA-; G: LĀḌHADESI] KOṄKAṆI [G: KOṀKAṆA] ANDHRI DRAVIḌI PĪṬHOPAPĪṬHE KṢETROPAKṢETRE [G: -TRA] CATUṢPATHE [G: CATUḤPAṬHE] EKAVṚKṢE [G: KAVṚKṢE] NADĪSAṅGAME HRĀṀ HRĪṀ HRŪṀ PHREṀ PHREṀ SARVAVIGHNAŚAMANĪ [KH: -NI; G: -SAMANI]

Koṅkaṇī, she resides in Koṅkaṇa.[1] We find several references in the SKh to Koṅkaṇā as the goddess of the Weapon (astra), as we do in the KMT.[2] However, her status in the SKh is further enhanced as Koṅkaṇavijayā whose deposition (vijayavaktranyāsa) onto the uppermost of the goddess's six faces, governs the first of the six parts of the goddess's Vidyā.[3] Although the Krama presented in the SKh is very elaborate, the absence of references to the lineages of teachers following the legendary founders in the main sacred seats and the primitive form of the Gurumaṇḍala, indicates that it precedes the KuKh. Even so, the 'current of teachers' (gurvogha) is already said to be in authority in Candrapura in Koṅkaṇa[4] and calls the goddess from which it proceeds Koṅkaṇā.[5] The Vīrāvalīstotra in the SKh declares:

> She is called Rudraśakti and is the energy Kuṇḍalinī in the Kula. Terrible, she is Bhadrakālī. KĀṀ KĪṀ KŪṀ she is Time and present in (transcendent) Akula and (immanent) Kula, she devours those who hate (her). May she, the venerable mother Kubjikā give me the auspicious and endless current of knowledge. (She is) Cāmuṇḍā on the Kaula path and in the Rule of the Kramakula she is Kaulinī who resides in Koṅkaṇa.[6]

In another hymn in the SKh she appears again as Kaulinī who resides in Candrapura:

> I salute the goddess, the venerable Koṅkaṇāmbā who, mounted on the lotus posture seated on a throne destroys misfortune (alakṣmī). [. . .] I salute the mother Kaulinī who, residing in beautiful Candrapura surrounded by millions of other (attendants) and the beloved of (her) devotees, is tranquil.[7]

SARVASIDDHIKĀRAKĪ ĀVIŚA [G: ĀVISA] 2 ALIBALIPIŚITAṀ [G: -PISITA] BHUÑJA 2 ŚRĪCĀMUṆḌĀMBĀPĀDUKĀṀ [KH G: -VVĀPĀ] PŪJAYĀMI [KH G: *] AIṀ 5 ||

[1] KuKh 61/17.

[2] astraṁ [g: astra] tu koṅkaṇe bindor [g: viṁdoḥ] diśāsu vidiśāsu ca || SKh MS G fl. 46a.

[3] SKh MS G fl. 75b.

[4] gurvoghaṁ candrapuryāṁ [k, g: -purye; kh: -puryaṁ] prathamakaliyuge koṅkaṇe [kh: -ṇā] cādhikāraṁ [g: dhādhikāraṁ] | SKh 17/4a.

[5] unmanādyaṁ ca nāthāntaṁ gurvoghaṁ siddhapañcakam ||
koṅkaṇā tu tridhā bhinnā [k kh: bhinnaṁ] nāthādau (?) tatkalau yuge || SKh 11/2.

[6] khyātā sā rudraśaktiḥ kulakuṭilakalā bhīṣaṇī bhadrakālī kāṁ kīṁ kūṁ kālarūpā [k, kh, g: -pī] akulakulagatā dveṣiṇāṁ bhakṣayantī | sā me śrīkubjikāmbā dadatu mama śivaṁ jñāna-ogham anantaṁ cāmuṇḍā kaulamārge kramakulasamaye kaulinī koṅkaṇasthā [k, kh, g: -sthe] || SKh 13/12.

[7] vajrapadmāsanārūḍhāṁ [g: -ruḍhā] siṁhāsanavyavasthitām ||

According to the KuKh, Koṅkaṇa is where the goddess descended into the world.[1] Thus, it is no less than OṀ, the first seat of the revelation. Now the 'the age (of the scripture) consisting of 3,500 (verses)' i.e. the KMT has passed and the first 'descent' in this, the Age of Strife has taken place in the seat of OṀ. The same takes place in the Deccan where the teaching (mata) is explained most completely and perfectly.[2] Here a new beginning is made. Koṅkaṇa is the land where a new seat of the transmission of the teachings is located. This transmission is no less authoritative and powerful than the original one. As such the new seat is no less than that of Oṁkāra, the First Seat from which the original teaching spread. Accordingly, the place where the scripture is placed and worshipped - the Yogapīṭha - is identified with Koṅkaṇa.[3] Koṅkaṇa is a holy land. All those who are born and spend their life there imbibe its sanctity and so are as worthy of being worshipped as are the teachers and deities.[4] In the following passage it is identified specifically with Pūrṇagiri. Elsewhere Koṅkaṇā is said to be the goddess of Pūrṇagiri.[5] This is unusual. As we shall see in following examples, normally the most important place in Koṅkaṇa is said to be its capital, Candrapura - the City of the Moon. Accordingly, the sixth seat is called the Moon (candrapīṭha). Anyway, in Koṅkaṇa in the Deccan, the Golden Age has started again from the time the teachings were established there, like a mulch cow, on all four legs:

> Once one has understood (the matter) thus (one knows that) the Western House is the first (and best) in the Age of Strife. And, O Great Lord, I am the teacher of the meaning of the Śrimata of the ones that (came) before. O Great Lord, (the teaching) has descended into alakṣmīnāśanīṁ [kh: -nī; g: alakṣīṁnāsanī] devīṁ [kh g: devī] śrikoṅkaṇāmbāṁ [kh: -mbā; g: -vvā] namāmy aham | [. . .]

---

sthitā candrapure ramye koṭikānyaiḥ [g: koṭikaṁtyaiḥ] samāvṛtām ||
bhaktānāṁ vatsalāṁ [k, kh, g: -lā] śāntāṁ [k, kh: śāntā; g: mātā] kaulinyambāṁ [k: śrīkaulinyambāṁ; kh: śrīkaulinyaṁvā; g: śrīkaulīnyavvā] namāmy aham |

SKh 19/6cd-7ab; 8cd-9ab.

[1] Again, the Mother known as Kamalā (Lotus) descended (to earth) in Koṅkaṇa. That, indeed, is authority made clearly manifest in Koṅkaṇa. KuKh 17/43cd-44.

[2] The lion throne of mantra, which is the authority in the three Lineages of this accomplished one who awakens to (the teaching) of the Mata, has been explained in the Deccan.

KuKh 30/191cd-192ab.

[3] This is clear from the following mantra addressed to the Yogapīṭha:

HSRUĀUṀ KOṄKAṆĀDHIKĀRĀYA HSRŪAUṀ || AIṀ YOGAPĪṬHĀYA AIṀ [KH: *] ||

SKh MS G fl. 42b.

[4] One should fashion the maṇḍala for those born in Koṁkaṇa and who reside and grow old (there) from before. KuKh 55/19cd = YKh (2) 26/19ab.

[5] KuKh 61/11-12ab.

> the sacred seat of OṀ. Similarly, the authority of the Lion's (transmission) has been explained in the Deccan. There insight (pratyaya) is pure and established on (all) four legs.
>
> (A eulogy of) the glory of (that) sacred area (kṣetra) is in the home of every disciple. The radiant manifestation of (the goddess who is the power of) Gesture (mudrāsphoṭa) and the piercing (of the centres by Kuṇḍalinī) (has taken place) in Koṇkaṇa, in the Deccan. There, I imparted the Command in (the place) called Pūrṇa(giri). The secret that was not told amongst men was (imparted) by the teacher in the Deccan.[1]

The tradition which was transmitted in the KMT has now been transferred to the Vakrikāmata, that is, the Manthānabhairavatantra that has been revealed in Koṅkaṇa. There it is explained most completely. Thus the scripture is essential, as it is for all Tantric traditions. Moreover, it is also necessary to go to Koṅkaṇa. For those who possess the scripture, the Command is powerful there. It was once also powerful in the North, but is not so any more. Note the double sense of the word 'command'. The 'command' is the prerogative of kings, the measure of its power is their authority. Deprived of the power of the 'command' they are no longer kings. The Command in the Deccan is said in the following passage to be 'intense' tīkṣṇā – which literally means 'sharp' or 'severe'. It is 'sharp' like a king's sword and 'severe' as are his just laws. Spiritual and regal power combine in the Deccan. In the YKh the goddess explains:

> The authority that is in the (seat of) Oṁkāra is in the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha). The wise (sādhvī) Command abides there and on the three paths of the lineages (oli) by means of the three Siddhas who are my equals, not by the existence of (just) one.
>
> They are famous in the Deccan in the Age of Strife. There the Command is intense in the venerable house of Candrapura. (The scripture) has come forth from the Path of Meru and operates (pravartate) in the first sacred seat (ādipīṭha). (The Manthānabhairavatantra, otherwise known as) the Division beginning with KĀ of the first Siddha prevails (there).
>
> The teaching of his tradition (anvaya) is in the northern Kula (uttarakula). Undoubtedly, (spiritual) lordship was (first) generated by the Command (in the region) above the (river) Narmada. (But now) the North is (afflicted) by many impediments (vighna) (to the spread > of the transmission) and has no lineages of Siddhas.[1] Then there is success in Śrīdeśa (i.e. Koṅkaṇa)[2] in the Deccan.[3] The divine transmission of the teachers[4] has been explained (there) in the venerable Vakrikāmata (the MBT).[5]

[1] KuKh 30/171cd-173ab.

For the devotees of the goddess Kubjikā, Koṅkaṇa is a supremely important place. There they can find the scripture. Indeed, Koṅkaṇa is a veritable repository of scripture (yogapīṭha) and it has all been explained there.[6] There the tradition is authentic, alive and powerful because of the presence of the scripture and the oral transmission that goes with it. Copies of the Kubjikā Tantras exist elsewhere, we are told, nonetheless, it is essential to go to Koṅkaṇa to be admitted into the living tradition and receive the correct, empowering meaning of the scripture.

> This very lineage (santāna) of disciples (has come forth) from that (place) because of (my) compassion (for them). How the lineage is within myself has been explained (there) to those who possess devotion. Even if (one has) reached Koṅkaṇa, without the

[1]oṁkāre [kh: .okāro] adhikāraṁ tu bhavate dakṣiṇāpathe [k, kh: -yatho] |
tatrājñā vartate [1: bhavate] sādhvī [k: sādhī; kh: (?)dhī; 1: śrīmān] olimārgatrayeṣu ca ||
tribhiḥ siddhais tu mattulyaiḥ [1: samanā] ekasyāvasthayā na tu [k: na tu ekasya-; 1: nyasya kasyacid icchayā] | [kh: (?)]
*nāma [k, kh: nāga] saṁvartate [k, kh: * vartate] teṣāṁ kalau vai dakṣiṇāpathe* ||
tatrājñā vartate tīkṣṇā [k, kh: tīkra; k: + kadambaguhāyāṁte] śrīmaccandrapure gṛhe |
*merumārgād viniṣkrāntam ādipīṭhe [k: - pīṭhā; kh: ā *(?) pīṭhā] pravartate [k: sa- kh: sa **]* ||
prathamasya [k, kh + 1: daśamasya] tu siddhasya kādibhedaḥ [k, kh: -da] pravartate [k: pravardhate; kh: pravarddhanaṁ] |
tasya cottarakule tu anvayasya tu nirṇayam [k, kh: nirnayam] ||
*ājñayodbhavam aiśvaryaṁ [k: -rya; 1: k, gh, ṅ: mahadaiśvaryaṁ g: mahadaśvaryaṁ] narmadordhvaṁ [k: narmmadorddha; 1: ānandādi na] na saṁśayaḥ [k: tu saṁśayaḥ; kh: tu saṁśa (?)] |
uttaraṁ [k, kh: -ra] vighnabahulaṁ siddhasantānavarjitam ||
tadā tu [1: na] jāyate siddhiḥ śrīdeśe dakṣiṇāpathe [1: yathā (g: vinā) śrīdakṣiṇāpathe] | gurukramaṁ [k, kh: -gṛhaṁ] samākhyātaṁ [k, kh: - tāṁ] divyaṁ śrīvakrikāmate [k, kh: -kubjikāmataṁ; 1: asmin k, gh: -mata; ṅ: -kaṁmate) || YKh (2) 7/11-16 = YKh (1) 27/49-54. Significant variants in the readings of YKh (1) are labelled '1'.

[2] Concerning the identity of Koṅkaṇa and Śrīdeśa, see below, p. 303.

[3] YKh (1) says instead: Then there is no success(anywhere) as there is in the Deccan.

[4] I have chosen the reading gurukramaṁ found in the version in YKh (1) to gurugṛhaṁ found in YKh (2).

[5] YKh (2) reads śrīkubjikāmatam. I have chosen the reading in YKh (1) as it makes more sense. The Vakrikāmata can be a name of the KMT, but is more commonly one of the names of the MBT, which was redacted in Koṅkaṇa.

[6] KuKh 38/29.

scripture (everything is) useless. Whatever may be transmitted through a religious tradition (pāramparya) is all powerless without scripture.[1]

Therefore, having gone (there) one must acquire the scripture in the venerable Deccan.[2] If the state of oneness proper to the sacred seat of Koṅkaṇa prevails then the Śāmbhavī state of pervasion (vyāpti) (is present) in the Western tradition (paścimāmnāyaśāsana). (But) without the scripture there is no religious practice (graced) by the Command. The threefold religious practice (of worshipping the deity, teacher and the scripture is only possible) by safeguarding (its) foundation, which is the scripture, due to which (one attains) the accomplishment (saṁsiddhi) of the tradition, namely, worldly benefits and liberation in Kujā's scripture (kujāgama). Thus, one who has no scripture does not belong to the western tradition (paścimānvaya).

Liberation[3] (is attained) by religious practice, that is, by abiding by the (rules of) conduct (taught in) the scripture (āgamācāra). Once one has abandoned the Tantrāgamas, the venerable Kujā's scripture is the (sole) cause (of attainment).[4] It certainly operates (in this way) in one who is intent on worship (pūjā) and religious practice. O Śrīnātha, having heard in this way of the House, which is the tradition of the (goddess) Kujā, and the teachers, and having then obtained the venerable Śrīmata, one attains the Śāmbhava plane.[5]

---

[1] YKh (1) says: without a religious tradition all that is worshipped is powerless.

[2] YKh (1) says instead: Therefore that is said to be the tradition (āgama) which is itself in the Deccan.

[3] The reading of this paragraph in YKh (1) says: Everything (is attained) by religious practice, the path to liberation is manifold and exists by virtue of the (right understanding of) the meaning of the scripture. Therefore the scripture is the cause (of liberation). Application takes place within the venerable mother Kujā and, by (the power of her) Command, is omniform. O Śrīnātha, having reflected on the current of teachers in the Kula lineage and having then obtained the venerable Śrīmata, one sees the Śāmbhava plane.

[4] Concerning the contrast between Tantric and Kaula practice and why the former should be abandoned and the latter adopted, see intro. vol. 2, p. 254 ff..

[5] tasmāt santānam evedaṁ [k: -devaṁ; 1: āveśaṁ] śiṣyāṇām anukampayā । kathitaṁ [1: jñātvaivaṁ] bhaktiyuktānāṁ [1: bhinnadṛṣṭīnām (k, gh: -sṛṣṭīnāṁ)] yathā santānam ātmani ॥ koṅkaṇā [k, kh: koṁkaṇe; 1: kauṅkaṇe] ca vinā śāstraṁ [k: śastraṁ; kh: (?); 1: k, gh: ne ca sāsvā; ṅ: ne ca sāmvā] saṁprāptāpi [kh: (?)] nirarthakam । *pāramparyaṁ [k, kh: -rya] vinā śāstraṁ [1: sarvaṁ] sarvaṁ [k: * ; kh: (?); 1: yaṣṭaṁ (k, gh: yaṣṭhad; ṅ: yaṣṭa)] bhavati niṣkalaṁ ॥ tasmād āgamaṁ [k, kh: -gama] saṁgrāhyaṁ [1: ityuktaṁ] gatvā [1: tat svayaṁ] śrīdakṣiṇāpathe [k, kh: -pathi] । koṅkaṇasya tu pīṭhasya ekībhāvaṁ [kh: (?)] yadā bhavet ॥

The Muslim Presence and the Shift to Koṅkaṇa

There is a close relationship between the shift to Koṅkaṇa and the Turko-Afghan presence in North India. The later texts constantly couple the two. Just as Koṅkaṇa is hardly mentioned in the KMT and the ŚM, we also find no reference in them to invasions and conquest. Conversely, a long section in the ṢSS[1] describes the many spiritual ills of the Age of Strife. One of its greatest complaints is that people will become proud and deceive others thinking themselves important just because they have received initiation although they are not developed spiritually and make no efforts to become so. In those days `goldsmiths, blacksmiths, people who earn their livelihood with skins or on the stage, will act as teachers. They are fools initiated by fools.'[2] Pressure will be put on those who worship Bhairava supposedly by the more orthodox smārtas and, possibly by foreigners who would have found their practices particularly abhorrent.[3] Loss in battle is one of the ills of this Age. Just as 'those who are in charge of monasteries will become arrogant. The Kṣatriyas, though broken in battle, will act as if they are still powerful'.[4] These statements are found in chapter three of the ṢSS, which like the preceding and the following two chapters, have no direct equivalents in the KMT. The KuKh also describes the extreme state of decadence there will be in the Age of Strife. There it is explicitly stated that it

---

tadā sā śāmbhavī vyāptiḥ [k: vyākiḥ; kh: bhāvyaṁ kiḥ] paścimāmnāyaśāsane |
āgamena vinā ājñā - anuṣṭhānaṁ na vartate ||
anuṣṭhānaṁ tridhāvasthaṁ āgamādhārapālanāt [1: āgamāt saṁpravartate] |
anvayasya [k, kh: ātmā yasya] ca saṁsiddhiḥ [1: k, gh, ṅ: tu sā siddhaḥ; g: sā siddhi] bhuktir muktiḥ [k: bhuktir mukti; kh: bhukti mukti] kujāgame ||
tasmād āgamahīnas tu [1: āgamanirmukto] na bhavet paścimānvaye |
anuṣṭhānād [k: -nāḍ] bhaved [k, kh: bhave] mokṣaṁ [k: nokṣaṁ; 1: sarvaṁ (k, ṅ: sarva)] āgamācārapālanāt [1: muktimārgam anekadhā (g: -mārgam manekadhā; ṅ: -mārgema-)] ||
[Instead of the following three lines YKh (1) reads:
āgamārthena varteta [gh: vartata] tasmād āgamakāraṇam |
ācaraṇaṁ [k, g, gh: āvaraṇaṁ] śrīkujāmbāyāṁ [k, gh: -kujāsvāyāṁ; g: śrīkujāyāyāṁ] ājñātaḥ sarvavigraham ||
evaṁ saṁcintya śrīnātha [g: śrīnāthaṁ] gurvoghaṁ ca kulānvaye [g: -yam] |]
tantrāgamān [k, kh: -māt] parityajya śrīkujāgamakāraṇam |
pravartate na sandeho pūjānuṣṭhānatatpare ||
evamākarṇya [k: -karṇa; kh: (?)] śrīnātha [k, kh: -nāthaṁ] gṛhaṁ gurukujānvayam |
tadā śrīśrīmataṁ prāpya śāmbhavaṁ prāpnuyāt [1: paśyate] padam ||

YKh (2) 7/17-24 = YKh (1) 27/55-62.

[1] ṢSS 3/58ff.
[2] ṢSS 3/62cd-63ab.
[3] ṢSS 3/75-76.
[4] ṢSS 3/79, Schoterman's translation.

culminates at the beginning of the final, most terrible period with the establishment of barbarian rule (mleccharājya):

> At the end of the Age, when barbarian rule is established, there will be those who belong to none of the castes, speak incorrectly and have no Kula (lineage). Men (will be) young and pale. (They will be) short lived and have little consciousness. Devoid of right conduct, (they) go to places where one should not go. Extremely greedy and attached (to material things), they lay waste (the world). They have no desire to listen to a teacher or (even their own) mother and father.[1]

The first reference appears in the YKh (1) which is probably the earliest text compiled in Koṅkaṇa. There we read:

> During the fourth Age, when religion is coming to an end, foreign dominion holds unique sway enjoying the great earth and (the demon) Rāvaṇa has descended into the world on the banks of the Indus (river) . . . .[2]

This is a clear reference to the inroads of Turko-Afghan armies from the north-west of India. In the passage below from YKh (2) we see that the foreign invaders have consolidated their rule in the north of India. Thus, according to the MBT itself, it was redacted when the shift took place to Koṅkaṇa and Muslim rule was established in the North.[3] If, as the YKh affirms, this Tantra belongs to the Deccan,[4] we get a glimpse of those who compiled it and their disciples observing the great changes taking place in the North from the safety of their southern location. The event was so impressive and devastating for the redactors of the YKh and KuKh of the MBT that they repeatedly return to it. Thus in the second, probably later, redaction of the YKh, we read:

---

[1] KuKh 31/130-132; see also following verses.

[2] caturthe tu yuge prāpte [k, kh: prāpta] dharmocchede [k, kh, gh, ṅ: dharmmochede] samāgate ||
*mleccharājyaikacchatre [k, kh, gh: malecharājyekachatre; ṅ: mlecharājyeka * tre] ca bhuṁjate pṛthivīṁ [k, kh, gh, ṅ: -vī] mahān* |
rāvaṇasyāvatāre [k, kh, gh: rāvana-] tu sindhos tīre . . . . || YKh (1) 18/30cd-31.

[3] Cf: lakṣakoṭisamuttīrṇaṁ saptakoṭyād vinirgatam ||
pramāṇaṁ lakṣapādaṁ [k: - pādāṁ; kh: -pāpāṁ] tu śrīcaturviṁśasahasrakam |
mudritoṁkārapīṭhe tu paścimādyagṛhālaye ||
mleccharājyodbhave [k: mlekṣarājyo-] deva uttīrṇe dharmasaṅgrahe | YKh (2) 27/30cd-2ab.

The 'collection of Dharma' is presumably the MBT, the scripture of twenty-four thousand verses, that was brought down into the world when barbarian rule was established.

[4] See above, p. 43.

> In the future, at the end of the Age of Strife, the foreigner (mleccha) will be first without a doubt. There will also be a portent (of misfortune) produced by the (inauspicious) roar of thunder and other (such things). In order to protect the beloved deity (iṣṭa) from the rule of the wicked when the Age of Strife comes with (its many) fears . . . (?) the greatly famed ones proclaimed a just war (satyayuddha) when the Age of Strife comes with (its many) fears of the curse of the roar of thunder (?). In that year there will be great portents in the sky, earth and celestial region. The common man (will be) oppressed, (there will be) shameful poverty (durbhikṣa) and conquest (kṣatrabhaṅga). When the year of destruction comes, the Age will come to end in (all) four directions.[1]

The KuKh knows of this disaster very well but asserts, like YKh (2), that nonetheless, the power of the goddess's Tantras is strong in the region around Koṅkaṇa, which has now become the original sacred seat linked to which is the cremation ground of Karavīra - the modern town of Kolhapur not far from there. Notice also the apologetic tone of the following reference. It appears to be implying that it is not essential that the original teacher be from the North. One should venerate and accept the authority of the Siddha who has been properly empowered and hence become a veritable limb of Rudra himself, even if he is not from there:

> O Śambhu, when the Age of Strife comes and the rule of the barbarians (mleccharājya) (is established) in the north with Rāvaṇa's arrival and the Madhumanthāna (i.e. the MBT)[2] descends (to earth). One should give authority, O Bhairava, to the Siddha whose mind has been pierced (with divine power) and is a part of Rudra (rudrāṁśa).

---

[1] bhaviṣye [k kh: bhaviṣyaṁ] prathamaṁ mlecchaṁ [k: mlache; kh: mlecche] kalau cānte na saṁśayaḥ ǀ meghanādādijānito [k: madyanādāpi jānatā] lakṣano 'pi [k: lakṣmaṇāpi] bhaviṣyati ǁ [This and the following lines are missing in MS Kh] duṣṭadaṇḍeṣṭarakṣārthaṁ saśaṅkādhigate [k: ṣaṣāṅkādhvi-] kalau ǀ iti śamāvacaḥ (?) satyayuddham ūcur mahāyaśāḥ [k: -mūcu mahayayaḥ] ǁ śapasya meghanādasya [k: magha-] saśaṅkādhigate [k: adhyaṁkādhi-] kalau ǀ tasmin abde [k: avdhe] mahotpāte divi bhuvy antarikṣake ǁ prajāpīḍā ca durbhikṣaṁ kṣatrabhaṅgaś [k: chatrabhagaś] ca jāyate ǀ kṣayasaṁvatsare jāte yugakṣayaṁ [k: - kṣaya] caturdiśi [k: daśī] ǁ YKh (2) 30/39-42.

[2] Although this is the only place this name appears, as far as I know, there seems no reason to doubt that the Madhumanthāna is the MBT. We may perhaps emend madhu- to mahā-.

> (This should be done) in the cremation ground of Karavīra belonging to the First Sacred Seat.[1]

The establishment of this sacred seat in the future coincides with that of the `barbarian' kingdom in the north. The KuKh, unlike the YKh in the passage quoted above, does not say that there will be no spiritual lineage at all in the North, just an incomplete, weak one. The lineage there will be deficient, unlike the one in the Deccan. Nonetheless, a time will come when the tradition founded in the North will again flourish. In a prophetic style the KuKh proclaims, as the KMT had done before, that then Mātaṅga, the seat of the future where this will take place, will be the most excellent.

> When the fourth age, that of strife, comes and there will be a barbarian kingdom (mleccharājya) in the north (of India). When the teachers and disciples of other (traditions) come under the sway of greed and delusion; when the penetration of (the divine) Command has waned and authority is no more; when the Rule (samaya) has been broken and the Command of the teacher is disregarded, I will again bring about (a new) emanation, namely, the fifth incarnation (avatāra). (This will occur) in the great sacred seat called `Tisra'; surrounded by all the sacred seats, it is the highest of all (uttara) and, horrific (ghora), immediately chastises (nigraha) (the wicked).[2]

Elsewhere the KuKh reaffirms the same. The first Kaula tradition emerged from the Island of the Moon, which is probably in Bengal and normally associated with Matsyendranātha, here identified with Mitranātha the first Siddha. The second tradition, the western one, which is that of the Kubjikā Tantras, developed in the North. There, however, the lineage is not 'full', reminding us of the ṢSS's condemnation of those who receive and give initiation even though they are not fit to do so:

> The current of Siddhas, beginning with the venerable Mitranātha, has emerged from the Island of the Moon. (Then) the lineage (santāna) of Siddhas in the (Tradition of the) West, which is [1] KuKh 30/175cd-177abc. Notice that the Kālīkrama also affirms that its tradition was first propagated from Oḍḍiyāna, which is thus the Original Seat of the Kālīkrama, as it is of Kubjikā's Śrīkrama. Karavīra is also associated with this seat according to the Kālīkrama. This association is strange as Karavīra is normally identified with Kolhapur, which is about 100 km south-east of Mumbai. Now with the shift to Koṅkaṇa, it has become the Original Seat and the association with Karavīra makes more sense.

---

[2] KuKh 6/175- 178ab.

> devoid of the full lineage, has (arisen) in the last Age, O god, in the kingdom of the barbarians in the north. Others amongst the teachers and (their) disciples have come under the sway of greed and delusion. (Thus) when the penetration of the Command (ājñāveśa) has ceased and authority comes to an end, I will descend as the fifth lord of the sacred seats. The Siddha there is Mātaṅgīśa and he is accompanied by the venerable (goddess) Mātaṅgī. There will be a great rite of adoration there in the fourth (Age).[1]

Where is this fifth seat? We notice that in the same passage further ahead, the Siddha there is identified with Piṅgala, the fifth of the five aspects of Bhairava known as the Five Siddhas. In YKh (2) we read:

> Of the five Yuganāthas, the First Nātha is Bhairava. He is the bliss of Navātman, the lord of the gods, the lord of the lords of the Vidyā. Born of Kujā's will, he is Kujeśa, the Supreme Self. Called Kucandraśekhara, he has come forth all around. O mother of Kula, this is the descent of the couple onto the Island of the Moon. The one Lord of the Will abides alone along with the five Siddhas of the Command.[2]
>
> He went to the south, to the beautiful venerable Candrapura at the end of the Age. Called Piṅgala, he is the very powerful Mātaṅgīśa. He is the god of the Command in the seat Tisra, the fifth leader of the Siddhas. He is the pervasive Navātman, established from the beginningless Age. (He is) Kucandaśekharānanda, the teacher of the universe in the seat of the Moon. The current of the Siddhas beginning with Mitra has come forth from the Island of the Moon. It is the final lineage of Siddhas devoid of the previous lineage.[3]

---

[1] KuKh 69/23cd-27ab.

[2] pañcānāṁ yuganāthaṁ tu ādināthaṁ [kh: -nāthas] tu bhairavam ǀ navātmānandadeveśaṁ [k, kh: -śa] vidyārājeśvareśvaram [k, kh: vidyārāja-] ǀǀ kujecchayāḥ [k, kh: -cchāyā] samutpannaṁ kujeśaḥ paramātmā saḥ [k, kh: kujeśa paramātmanaḥ] ǀ kucandraśekharaṁ nāma samanāntād vinirgatam ǀǀ ity utsaṅgāvatāro 'yaṁ candradvīpe kulāmbike ǀ icchānāthaṁ sthitaṁ caikaṁ ājñāsiddhais [k, kh: -siddhas] tu pañcabhiḥ ǀǀ YKh (2) 30/45-47.

[3] dakṣiṇāśāṁ gato 'sau [k, kh: dākṣiṇāsaṅ gataḥ so] hi śrīcandrapuraśobhane [k, kh: -re śubhe] ǀǀ yugānte piṅgalo nāma mātaṅgīśo [k, kh: mataṁtīśo] mahābalaḥ ǀ ājñādevas [k, kh: -devo-] tisrapīṭhe [k: -tiśra-] pañcamaḥ [k, kh: -maṁ] siddhanāyakaḥ [k, kh: -kaṁ] ǀǀ vyāpakaṁ tu navātmānaṁ anādiyugasaṁsthitam ǀ kucandraśekharānandaṁ candrapīṭhe jagadgurum ǀǀ mitranāthādisiddhaughaṁ [k, kh: siddhoghaṁ] candradvīpād vinirgatam ǀ

Piṅgala is the aspect of Siddhanātha, the First Siddha, who, according to the ṢSS and the KuKh, met the goddess in Koṅkaṇa and propagated the teachings there.[1] We have seen when we examined the goddess's myth that the references in the KMT and the ṢSS which follows it suggest that these sources identified it with Mount Kumāra, that is, Śrīśaila in Andhra, from where the goddess set off on her missionary tour. However, this is not the case in other sources. The KRU clearly states that the Siddha Vṛkṣanātha went to Koṅkaṇa[2] and there established the lineages of teachers.[3] The same takes place a second time, according to the KRU, in the same place to which it refers as the fifth sacred seat.[4] Clearly, we are to understand that the fifth seat is Koṅkaṇa. This, we may suppose, is how the references to the fifth 'future' seat should also be understood in the passage from the KuKh we have quoted above. In other words, it appears that a change in the identity of this place has taken place since the redaction of the KMT which has caused a shift of the fifth seat from Śrīśaila to Koṅkaṇa. However, one wonders, if this is the case, why the texts refer to a sixth seat which is clearly Koṅkaṇa or, the city of Candrapura. The answer to this may well be that this addition took place in the course of the redaction of the YKh. The references we find to the sixth seat in the KuKh are all in passages drawn from the YKh. The redactors of the KuKh for their part may have intended the fifth seat to be Koṅkaṇa and then confused this identification by drawing passages from the YKh where this is the sixth, not the fifth seat. Whatever the solution is to this incongruence in the sources, there can be no doubt that the tradition did in fact move to Koṅkaṇa and that this shift coincided with the growing Muslim presence in India to which we now turn our attention.

The Muslim Invasions

The first Muslim fleets appeared in Indian waters in 639 CE during the Caliphate of ‘Umar. Soon after, in 644 CE, ‘Uthmān Sakīfī, the governor of Baḥrayn and Umān sent an army across the sea to Thāna, which is close to modern Mumbai. According to Majumdar there were three such raids.[5] The Arab general Ismā'īl attacked the port of Ghoghā in 677. Regular attacks on the trading cities of western India followed. From about 650 a series of attempts were made to invade Kābul, Zābul and Sindh. After the fall of the first two kingdoms, Sindh

---

*paścimaṁ [k, kh: pāścamaṁ] siddhasantānaṁ [k: siddhisantāna; kh: siddhisantā ] pūrvasantānavarjitam [k, kh: -varnitam] || YKh (2) 30/52cd-55.

[1] See KuKh 46/35-37 ff. and notes.
[2] KRU 13/28 quoted in intro. vol. 2, p. 488.
[3] KRU 13/30 ff., quoted ibid. p. 505-506.
[4] KRU 13/37 quoted ibid. p. 507.
[5] Majumdar HCIP 3, 167-9.

was conquered by Mu'hammad bin Qasim in 712. Under his rule, and that of the following few rulers, there does not appear to have been great conflict between the Muslim minority and the Hindus there. However, incursions continued into India creating a pervasive sense of tension in the following centuries. At the same time, from the seventh century onwards, Persian and Arab traders settled in large numbers in various ports on the western coast of India, especially in Malabar. The second great wave of Muslim conquest came with Ma'hmūd of Ghazni who led as many as seventeen devastating raids into India between 1001 and 1030. Muslim rule in Sindh was extended to cover a larger area although it was not until 1175 that Ma'hmūd Ghori conquered Delhi and Muslim rule was fully consolidated by Mu'izzu'd Din in the second battle of Tarain in 1192.[1]

It seems that the references in the Kubjikā sources to Muslim rule in the North relate to the period of the Ghaznavid incursions. The existence of a MS of the MBT dated 1180 CE[2] precludes a much latter date. The specific reference in YKh (1) to Sindh through which the Indus flows, which is probably the earliest in our sources, supports this view. Ma'hmūd of Ghazni did indeed considerably strengthen and extended Muslim rule in the Punjab. However, The early Muslim presence along the western coast of India alerts us against drawing hasty conclusions. References to Muslim rule in the 'north' may have been to no more than to the Muslim settlements along the coast to the north of Koṅkaṇa.

Koṅkaṇa and its Capital Candrapura

Ancient Koṅkaṇa was the whole strip of land between the Western Ghāṭs and the Arabian Sea.[3] When Hiuen Tsiang visited it in the middle of the 7th century it extended beyond the strip of land between the sea and the Western Ghāṭs to include the table lands above them. Cunningham writes, referring to Hiuen Tsiang's account of Koṅkaṇa, that 'its actual limits are not mentioned, but it was bounded by Drāviḍa on the south, by Dhanakakata of the east, by Mahārāṣṭra on the north, and by the sea on the west, it may be described as extending along the coast from Vingorla to Kundapūr, near Bednūr, and inland from the neighbourhood of Kulbarga to the ancient fortress of Madgiri, which would give a circuit of about 800 miles. This was the ancient kingdom of the Kadambas, which for a time rivalled that of the Cālukyas of Mahārāṣṭra.'[4] When

---

[1] Hedayetullah 197: 13-22.
[2] This MS is called Śrīmahāmanthānabhairavatantra is in the Private Library of Field Marshal Kaisher, n. 592. Colophon: samvat 300 phārgguṇa-śukla-pūrṇṇimāsyāyāṁ budhadine XXXX śrī-someśvaradevasya vijayarājye || The date is verified for Wednesday, February 13th, 1180. Petech 1958: 71.
[3] Day (1927) 1990: 103.
[4] Cunningham (1871) 1990: 466.

Alberuni wrote his work on India around 1030 CE, Koṅkana was, according to him, a province of what he called 'Mahrattadeśa′ and its capital was Thāna on the sea-coast.[1]

Bhattacharyya[2] explains that Koṅkana is the modern Konkan region on the western sea coast of India. Often described as a deśa (country) or viṣaya (administrative division) in inscriptions, it corresponds roughly to Aparānta mentioned in medieval inscriptions and Ariake of Ptolemy. As an administrative region (viṣaya) it is mentioned in the Nerur copper plate of the time of the Cālukyas of Badami. The land (deśa) of Koṅkaṇa is mentioned in the Yādava records as an administrative division of Thāna district and parts of the Salcete island.[3] Thus the references in the Kubjikā Tantras to Śrīdeśa are to ancient Koṅkaṇa.

Of the many places sacred to the goddess in India mentioned in her Tantras, only Candrapura is identified as the home (veśman) (lit. 'house') of the Western Transmission, that is, the Kubjikā cult. It is the goddess's maṇḍala, her most personal abode.[4] There were several towns in India with this name. According to Day, one of them, also called Candrādityapura is, Chandor in the Nasik district. It was the capital of Dṛdhaprahāra, a king of the Yādava dynasty.[5] Another Candrapura has been identified by Day as Cāndā in Madhya Pradesh. A third place is called Chandwar, which is a contraction of Candrapura. This is Firozabad near Agra where in 1193 CE. Shahabuddin Ghori defeated Jayacandra, the king of Kanouj. There is a reference to this place in the Varāhapurāṇa.[6] A fourth place is Candrikāpurī or Candripura. This is a name of Śravastī or Sahet-mahet in the Gonda district in eastern Uttara Pradesh. It is said to be the birth-place of Śambhavanātha, the third Jaina Tīrthāṅkāra and of Candraprabhānātha, the eighth one. However, according to Bhattacharyya,[7] this Candrapura is Candravati, a modern village near Vārāṇasī. Bhattacharyya[8] notes the existence of another Candrapurī. This was 'an administrative division mentioned in the Tezpur grant of Vanamāla as lying to the west of Trisrotā or Tista, and in the Dhobi and Nidhanpur plates of Bhāskara as situated on the dried river Kauśika or Kusiara. On the basis of the former evidence some scholars want to locate it in Puṇḍravardhana, and on that of the latter others identify it with Chandpur in the Sylhet region.' Another place is Candragrāma. This is a village in Dakṣiṇa Toṣala

[1] Sachau (1910) 1996: I, 203.
[2] Bhattacharyya 1999: 190.
[3] In. Ant. IX.130; Ep. Ind., XXĪI.281, XXV.199, 2nd JBBRAS V.183.
[4] KuKh 3/12.
[5] Day (1927) 1990: 47.
[6] Varāhapurāṇa chapter 122.
[7] Bhattacharyya 1999: 105.
[8] ibid.

mentioned in the records of the Somavaṁśī kings of Orissa. It has been identified with the modern Chandgan, about thirty-two miles from Cuttack.[1] The modern district of Candrapura in the north-east of Maharastra is well known

We know of two Candrapuras that fit the descriptions found in the texts. One was an important town in what is now the Garwal district of the western Himalaya. Not far from it is a mountain called Candraparvata. Moreover, both these places are approximately to the west of Kailāsa which is where these places are said to be located by the KMT, the earliest and root Tantra of the Kubjikā cult. On the basis of this and other references, and because of the goddess's many association with mountains, I have expressed the opinion in a previous publication that Candrapura was located somewhere in the Himalayas.[2] This was also the opinion of Goudriaan but not of Schoterman[3] who preferred a South Indian location.

The other Candrapura is located in Goa, the ancient kingdom of Koṅkaṇa. It has been identified with the modern Chandor in the Salcete district of Goa. It is mentioned in the Siroda copper plate of Devarāja, a Bhoja king of Western Deccan[4] and in an inscription of the southern Śilāhāra king Raṭṭarāja of 1008 AD.[5] It is appears in several other inscriptions of this period and is mentioned by the Jaina writer Hemacandra. It was the capital of the Śilāhāras, who ruled this area in the fourth century CE. The earliest known kings who ruled over the southern and central parts of Goa were the Bhojas whose rule extended approximately from the fourth to the sixth or seventh centuries. They were followed by the Mauryas who ruled parts of central and northern Goa around the sixth or seventh centuries. The following period up to the tenth century is a dark phase in its history. It is certain, however, that the kings ruled from Candrapura which was situated in the Candramaṇḍala district in the central part of Goa. The Goa Kadamba kings, feudatories of the later western Cālukyas ruled over Goa and adjacent areas from 950 to 1270.[6] Gūvaladeva I (c. 975 to 1006-1007) was the first important king to carve out a principality for the Kadambas. At the beginning of the eleventh century, the Kadambas of Goa under Ṣāṣṭhadeva (c. 1010-1050) extended their authority over the whole of Goa, vanquishing the Śilāhāras. They moved the capital from Candrapura (Chandor) to Goapurī (Goa Velha) in about 1052.[7]

---

[1] ibid.
[2] Dyczkowski 1988a: 91.
[3] Goudrāin 1981: 52 and Schoterman 1982: 37.
[4] Bhattacharyya 1999 : 105 with reference to Ep. Ind., XXIV.143 ff., and XXVI.337 ff.
[5] F. Kielhorn, 'Kharepatan Plates of Rattaraja Saka Samvat 930.' EI, vol. 3, Calcutta 1894-5, p. 299, line 29.
[6] Gurav 1982: 219.
[7] S. Rajagopalan 1987: p. 3-4. Also J. Numes 1979: 18.

The end of Kadamba rule brought a period of uncertainty followed by several waves of Muslim invasions and intermittent periods of Muslim rule. In 1311 Kāfūr the general of Sultān 'Alā-ud-dīn Khaljī of Delhi invaded Goa for the first time. It seems that the ancient Candrapura was destroyed in another inroad in 1327. This took place in the reign of Kāmadeva, the last of the Kadambas who were forced to abandon Goapurī and return to Chandor where they built a fortress. The Kadamba dynasty was brought to an end by Ma'hamūd-bin-Tughlaq who attacked Chandor and destroyed it completely.[1] Alternating with Hindu kings, the Muslims continued to rule up to 1510 AD when Goa was conquered by Alfonso de Albuquerque. The Portugese rule that started with him after an initial period of tolerance brought about the systematic devastation of Hindu temples and the conversion of the inhabitants to Christianity. Thus, unfortunately, not much remains of Goa's Hindu past. However, the little as that has been recovered confirms a powerful presence of Śaivism in the region and of its related Kaula Tantric forms. A temple dedicated to Candranātha still stands not far from the ancient Chandor. There can be no doubt that the Kadambas themselves were Śaivites. Their public family deity was Saptakoṭīśvara, a Liṅga enshrined in a temple on the island of Divar. The name relates primarily to the mantras through which the universe was created or the species of beings that inhabit it. Even so, one wonders in the light of what appears from the text to be the close relationship between this region of India and the Kadamba kings whether the name may not relate to the original mythical Kaula Āgama which was said to be this long and was called accordingly.

N. N. Bhattacharyya[2] notes that the 'group of Mothers' (mātṛgaṇa) are mentioned in the records of the early Kadamba kings[3] who claimed to have been especially favoured by Kārttikeya and the Mothers. In this respect they were similar to other great dynasties such as the Cālukyas of Badami, all of whom were, like the Kadamba kings, potential initiates into Kaula cults. The extensive role played by the Mothers in public worship in those regions in which Kaulism is prominent is amply illustrated by their presence in the Kathmandu Valley and Orissa. In both regions they are not only worshipped in temples as attendent deities to the main god or goddess and in wayside shrines (called pīṭhas), each Mother has a temple of her own. The former typology is represented by a stone image of Vaiṣṇavī, constituting part of a row of seated Mothers discovered in the sanctum of a Śiva temple at Candrapura by Heras in 1930 in the course of his excavations. This brick shrine, which was probably built in the 7th century, is the oldest extant remnant of a Hindu temple in Goa. Another temple is dedicated to [1] Nunes 1979: 18.

---

[2] N. N. Bhattacharyya 1974: 80.
[3] Indian Antiquary VI, p. 27.

just one of the Mothers, which suggests that separate temples to each Mother did also existed in Goa. This one was built for the goddess Brahmāṇī at Taide in the Sanguem district of Goa. All that remains of this small temple is the base of basalt stone, which probably supported a superstructure. At present the deities are installed on the western part of the platform and are covered by a simple thatched roof. It is not possible to ascertain the date of this temple with certainty but it may well belong to the Kadamba period. Stricking and significant are the presence of erotic scenes in the reliefs at the base - a common feature of temples built by patrons with Kaula orientations. That this was a region in which Tantric cults were well represented is further supported by the extensive evidence of Buddhist Tantric cults there.

The main dynasties of the Kadamba kings ruled in Karṇāṭaka and branches of their family governed Goa.[1] We find several substantial remains of Kadamba temples in the adjacent Karṇāṭaka. A notable one belonging to this period is the late eleventh century Dakṣiṇa-Kedāreśvara temple at Balamgamve and another is the unicellular temple of Kadambeśvara at Ratihalli which precedes 1174 AD.[2] The manner in which our sources refer to Koṅkaṇa i.e. Goa, Śrīdeśa - the area governed by the Kadamba kings and Dakṣiṇāpatha - the entire Deccan, may perhaps be due to the varying area of spread of the Kadambas and other patrons of the Kubjikā cult in these areas of which Koṅkaṇa and its capital was the nucleus.

The following passage from chapter forty-three of the Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā confirms the connection between Candrapura and the Kadamba kings. The passage refers to the advent of Siddhanātha (variously named, Oḍḍīsanātha, Tuṣṇīnātha, and Kūrmanātha) to the city of Candrapura, of which the Tantra says:

> There is a city there called Candrapura (the City of the Moon) with (many) citizens located on the beautiful and extensive shore of the western sea in the auspicious forest by the sea in the great land called Koṅkaṇa. [. . .] The king there was called Candraprabha and he belonged to the dynasty of the Kadambas. Like the king of the gods, he was the ruler of all the worlds. [3]

[1] See Moraes 1931: Part 5 - The Kadambas of Goa, pp. 167-216.

[2] See Cousens 1926 plates 110 and 112 for images of these two temples.

[3] paścimasya samudrasya tīre ramye suvistare |
koṅkaṇākhye mahādeśe sāgarasya [-rāya] vane śubhe ||
tatra candrapuraṁ nāma nagaraṁ nāgarair vṛtam | ṢSS 43/27-28ab.
tatra candraprabho nāma rājā kadambavaṁśajaḥ ||
śāsitā sarvalokānāṁ tridaśādhipatir yathā | Ibid. 43/32cd-33ab.

The Śrīmatottara (1/15c) similarly describes Candrapura as being close to mountains and the sea (samudrasyopakaṇṭhe).

When this king is referred to again by name in the ṢSS he is called Candrabimba.[1] He appears with this name in YKh (1) as the king into whose family (kula) Kuleśvarī was born.[2] Perhaps this earlier source suggests indirectly in this way that this king accepted the goddess as his family deity and is praising him for doing so. We have seen in the previous chapter how according to the ṢSS the king and his teacher, the Buddhist Vajrabodhi, were initiated by the sage who admonished the king that all his subjects should worship the goddess.[3]

The ṢSS is not the only source that refers to the conversion of kings. The KRU affirms that Vṛkṣanātha, the First Siddha who came from Pauṇḍravardhana in the North to Candrapura, converted people from many lands but the first amongst them, it says, was Ṣaṣṭha who belonged to a family of kings.[4] Saṣṭhanātha (also called Ṣaṣṭhīśa) is said to be the first Siddha of the Age of Strife.[5] He is especially associated with the sacred seat of Koṅkaṇa in which he established the authority of the tradition - the Command that is revealed and should be attained in the Age of Strife.[6] Is this Ṣaṣṭha, the Kadamba king Ṣaṣṭhadeva (c. 1010-1050 CE) who was the first Kadamba king to conquer Koṅkaṇa? If it is not him, then is it not possible that to reward the king who had helped much in the propagation of the Kubjikā teachings and patronised the teachers the first Siddha was named after him? Whatever be the case, it is clear that the Tantra presents Kubjikā as a goddess of a royal cult, and indeed she still is one of the Newars' royal goddesses.

That the cult was already established in this part of India by the eleventh century with its centre in this Candrapura is supported by the following inscription from Karṇāṭaka (Nelamangala tāluka) dated 1030 CE commemorating the founding of a Siddheśvara temple:

> At the foot of a wonderful tree in Candrapurī, [which is] situated by the western ocean, Ādinātha is installed. By merely recalling his excellent lotus feet, the residual effects of acts committed

---

[1] ṢSS 43/49ab = KuKh 46/68ab.
[2] cf. KuKh 63/3 = YKh (1) 31/3 where this passage also occurs.
[3] See intro. vol. 2, above, p. 492 ff..
[4] (Vṛkṣanātha went on) to initiate other respected and most excellent Kaulas (vīrādhīśa) belongining to many lands. The first amongst them, is the third who belongs to a family of kings and whom I worship as Ṣaṣṭha.

vīrādhīśān [kh: vīrāvīṁ-] tu [k kh g: ti] cānyān [k kh g: -kānyān] vividhajanapadān bhāvitān dīkṣayitvā [kh: vīkṣa-] |
ādyas teṣāṁ [k kh: ādyasthasya?; g: -sthāsya] tṛtīyo [g: -yā] kṣitipakulabhavo [kh: kṣiti] ṣaṣṭha ity evam īḍe [k kh g: -ḍye] || KRU 13/31.
[5] KuKh 69/6-7.
[6] KuKh 60/73 = YKh (1) 29/168.

> in past lives are destroyed. His disciple . . . was Chāyādinātha [Shadow Ādinātha]. His disciple was Stambhanātha . . . His son, versed in the meaning of the Kālāgama [sic. Kulāgama], was the yati Dvīpanātha . . . His disciple was born Mauninātha. The bearer of the latter's commands was Rūpaśiva [the priest in charge of the temple] [. . .] devoted to the Śaivāgama.[1]

Candrapurī is indeed situated, just as the Kubjikā Tantras that refer to it say, on the western sea. Moreover, the reference to a tree in Candrapura associated with Ādinātha may well be related to the goddess's sacred tamarind tree the legend says he miraculously bent.[2] The installation of his image under this tree there would make good sense. However, the names of the teachers that followed are not found in the texts except Stambhanātha. Stambhadeva is the caryā name of the third of the Sixteen Nāthas. Even so, there can be no doubt that this is a concrete inscriptional reference to the Kubjikā cult, which tells us that the cult had spread to Karṇātaka by the middle of the eleventh century.

Rūpaśiva is fourth in line after Ādinātha. Allowing the usual 25 years for each generation, this would place the latter in the middle of the tenth century. We may thus suppose this to be the approximate time of the spread of the Kubjikā cult to the Deccan. Assuming the absence of references to the Deccan to be significant in the earlier sources, we may say that they preceded this period. This is certainly the case with the KMT.

The Presence of the Kubjikā cult in South India and Elsewhere

Traces of the presence and influence the Kubjikā tradition exerted in South India remain. We have had occasion to refer to the foremost amongst them several times, that is, the incorporation of the Triangle into the centre of Śrīcakra, the maṇḍala of the Śrīvidyā, that developed initially in South India. Vidyānanda, a South Indian commentator on the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava, the root Tantra of this school, 'seems to have possessed', as the editors of the KMT point out, 'a fair knowledge of the texts of the Kubjikā school because he repeatedly refers to them'.[3] Vidyānanda quotes a Śrīmatottara four times in his commentary. However, only one of these references can be traced and that is in the KMT and the ṢSS,[4] not the ŚM. He quotes the KMT, which he calls the Śrīmata, once and

---

[1] Quoted by White 1996: 94 from Saletore 1937: 20ff.
[2] See intro. vol. 2, p. 474.
[3] Goudriaan and Schoterman 1988: 18.
[4] KMT 18/111cd-2ab and ṢSS 28/22cd-3ab in NṢA p. 24.

the MBT, which he calls the Kādibheda.[1] He quotes from a Ṣaṭsāhasrabhaṭṭāraka in his Jñānadīpavimarśinī[2] but this reference cannot be traced in the manuscripts of the ṢSS. However, he may well have known it or the ŚM because he lists the same sixty-four Yoginīs found there.[3] The earliest known manuscript of his works is one of the Jñānadīpavimarśinī dated 1382 CE. He mentions Śomaśambhu[4] who was probably the same as the author of the Kramakāṇḍakramāvalī better known a the Somaśambhupaddhati which was completed in 1074 CE. So he lived sometime between these two dates.[5]

Vidyānanda's date may well be closer to the lower limit than the upper. He follows the early division of the Kaula traditions (āmnāya) into four, placing Tripurā in the southern one (dakṣiṇāmnāya).[6] The division into six, which is still in use, was probably developed in the early 13th or late 12th century.[7] Most interesting is his knowledge of the transposition of the core of the goddess's Saṁvartāmaṇḍala into the Śrīcakra of Tripurā. Was this because he lived in a time and place in which the Kubjikā cult was still flourishing and that of Śrīvidyā was freshly emerging?

Maheśvarānanda was a disciple of Mahāprakāśa who studied with Śivānanda, the author of another commentary of the NṢA. We know the latter lived in the second half of the 13th century. Thus Maheśvarānanda lived about the middle of the 14th century. His teacher, he tells us, hailed form the land of the

---

[1] See above, p. 221.
[2] Jñadīvi p. 12.
[3] Jñadīvi p. 155-158.
[4] Jñadīvi p. 124.
[5] See Dvivedi's intro. to the NṢA, p. 21-22. For more details see intro. to his edition of the Jñadīvi p. v-vi.
[6] See intro. 2, p. 346-347.
[7] In his Jñadīvi (p. 92-95) Vidyānanda supplies four Samayā Vidyās for the goddesses of four traditions. These are: East - Rudraśakti, South – Klinnā, West - Kubjikā and North - Mahācaṇḍayogeśvarī. The Kubjikā Vidyā is a recognisable variant of the thirty-two syllable Vidyā taught in the Kubjikā Tantras. The Vidyā of the northern tradition is a contracted nine syllable form of the seventeen syllable Vidyā of Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī, the goddess of the Kālīkrama, presented in code form in the Devyāyāmala quoted by Jayaratha in his commentary on TA 29/69. It is: HRĪṀ MAHĀCAṆḌAYOGEŚVARĪ ṬHṜ DHṜ THṜ PHAṬ PHAṬ PHAṬ PHAṬ PHAṬ

See Dupuche 2003: 354. The version in the Jñadīvi (p. 93-94) is KHPHREṀ MAHĀCAṆḌAYOGEŚVARI Ṛ (variant: DRĪṀ). Vidyānanda does not specifically relate Tripurā's tradition to the southern one in this case, unless we take Klinnā to represent Tripurā. He also has a section on the extraction of the Vidyā of the four (rather than six) traditions (ibid. p. 202-206).

Vidyānanda refers to a group of six traditions (ṣaḍāmnāyasamayān jñātvā samarcayet) (ibid. p. 92) but these are, it seems to the mantras of the six darśanas, namely: 1) Bauddha 2) Brāhma (i.e Vaidika) 3) Śaiva 4) Saura 5) Nārāyaṇa and 6) Śākta. These are projected from below upwards into the six Wheels (cakra) in the body (ibid. p. 93-94).

Colas, that is, roughly modern Tamil Nadu.[1] Maheśvarānanda wrote his Mahārthamañjarī in 'the language of Mahārāṣṭra', in which the goddess addressed him.[2] It is not possible to say exactly where Maheśvarānanda lived, but we may suppose it was around central or South India. He quotes from what he calls the Kubjikāmata in three places in his auto-commentary on the Mahārthamañjarī.[3] He also quotes a work called Śrīpaścima twice.[4] The name of the text suggests that it was a Kubjikā source. Moreover, one quote refers to its teaching as that of the Siddhas (siddhaśāsana),[5] which is a typical way in which the Kubjikā Tantras (as do others) refer to their teaching.

Although these references have not been traced, nonetheless, there seems little reason to doubt that Maheśvarānanda was acquainted with the Kubjikā Tantras. Indeed, Sanderson suggests that he was initiated into the Kubjikā cult. Evidence for this is Maheśvarānanda's claim that he belonged to the Śāmbhava tradition, which Sanderson identifies with that of the goddess Kubjikā. This tradition is represented by the (unpublished) Śāmbhavanirṇaya to which Sanderson refers. Be that as it may, Kubjikā Tantras, although little known, were certainly in circulation in South and central India in the fourteenth century. More evidence for this are references from Kubjikā sources. The Saubhāgyaratnākara is a Tantric compendium compiled by another Vidyānanada who was also from South India but lived much after his namesake. It gives us some idea of the literate Tantric and Kaula cults that were current in South India in the 14th or 15th century. There we find Kubjikā's Samayā Vidyā.[6] Another compendium in which we find references from Kubjikā Tantras is the Śrīvidyārṇavatantra compiled by a certain Śrīvidyāraṇya. He quotes from the Yoginītantra, which refers to a king who ruled in Assam in the 16th century, thus setting a lower limit for the date of the Śrīvidyārṇavatantra as it does the Yoginītantra. Śrīvidyāraṇya quotes a few Tantras of the early period testifying to their continued existence in India up to this time.[7] Most of Āgamic Śaivism in South India was captured by Śaivasiddhāntins and, particularly in Andhra and Karṇātaka, by Vīraśaivas. Thus the earlier Kaula cults and Kashmiri Śaivism that were popular in

---

[1] atha kālakramavaśāc coladeśaśiromaṇiḥ |
mahāprakāśo nāmāsīd deśiko dṛkkriyottaraḥ || MM p. 190.

[2] mahārāṣṭrabhuvaṁ bhāṣāṁ prayuñjānā smitottaram | Ibid. p. 191.

[3] There are two references on p. 4 of the MM and one on p. 126.

[4] MM p. 108 and p. 126.

[5] MM p. 126.

[6] SauR p. 162.

[7] Śrīvidyāraṇya draws from the following Kubjikā sources: the Kādimata, Kubjikātantra, and Manthānabhairavatantra. Other early sources include: Jayadrathayāmala, Devīyāmala, Piṅgalāmata, Brahmayāmala, and Mālinīvijayottara. See vol. 1 of the edition of the Śrīvidyārṇavatantra, p. 16-17.

Maheśvarānanda's time were largely superseded by them, with the sole major exception of Śrīvidyā, which is still popular. Somehow in Kerala, where the traditions are more strongly centred on the worship of goddesses, these survived longer. Thus we find many more manuscripts of early Kaula Tantras and even Kashmiri Śaiva works there than anywhere else in the south of India. Amongst them is a palmleaf manuscript in Malayalam script of a fragment of the KMT, which is preserved in the Kerala University library in Trivandrum.[1]

Kubjikā also appears in a few alchemical texts of this period. One is the Rasārṇava which may be a South India text belonging, perhaps, to the 14th century. Kubjikā is mentioned there with reference to the manner in which the alchemist should sweep the place where he prepares his potions. This is done with a brush he has empowered by installing and worshipping in it Kubjikā - the goddess of the Western Transmission - with her thirty-two syllable Vidyā together with her attendants.[2] The alchemical tract called Ānandakanda is generally believed to be a South Indian work which, if so, White opines 'likely emerged from the Deccan plateau rather than either of the southern coastal regions'.[3] Inspired by the Rasārṇava, it contains instructions for the worship of Kubjikā and other beings.[4] Finally, the South Indian alchemist Nāgārjuna refers to the MBT in his Rasamahodadhi.

One way of dividing up the corpus of the Kubjikā Tantras is into those that were written, or for the most part redacted, prior to the shift to the Deccan and those after. This is certainly a convenient and important distinction, but one that could be misleading if we suppose that it implies that at some point in time the entire Kubjikā tradition moved to Koṅkaṇa and the Deccan or, indeed, that it was not present there at all prior to that. Some Tantras, or substantial parts of them, that were redacted after the shift were not particularly interested in associating themselves with these places or, indeed, any others, indicating that Kubjikā's cult had centres elsewhere at the same time. One such place is the Kathmandu Valley. This is a particularly important centre of Kubjikā's cult. It is the only place where it has survived and, moreover, it has had a substantial following for centuries and played a major role in the religious life of the Valley.

---

[1] University of Kerala, Trivandrum catalogue serial no. 3898; MS no. C 2319 C (D.CṢ. 1016C).

[2] White: 1996: 429, note 172. These attendents, who are represented by seed-syllable mantras, are the four Siddhas, the eighteen Puruṣas, the five elements, and the six Yoginīs (RA 3/9-12). See also RA 3/8, 31.

[3] White 1996: 168.

[4] Ānandakanda 1/2/165, cf. RA 2/53-72. See references in White 1996: 168.

The Kubjikā Corpus

We conclude with a concise outline of the scriptural corpus of the Kubjikā's cult with a few remarks concerning the possible date or, at least the relative chronological order, of its members. We shall broadly survey their major concerns, structure, possible sources and influences and their redaction. We may conveniently order the Kubjikā sources into five main categories as follows.

1) The Kubjikāmata and related Tantras. These include the Laghvikāmnāya, the Śrīmatottara and the Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā.
2) The Manthānabhairavatantra.
3) Kubjikā Tantras that identify themselves with the Manthānabhairavatantra of Twenty-four Thousand Verses. These are the Kulakaulinīmata and the Ambāmatasaṁhitā.
4) Independent Kubjikā Tantras.
 a) Major Tantras: The Kularatnoddyota and Pārameśvarīmata
 b) Minor Tantras: The Nigūḍhajñānasadbhāvatantra and the Kulamūlaratnapañcakāvatāra.
 c) Others: The Kubikopaniṣad and Kubjikātantra
 d) Short tracts: The Siddhapañcāśikā, Kramasūtrādhikāra, Ś*rīmatasārasaṁgraha*, Śrīmatasāra, and the Ciñciṇīmatasārasamuccaya.
5) Commentaries.
 a) Major commentaries: The Ṭīkā by Rūpaśiva and the vyākhyā of the Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā.
 b) Minor commentaries: The Saṁvartārthaprakāśa by Mukundarāja, the Bhaktibodha.
6) Liturgical Tracts. The Kubjikānityāhnikatilaka and Newar liturgies.

1) The Kubjikāmata and related Tantras.

1A) The Laghvikāmnāya and the Kubjikāmata

We have seen that the traditional genealogy of the scriptures places the Kubjikāmata at the end of a graded series of scriptures of diminishing length.[1] In that ideal scheme it follows after the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses, that is, the Manthānabhairavatantra. This scheme is promoted by the MBT which, naturally, deems itself to be superior to the other Tantras, including the KMT. So we should not be mislead by it into believing that the KMT is in some way derived from the MBT or, indeed, that it is later in time. In fact, the KMT, in some form, was certainly the earliest complete Kubjikā Tantra. Moreover, the contents and even the basic structure of the KMT and the MBT, differ so substantially that it is not possible to affirm that they are directly derived one from the other. The reader can ascertain this easily for himself by comparing the summary of contents of the MBT presented here and that of the KMT published in the introduction to the critical edition made by Goudriaan and Schoterman.[1] We have seen that the MBT was redacted in bits and pieces over a considerable period of time, so much so that we can easily identify quite substantial developments as we go from one section (khaṇḍa) of it to the next. The development of lineages of teachers is a case in point we have examined already which, like virtually all the others, including the developments in the symbolism of the maṇḍala and the myths of origin, are closely associated in one way or another with Candrapura, Koṅkaṇa and the Deccan. The KMT moves in its own world devoid of these associations.

---

[1] See above, p.44 ff..

We have seen that a substantial part, if not all, of the MBT was probably redacted in Koṅkaṇa before the capital was shifted from Candrapura in the first quarter of the eleventh century. We may therefore safely assume, that a version of the KMT existed in the second half of the tenth century. This date is pushed back a century or more as the KMT pre-dates the JY. We know this as two ṣaṭkas of the JY refer to it.[2] It is mentioned in the first ṣaṭka of the JY as one of three

---

[1] See Goudriaan and Schoterman 1988: 110-130.

[2] The following references to Kubjikā are found in the first ṣaṭka of the JY which is the oldest of the four ṣaṭkas. Note how coherent they are with the manner in which she is presented in her Tantras.

She who, having withdrawn the Point of the seed, the Point, and Sound along with Obstruction and bends her own body, leaping up constantly (to higher levels), is said to be Kubjikā who is attained by Power and is Mind Beyond Mind.

bījabinduṁ [k: -bindu] tathā binduṁ nādañca sanirodhikam |
saṁhṛtya kurute kubjaṁ svāṅgaṁ yā saṁplaved [k, kh: -ve] sadā ||
kubjikā sā samākhyātā śaktigamyā manonmanī | JY 1/42/25-26ab (MS K fl. 335a-b).

The realisation that takes place constantly by the utterance of Speech within the reality which is essentially A (the supreme principle), is devoid of visualized form and never deviates from that (essential) nature is Mudrā. (It is the energy) that speaks of it and is established in endless forms. One should know that the Tantra which explains it is the Kubjikāmata.

sadā dhyānavihīne 'pi hy asvarūpe 'pi vastuni ||
vāguktyā pratipattiḥ [k: -patti] syāt tadrūpāvyabhicāriṇī |
yā yasyā vācikā mudrānantabhedapratiṣṭhitā [k: -tāṁ; kh: -tam] ||
tattātparyakaraṁ [k, kh: -taraṁ] tantraṁ [k: mantraṁ] vijñeyaṁ kubjikāmatam | JY 1/42/27cd-29ab.

This is the extensive Kubjikāmata that has come forth from the mountain.

Tantras belonging to the Mudrāpīṭha[1] and it appears again in the third ṣaṭka as a 'root Tantra' (mūlatantra).[2] We may safely assume that the Kālī cult of JY preceded the Kashmiri Krama school founded by Jñānanetra who lived in the middle of the ninth century. This means that the JY and hence the KMT, or some early version of it, existed in the beginning of the ninth century. The KMT is probably not much earlier than this unless we admit the possibility that the references in the JY to Kubjikā and the KMT are late additions to it. However, as there are several in various places and there appears to be no reason to make such insertions, this seems unlikely. We have observed in various contexts that the Kubjikā cult exhibits numerous features that indicate that it comes at the end of a series of developments, especially its explicit perception of itself as specifically and solely Kaula. Thus we may assign this relatively late date for the KMT with some confidence.

The pre-eminent status of the KMT in the Kubjikā corpus is such that this, the Śrīmata, has lent its name to the whole tradition, a name the MBT deemed so important that it appropriated it for itself. The high quality and complexity of the KMT is underscored by the composition of not just one but two expansions, which may be said to be quite literally, explanatory Tantras, that is, the ŚM and the ṢSS, we shall examine further ahead. According to the colophons at the end of the chapters of the KMT, the version of it that has come down to us is the Kulālikāmnāya, that is, the Teaching concerning (Kubjikā) the Potter Woman.[3] A shorter version exists called the Laghvikāmnāya, that is, the Teaching concerning (Kubjikā) the Subtle One. Only one palm leaf manuscript has been recovered of the Laghvikāmnāya, which is written in a variety of old Nevārī script resembling Devanāgarī. The concluding colophon informs us that it was copied in 1037-1038 CE during the reign of Lakṣmīkāmadeva who, according to Regmi, ruled between 1024 and 1040 CE.[4] It is older than any of the manuscripts of the KMT recovered kubjikāmatavistīrṇā parvatanirgatā [k, kh: parvatā- -tās] tv imā [kh: -mām] || JY 1/42/31cd.

---

[1] See intro. vol. 2, p. 38.

[2] mūlatantraṁ kubjikā ca yoginījālasaṁvaram || JY 3/24/29cd.

This part of the JY refers back to the first ṣaṭka where many Tantras are listed implying that the Tantras listed here are basically those listed there. So there can be no doubt, despite the clumsy, syntax that the Kubjikāmata is meant here.

[3] Concerning Kulālikā, see intro. vol. 2, p. 104 ff..

[4] The manuscript is deposited in the National Archives in Kathmandu. It is NAK no. 5-877/57, NGMPP reel no. A 41/3. The concluding colophon reads (according to Goudriaan and Schoterman 1988: 14):

ity evaṁ laghvikāmnāye śrīmatkuvjikāmatottare samastajñānasaṁvodhasarvajñapaṭalāntaraṁ caturviṁśatimasāhasre sārāt sārataraṁ laghvikāmnāyakalpaṁ parisamāptam iti pañca-viṁśatimaḥ || aṣṭapaṁcāśadadhike sate saṁvatsare gate śrīlakṣmīkāmadevasya rājye niṣkaṇṭake

so far.[1] Readings from the Laghvikāmnāya appear in some early manuscript traditions of the KMT. They are also found in some more recent manuscripts which demonstrates that the influence of the Laghvikāmnāya version persisted.[2]

The colophons of the Laghvikāmnāya refer to it as the Kubjikāmatottara. This suggests that it is a 'sequel' - uttara - of the Kubjikāmata. If so, it would be a successive, shortened version of the KMT. However, it is more likely that KMT was an expanded, version of the Laghvikāmnāya. Two important differences between the two versions are notable in this regard. One is that the division of the chapters (paṭala) does not always coincide, which we will examine further ahead. Another is the different names of the deities. In many instances Laghvikā replaces Kubjikā and we find Śaṅkara instead of Bhairava, which appears to be a more primitive usage.[3] Some manuscripts read Laghvikāmnāya instead of Kulālikāmnāya in some of the colophons of the KMT,[4] otherwise the name Laghvikā appears only as a variant in a few manuscripts. However, more traces of what appears to be the older name are found in the ŚM. Bhairava addresses the goddess as Laghvikā or Laghvī in the vocative not less than six times in the ŚM.[5] There Himavat presents his daughter to Bhairava as the youngest - laghvīyasī - of three. Although he goes on to call her 'Sukālinī',[6] this characterization may be an echo of the older name or, indeed, an implied explanation of it. Again, Laghvikā is mentioned once as the 'goddess on the Kula path'[7] and one who repeats a certain mantra 100,000 times becomes the equal of the Lord of Laghvī (Laghvīśa).[8] She is associated with the goddess's Topknot (śikhā)[9] and is also identified with Guhyakālī

---

subhe likhitaṁ suharṣajīvenedaṁ visvakarmaprabhena yat aṣṭādaśaśataṁ granthaṁ śrīmannāma kulāgamaṁ || śrīmatkukārāṁ satanuṁ namāmi || (followed by some formulas)

Note that the scribe who wrote this colophon considered this shorter version of the KMT to be, like the KMT itself, 'the most excellent essence (drawn) from the essence (of the teaching) in the caturviṁśatisāhasra'. This statement supports the view that the KMT considered itself to be a reduction of this text which subsequently gave its name to the MBT.

[1] Goudriaan and Schoterman 1988: 14.

[2] Ibid. p. 31-33.

[3] Ibid. : 30.

[4] These variants are found in the colophons of chapters 9, 10, 13, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 23 and 25 of the KMT. All these chapters are found in both the Laghvikāmnāya and the KMT.

[5] ŚM 11/9a, 11/104a, 20/156a, 180c, 259b, and 21/292b.

[6] ŚM 2/82.

[7] eṣā [k: eṣāṁ] sā [g: sa] laghvikā [k: labdhikā] devī [k: nāsti] kulamārge [g: -mārga] vyavasthitā | ŚM 9/197ab.

[8] akṣarākṣarasantānaṁ yo japel lakṣasaṁkhyayā |
laghvīśaguṇatulyo 'sau [k: labdhīsa; kh g: laghvīsa-; g: -tulyāsau] kartā [g: harttā] hartā [g: karttā] svayaṁprabhuḥ [g: svaya-] | ŚM 9/199cd-200ab.

[9] sarvatattveṣu hṛdayaṁ yatra laghvīśikhākramaḥ |
manasā smṛtamātreṇa khecaratvaṁ prajāyate || Ibid. 11/204.

who, also called Guhyeśvarī, is the dūtī of the goddess's Weapon (astradūtī). She is said to be Laghvikā who has come from the Kulālītantra.[1] The Kulālītantra, which is also called the Laghvikāgama, is where the goddess's Weapon is described.[2] At the same time, all six Dūtīs associated with the goddess's limbs (aṅga) are said to be born from Laghvikā's limbs.[3] Thus she is Kubjikā in all respects and so it is the same whether the Vidyā is said to be Kubjikā's or Laghvikā's Vidyā.[4]

In the KMT we find only a faint trace of these identifications. There Guhyeśvarī, the Dūtī of the goddess's Weapon is never called Laghvikā. Moreover, she is said to come from an independent Tantra called Guhyakālītantra consisting of 125,000 verses.[5] However, the KMT also declares that Kubjikā's Weapon is lauded in the Kulālītantra.[6] The name of this text is clearly reminiscent of the other name of the KMT itself, namely, Kulālikāmnāya. Indeed, it is probable that the KMT is referring here to itself. If so Laghvikāgama is another name for it.

The situation in the ṢSS is closer to the one we find in the KMT. There the god addresses the goddess as Laghvikā only once.[7] Laghvī appears again but in the minor role of a Yoginī in a group of six.[8] A Laghvinītantra is mentioned twice. Once it is said to be the source of teachings concerning Mahantārī that have been kept hidden. Similarly, the second time it is said to be the source of the teachings concerning the Islands that represent the letters. Both these subjects are mentioned in the corresponding places in the KMT.[9] One gets the impression from this data that the Kubjikāmata superseded the earlier Laghvikāmnāya just as the name Kubjikā did Laghvikā.

This possibility is further supported by comparing the layout of the two versions. Schoterman (1990) has examined the differences in the divisions of the chapters in the Laghvikāmnāya with respect to the KMT and has noted the

---

[1] laghvikā yā [k: yās] tu sā [k kh g: yā] dūtī kulālītantranirgatā [kh: kulāli-] |
pāraṁparyakramāmnāyasyopadeśasamanvitā [kh: -yaṁ hyupadeśasamanvitaṁ; g: -yaṁ svupadaśasamanvitaṁ] || Ibid. 13/174.
mahāstradūtikā [k: dūtī] hy eṣā [k: vai] kulālītantranirgatā | Ibid. 13/183ab.
[2] siddhavidyā [g: siddhi-] mahādīptā sarvatantreṣu gopitā |
laghvikāgamasaṁbhūtā supratāpā [kh: supratāpa; g: suprabhāya] guṇojjvalā [kh g: -ṇojvalā] ||
Ibid. 13/183cd-184ab.
[3] etā devi [kh: devī] mahādūtyo laghvikāṅgasamudbhavāḥ || ŚM 13/194cd.
[4] laghvīvidyāṁ samuccārya ajinaṁ saṁpradāpayet || ŚM 20/49cd.
[5] A fragment of this Tantra is possibly preserved in the Kaisar Library in Kathmandu. See Dyczkowski 2004: 222.
[6] kubjikāstrasya māhātmyaṁ kulālītantranirgatam || KMT 10/32cd.
[7] laghvike kavacaṁ likhya ṢSS 13/48c.
[8] ṢSS 19/116 and comm.
[9] gopitaṁ laghvinītantre atra te prakaṭīkṛtam || ṢSS 28/97cd.
*gopitaṁ laghvinītantre atra te prakaṭāmy aham [k: prakaṭā * ] || ṢSS 31/77cd.

missing parts. These are KMT chapters 4, 5, 6, 21, 22, and 24 along with a few smaller passages. The KMT has drawn four of these chapters (viz. 4, 5, 6 and 24) from the Tantrasadbhāva (ch. 3, 6 and 8), while the other extra chapters give one the impression that they are appendices and so their absence in the Laghvikāmnāya suggests that it is the earlier version to which these chapters had not yet been added. Moreover, Schoterman points out that the division of the chapters in the Laghvikāmnāya is more satisfactory than in the KMT which 'may point to a more authentic arrangement of the text'.[1] For these reasons Schoterman is of the opinion that it stands closer to the original, possibly oral, version of the KMT. In short, we may assume that the KMT is a development of the Laghvikāmnāya of which the most striking feature is the incorporation of as many as four chapters of the Tantrasadbhāva. These incorporations and those in the KuKh represent important additions to the basic Kubjikā teachings. This will emerge from the following brief presentation and analysis of the additions and occasional omissions in the two expansions of the KMT namely, the Śrīmatottara and the Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā.

One palmleaf manuscript of a commentary on the KMT has been recovered. It is called simply the Brief Commentary - Laghuṭippaṇaka[2] or Āgamāvatī. The manuscript is dated 505 NS, that is, 1384 CE. It belonged to a

---

[1] Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 6. Focusing on chapters 14 to 16 of the KMT Heilijgers-Seelen (1994: 6-7) supplies an example:

. . . instead of these three chapters the Laghvikāmnāya presents six (i.e. 11-16) which discuss them [i.e. the Five Wheels]: LMT ch. 11 (Devīs = KMT 14/1-60ab), ch. 12 (Dūtīs = KMT 14/62-94), ch. 13 (Mātṛs = KMT 15/1-36), ch. 14 (Yoginīs = KMT 15/38-56), ch. 15 (Yoginīs = KMT 15/58-83) and ch. 16 (Khecarīs = 16/1-109ab). This means that each of the five groups of goddesses has its own chapter, the Yoginīs even have two. [. . .] The text of these six chapters of the LMT agrees almost verbatim with the text of KMT 14-16. There are no verses which do not occur in the KMT, but, conversely, a few verses of the KMT are not found in the LMT, namely, KMT 14/60cd-61ab, 15/37 and 57 and 16/100ab. The first three of these (14/60cd-61ab, 15/37 and 57) belong to those instances where the KMT gives a śloka instead of a colophon as in the LMT. [. . .] these verses - thus probably inserted by the KMT - are rather problematic and some of them seem to be out of place. In view of the context, the omission by the LMT of a line corresponding to KMT 16/100ab should be a mistake.

If this omission is a mistake committed of the redactor of the LMT it suggests the prior existence of the KMT. However, it is also possible that the KMT, written latter, corrects the error of the LMT. The same line is missing in the ṢSS. This may be because the ṢSS is based on a version of the KMT closer to the original LMT in which the required extra line had not yet been added.

[2] Typical colophons are:
iti śrīkubjikāmate caṁdradīpāvatārite laghuṭippaṇake prathamaḥ paṭalaḥ || 1 ||
laghuṭippaṇake caturthaḥ paṭalaḥ || 4 || The following four colophons are the same.
iti śrīkubjikāmate laghu ppaṇike dūtīkalānirddeśo 'ṣṭamaḥ paṭalaḥ || 8 || The following colophons are mostly the same as that of chapter eight except that in a few the diction 'laghuṭippaṇake' is missing.

certain Raghupati Somaśarma who probably copied it.[1] Like the scribe's colophon the content of the manuscript is quite corrupt. The commentary is brief and generally adds little to one's understanding of the text. Further study will reveal if there is any connection between this commentary and the more extensive one on the ṢSS. The Tippaṇi knows about Candrapura and the symbolic connection with the Liṅga in the centre of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala.[2] This indicates that it was written after the shift to Koṅkaṇa took place and the further developments in the symbolism of the central triangle we have discussed in chapter two.

The Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā and the Śrīmatottara

The Śrīmatottara

The ṢSS and the ŚM may be conveniently treated together. Although they each have a distinct character of their own and sometimes diverge from one another, they are both essentially expansions of the KMT and are best treated as parallel texts. Both reproduce virtually all the content of the KMT. The ŚM largely does so literally but also paraphrases the KMT here and there. The ṢSS reproduces the text of the KMT so scrupulously, that the two can be usefully collated word for word.[3] This can also be largely be done with the parts of the text the ŚM has in common with the KMT, although here and there the correspondence between them is looser. Anyway, both are as so closely linked by their common concern to elucidate the KMT that, ideally, the three texts should be read in parallel together. Moreover, the ṢSS has a substantial commentary called Ṣaṭsāhasraṭippanī. Although not free of dubious interpretations and is largely just a prose paraphrase, in some places it is very helpful. Indeed, they could all be edited and published together to produce an edition that benefits from the variants of the two versions of the KMT, the core text, as well the additions each has contributed to it along with the commentaries on the KMT and the ṢSS. The ŚM and the ṢSS often supplement each other. For example, when the KMT refers to a deity, the ŚM regularly adds a description of it, whereas the ṢSS, as if

---

[1] The final colophon reads: śrī - āgamāvatī ca samāptā | saṁvat 505 ākhāḍhavaddhiṭha śrīlabhitakramāyā śrī vaṁlānihmaṁ śrīragupatisomaśarmasya [-śramagra] puṣṭakaṁ |

[2] Commenting on the first verse in the KMT the Ṭippaṇi says: 'Another is the best of teachers'. How (is that)? (He is) in the house (called) Candrapura which is tranquil. It is the Liṅga in the middle, the form of which is the Yoni.
anyad guruvaraṁ [garuvaraṁ] kathaṁ gṛhe caṁdrapure śānte [śante] madhyaliṅge [-niṅge] bhagākṛtau |

[3] This is what has been done to prepare a critical edition of the ṢSS and its commentary. One notable feature of the readings of the manuscripts of the ṢSS is that in several cases they are better than those of the edited text of the KMT.

acting in tandem with the ŚM, contributes its mantras. Although internalisation is a major concern of both texts, the ṢSS tends to be more concerned with this than the ŚM. The treatment of the goddess's myth narrated in the first chapters of the KMT well exemplifies this point. While the ŚM simply adds details and describes the Yantras of the sacred seats, the ṢSS hardly bothers with the myth preferring instead to find interior equivalents within the subtle body and consciousness for these sites.[1]

Although neither the ṢSS nor the ŚM are formally commentaries on the KMT, they can be described in this way. However, while the ṢSS understands itself as a suppliment of the KMT, the ŚM presents itself as an explanation of the KMT. Indeed, it is one that is essential in order to understand the KMT. Accordingly, at the beginning of the ŚM the goddess expresses her need to understand the Śrīmata that has been kept secret and Bhairava has not yet clearly explained:

> And I have not understood the Śrīmata. (Those who try to understand it make) a mistake at each step. O great lord, extremely deep and hidden, I have not understood it. O god, it has been hidden by you and the meaning of what is said (there) is not clear. O god, full of many kinds of (secret) conventions (saṁketa), it is supremely hard to understand. Due to it many forms of coded speech (chomakabhāṣā), its hidden meaning is not understood. Very sacred, you have uttered (the Śrīmata which is) the essence of the Tantras in divine speech. I am not very intelligent, O lord, I cannot know or explain (it). O god, this Śrīmata, the Matottara, has been hidden by you.[2]

The obscurity of the Śrīmata is not just an inbuilt protection from those who are unfit to receive its teachings, its obscurity serves to confuse and confound the wicked who try to misuse it. Thus the god says:

---

[1] The reader may observe the approach of the two texts by comparing the account of the goddess's myth here in the first chapter of volume one of the introduction to Schoterman's edition and translation of the first five chapters of the ṢSS.

[2] śrīmataṁ ca na me jñātaṁ bhrāntir anyaṁ [g: satye] pade pade |
atyantaṁ gahanaṁ gūḍhaṁ na me jñātaṁ mahāprabho ||
gopitaṁ tu tvayā deva sphuṭārthaṁ naiva bhāṣitam |
durbodhaparamaṁ [kh: durvodhaṁ-] deva nānāsaṁketasaṁkulam ||
nānāchomakabhāṣābhir [kh: -bhrāmaka-; g: - bhāṣābhi] gūḍhārtho [kh: -rthaṁ; g: -rtha] naiva budhyate |
tantrasāraṁ mahādivyaṁ divyabhāṣoditaṁ [g: bhāṣeditaṁ] tvayā ||
alpaprajñā tv ahaṁ nātha jñātuṁ vaktuṁ na śakyate |
gopitaṁ [g: gopita] tu tvayā deva śrīmatedaṁ matottaram [kh: matottamaṁ] || ŚM 1/62-65.

> The gods led by Brahmā and others (such as) the great snakes, demons and fierce enemies of the gods (dānava), Siddhas (of inferior traditions) and sages whose austerities have made them proud - they have (all) been deluded by me, O goddess, deceived in the meaning of the Śrīmata.[1]

Like mantras that are protected from being misused have to be 'unlocked' (utkīlita) by modifying them in the prescribed manner, similarly, the meaning of the Śrīmata is elucidated in the Śrīmatottara for those who are fit to understand and apply its teachings. Thus the god continues:

> I have not imparted (this) divine knowledge, the great dawn (of wisdom) which is the essence of the Yoginī's secret (yoginīguhya) that bestows the fruit of worldly benefits and liberation, to anybody. (But) worshipped by you for a thousand divine years with (your) austerity, I am pleased with you, O mistress of the gods, (and so) will tell (you) the Guhyakaula, that is, the Matottara, very divine, that illumines the meaning of the Śrīmata. Free of doubt and clear in meaning, it is the (veritable) destruction of all error.[2]

The formula 'hidden in the Śrīmata and elucidated in the Śrīmatottara' is repeated with reference to various procedures such as a mantra called the Trikhaṇḍāhṛdaya,[3] a particular deposition of mantra onto the body[4] and the definition of six types of mantras.[5] The examples could be multiplied and supplemented by several concrete references the ŚM makes to the Śrīmata as its

---

[1] brahmādyāś ca surā ye ca ye cānye ca mahoragāḥ ||
daityāś ca dānavā ugrāḥ [g: ugrā] siddhā ṛṣitapotkaṭāḥ [g: -tkaṭā] |
bhrāmitās te mayā [g: mahā] devi śrīmatārthe [kh: śrīmatārthaṁ] tu vañcitāḥ [g: vaṁditā] ||
ŚM 1/80cd-81.

[2] na mayā kasyacit khyātaṁ divyajñānaṁ [g: -jñāna] mahodayam | yoginīguhyasadbhāvaṁ bhuktimuktiphalapradam ||
divyavarṣasahasraṁ [kh: divyaṁ-] tu tapasārādhitas tvayā |
tuṣṭo 'haṁ tava [g: tena] deveśi guhyakaulaṁ [k: guhyaṁ kīlaṁ] vadāmy aham ||
*matottaraṁ [kh: manoramya] mahādivyaṁ śrīmatārthaprakāśakam [k: -kā * ; g: -matārthṁ-] |
*niḥsaṁdigdhaṁ [kh: nisaṁ-] sphuṭārthaṁ [g: sphutārthaṁ] ca sarvabhrāntivināśanam [k: - * nāśanaṁ]* || ŚM 1/82-84.

[3] śrīmate ca mayā gopyaṁ trikhaṇḍāhṛdayaṁ param |
asmin matottare devi sugopyaṁ prakaṭīkṛtaṁ [prakaṭāmi te] || ŚM 5/107.

[4] etad [g: eta] devi mayā khyātaṁ nyāsamārgavidhikramam [kh: -vidhiḥ-] |
śrīmate gopitaṁ pūrvaṁ [kh: -rve; g: -rva] tavādya prakaṭīkṛtam || Ibid. 5/304cd-305ab.

[5] Ibid. 8/29cd-30 with reference to KMT 4/41 ff reproduced there.

source. Without understanding the Śrīmata one cannot know the supreme plane of existence but without the ŚM that explains it, all effort to understand it is useless.[1]

Taking the ŚM at its word we would expect the text to limit itself to just the content of the KMT and its 'explanation'. In fact we may indeed take this to be the most original core of the text. We are struck in this core text by the conspicuous omission of those parts of the KMT that are drawn from the Tantrasadbhāva. We have seen that the possibility that there was an earlier version of the KMT that had not incorporated the chapters from the Tantrasadbhāva is supported by the existence of the Laghvikāmnāya which, as we have seen, may well be this version or one of them. It seems likely, therefore, that the core of the ŚM was originally an earlier version of the KMT. The appearance in the ŚM of the name Laghvikā for Kubjikā which became redundant in the later sources, can be taken as further evidence to support this view.

The very many manuscripts of the KMT transcribed in the Kathmandu Valley up to quite recent times is an indication of the large number of initiates there who undertook this task or had it done for them. The many MSs of the Śrīmatottara suggest that it was treated as a related scripture that was copied, and perhaps even studied, along with the KMT. One wonders why the ṢSS was not treated with the same regard. The ṢSS is an excellent text, which is eminently worthy of being copied and transmitted. Moreover, it has the advantage of having a commentary. Perhaps the reason for this lies in the name of the two works. The name of the Śrīmatottara clearly indicates its link to the KMT – the Śrīmata – whereas that of the Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā, obscures it. Indeed, it is possible that the scribe of the most recent devanāgarī MS transcribed the ṢSS and its commentary by mistake thinking it to be the KMT, just as those who photographed it identified it wrongly as the KMT by misreading the colophons. Thus, while just three MSs of the ṢSS have been recovered more than a dozen complete MSs and numerous substantial fragments of the ŚM have been found in the Kathmandu Valley. Moreover, there are, as we shall see, several MSs outside the Valley.

It is surprising that there is only one palmleaf MS of the ŚM. This too, judging from the script, is not amongst the oldest ones. The remaining paper MSs are all relatively recent.[2] However, there is no reason to doubt the antiquity of the

---

[1] śrīmataṁ [kh g: -mate] ye na jānanti na te jānanti tat padam ||
matottaraṁ vinā devi vṛthā jñānapariśramaḥ [k g: -maṁ] | Ibid. 20/165cd-166ab.
śrīmatena vinā jñānaṁ śrīmatena vinā kramam ||
śrīmatena vinā siddhiḥ sarvam etan nirarthakam | 20/168cd-169ab.

[2] Only three MSs are dated one is Kh: iti samvat 2033 *sālakārtīka*16 gate roja 2 mārujusiddhiyo sārane lekhaka gaṇeśabhakta || MS G: samvara 1833 sāla āṣāḍhaṣu?di 5 ro 3 tahine śrī śrī śrīmatottara mahāmaṁthāna prathamapaṭala sampūrṇam ||
MS Ḍ: *śubhaṁ bhūyāt * ? śrīvikramasaṁvat 1718? śrīśāke saṁvat 1918 śrīnepāla saṁvat 981 *sālamiti śrī vaṇa * ? 139 *vidine etaddine idaṁ pastaka likhitaṁ śrīlalitāpuraṁ * * * * * * ?

text, although it was probably completed after the ṢSS. It also post-dates the MBT, or some part of it, as the ŚM (somewhat surprisingly) lists it amongst Tantras inferior to itself.[1] Like the ṢSS, the ŚM does not refer to Koṅkaṇa in the bulk of the text that runs in parallel with the KMT. The ŚM, like the ṢSS, is simply following the KMT that does not do so. Even so, we may take this to be a sign that the main part of the ŚM was redacted before the shift to Koṅkaṇa. As is the case with the ṢSS. The parts of the ŚM that may help us to arrive at a relative date are those that have been added to this core. Apart from the passages inserted in between the text drawn from the KMT, the major additions are chapters or long passages inserted into the text or tacked onto the end of it. They are:

1) A lengthy prose commentary on the Saṁvartāsūtra inserted into chapter one.
2) A short chapter dedicated to Jālandhara inserted between chapter eight and nine. This is found only in the version of the ŚM called Gorakṣasaṁhitā.
3) The Liturgies of the Kramamaṇḍala and Gurumaṇḍalas that constitute chapter 23.[2]
4) The Wheel of the Eighty-one Yoginīs described in chapter 24.

The ŚM opens with a hymn to Bhairava who lives in the fabulous land of Candrapura. It is 'full of many mountains and caves and Siddhas who live in (its) valleys.'[3] It is also, somewhat inconsistently, described as a city 'adorned with golden walls' close to the sea.[4] The ṢSS says that Candrapura is in Koṅkaṇa on the western seaboard.[5] The author of this part of the ŚM may been directly acquainted with the place, although it is quite possible that it was known to him simply as an idealized representation.

The Saṁvartāsūtra follows the hymn to Bhairava. Just as the ṢSS and KuKh begin with an extended version of this sūtra, it is not improbable that the *gopālaka? śrījitānandena śubhaṁ sarabhalaka khagād bhraṣṭavarṇādidoṣo cadi ? bhavati vācā pustakaṁ hastadoṣā || 1 || = 1830 (?) CE.

---

[1] manthānabhairavaṁ tantraṁ haṁsākhyaṁ tantram uttamam || ŚM 1/174cd.

[2] These have been presented in KuKh vol. 6, appendix 9 and intro. vol. 2, appendix 2.

[3] nānāgiriguhākīrṇaṁ siddhāḥ kandaravāsinaḥ || ŚM 1/13cd.

[4] divyaṁ manoharaṁ ramyaṁ śrīmaccandrapuraṁ śubham |
samudrasyopakaṇṭhe [k: -syoyakaṁṭhe] tu hemaprākāramaṇḍitam || ŚM 1/15.

[5] There is a city there called Candrapura (the City of the Moon) with (many) citizens located on the beautiful and extensive shore of the western sea in the auspicious forest of the sea in the great land called Koṅkaṇa.

paścimasya samudrasya tīre ramye suvistare |
koṅkaṇākhye mahādeśe sāgarasya [k kh: -rāya] vane śubhe ||
tatra candrapuraṁ nāma nagaraṁ nāgarair vṛtam | ṢSS 43/27-28ab.

ŚM originally began, as does the KMT, with this, the original, brief one. The Saṁvartāsūtra is the object of a substantial and interesting commentary which circulates in several independent manuscripts and may well have originally been a separate text.[1] The commentary identifies the maṇḍala described in the sūtra with Candrapura that appears again at the end of the text. Reworking a few lines from the KMT where it is said that the house of a person who possesses the KMT becomes a sacred repository of scripture (yogapīṭha) site, the ŚM says that it becomes a veritable Candrapura.[2]

Another addition to the ŚM is chapter 23 which deals with the mantras required to worship the Gurumaṇḍala and the Krama. The lineages of teachers worshipped in the Gurumaṇḍala include those we find in the later sources. Similarly, the Krama taught in the ŚM is well developed. Whereas the KMT presents only one Krama of twenty-eight mantras, as does the ṢSS, in the ŚM we find three Kramas corresponding to three lineages. The Krama of twenty-eight is, as one would expect, that of the elders. The other two, consisting of twenty-seven

---

[1] The commentary begins with the statement:

I will explain the very sacred Matottara which illumines the meaning of the Śrīmata along with ritual (performed) in accord with the rules. O Bhairavī, I will explain the Saṁvartā (sūtra) as I know it. Listen to the first sūtra of the Śrīmata, it will now be explained.

matottaraṁ mahādivyaṁ śrīmatārthaprakāśakam
tam ahaṁ saṁpravakṣyāmi vidhipūrveṇa karmaṇā ||
saṁvartāṁ [kh, ch: samvartā] kathayiṣyāmi yathā jānāmi [kh: jānāsi] bhairavi |
śrīmatasyādisūtraṁ [g: śrīmadasyādi-] tu śrūyatāṁ kathyate 'dhunā || ŚM 1/84-85.

[2] The ŚM says:

O goddess, wherever the venerable Matottara may be in a country, that country is sanctified by it and a town becomes the equal of a sacred seat. O goddess, by the power of the king of Matas, the house (becomes) Candrapura.

śrīmanmatottaraṁ devi deśe yatraiva tiṣṭhati ||
tad [kh: taṁ] deśaṁ bhavate pūtaṁ puraṁ pīṭhasamaṁ bhavet |
gṛhaṁ candrapuraṁ devi matarājaprabhāvataḥ || ŚM 26/230cd-231.

The passage in the KMT from which this one is derived says:

The country in which (the KMT) is (found) enjoys worldly benefits (bhukti), so what to say if it is in the middle of the city and in the house. The city of one in whose heart it abides is like a sacred seat. That is the House and the sacred seat of Yoga and it should be honoured by those who possess the lineage.

yatra vā tiṣṭhate deśe sa deśo bhuktibhāg bhavet ||
kiṁ punaḥ puramadhyasthaṁ gṛhāvasthagataṁ hṛdi |
tiṣṭhate yasya 'sau nāthe puraṁ pīṭhasamaṁ bhavet ||
gṛhaṁ tad yogapīṭhaṁ ca mantavyam anvayānvitaiḥ | KMT 25/192cd-194ab.

and twenty-six mantras, are those of the Youth and the Child, respectively.[1] Again, the worship of Yoginīs taught in the last chapter of the ŚM is more developed than the one in the ṢSS. In addition to the worship of 64 Yoginīs, also described in the ṢSS, the ŚM prescribes the worship of a more developed grouping of 81 (9 x 9) Yoginīs associated with nine Mothers. One would suppose that some time elapsed between the final redaction of the ṢSS and the ŚM for these developments to take place.

Deheja has noticed that this unusual grouping of eighty-one Yoginīs, fits the configuration of the Yoginī temple at Bheraghāṭ in Madhya Pradesh. However, she refrains from identifying the ŚM as the source that inspired the temple because the names of the Yoginīs found there do not coincide with those listed in the ŚM. Even so, it is clear that this unusual grouping of 81 was known, if not popular, in this part of India in the 13th century when the temple was probably built. Could the ŚM have been written about this time? It is hard to say. Parts of it are older than others. Additions were made at the beginning after an initial redaction that began with the short version of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍalasūtra. Again, would it not have been more consistent with its presentation of the Guru and Kramamaṇḍalas to begin with the long version? The presentation of the myth of the goddess narrated in the first chapters follows the one in the KMT fairly closely. It shows few signs of development compared to the elaborate re-working of it in the ṢSS. However, while the core text of the ŚM appears to be older than the ṢSS. The additions were certainly written after the ṢSS, perhaps at a time when Candrapura and Koṅkaṇa had already become just symbolic ciphers.

The Gorakṣasaṁhitā

There are many manuscripts of the ŚM. These can be divided into three groups. The manuscripts of one group contain the straight text of the ŚM. Two or three MSs suppliment the text with the mantras given there in code. The third transmites a version of the ŚM called Gorakṣasaṁhitā. The Gorakṣasaṁhitā differs from the ŚM in only two ways. One is the insertion of a short chapter concerned with the worship of Jālandharanātha after the eighth chapter of the ŚM. The other difference is the colophon at the end of the chapters.

The basic colophon of in the ŚM says: This is chapter X of the Śrīmatottara that has been brought down to earth by Śrīkaṇṭhanātha into the

---

[1] aṣṭāviṁśac ca [kh: -viṁśaṁṅca; g: -viṁśaṁ ca] prathamaṁ saptāviṁśad [k, kh: saptaviṁśaṁ] dvitīyakam |
ṣaḍviṁśat [k: ṣaṭtriṁśaṁ; kh: ṣaṭtriśāt; g: ṣaṭtriṁśa] tritayaṁ [g: titayaṁ] devi [g: devī] kramabhedam udāhṛtam [kh: -bhedā-] || ŚM 23/54.

Vidyāpīṭha[1] and is the secret of the Yoginīs that has come forth from the Island of the Moon.[2] There are three additions that appear occasionally in some or all of the MSs. One is that the secret of the Yoginīs is 'the teaching which is in the womb of the essence of the Śrīmata' (śrīmatasāragarbhanirṇaya). In six colophons out of twenty-five, the ŚM is also called Kulālikāmnāya, Kulālikāmata or Kumārikākhaṇḍa,[3] thus relating it to the KMT. One colophon adds that it is the Śrīcaturviṁśasāhasrasaṁhitā which is a 'collection of the essence (of the teaching)' (sārasamuccaya). Although the ŚM is characterized this way in only one colophon, it is the last one and so is especially significant.[4] The link between the MBT and the ŚM is made only here but may well have been one that was generally accepted as it was by the scribe of one of the MSs whose concluding colophon states that: 'the venerable Śrīmatottara, which is the first chapter of the great Manthāna, is complete'.[5]

Comparison of this format with the one in the MSs of the Gorakṣasaṁhitā is revealing. The colophons at the end of the chapters of the GS are remarkably uniform with virtually no variants. This is may well be because they were all put in the place of the original ones at one time by the person who chose to rename the ŚM and thus appropriate it for the Gorakhanāthis. A typical colophon of the GS reads:

> This is chapter (paṭala) X. It is in the Gorakṣasaṁhitā (which is a part of the scripture of) 70 million billion (verses) (saptakoṭyarbuda) that has come forth from the venerable Mahāmanthāna brought down (to earth) by the energy of Svacchanda, the secret of the Yoginīs which is (the teaching revealed by the) descent of Śrīkaṇṭha into the Vidyāpīṭha and is in the division of the (scripture) come down in nine billion (verses) (navakoṭi) (called) the Kulakaulinīmata, that belongs to the division beginning with KĀ, and is the section (khaṇḍa) called Śrimatottara within the section of (the scripture consisting of) 100,000 (verses).[6]

---

[1] 'vidyāpīṭhe' is missing in the colophons of chapters 9, 10 and 17. It is replaced by 'vidyāpīṭha-mārge' in 18 and 22.

[2] iti śrīmatottare śrīkaṇṭhanāthāvatārite [] vidyāpīṭhe yoginīguhye [] candradvīpavinirgate [. . .] paṭalaḥ | This type of colophon is found at the end of chapters 5, 12-16, 19-21, and 23. There is no colophon at the end of chapter 25.

[3] Concerning 'Kumārikākhaṇḍa' as an alternative name for the KMT, see above, p. 102.

[4] This colophon reads: iti śrīmatottare śrīkaṇṭhanāthāvatārite candradvīpavinirgate yoginīguhye vidyāpīṭhe śrīmatasāragarbhanirṇaye śrīcaturviṁśasāhasrasaṁhitāyāṁ sārasamuccaye

[5] śrīśrīśrīmatottaramahāmanthānaprathamapaṭalaṁ saṁpūrṇam | At the very end of MS G.

[6] iti śrīmahāmanthānavinirgate saptakoṭyarbude svacchandaśaktyāvatārite gorakṣasaṁhitāyāṁ śatasāhasrakhaṇḍāntargate śrīmatottarakhaṇḍe kādibhede kulakaulanīmate navakoṭyavatāra-bhede śrīkaṇṭhanāthāvatāre vidyāpīṭhe yoginīguhye ...

All the basic elements of the colophon of the ŚM have been retained apart from a reference to the Island of the Moon. The original scripture no longer comes from here but from the 'venerable Mahāmanthāna'. This expression appears to be a contraction of the one at the beginning of the long colophons of the MBT and the KuKauM i.e. – 'the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava' (mahāmanthānabhairavayajña) from which the scriptures originate. Other elements of this colophon may well have been drawn from the colophons of the Kulakaulinīmata.[1] The GS is also related to Kulakaulinīmata that has 'come down in nine billion (verses) (navakoṭi)'. However, whereas the colophons of the KuKauM say that the original source extends for 'a hundred koṭis' (śatakoṭipravastīrṇe), here it is seven koṭis of arbudas long. Instead of being a part of the scripture of 24,000 verses, it is the section called Śrīimatottara within the part of that original scripture that consists of 100,000 verses. Svacchandaśakti is another novel appearance. Presumably, she is Kubjikā. She is not mentioned anywhere in the Kubjikā Tantras. As Kubjikā's Bhairava is Navātman who is a form of Svacchanda, this identification makes sense. One wonders nonetheless how well acquainted the author of the colophons was with the Kubjikā cult.

There are only two MSs of the so-called Gorakṣasaṁhitā preserved in Nepal, both of which are incomplete.[2] There are another two fragments preserved in the library of the Maharaja of Benares that were used to make the first edition of the ŚM published as the Gorakṣasaṁhitā.[3] There is one MS deposited in the Man Singh library in the Mehraghar fort at Jodhpur.[4] It was copied in the nineteenth century as are the MSs of other Kubjikā texts kept there. These include as many as twelve manuscripts of a Kubjikāpūjā[5] and two of a Kubjikādevīpaddhati.[6] There is even a Hindi commentary there on some chapters of the ŚM[7] which was probably made by a local pundit about the same time the Sanskrit MSs were copied, probably from Nepalese originals. Kubjikā MSs outside Nepal are very rare. Their presence in the Jodhpur library is very

---

[1] A typical colophon of the KuKauM reads: iti mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe śatakoṭipravistīrṇe anvaye navakoṭyāvatāre śrīkulakaulinīmate śrīkulatantrāvatāre caturviṁśatisahasre tantrābhidhāne.

[2] These are NAK MS no. 1/1268 (13 folios) and NAK MS no. 5/3978 (118 folios).

[3] See bibliography for details and introduction to this edition concerning these manuscripts.

[4] It is called Gorakṣasaṁhitā and is 'part of (antargata) the Manthānabhairavatantra' Jodhpur MSL MS no. 1502/1437, 310 folios.

[5] They are MSL MS no 1351-1363. All of them are listed in the catalogue as being in Devanāgarī script and belonging to the 19th century. They are on average about 30 folios long.

[6] These are MSL MSs no. 1348 and 1349 5 and 9 folios, respectively. They were copied in the 19th century.

[7] It is called Gorakhasaṁhitā and is MS no. 649. The surviving part of the commentary – which is actually hardly more than a Hindi translation - is on chapters 1 to 9, 12 and 13. I am grateful to David White for drawing my attention to the existence of Kubjikā manuscripts in Jodhpur.

surprising. Hopefully future research will reveal how they got there. However, however that may have been, the presence of so many copies of Kubjikā liturgies suggests that Kubjikā was worshipped in Jodhpur at least about the time the MSs were copied. Perhaps it reflects the religious beliefs and interests of Mān Singh, the early 19th century Rathore king of Marwar who was deeply involved with Gorakhnāthi Yogis and whose patron deity was Jālandharanātha, one of the famous Nine Nātha Siddhas of the Gorakhnāthi tradition.[1]

How the ŚM came to be called 'Gorakṣasaṁhitā' is unknown. There is certainly no trace of Gorakṣanātha or his teachings in it. It seems to be more than just a coincidence that the extra chapter added to the ŚM is dedicated to Jālandharanātha who is venerated as the founder of the lineage to which Mān Singh's guru belonged. Is it possible that the ŚM was accepted as scripture by the Nātha tradition in Jodhpur for this reason as well as its name? There is an old Nātha maṭha in the sacred area around Paśupatinātha temple near Kathmandu. It is possible that the short extra chapter and the colophons that converted the ŚM to the Gorakṣasaṁhitā were written there. This would account for the two MSs of the Gorakṣasaṁhitā found in Nepal. It is also possible that the change took place in Jodhpur. We have seen that the form of the colophons can be derived by combining elements from the original colophons of the ŚM with those of the KuKauM, MSs of which were also copied in Jodhpur. So the necessary elements to compile them were also available there.

The Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā

The Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā describes itself as the Kubjikāmata of 6,000 verses that teaches the essence of the Kulakrama, the secret of Kula yogis.[2] The name 'Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā' appears only in the colophons[3] where we also find the name

[1] Mān Singh and his army were besieged by his relative Bhīm Singh in Jalore fort in south-western Rajasthan between the months of July and October 1803. He was about to surrender when Bhīm Singh suddenly died thus allowing Mān Singh to return to Jodhpur and claim the throne in November that year. Mān Singh attributed this dramatic turn of events in his favour to the miraculous intervention of Jālandharanātha in whom he had great faith from his early childhood. Jalore itself, formally called Jālandhara, Jālandharī and Jālīndhar, is built on a mountain identified with this Nātha, who was also called Siddhanātha. Āyas Dev Nāth, the custodian of the site where Jālandharanātha was worshipped, received a message from him for Mān Singh assuring him that if he continued to hold the fort he would become king. Following his victory, Mān Singh, perceiving Āyas Dev Nāth to be Jālandharanātha incarnate, became his disciple. See White 2003: 168-169.

[2] kulamārge tvayā devi pṛcchitaṁ durlabhaṁ bhuvi |
sāraṁ kulakrame [gh: -kramaṁ] sarve [gh: sarvaṁ] gūḍhaṁ tu kulayoginām ||
ṣaṭsāhasre [gh: -sraṁ] tu deveśi kubjikākhye matottame [gh: matetume] |
anākhyeyaṁ tavākhyāmi [gh: tacākhyāmi] na deyaṁ kasyacit tvayā || ṢSS 10/2-3.

[3] a typical colophon reads: iti śrīkulālikāmnāye śrīkubjikāmate śrīdivyoghasadbhāve

'Śrīṣaṭsāhasra Śrīmata'.[1] However, the abbreviated form, 'Ṣaṭsāhasra' appears several times in the body of the text,[2] which also knows itself as the Ṣaṭsāhasramata.[3] The commentary (vyākhyā) also refer to it as the Ṣaṭsāhasra as does the Ṭīkā.[4] The former also calls it the Mūlaṣaṭsāhasra.[5] It considers itself to be the concluding section (khaṇḍa) of the Kubjinīmata said to be the scripture of twenty-four thousand verses.[6] Further on in the ṢSS[7] the same lines appear again but with a significant variant.[8] There we are told that the concluding section of the Kubjinīmata of 24,000 verses is called the siddhakhaṇḍa with which the Ṣaṭsāhasra, 'the most excellent of Matas', is identified.

The earliest manuscript of the ṢSS caused a great stir when it was first discovered in the Nepalese Darbar Library by H.P. Śāstrī in 1898. It is now deposited in the Asiatic Society of Bengal. According to Śāstrī, it was copied in the 7th century and so he believed that it was the oldest existing Tantric manuscript and referred to it as evidence for the early date of the Tantras.[9] However, it has since been established that the MS was not written in late Gupta characters, as Śāstrī believed, but in a form of early śāradā script. This means that it was probably copied in the 12th century CE, or not much later, either in Kashmir or the western Himalayan region where this script was in use at the time.[10] Apart from this MS there are only two others of the ṢSS. One is a palmleaf MS copied, at the latest, in the 15th century and the other is a relatively recent copy in devanāgarī.[11] There are two complete MSs of the commentary and a fragment. The oldest of these is palmleaf that appears to have been copied along with the palmleaf MS of the ṢSS.

Internal evidence for the date of the ṢSS is scanty. ṢSS refers to Koṅkaṇa and Candrapura in chapter 43, which describes the advent of the First Siddha to ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitāyāṁ

---

[1] iti śrīṣaṭsāhasre śrīmate [k: ṣaṣṭhaḥ; kh: ṣaṣṭhamaḥ] paṭalaḥ || The colophons of chapters 7, 8, and 10 are the same.

[2] Two examples are:
sarvatantreṣv idaṁ luptaṁ ṣaṭsāhasre prakāśitaṁ || ṢSS 29/31cd.
uddhāraṁ kathayiṣyāmi ṣaṭsāhasre sphuṭaṁ yathā || Ibid. 31/57cd.

[3] ṣaṭsāhasramate cātra saṁsphuṭaṁ [k kh: sa-] kathitaṁ mayā || Ibid. 28/56cd.
ṣaṭsāhasre mate devi nirbhrāntā [k kh: nibhrāntā] prakaṭīkṛtā || Ibid. 28/108cd.
ṣaṭsāhasramate sāraṁ kubjikāsyā [k kh: -sye] vadasva me | Ibid. 39/7ab;

[4] iti ṣaṭsāhasre saptatriṁśaḥ [kh: -triṁśatimaḥ] paṭalaḥ || Comm. ṢSS

[5] Comm. on ṢSS 6/2.

[6] ṢSS 45/76cd-77.

[7] ṢSS 50/116-117ab.

[8] There the quarter tasyordhvakhaṇḍaṁ yat proktaṁ (45/77a) reads (50/116c): tasyordhve siddhakhaṇḍaṁ tu

[9] See Farquhar 1920: 199ff..

[10] Van Kooy 1977: 881-890.

[11] See Schoterman 1981: 16-20.

Candrapura and how he established the lineages of teachers there. Although we do not find references to these places in the core part of the text that runs parallel to the KMT, we need not assume that this chapter is a late addition. The ṢSS follows the KMT so closely that it may be argued that the absence of such references is simply because they are not found in the KMT. However, this is unlikely. The first chapters of the ṢSS, which are an integral part of the text, are an extensive, creative re-working, of their equivalents in the KMT that elaborate and systematically internalize the goddess's maṇḍala, which is identified with Candrapura. We have seen how the expanded version of the Saṁvartāsūtra at the beginning of the ṢSS exemplifies this development. Candrapura is uniformly projected into the triangular core of the maṇḍala in the earliest sections of the MBT and then into the whole maṇḍala in the later ones. However, while the ṢSS pre-dates the final redaction of the KuKh it probably did not exist when the YKh was being redacted because the lineages of teachers well know to the later literature has not yet developed. Moreover, the way ṢSS refers to the presence of foreigners (mleccha) in India also suggests that it was written after the redaction of the YKh. While the YKh refers only to incursions of invaders in the Punjab,[1] the ṢSS declares that 'the Kṣatrīyas, though broken in battle, will act as if they are [still] powerful'.[2] The progression of events and the concomitant redaction of texts is confirmed by the KuKh, which draws from the ṢSS and so is certainly later. There we read that the 'kingdom of foreigners' (mleccharājya) was already established in the north of India,[3] thus confirming its later date.

Although the additions to the ŚM may well have taken place after the redaction of the ṢSS, the first redaction of the ŚM may precede it. The gloss-like additions to the text of the KMT are in many instances parallel and complimentary. Although this is not uniformly the case, it appears that the redactor of one of the texts had the other in some form before him. There can be hardly any doubt that the ṢSS was redacted before KuKh and the Tīkā that draw from it extensively. We shall discuss whether that is so or not further ahead. Compared to the extensive passages we find in these texts in common with the ṢSS, there are very few in these and related texts sources that are also found in the ŚM. Nor is it at all certain in those few instances whether they are drawn from the ŚM or not.[4]

We find very few references to the Kubjikā cult or passages drawn from the Kubjikā Tantras in other sources. None have been traced of the ŚM. It is very

[1] See above, p. 297-298.
[2] ṢSS 3/79.
[3] paścime tu yuge deva mleccharājye ca uttare | KuKh 69/24cd
[4] Most notable amongst these passages is ŚM 23/41 ff. which describes the form of the Gurumaṇḍala based on the syllable Navātman also found in the KuKh (48/12-14ab).

significant, therefore, that the ṢSS is quoted by Vairocana in his Pratiṣṭhālakṣaṇasārasamuccaya. Vairocana is believed to have lived in the 12th century and so we know that the ṢSS existed then. If it precedes the Kulakaulinīmata, which we shall examine further ahead, then it is was redacted, at the latest in the first half of the 11th century, when the oldest MS of the KuKauM that has come down to us was copied.

Additions in the Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā to the Text of the Kubjikāmata

A detailed study of the additions and reworking in places of the text of the KMT in the ṢSS and ŚM shall have to wait until the critical edition of these texts. Here we limit ourselves to a few, brief remarks on the main ones. Major additions to the KMT in the ṢSS are:

1) Chapter 12, which deals with a series of mantras projected onto twelve parts of the body called Dvādaśāṅga.
2) Chapter 20, which discusses the Kaula consecration (kulābhiṣeka).
3) Chapter 39, which describes how the grid of letters called Vajragahvara should be drawn[1]
4) Chapter 40, which deals with manipulations of the goddess's Vidyā and related syllables (1-28). The rest is dedicated to the Guhyakaula, which is essentially the teaching concerning the worship (pūjā) of the Krama, how the maṇḍala should be drawn for this and the syllables and mantras projected into it. It also includes the magical purposes of worshipping the deities associated with it.
5) Chapter 41, which deals with the rules (samaya) and regime the initiate who worships the Krama should observe.
6) Chapter 42, which deals with Śiva's seven faces, their energies and corresponding Yoginīs and a series of correspondences with Siddhas and the teachers of the earlier Kaula tradition and their projection into Wheels of the body.
7) Chapter 43, which deals with the legends associated with the first Siddha and the formation of his lineages.[2]
8) Chapter 44, which deals with the Sixteen Siddhas and hymns to them.
9) Chapter 45, which deals with the Ṣoḍhāhṛdayaḍāmara mantra, in relation to the application of the Six Yoginīs, this mantra and the mantra of Vaṭuka.
10) Chapter 46, which deals with the Wheel of the Mothers, with a practice for each one in relation to the medicinal herbs that she governs.
11) Chapter 47, which deals with the Krama of Twenty-eight.[1]

---

[1] The drawing of this grid is explained in ṢSS 39/49-95. The main part of the explanation (verses 39/59-91) is edited and commented by Schoterman 1981: 189-197.
[2] Most of this chapter is reproduced in chapter 46 of the KuKh.

The concluding verses of chapter 45 are the same as the concluding verses of the entire ṢSS.[2] These verses praise the ṢSS and admonish that it should be kept hidden from the uninitiated. They are therefore an appropriate conclusion to the entire Tantra. Chapter 48 incorporates a section of chapter 24 of the KMT and chapters 49 and 50, chapter 25 of the KMT. It is possible that chapters 46 and 47 were, in part at least, tacked on latter.

The Manthānabhairavatantra of Twenty-four Thousand Verses and related Tantras

The Kulakaulinīmata

The oldest dated manuscript of the Kulakaulinīmata that has recovered was transcribed in 1179 CE.[3] However, there is another manuscript that is certainly older. It is written on a type of long palmleaf that is not found after the eleventh century in an old form of devanāgarī of which there are only a few other exemplars.[4] The handwriting appears to be that of the scribe of a MS of the TS which was copied in NS 217 (= 1097 CE) during the reign of Harṣadeva (1085-1099 CE).[5] The first manuscript of the KRU was copied during the reign of the same king. The earliest MS of the KMT, which is that of its Laghvikā version, is dated 1038-9 CE. These dates give us a measure of the time of entry of the Kubjikā cult into the Kathmandu Valley, but not, of course, when these texts were redacted.

There are close to 20 manuscripts of the KuKauM preserved in the National Archives in Nepal, out of these, seven are the most complete and the rest fragments varying from a few sheets to over half the text. Thus, apart from the KMT, it is the Kubjikā Tantra which has the greatest number of manuscripts. Moreover, although only five MSs of this Tantra have been located outside the Kathmandu Valley, that is more than any other Kubjikā Tantra. One manuscript in Bengali characters is preserved in the Asiatic Society in Calcutta. It is a copy of a seventeenth century Nepali manuscript that belonged to the mahant of a temple in

---

[1] See KuKh vol. 6, appendix 9.

[2] ṢSS 50/112-118.

[3] Kesar Library MS no. 592. NGMPP reel no. C 55/9. The date is NS 300.

[4] Manthānabhairavatantra NAK no.3-788-139; NGMPP reel no. A 42/7.

[5] Śrītantrasadbhāva NAK MS no. 5-445-185; NGMPP reel no. A 44/2.
Colophon: dviśate samvatsare tite saptadaśasapurataḥ phālguṇasya tu śuklasya uttamesu trayodaśī tārakā pūrvaphālguṇyā śukragraha suśobhane sumurte pujya satkāra siddhihetuvarārthina śrīnepālasya vijayarājye mahān śrīharṣadevarājasu paśupatisthānasajñā govardhanāṅkita. Petech (1958: 142) verified the date as 27 February, 1097.

Bodha Gaya.[1] Two other MSs are deposited in the library of the Mehraghar Fort in Jodhpur. Both are 19th century devanāgarī manuscripts.[2] Another devanāgarī MS is in the Gaṅganātha Jhā Institute in Allahabad.[3]

Although there are a good number of MSs, they are all quite corrupt. This is due in part, no doubt, because of the particularly bad transmission in the Kathmandu Valley.[4] Another more important reason is that they are all derived from just one corrupt original. We can infer that from the fact that all the most complete manuscripts begin in the same place somewhere in the middle of chapter (paṭala) seventy-four and continue serially up to chapter ninety-three. This chapter is probably the final one as it ends, as the early major Kubjikā Tantras do, with an injunction to worship the teacher and the deities along with scripture and a warning to keep it well hidden.

The colophons of the KuKauM are quite simple compared to the long colophons of the MBT and exhibit few variations. The chapters are called *paṭala*s.[5] In this respect the colophons of the KuKauM follow the model of the earliest Kubjikā Tantras. However, they also add a detail we find in the colophons of the MBT, namely, the statement that the Tantra belongs to the tradition of 'the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava'. A typical colophon says:

> This (is a chapter) in the Tantra called Caturviṁśatisahasra, a descent of the Śrīkulatantra, the venerable Kulakaulinīmata, a descent of 90 million (verses) (navakoṭi) within the tradition that extends for a billion (śatakoṭi) (verses) in the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava.[6]

---

[1] The covering sheet of this manuscript records that it was presented to H. P. Śāstri by a certain Rakhal Das Banerji on the 16th November 1913. It is further recorded there that the MS was 'copied from a manuscript belonging to the Mahant of Bodh Gaya dated Nepal Era 761 (+ 879) = 1630 CE. It is written on European paper of foolscap size. It consists of 199 folios with 35 lines on a page. Only one side of the paper is written. The script is Bengali. The manuscript is in good condition. It contains only *paṭala*s 76 to 79. On the covering leaf it is called caturviṁśatisāhasrikāmantrā-bhidhāna.

[2] These are serial number 2825, library accession number 1487 and serial number 2826, library accession number 1488 consisting of 318 and 319 folios, respectively.

[3] Incomplete, the manuscript, written in devanāgarī on paper, is 313 folios long. The catalogue number is 2651 and MS no. is 7105/4003.

[4] NAK MS no. 5/928 Śaivatantra 1009; NGMPP reel no. A 179/6 an example of how easily texts are corrupted by copiests. The scribe of this manuscript boasts in his final colophon that he improved the text of an old MS by comparing it with another MS. The result is the most corrupt of all the MSs.

[5] The number of the chapter is preceded by its name which ends with -varṇano (x 8), -kathana (x 2), 0 (x 5), -vidhi (x 1), -nirṇaya (x 3), -viṣaya (x 1) and then nāma.

[6] iti mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe śatakoṭipramāṇe anvaye navakoṭyāvatāre śrīkulakaulinīmate śrīkulatantrāvatāre caturviṁśatisahasre tantrābhidhāne

By its relation to Bhairava's sacrifice and its very name - Caturviṁśatisahasra - the KuKauM is claiming the identity and status of the MBT.[1] This was accepted quite early on as we know from the scribes of the oldest manuscripts who refers to it in their colophons as the Śrīmatabhaṭṭāraka,[2] that is, the MBT. No reference is made to the mythical, original scripture of ninety million verses in the body of the text or, for that matter, in any other Kubjikā Tantra. A Kaulinīmata does appear in a list of Mata Tantras in the AS however they are labelled as Mata Tantras that should not be considered to be part of the Śāmbhavakula. The Kulatantra (but not Śrīkulatantra) is mentioned in two chapters of the KuKauM that are common with the ṢSS. In one of them a teaching is said to be elucidated in the Ṣaṭṣāhasra. The variant of this line in the KuKauM replaces this proper name with the generic expression 'kulatantra'.[3] The other instance is more complex. Chapters 45 and 50 of the ṢSS conclude with the same lines admonishing that the teachings be kept secret and that one should worship 'this Mata'. In the ṢSS we are told that the Mata is:

The (scripture consisting of) twenty-four thousand (verses) that is called the Kubjinīmata contains in its last section (ūrdhvakhaṇḍa) the disclosure of the profound meaning of the (whole) book. O mistress of the gods, it is said to be the excellent Mata of Six Thousand (verses) (ṣaṭsāhasramata).[4]

The version in the KuKauM substitutes, as one would expect, its own name for the ṢSS:

---

[1] The KuKauM ends with the statement: This is the supreme secret, namely, (the scripture called) Caturviṁśasahasraka.
itīdaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: idānīṁ; kh g: idānī] paramaṁ guhyaṁ [ṅ: pujyaṁ] caturviṁśasahasrakam [kh: caturviṁśat-] | KuKauM 21/117ab

[2] For example the scribe's colophon of NAK MS no. 3-788-139; NGMPP reel no. A 42/7 reads: samāptaṁ śrī || śrīmatabhaṭṭārakaṁ || iti śubham || maṁgalamahāśrī ||

[3] ṢSS 46/71ab says: (Vaṭuka's mantra), concealed in the other Tantras, has been elucidated in the Ṣaṭsāhasra.

gopitaṁ cānyatantreṣu ṣaṭsāhasre sphuṭīkṛtam |

The variant of this line in KuKauM 2/80cd says: (Vaṭuka's mantra), concealed in the other Tantras, has been revealed in the Kulatantra.

gopitaṁ cānyatantreṣu [ṅ: taṁteṣu] kulatantre prakāśitam [ṅ: -taḥ] ||

[4] ṢSS 50/116cd: . . . after that (Kubjinīmata) is the Siddhakhaṇḍa which is . . .
caturviṁśasahasraṁ tu yad uktaṁ kubjinīmatam | tasyordhvakhaṇḍe yat proktaṁ [50/116cd: tasyordhve siddhakhaṇḍaṁ tu]
gūḍhagranthārthabhedanam ||
kathitaṁ caiva deveśi ṣaṭsāhasraṁ [k, kh: -sahasra] matottamam |
ṢSS 45/77-78ab = ṢSS 50/116-7ab.

O goddess, (the scripture consisting of) 125,000 (verses) that is called the Kubjinīmata contains in its last (part) (ūrdhva) the Kulatantra that discloses the profound meaning of the (whole) book. O mistress of the gods, (it is the scripture of) Twenty-four Thousand (Verses) that has been spoken to you.[1]

The name of this text in catalogues is most often Manthānabhairavatantra, but sometimes we also find Caturviṁśatisāhasra, as we do on the covering sheet of some manuscripts. However, although this may well be the actual name of the text, as the colophons themselves say, I have chosen to call it by its alternative name Kulakaulinīmata in order to avoid confusing it with the MBT. The other name, Śrīkulatantra or just Kulatantra, is an epithet, not a proper name. The KuKauM is the Kulatantra, which is called Caturviṁśati-sāhasra. We find several references to the Kulatantra as the source of specific teachings.[2] From these references we may get an idea of the original nucleus of the Kulatantra. For example, repeated references to the Kulatantra as the source of the teachings concerning the worship of the deities of the lunar and solar months - a topic that covers chapter 8 (81) to 12 (85)[3] - suggest this.

If the numbering of the chapters in the colophons is correct this means that about three quarters of the text is missing. What remains is about 6,000 verses long which means that the original may well have been around 24,000 verses long. Thus, the KuKauM may originally have been intend to be what the MBT actually became, that is, the scripture of 24,000 verses to which the KMT refers as

---

[1] lakṣapādādhikaṁ [k: lakṣaṁ-] devi yad uktaṁ kubjinīmatam ||
tasyordhve kulatantraṁ tu gūḍhagranthārthabhedakam |
kathitaṁ tava deveśi caturviṁśasahasrakam || KuKauM 7/270cd-271.

[2] The following are some expamples of references to the Kulatantra or Kulatantraka.
mahāparvāḥ [k g gh: -parva; kh: -parvā] samākhyātāḥ [k g gh: -tā] kathitāḥ [k g gh: -tā] kulatantrake || 1/219ab.
gopitaṁ cānyatantreṣu [ṅ: -taṁ teṣu] kulatantre prakāśitam [ṅ: -taḥ] || 2/81cd.
kulatantraprabhedena [kh: kulataṁtre-] tvaritā tvatprasādataḥ [kh: tatprasādataḥ] | śrutā hi [k, g,gh: ni; kh: ne] parameśāna tripurā vajriṇī tathā || 5/185.
itīdaṁ [gh ṅ: itidaṁ] maṇḍalaṁ [k: maṇḍala] dhyāyaṁ nirdiṣṭaṁ [k: nirdiṣṭhaṁ; g: nirdeśaṁ; ṅ: nirddiṣṭe] kulatantrake | 7/18ab.
*śrutaṁ [gh: śruta] sarvamaśeṣeṇa kulatantrasya nirṇayam [gh: nirṇa (?);] | 8/1ab.
etad [ṅ: etat] gauryāṣṭakaṁ proktaṁ kulatantre [g: kulaṁ tatre] varānane | 8/367ab.
nāmāni te pravakṣyāmi yathā [g: yathāṁ] ca kulatantrake | 10/32ab.

Apart from one important exception right at the end of the text, discussed above there are no more references to the Kulatantra past this point. Nonetheless, it is mentioned as a source in as many as seven out of the nineteen surviving chapters of the KuKauM.

[3] For ease of reference I number the chapters of the extant KuKauM from one onwards. Here I have noted the numbers of the chapters in the colophons in brackets.

its eminent mythical predecessor. However, although the KuKauM implicitly passes itself off as the MBT, several features of the text betray that this is false.

We have seen that sūtras are a cardinal feature of the structures of the MBT. Thus, it conforms to the description in the KMT of its prototype, the scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses, which is said there to be a 'collection of sūtras'.[1] The KuKauM is not divided into sūtras and so when it reproduces the lines in the KMT where there is a reference to them, it alters them so that the scripture which in the KMT is said to be a 'collection of sūtras' is called in the KuKauM the scripture of 125,000 verses.

These lines are part of the conclusion of chapter seven of the KuKauM, most of which is common with the last two chapters, that is, 49 and 50, of the ṢSS. They are an expansion of chapter 25 of the KMT, much of which is drawn from the TS.[2] It is most probable that chapter seven of the KuKauM is drawn from the ṢSS or, if not, certainly from the KMT. This chapter concludes as does the ṢSS with a passage in which the initiate is admonished to worship the Tantra and keep it secret. This is also the way the ŚM ends and so does the KuKauM itself.[3] The ending of the KMT has been lost. This may well have been preserved in a more or less modified form as the conclusion of the ṢSS. Be that as it may, it is well placed in the ṢSS, but makes no sense at the end of chapter seven of the KuKauM. We may surmise, therefore, that the KuKauM has drawn its chapter seven (80) from chapters 49 and 50 of the ṢSS.

The KuKauM refers to the Root Sūtra once from which it says the goddess is born.[4] It also incorporates a sūtra into the first part of the first chapter of the

---

[1] See above, p. 88-89.

[2] KMT 25/1-192 = KuKauM 7/37cd-226ab; KMT 25/29-171 = chapter 14 of the TS. This section, on the Vow of Knowledge ends here in the KMT and is the end of the chapter in the TS. All of chapter 25 of the KMT, is reproduced in the KuKauM.

[3] After explaining how the Tantra should be worshipped and warning that the initiates who fail to do so and transcribe it and hear its commentary will go to hell, the KuKauM ends with the words:

> This secret, the Kaula Āgama, should be kept hidden with effort. By keeping it hidden everything is accomplished. This is true without a doubt. Thus this is the supreme secret, (the scripture of) twenty-four thousand (verses). And this is the Kulatantra that is said to be the (the scripture of) Twenty-four Thousand (Verses).

*idaṁ rahasyaṁ [g: rahasya; ṅ: rahaṁ ] kaulāgamaṁ gopanīyaṁ prayatnataḥ | [kh: ?]
*gopanāt [kh: gopa ? t; g gh ṅ: gopanā] siddhyate [g: siddhe; ṅ: siddhidā] sarvaṁ satyaṁ satyaṁ na saṁśayaḥ [g: śasayaḥ] ||
itīdaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: idānīṁ; kh g: idānī] paramaṁ guhyaṁ [ṅ: pujyaṁ] caturviṁśasahasrakam [kh: caturviṁśat-] | kulatantraṁ [k, gh, ṅ: kule-; k, kh, g, gh, ṅ: -tantre] catuḥ proktam tathā [k, gh: aṣṭā; ṅ: aṣṭhā] viṁśasahasrakam [kh: ?; g: -viṁśaṁ; -] || KuKauM 21/116-117.

[4] By means of the sequence (of letters) beginning with Śrīkaṇṭha (i.e. A), she who is born of the part of the KuKauM that has come down to us. It may well have been one of the sūtras that were linked to the Śrīmata, that is, the MBT, although not found in the version that has come down to us. This sūtra and the rest of this chapter of the KuKauM, which may also have been a sūtra taken from the same source, is a standard presentation of the lineages of Siddhas. The Ṭīkā reproduces the sūtra and comments on it but unfortunately does not tell us its source.[1] Some verses are also found in the AS.[2] Significantly, the only references we find in the part of the KuKauM we have to the Deccan and Koṅkaṇa are in this sūtra where, as usual, they are said to be the home of the Nine and Sixteen Siddhas.[3]

Root Sūtra, is the mother of persistence and destruction.
śrīkaṇṭhādikrameṇa sthitilayajananī mūlasūtrodbhavā sā | KuKauM 21/57c.
[1] The Ṭīkā comments on the following line of the KuKauM:

The fruit that has been perceived correctly in the great sacred seat during a solar eclipse is attained immediately by reflecting on the meaning of the sūtra.

sūryagrahaṇe [k, kh, g, gh: sūyorāge] mahāpīṭhe dṛṣṭvā samyak ca yat [g: ?] phalam ||
tat [g: tataḥ] phalaṁ labhate sadyaḥ [kh gh: sadyo; g: ?] sūtrārthasyaiva [kh: sūtrārdhasyiva] cintanāt [k, kh, gh: cetanāt] |. KuKauM 1/31cd-32ab.

According to the Ṭīkā, the sūtra meant here is the Saṁvartāsūtra, the Mahārṇavasūtra or, generically, any of the other major *sūtra*s. Perhaps the Mahārṇavasūtra is the Root Sūtra as this deals with the Yoni which is 'the Great Ocean'. The Ṭīkā may be mistaken. We know that these lines come at the end of the passage as the Ṭīkā's commentary on it ends here. So it is more probable that the sūtra to which these lines refer is the passage which forms part of the conclusion. Moreover, the next part of this chapter in the KuKauM begins with the goddess saying:

O god, I have heard all the Śrīmata and my Mata.

śrutaṁ deva mayā sarvaṁ [gh: ?] śrīmataṁ ca mataṁ mama || KuKauM 1/37cd.

The Śrīmata probably means the KMT and goddess's Mata is possibly the MBT. If the KuKauM has drawn both the previous sūtra and the following passage that makes up the rest of the chapter from the same source, the goddess is saying that she has heard all the Mata up to there and now wants to hear more. If this is so, we may conclude that all this chapter was drawn from some redaction of the MBT.
[2] KuKauM 1/1-5ab = AS 8/52-56ab.
[3] ṣoḍaśaite mahāsiddhāḥ [kh gh: -siddhā; g: siddhāṁ] koṁkaṇe [k: kuṅkaṇe] hyadhikāriṇaḥ [AS: śrīkoṅkaṇe cādhikāriṇī] | KuKauM 1/5ab.

ṣaṣṭyabdāste [k kh gh: ṣaṣṭyabde te; g: ṣaṣṭhavde te] samākhyātāḥ [kh: savyākhyātāḥ; g: samākhyātaḥ] kalpānte [k kh g: kalpante] dakṣiṇāpathe || KuKauM 1/24cd.
koṅkaṇe [k: kuṁku(?); kh: kuṁjaṇe; g gh: kuṁkaṇe] tu [gh: nu] tridhā [g: vidhā] bhinnaṁ tathaughaṁ [k: tathādyaṁ; kh gh: rathādyaṁ; g: nāthoghaṁ(?)] tu [g: ca] kalau yuge |
tasya te nava putrāśca [g: putrāṁśca] saṁjātāḥ [k kh gh: sañjāta; g: saṁjātā] kalivartake [g: kalicaruke; gh: kalivarttake] || KuKauM 1/45.

We have seen that these Siddhas are not mentioned in the KMT and with the development of the tradition, their identity became progressively more palpably defined. The elaborate presentation of these Siddhas, complete with details of their date and place of birth, caste, and consorts in this chapter is a sign that it was redacted after the first recension of the YKh where these Siddhas still have only an ideal existence. Indeed, this presentation is amongst the most developed we find in the corpus, as such it is the one the author of the Ṭīkā chose for his exposition of the teachers and their lineages. The first part of this chapter is missing in the MSs of the KuKauM. However, from references found in the second part on which the Ṭīkā comments, it is evident that it has also drawn from the first part that has been lost.

Tracing the Kubjikā sources of the KuKauM is very important. Relative chronology can be ascertained to a certain extent by observing the progressive developments that take place in them. However, without some external referent it is normally not possible to establish specific dates. Often the best we have is the date of the earliest manuscript. In the absence of other evidence, this provides an upper limit for the date of both the text itself and those incorporated into it. Thus, it is worth dedicating some time to establishing the priority of our sources. We have seen that chapter seven of the KuKauM probably draws from the ṢSS. Analysis of chapter two supports this view. Although there are several differences in the layout, chapter 2 corresponds to chapters 45 to 47 of the ṢSS. We shall examine them and see what they can tell us about the original source of these passages. In the beginning of chapter two of the KuKauM the goddess says that she wants to know about the common basic Krama (sādhārakrama). This is essentially the Sequence of Twenty-eight of the 'the three excellent lineages' (śreṣṭhauvalitraya). The god responds by listing the six parts of this Krama in the order they will be treated in the second half of chapter two.[1] This is the subject of chapter 47 of the ṢSS, which is entirely dedicated to the Krama. Much of the text is the same, although the sequence of the six parts of the Krama according to the ṢSS is not exactly the same in the KuKauM.

---

[1] Listen, O goddess, I will tell (you) the most excellent Sequence (krama) that is common (sādhārakrama) (sic. sādhāraṇakrama) to all the lineages (āvali). Listen, O beloved, (as I tell it to you) in brief. The Vidyā of the (goddess), the Eldest One (jyeṣṭhā) is part of the lineage of the Eldest. The limbs and faces have come forth from that. The deposition on the hands (has also) come forth from that.

The group of four refers to the (four) sacred seats. Such also is the group of Five Jewels (that comes next). (Then comes) the group of six called (the group of the) Pure Ones (vimala). (Then comes) the group of four called that of the Siddhas. The one called Mahantā is the fifth (group) and the group of four called Sundarī is the sixth. Moreover, there is the group of six goddesses begininng with Ḍā (i.e. Ḍākinī), (then) Vaṭuka and Gaṇeśvara. That sequence, O Great Kālī, beneficial and common to all the three lineages of the Eldest One has been told to you, O lady of firm vows. KuKauM 2/2-8ab.

After these opening lines, the text of the two sources coincide. The god announces the subjects of the first half of this chapter. This corresponds to chapters 45 and 46 of the ṢSS, which may have originally been one chapter of an earlier version of the ṢSS. The subjects are a mantra called Ṣoḍhāhṛdayaḍāmara[1] and the Devyāṣṭaka, that is, the Eight Mothers and their corresponding herbs (auṣadhi) that lend their names to the two chapters in the ṢSS.[2] First comes the extraction, deposition on the body and benefits[3] of the Ṣoḍhāhṛdayaḍāmara, also called amongst other things, Vajrasiṁha, Vajrapañjara and Manthānabhairava. This is followed by the sādhana of this mantra.[4] The mantra of Vaṭukanātha, its extraction and benefits comes next.[5] Chapter 45 ends with a short passage that has somehow been misplaced here.[6] The KuKauM, which omits it, preserves a better version in this respect.

The Octet of Kula, that is, the Eight Mothers described next are worshipped in the form of medicinal herbs. Their curative and magical uses are described.[7] This is followed by the procedure to make a tilaka with the Vajrakubjī Vidyā[8] during a lunar eclipse that brings those who see it under one's control. The chapter concludes with the worship of Vajrakubjeśvarī in association with the Eight Mothers in the form of their herbs in the middle of the Five Wheels of Goddesses, Dūtīs, Mothers, Yoginīs, and Khecarīs.[9] Next the ṢSS describes the seed-syllable mantra used to generate the herbs of the Mothers.[10] The equivalent passage in the KuKauM, which is a few lines longer, presents the same seed-syllable as the ṢSS, namely, HSRAŪAUṀ. In the KuKauM this is repeated twice. In the first four lines the code is the same as the one in the ṢSS, although the exact wording of the lines differs. The following lines in the KuKauM present the

---

[1] This is treated in KuKauM 2/7cd to 2/80 = ṢSS 45/1-73ab.
[2] (This chapter is called) Ṣoḍhāhṛdayaḍāmara and is the forty-fifth. This is the forty-sixth chapter called the division of the venerable group of Eight Mothers.
Chapter two of the KuKauM is called sādhārakramabrāhmyādi - oṣadhī-adhyātmakramavarṇana.
[3] KuKauM 2/8-43ab = ṢSS 45/2-36ab.
[4] KuKauM 2/47cd-64 = ṢSS 45/36cd-54ab.
[5] KuKauM 2/65-80 = ṢSS 45/54cd-70.
[6] Chapter 45 of the ṢSS ends with a passage (the equivalent of ṢSS 45/71-78) concerning the worship of the Mata and keeping it secret. This is repeated at the end chapter 50 of the ṢSS and chapter seven of the KuKauM which is chapters 49 and 50 ṢSS. As such passages normally come at the end of these Kubjikā Tantras, its placement there makes sense whereas it is incongrous and out of context at the end of chapter 45 of the ṢSS.
[7] KuKauM 2/80-124 = ṢSS 46/1-44ab.
[8] KuKauM 2/125-130 = ṢSS 46/44cd-50.
[9] ṢSS 46/49cd-68ab. These Five Wheels are the subject of chapter 14 to 16 of the KMT translated and explained by Heilijgers-Seelen 1992.
[10] The chapters of the ṢSS have been divided here incorrectly. The MSs place the six lines that deal with this seed syllable at the beginning of chapter 47. It is clear from the subject that they belong to the end of chapter 46. Moreover, this is where the commentary places them.

letters of the same seed-syllable as symbols of the gross elements. One wonders whether the version in the KuKauM is an expansion of the one in the ṢSS or if the latter is a contraction of the former. We know something is amiss with the version in the ṢSS because these lines should come at the end of the long passage on the Mothers, as this is the mantra that should be employed to worship them. Instead they are found at the beginning of the next chapter. Moreover, in the KuKauM, unlike the ṢSS, we are told the purpose of the herbs associated with the Mother. Thus in the KuKauM we read:

> Śiva with five faces should be worshipped in the middle of the group of eight (letters of this) mantra. In this way I have explained the (mantra used when making) lustration to the feet (pādyārgha) (of the deities of the) herbs.[1]

It is surprising that this conclusion with this essential information is missing in the ṢSS. Is this because the KuKauM is the original source or is it drawn more accurately from another common source? The same question arises if we analyse the second half of this chapter, which corresponds to chapter 47 of the ṢSS, in the same way. This is dedicated to an explanation of where and how the twenty-eight component deities, divided into six groups (ṣaṭprakāra), of the Sequence of Twenty-eight (aṣṭāviṁśatikrama) are present in the body. This is an important topic because 'the fettered soul (paśu) worships the body but, deluded, does not know (what the body really is).'[2] The ṢSS itself tells us that the purpose of its own exposition of the Krama is to present its inner equivalent within the body, as the external one had already been revealed. The goddess wants to know from Bhairava the inner Krama (adhyātmakramasantati). He responds saying:

> I will tell (you) the great secret I have not told anybody, that is, about the sixfold (Krama) (ṣaṭprakāra) in the body and how it pervades (it). I have talked about the internal and the external Krama before. O mistress of the gods, those low people who do not know it damage themselves (by their ignorance). Having taught the external Krama found in the texts (pustakastha), they feel proud and are mislead here (in this subject) by the guardians of Kula (doctrine) and so, feeling shame, they do not inquire about the

[1] mantrāṣṭakasya [gh: ?; ṅ: mantrāṣṭasya] madhye [kh: madhya; gh: ?] tu pūjyaṁ [g: pūjyāṁ; gh: ?; ṅ: puṣpaṁ] pañcānanaṁ śivam ||
auṣadhīnāṁ tu pādyārghyaṁ [kh: usadhīnāmupāṁdyarghaṁ; oṣadhīnāmupādyarthaṁ; gh: ?] tathā ca kathitaṁ mayā | KuKauM 2/153cd-154ab.

[2] śarīraṁ pūjayet [k, kh: -yat] paśur [k, kh: pāsu] na jānāti [k, kh: jānanti] vimohitaḥ [k, kh: -tāḥ] | ṢSS 47/10ab.

> teaching concerning the inner Krama (adhyātmasthakrama). [. . .] Therefore one who has devotion, and not those who do not, should make every effort to know the Krama both internally and externally.[1]

Thus the ṢSS is telling us quite clearly that a version of the Krama worshipped externally had already been described in an earlier text. However, such statements commonly cover up the introduction of new material. In order to see whether this is the case here or not, let us examine the two versions. The text of the ṢSS is fairly correct and each of the six sections that deal with the six groups are neatly labelled separately, whereas the text of the KuKauM here is, as it is in general, badly corrupt. The contents of the two versions are basically the same, despite, in places, substantial variants and the omission or addition of a few lines here and there. The most significant and surprising divergence between the two versions is that the order in which the six groups are presented differs, as do their names in some cases. There are several versions of the Sequence of Twenty-Eight.[2] The extent and sequence of the groups generally follows the order laid down by the opening verses of the KMT, namely, 4-5-6-4-5-4. We find, however, that the contents of these groups varies in different sources. It is, therefore not possible to say which of the two versions is 'correct'. Essentially, apart from changes in details, what has happened is that the passages concerning the first and second groups of five, that is, the mantras called the Five Jewels and the Pure Five, have exchanged places.[3] The question is whether this change was made in

---

[1] kathyāmi mahāguhyaṁ yanna kasya udīritam [k, kh: tū-] ǀ ṣaṭprakāraṁ ca dehasthaṁ yathā vyāpya [k, kh: vyāpti] vyavasthitam ǁ mayā pūrvaiva coktaṁ hi sabāhyābhyantaraṁ kramam ǀ ye na jānanti [k, kh: -nāti] deveśi svayaṁ [k, kh: tuṣān] khaṇḍanti [k, kh: ka-] te 'dhamāḥ ǁ bāhyaṁ [kh: -hye] yat [k: kāropyantu] pustakasthaṁ tu śikṣitvā kramasantatim ǀ darpitās te bhavant iha bhrāmitāḥ kulapālakaiḥ ǁ lajjayā naiva pṛcchanti adhyātmasthakramānvayam [k, kh: - tmakramamasyayaḥ] ǀ [. . .] tasmāt sarvaprayatnena sabāhyābhyantaraṁ [k: sarvāhyā-; kh: savavāhyā-] kramam ǀ jñātavyaṁ bhaktiyuktena nānyaiś ca [k, kh: -nyaiva] bhaktivarjitaiḥ ǁ ṢSS 47/2-5ab, 9.

[2] See KuKh vol. 3 appendix 8. The layout and contents of chapter 47 of ṢSS is presented ibid. in appendix 9.

[3] We may tabulate the order of presentation of the six groups in the KuKauM and ṢSS as follows:

3. Table of the Six Parts of the Common Krama

KuKauM	ṢSS
Four sacred seats (pīṭhacatuṣka)	Four sacred seats (pīṭhacatuṣka)
Five Jewels (ratnapañcaka)	The Pure Five (vimalapañcaka) also called The Five Elders (vṛddhapañcaka)
Six Pure Ones (vimalaṣaṭka)	The Sextet of Grace (nugrahaṣaṭka)
Four Siddhas (siddhacatuṣka)	The Four Siddhas (siddhacatuṣka)

the redaction of the ṢSS or the KuKauM. A third possibility is that the KuKauM and the ṢSS drew from a common source.

It seems unlikely that the version in the KuKauM was drawn from the ṢSS and the order was corrupted in the transition. If this occured, it would have been the result of an error committed by the redactor, rather than a mistake on the part of a scribe. If this is the case we would then have to postulate that he tried to justify this mistake by composing the verses noted above with which chapter two of the KuKauM begins. Moreover, he also chose to diminish the content of the descriptions of some of the groups.[1] This seems unlikely. Moreover, it is quite reasonable to suppose that the redactor of the ṢSS, thinking that the first group of five was misplaced, substituted it with the second group of five. Indeed, when the Five Jewels are part of a Krama, they are normally the penultimate group.[2] Again, the version in the KuKauM relates each of the five mantras to a corresponding world, in accord with what the mantras themselves say about the residence of the Yoginīs to which they refer. In the ṢSS they correspond to five Wheels within the body. These parallelism are in accord with the purpose of the ṢSS's exposition,[3]

The Five Mahantās (mahantāpañcaka) also called the Pure Five	The Five Jewels (ratnapañcaka)
The Four Beautiful Women (sundarīcatuṣka)	The Four Mothers (ambācatuṣka)

The ṢSS begins with the first group of four sacred seats as does the KuKauM. The ṢSS continues with the Pure Five, also called the Five Elders. The Five Jewels, which is the fifth of the six groups in the ṢSS, appears in the KuKauM in its place. The. SSS continues with the group of Five Pure Ones (vimalapañcaka), which the KuKauM places after the Four Siddhas, the fourth of the six groups in the KuKauM. Then comes the group of six chastisements (nugrahaṣaṭka), called the Six Pure Ones (vimalaṣaṭka) in the KuKauM. The six Yoginīs in this group punish the wicked in different ways according to the particular vice each one governs. The Yoginīs are not named in the KuKauM, only labelled 'first', 'second' and so on. In the ṢSS each one is given a name ending in avvā. The four Siddhas who reside in the main sacred seats are discussed next in both versions, a few lines found in the ṢSS are missing in the KuKauM which has a couple of extra lines not found in the ṢSS. After the group of Four Siddhas the KuKauM continues with the Five Pure Ones whereas the Five Jewels follow in the ṢSS. Then both sources conclude their exposition of the Sequence of Twenty-eight with a group of four goddesses. These are called the Old Women (vṛddhācatuṣka) or the Mothers (ambā) in the ṢSS, whereas the KuKauM calls them the Beautiful Women (sundarī). Here too the text in the KuKauM is very corrupt and there are several lines missing that are found in the ṢSS.

[1] See previous note.

[2] This is what we find, for example, in chapters 29 to 34 YKh (1) that have been reproduced in chapters 59 to 64 of the KuKh.

[3] We may take the variants in the verse that describes the first Jewel, which is that of the Sky (gagana), as exemplary of the others. It is quite clear that one of the two versions is a consciously modified version of the other. The KuKauM reads:

there would be no reason to alter the text from the one in the ṢSS to the one in the KuKauM. Indeed, it would make more sense if the redactor of the ṢSS altered it to make it consistant with the purpose of the entire exposition.

After the six groups of the Krama, the text in both versions continues with the other subsidiary groups and returns to being practically the same. However, here we find that the version in the KuKauM omits about fifty verses found in the ṢSS. The break in the text of the KuKauM is evident, although an attempt has been made to cover it up. This discrepancy may well be the result of a faulty manuscript of the source the redactor used to construct the text of the KuKauM.[1]

O goddess, the house of the Sky is the abode which is the most excellent support. O fair lady, the abode is (called) Illumined by the Skin and is said to be in the world of heaven.

gaganasya gṛhaṁ [g: gṛhe] devi puraṁ [kh: gura] caiva [kh: vaiva] varāśrayam ||
tvagdīptaṁ [k kh: tvadīptaṁ] tu puraṁ bhadre svargaloke [g: svavaloke; ṅ: svalokeṣu] prakīrtitam | KuKauM 2/150cd-151ab.

O goddess, the abode of the Sky is the abode which is the support of phenomenal existence. O fair lady, the abode is (called) Illumined by the Skin and is said to be the (Wheel called) Self-sustained.

ādhārasya puraṁ devi puraṁ [k: paraṁ] caiva bhavāśrayam |
tvagdīptaṁ tu puraṁ bhadre svādhiṣṭhānaṁ [k kh: sā-] prakīrtitam || ṢSS 47/55.

[1] KuKauM breaks off after the equivalent of ṢSS 47/91ab to resume again at ṢSS 47/137c. The break comes just after the first line of a passage concerning Gaṇeśa. He is the last of a series of deities projected into the body. A break after the verse dealing with him would be understandable but at this place in the text it is clearly haphazard and unintentional.

A long passage in the ṢSS comes next. It deals with the inner symbolism of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala, the Island of the Moon. The other sacred sites in which the goddess resides are homologized with 'inner' places. The ṢSS (47/135cd) concludes saying: O goddess, all this Krama is in the town within the body (etat sarvaṁ kramaṁ devi dehasthapuramadhyagam [k kh: dehasthaṁ-]). Two lines further ahead a new subject begins. The vital breaths are equated with the goddess's faces first. This is missing in the KuKauM. Then the texts of both continue together enumerating the equivalences between the vital channels (nāḍī) in the body and the goddess's limbs.

Clearly, a drop out has taken place in the KuKauM. Moreover, the redactor has tried to cover it up by shifting down the diction 'etat sarvaṁ kramaṁ devi' from the lines that conclude the previous passage which is missing in the KuKauM. The ṢSS reads (the parts common to both texts are highlighted in bold):

etat sarvaṁ kramaṁ devi dehasthapuramadhyagam [k kh: dehasthaṁ-] | *yo na jānāti tattvena nāsau [k: * śo; kh: * so] cānvayikaḥ smṛtaḥ* ||
prāṇaṁ devi ūrdhvavaktraṁ tu apānaṁ tacca pūrvakam |
samānasaṁjñakaṁ [kh: samānaṁ-] vāmaṁ udānākhyaṁ tu dakṣiṇe || vyānākhyaṁ paścimaṁ devi netrāṇy eṣām ataḥ śṛṇu | ṢSS 47/132-134ab.

Despite the care with which the redactor has disguised his source, he forgets to make an alteration towards the end of this chapter where we are told that the source of one of the subjects discussed, and hence presumably also the others, is the Śrīmata. The same line is found in the ṢSS. This Śrīmata, may well be the common source for both texts. Moreover, it may well also be the source of the first chapter of what remains of the KuKauM.[1]

The previous chapter of the KuKauM dealt with the lineages of teachers. We shall see that the Ṭīkā comments on this chapter and attributes it to the Bṛhadāgama. This may be the third common source or, more probably, the KuKauM itself. Let us take a closer look at the verses with which the KuKauM introduces its exposition. The goddess begins by saying that she has heard about the lineages of teachers (gurupaṅktikrama) and that she now wants to know about the Krama which is common to the Kramas (sādhārakrama).[2] Most specifically, it is the common Krama of the three Kramas of the Lineage of the Elders.[3] This statement is very significant. The KMT presents only one Krama. Even though three lineages are beginning to emerge, they do not have Kramas of their own.

These lines are reduced in the KuKauM (2/223ab) to:

etat sarvaṁ [k kh: sarva; g: sarvva] kramaṁ devi netrāṇy etāny ataḥ [k: -tāmadhaḥ; kh: -nāmataḥ; g: netrāṇyetāmataḥ; gh: ?; ṅ: netrāraṇye ca tāmataḥ] śṛṇu [gh: ?] ।

These differences may be explained if we assume that some folios were missing from the manuscript of the source the redactor of the KuKauM used to construct his text and the first few lines of the folio he did have were unclear. The redactor could read etat sarvaṁ kramaṁ devi and so he simply placed it at the beginning of the first line he could read in the MS of his source. This somehow patched up the loss.

[1] ṣaḍadhvayajanaṁ [k kh: -jananaṁ] devi śrīmate saṁprakīrtitam ॥ ṢSS 47/143cd = KuKauM 2/232ab. The same 'signature' has been left behind in chapter one where we read:
śrutaṁ deva mayā sarvaṁ [gh: ?] śrīmataṁ ca mataṁ mama ॥ KuKauM 1/37cd.

In chapter 7 which is drawn from chapters 49 and 50 of the ṢSS which are expansions of chapter 25 of the KMT, the Śrīmata in the following reference is clearly the KMT:

*śrīmataṁ [all MSs: te] ye na vindanti [ṅ: * * ti] teṣāṁ bhrānti pade pade [ṅ: +pade]* । KuKauM 7/88ab = KMT 25/25cd.

[2] The form 'sādhāra-' commonly replaces 'sādhāraṇa-' in the Sanskrit of these texts. The correct form is found in the following line confirming that this is the intended.
sarvasādhāraṇaṁ nātha kramaṁ [ṅ: cakraṁ] caiva śubhocitam [g: śubhoditaṁ; gh: ?; ṅ: sūvoditaṁ] ॥ KuKauM 2/7cd.

[3] O Mahākālā, that Krama, which is common to all, is beneficial. O lady of good vows, I have told you the Krama of the three (forms of the) Lineage of the Elders.

etat kramaṁ [k, kh, g, gh, ṅ, c, ch: krama] mahākāle sarvasādhāraṇaṁ hitam ॥ jyeṣṭhāvalitrayasyaiva [k: śreṣṭhovalitrayasyaiva; kh: ṣaṣṭhāvaliṁ trayaṁsyaiva; g, gh, ṅ: jyeṣṭhāvalitrayasyaiva] kathitaṁ tava [kh, ṅ: ca] suvrate [ṅ: śubhavrate] । Ibid. 2/6cd-7ab.

The same is the case in the ṢSS. However, we know from the Ṭīkā that the Bṛhadāgama taught a series of Kramas arranged in groups of three associated with the three lineages.[1] Thus, if the Bṛhadāgama is the KuKauM, which is quite possible, it is likely that the source of the ṢSS is the KuKauM. Otherwise, the common source of both is probably the Bṛhadāgama

Tantras commonly appropriate material from other Tantras, even those of different schools. The Kubjikā Tantras are no exception. The KMT draws extensively from the TS, as do later Kubjikā Tantras, including the KuKh.[2] The Svacchandabhairava is another important external source. The Kubjikā Tantras also draw from one another. The extent to which they do this varies. While the YKh and SKh draws nothing from outside, approximately half the text of the KuKh is imported, mostly from other sections of the MBT. The marked degree to which the KuKauM, or, at least, what has remained of it, draws from sources other than Kubjikā Tantras is one of its most striking features.

What we have of the KuKauM is built up of sections, some running into several chapters that can be read independently. Some of these can be traced virtually in their entirety to other extant sources. We have noted that chapter one (74) is a sūtra which presents the lineages of teachers and that it could have been drawn from a redaction of the MBT. Chapter two (75) of the KuKauM is probably drawn from the Śrīmata which is the common source of chapters 45 to 47 of the ṢSS. Chapter seven (80) is common with chapters 49 and 50 of the ṢSS, which are an expansion of chapter twenty-five of the KMT. Chapters two and three of the Svacchandatantra constitute chapter thirteen of the KuKauM. Chapters nine and thirteen to fifteen of the SvT are chapter fourteen (86) of the KuKauM. The visualization of Svacchandabhairava at the beginning of chapter fourteen is drawn from chapter nine of the SvT. Chapter fifteen (87) concerns the meeting of Siddhas and Yoginīs on Śiva's Night in Karavīra. Most of it is drawn from the Kramasadbhāva, which is a major authority for the Kashmiri Kālīkrama.[3]

---

[1] KuKh vol. 3, appendix 8.

[2] Just a glance at the concordance in vol. 14 is sufficient to see to what a large extent the KuKh has drawn from other sources.

[3] Śitikaṇṭha refers to the Kramasadbhāva as his authority as follows: atha mahaugho gurukramaḥ, sa ca vṛndakramaḥ kramasadbhāve hi savistaram upadiṣṭaḥ MP (1) p. 86.

Only one, incomplete MS of the Kramasadbhāva has been recovered. This is NAK MS 1-76 Śaivatantra 144 reel no. A 209/23 The beginning and the end are missing. It breaks off in the middle of the seventh chapter (paṭala). The thirteen odd verses there that begin with the following one correspond to 15/59 ff. of the KuKauM.

śrīmadduttaradigbhāge pīṭhaṁ pīṭhavaraṁ mahat |
oḍḍiyānābhidhānante siddhiyoginisevitam || KS 7/4 ||

Apart from these chapters, whose sources have been identified, we may surmise from the absence of any reference in them to Kubjikā that most of the others are drawn from unidentified external sources. This is the case with chapters three to five that deal with the worship of Tvaritā, Nityā and Tripurabhairavī, respectively. These are largely concerned with magical rites. We have seen that Tvaritā governs snakes and is related to Kubjikā in other Kubjikā sources. This would have been known to the initiate into Kubjikā's cult but the Tantra makes no explicit reference to Kubjikā. Nityā (who is also called Durgā) is linked to love, control and seduction and is associated with Kāmeśvari.[1] This, the Tantra proclaims, is 'the essence of the Nityā Tantra',[2] which may have been the source of this chapter.

Chapter five (78) is called the Yoga of Tripurā and the Hymn to Mahāmāyā which is the Oneness of Śiva and Śakti'.[3] Most of it is dedicated to the worship of Tripurabhairavī, whom we have already had occasion to discuss.[4] Vidyānanda, integrating the worship of Tripurā as Śrīvidyā with her prototype, Tripurabhairavī, quotes the Uttaraṣaṭka in his commentary, the Artharatnāvalī on the NṢA in four places. All four references have been traced in this chapter of the KuKauM. Although all the verses quoted by Vidyānanda from the UṢ can be traced in this chapter of the KuKauM and in the printed edition of the UṢ, the latter does not coincide with the former. Moreover, quotations from the UṢ found in other places cannot be traced in the KuKauM.[5] It is quite possible that the author of the UṢ knew the Kubjikā tradition, even so the UṢ is not a Kubjikā text. At the beginning of this chapter of the KuKauM, Bhairava says that he has already heard about the fire sacrifice offered to Tripurā and now wants to know about her worship (ārādhana). Thus seems it that this chapter was part of a Tantra and not of an independent text as is the published UṢ. The latter is a short, dense tract concerned with Kaula Yoga, which may also have drawn from this common source.

Most of the rest of the chapter is dedicated to the external and internal worship (referred to in the text as the Yoga) of Tripurabhairavī. We have seen that her worship is also prescribed in the MBT, implying her association with Kubjikā, but here, as there, Kubjikā is not mentioned at all. The passage ends with an

---

The subject matter of chapter 15 of the KuKauM is consonant with that of the KS. So there is little reason to doubt that most of it was drawn from it.

[1] Concerning Nityā, see intro. vol. 2, p. 226 ff..

[2] KuKauM 7/199.

[3] tripurayogaśivaśaktisamarasatvamahāmāyāstava

[4] See intro. vol. 2, p. 216 ff..

[5] Dviveda refers in his intro. to the NṢA (p. 32) to a verse of the UṢ quoted by Amṛtānanda in his Dīpikā on the YHṛ, which is said to be the first one in the UṢ. However, this is not the first verse of chapter five of the KuKauM, nor can it be traced anywhere in it.

admonition to secrecy[1] indicating that this may have been where this chapter ended in an earlier recension. The name of this chapter, which is also divided in two parts, confirms that the redactor intended a break here.

The second half of this chapter begins by declaring that Kubjikā is the goddess worshipped in all the traditions with various names.[2] Clearly the purpose of making this statement here is to integrate the teachings concerning Tripurabhairavī with those of the Kubjikā cult and, more concretely, to connect the previous half of the chapter to the Hymn to Mahāmāyā, which is drawn from the KMT and with which this chapter ends.[3] Chapter six (79) that follows is called 'the Procedure for the Presentation of the Sacred Thread' (pavitrārohaṇavidhi) and deals with the preparation and time for the offering of a sacred thread to the deity by Kaula yogis (kulaja). The same topic follows after the Hymn to Mahāmāyā and concludes chapter 24 of the KMT. Moreover, here it is framed by verses common to the KMT.[4] The text of the KMT contains nothing that relates directly to Kubjikā and her cult. Nor does the version based on it that constitutes chapter forty-eight of the ṢSS. Surprisingly, this is not the case with the version here, which relates the number of strands of the thread to the parts of the Krama of Twenty-eight parts and explains how it is offered to Kubjikā and her consort. Possibly the KMT drew this rite from another Tantra, not related to the goddess Kubjikā whereas the redactor of this chapter of the KuKauM drew the frame from the KMT and filled it out with other details, perhaps drawn from yet another source, and adapted it to the Kubjikā cult.

Chapter eight (81) to eleven (84) are dedicated to rites performed on the fifteen lunar days and twelve solar months. We are repeatedly told throughout the presentation that this is the teaching of the Kulatantra and so these chapters may have been part of the original redaction of the KuKauM. Kubjikā's appearance amongst the goddesses worshipped in these chapters is only incidental. She is worshipped on the third lunar day as Mahāgaurī surrounded by eight aspects related to Kubjikā. Kubjīśakti and Kujeśvara are worshipped on the seventh day.

Chapter sixteen (88) is called 'the Teaching concerning the Wheel of the Great Bhairava' (mahābhairavacakranirṇaya). This chapter is dedicated to the worship of Kuleśvara according to the 'Sequence of the Void'

---

[1] KuKauM 5/182ab.

[2] KuKauM 5/182cd-188.

[3] KuKauM 5/189-217ab = KMT 24/114-141. In the KMT this hymn is called, as it is here, the Śivaśaktisamarasamahāmāyāstava. There are several hymns addressed to Kubjikā as Mahāmāyā in the Kubjikā corpus, including one in chapter twenty-six of our text, to which the reader is referred (see KuKh 26/57 ff.). See intro. vol. 2, p. 21 ff. for a translation of this Mahāmāyāstava.

[4] KuKauM 6/1-10 = KMT 24/142-151ab; KuKauM 6/17ab = KMT 24/152cd; KuKauM 6/85-87 = KMT 24/163cd-166ab; KuKauM 6/99cd-101 = KMT 24/166cd-168; KuKauM 6/108cd-9ab = KMT 24/171cd with which this chapter of the KMT ends as does chapter 6 of the KuKauM.

(śūnyabhūtakrama). The chapter opens with a hymn to him – the Lord of the great Void beyond the Void. In his undifferentiated (niṣkala), transcendental aspect he is the Void that marks the end of all duality. He is Śiva with matted hair and has five faces. These and other aspects surround him, the Lord of the Wheels, in the form of eighteen Wheels (cakra) and their deities, the description of which take up all this chapter.[1] Nothing in this chapter relates to Kubjikā. This is the case with most of the remaining chapters.

Chapter seventeen (89) is called 'a Description of the Installation Rites of an Idol, Liṅga and (Śiva's) Bull and the Installations that take place in Association with the Renovation (of a temple) beginning with the Installation of (a representation of the teacher's) Feet (pāda) and ending with that of a Ceremonial Flag.'[2] It begins with a hundred and eight names of Bhairava.[3] It continues with the matters mentioned in the name of this chapter, none of which are related to Kubjikā. The following chapter (18 (90)) is called 'a Hundred Methods (to realise) the Power of the Inner Self (adhyātmaśaktiśatayukti).' The next two (19-20 (91-92)) are both called 'the Conclusion of the Teaching' (upadeśanirṇaya). They expound what one could call 'non-sectarian Yoga'. We find here the usual themes – presentations of the transcendental emptiness of the Absolute beyond phenomenal being, merger, ascensions and descents, abstract Yoga of the Divine Current that moves through yogic states and their attainment through inner yogic practice, moral discipline and elevated visions of absolute reality, the world, and the inner Self. No specific deities are mentioned, instead we find generic references to Bhairava or Kuleśvara and his consort or, more often, just energies of Speech, consciousness and the vital breath. We are reminded of the KJN that represents an early form of independent non-sectarian Kaulism of which the deity is similarly nondescript. This feature is apparent in various ways. The deity of the main maṇḍala worshipped along with the specific ones for each of the main lunar days described in chapter eight to twelve is Kuleśvara - the Lord of Kula. Accordingly, the text refers to itself repeatedly in these chapters simply as the Kulatantra, without association to any particular school.

The last chapter[4] begins with verses praising Vṛkṣanātha, the First Siddha that are also found in the CMSS, from which they were probably drawn. They introduce a short initial part of this chapter dedicated to a eulogy of the First Teacher and the Siddhas, which is in line with the Kubjikā sources. However, most of this chapter is dedicated to a long hymn addressed first to Rudraśakti,

---

[1] KuKauM 16/1-313ab.

[2] pādapratiṣṭhādidhvajapratiṣṭhāntajīrṇoddhāravṛṣabhapratimāliṅgapratiṣṭhādikavarṇana

[3] KuKauM 17/1-13.

[4] This is chapter 21 (93) which is called 'a Description of Salutations and Blessings' (namaskārāśīrvādavarṇana).

then the Eight Mothers and the Six Yoginīs. As Kuṇḍalinī and Śakti in general, Rudraśakti shares many generic features with Kubjikā but she is not directly identified with her anywhere in this hymn, although Kubjikā is commonly portrayed as Rudraśakti.[1]

We may conclude with the following observations. As one surveys the contents of this extensive and richly varied text one wonders to what degree it was part of the Kubjikā tradition when it was originally redacted. The chapters relating to Kubjikā and her cult are probably not original. Several chapters are totally devoid of any references to Kubjikā or her cult. Moreover, we observe that, generally, the KuKauM is not concerned with any of the major, specific doctrines of the Kubjikā Tantras. Thus, for example, it hardly mentions the goddess's Triangle with its sacred seats. Nor do we find any references to the Command except in chapter two which is anyway drawn from a Kubjikā source.

We have seen that some chapters that are largely drawn from other sources, do also draw from Kubjikā sources. These imports generally function as a kind of cement that serves to bind elements together that are either generic or drawn from other schools and relate them to the Kubjikā tradition to which the KuKauM, at least in its final form, certainly did consider itself to be a part. This is clear from the form of the colphons and its concluding verses. Nonetheless, one cannot escape the impression that this is the result of its appropriation by Kubjikā sources at some stage of its development that were grafted, onto an original core. This may have been the Kulatantra. This the colophons refer to as another name of the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses, and alter it to Śrīkulatantra, thereby implicitly relating it to the Kubjikā tradition, which is the Śrīkula. In one place the ṢSS refers to the Kubjinīmata of 24,000 verses in relation to which it is the 'part that has been clearly explained' (siddhakhaṇḍa).[2] Perhaps this is the KuKauM from which the ṢSS draws. Unfortunately, we do not have the complete text of the KuKauM. It is impossible to say how much the two texts have in common. What more can be said about this depends largely on whether we can identify the text Ṭīkā calls the Bṛhadāgama with the KuKauM.

We can observe a few instances of how the KuKauM draws from the KMT and fills out its teachings. Perhaps this inspired the redactor of the ṢSS to do this in a systematic way. Perhaps he felt that this, the section that follows after (ūrdhvakhaṇḍa) the Kubjinīmata had accomplished – siddha – what it had set out to do. He integrated the entire text of the KMT into his own. Moreover he had

---

[1] See intro. vol. 2, p. 63 ff..

[2] caturviṁśasahasraṁ [k, kh: caturthe ṣaṭsahasraṁ] tu yad uktaṁ kubjinīmatam |
tasyordhve siddhakhaṇḍaṁ tu [ai: tasyordhvakhaṇḍe yat proktaṁ] gūḍhagranthārthabhedakam [ai: -nam] |
kathitaṁ caiva deveśi ṣaṭsāhasraṁ [ai k, kh: -sahasra] matottamam || ṢSS 50/116cd-117.

incorporated what he considered was important from the KuKauM, eliminating all that was there that was not directly associated with the Kubjikā and her cult and so produced a reduced version in 6,000 verses of the original model that consisted of 24,000 verses. Thus the three texts should be closely related. Indeed, as we shall see this is what we find in the Ṭīkā. There the three texts – the KMT, the ṢSS and what the Ṭīkā calls the Bṛhadāgama - are regularly mentioned together as alternative sources of the same teaching.

The Ambāmatasaṁhitā

Only one manuscript of the Ambāmatasaṁhitā has been recovered up to now,[1] the first nine chapters (ānanda) of which appear to be missing. The Ambāmatasaṁhitā, like the Kulakaulinīmata, identifies itself with the MBT. The scribe of the sole existing manuscript of the AS records in the colophon that Jagatjyotirmalla the king of Bhaktapur, (who reigned between 1614 to 1635 CE) asked the Brahmin Kālidāsa to copy the AS because he wanted a complete copy of the MBT which was then, as now, scattered in various parts.[2] The king's mistake and that of his scribe is not surprising. Substantial passages of the AS recount the mythical descent of the scripture into the world. In this context, the AS explicitly claims to belong to the Manthānabhairava category (bheda) of scriptures which is the most 'complete' (pūrṇa).[3] We have seen that the MBT is called the Mother's Book - Avvāpustaka[4] and Avvāmata. The long colophons of the MBT declare that it belongs to the 'transmission spoken by the Mother'

---

[1] The manuscript is catalogued as Manthānabhairavatantra, it is deposited in the National Archives in Kathmandu and is NAK MS no. 1/1119 śaivatantra 993; NGMPP reel no. A 169/3.

[2] The colophon reads:
khyāto rājādhirājo nṛpatir jayajagadjyotir mmallo babhūva |
tatputraḥ śrīnareśaḥ sakalaguṇanidhiḥ satyavaktādvitīyaḥ |
bhaktapuryāṁ virājo himagirisutayā dattaputraḥ [-tra] |
jagatprakāśo mallābhidhāno madanasamavapur [vapūr] gītavādyābhilāṣī | hastasyādasamudrāśce gate nepālavatsale |
śrāvaṇasya sitapakṣe dvitīyā somavāsare ||
tasmin [tasminn] avasare vipraḥ [vipra] kālidāsas tu [-dāsasya] dhīmataḥ |
ājñām ādāya kuto [kutu] no manthānaṁ pūrṇalekhitam |
samvat 75(?)2 śrāvaṇaśukladvitīyadine [dvitīyā-] |
thvadaṁ śrī 3 bhavānīśaṁkaraprītiśrīkālidāsena saṁcayayāhā || * * ||
umeśaprītaye tantraṁ kālidāsena saṁcitam [-ta] |
anena puṇyayogena tayor antarayor astu me || NS 752 (+ 879) = 1631 CE.

[3] See above, p. 91-93.

[4] *avvāpustakamadhye [kh: avvāpusta * madhe] tu siddhakhaṇḍaṁ prapūjayet* | See YKh (2) 29/36ab, quoted above, p. 98.

(avvākramabhāṣita).[1] The entire Kubjikā tradition is the Avvākrama - the Mother's Transmission. Her scripture - Mata - is, accordingly, the Avvāmata. Although this name appears only once in the entire MBT, [2] it characterizes the MBT well enough for this Kubjikā Tantra to be named this way and thereby arrogate to itself the prestigious identity of the MBT.

The AS refers to itself in the colophons as the Caturviṁśatisāhasra[3] which, we have seen, is a common name for the MBT. In one colophon the AS is said to be a part of the Śrīmanthānabhairava but this may be a copiest's error.[4] All the colophons except two[5] begin, as do those of the MBT, by declaring that it is part of the 'primordial descent' (ādyāvatāre) of the scripture. All except nine out of the twenty-eight colophons (i.e. 8-14, 18, and 21) say that it is part of the 'tradition of the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava.'[6] We find most of the names of the MBT that generally appear in the long colophons of the MBT. These include Vimala-bhedottaraṣaṭkanirṇaya and the variants Śrīvimalamataṣaṭkanirṇaya and Vimala-bheda.[7] The name Ājñāpārameśvara appears only in long colophons (1-6, 18, 20, and 25) with two exceptions (colophons 18 and 25). In one of which (colophon 18) it is the only name and in colophon 9 it appears at the beginning of the colophon replacing the diction 'ādyāvatāre' found in all the others.[8] Colophon 6 calls the text the Kubjikāmata.[9] But this may be a generic reference to the tradition to which it belongs. Thus, colophon 9 unambiguously ascribes the text to the Śrīkubjikāmnāya. However, equally unambiguously, colophons 20 and 28 call it the (Śrī)Kubjikāmatasaṁhitā, which can only be the name of the text. The latter is particularly significant as it the concluding colophon of the entire text in which, moreover, it is said to be twenty-four thousand verses long.[10] The most specific [1] This is said about the MBT in virtually all the long colophons of the MBT, whereas it said only in colophon 22 of the AS.

---

[2] YKh (2) 29/40 quoted above, p. 98.
[3] It is possible that this is an adjective, rather than a proper name. In colophon 17 we read: śrī - avvāmatasaṁhitāyāṁ caturviṁśatisāhasrikāyāṁ. In this case it is clearly an adjective. However, in most cases there is lack of direct concord between the two words. For example, in colophon 19 we find: avvāmatasaṁhitāyāṁ caturviṁśatisāhasrike and in colophon 20: kubjikāmatasaṁhitāyāṁ caturviṁśatisāhasre.
[4] śrīmanthānabhairava avvāmatasaṁhitāyāṁ - colophon 22. This may well be an error for śrīmanthānabhairavayajñe
[5] These are colophons 14 and 18. In the latter we find: ity ājñāpārameśvare instead.
[6] mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe anvaye or just manthānabhairavayañe.
[7] Vimalabhedottarasaṭkanirṇaya - colophons 1-4, 6, 16, 20 and 28; Śrīvimalamataṣaṭkanirṇaya - colophon 5 and Vimalabheda - colophon 15.
[8] ity ājñāpārameśvare śrīkubjikāmnāye kāruṇyaparvaṁ (kāruṇyā-) samāptaṁ || 9
[9] 6) ity ādyāvatāre śrīkubjikāmate mahābhairavayajñe anvaye saptakoṭipramāṇe śrīvimalabhedottaraṣaṭkanirṇaye ājñāpārameśvare śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasrike pīṭhastavanirṇayaguhyapīṭhapañcakanirṇayādhikāro nāma pañcadaśa ānandaḥ || 15 = 6
[10] 28) ity ādyāvatāre mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe saptakoṭipramāṇe vimalabhedottaraṣaṭka-nirṇaye

name, in variant forms, we find in the majority of the colophons is Avvāmatasaṁhitā.[1] When this name or one of its variants does not appear in a colophon, it is replaced by a variant of the name 'Kubjikāmata'. Clearly, Ambā / Avvā replaces 'Kubjikā'. In short, the colophons present the text as the Avvāmatasaṁhitā which is a version of the KMT in twenty-four thousand verses that has been 'brought down by the first goddess' (ādidevyāvatāra). Thus it is also a version of the MBT which is, as the colophons says: 'on the Path of Meru consisting of 70 million (saptakoṭi) (verses)' and so is like the other MBT. However, although this is said in the colophons of both the AS and the MBT, the former invariably omits the statement that it is part of the 'Division beginning with KĀ' (kādibheda) of the scripture, although we find several references to it in the body of the text.[2] But although the colophons imply that the AS is the MBT, which is normally identified with the 'Division beginning with KĀ', we find that they are sometimes distinguished in the body of the text. In one place it is characterized as the 'Division beginning with KĀ belonging to the bright lunar fortnight'.[3] I have not seen this distinction elsewhere. Does it imply that the AS belongs to the other division of the MBT, which is related to the dark lunar fortnight? Moreover, the Avvāmata, which the AS calls a 'great Tantra', appears in a list of Tantras that are considered to be inferior to the MBT.[4] It seems, therefore, that that was not the original name of this text.

ājñāpārameśvare khaṭikārṇavādhiṣṭhāne (-dhiṣṭāne) pīṭhamārge śrīkubjikāmatasaṁhitāyāṁ caturviṁśatisāhasrake catuḥpādakrame ājñāpāde siddhināthāvatāre grahāmnāyādhikāravarṇane kramodayo nāmānandaḥ || śubham astu ||

[1] Śrī Ambāmata - colophons 1-4. Śrī Avvāmata - colophon 5. Śrī Avvāmatasaṁhitā - colophons 7, 8, 15, 16, 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 26); Avvākramasaṁhitā - colophon 10 and Ambāmatasaṁhitā - colophons 11 and 12.

[2] For example:
*tatrājñā mokṣaśaktiḥ (mo * śakti) paramaśivamayī āśramaṁ kādibhede* || AS 25/12d.
yajñe (rā-) śrīkādibhede (-bhedaiḥ) tritayamadhukramaṁ (-mā) śrīkramaṁ kādipīṭhaṁ | ibid. 25/28c.
kādibhede parānandaṁ vimalaṁ ca kramodayam ||
kāmarūpād viniṣkrāntaṁ rāvabījatrayaṁ śaśī | ibid. 27/9cd-10ab.

Note, by the way, that this reference supports the hypothesis that 'kādibheda' is short for 'kāmarūpabheda'. See above, p. 72-73.

[3] The Kula Path of the mantras has been mentioned (here), not described. It is described with (its) three divisions in (MBT which is) the Teaching in Three Parts, that is, in the Kādibheda belonging to the 'bright fortnight'. He who knows it belongs to the tradition.

mantrāṇāṁ kulamārgaṁ tu sūcitaṁ na tu varṇitam |
varṇitaṁ ca tribhir bhedaiḥ khaṇḍatritayaśāsane ||
sitapakṣe kādibhede yo vetti sa ca anvayī | AS 22/76-7ab.

[4] See note to KuKh 68/27-32ab.

The AS differs from the KuKh, SKh and the YKh in another respect also. Like these three, but unlike the KuKauM, it is solely concerned with Kubjikā's cult. Like the KuKh, but unlike the YKh, it imports substantial passages from the KMT and the MBT. However, the change in the form of the colophons, with respect to these sections, and the absence of sūtras clearly indicates that it is not homogenous with them. Moreover, the AS clearly displays a marked development of the use of the technical terms found in the MBT that relate directly to the goddess's cult. These appear in the context of ulterior elaborations of the symbolic patterns we find constantly repeated and re-elaborated in MBT. These added degrees of complexity are evidence that the AS was written after the MBT.

The system of lineages and teachers, the Nine Nāthas and the Sixteen Siddhas is fully elaborated. Another significant indication of the time and place of the redaction of the AS are the many references to Candrapura, Śrīdeśa, Koṅkaṇa, and the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha). Candrapura is in Śrīdeśa, which is the central region of Koṅkaṇa, which is a part of the Deccan. However, even though there is an evident ascending scale of spread, the AS practically treats them as interchangeable. The tradition is that of Candrapura[1] which is its abode (gṛha).[2] This is where the root of the tradition is located,[3] especially that of the division of which is related to the MBT. Thus the goddess's authority holds sway in Koṅkaṇa.[4] The goddess is the Divine Current of the Siddhas. She is the Current of Koṅkaṇa that flows in Koṅkaṇa in the Age of Strife.[5] The goddess is always present in her threefold form in Koṅkaṇa, so one achieves success quickly there.[6] Beyond Mind, it is the Western House of the Kubjikā Tantras in which the goddess resides. As in the MBT, this is where three Siddhas of the sacred seats arose and from them the Nine Nāthas.[7] The three of them who exercise their authority in this world reside in Koṅkaṇa.[8] Śrīnātha and Ciñcinī reside in Candrapura which is in Koṅkaṇa where

---

[1] ādau siṁhagṛhāyātaṁ āmnāyaṁ candrapuryakam || AS 22/74.

[2] gṛhaṁ candrapuraṁ proktaṁ bhedo manthānabhairavaḥ || AS 22/4cd.

[3] tasmin candrapure [-pare] mūlaṁ merudvāre purārjitam |
sarvasādhāraṇaṁ martye olīnāṁ kaulikākrame || AS 13/58.

[4] gṛhaṁ candrapuraṁ proktaṁ bhedo manthānabhairavaḥ ||
gotraṁ [śrotraṁ] amarikā devī vāmamārge prakalpitā |
*āśrame [āśrama] * * * * * ? adhikāraṁ [avikāraṁ] tu koṅkaṇe* || AS 22/4cd-5.

[5] āyātaṁ dvīpacakre kaliprakaṭakṛtaṁ koṅkaṇe [-ṇaṁ] koṅkaṇaughā vikhyātā rudraśaktiḥ sā [sa] ca bhavati parā ambikā bindumūrtiḥ |
gurvājñābaddhabhūtā paśubhayaharaṇe siddhadivyaugharūpā | AS 25/54abc.

[6] koṅkaṇe [ṇaṁ] siddhyate śīghraṁ yatrāhaṁ nityaśas tridhā [nityasaṁ-] || 5/116cd.

[7] koṅkaṇe cādhikāriṇyāṁ unmanyāṁ [-nyaṁ] mātṛbhir vṛtām ||
paścime 'smin gṛhe naumi adhikāratrayātmikām [-kā] | AS 6/94cd-95ab.

[8] koṅkaṇe ca sthitās trīṇi [sthitā-] prathamaṁ ca tṛtīyakam || AS 8/50cd.

Śrīnātha's three forms, that is, the three Siddhas, have emerged in the three sacred seats.[1]

Just as Candrapura and Koṅkaṇa are co-extensive, in several references Koṅkaṇa and Śrīdeśa are identified. The tradition of the Nine Nāthas is said to be in Koṅkaṇa or in Śrīdeśa where they assumed mortal human bodies.[2] Authority was transmitted by the goddess in Śrīdeśa.[3] The goddess plays with the Lord in Candrapura and in Śrīdeśa.[4] Śrīdeśa is the region of the clan of initiates and the tradition of the Nine Nāthas.[5] Sometimes the text refers to just the Deccan as the place where Śrīnātha of the three lineages is endowed with the Command,[6] without specifying that he is particularly in Koṅkaṇa, or even Candrapura. The teaching that comes from the teacher's mouth can be learnt in the Deccan.[7] This is where the oral tradition is alive and thriving. The teaching of the tradition has been fully expounded (nirṇīta) in the Deccan. One who knows it, knows the reality (tattva) taught in the tradition of the Kubjikāmata.[8] In the same way, Śrīdeśa and the Deccan exchange place, although the former is considerably smaller than the latter. Thus the AS declares that the three lineages of the Command have arisen in the Age of Strife in the mortal world in the Deccan and, in the same breath, that the most intense form of the Command of the three lineages shines perfectly in Śrīdeśa.[9] Again, just as the sacred seats are in Koṅkaṇa, the current of the Sixteen Disciples is said to

---

[1] śrīnāthaṁ ciñcinī devī koṅkaṇe candrapuryake ||
tasya mūrtitrayaṁ jātaṁ tripīṭheṣu anukramāt | AS 8/63cd-64ab.
tayā te pūrvadehāś ca śrīdeśe mānavāḥ [-vā] kalau || AS 8/117cd.

[2] ādināthas trayolīnāṁ [-nāthaṁ-] siddhatrayasamāyutaḥ ||
tasya te navaputrāś ca vartamānāḥ [-nā] kalau yuge |
saṁjātāḥ [-tā] koṅkaṇe [kuṁkuṇe] martye [matyaṁ] adhas trīṇi trayordhvataḥ ||
niravaṁśāś ca te ṣaḍbhiḥ savaṁśās trīṇi [sārddhaṁ sāstrīṇi] vāsare |
evaṁ navamukhāmnāye śrīdeśe gotramaṇḍale || AS 8/43cd-45.

[3] avatāritaṁ mayā sa [ma] adhikāraṁ [adhekāraṁ] prayacchati |
śrīdeśe [-deśa] aṁgamukhe [-mukhye] ca tenādyaṁ [-adyaṁ] kanyasolikam [kanyasā-] || AS 7/91.

[4] krīḍāṁ [krīdā] karomi nāthena sārdhaṁ samayamelake [-kāṁ] |
tena [tana] sārdhaṁ [sārdha] mano gatvā śrīdeśe candrapuryake || AS 7/125.

[5] evaṁ navamukhāmnāye śrīdeśe gotramaṇḍale || AS 8/45cd.

[6] śrīnāthaṁ pūjayen martye ājñāyuktaṁ kalau yuge |
yugmatritayam ākhyātaṁ olīnāṁ dakṣiṇāpathe || AS 8/103.

[7] upadeśaṁ gurorvaktrād [-vaktrā] jñātavyaṁ [-vyā] dakṣiṇāpathe || AS 8/114cd.

[8] ity āmnāyamidaṁ sūtraṁ avatāraṁ kalau yuge ||
pāramparyavidhānaṁ tu nirṇītaṁ [nirṇiktaṁ] dakṣiṇāpathe |
yo jānāti sa tattvajña āmnāye kubjikāmate || AS 8/225cd-226.

[9] paścāt kaliyuge martye saṁjātaṁ dakṣiṇāpathe ||
ājñā - olitrayaṁ sarvaṁ siddhidaṁ ca kulāgame |
tīvrājñā sphurate samyak śrīdeśe ca [cā] trayolikam || Ibid. 7/133cd-134.

be in the 'three places' in the Deccan.[1] Thus they exert their authority equally in Koṅkaṇa and in the Deccan.[2]

Clearly, the great number of these references in the AS align it to the sources that were redacted in this part of India. These are, essentially, as we have seen, those related to the MBT. At the same time, the AS maintains a link with the stream of the Kubjikā tradition associated with the KMT. However, the contents of the AS are much more closely related to the MBT and its sections (khaṇḍa). Thus the AS refers to the KuKh as the epitome of the tradition of the elders.[3] This is where the teachers' transmission (gurukrama) of the goddess's Vidyā and its parts was first revealed. The Siddhakhaṇḍa is also known to the AS.[4] Two colophons of the AS refer to the Kumārikākhaṇḍa implying, at least, that that particular chapter or topic belongs to it.[5] However, neither of these chapters are found in the KuKh. The few passages in the KuKh in common with the AS are in most cases derived from a common earlier source, generally the KMT and, probably through that, the TS.[6] Chapters 40 and 41 of the KuKh correspond to chapters 20 and 21 of the AS. Almost all the verses are found in chapter 1 of the TS but not in the same order as they appear there. Despite the severe corruption of the sole MS of the AS, it is clear that it follows the TS more closely than the KuKh. Thus, for example, there are several lines found in the AS and the TS that are missing in the KuKh. Conversely, there are several lines in the KuKh not found in either the AS or the TS. Chapter 40 of the KuKh and the equivalent part

---

[1] idaṁ ṣoḍaśaśiṣyaughaṁ vartamānaṁ kalau yuge |
triṣu sthāneṣu cākhyātaṁ ākhyātaṁ dakṣiṇāpathe ||
ataḥ parāśca ye tatra teṣāṁ saṁkhyā na vidyate | Ibid. 8/178-179ab.

[2] ṣoḍaśaite mahāsiddhāḥ śrīkoṅkaṇe cādhikāriṇaḥ [-riṇī] |
khecarās te samantāśca sarve [sarvvaṁ] ciñciniputrakāḥ [-kaṁ] ||
teṣv adhikārasakalaṁ [teṣṭādhikāra-] adhikāraṁ ca koṅkaṇe |
ṣoḍaśānvayasaṁjātaṁ [-tā] kaulikaṁ dakṣiṇāpathe || Ibid. 8/56-57.

[3] AS 10/146-148, quoted above on p. 105.

[4] (The god is speaking): in the beginning the Vidyā, (its parts) and the transmission of the teachers was expounded in the Kumārikākhaṇḍa by the First Lord and I reflected on it. (Moreover), I heard the Siddhakhaṇḍa by the goddess's grace.

ādau kumārikākhaṇḍe padavidyāgurukramam [padā- -me] |
kathitaṁ ādināthena vicāraṁ tasya me iti (?) ||
śrutaṁ mayā siddhakhaṇḍaṁ [-khaṁḍe] bhagavatyāḥ prasādataḥ | AS 23/1-2ab.

[5] One of them is the colophon to chapter 18 which says: (This, the eighteenth chapter concerning) the venerable feast days (parva(n)) (for the acquisition of) accomplishments (siddhi) is complete. (It is part of) the venerable Kumārikākhaṇḍa of the Ājñāpārameśvara that has come forth from the mouth of the tradition. ity ājñāpārameśvare saṁpradāyamukhodgīrṇe śrīmatkumārikākhaṇḍe śrīmatsiddhiparvaṁ samāptam || 18 ||

The other is the colophon to chapter 25 which is quoted above in note 3, p. 105.

[6] See the concordance in vol. 14.

of chapter 20 of the AS correspond very closely to the first half of the first chapter of the TS. The verses in KuKh 41and AS 21 are almost all drawn from the second half of TS 1. However, the order of some verses has been rearranged in the KuKh. In this respect KuKh 41 and AS 21 are close to one another and distinct from the TS. However, as the AS follows the TS more closely in general, it possible that the KuKh borrowed from the AS rather than from the TS directly. This is unlikely. The AS is generally a more 'advanced' text. By this I mean that the symbols commonly manipulated in the MBT and the Kubjikā Tantras, such as, the nature and function of the sacred seats, are here even more laden with meanings and connections. One would expect, therefore, the KuKh to be an earlier work. The AS shares only four verses exclusively in common with the KuKh.[1] There is no evidence that the KuKh knows the AS, whereas the latter does appear to know about the KuKh[2] for which it shows special respect.

The format of the text of the AS does not suffer from the many inconsistencies to which the MBT is subject. Indeed, the relatively systematic ordering of its contents is a feature that sets it apart from the MBT. There is, however, one discrepancy in the manner the text is divided up. Out of twenty-eight chapters, according to the colophons only twenty-four are '*ānanda*s'. The other four are 'parvans'.[3] These colophons end with the diction '(this chapter) has ended (samāptam)', a form that is absent in the other colophons. We notice that one of these four colophons is coupled with another. The first is a typical long colophon which refers to this chapter as an ānanda. The second is short and the chapter is called a parvan.[4] This oversight is evidence that the colophons of the AS were subject to re-working. Perhaps parvan was the name given to all the chapters at an earlier stage of the redaction of the text. Subsequently, in order to align the presentation of the text with that of the MBT, the simpler colophons were substituted with the more elaborate ones and the name for a chapter was [1] These are AS 10/149-153ab which correspond to KuKh 3/20-24.

[2] The AS knows, for example, that the KuKh contains the Mālinīstava. See AS 10/147-148 quoted above, p. 105. We have noted already that the AS also seems to know of the existence of the YKh.

[3] Chapters 9, 18, 20, and 25 are called *parvan*s. Chapter 20 is both an ānanda and a parvan.

[4] This is the colophon at the end of the twentieth chapter of the extant text, which the colophon refers to as the nineteenth. The first version of the colophon there reads:

ity ādyāvatāre śrīmahābhairavayajña anvaye saptakoṭipramāṇe vimalabhedottaraṣaṭkanirṇaye ājñāpārameśvare khaṭikārṇavādhiṣṭhāne (khaṭikārṇava-) pīṭhamārge kubjikāmatasaṁhitāyāṁ caturviṁśatisāhasre kulayoginyadhikāravarṇane (kulayoginī-) ājñākramodayo nāma ekonaviṁśama ānandaḥ ||

Directly after this colophon comes this other one:

ity ādyāvatāre saṁpradāyamukhāgame kulayoginīsaṁbandhaparvaṁ samāptaṁ || changed from parvan to ānanda. Another discrepancy is the use in some of the colophons of the AS of the word 'saṁbandha-', meaning 'in relation to', in the place of the word 'varṇana-', meaning 'description (of)', found in the colophons of the MBT and in some of the AS. This usage is unique to the AS, just as the word 'kathana-' operating in the same way in some colophons of the KuKauM is found only there.

In short, there is good reason to believe that the AS was not conceived in its early stages of redaction to be a part of the MBT. Nor did it develop, as did the MBT, from sūtras. Indeed, their minor presence in the AS compared to the fundamental role they play in the layout of the MBT, is striking. However, although there are very few sūtras in the AS and none is accorded a separate colophon, the AS is quite familiar with the didactic function of a sūtra and it continues to be respected as an earlier, important vehicle of the teachings. Thus, for example, at the end of a chapter dedicated to a description of the lineage of teachers, the speaker extols the excellence of the teaching it expounds by declaring it to be a veritable sūtra:

> This is the tradition, this the sūtra, the descent (into the world of the teachings) in the Age of Strife. It is the practice enjoined by the tradition that has been expounded in the Deccan. He who knows it, knows the reality (taught) in the tradition (āmnāya) of the Kubjikāmata.[1]

In the AS we find fresh layers of representation of the basic symbolic paradigms operating in the MBT as well as ulterior symbolic associations and practices. The AS at times betrays a consciousness of this. We notice an example in the first part of chapter ten. There we find a series of 27 depositions listed by name, all of which are well known to the MBT and the major Kubjikā Tantras. Here, however, they are presented in a different sequence. This, the AS says, is a subsequent method (uttaravidhi) with respect to the one of the Sūtra of Deposition (nyāsasūtra).[2] We have seen that this sūtra is an important one in the SKh. Although just a list of names of a series of depositions (nyāsa), it is the base upon which the SKh presents each one of them in full. This statement is therefore very meaningful and is evidence that the AS is later than the SKh.

---

[1] ity āmnāyam idaṁ sūtraṁ avatāraṁ kalau yuge ||
pāramparyavidhānaṁ tu nirṇītaṁ (nirṇiktaṁ) dakṣiṇāpathe |
yo jānāti sa tattvajña āmnāye kubjikāmate || AS 8/225cd-226.

[2] One should deposit (this) the teaching of the subsequent method of the sūtra of the depositions (nyāsasūtra). nyāsasūtrottaravidher upadeśaṁ hi (ni) vinyaset | AS 10/27cd.

A Kramasūtra[1] begins about the middle of chapter ten and extends up to the end of it. This chapter as a whole deals with the Transmission of the Eldest (jyeṣṭhauli). The first part explains the preliminary, purifying depositions, the preparation of the maṇḍala, the ritual vessels and so on. The sūtra teaches the sequence (krama) in which the main mantras are projected into the maṇḍala and uttered in the course of the rite (i.e. the kramapūjā) of the Transmission of the Eldest. A more complete name for it would therefore be Jyeṣṭhakramasūtra. However, the context warrants the possibility that this is not a specific sūtra but an earlier modality in which the teachings were transmitted. Thus, after outlining the contents of the Krama, the AS admonishes that: 'One should keep the teaching of the sūtras of the elders strenuously secret'.[2] We can understand this to mean that these sūtras belonged to an earlier transmission. They are 'the sūtras of the elders of the transmission of the lineage'.[3] The existence of an earlier transmission is also implied in the statement that: 'in the beginning the Root Sūtra of the transmission of the Elders was located here'.[4] We have seen that there are three forms of the Root Sūtra, in the KuKh.[5] There is another one in chapter twenty-five of the AS which, inspired by the hermeneutics of the MBT, proceeds in the following chapter with its own esoteric and mystical explanation (bhūmikā) of it.[6]

Finally, the AS naturally agrees with the view of all the Kubjikā Tantras that they are more elevated than those of the other Śaiva traditions, including the Kaula ones.[7] But it goes a step further by placing itself at a higher more esoteric

---

[1] kramasūtraṁ pravakṣyāmi tridhā - oliparigraham || AS 10/133cd.
[2] gopanīyaṁ prayatnena vṛddhasūtropadeśakam | AS 11/87ab.
[3] The god asks the goddess at the beginning of chapter 12:

How does one know the plane of the activity of the observance of the sacred seats which is Bhairava's (plane) here in the body according to the sūtras of the elders of the transmission of the lineage.

evam olikramasyātra (evamāli-) vṛddhasūtrasya bhairavam |
kathaṁ vijñāyate dehe pīṭhacaryākriyāpadam || AS 12/1.

[4] ādau vṛddhakramasyātra mūlasūtraṁ samāśritam | AS 25/1ab.
[5] See chapters 26, 38 and 42 of the KuKh.
[6] ity ādyāvatāre mahābhairavayajñe saptakoṭipramāṇe śrī - avvāmatasaṁhitāyāṁ śrīcaturviṁśatisāhasrikāyāṁ mūlasūtrabhūmikādhivarṇane kramodayo nāmānandaḥ || 26 ||
[7] All those who have been consecrated and have special knowledge, even those who are devoted to the Kula path or are initiated in the Śaiva (Tantras), possessing lineages and born of the five faces (of Sadāśiva), namely, those of the left, right, Siddhānta, Bhūtatantras and Gāruḍa are said to be fettered souls.

abhiṣiktā (-kta) viśeṣajñāḥ (-jñā) kaulamārgaratā api |
vāmadakṣiṇasiddhānte bhūtatantre (-taṁtra) ca gāruḍe ||
pañcavaktrodbhave śaive (saiva) paraṁparasamanvite (parapara-) |
dīkṣitā ye 'bhiṣiktā vā te sarve (sarva) paśavaḥ smṛtāḥ || AS 6/236-237.

level within the secret Kubjikā tradition of the scriptures that preceded it. These include the scripture of a 100 billion (koṭi) verses, which is the Siddha, otherwise known as the Anāma or Paramata - names that are familiar in the Trika tradition as those of two of its three root Tantras.[1] Along with them are the ones we have noted above as the previous stages in the descent of the scripture, including the Śrīmata of twenty-four thousand verses itself, that is, the MBT.[2] Clearly, by claiming its superiority to the MBT, the AS is telling us that it is both different from it and subsequent to it.

We may get an idea of the contents of the AS from the names of its chapters. These are as follows.

Chapter One:[3] The Descent of the First Goddess (ādidevyāvatāra). Discusses the descent of the goddesses into their sacred seats.

---

[1] These are the Siddhayogeśvarīmata, a part of which exists that has been partly edited by Törzsök (see bibliography). The second is the Anāmakatantra which, if it ever existed, has been lost. The third is the Mālinīvijayatantra of which the published Mālinīvijayottara presents itself as a condensed version.

[2] O god, (even) if they are well initiated in the Śrīmata, the king of Matas, that is, the Caturviṁśatisāhasrika, (the scriptures consisting of) 125,000 and 70 million (verses), the Siddha (Tantra) consisting of 100 billion (verses) and the supreme Mata called Anāma, they are fit only for that. O god, (this scripture) should therefore be kept hidden from them also.

śrīmate matarājendre caturviṁśasāhasrike ||
lakṣapādādhike deva saptakoṭisuvistṛte (vismṛte) |
śatakoṭimaye siddhe anāmākhye (-khyā) pare mate ||
yadi sudīkṣitā (sphuṭdīkṣitād) deva etāvanmātrayogyataḥ (evāvan- yogataḥ) |
etasmāt kāraṇān nityaṁ teṣām api ca gopayet || AS 6/238cd-240.

[3] The numbers in figures at the end of each colophon are in the correct numerical order, although some are missing. However, they do not always agree with the number of that chapter stated in Sanskrit in the colphon. Probably a scribe made the adjustments, perhaps the very scribe of the sole manucript we possess. Unfortunately, the text of this manuscript is both corrupt and incomplete. However, although it begins abruptly from the middle of what the colophon calls the tenth ānanda, the chapters are numbered in figures serially with this as the first. The number of the chapter reported in Sanskrit in the colophons from chapter eight onwards largely coincides with the actual serial order. Thus it is not entirely clear how much of the text has been lost. In the following list, the first figure is the serial order of the chapters of the AS. The second one is the number written in Sanskrit in the colophon of each chapter. The third is the number in figures found at the end of each colophon.

1 10/missing; 2 11/missing; 3 12/3; 4 13/4; 5 missing/5; 6 15/15; 7 missing/7; 8 8/8; 9 missing/9; 10 missing/10; 11 11/11; 12 35/12; 13 12/13; 14 14/14; 15 15/15; 16 16/16; 17 missing/17; 18 missing/18; 19 18/missing; 20 19/missing; 21 missing/21; 22 21/22; 23 missing/23; 24 missing/24; 25 missing/25; 26 missing/26; 27 missing/27; 28 missing/missing.

Chapter Two: Initiation (dīkṣāvidhiḥ). Talks about the Kaula initiation by piercing through the Wheels in the subtle body (vedhadīkṣā).
Chapter Three: Worship (pūjanavidhiḥ). Talks about the way Mantra should be repeated and the attendant rite.
Chapter Four: The Descent of the Sacred Seats in relation to the Teaching concerning the Six Wheels in the Procedure for the Worship of the Body (śārīra-pūjāvidhānaṣaṭcakranirṇaye pīṭhāvatāraḥ).
Chapter Five: The Oneness of Śiva and Śakti with the respect to the teaching concerning the Combination of the Venerable Mālinī and Śabdarāśi (śrimālinī-śabdarāśisamudāyanirṇaye śivaśaktisāmarasyam).
Chapter Six: Concerning the Teaching of the Five Secret Seats which is the Teaching of the Hymn to the Sacred Seats (pīṭhastavanirṇayaguhyapīṭha-pañcakanirṇayādhikāraḥ).
Chapter Seven: A Description of the Three Lineages (olitrayādhikāravarṇanam).
Chapter Eight: The Teaching concerning the Tradition (pāramparyādhikāra-nirṇayaḥ).
Chapter Nine: The Chapter concerning Compassion (kāruṇyaparvan).
Chapter Ten: A Description of the Descent of the Lineage of the Elders (jyeṣṭho-lyāvatāravarṇanam).
Chapter Eleven: A Description of the Collection (of the Teachings of) the Elders (jyeṣṭhasaṁgrahādhikāravarṇanam).
Chapter Twelve: A Description of the Eight (groups of) Eight (aṣṭāṣṭakādhikāra-varṇanam).
Chapter Thirteen: Concerning the Transmission (kramādhikāravarṇanam).
Chapter Fourteen: Concerning the Vidyā of (the Sacred Seat of) Oḍa (oḍavidyādhi-kāravarṇanam).
Chapter Fifteen: Concerning the Vidyā of (the Sacred Seat of) Jālandhara (jālandharavidyādhikāravarṇanam).
Chapter Sixteen: Concerning the Vidyā of (the Sacred Seat of) Pūrṇagiri (pūrṇa-pīṭhavidyādhikāravarṇanam).
Chapter Seventeen: A Description of the Arising of the Transmission (kramo-dayādhikāravarṇanam).
Chapter Eighteen: The Chapter concerning the Venerable Siddha (Śrīmat-siddhiparvan)
Chapter Nineteen: Concerning the Hymn to Mahāmāyā (mahāmāyāstavādhi-kāravarṇanam).
Chapter Twenty: Concerning the Relationship with the Kula Yoginī (kulayoginī-sambandhaparvan).
Chapter Twenty-one: A Description of the Transmission of the Ocean of the Yoni in relation to the Transmission of the Youth (kaumārakramasaṁbandhe yonyārṇavakramādhikāravarṇanam).

Chapter Twenty-two: A Description of the Transmission of the Child (bāla-kramādhikāravarṇanam).
Chapter Twenty-three: The Samayā Vidyā related to the Transmission of the Youth (kaumārakramasaṁbandhe samayavidyādhikāravarṇanam).
Chapter Twenty-four: The Sixty-four Letters (catuḥṣaṣṭivarṇādhikāravarṇanam).
Chapter Twenty-five: Concerning the Main Descent into the World (of the Goddess, the God and the Teaching) (mūlāvatāraparvasambandhaḥ).
Chapter Twenty-six: An Explanation of the Root Sūtra (mūlasūtrabhūmikā).[1]
Chapter Twenty-seven: A Description of the Descent of Kālī into the World (kāly-avatāravarṇanam).
Chapter Twenty-eight: A Description of the Teachings concerning the Planets (grahāmnāyādhikāravarṇanam).

Independent Kubjikā Tantras

The Kularatnoddyota

Up to now we have dealt with what may be called the primary corpus. This consists of the sacred texts that consider themselves to be contracted forms of the original extensive scripture revealed by the goddess and their direct expansions. Next we shall consider the secondary scriptures. These affiliate themselves closely to the main scripture, represented by the KMT or the Śrīmata. However, the versions to which they refer are usually not those mentioned in the direct, primary transmission. Thus, for example, according to the concluding colophon of the Kularatnapañcakāvatāra, it is said to be the essence of Kubjikā's scripture (the Śrīmatasaṁhitā) that consists of 12,000 verses.[2] Similarly, the colophons of the Kularatnoddyota claim that it is the essence of the Kubjikāmata, which is also called Vakrikāmata in some of the manuscripts or, according to the last colophon, Kubjimahāmatottama, which is said to be a fantastic 5 billion (koṭi) verses long.[3]

---

[1] This is also the name and subject of chapter 58 of the KuKh which is chapter 28 of YKh (1). Although the subject in the AS is also the Yoni and the sacred seats in it, the text is quite different.
[2] The last colophon of the KRP reads: iti dvādaśasāhasre śrīmatasaṁhitāyāṁ sārāt sārataraṁ ratnapañcakāvatāraṁ samāptaṁ ||
[3] The colophon of the first chapter is typical of the others. It reads: ity ādināthavinirgate [k kh: -nirggata] pañcāśatkoṭivistīrṇe [kh: -vistīrṇṇa] śrīmatkubjikāmate [k, g: -vakrikāmate] śrīkularatnoddyote [k kh g: -ratnodyote] prathamāvatārapaṭalaḥ [g: -tārapaḥṭalaḥ] ||

The first of the fourteen colophons says that the KRU has come forth from Ādinātha. The rest refer to him as Ādideva. They all state that the KRU is a part of the Kubjikāmata, which is called Kubjimahāmatottama once and four times Vakrikāmata, a name which, as we have seen is also given to the MBT. The word for chapter is paṭala. Three chapter names have no additions. In four cases they end with the diction -adhikāro nāma in one with adhikāravarṇano nāma, two with

However, the KRU claims to be more than just a condensed version of an original scripture. We may glean another dimension of this Tantra from it name. Although I invariably refer to this text as the Kularatnoddyota, as scholars have done before me, it would be better to call it the Śrīkularatnoddyota - the Radiance of the Jewel of the Śrīkula. Śrīkula is, as we have seen, one of the many names for Kubjikā's tradition. The Jewel of the Śrīkula is the Kubjikāmata of which the KRU is the 'radiance' or, as the scribe of the earliest known manuscript put it, it is 'the lamp of the Jewel of the Śrīkula'.[1] In other words, this Tantra, which about 2,500 verses long, was conceived to be a kind of commentary on the KMT. Indeed, although we do find a great deal of very interesting, new material, not found in the KMT, more than half deals with matters found in the KMT. However, it is does not generally, like the ŚM or the ṢSS, draw directly from it but orders the material in its own way. An example of this are Five Wheels discussed in chapters 14 to16 of the KMT. In the KRU we find the Yoginīs and other beings in these Wheels simply listed in groups without directly expounding the configurations ('wheels') they constitute. Elsewhere, it supplements the KMT. For example, in chapter 20 of the KMT, we find a series of thirty-four Islands, representing the consonants. The KRU adds sixteen more 'Islands' that represent the vowel series.[2]

We find several clues in the KRU that indicate that it is one of the first texts of the Kubjikā corpus redacted after the KMT, a place of honour for which it vies with the ŚM. The main part of both of these texts appear to have been redacted prior to the shift of the main centre of the Kubjikā cult to Koṅkaṇa. All the references to it in the KRU we find are, as we have seen, in chapter thirteen which is called the Ādisūtra - the First Sūtra - a name which serves, no doubt, to disguise its insertion into the text when Koṅkaṇa had been fully established as a home of the tradition. That the KRU precedes the MBT, which was closely associated with Koṅkaṇa, is supported by other internal evidence. There are no signs that it knows anything of the directional divisions of Kaula traditions (āmnāya) that developed in the MBT. It knows only the rudimentary distinction (also found in the KMT) between pūrva- and paścimāmnāya in the sense of 'earlier' and 'subsequent' Kaula traditions, rather than 'eastern' and 'western'.

-vidhāna, one each with -vidhi, -sūcana and -nirṇaya.

[1] See the colophon recorded and translated in the following note.

[2] Chapter four of the KRU is dedicated to the Teaching concerning the Islands (dvīpāmnāya). Each of the Islands is associated with a letter and is inhabited by a Bhairava and a goddess along with her retinue of twelve Yoginīs. The KMT (21/21-114ab; see also chapter 31 of the ṢSS) lists thirty-four of them associated with the consonants from Ka to KṢa. The KRU copies these verses verbatim prefacing them with a passage in which the remaining sixteen Islands corresponding to the vowels are described. According to the KRU the fifty Islands should be worshipped on the fifty petals of the lotus in the Wheel of Maṇipura in the navel.

Just as the association with the western direction is unknown to the KRU, the same is the case with the ŚM, although in one place it prescribes that the Liṅga the initiate worships as the abode of the goddess should face west,[1] which may well be one of the first hints of the link with this direction. Doctrinally also, the KRU appears to be less developed than the MBT. There is, for example, as in the KMT very little yogic practice related to lunar symbolism. The KRU makes additional references to the goddess's Liṅga, but they are set in the context of an extension to the mythological narrative we find in the KMT. They serve to explain the origin of the first Siddha who propagated the doctrines of the Kubjikā Tantras. The Liṅga has no added symbolic function as it does in the later texts, especially the MBT.

At the beginning of the first chapter of the KRU we find a long list of Tantras, many of which can be traced. It is surprising that even though the list contains Śaiva Tantras of all schools and even a number of Buddhists Tantras, no mention is made of other Kubjikā Tantras. Is the absence of references to other Kubjikā Tantras because they did not, as yet, exist? This is not likely. We have no reason to doubt that the KMT, from which the KRU draws a good deal of material, was not the first Kubjikā Tantra. We may understand the absence of references to other Kubjikā Tantras as simply a sign that the KRU was one of the first after the KMT.

A relatively early dating of the KRU is supported by some external evidence. The colophon of a manuscript informs us that the original manuscript from which it was copied was transcribed by a certain Vivekaratna who came to the Valley (nepāladeśa) and lived in Kathmandu during the reign of Harṣadeva who reigned between 1085 and 1099 CE.[2] Thus we have an upper limit for the [1] paścimābhimukhe [k: -mukhaṁ] liṁge [k: liṅgaṁ; g: lige] tato japaṁ [g: japa] samārabhet [kh: samācaret] । ŚM 21/271ab.

---

[2] Slusser: I, 398. The manuscript is NAK no. 1/16 = NGMPP reel no. A206/10. It is a copy of a much older manuscript. The scribe copied it completely, including the colophon. The reference is on folio 96b and is as follows (the text has been emended):

> pakṣe śive cāśvinanāmadheye tithau tṛtīyāṁ dharaṇīsute 'hni । > śrīharṣadevasya ca vardhamāne rājye mahānandakare [-maṁdakare] prajānām ॥ > *nepāladeśaṁ samupāgatena kāṣṭhābhidhe * * * saṁsthitena* । > svaśiṣyavargasya nibodhanāya paropakārāya kṛtaprayatnaḥ ॥ > bhaktyā svayaṁ śrīkularatnapūrvam uddyotayantaṁ [-udyotasantaṁ] bṛhadāgamedam । > śrīmatkulācāryavivekaratnakenāpi [śrīmatkalācārya-] saṁlekhitaṁ [-ta] paṇḍitena ॥

samāptam idaṁ śrīkularatnoddyotam [kh: -ratnodyotam] iti ॥ saṁkhyā sahasradvitayaṁ ca sārdhaṁ siddhikaraṁ [kh: siddhyāṁkaraṁ] śrīkularatnadīpam । śrīmatparākhyena vibodhanāya devyāḥ (kh: devyā) parāyāḥ kathitaṁ samastam ॥ iti ॥

(The teacher) himself has come to the land of Nepal and resides in Kathmandu (kāṣṭhābhidha) and made an effort to instruct his disciples and help others. (He came) when date of the KRU. Amongst the Tantras listed in the first chapter of the KRU there is one called `Kālacakra'. Scholars generally agree that the well known Buddhist Tantra with this name belongs to the 11th century.[1] Thus this must have been about the time the KRU was redacted. We have already noted in the course of our discussion of the spread of the Kubjikā cult to Koṅkaṇa that one chapter, at least, of the KRU which refers to Koṅkaṇa was probably added to the text there. The lack of references to the Deccan leads one to suppose that it belongs to the period when it had not yet spread there. Thus, it is probable that the main part of the KRU belonged to the Kubjikā tradition that spread in the north of India.

The legends associated with the travels of Vṛkṣanātha, the first Siddha, to various places prior to his arrival in Candrapura may reflect some historical truth concerning the spread of the Kubjikā Tantras. This matter has been discussed in the previous chapter. We recall that Vṛkṣanātha is said to be a Kaula Vedic Brahmin. This is in keeping with the general ethos of the KRU. Indeed, it is likely that it was written by a Brahmin who either was a royal chaplin or aspired to be one. The indications that this is the case are found in the last chapter of the KRU. This is dedicated to a series of rituals performed for the benefit of kings to protect them from aggression by other kings or for those kings who have lost their status and seek to re-establish themselves. In this context the Tantra warns the king that if he wants to be successful he should not harbour ill feelings for his priest.[2] It is Śrīharṣadeva's kingdom was prospering and gave great joy to the subjects (who resided there). (This effort was made and bore fruit in the form of this manuscript completed on) on Tuesday (dharaṇīsute 'hni), in the bright half (śivapakṣa) (of the lunar month of) Aśvin on the third lunar day. This great Āgama which illumines the jewel of the Śrīkula was copied (saṁlikhitam) (lit. 'written') with devotion by the venerable Kulācārya and scholar Vivekaratna.

---

This, the Śrīkularatnoddyota, is ended. The lamp of the jewel of the Śrīkula, which gives success, it consists of two thousand five hundred (verses). It was all spoken by the venerable one called Supreme in order to instruct the goddess Supreme.

This reference informs us that Vivekaratna resided in Kāṣṭhābhidha, that is, a '(place) called Kāṣṭha'. There seems little reason to doubt that he is abbreviating the Sanskrit name 'Kaṣṭhamaṇḍapa' which I have translated as Kathmandu. If the dating of the original of this manuscript is correct, then this is the earliest reference so far recovered to the place which was to fuse with its neighbouring settlements and ultimately give its name, after several centuries, to the city formed thereby. Prior to my discovery of this colophon Slusser (1982: 89) informs us that when she was writing: 'the first record of Kaṣṭhamaṇḍapa as a place name is encountered in a colophon dated NS 263 (= CE 1143).

[1] See introduction to the works on the Kālacakratantra.

[2] Then the king who has (thus) achieved victory has accomplished his aim if he is a devotee of the Kula and the priest (pūjaka) is not disliked (by him). Or else if he is one who has a dislike (for his priest) in his heart, he (will) always be dependent on another (more powerful king) and he does not accomplish (his) task then. O mother of Kula, this is the truth!

labdhvā [k kh: labdvā; g: ladvā] jayaṁ tadā rājā kṛtakṛtyaḥ prajāyate | difficult to resist the feeling that this admonition was written by just such a priest who may well have written the rest of the Tantra as well.

Summary of the Contents of the Kularatnoddyota

Chapter One: The Descent of the Deity (Avatārapaṭala).

The KRU begins grandly with its cosmology. This takes place by the initial emanation of the goddess, here called Mahāmāyā, from Bhairava. He worships her and they unite generating the cosmic seed (mahābindu). This splits apart thus generating Sound and then progressively the principles through successive stages of emanation to form the cosmic order.

Chapter Two: The Transmission of the Child (Kaumārakrama)

The previous chapter dealt with the creation of the world, this one begins with the creation of the tradition. The scene opens with the god intent on worshipping the lineage of the Paścimakrama that he has produced with substances generated from his own body. Then, in the same way, 'established in supreme non-duality', he worships in his body the Mahākrama in the Kramamaṇḍala in which he had united with the goddess. Seeing this the goddess asks: 'what is worshipped in the great union (mahāmelāpaka) that arouses great wonder?' He responds by telling her about the origin of Mahāpīṭha. There the goddess and the god unite to generate the 'Flower' from which comes the Kulakrama. (1-52ab)

The god goes on to outline the worship of the Śrīkumārakrama. This consists of the projection of fifty mountains with their attendant goddess (called Kumārīs) onto the body. This is followed by their worship on the fifty petals of a lotus drawn in the sacrificial area with the god and the goddess in the middle.

Chapter Three: Concerning the Kramas (Kramādhikāravarṇana)

This chapter deals with the Transmission of the Youth (Yuvanakrama) and that of the Elders. The Transmission of the Youth is the most extensive of the three Kramas emanated from the deity and contains most of the Krama. The most important of the three, it is 'worshipped by Yoginīs and Siddhas and is the life (jīvita) of both the god and the goddess. It is the support (āśraya) of the plane

---

yady asau [k kh: aso] kulabhaktas tu [kh: -bhaktasya] na vidviṣṭas [kh: vidiṣṭas] tu pūjakaḥ ||
athavā hṛdaye dveṣṭaḥ [k, kh, g: dveṣṭā] paratantrarataḥ [kh: -tatrarataḥ] sadā |
tadā siddhyati no kāryaṁ [kh: kārya] satyam etat kulāmbike || KRU 14/106-107.

beyond thought constructs (nirācāra).' All the Yoginīs, Siddhas and Bhairavas reside there. They 'impel emanation' and generate all the scriptures including the Vedas.

As usual this Krama is divided into groups of mantras, presiding deities or Siddhas that are related to parts of the body, yogic states or metaphysical principles. First comes a version of the 'sequence of twenty-eight' then a series of other groups including the Eight Mothers, 28 maṇḍalas related to the Wheel of Purity (viśuddhicakra), 12 goddesses of the sacred seats, 32 goddesses, probably related to the syllables of the goddess's Vidya, then come the Eight Gestures. It concludes with the Sequence of Sixty-four which consists of as many Yoginīs worshipped in groups of eight.[1] Each of the groups has a Bhairava and is worshipped in one of the sacred sites of the Eight Mothers.

This chapter ends with an exposition of the Transmission of the Aged. This is in three parts. The first consists of eight-one parts (pada) made up of nine groups of nine components. It originate in an ordered sequence from the body: nine cavities of the god's. It is essentially the same as the Dūticakra described in the KMT[2] and the extended form of the Gurumaṇḍala, although the KRU makes no reference to either of these two. Next comes the sequence of fifty goddesses governing the phonemic energies of Mālinī. It concludes with the sequence of twenty-four sacred sites and the beings in them described in chapter 22 of the KMT.[3]

Chapter Four: The Teaching concerning the Islands (Dvīpāmnāya)

Each of the Islands is associated with a letter and is inhabited by a Bhairava and a goddess along with her retinue of twelve Yoginīs. The KMT[4] lists thirty-four of them associated with the consonants from Ka to KṢa. The KRU copies these verses verbatim prefacing them with a passage in which the remaining sixteen Islands corresponding to the vowels are described. According to the KRU the fifty Islands should be worshipped on the fifty petals of the lotus in Maṇipura.

---

[1] This group of sixty-four begins with the eight Gestures. The rest of the Yoginīs are quite different from the ones in chapter 15 of the ṢSS and chapter 20 and 25 of the ŚM.

[2] KMT 14/62-94. The corresponding passages in parallel versions are found in chapters 22 of the ṢSS and 16 of the ŚM. See Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 69 ff. for a detailed exposition.

[3] The contents of the 'sthitabhūcakra' are listed in KMT 22/23-46. The entire section dealing with this extends from KMT 22/18 to the end of the chapter.

[4] KMT 21/21-114ab.

Chapters Five and Six

These two chapters deal with the emanation and 'extractions' in code of the main mantras and Vidyās.

Chapter Seven: The Rite of Adoration (Pūjādhikāra)

After all the mantras relating to the Kramamaṇḍala have been taught, this chapter begins by explaining how it should be drawn, the mantras deposited in it and on other ritual objects, as well as on the worshipper (1-39ab). Then comes the to rite of adoration of the Sequence of the Youth. Another Kramamaṇḍala is drawn to accommodate all the groups of deities and their mantras belonging to this Krama outlined in chapter three.

Chapter Eight

This chapter begins with a brief description of the Six Wheels in the body each of which is related to one of the six lineages founded by the six disciples of Matsyendranātha (1-23ab). This is followed by the three forms of the goddess - supreme, subtle and gross in the Transmission of the Youth (23cd-44ab) and the one in the Transmission of the Aged (44cd-60ab). Then come the visualized iconic forms of Śabdarāśi (60cd-69ab), Navātman (69cd-81) and Mālinī (82-90ab). The three forms of initiation into the Śrīkrama - Śāmbhavī, Śāktā and Āṇavī (97cd-108). Rules to observe (109-119). The chapter concludes with the Festival of Garlands (Dāmanotsava). It is celebrated in the end of the rainy season between the months of Āṣāḍha and Kārttika. The deity is offered a sacred thread (pavitraka). Celebrated on the 'supreme non-dual Kula path', as usual the Tantra also teaches it inner equivalent (120-155).

Chapter Nine: A Description of the Supreme and Inferior lineages (Parāparasantānanirṇaya)

This chapter begins with a description of the incarnations of the goddess and god who bring down the Kulakrama, that is, the teachings of the Śrīkula, into the world in each cosmic age (kalpa). In the nineteenth Age the goddess incarnates as the daughter of Dakṣa and is then reborn as daughter of Himavat. Then assuming the form of the goddesses Durgā and Kātyāyanī she fights the demons Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa and Mahiṣa (1-34). The rest of the chapter is dedicated to the Siddhas who propagate the teachings. This account, probably the first in the Kubjikā sources, has been analysed in the chapter concerning the teachers.[1]

Chapter Ten: The Way to Worship the venerable Great Root Maṇḍala of the Descent of the Four Kinds of Creatures (Caturvidhasṛṣṭyavatāraśrīmahāmūla-maṇḍalapūjāvidhi)

This chapter opens with the teaching concerning the goddess's thirty-two syllable Vidyā the god transmits to the goddess when they make love. The Tantras generated from its six limbs are listed. Mitreśa will make the main mantras of the Trika and the Tantras of the five currents (1-18). The rest of the chapter is dedicated to a form of the Kramamaṇḍala called the Mahāmūlamaṇḍala. The Five Couples are the teachers of this age (kalpa) worshipped in the Circle of the Void (śūnyamaṇḍala), that is, in the Point in the centre. Then come a set of three pentads, the Six Wheels, the Seven Yoginīs who govern the vital constituents (dhātu) of the body, the Five Jewels, the Five Sacred seats and the Siddhas of the four lineages related to the four kinds of creatures. This maṇḍala was brought into the world by the goddess when she was reborn as the daughter of the Himalaya in order to worship the four kinds of emanation. Then come the Eight Mothers and Bhairavas worshipped on an eight petal lotus. Then pairs of syllables of the goddess's Vidyā are worshipped on the sixteen petals of a lotus around it. This is followed by lotuses of 32 and 64 petals (19-124ab). The chapter concludes with a description of how the maṇḍala should be drawn and its features. (124cd-154)

Chapter Eleven: The Descent of the Future Pūrvāmnāya (Bhaviṣya-pūrvāmnāyāvatārasūcana)

Written in the future tense, as are most of the narrative passages in the KRU, this chapter talks about the origin of the Previous Tradition in relation to the Subsequent Tradition of the goddess Kubjikā. Here we read about the Kaula teachers of the four aeons and especially about Matsyendranātha the founder of the previous Tradition in this Age.[2]

---

[1] See intro. vol. 2, p. 473 ff..
[2] This is discussed and much of this chapter in intro. vol. 2, p. 355 ff..

Chapter Twelve: The Movement of (the Energies of) the Gestures, Meditation and Worship (Mudrācāradhyānārādhanā)

This interesting chapter teaches four Gestures (mudrā) in relation to meditation. These are the One Without Support (Nirālamba) (8-13ab), the Skyfaring Goddess (Khecarī) (13cd-18ab), The Gesture of the Yoni (Yonimudrā) (18cd-27ab) and The Gesture of the Goddess who is Beautiful in Every Limb (Sarvāṁgasundarīmudrā) (27cd-51ab). The first two are the experience of the Void beyond the body. The following two are the meditative experiences of the movement of vitality of Kuṇḍalinī in the body. As Kuṇḍalinī moves so does the god who is the Self. As he says: "The Self is wherever the mind (manas) is and you (O goddess) are wherever the Self is. O mistress of Kula, we (two are both) wherever you are."[1]

Chapter Thirteen: The Teaching of the First Sūtra (Ādisūtranirṇaya)

This is the only sūtra in the KRU. It already mentioned in chapter two amongst several other matters the goddess asks the god to explain[2] and it is announced at the end of the previous chapter where it is attributed to Mitranātha, the first Siddha to bring the teachings into the world.[3] It is said to be based (pūrva) on the convention (saṁketa) concerning the Siddhas[4] and does indeed teach the origin of the first Siddhas and their lineages. These are said to have developed primarily in Koṅkaṇa which not mentioned elsewhere. So although the Ādisūtra has been well integrated into the text, it may not be an original part of it.

---

[1] KRU 12/29cd-30ab.

[2] ādisūtrādisūtrāṇāṁ [kh: -sūtādi] nirṇayaṁ pārameśvaram || KRU 2/38cd.

[3] All this profound secret has been explained to you along with the dynamism of the gestures (mudrācāra), the meditation, and the first (ādi) sūtra as it is. Its primary and secondary divisions possess the meaning of many books. Mitranātha will do (this) with a spirit of reflection (saprapañcena bhāvena).

etat sarvaṁ tavākhyātaṁ rahasyaṁ gūḍhagocaram ||
mudrācāraṁ tathā dhyānamādisūtraṁ [g: dhyānaṁmā-] yathāsthitam |
asya bhedopabhedāśca [k, kh: -dāṁśca] nānāgranthārthavistarāḥ [g: nādāgraṁthārthavistarāḥ] ||
saprapañcena [g: -ñcana] bhāvena mitranāthaḥ kariṣyati | KRU 12/52cd-54ab.

[4] śrīparādevyuvāca
ādinātha kulāmnāyaṁ yathā saṁketasūtragaṁ [k kh: saṁkata-; g: -trakaṁ] |
kulajairjñāyate [kh: -rkṣāyate] samyak tathā sūtraṁ vada prabho ||
śrī ādinātha uvāca
śṛṇu tvamādrisaṁbhūte [g: tvamādisaṁ-] ādisūtraṁ yathā sthitam |
tathā taṁ kathayiṣyāmi siddhasaṁketapūrvakaṁ [kh: -saṁkeṭa-] || KRU 13/1-2 ||

The Ādisūtra begins with a beautiful description of how the goddess descends from the Void of transcendental Oneness with the god down through the Cavity of Brahmā and the Wheels of the body. First she vitalizes the fifty phonemic energies of her basic bodily matrix and then courses through the Krama and all the other mantras and Vidyās to generate its complete form. Then she rests in the Wheel of Bliss within the god, her nature his divine will and body that of a beautiful young woman. (1-11)

Then the primordial union of the god and the goddess with which the Tantra began is re-enacted but with a different purpose. The god worships the Virgin Goddess, his own pure will, in the Wheel of Bliss until, as the god proclaims: the fire offering of divine energy (divyatejas) which is Akula has gone forth from Bliss along the Path of the Void (vyomamārga).[1] In this way Mitranātha, the First Siddha, came into the world . After describing his solitary exploits as a yogi and ascetic, the Tantra goes on to describe the birth of Vṛkṣanātha from the goddess alone (14-22ab). This is followed by his pilgrimage to the main sacred sites and his journey from the north of India down to Candrapura and Koṅkaṇa (22cd-29). Then the Tantra lists Vṛkṣanātha's disciples and their spiritual off-spring (30-49).[2]

Chapter Fourteen: The Prescribed Method (vidhāna) of Worshiping the Wheel of Prayāga and the rest, the Installation (of the Deity), the Application of the Many Rites and their Instruments, the Consecration of the Teacher and the Performance of Yogis' Last Rites. (prayāgādicakrapūjāpratiṣṭhānānā-karmakaraṇārambhācāryābhiṣekayoginām antyeṣṭividhānam)

This chapter mirrors chapter three which describes the worship of the Transmissions of the Youth and the Elders. Here, to conclude the KRU, they are presented again as part of a series of powerful magical rites. By way of introduction to this topic, the chapter opens with a list of the applications and use of the power of mantras (mantrasiddhi) and their benefits (1-11). Many of these are magical powers, the acquisition of which, through the performance of the Krama rites, are especially beneficial to kings. They remedy the misfortune (alakṣmī) of those who have fallen from the rule of their kingdom.[3] The dispossessed king who worships the Kramamaṇḍala of the Transmission of the

---

[1] KRU 13/14ab.

[2] Most of this chapter is translated in intro. vol. 2, p. 468 ff...

[3] rājyabhraṁśe [kh: rākṣatraṁśe] narendrānāṁ [g:-drāṇāma] alakṣmīharaṇāya [g: lakṣmīhareṇāya] ca | KRU 14/9ab.

Youth (Yuvanakrama) regains it.[1] Similarly, by worshipping the maṇḍala of eight-one parts[2] of the Transmission of the Aged, the Tantra promises the king freedom from the aggression of other kings and a prosperous kingdom.[3] In keeping with the magical concerns of this modality of worship of the Krama, the second maṇḍala of this Krama, that of the twenty-four sacred sites,[4] is also variously visualized according to the magical benefits one desires (42-70). The Tantra now lists various offerings to the fire from the same point of view (70-81ab). The rite ends, as usual, with the repetition of the Vidyā (81cd-86).

The Tantra goes on to describe a powerful maṇḍala of the Mothers (87-112ab). They are worshipped along with the Yoginīs of the Krama and those of the thirty-two syllables of the goddess's Vidyā. The goddess of the Transmission of the Aged is in the centre. All very ferocious, offerings. including large quantities of liquor, are made to them. Enemy soldiers see the goddesses in this way and overcome by the vision (dṛṣṭādīna), flee in distress dropping their weapons. Thus the victorious king accomplishes his aim.[5] The range of visualized and theriomorphic forms of the Mothers are described (112cd-134). Then comes a long and interesting section on the installation ceremony (pratiṣṭhā) and worship of the Great Wheel of the Mothers (135-207ab). This is followed by a passage describing the consecration of a teacher (207cd-229ab) and his last funerary rites (229cd-256). The last teachings concern the twenty-five Kaula substances offered to the main deities and their attendents (257-271).

The KRU began with the emergence of the goddess from the Void of the transcendental god, who worshipped and united with her. Now that the god has imparted the teachings to the goddess and received them from her, he merges back into the Void. From there he calls the goddess to join him so that he may worship and unite with her again (272-292ab).

---

[1] KRU 14/12-41. A king who has fallen from (the rule of his) kingdom is (again) supported (by his subjects) by seeing (this). (If) he worships that Wheel in this way, he again comes to possess a kingdom. KRU 14/41.

[2] This is described in chapter three of the KRU.

[3] The king is not troubled by others there and there is no epidemic (māri). The crops are not destroyed and the people (praja) are not troubled by disease. O beloved, there is no fear of others' Wheels (used for magical purposes) where this one is worshipped.

na tatra pīḍyate rājā na ca māriḥ pravartate ||
na vinaśyanti śasyāni [kh: śaśyāni; g: paśyāni] na rogairbādhyate prajaḥ [k kh g: prajā] |
paraṁ [g: para] cakrabhayaṁ naiva yatredaṁ pūjyate priye || KRU 14/51cd-52.

[4] See KuKh vol. 4, appendix 8.

[5] KRU 14/105.

Pārameśvarīmatatantra

More than a dozen manuscripts of the Pārameśvarīmatatantra have been recovered in Nepal. The oldest of these is palmleaf written in an early Nevāri script. Unfortunately, it is not dated but may well belong to the 13th century if not earlier. The colophons claim that it is the scripture set in 84,000 verses that is part of a compilation consisting of 90 million (koṭi).[1] The most complete manuscripts begin at chapter (paṭala) twenty-four and end with chapter fifty-six. Thus, approximately half the text has been lost. Although what has survived of the text is quite long, the complete PMT was probably not as long as the colophons claim it to be.

Many of the colophons identify the PMT with the 'Śrīkubjikāmata'.[2] It is also linked with the MBT. The name Pārameśvarīmata, which appears in the long colophons of the MBT, may have been chosen for this text as it is a homonym of the MBT. The MBT figures as a universal authority that allows inclusion of other Kubjikā Tantras and reproduction. It is a door by means of which the corpus of authoritative scriptures can expand and new Tantras can find a place in it without disruptions.

Most of what remains of the PMT is taken up with the presentation of the main mantras and Krama in code. They are named after the mantras presented in them.[3] The mantras extracted are as follows. The first figure denotes the serial order of the chapters. The second one in brackets is the number of the chapter noted in the colophons. All the mantras are common and found in several places in the Kubjikā Tantras. 1 (24) the extraction of Meru. 2 (25) Śabdarāśi. 3 (26) the root Vidyā along with the Five Praṇavas, limbs and faces. 4 (27) Mālinī. 5 (28) the Triple Vidyā and the Aghoryāṣṭaka. 6 (29) the Twelve and Six Limbs (Dvādaśāṅga, Ṣaḍaṅga) and the deposition of Ambikā Vidyā. 7 (30) Tadgraha. 8 (31) The Twelve Verses (Dvādaśaśloka) and the Five Jewels. 9 (32) the Six Yoginīs concerned with restraint (nigraha). The text is long and cumbersome and for the most part not immediately intelligible. This is certainly not a text one could simply sit down and read. Thus, it is surprising, at first, that other Kubjikā sources, like the Siddhakhaṇḍa and the Ṭīkā, in which the mantras are easily accessible, are preserved in very few manuscripts. The substantial number of surviving manuscripts of the PMT indicates that it was a well respected scripture. Probably not read much, its name inspired reverence. Replete with the Krama mantras and full of their energy, the PMT was probably venerated as a particularly powerful scripture – a veritable written epitome of the Krama.

[1] The longer colophons begin: iti pārameśvarīmate navakoṭisaṁhitāyāṁ caturāśītisahasre.
[2] The colophons from 18 (41) to 33 (56) all state that the Tantra is called Śrīkubjikāmata.
[3] The colophons of MS NA no. 1/256 of the PMT are listed in BSP I p. 240-1.

Moreover, recorded in code, the mantras are preserved from the corruptions that would occur if they were simply written down directly. The tradition was certainly conscious of this danger. Thus, according to the Śrīmatasāra, the goddess herself feels unsure of the form of her own thirty-two syllable Vidyā because of such mistakes. Thus she introduces her question about this to the god as follows. He will reply by presenting the Vidyā in a code in which no such errors are possible:

> In some cases an anusvara is lost. Elsewhere a measure is corrupted. In some places a letter is disturbed or the (syllables) are reversed. In some cases foolish teachers have corrupted the liturgy of the scripture (āgamapaddhati). They say that this (Vidyā) has been received by the tradition in some other way (which is incorrect). In some cases the teacher is a fool (or else) the meaning has been destroyed by scholars. O god, even today a doubt has arisen in my heart (about the true form of the Vidyā).[1]

Along with the mantras of the Krama, the PMT also presents those of the goddesses identified and associated with Kubjikā. These are, essentially, her six modalities (prakāra) mentioned in the following verse:

> How and in what way is (Kubjikā) present in the centre of Meru? (She is) Vāgīśī who is Mahāmāyā, that is, Cāmuṇḍā the mistress of the Kula. (She is also) Mahākālī who conquers death, Trotalā (i.e. Tvaritā) and Tripurabhairavī. The Samayā Vidyā, called Kubjikā (kukārā) is Siddhamārtaṇḍa Bhairavī and in the Mahāsaṁmohana (Tantra) she is Nityā who severs (the bonds) and bestows liberation. O Mahādeva, this is the way Parā, the mother of the Kula, who possesses six modalities, abides.[2]

---

[1] kvacid bindus [k, kh:] truṭir yāti [kh: kraṭir yāti] kvacin mātrātruṭir [kh: kraṭir] bhavet |
kvacid varṇatruṭiś [kh: kraṭiś] caiva vilomañ ca kvacid bhavet ||
kvacinmūrkhāś ca ācāryā hatvā cāgamapaddhatim |
vadanty astyābhilabdhaiṣā [k, kh: asyā-; k: -labdheṣā] pāraṁparyeṇa cānyathā [kh: nānyathā] ||
mūrkho guruḥ kvacic cārtho [k, kh: -rthaṁ] dhvaṁsito [k, kh: -tā] śāstracintakaiḥ |
adyāpi saṁśayo deva saṁjāto hṛdimadhyataḥ || ŚMS (2) 9/55-57 (fl. 68b).

[2] kathaṁ kena prakāreṇa merumadhye vyavasthitā [-taṁ] |
*vāgīśī [vāgīśvi] * mahāmāyā cāmuṇḍā kulanāyikā* |
mṛtyuñjayā [-yaṁ] mahākālī trotalā tripurabhairavī |
samayavidyā kukārakhyā siddhamārtaṇḍabhairavī [-vi] |
mahāsammohane 6) nityā kṛntāntī [kṛtānti] muktidā |
parā kulamātā mahādeva ṣaṭprakārā yathā sthitā | PMT 24/45-48.

The PMT dedicates the following chapters to the presentation of the Vidyās of goddesses and mantras of gods in code. These are: 10 (33)[1] Kālajñānasaṁkarṣaṇī, 11 (34) Guhyakalī,[2] 12 (35) Tripurabhairavī, 13 (36) Saṁjīvanī Vidyā, 14 (37) Vajranityā Kāmadevī and 16 (39) Tvaritā. Two chapter are devoted to Bhairavī. These are 20 (43) and 22 (45). The mantras of Aghora and Tatpuruṣa are presented in chapters 17 (40) and 18 (41), respectively.[3]

Minor Texts

Canonical Works

The Nigūḍhajñānasadbhāvatantra

The texts outlined in the following section are called 'minor', because they have not been as influential in the tradition as the other major texts. Even so, some of them are quite substantial both in size and depth of content. The Nigūḍhajñānasadbhāvatantra is such.[4] The NJ affiliates itself to the KMT[5] and much of its contents are indeed inspired by the KMT. Thus, for example, it begins by presenting the same basic sacred geography outlined in the goddess's myth of the KMT. However, the NJ develops it by placing it in a larger cosmological framework. Primordial darkness precedes creation. The universe is within it at one with the Lord Tūṣṇīnātha who is in an unmanifest, transcendental state. From him proceed in serial order, the yogic states and the sacred seats to which they correspond and all the other sacred places. The text thus follows the KMT in its own way. Another example are the teachings concerning the 'Six Realities'. As in the KMT, these are on two paths, right and left. They are the Six Wheels on the right path and a series of metaphysical entities and their correspondences on the other. The two run in parallel like an image and its reflection. A corollary of its close affiliation to the KMT is the absence of any reference to Candrapura and Koṅkaṇa. Instead, the 'sacred seat of the Moon' (candrapīṭha), to which it refers a few times, is the Island of the Moon from which the teachings spread according to the NJ as they are said to do in the KMT.

---

[1] The first number is that of the chapter of the extant text text. The number in brackets is that of the chapter according to the colophons.

[2] This chapter is called in the colophon: guhye ātmasaṁvittibhedaḥ

[3] Chapters 15 (38) and 19 (42) are called Garbhayāga and Śālanirṇaya, respectively.

[4] See bibliography for details of the sole MS of this Tantra recovered so far.

[5] nirgūḍhajñānasādbhāve divyaughe kubjikāmate | NJ fl. 15a.

The Kulamūlaratnapañcakāvatāra

The Kulamūlaratnapañcakāvatāra is a short tract divided into eleven chapters (paṭala). The final colophon of the KRP declares that it is the essence of the Śrīmatasaṁhitā consisting of twelve thousand verses.[1] The first chapter deals with the basic theological and metaphysical nature of deity and the representation of fundamental reality as Kula, Akula and Kaula.[2] The first part of chapter two (1-24ab) deals with the progressive emergence from Kuṇḍalinī, the energy of the divine will and its successive phases, of hosts of millions of Yoginīs. These are of various types belonging to the eight Kulas governed by the Mothers. The second half of this chapter (24cd-36ab) enumerates the eight groups of eight Rules (aṣṭāṣṭasamaya) initiates must observe. Chapter three deals with the groups of six (kulaṣaṭka). These include the six groups of the Krama (4-5-6-4-5-4), Wheels, Elements, Princes, States, Penetrations, types of Self, Lords, Śaktis, Yoginīs, signs of attainment, six types of manipulations of mantra, Paths, constituents of the body, and types of the Krama (1-20). The six parts (ṣaṭprakāra) of the Krama of Twenty-eight are explained in their essential form as states and energies (21-31ab). The 'Six Parts' (ṣaṭprakāra) are then explained in three other ways (31cd-34ab, 34cd-39, 40-55ab). The chapter ends with a brief description of the Six Wheels, which completes the two sets of groups of six, that is, the northern and the southern that correspond to emanation and withdrawal, respectively (55cd-63). Chapter four presents a series of triads that are related to the three Olis of the threefold Krama.

Chapter five begins with a brief description of Kaula initiation by piercing (vedha) (1-13). This is followed by worship of the maṇḍala that begins with the inner projection of the vowels into the body and the six limbs of the goddess (14-27ab). In this way the foundation of the maṇḍala is formed that serves as the seat of Svacchandabhairava, alias Aghora, who is visualized next as eating disease. (27cd-29ab). A vessel of water is offered and a jar full of wine is installed in the north-east with offerings of meat and the Kula substances. Then one should worship the Āgamas and the rest (29cd-39ab). After preparing the seat (āsana / pīṭha), the limbs and faces of Aghora are worshipped in the maṇḍala (39cd ff.) The Mothers are worshipped with their Bhairavas around the seat on the eight petals of a lotus. Then Aghora is worshipped in the sacrificial area (sthaṇḍila). After worship comes the repetition of the mantra. Then one should perform penance (prāyaścitta). The number of repetitions of mantra required are listed according to the sin or inauspicious dream, along with one tenth the number of fire offerings and gift to the teacher. Concerning the rosary, types and way of using it. The offering of lamps comes next followed by the formation of Kujāmudrā and the singing of hymns to the teacher, Mothers, and Bhairava etc. The preliminary rite concludes with an offering of a lamp to Bhairava and drinking from the wine vessel (pātra).

[1] iti dvādaśasāhasre śrīmatasaṁhitāyāṁ sārāt sārataraṁ ratnapañcakāvatāraṁ samāptam ||
[2] See intro. vol. 2, p. 288-290 where a passage from this chapter concerning these principles has been translated.

A series of the basic Krama mantras are presented in chapter six. Some are extracted in code from a grid drawn at the beginning (1-4), others are written out in full directly. These are the Five Praṇavas (5-13) and Vidyārajñī, that is, the Samayā Vidyā of 32 syllables (14-27ab), the mantras of the faces and limbs of the Vidyā in association with those of the Eight Mothers (27cd-32ab), and the goddesses of the Limbs (32cd-44ab). After the extraction of the group of six limbs come the mantras of the Pīṭhas and the Siddhas and Yoginīs in them (44cd-59ab), the Five Vimalās (= Mahantārīpañcaka) (59cd-62ab), the group of five seats (Pīṭhapañcaka) (62cd-67), the Eight Mothers (68-79ab), the Dūtīs of the goddess's six limbs in relation to the six Wheels in the body (79cd-108), the mantras of the Ḍādiyoginīs and the Five Jewels (109-114), the Five Voids (Vyomapañcaka) and the Three Caves (Guhātraya). The series concludes with the three Gāyatrīs for three times of day.

Chapter seven deals with the projection of various realities into the body. These include the Six Wheels (1-3), sacred mountains and rivers (4-7), the Six Paths (8-9ab), the Five Gestures (mudrāpañcaka) (9cd-11) and a series of Yoginīs along with the sacred fields, primary and secondary (kṣetra, upakṣetra) and meeting grounds (saṁdoha) (12-24). These are the 'signs of places' (sthānacihna) within the body. It ends with a short passage concerning the arousal of Kuṇḍalinī and consciousness in association with the utterance of mantras (25-49ab).

The first part of chapter eight is concerned with the 'inner procedure' (adhyātmikavidhāna). This begins with the projection of the eight goddesses into the body (1-6). This is followed by the deposition of the limbs and faces of the goddess onto the body. Ṣoḍhāśakti then moves back and forth through them and they are worshipped by means of Viṣuva Yoga[1] (7-11ab). Once the body has been prepared in this way the Āgama and the Śrīkrama is worshipped in the maṇḍala of 24 sacred sites.[2] Kubjikā is visualized in the centre within one's own body. She has a pleasing face and two arms. She holds a rosary and makes a fear dispelling gesture. She is uttering the scriptures and is in the 'state of an androgen' (ardhanarīśvara) (11cd-22). After this the mantras of the Krama extracted in the previous chapter are projected into the body (23-40). Then the three standard Gestures are described, that is, Padma, Triśikhā and Yoni, first externally and then internally (41-51ab). The chapter ends with a long passage in which the drawing of the Kramamaṇḍala and worship of the deities of the Krama within it are described along with the attendent rites (51cd-81ab).

[1] Concerning Viṣuva Yoga, see KuKh 2/15-16 and notes.
[2] See KuKh vol. 2, appendix 8.

Chapter nine begins with an exposition of the development of the four Yogic states (Piṇḍa, Pada, Rūpa and Rūpātīta) in relation to the centres (cakra, padma) within the body (1-29). This is followed by a short presentation of the types of Self (30-34) and admonition to seek liberation (35-38). After this comes a long passage on the states of those dedicated to the practice of Yoga. These are the Sixteen Great States (avasthā) listed in the KMT.[1] The KRP suppliments the account in the KMT by relating auspicious states and Yoginīs to them in centres in the body (39-51ab). These are followed by the inauspicious ones (51cd-56), how they both arise and their effects good and bad (57-66ab). A long passage follows dedicated to an interesting, rich exposition of yogic states, types and forms of consciousness, aids and impediments to its development (66cd-96). As the Path of Yoga leads to the destruction of death, this is discussed next. This is achieved by performing ritual yogic suicide (utkrānti). Auspicious times to do this are listed and where the syllables of the Yoginīs should be deposited on the body (97-124).

Chapter ten opens with the worship of the elders (1-13ab). This is followed by the rite of offering of the sacred thread (pavitraka). This is performed during the rainy season to atone for transgressions of the Rule that may have occurred during the year (13ab-42).

Chapter eleven begins with a description of a talisman made from the core triangle, hexagram and eight petal lotus of the Kramamaṇḍala (1-10) and its benefits (11-18ab). This is followed by the worship of Kumārī in the middle of the Krama, early morning. Ritual union (cakrakrīḍā) follows. The text enjoins that the Kaula consort should be offered to a disciple who belongs to the tradition[2] and that all should be done in the utmost secrecy. Thus the KRP ends (18cd-24).

The Kubikopaniṣad

An edition and translation of the Kubjikopaṇiṣad has been published by Goudriaan and Schoterman.[3] Although technically not a Tantra, it is virtually so in much of its content. The Brahminical Vedic character of the text is based on extensive quotations from the Atharvaveda. This Upaniṣad is meant for Atharvan Brahmins, who are Kubjikā initiates for it prescribes that: ‘a worshipper of Kubjikā . . . should be a brahman from Parāśara's clan and a teacher in the school

---

[1] KMT 11/95-98ab = KRP 9/39cd-42ab.
[2] dātavyā niścitaṁ devi śiṣyāya [kh: śiṣyāca] kramikāya ca || KRP 11/23cd.
[3] See bibliography.

of Pippalāda-śaunaka as taught in the Atharvaveda'.[1] The relatively late date of the text is indicated by the central place it gives to the Ten Mahāvidyās whose worship as a group is probably not prior to the 15th century. It is highly probable that this text was written by a Newar Brahmin who worshipped Kubjikā and Siddhalakṣmī. Siddhalakṣmī is identified with Kubjikā in her form as Siddhikubjī, who is also called Vajrakubjī. If he was a Rājapodhyāya Brahmin, his tutelary deity (kuladevatā) would have been Kubjikā. Moreover, if he belonged to a line of Rājopādhyāyas who served as the Malla kings' priests, he would have been well versed in the cult of the goddess Taleju, that is, Siddhalakṣmī, the tutelary of the Malla kings. According to the Kubjikopaṇiṣad, Siddhalakṣmī is the tenth and most important of the Mahāvidyās. All ten Mahāvidyās are placed on Kubjikā's Yantra with Siddhalakṣmī occupying the centre as Kubjikā's main manifestation.[2] Thus her place of honour as the greatest, most regal of these ten royal goddesses, as they are described in this text, maintains her overt supremacy as the goddess of the king even as she is worshipped covertly by his priest as the manifestation of his own tutelary goddess.

By the time the Ten Mahāvidyās became popular in India, the worship of Siddhalakṣmī and other related goddesses outside the Kathmandu Valley had probably ceased. Moreover, the worship of Siddhalakṣmī as one of the Ten Mahāvidyās in the primary textual sources is very rare, if not unique to this text.

The Kubjikātantra

This is a relatively late medieval text that has no connection with the Kubjikā corpus. Indeed, Kubjikā barely appears in the title of the work and as a form (kujāvārā) in which the goddess is addressed. It is couched, as are most of the Śākta Tantras of this period, in the worship of the Ten Mahāvidyās, who are totally unknown to the Kubjikā Tantras. The one supreme goddess manifests as all the others and is the source of deities who govern the three qualities and the five elements. The seed syllables and mantras of the Ten Mahāvidyās and related gods and goddesses are presented in a simple code in the first four chapters. These are followed by two chapters that describe inner projections into the subtle body of the goddess as consciousness (caitanya) whose 'form is a snake'. They include her visualized forms in each of the Wheels (cakra) of the body along with the contemplation of her supreme essential nature. Chapters seven and eight describe worship in vīrabhāva. As part of that type of discipline (sādhanā) some of chapter eight is dedicated to a description magical rites to overcome one's enemies. The concluding portion of this chapter concerns worship with a consort seated on a corpse in a cremation ground.

[1] Kubjikopaṇiṣad 10/2.
[2] Goudriaan and Schoterman 1994: 12.

Chapter nine prescribes contemplation of the deity with form (sākāra) leading to that without form (nirākāra). It continues with seed-syllables required to make mantras successful along with Yantras dedicated to various Kaula goddesses and the projection of mantras into them and how they should be repeated (japa). Chapter ten is concerned with various afflictions (bādha) by female demons to which women who desire off-spring are subject and their remedy with mantras, herbs and Tantric practice. Chapter eleven is in prose and outlines various rites that form part of daily and occasional worship (pūjā). The remaining chapters are dedicated to the description of rites, mantras and visualizations of the Wheels in the body related to various goddesses for fertility and protection of new born babies, young children and rites for the still-born and aborted.

Perhaps this Tantra was redacted in Kāmarūpa. Evidence for this is the special power attributed to this sacred seat (siddhapīṭha) amongst a series of others listed in chapter seven (7/48-55)[1]

Short Tracts

The Siddhapañcāśikā

Only two manuscripts of this short tract have been recovered.[2] According to the colophons, it was revealed (avatārita) or came forth (nirgata) from Candrapīṭha. This is associated with Matysendranātha and so is the Island of the Moon, Candradvīpa, rather than the City of the Moon, Candrapura. The latter is never mentioned, nor is Koṅkaṇa. Thus it belongs to a number of tracts, including the two Śrimatasāras, and, indeed, most of the other Tantras we will examine here that claim their teachings come from there, as does the KMT.[3] The SP represents Kubjikā her there in her differentiated, iconic form (sakalarūpa) as

[1] kāmarūpaṁ mahāpīṭhaṁ sarvakāmaphalapradam ||
kalau śīghraphalaṁ devi kāmarūpam idaṁ smṛtam | KT 7/54cd-55ab.

[2] See bibliography. Although the text is called the Fifty (verses concerning) the Siddhas it 120 verses long. The following colophon refers to it as 'the hundred (verses) whose root is the Kulālītantra' which is closer to the actual figure iti śrīsiddhapañcāśikāyāṁ [k, kh: -sikāyāṁ] candrapīṭhavinirgatāyāṁ śrīmūlanāthāvatāritāyāṁ divyājñāguṇaprakāśikāyāṁ [k: - sikāyāṁ] kulālītantramūlaśatāyāṁ caturthaḥ paṭalaḥ ||

[3] Accordingly, the first chapter of the KMT where the first part of the goddess's myth is narrated is called the Descent onto the Island of the Moon. iti kulālikāmnāye śrīkubjikāmate candradvīpāvatāro nāma prathamaḥ paṭalaḥ

Raudrī Ambikā. She is in the middle of the World of the Triple Peak Mountain (trikūṭabhuvana), which is her triangular Yoni, surrounded by the energies and beings of the Krama of Twenty-eight realities (padārtha) that occupy the maṇḍala around her. Adorned with the Krama mantras, limbs and the rest, she is the mother who awakens the universe.[1]

The link with the Island of the Moon, where the original Kaula teachings were recovered by Matsyendranātha, is stressed in the opening passage. The descent of the Kula teachings (kulāvatāra) to earth as the Siddhakaula takes place there. Śrīnātha, as Navātman 'with nine names'[2] is called Mīna, that is, Matsyendra, the Fisherman.[3] He is the 'one who brought down to earth the first division of the teaching' (ādibhedāvatāra), which is called the 'preceding tradition' (pūrvāmnāya).[4] Thus, according to the colphons, the SP is 'brought down to earth by the venerable Root Nātha and reveals the qualities of the Divine Command'.[5]

The goddess is the speaker in the SP. This is a sign that it is not amongst the earliest Kubjikā texts where the god is the speaker. Nonetheless, she says that she is presenting the teachings of the Siddha Path, which has come forth from the 'root path' (mūlamārga). This, we are led to understand, is the one propagated by Matsyendra as the 'extensive teaching of the book (in the belly of) the fish' (matsyagranthārthavistara)[6] that he recovered.[7] Apart from this mythical book, the SP refers clearly to one text that has been recovered and is attributed to Matsyendra. This is the Kulapañcāśikā, which is called the 'root of Kula',[8] implying that the Siddhapañcāśikā is like it.

The next chapter opens with the Sūtra of Twelve Verses (sūtradvādaśa).[9] This was probably drawn from YKh (1) where the last two verses are missing in

---

[1] SP 1/19-28.
sarvālaṅkārasaṁpannāṁ [k, kh: -saṁpannā] sarvāścaryamayīṁ [k, kh: -mayī] tathā |
sakalena tu rūpeṇa candrapīṭhe vyavasthitām || SP 1/27.

[2] Navātman's consort, the goddess, also has nine names. These include Maṅgalā, Harasiddhi and Kālarātrī, which relate the goddess to the Kālīkrama, and Yogeśī to the Trikā. As Carcikā she is Kubjikā. The other names are Matsyodarī and the obscure Navālī, Bhaṭṭā and Kilikilā (SP 1/14cd-15).

[3] navābhidhānam ādau ca navātmā mīnasaṁjñakaḥ ||
matsyendro dhīvaraś cāhaṁ kaivartako [k, kh: -ka] vaṭas tathā | SP 1/12cd-13ab.

[4] iti śrīmahendrāvatāre pūrvāmnāyasūcitaṁ nāma ādibhedāvatāraḥ | 1/19ab.

[5] śrīmūlanāthāvatāritā divyājñāguṇaprakāśikā

[6] SP 1/30.

[7] See intro. vol. 2, above, p. 320 ff..

[8] amūlaṁ kulamūlaṁ [kh: -la] tu kulapañcāśikocyate [k, kh: -sikocyate] || 1/7cd. See bibliography for MSs of this text.

[9] iti siddhapañcāśikāyāṁ [k, kh: -sikāyāṁ] candrapīṭhāvatāritāyāṁ dvādaśasūtranirṇayo nāma dvitīyaḥ paṭalaḥ || See note to KuKh 2/7cd-7ef where the first few verses have been translated.

the sole manuscript that contains the last part of YKh (1). It is a compact hymn in twelve verses set in sragdharā describing the essentials of the maṇḍala and the deity in the centre. It opens with a reference to Rudra who is Bhargojāta, the Sun. After describing the parts of the maṇḍala, the triangular Yoni and the hexagram with its energies it concludes with a eulogy of the goddess who is Kuṇḍalinī and Trikoṇā. She is Bhairavī, who emerges from the god who is perpetually at rest, as his divine Will that courses through the 'supreme and beautiful hexagram'. In this way, he enjoys the experiences of the world (bhoga) as he desires.[1] A succinct, and yet complete, exposition of the main features of the maṇḍala, the god and the goddess who is the energies that flow within it, it must have been popular amongst initiates. Thus we find it again in the first chapter of the *Śrīmatasāra-*saṁgraha where the verses are embedded in an explanation couched in the same symbolic language.

Chapter three is a list of the twenty-eight Siddhas and their Śaktis who constitute the 'aggregate of the six entities', that is, the parts of the Krama.[2] The next chapter lists the Siddhas and Śaktis in the End of the Twelve and distributed through the body. Similarly, the final one lists a series of groups of mantras that are related to the Krama and its limbs that are the object of worship. The whole reads like a summary of a series of groups of mantras taught orally by a teacher who explained this concise and obscure text.

The Kramasūtrādhikāra

Only two manuscripts of the Kramasūtrādhikāra have been recovered. It consists of just four chapters (paṭala). The colophons ascribe it to the 'first descent of scripture' which, like the SP, has come from the Island of the Moon.[3] It opens with verses drawn from one of the versions of the Root Sūtra found in the KuKh.[4] Three other verses are also found in the KuKh from which they were probably drawn.[5] Some verses are also common with the KRP.[6]

More concerned with theoretical matters and inner practice, rather than ritual, this short tract, consisting of just four chapters, is very dense and rich in

---

[1] tasyecchā nirgatā [k, kh: nirgato] sūkṣmā bhairavī [k: bhe-] śaktir uttamā ||
carate sā pare ramye ṣaṭkoṇe tattvabhūṣite | [. . .]
bhuṅkte [k, kh: bhukte] ca svecchayā bhogān [k, kh: bhogād] icchayā vratamācaret [k: vatamā-] || SP 1/17cd-18ab, 19cd.

[2] ṣaṭpadārthagatāḥ [k, kh: -tā] siddhāḥ amoghāḥ [k, kh: amoghā] śaktibhiryutāḥ [k, kh: -tā] ||
aṣṭāviṁśanmahāvīryāḥ sugopyāḥ [k, kh: sugopyā] phaladāyakāḥ [k, kh: -kā] | SP 3/20cd-21ab.

[3] ity ādyāvatāre śrīcandradvīpavinirgate kramasūtrādhikāre

[4] See note to KuKh 26/2.

[5] KuKh 2/8-10 = KrSūA 1/54-56.

[6] KRP 7/1cd ff. = KrSūA 1/67 ff..

content. The first chapter is called 'concerning Mudrā' (mudrādhikāra). Mudrā is the goddess Kubjikā 'whose nature is consciousness' (cidrūpā) and Kuṇḍalinī 'who rises and falls.'[1] She is described as the energy that unfolds into the Triangle of the Yoni and moves through the Wheels in the body.

The second chapter is 'the teaching concerning the inner body' (adhyatmaśarīranirṇaya). As before, in consonance with the Six Kulas, the six parts of the Krama are projected into the Six Wheels. In this case the Krama consists of twenty-seven parts (4-5-6-4-5-3).[2] The third chapter is dedicated to the extraction of Kubjikā's Vidyā (vidyoddhāra). The fourth[3] consists of a short lexicon of code names for the letters of the alphabet (varṇasaṁjñā).

The Two Śrīmatasāras

The Śrīmatasārasaṁgraha

Three Kubjikā Tantras have been recovered that present themselves as the 'essence of the Śrīmata'. They are the Śrīmatasārasaṁgraha, the Śrīmatasāra and the Ciñcinīmatasārasamuccaya. As Śrī is Kubjikā, who is otherwise called Ciñcinī, it's title virtually means the same. It was common practice, it seems, for major traditions to produce short tracts that presented themselves as the essence (sāra) of their teachings. The Tripurasārasamuccaya, for example, is a well known text of this sort belonging to the Śrīvidyā tradition. A certain Akulendranātha[4] wrote the Pīyūṣaratnamahodadhi[1] that is preserved in a 13th

---

[1] cidrūpā kubjikā nāma durvijñeyā surāsuraiḥ |
evaṁ kuṇḍalinī śaktir ūrdhvādho 'nekadhā gatā || KrSūA 1/89.

[2] This is not in accord with the previous exposition of the Krama which is drawn from the second chapter of the KuKh and consists of twenty-eight parts. It seems that the KrSūA is aware of this and so says:

This is the Krama of twenty-seven (parts) and is worshipped by the goddess on another basis. O Great Goddess, the names (of the beings within it) differ from the Krama that was revealed (initially).

saptāviṁśatkamaṁ hy etat devyānyaśreṇa pūjitam |
avatārakramād bhinnaṁ nāmabhiḥ parameśvari || KrSūA 2/16

[3] The colphon of the fourth chapter says it is the fifth, although this chapter follows immediately after the third. This is the situation in both MSs, so it is not possible if this is a scribal error in the common source MS or a chapter is missing.

[4] We know nothing about Akulendranātha except what he says about himself in the last colophon of the Sārasaṁgraha. There he writes that he is the founder of the Akulamahādarśana that belongs to the Bauddhāmnāya, which is surprising as the deity he praises at the beginning of his work is Akula, that 'contains Śiva and Śakti'. However, he quotes the Buddhist Siddha Saraha in the century (?) Nepalese manuscript. The work describes itself as 'a collection of all the sāras'.[2] He also produced a compilation of 'sāra' texts that is catalogued as the Sārasaṁgraha[3] in which he draws passages from the Śrīmatasāra and the Ciñcinīmatasāra. The second Śrīmatasāra understands the 'essence' of the tradition to be, above all, its most important mantras and their manipulations to which it accordingly dedicates most if its attention. These are presented systematically as aspects of parts of the goddess, her Krama and her maṇḍala. As such, the text repeatedly stresses, they have a deep metaphysical 'essence' and are the 'essence' of the teaching. The other Śrīmatasāra also dedicates a lot of space to mantras and ritual; however, much of it also concerns stages and states of Kuṇḍalinī and the like. The CMSS concentrates its attention entirely on such matters. There the 'essence' of the tradition is understood to be the elevated states the yogi experiences that lead to liberation and are attained with it. Thus there are no mantras at all in the CMSS. Instead, we find cryptic, concise expositions of elevated mystical states.

Only one manuscript has been recovered in Nepal of the first of the three *Śrīmata*s.[4] It is also called Śrīmatasaṁgraha in the colophon of one of its five chapters (paṭala). Otherwise it called Śrīmatasāra (in one instance) or just Matasāra (twice). It affiliates itself to the Mudrāpīṭha which, as we have seen, is the group of Bhairava Tantras to which the KMT is ascribed in the JY.[5] The colophons refer to it as the 'ultimate essence drawn from the essence' and the 'profound Kubjikāmata' and affiliate it to the Kulālikāmnāya.[6] There are several indications in the text that it may have been redacted fairly early on in the development of the scriptural tradition. One is that the speaker is Laghvikā, a form of Kubjikā which, we have seen, became redundant.

---

vernacular in the Pīyūṣaratnamahodadhi which may indicate that he was from the north-east of India. There is no other reference from a Buddhist text.

[1] The Pīyūṣaratnamahodadhi is preserved in a single old Nepalese palmleaf manuscript written in Newari characters in the Asiatic Society of Bengal in Calcutta. It is ASB MS accession no. 6619, MS no. 10724B.

[2] The last colophon reads: iti śrī akulendranāthena nirmmitasamastasārasaṁgrahaḥ pīyūṣaratnamahodadhir nāma. Chakravarti 1940: vol. 2, 736.

[3] ASB MS accession no. 6620 MS no. 10724D.

[4] The manuscript is called Śrīmatasāra it is NAK no. 5-4956-871; NGMPP reel no. A 177/13.

[5] See above, p. 100, 102 and 118.

[6] The colophons four read:

iti kulālikāmnāye mudrāpīṭhe matasāre prathamaḥ paṭalaḥ ||

*iti śrīmatasārasaṁgrahe divyāvatāre pra * nirṇayo nāma dvitīyapaṭalaḥ samāptaḥ* ||

iti śrīmatasāre sārāt sārottare tṛtīyaḥ paṭalaḥ ||

iti mudrāpīṭhe paramarahasye gūḍhakubjikāmate matasāre caturthaḥ paṭalaḥ ||

It opens with an explanation of a few verses praising Rudra as Bhargojāta, the Sun. These are also found in YKh (1) from which they are probably drawn.[1] They are also found, as we have seen, in the SP. Here the verses are interspersed with explanations expounding the nature and form of the maṇḍala in terms of its deeper metaphysical energies and processes. This is dovetailed into an exposition of the six groups that constitute the Kramas, which is the concern of the rest of the chapter. These are both the Krama of Twenty-eight parts (divided 4-5-6-4-5-4) and the Krama of Twenty-seven (divided 4-5-6-4-5-3). The groups are presented as energies, metaphysical principles, forms of the vital breath, yogic states and the like, embodied in goddesses and Siddhas. The exposition is orderly, presenting each group of each Krama one after another. The first chapter concludes with a short passage concerning the observance of the rules (samayācāra) and penance if they are broken.

The first half of chapter two (up to 99) consists of lists of names of the Siddhas and Yoginīs in many groups of three, four, five and six that constitute these Kramas. The second half of this chapter concerns the liturgy of the rites (pūjākrama). It begins with a description of the drawing of the Yogapīṭha. Laghvikā is worshipped in the middle of the usual triangle in the form of her thirty-two syllable Vidyā,[2] as is the teacher. The form of the maṇḍala is described and its contents. This is followed by a series of rites that are described very briefly. Groups are again listed that are projected into the maṇḍala and into the body. In the Point in the centre is the heart of the subtle body and the maṇḍala. About this the Tantra says:

> The Great Sound which, both manifest and unmanifest, is located in the Heart resounds perpetually. It makes the sound 'kuja' constantly and (so) Kubjinī resounds.[3]

Now the myth of the goddess is retold in brief and how she transmitted the teaching to Bhairava called Mitra and he assumed the form of Oḍḍīśa, Ṣaṣṭha and Caryā. Thus initiating another long series of triads listed in this part of the chapter associated with the three seats (up to verse 178). After this the goddess wants to know about the six modalities (ṣaṭprakāra). These are the six Kaula lineages

---

iti mudrāpīṭhe sārāt sāratare gūḍhakubjikāmate ādibhede matapañcakasaṁgrahe śrīmatasāre pañcamapaṭalaḥ samāptaḥ ||

[1] These verses are found in YKh (1) 54/1-4. They are translated in a note to KuKh 2/7cd-7ef.

[2] madhye tu karṇikā caturdalasamanitā || karṇikāpraṇavākhyā tu ojāpūkā trikoṇagā |
madhye tu laghvikā devī dvātriṁśākṣaramuddharet || ŚMS (1) 2/102cd-103.

[3] hṛdisthaṁ nadate nityaṁ vyaktāvyaktaṁ mahāravam ||
kujaśabdaṁ kurute nityaṁ kubjinī tu vivādyate | ŚMS (1) 2/147cd-148ab.

started by the disciples of Matsyendranātha. This is followed by the three sequences of teachers (divya, divyādivya and adivya) of the Siddhakrama. The mortal one (adivya) is that of the four human Siddhas, all of whom, the text stresses, are Brahmins. These are Mitra (the 'great Brahmin and Yogi') who is said to have been born in Ahicchatra in Madhyadeśa. Ṣaṣṭhanātha is said to come from Karahaṭṭaka in Bengal. Caryā from Oḍḍa, that is, Orissa, and Ciñcinīśa from Oḍḍiyāna.[1] We see, in these ideal ascriptions, the desire to draw prestige from these places. The Śrīmatasaṁgraha does know about Candrapura, to which it refers several times.[2] Although the First Siddha is said to have gone there, the Nine Siddhas mentioned here are the Bhairavas related to Navātman that will come into the world,[3] not the legendary figures of the later sections of the MBT onwards. This is similar to the situation in YKh (1) and the KRU. There too the first Siddha is associated with Ahicchatra and the lineages of Siddhas are not yet fully developed. However, the picture is evolving towards the one presented in the ṢSS. Thus the Śrīmatasaṁgraha narrates how the four Siddhas originated and finally received the consecration that gave them authority over the four sacred seats in Candrapura.[4] The text goes on to narrate how other Siddhas received the Command from the goddess Laghvī in Candrapura and made many disciples in various places in India. The text also refers to the 'great Buddhist' called Vajra who shattered a tree there with the power he received from the goddess.[5] Thus, the legend associated with the first Siddhas is developing towards its most

---

[1] See adivyaṁ tu pravakṣyāmi siddhajātā yathākramam |
mitranāmnā tu yo devo gurunaraḥ puṣkaraḥ priye ||
mahādvijo mahāyogī vedasiddhāntapāragaḥ [-siddhāṁna-] |
ādhārākhyaḥ punaḥ so 'pi vāmakarṇe tu kuṇḍalam ||
yo sottīśa deveśi madhyadeśasamudbhavaḥ |
*ahicchatre tu saṁjāte dvijaś caiva mahā * ti* ||
cakrācārye tu so devi anuṣṭhānarataḥ sadā |
ṣaṣṭhanāthaṁ tu so bhadre karahaṭṭekakodbhavaḥ ||
dvijanmā kaṁṭhaśakhastu kuraṅgī nāma saṁsthitaḥ |
caryānāmeti yo devi oḍḍadeśasamudbhavaḥ ||
virajākhyastu saṁjāto madecchaḥ [madecaḥ] parikīrtitaḥ |
ciñcīśākhyastu [cicīśā-] yo bhadre oḍḍiyāṇe tu sambhavaḥ ||
mahātejo mahādhyāyo viraktātmā bahuśrutaḥ |
oṁkārākhyaḥ prasiddho 'sau śaivasiddho 'tra pāragaḥ ||
evaṁ te sarva siddhās tu devyā dhyānarataḥ sadā | ŚMS (1) fl. 14b, 2/203-210ab.

[2] See SM (1) 2/230, 232.

[3] MSā (1)1/208 ff..

[4] devicandrapure yat [yā] tu abhiṣiktaṁ [-kta] catuṣṭayam |
*catuḥpīṭhādhikāritve * * * tvā parameśvari [-rī]* || ŚMS (1) 2/230.

[5] tatraiva ca mahābuddho vajrasaṁjño 'mitaṁ [vaktrasaṁjñā-] mahat || mantrajñānāvalokena vajrasphoṭaṁ kṛtaṁ mahat |
truṭitruṭitaśabdas [trūṭitrūṭita-] tu kṣaṇād [-ṇā] vṛkṣas tu bheditaḥ || ibid. 2/236cd-237.

coherent and systematic form, which we find in the ṢSS. The ideal nature of the Siddhas is also evident by their parallel location in the body and within the metaphysical principles. We may therefore tentatively suggest that the Śrīmatasaṁgraha was written sometime before the ṢSS was redacted but after YKh (1).

Chapter three begins with a description of the 'six modalities' (ṣaṭprakāra). Here this is understood to be the group of six Wheels into which the Six Princes are projected (1-14ab). This is followed by an exposition of the syllable Vāgbhava, its 'pervasion', that is, the presence within the Six Wheels and its 'iconic form' (mūrti) as the goddess's Yoni (bhaga). After declaring that Vāgbhava pervades the body[1] a few verses follow describing the Wheels. Then comes a substantial passage outlining the six kinds of penetration of the Command (āveśa) drawn from the KMT[2] which introduces a description of forms of initiation by piercing (vedhadīkṣā) of the inner centres.

Initiation is followed, as usual, by the rite in which the initiate is given a new name. The maṇḍala used for this is a triangle lined with 16 Bhairavas on each side and two in the middle, governing the fifty letters. (51-66). Then comes a passage describing the Kaula substances and the characteristics of the Kaula female partner (dūtī). This is heralded by a description of how the 50 Mālinī Yoginīs are projected into the triangle (69-96ab) with Kubjikā in the centre.[3] The consecration of the disciples mirrors the division of Śiva and Śakti, with the male initiate as Śiva and the female as Śakti.[4] Thus this is the means to find a name for the female initiate who is the Kaula consort (dūtī) worshipped in the rite described next. This begins with a list of her characteristics followed by the mantras that should be projected onto her body and that of her partner. These include the extraction of the Dūtī's mantra which is the Kālikā / Khañjikā Vidyā of 32 syllables with its faces and limbs that serves to purify the sacrificial substance produced by the Dūtī (dūtīdravya) (96cd-120). Then the deposition of the Five Jewels completes the purification of the Dūtī's body. This is followed by the mantras of the six Dūtīs who are limbs of the goddess (up to 165).[5]

Short passages follow concerning penance to atone for sins (up to 176), the rites performed on festival days during the spring month of Caitra (caitraparvavidhi) for the teachers and elders (guruparvavidhi) (up to 194) and those of the preparation and offering of the sacred thread (pavitrārohaṇa).

---

[1] ŚMS (1) 3/19cd-20ab approximates to KMT 11/34cd-35ab.

[2] ŚMS (2) 3/26-40 corresponds to KMT 10/83-101.

[3] tanmadhye kubjikā devī ṣaṭpadaughasamanvitā | ŚMS (1) 3/77ab.

[4] śivaśaktiprabhedena abhiṣekam udāhṛtam || ŚMS (1) 3/78cd

[5] Concerning these two groups of mantras, see chapters 62 and 63 of the KuKh.

The subject of chapter four is the 'Teaching concerning the Lamps' (dīpāmnāya). There are five main lamps that represent successive phases of emanation related to the five elements and higher metaphysical principles. Essentially the Five Lamps are forms or aspects of the Five Causes. These are Sadāśiva, Īśvara, Rudra, Viṣṇu and Brahmā who mark the progressive descent into creation. After outlining this cosmology and adding four more secondary lamps to make a set of nine principles, the lamps are equated with the parts of the Six Paths and distributed through the 24 and 36 Tattvas.

Chapter five is about spiritual knowledge (jñāna), the causes of bondage and the path to liberation. Bondage is the result of ignoring the teacher's instruction (gurupramāda) and 'going to a woman to whom one should not go' (agamyāgamana), eating what should not be eaten (abhakṣyabhakṣaṇa) and drinking what should not be drunk. All is set right by the power of the teacher's Command (ājñā) by virtue of which one is not stained by sin. The essence of this teaching is expressed in the following lines:

> One whose mind is bound in the supreme principle should fix it in the Bliss of Stillness. This is said to be the 'fixed binding' of one who is well disciplined in the Supreme Principle.[1]

The Śrīmatasārasaṁgraha ends with a short Devīstotra attributed to Gaganānandanātha who is, presumably, the first of the Nine Nāthas.

The Śrīmatasāra

Two manuscripts of the Śrīmatasāra have been recovered in Nepal. Another Nepalese palmleaf manuscript is deposited in the Asiatic Society at Calcutta. Surprisingly, there as many as five more manuscripts in the library in Mehraghar Fort in Jodhpur, all of them copied there in the 19th century.[2] There are very few significant variant readings in these MSs, which thus appear to be all derived from a single original which was, no doubt, Nepalese. This Śrīmatasāra consists of seventeen chapters called *paṭala*s. This is another Kubjikā Tantra the colophons claim was revealed on the Island of the Moon.[3] Indeed, although the diction 'avvā' appears a few times, neither Candrapura nor Koṅkaṇa are

---

[1] paratattve manobaddho [vaddhā] nirānande tu bandhayet ||
badhabandham iti khyātaṁ paratattve niyāmitaḥ | ŚMS (1) 5/14cd-15ab.

[2] They are serial nos. 1742 to 1746, accession nos. 2104 to 2108.

[3] A typical colophon reads: iti śrī [kh: nāsti] śrīmatasāre śrīcandradvīpavinirgate śrīmahā-bhairavāvatārite yugasiddhāvatāro nāmaprathamaḥ [kh: ājñāprasādaḥ prathamaḥ] paṭalaḥ ||

The following two colophons have the same format. All the rest of the colophons simply read: iti śrimatasāre mentioned in this ŚMS. Instead we find the Island of the Moon, that replaces it so effectively that instead of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala, with Candrapura as its triangular core, the basic maṇḍala is the Island of the Moon in which the Yuganāthas and their consorts are worshipped. In addition chapter five describes how mantras of the Dūtīs who are the goddesses of Kubjikā's limbs are projected into it. Thus it functions as the main maṇḍala which is the body of the goddess as well as the Gurumaṇḍala of the tradition. Clearly, this text aligns itself with the stream of scripture linked more closely to the KMT.

This link is evident right from the beginning of the Tantra. The scene opens, as does the KMT, with a view of the Santānabhuvana in the midst of the Triple Peak mountain. However, Bhairava who resides there in this case is Yuganātha. How the Candradvīpamaṇḍala should be drawn is described and how the letters and mantras are projected into it with Siddhanātha in the centre with his consort (śakti). The Tantra goes on to supply the mantra in code of Siddhanātha in the four ages followed by his pūjā name in code. This is followed by the secret and other names of the four Yuganāthas and their consorts (śakti), who are aspects of the Siddhanātha in the four Yugas, worshipped in the Maṇḍala of the Island of the Moon. The chapter closes with the statement that they initiated nine disciples who were sent with their consorts into the world to spread the grace of the deity's Command.

The names of these elders (jyeṣṭha) and their consorts are given in code in chapter two. The Tantra narrates how they received the three kinds of initiation, Āṇava, Śākta and Śāmbhava and then transmitted the teachings. The next chapter continues in the same way describing how Brahmā, Viṣṇu and other gods received initiation and became Siddhas. Then the names they received are presented in code.

The following chapters up to nine are the 'treasury of mantras' (mantrakośa, vidyākośa), which covers over half the text. Most of the basic mantras and Vidyās of the Kubjikā Tantras are presented here although the Kramas themselves are dealt with cursorily. The prescriptions (vidhi) often include their depositions on the body, and in some cases the maṇḍala of the deity or deities of a single mantra or group of them along with a few details of when and how it is worshipped. The mantras are mostly presented in code, although many are simply written out complete.

The rest of the Śrīmatasāra is concerned the basic principles of Kaula ritual. Chapter ten teaches the ritual use of wine and meat and briefly outlines the basic elements of ritual union (maithuna). The chapter begins with the myth of the birth of the goddess Surā from the milky ocean and her visualized form. The gods present there who drank her became powerful, those who did not suffered many troubles. The text continues by explaining the importance of the ritual use of wine and drinking it according to the teacher's instruction as part of the Kula path (up to 45). Then it outlines the characteristics of fit and unfit female partners (46-56), sacred times for the preparation and consumption of meat and the ecstatic gatherings where it is consumed. Chapter eleven describes the projection of the Six Wheels into the maṇḍala of the Island of the Moon along with the syllables of their mantras and letters (1-17). Next comes a passage concerning sacred sites and pilgrimage drawn from the KMT,[1] followed by the projection of the seats along the axis of the body and other sacred sites. Chapter twelve is about the Krama of the 'descent in the four ages' (caturyugāvatāra). It begins with the distribution of the letters of the Mālinī alphabet in the Candradvīpamaṇḍala from which the names of the Yuganāthas, their nine disciples and consorts in each Age are extracted and then projected into the maṇḍala. Similarly, the subject of chapter thirteen are the 'eight times eight Siddhas', that is, the Sixteen Siddhas and their consorts in each of the four Ages. In this Age they descended into Koṅkaṇa.[2]

Chapter fourteen is concerned with Mudrā which is Śakti who is so-called because she 'deludes the mass of obstacles and melts away bondage'.[3] This is Khecarī, the Kula Mudrā. Outwardly this consists of the gestures corresponding to the six limbs formed by positioning the hands. Inwardly it is the dhyāna of the movement of the vital breath that is dragged through the Wheels by the Mudrā, visualization (dhyāna) and the recitation of mantra. This is followed by following the movement of the breath through the limbs of the body. By practicing this Mudrā one enters the gross, subtle and supreme body and acquires magical powers. (1-31ab). The Mudrā of the Four Pīṭhas (31cd-46) is described next. The chapter concludes with admonitions to practice in secret, follow the teacher's instructions and remain faithful to the practice (ācāra) of the Śrīmata and make every effort to take refuge in the Śrīkula.

Chapter fifteen begins with the extraction of the mantra born from Svacchandamaṇi called Mahāmāyā (1-24). A series of mudrās are described next. These are formed externally by positioning the hands and, in some cases, are accompanied by other actions. They are Aghoryā Mudrā, Trāsanī and Khecarī, which is done along with breath control (prāṇāyāma) (25-36). This is followed by a method of quitting the body (utkrānti) involving breath control (37-43ab). The rest of the chapter is dedicated to a description of worship (arcana) by means of the Krama mantras within the maṇḍala (yogapīṭha) of the sacred seats, the

---

[1] ŚMS (2) 11/18cd-34ab = KMT 25/101cd-112ab, 116cd-117ab, 93-96ab.

[2] kalau yuge mahāghore koṅkaṇe [k, kh: kauṅkaṇe] ca avatāritāḥ [k, kh: -tā] |
lokasyānugrahārthāya [k: lokebhyonugrahā-; kh: lokasyaṁnugrahā-] ājñāpālanapāvanāḥ [kh: pāvanāt] || ŚMS (2) 12/231

[3] mohanād [k: mohavān; kh: mohanān] vighnasaṁghasya pāśasya caiva [k, kh: pāśaścaiva tu] drāvaṇam ||
mohanaṁ drāvaṇaṁ caiva mudrākhyā [k, kh: -kṣā] śaktirūpiṇī | ŚMS (2) 14/2cd-3ab.

Siddhas and Yoginīs who reside there, the Eight Mothers and the deities of the Krama.

After worshipping the Krama, the main Vidyā is repeated many times (japa) and the Kramastotra is recited in praise of the goddess within the maṇḍala of the Krama of twenty-eight parts. She is in the vital breaths, the body, and the sacred sites along with the Mothers and the great rivers. She is identified with the host of goddesses, Yoginīs and consorts of the Siddhas of the Krama (97ab-151ab). The stotra ends with a eulogy of the virtues and benefits acquired by reciting it regularly in front of the Krama (151cd- end).

The next chapter outlines the worship of a series of lamps (dīpa), eight or sixty-four, placed around the main Kuladīpa in a square maṇḍala. This is done on sacred days dedicated to the worship of elder initiates and peers. The seventeenth chapter begins with the rules the disciple should observe (1-27ab) and ends with admonitions to respect, protect and worship the Śrīmata which is a 'casket of gems' (ratnakāraṇḍaka) and, of course, the Śrīmatasāra which is the repository (bhaṇḍāra) of the Śrīmata of the First Lord (ādyanātha).

The Ciñciṇīmatasārasamuccaya

The Ciñciṇīmatasārasamuccaya – the Collection of the Essence of the Mata of the Goddess Ciñciṇī – is a short but very dense tract divided into twelve chapters (paṭala) It is about 700 verses long. The form 'Avvā' does not appear in the CMSS, nor is there any reference at all to Candrapura, Koṅkaṇa or the lineages of Siddhas. As with the tracts we have examined, this too understands the teachings from which it draws to have been brought down onto the Island of the Moon by Siddhanātha.[1] Accordingly, its conception of the Divine Current (divyaugha) to which it ascribes its teachings, differs substantially from that of the MBT. Thus, the developments that took place when the tradition shifted to Koṅkaṇa and the Deccan are poorly represented in the CMSS. On the other hand, it is well acquainted with the sophisticated projections into the Triangle of the goddess and even begins with a variant form of the Root Sūtra that describes them. Moreover, it expounds an esoteric conception of the four *āmnāya*s which

---

[1] The CMSS begins with the following verse:

The supremely pure Siddhanātha who is all things resides in the womb in the calyx of the lotus of the consciousness of the divine Sun. He brought the supreme light of the consciousness of (the goddess) Ciñciṇī down onto the Island of the Moon in the middle of the great ocean.

divyārkabodhakamalodaragarbhasaṁsthaṁ viśvātmakaṁ [sarve: visvātmakaṁ] paramanirmalasiddhanātham |
yenāvatārita mahārṇavamadhyacandradvīpāntare [k: candraḥdvīpāntaraṁ; kh: -candraḥdvīpāntaraṁ; g gh: candreḥdvīpāntaraṁ] paramaciñcinicitprakāśam || evidences a later stage of development of the conception of the main Kaula schools than the one taught in YKh (1).[1] The goddess is not called Ciñciṇī in the KMT. In the MBT this name for the goddess reflects her association with the tamarind tree (ciñcā) bent by Vṛkṣanātha – the First Siddha in Candrapura. In the CMSS it is the Tree of Consciousness of which the Kulas are the branches.[2]

Thus, it seems that the CMSS was not redacted in the Deccan, although it may well belong to the period when other Kubjikā Tantras were. It appears that the Kashmiri tradition has had an impact on the CMSS. One verse is quoted from the CMSS by Jayaratha in his commentary on the TĀ[3] and so was known in Kashmiri in the 13th century. Indeed, the CMSS betrays some knowledge of the terminology and doctrines of the learned Trika Śaivism of Kashmir. The term 'vimarśa' ('reflective awareness'), for example, virtually absent in the Āgamas themselves, is know to the CMSS. This reflective awareness is, according to the CMSS, the vitality of mantras:[4]

> It is called 'mantra' because it possesses the attributes of reflection (manana) and salvation (trāṇa). Reflection is omniscience and salvation is grace in the world of transmigration. Once one reflects (parāmṛśya) on its root (one realises) the omnipresent root of energy. It is the supreme arising which is the Great Pervasion, its form is filled with the aggregate of its (energies). That is the vitality and the essential nature that manifests of the kings of mantras. Once reflected on that reflective awareness (vimarśa), one should recollect the king of mantras. O goddess, it is the means (derived) from the means. Otherwise, (without this a mantra) would be like (any other) insentient thing.[5]

---

[1] See intro. vol. 2, p. 353 ff..

[2] CMSS 1/25cd-33ab.

[3] The Yoni is said to be the Triangle. It is the secret circle in the Sky. The corners are will, knowledge and action and the Ciñcinīkrama is in the middle of it.

bhagaṁ [k: bhaga] trikoṇam ityuktaṁ [k, kh: trikoṇavikhyātaṁ; gh: trikonavikhyātaṁ] viyatsthaṁ [k, kh: dhiya-; g: dhipa-] guptamaṇḍalam ||
icchājñānakriyākoṇaṁ [k kh gh: -jñāṇa-] tanmadhye ciñcinīkramam |
CMSS 5/14cd-15ab. This verse is quoted in the commentary on TĀ 3/94.

[4] The vitality of mantras is reflective awareness, it is (their) essential nature and arising (into activity).

mantravīryaṁ [g: mamantraṁ vīryaṁ; gh: -vīrya] vimarśaṁ [k kh gh: vimarthaṁ; g: vimarṣaṁ] ca svarūpaṁ ca tathodayam || 2/11cd and 5/1cd.

[5] *mananaṁ sarvavettṛtvaṁ [k g: -vetyatvaṁ; gh: sarva * tyatvaṁ] trāṇaṁ* saṁsārānugraham ||

The vitality of mantras is an important object of inquiry for the early Trika Tantras. Both the SYM and the TS begin with this question. They teach that mantras derive their power from the energies of the letters (mātṛkā). Abhinavagupta goes a step further by equating these energies with aspects of the reflective awareness of the one divine consciousness. Moreover, this awareness is the pure, unconditioned ego (pūrṇāhaṁbhāva) of deity. In an earlier publication, it has been established that the notion of an absolute ego is expounded for the first time by Utpaladeva in his philosophy of recognition, the Pratyabhijñā. We do however find amongst the early Kashmiri theologians, like the Vaiṣṇava Vāmanadatta, the concept of a self-reflective divine consciousness that is not equated with an absolute ego. This is also the case with the early Kashmiri schools of the Kālīkrama that understood reality to be a flux of cognitive consciousness that unfolds on the individual level through the ego but is essentially beyond it.

'Spanda' is another term we find in the CMSS which is a part of the nomenclature of the Kālīkrama and is uncommon outside Kashmiri circles.[1] In the following passage it relates to a peculiar doctrine of the Kālīkrama that understands reality to be the pulse (spanda) of consciousness that 'touches' the stations of its phases and so is 'touch' (sparśa). The goddess's abode and her tradition is the source of this pulse and the ultimate state in which it ceases:

> The Root that flows with the pulsation (spanda) of the aesthetic delight of Touch (of the one reality that is) free of penetration (nirāveśa) (by another) is the radiant Western House, pervaded with pure liberation. The waveless ocean free of perception (māna) and its object (meya), deep and profound, it is said to be the House of Bliss (ānandaghara).[2]

---

mananatrāṇadharmitvāt [k: manama--tvā; g gh: -tvā] mantram ity abhidhīyate [gh: -yahidhīyate] |
yasya mūlaṁ parāmṛśya [k kh gh: parāmṛṣya; g: parāmūṣya] śaktimūlaṁ tu sarvagam [gh: -gaḥ] ||
tatpūñjabharitākāraṁ [k kh: tatpūñjaharitā-] mahāvyāptiparodayam |
uditaṁ [sarve: udito] mantrarājānāṁ tad vīryaṁ tat svarūpakam ||
tad vimarśaṁ [sarve: tadvimartha] parāmṛśya [sarve: parāmṛṣya] mantrarājam [k, kh, g, gh: -rājām] anusmaret [k: anussaret; kh: anuṁsmaret] |
sādhanāt sādhanaṁ devi anyathā jaḍavad [gh: jatravad] bhavet || CMSS 5/2cd-5.

[1] kramāt kramaparaṁ krāmaṁ [k kh: krāma] saṁkrāmaṁ kālikākramam ||
sphuraty antargatā [sarve: -gato] ghūrmir [all MSs: ghṛrmmir] anākhyaṁ spandam uttamam |
CMSS 7/205cd-206ab.

[2] nirāveśasparśarasaspandanisyandakandaram [all: niraveśaḥ parśa-; k: nisyakarā; kh: -rasampandanisyakarā; g: -nispanda-; gh: -saṁpandakarā] ||

This passage also exemplifies the liberal use of terms in the CMSS that apply to aspects of the act of perception, a concern that is practically absent in other Kubjikā sources. From these references, the presence of these technical terms and the knowledge the CMSS displays of the idealism of the Kālīkrama, which is centred on the act of perception, that developed in Kashmir suggests that the text was written by someone who knew it very well. While this does not prove that it was written in Kashmir, as the Kālīkrama was well known in the south of India in the first centuries of the second millenium, the absence of references to the Deccan and the rest noted above, support the view that the CMSS may have been written in Kashmir.

The CMSS is totally unconcerned with ritual, focusing instead on exalted inner states of yogic consciousness. These it presents in numerous ascending series each with a range of symbolic labels and described in the highly sophisticated and, not uncommonly, cryptic language of Kaula Yoga and the Kubjikā Tantras. Some of these are drawn from well known earlier traditions. Examples are the division into three spheres of realisation – Āṇava, Śākta and Śāmbhava.[1] The first of these contains a series of sixteen planes or 'foundations' arranged along the subtle body and beyond.[2] Many of these ascents lead to the states represented as the highest of the Kālīkrama which find their completion in the state to which the Paścimāmnāya leads and which it embodies. The four Kaula traditions themselves are treated this way.[3] Other ascents are not well known and may be original to the CMSS. The following will suffice as an example of this type, the language in which the teachings of the CMSS are couched and their ultimate aim. These are the Four Doors. The movement through them is the Divine Current (divyaugha) of the transmission and characterizes Kaula practice (kaulācāra).[4] Notice that the highest door is that of total withdrawal of all manifestation into primordial transcendental emptiness. Although a goal in the Kubjikā teachings, it is presented here in a form which is more in consonance with the Kālīkrama:

---

kaivalyavimalākrāntaṁ [gh : -kraṁtaṁ] gṛhaṁ paścimasasphuram [k g: -raḥ; gh: -saspharaḥ] |
mānameyaparikṣīṇanistaraṅgamahodadhiḥ [k kh: mānayeya-; gh: -nimtara-] ||
gādhaṁ [all: gādha] gambhīragahanaṁ tadānandagṛhaṁ [sarve: -gṛha] smṛtam [all: smṛtaḥ] |
CMSS 3/4cd-6ab.

[1] CMSS 4/24ff. See intro. vol. 1, p. 474 ff..

[2] CMSS 4/29-54. This is quoted in the notes to KuKh 25/34-36ab.

[3] See Dyczkowski 1988: 68ff..

[4] This is called the Quaternary of the Tradition (sampradāyacatuṣka). It is Kaulācāra, which is understood to be the Divine Sequence (divyakrama). CMSS 3/44ab.

1) The Door of Letters (Varṇadvāra)

(This door is) the Sun of Enlightenment that has arisen as the Sun of the Sky (of ultimate reality) within the Sound (svara) of the Void. It has become manifest in the form of a subtle resonance (dhvani) and hangs in the middle of the palate endowed with fifty letters born from the Vīrāvalikula (of the deities of the letters) by virtue of the current of the thread of the vital breath. (It is) Corporeal Speech (vaikharī) and the one who applies the three (levels of) Speech. It is the pure Kulabhairava who with his great mouth has (thus) emerged (as all of them).[1]

2) The Door of the Offspring (Prajadvāra)

The birth of offspring is the joy of the mind. Full of bliss, it flows. It is of three kinds and (consisting of) three streams, it is the Circle of the Sequence of the Three Abodes (of the one triadic reality). Flooded with the current of nectar, it is divine and is in the centre of the radiant pulse of (all that is) conscious and unconscious. This Door is called the Face of the Three Forms (trimūrti).[2]

3) The Door of Liberation (Mokṣadvāra)

The circle of the luminous energy (tejas) of consciousness and the unconscious is located within the wheel of the navel. It is the Great Yoni, supreme and divine, it illumines the Channel of Brahmā. By virtue of the upper and lower current, it is pervasive and

---

[1] khasvarānta svaravi samuditaṁ bodhabhāskaram [k gh: -bhāṣkaram] | dhvanirūpasamāpannaṁ tālumadhyāvalambitam ||
prāṇasūtrapravāhena [k gh: prāṇamūtra-] pañcāśadvarṇasaṁyutam [kh: pañcasadvarṇa-; k g gh: pañcāsadvarṇa-] |
vaikharī vaktrayoktrī ca vīrāvalikulodbhavam ||
viśālavaktraviśadaṁ [k g gh: viṣālavaktraviṣadaṁ; kh: -visadaṁ] nirgataṁ kulabhairavam |
CMSS 3/32-34ab.

[2] *prajāsūtir [k kh g: -sūti-; gh: -mūti] manohlādaṁ sravadānandanirbharam [g: pravadānanda * rbharaṁ]* |
triḥprakāraṁ [gh: -ra] trisravanaṁ [k kh gh: -sanavaṁ; g: -sravana] tridhāmakramamaṇḍalam [g: kulaṁmamaṇḍalaṁ] ||
amṛtaughaplutaṁ [k: amṛtāghaplataṁ; g gh: amṛtogha-] divyaṁ tanmadhye cidacitsphuram [g: ciñcidcitsphuraṁ] | trimūrtivadanaṁ devi prajādvāraṁ prakīrttitam || ibid. 3/35-36.

omnipresent. One should pierce through the path of the palate and cause the nectar of the energy of consciousness to flow.[1]

4) The Stainless (Nirañjana)

The arising of the Sequence of Mahākālī is located in the middle of Śiva's circle. (This sequence of) exertion (udyoga), manifestation (avabhāsā), relishing (of the experience) (carvita) and destruction (vilāpaka)[2] takes place there. This process is the `great destruction of destruction' in which the Ocean of Kula is devoured (by consciousness). The Stainless is omnipresent, it is the one illuminator who manifests all things. At the end of the aeon, which comes at the end of the great aeon, it abides within the great abode of Śiva. O beloved, he is the Hero (vīra) who, endowed with great luminous energy (mahātejas), delights in (consuming) the great sacrificial victim (mahāpaśu). Attained (siddha) on the plane of the great Siddha, it is the great circle of the Divine Current. And that process is the Inexplicable (anākhya) which is in the sphere of the contemplation (yukti) of the Yoginīs.[3]

---

[1] nābhicakrāntaragataṁ [g: -caktrā-] cidacittejamaṇḍalam |
mahāyoni paraṁ [gh: paṁraṁ] divyaṁ brahmanāḍiprakāśakam [k g gh: -prakāsakam] ||
adha - ūrddhvapravāhena [sarve: ūrddha-] vyāpakaṁ sarvatomukham |
bhedayet [g: bhedayat] tālumārgaṁ tu drāvayec citkalāmṛtam || ibid. 3/37-38.

[2] Notice here the use of the distinctive terminology of the Kashmiri Kālīkrama.

[3] śivamaṇḍalamadhyasthaṁ mahākālikramodayam ||
tatrodyogāvabhāsaṁ tu [sarve: -mabhāṣantu] carvitaṁ [k kh gh: cavitañ] ca vilāpakam [k kh: viropakam; gh: virāpakam] |
mahāsaṁhārasaṁhāraṁ grāsīkṛtakulārṇavam [k kh gh: grāśī-; g: grāsī-] ||
nirañjanaṁ [sarve: nirañjana] sarvagataṁ sarvābhāsaikabhāsakam [sarve: -bhāṣaikabhāṣakaṁ] |
*mahākalpāntakalpāntaṁ [k kh: māhā-; gh: mahā * * * kalpāntaṁ] mahāśivalayaṁ gatam* ||
mahātejodharaṁ vīraṁ mahāpaśupriyaṁ [sarve: -priyā] priye [k kh gh: priya; g: priyam] |
mahāsiddhapade [k g: -padvaṁ; kh gh: -paddaṁ] siddhaṁ mahādivyaughamaṇḍalam [k g gh: -divyogha-] ||
etat kramamanākhyaṁ [gh: kama-] ca yoginīyuktigocaram [sarve: yogiṇī-] | ibid. 3/39cd-43ab.

Commentaries

The Ṭīkā, otherwise called Vidhāna, by Rūpaśiva

For reason that will become apparent, I have chosen to call this text simply 'Ṭīkā'. Mostly written in prose, its the equivalent of about 6,000 verses long. The catalogues list it as the Manthānabhairavaṭīkā.[1] Only four MSs of the Ṭīkā have been recovered of which two are complete. The oldest is plamleaf written in old Devanāgarī and as was probably copied before the 13th century.[2] The author identifies himself in the first colophon of his work as Rūpaśiva.[3] The Ṭīkā closes with a list of the names of the teachers who were the disciples of the Sixteen Siddhas.[4] Rūpaśiva places himself at the end of this series and takes the opportunity to tell us something about himself. Otherwise called Rāmānanda, he says he was a Brahmin who knew the Ṛgveda. His teacher was Bhaṭṭa Śrīloṭhaviṣṇu who was the son of Bhaṭṭa Śrīkamalaviṣṇu and was well versed in the Sāmaveda. Rūpaśiva took permission from his teacher to write the Ṭīkā in the city of Pravarapura on the banks of the river Vitasta, that is, modern Srinagar in Kashmir.[5]

The Ṭīkā presents itself as a commentary on the MBT, the 'scripture of twenty-four thousand verses'. The version of the MBT meant here is the one we have identified as the earliest recension that consisted of a collection of sūtras. This is the one to which Rūpaśiva refers in the last colophon of his work and at the end of it where he describes its descent and tells us that it consists of 107 sūtras.[6] However, although the Ṭīkā is indeed a commentary, it does not comment on a single running text. The intention of the author was not to comment on a text as much as to present the Kubjikā teachings concerning the Krama and the lineages of teachers. Thus, although a commentary, it is more of the nature of a

---

[1] BSP vol. 2 p. 68.

[2] The MS is NAK 1-447. It consists 128 folios. The beginning and end are missing.

[3] The first colophon is that of chapter two. It reads:
ity ādyāvatāre [k: -ra] mahāmanthānabhairavayajñe anvaye [k: anvaya] saptakoṭipramāṇe merumārgavinirgate lakṣapādādike kādibhede caturviṁśatisāhasre tantroddhṛtasūtrārthasaṁgrahe [k kh: -ha] śrīrūpaśivaviracitaṭīkāyāṁ [kh: -śivaracitaṭīkāyāṁ] dvitīya ānandaḥ || Ṭ MS K fl. 14a.

[4] See intro. vol. 2, p. 534-535.

[5] *oṁ śrīkāśmīradeśatilakabhūtaśrīpravarapurādhiṣṭhānāntargatakalikalila-kṣālitakṣmābahula-salilakallolinīśrīvitastāsindhusaṅgame [k:-kṣālatakṣamavahala- kh: -kaliṁkalilakṣālatakṣma-vahala-; k kh: -śrīcitastā-] prārthanā prārthitā [k kh: -ta] gṛhītā ugrahāravāstavya gautamagotra-likhita [kh: -likhi *-] kulakramāgatat sāmavedasamastādhyāyino [k kh: -na] bhaṭṭaśrī-kamalaviṣṇusūnunā bhaṭṭaśrīloṭhaviṣṇudīkṣābhidhānena [kh: -dhāna ] rūpaśiva iti prasiddhapūjānāmnā [k: prasiddhaḥ-] śrīrāmānanda iti nikhilapaścimagṛha-samudbhūta-saṁtānaviditasmāja ṛgvedayā (?) | Ṭ MS K fl. 185b.

[6] See above, p. 77-78.

liturgical manual elaborated with the necessary theoretical notions and explanations to be able to perform the worship of the Krama (kramārcana) both externally and inwardly. Accordingly, the Ṭīkā is also called 'vidhāna'. By calling it this, the learned Rūpaśiva wished his work to be no less than a Vedic vidhāna. Barth explains that the vidhānas are related to the vedāṅgas and that they are a 'whole class of writings the origin of which is very ancient, that have no other object than to direct in the observance of a kind of cultus at a reduced rate, which would procure the same advantages as the great sacrifices.'[1] In other words, a vidhāna is a prescription (which is the literal meaning of the word) for the way a ritual should be performed. This is the sense of the word in the Ṛgvidhāna. Ascribed to Śaunaka, it describes the magical effects produced by the recitation of hymns or even single verses of the ṚV. Vidhānas are also associated with the other Vedas and these contain descriptions of various penances, expiatory rites and the like as well as rules for the repetition of mantras and the fire sacrifice.[2]

Rūpaśiva chooses this name for his work not only because it is analogously concerned with the Kubjikā Kaula rites but also because it consists of an arrangement (which is another meaning of the word vidhāna) of passages relating to this. They are presented with an extensive commentary much of which, it seems, is drawn by the author from other sources. Read with the necessary details required to complete the mantras and the ritual procedure, especially the ritual actions the author omits, the core of the Ṭīkā can be used as a liturgy (paddhati) of the Krama projected into the Kramamaṇḍala. Although essentially similar in structure to the one presented in the SKh, the mantras and their layout generally differ. The Ṭīkā, like the SKh, presents nine Kramas for each of the three lineages (oli). Thus, for example, the lineage of the Child (baloli), which here is the first one, contains the Kramas of the three lineages each of which, in the same way is expanded by the three Kramas. So the first of these is the Krama of the Child of the Child of the Krama of the Eldest. In this way we get the twenty-seven subdivisions of the Krama of Twenty-seven. The Ṭīkā mentions, but does expound, a further more extended Krama formed by multiplying by three again in the same way to make eighty-one subdivisions. If that were not enough, there is yet another Krama consisting of two hundred and forty-three subdivisions!

The Gurumaṇḍala is worshipped in conjunction with the Kramamaṇḍala, accordingly, the Ṭīkā dwells at length on that as well. Also expounded in chapter twenty-three of the ŚM, it consists of the worship of the lines of teachers in conjunction with the permutations of the seed-syllable Navātman. In this context we find a long passage from what appears to be a part of the first chapter of what

---

[1] Quoted by Bhatt 1979: 78.
[2] Ibid. pp. 79-81.

remains of the KuKauM. Important also, and found only in the Ṭīkā, is an exposition of the rite of initiation, which it claims is the one to which the Saṁvartāsūtra alludes as the 'sixteenfold consecration of the Command' (ṣoḍaśājñābhiṣeka). It is largely based on the SvT and follows the common pattern of intiatory rites described in the Siddhāntāgamas. [1]

The Ṭīkā's liturgy reflects the care Kubjikā Tantras take to maintain a balance between the outer liturgy and the projections into the subtle body of the officiant. These include not only the well known Six Wheels, but also a series of other inner stations – such as Voids, Supports (ādhāra), and targets (lakṣa) that mark the ascent of Kuṇḍalinī that is necessary to make the worship of the Krama fruitful. In the same vein, it reproduces accounts of the inner Gestures (mudrā) that bring about and mark this ascent and others concerning the cycles of time (kālacakra) projected into the breath. Thus the Ṭīkā ensures that the ritual agent is fully empowered by his inner yogic identity.

Just as the Ṭīkā is not a commentary in the normal sense of the word, it is also not as closely linked to the MBT as one would suppose from what the Ṭīkā says about itself. Several verses on which the Ṭīkā comments have been identified in all three sections of the MBT and a long passage in the KuKauM. However, we also find a few verses in common with the ŚM. The Kulamuṣṭā is mentioned twice and the Niḥśvāsasaṁhitā once. Another source from which the Ṭīkā draws is the Nigūḍhajñānatantra to which the Ṭīkā refers simply as the Nigūḍha. One manuscript of this text has been found.[2] It contains matter in common with the Bṛhadāgama (which we shall discuss further ahead) and the Ṣaṭsāhasra. One of these is the construction of a Kailāsamaṇḍala, which the Ṭīkā prefers to draw from the Nigūḍha as the presentation there is more concise than in the other two sources.[3]

---

[1] See KuKh vol. 8, appendix 1.

[2] See bibliography. The Nigūḍhajñānatantra is quoted by Jñānaprakāśa a 14th century South Indian Siddhāntin who resided for some time in a Śaiva maṭha in Vārāṇasī.

[3] The Ṭīkā says: 'an explanation of this Kailāsa should be learnt in the Bṛhadāgama, the Nigūḍha and the Ṣaṭsāhasra. Here, however, it will be explained in brief, (how the Kailāsamaṇḍala) is conjoined with the sixteen vowels while be just outlined in accord with the Nigūḍha (where it said) beginning with 'I will explain Kailāsa . . . ' 'the clear minded man should place six diagonal threads above.'

asya kailāsasya [k: -śasya] vyākhyānaṁ bṛhadāgame tathā nigūḍhe ṣaṭsāhasre ca jñātavyam [kh: -vya] | iha punaḥ saṁkṣepāt svaraṣoḍaśayuktaṁ uddeśamātreṇa nigūḍhābhiprāyeṇa [kh: nigūrḍhā-] kathyate yathā kailāsaṁ [kailāśaṁ] pravakṣyāmi ity ādyārabhya | yathā ṣaḍūrdhvatiryagān caiva sūtrān pātya prasannadhīḥ || Ṭ MS K fl. 147a-147b.

These references are found in fl. 16a of the Nigūḍhajñāna. The passage ends with the following colophon that declares that the Ṭīkā comments on the third chapter of the the Nigūḍha- iti nigūḍhe [k, kh: nigūḍha] kailāsavyāvarṇano nāma tṛtīyānandaḥ [kh: tryāndandaḥ] || (Ṭ MS K fl. 149b). The Ṭīkā continues with a commentary of the fourth and fifth chapters (ānanda) of the Concluding part of an exposition of Six Wheels, before going on to explain how they are accommodated into the Five Wheels according to the Ṣaṭsāhasra (chapter 18),[1] the Ṭīkā refers to the reader to the fifth chapter of the Nigūḍha, from which it has drawn,[2] as it has from the other two texts.

The Ṭīkā does not refer to any other sources apart from the KMT,[3] the ṢSS and the Bṛhadāgama. Many verses can be traced to these sources, especially the ṢSS. There are also a good number that cannot, some of which are attributed to the Bṛhadāgama. These two are mentioned repeatedly in the Ṭīkā as its main sources rather than the MBT, unless we identify the Bṛhadāgama with the MBT, which is not certain. In one place YKh (1) appears to refer to the MBT as the Bṛhadāgama.[4] Is the Bṛhadāgama a recension of the MBT called the Kālikārṇava (or Kaulikārṇava?) mentioned in the colophon of the Ṭīkā noted above? We have seen that the first chapter of the extant KuKauM, on which the Ṭīkā comments at length, is a sūtra drawn from a redaction of the MBT. Could this have been the Bṛhadāgama to which Rūpaśiva regularly refers? If so is the commentary on it by Rūpaśiva or did he simply take it from a commentary on the Bṛhadāgama? The Ṭīkā incorporates entire chapters of the ṢSS and its commentary.[5] The passages that have been identified are so extensive that one wonders how much of the rest of the Ṭīkā was written by Rūpaśiva.

Nigūḍha. The Ṭīkā reports that that begins with 'now I will explain something else . . ., and that it deals with the form of emanation (sṛṣṭi) that comes from Kailāsa. (tataś caturthānande athānyat saṁpravakṣāmi ity ādy ārabhya yathā kailāsaṁbhavā sṛṣṭiḥ sā kathayati |) which is in fact the subject of the fourth chapter of the Nigūḍhajñāna (fl. 17a-17b). The Ṭīkā goes on to comment on the fifth chapter of which it quotes the first verse, which is indeed the first verse of the fifth chapter of the Nigūḍhajñāna (fl. 17b). The Ṭīkā says:

pañcamānande tasyaiva kailāsasya viśuddharūpasya dvitīyaprakāreṇa vyāvarṇanam | yathā |
kāmāt saṁkṣobhitaṁ devi sthāṇu sṛṣṭinimittataḥ |

The commentary on this chapter ends with the colophon: iti nirgūḍhe pañcamānande ṣaṭcakranirṇayaḥ |

[1] idānīṁ ṣaṭsāhasrābhiprāyeṇa pañcacakrāṇāṁ ṣaṭcakrābhyantare uddeśaṁ kriyate |
Ṭ MS K fl. 164a.

[2] iti nigūḍhe [k kh: nirgūḍha] pañcamānande ṣaṭcakranirṇayaḥ | Ṭ MS K fl. 164a). This is in fact the subject of the fifth chapter of the Nigūḍhajñāna.

[3] This is, presumably, the scripture of three and a half thousand verses (adhyuṣṭasahasra) to which it refers in two places i.e. MS K fl. 16b and fl. 80a.

[4] YKh (1) 27/73-74ab. There the Bṛhadāgama is called the Khañjinīmata of 24,000 verses. See above, note 1, p. 51.

[5] For example, the colophon at the end of the second chapter (ānanda) reads: iti śrīṣaṭsāhasre aṣṭāviṁśatitame [k kh: -viṁśatame] paṭale rūpaśodhane kramapūjā kathitā [k kh: -tam] || The matter presented there is indeed drawn, as the colophon says, from the twenty-eighth chapter of the ṢSS.

The Bṛhadāgama appears to have contained material in common with the ṢSS. From the references that are identified in the Ṭīkā it appears that part, at least, of the Bṛhadāgama was an extended version of the ṢSS. Thus, in one place Rudraśiva refers his reader to the Bṛhadāgama for an extensive exposition of a topic that is treated briefly in the ṢSS.[1] The ṢSS and its commentary coincide more than once with the Bṛhadāgama and what may have been its commentary. For example, in one place the Ṭīkā discusses the divisions of time. The passage begins with verses that can be traced to chapter 35 of the ṢSS and the commentary is the one we find there. At one point the Ṭīkā announces that it quoting from the Bṛhadāgama. These lines are not found in the ṢSS, although the commentary is that of the ṢSS. However, the next time the Bṛhadāgama is quoted, the verses can be traced to the ṢSS.[2] This may be because the recension of the ṢSS at that time differed from the one that has come down to us. This is not likely. The Ṭīkā accurately identifies the chapters of the ṢSS in which the passages it refers to occur. Even though a reference said to be from the Bṛhadāgama can be traced in the ṢSS, it is unlikely that the ṢSS is always the text that is referred to as the Bṛhadāgama in the Ṭīkā. We find several references to the ṢSS and the Bṛhadāgama together as two separate texts.[3] Sometimes they are

---

[1] Rudraśiva writes: Thus the fifteenth (consecration) which concerns the worship of the Krama and is the initiation of the apprentice (putraka) has been explained. It should be learnt in detail from the Bṛhadāgama. However, (an exposition of the same subject) is also completed in brief in the seventeenth chapter.

putrakadīkṣā [k: putradadīkṣā] ca kathitā | vistareṇa bṛhadāgame jñātavyam |
kintu tathā siddhaṁ [k kh: siddhi] saṁkṣepāt saptadaśame [k kh: saptā-] paṭale | Ṭ MS K fl. 76b-77a.

Rudraśiva then goes on to quote two lines from chapter seventeen of the ṢSS (i.e. 17/63).

[2] The first instance occurs on fl. 128a of MS K of the Ṭīkā and the second on fl. 129a. The lines commented there correspond to ṢSS 35/13cd-15.

[3] Again, this is known clearly in the Bṛhadāgama or else in the Ṣaṭsāhasra or in the Adhyuṣṭasāhasra (i.e. the KMT), the (subject) is presented in brief. As it is said in the ṢSS: [. . .] This should be clearly known in the ṢSS beginning from the twenty-sixth chapter.

sphuṭaṁ punaḥ bṛhadāgame athavā ṣaṭsāhasre [k kh: ṣaṭsahasre] vā adhyuṣṭasahasre [k kh: advyasahasraṁ] jñāyate [k: jāyate] | iha punaḥ saṁkṣepād uddeśaṁ [kh: saṁkṣepād ddeśaṁ] kriyate | yathā śrīṣaṭsāhasre [k kh: -sahasre] vākyam [k kh: vāhyam] [. . .] ity ādi ṣaṭsāhasre [k kh: -sahasre] ṣaḍviṁśatamapaṭalād ārabhya sphuṭaṁ jñātavyam [k kh: -vyā] | Ṭ MS K fl. 16b.

Elsewhere the Ṭ says: Such is the Samvartāmaṇḍala in the End of the Twelve. It has been explained here in brief. One should known the details extensively in the Ṣaṭsāhasra or in the Bṛhadāgama.

evaṁ vidhaṁ [saṁvidhaṁ] saṁvartāmaṇḍalaṁ dvādaśānte saṁkṣepād uddeśamātrāt kathitam | vistareṇa ṣaṭsahasre vā bṛhadāgame jñātavyam | iti brahmākāśaṁ kathitam | Ṭ MS K fl. 173a.

mentioned together, along with the KMT as alternative sources for common teachings.[1] In one instance, the Bṛhadāgama is even presented as the source of a teaching found in both the KMT and ṢSS. The evidence is confusing. In one place Rūpaśiva tells us that his source is the Bṛhadāgama and we find that the long passage that follows is very close to the commentary on the ṢSS. However, there are substantial differences.[2] Is this simply a matter of variants of the same text or did the Bṛhadāgama have a commentary of its own? There are other examples of this sort where the differences between the commentary in the Ṭīkā and the ṢSS are more considerable. This may be because the Ṭīkā draws from the commentary on the Bṛhadāgama rather than that of the ṢSS.

Extensive passages not found in the KMT or the ṢSS are either attributed to the Bṛhadāgama or derived from it. The Sixteenfold Consecration is one of these. The Ṭīkā begins its exposition by quoting some verses in which the sixteen consecrations are listed.[3] Not in the ṢSS, they are probably drawn from the Bṛhadāgama to which the Ṭīkā refers in several places in the course of the exposition. These sixteen include, succinctly and in their own way, the complete range of the basic Śaiva and Kaula initiatory rites. The model for the first range of rites – the Śaiva – are the rituals of the Āgamas of the Śaivasiddhānta and those of the closely related Svacchandatantra.[4] The latter is an important source for the Kubjikā Tantras in general and is particularly mentioned by the author of the Ṭīkā as one of the two sources, along with the Bṛhadāgama, for a part of the procedure outlined here.[5] It is also mentioned along with the Niḥśvāsakārikā.[1]

---

[1] At the end of an exposition of the Wheels in the subtle body, the Ṭīkā concludes: Thus the five Wheels of the Goddesses and Dūtīs have been outlined in brief in relation to the Six Wheels. The full details can be known from the KMT (Adhyuṣṭasahasra), the Ṣaṭsāhasra or the Bṛhadāgama.

iti ṣaṭcakrāśrayeṇa devyādūtyādipañcacakrāṇāṁ uddeśamātraṁ kathitam | nirdeśamātraṁ [nirdeśo na] kathitam | nirdeśaḥ adhyuṣṭasahasre ṣaṭsāhasrye [-sre] bṛhadāgame vā jñātavyam | Ṭ MS K fl. 164b.

This subject is in fact treated in chapters 14 to 16 of the KMT and chapters 19 to 25 of the ṢSS.

[2] The Ṭ says that the Mudrās can be clearly understood in the Bṛhadāgama.
tad bṛhadāgame sphuṭaṁ [kh: sphuṭa] jñāyate | iha punaḥ saṁkṣepāt [kh: -yāt] kathyate | Ṭ MS K fl 37a. The passage in question extends from here up to fl. 48b of MS K which corresponds loosely to the commentary on chapter 10 of the ṢSS.

[3] The four and a half verses in which the sixteen consecrations are listed in full are on folio 82a. of MS K.

[4] See Dyczkowski 1988: 139 n. 24 and 1992: 235.

[5] (The teacher) should cause the fetters of the disciple's Self to be struck, cut, and destroyed etc by Śakti Kuṇḍalinī by means of the movement of the vital breath from the Foundation preceded by deep feeling (bhāva) and the utterance of the Samayā Vidyā. Then he should be conjoined with the Lord (patitattva) who is free of defect and perfectly tranquil. The Initiation by means of the

The close relationship between the Bṛhadāgama and the ṢSS is again apparent in this context. The former is mentioned in conjunction with the consecration in several places throughout the exposition. After a brief description of the Consecration of Knowledge and the naming ceremony of the disciple Rūpaśiva refers the reader to the Bṛhadāgama for an extensive exposition and the seventeenth chapter of an unnamed text for a short version of the rite. This rite is described in the seventeenth chapter of the ṢSS, which we may therefore surmise is the text to which he is referring.[2] Further ahead, the Ṭīka goes on to reproduce passages from the ṢSS and its commentary.

The Bṛhadāgama also contained substantial departures from the ṢSS. One is the exposition of the mantras through which the teachers of the Divine Current are worshipped. Although the worship of only these teachers is attributed directly to the Bṛhadāgama, it may well also have been the source of the rest. At any rate, none of the quotes drawn from the Bṛhadāgama can be traced to the MBT or the ṢSS which, anyway, does not conceive the Divine Current of teachers in this way.[3] Another is the Krama presented in the Ṭīkā. Rūpaśiva tell us that the mantras that make up the first set of nine Kramas (three each for the three lineages) and the remaining sets

---

Spheres of Energies has been stated in brief. (It is described) extensively in the Bṛhadāgama and also in the Svacchandatantra.

śaktikuṇḍalyādhāraprāṇagamena [kh: -gameṇa] samayāvidyoccāraṇapūrvakena [kh: - pūrvakena] śiṣyātmānaṁ bhāvapūrvakena pāśatāḍanacchedanahatādikaṁ kārayet | [k, kh: + iti saṁkṣepāt kalādīkṣā kathitā] tataḥ patitattve [k kh: pari-] anāmaye pariśānte niyojayet | iti saṁkṣepāt kalādīkṣā kathitā | vistareṇa punaḥ bṛhadāgame [kh: -gamo] tathā svacchandabhaṭṭārake vā* | Ṭ MS K fl. 74b

[1] śiṣyasyābhiṣecanaṁ kārayet | iti bṛhadāgame kathitam tathā niḥśvāsakārikāyām uktam | Ṭ MS K fl. 70a.

[2] See ṢSS 17/130ff. pañcadaśamaṁ [k: -daśakaṁ] putrakadīkṣā [k: putradadīkṣā] ca kathitā | vistareṇa bṛhadāgame jñātavyam | kintu tathā siddhaṁ [k kh: siddhi] saṁkṣepāt saptadaśame [k kh: saptā-] paṭale | Ṭ MS K fl. 77a.

[3] The passage drawn from the Bṛhadāgama relates to the final part of the maṇḍala in which the teachers are worshipped. This is called the Sequence of the Bliss of the Command (ājñānandakrama) glossed as the Sequence of the Eighteen Nāthas (aṣṭādaśanāthakrama). These are the eighteen teachers that make up the Convention of the Flower (puṣpasaṁnketa), that is, the Divine Current. They are presented in four sequences: Śākta, Śāṁbhava, Āṇava and Nirīha. In each case, lines from the Bṛhadāgama are quoted. For example, after presenting the first of these, the Ṭīkā says:

iti śāktabhedena aṣṭādaśanāthakramaṁ kathitam | tathā bṛhadāgame coktam ājñāsiddhaṁ khecaraṁ ca ity ādi nāthāṣṭādaśakam | tathā tatraivoktam - unmanā ca manonmanā [k kh: manonmā ca] ity ādi aṣṭādaśanāthānāṁ śaktayo hy aṣṭādaśa | eṣāṁ [k kh: eṣā] maṁtrās tatraivoktāḥ |

Ṭ MS K fl. 88b-89a.

– nine for each of the other two lineages - can be learnt from the Bṛhadāgama.[1] Incidentally, we notice that the sets of mantras that make up the Kramas in the Bṛhadāgama are all configured in the same way, namely, 4-5-6-4-5-4. We have seen that this, the Sequence of Twenty-eight (aṣṭāviṁśatikrama), is the configuration of the Krama in the KMT and the ṢSS. So, although the Ṭīkā purports to be a commentary on the MBT, Rūpaśiva chooses this configuration rather than the one of twenty-seven units which is the main one in the MBT.

However close the teachings and actual contents of the Bṛhadāgama may have been to the ṢSS and hence the KMT, it chooses the format of the later recensions of the MBT, as does the Ṭīkā itself, that is, into chapters called *ānanda*s rather than paṭalas as we find in the KMT and ṢSS or the sūtras of the earliest sections of the MBT. It appears therefore that the BṛĀ was an early redaction of the MBT. This differed from the extant MBT as it incorporated a great deal of material from the KMT that it shared in common with the ṢSS.

The opening passage of the Ṭīkā presents the Caturviṁśatisāhasra as the essence of the scriptures. However, it is never mentioned again. Was the Bṛhadāgama yet another text that presented itself as the Caturviṁśatisāhasra? This is unlikely as the Ṭīkā characterizes the Caturviṁśatisāhasra as being composed of sūtras. Rūpaśiva wrote his commentary when the MBT was already well developed, if not completely redacted. The earlier format of the MBT into sūtras had given way to ānandas. This was so prominent in the MSs Rūpaśiva had of the sections of the MBT that he comments on the meaning of the long colophons typical of the MBT and even adopts the same type of colophon for his own work. It appears, therefore, that he wanted to integrate the teachings of the KMT in the extended form found in the ṢSS and the Bṛhadāgama with those of the MBT, although there is relatively little of the latter in his commentary.

The Vyākhyā on the Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā

Rūpaśiva draws much material from the commentary – vyākhyā – on the Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṁhitā. It is indeed a substantial commentary. Although it mostly does little more than order the text of the ṢSS, this is also useful in itself. Moreover, the vyākhyā does occasionally also add details and make independent comments that aid in the understanding of the text. The vyākhyā supplies over

---

[1] The ninefold Krama of the Sequence of the Eldest is (explained) in the Bṛhadāgama. And one should know the ninefold Krama of the Middle Sequence in the same way (there). Thus, in due order, there are twenty-seven Kramas (generated) by the three (main ones) bṛhadāgame [kh: -gamo] jyeṣṭhakramasya kramanavakam ǀ *tathā madhyamakramasya [kh: -kra * sua] kramanavakaṁ jñātavyam* ǀ evaṁ krameṇa [k kh: kramena] ca [kh: va] trikena [kh: tṛkena] saptaviṁśatikramā [k kh: saptā-] bhavanti ǀ Ṭ MS K fl. 64b.

fifty graphic representations of the maṇḍalas described in the ṢSS, which are also very useful. Unfortunately, it makes no reference to the author or any detail that may help us to date it or locate where it was written. All that can said is that it precedes the Ṭīkā.

The Samvartārthaprakāśa

The Saṁvartārthaprakāśa by Mukundarāja is a brief commentary on twelve sūtras and two hymns found in the KuKh. Only two manuscripts have been discovered to date. One is a late Devanāgarī paper manuscript. The other is a fragment of a palm-leaf manuscript that may be as early as the 17th century. In one place Mukundarāja refers to the Mantramahodadhi.[1] The date of completion of the Mantramahodadhi by Mahīdhara is given in the colophon of that work as May 23, 1588 CE,[2] which sets the upper limit for the date of Mukunda's commentary. The contents here and there confirm a relative late date. For example, we find the term pañcamakāra[3] for a set of five sacrificial substances whose names begin with the letter 'M' namely, māṁsa (meat), matsya (fish), madya (wine), mudrā (savoury snacks) and maithuna (the fluids produced by sexual intercourse). The early sources do not refer to this set, although from about the 13th century it became the well known, standard one. Instead we find a set of three (makāratraya). Moreover, Mukundarāja is familiar with the term ṣaṭcakrabheda – 'the piercing of the six Wheels'[4] which is not found in the Kubjikā Tantras or, indeed in Tantric or Kaula texts prior to the 14th century. Finally, although Mukundarāja knows the existence of the symbolic location of the twelve fingers space above the head (dvādaśānta), where the upward movement of Kuṇḍalinī merges into the Transmental, he prefers twice to refer to the culminating point of Kuṇḍalinī's rise as the thousand petal lotus where the teacher is said to reside.[5] In this case also, Mukundarāja shows his preference for a late development in the symbolism of Kuṇḍalinī praxis.

Another indication that this commentary is late is the classification of Kaulism into six Kaula traditions (āmnāya). We have noted elsewhere that we witness the origin and earliest development of this classification in the Kubjikā Tantras. However, in these sources this system of classification does not develop beyond four. The division into six which Mukundarāja adopts is drawn from the Parātantra - a late Tantra of the early period that the Newars of the Kathmandu

---

[1] SamP fl. 16a.

[2] Mahīdhara was a Brahmin from Ahicchatra who moved to Vārāṇasī. He is said to have lived in the temple of Kālabhairava where he wrote the Mantramahodadhi. See Bühnemann 2000: 5-8.

[3] SaṁP fl. 4a, quoted in a note to the translation of KuKh 1/1.

[4] SaṁP fl. 4a.

[5] sahasradale paṁcāśadvarṇānāṁ veṣṭanaṁ smarati | SaṁP fl. 1b.

Valley accept as particularly authoritative.[1] This fact not only suggests the relatively late date of the composition of this commentary, it also gives us a clue as to where it was written. And this is not the only one. Commenting on the Saṁvartāmaṇḍalasūtra with which the KuKh begins, the SaṁP reads kramapadasahitā- instead of kramapadanihitā-.[2] None of the manuscripts of the texts where this sūtra appears (viz. the KMT, ŚM, ṢSS and KuKh) attest this reading. Nonetheless, the version of this sūtra Newar initiates regularly recite in the course of their Kaula rituals generally has this reading. Indeed, Newar initiates are surprised when they are told of the reading found in the manuscripts. Again, we notice that Mukundarāja refers to the goddess Siddhalakṣmī as Siddhilakṣmī,[3] a misnomer Newars have universally adopted. Thus, it appears that Mukundarāja, the author of the SaṁP, was a Newar. Moreover, judging by his second name 'Rāja', he was very probably a learned Rājopādhyāya Brahmin.

Mukundarāja begins with a list of twenty-eight grids (14 prastāras and 14 gahvaras) of letters,[4] followed by a description of the Meruprastāra, which is the most common one.[5] He then extracts letters from the latter to form the Five Praṇavas (fl. 1a-1b). The next topic is the set of Six Wheels in the subtle body, there location, the letters, energies and gods in each one and the six magical acts (ṣaṭkarman) to which they correspond. Mukunda then lists the correspondences between them and the five elements, the shape of each element, part of the physical body and syllables (fl. 1b-2a). Next comes a short section that deals with the most important Yantras i.e. maṇḍalas of the tradition beginning with Kubjikā's maṇḍala, its parts and forms. Other Yantras are those of Aghora, Tripurā,[6] and the Sun (fl. 2a-2b).

Mukundarāja then selects nine sūtras, all of which are found in the KuKh,[7] on which he writes brief commentaries. He lists them in one place where he presents them as belonging to nine successive 'wheels' (cakra), but does not say

---

[1] See intro. vol. 2, p. 347-348; cf. Dyczkowski 1988: 67.
[2] See KuKh 1/1 and SaṁP fl. 3a.
[3] See intro. vol. 2, p. 349.
[4] They are listed by Schoterman 1981: 182. Fifteen prastāras are listed, although there are said to be only fourteen. The scribe seems to have tried to correct the text here by altering the number `14' of the fourteenth entry to `13'. Perhaps `sumeruprastāra', which is entry 12, is spurious (but cf. Schoterman ibid. who suggests a different reason). Schoterman supplies diagrams of such grids and explains how they are drawn in appendix I of his work (ibid. p. 181-209).
[5] Concerning this and other grids, see chapter eight of the KuKh and notes.
[6] This is not the well known Śrīcakra. Mukundarāja says that starting from the point in the centre it consists of a triangle, hexagram, a pair of 10 rays, 14 peaks, then 8 petals, and finally an outer enclosure (bhūpura) with sixteen doors.
tripurāyāḥ bindutrikoṇavasukoṇadaśārayugmacaturdaśaśṛṁgāni tato
'ṣṭadalaṣoḍaśadvārabhūpurayuktam uktam | ibid. fl. 2b
[7] Refer to the concordance for details.

where they are, whether in the body, a maṇḍala or elsewhere.[1] The first three sūtras which, presumably, he considers to be especially important, are treated together as the 'triple sūtra' (trisūtra). The first of these is the Saṁvartāsūtra. He comments on the long (bṛhat) form of the sūtra, which comes at the beginning of the KuKh and is probably drawn from the ṢSS, treating the first part of it as the short version (laghu) with which the KMT begins.[2] His commentary is drawn, as he himself says, from chapter two of the KuKh, which he quotes virtually completely, interspersed here and there with his own remarks (fl. 2b-4b). In the same way he presents the first of the three versions of the Root Sūtra, which is found in chapter 26 of the KuKh (fl. 4b-6a) and then the Santānasūtra, which is chapter 17 of the KuKh (fl. 6a-6b).

After the 'triple sūtra', Mukunda comments on the Mālinīstava (fl. 6b-9a) from chapter four of the KuKh and the Mahāmāyāstava, which is part of chapter twenty-six.[3] Then come the remaining seven sūtras, namely, 1) the Kulāṣṭakasūtra, 2) the Kriyāsūtra, 3) the Sṛṣṭikramasūtra, 4) the Yugāvatārasūtra, 5) the Dhyānasūtra, 6) the Pūjāsūtra and 7) the Pañcapraṇavasūtra.[4] After the sūtras Mukunda goes on to deal with mantras and rituals. He begins with the main mantra, that is, the thirty-two syllable Vidyā of the goddess.[5] Then comes Śabdarāśi.[6] Then he goes back to the Vidyā and the formation of the maṇḍala and its worship[7] and the deposition of the Mālinī alphabet.[8]

Mukundarāja ends by referring to the Mahākālasaṁhitā as his authority for the worship of Ugracaṇḍā and Guhyakālī, the Kālānalatantra for Siddhilakṣmī, the Nityātantra for Tripurā, another part of the MBT and the Mantramahodadhi for the offering of garlands, sacred thread and lamps, and the Rudrayāmala for a rite that frees from a curse (śāpamocana).

The Bhaktibodha

The Bhaktibodha is a commentary on the version of the Mālinīstava found in the KMT. Accordingly, it is also simply called Mālinīṭīkā. Unfortunately, we

---

[1] SaṁP fl. 10b just after the commentary on the Kulāṣṭakasūtra (= KuKh 16/16-23).
[2] Concerning the Saṁvartāsūtra and its two versions, see notes to KuKh 1/1.
[3] SaṁP fl. 9a-9b; KuKh 26/57-95ab.
[4] These are 1) Ibid. fl. 9b-10a; KuKh 16/16-23. 2) Ibid. fl. 10a-10b; KuKh 42/7-13.3) Ibid. fl. 10b-11a; KuKh 42/14-26ab. 4) Ibid. fl. 11a-11b; KuKh 43/3-34. 5) Ibid. fl. 11b-13a; KuKh 49/3cd-68. 6) Ibid. fl. 13a (1)-13b; = KuKh 50/4-35ab. 7) Ibid. fl. 13b (5)-13b (20); KuKh chapter 54.
[5] Ibid. fl. 14a; KuKh 10/11-12.
[6] Ibid. fl. 14b-15a; KuKh 19/1-87.
[7] Ibid. fl 15b-16a (14); KuKh 11/1cd-54ab.
[8] Ibid. fl. 16b-17b (the end); KuKh 18/1-104.

do not know the name of the author, but he too may well have been a Newar Brahmin. The earliest manuscript recovered so far was copied by a certain Nārāyaṇa Jośi in NS 557, that is, 1426 CE[1] and so predates the SaṁP. It was probably not written much before this as we find an allusion in it to the Ten Mahāvidyās.[2] It is not possible to date exactly when this well known grouping of Kaula goddesses first emerged but it may well have been in or after the 14th century. Certainly not much before.[3] The first texts that present this grouping seem to have been from Bengal. It seems that it was there that the Ten Mahāvidyās first became popular. The Kaulas of the Kathmandu Valley, avid as ever to keep up with the developments outside the Valley, were amongst the first to adopt them, although they play a secondary role with respect to the earlier Kaula goddesses.[4] We have seen that they were incorporated into the worship of Kubjikā in the Kubjikopaṇiṣad but this is a relatively late Newar work.[5] They are unknown to the main corpus of the Kubjikā Tantras. Like the SaṁP, the BB contains several references from Tantras that do not belong to the Kubjikā school.[6] Some of these, like the Tripurārṇavatantra, post-date the formation of the Kubjikā corpus. We notice also that the author was well acquainted with a set of Nine Durgās commonly worshipped by Newar initiates,[7] although, it must be admitted, they are not exclusive to them. More specifically, in one place Siddhayogeśvarī is called Siddhiyogeśvarī which reminds us of the Newar transformation of Siddhalakṣmī's name to Siddhilakṣmī.

All that is significant in this short commentary on the Mālinīstava has been incorporated into the notes to its translation in chapter four of our text.

Liturgies

The Nityāhnikatilaka

The Kubjikānityāhnikatilaka – the Most Excellent Ornament of the Daily Rites dedicated to the Goddess Kubjikā – is, as its name suggests, a liturgical

---

[1] NGMPP running MS no. E 38303, reel no. E 2043/1. The folios are numbered from 1 to 13a. Folio 8 is missing. There are six lines per half folio. Although the hand is quite clear, the text is very corrupt. The colophon reads: mālinīdaṇḍakastotrasya bhaktibodhanāmaṭīkā.
[2] See note to line 66 of the Mālinīstava.
[3] According to Pal (1981: 10) there was a 'rapid expansion and popularity of the cult all over India after the fourteenth century.' While this date is possible, we should note that the cult of the Ten Mahāvidyās has never been popular in South India.
[4] See Regmi 1965-1966, volume 2 2: 582 concerning Nepal. For a general discussion see Bühnemann 2000: 38-45.
[5] See above p. 377.
[6] The names of these Tantras and other sources quoted in the BB are listed in vol. 14.
[7] See note to line 78 of the Mālinīstava.

manual of the basic daily rites. Like other texts we have examined this one also extracts the basic liturgy from the Kubjikā Tantras. However, it differs from others in a number of ways. For one thing, this is not a Tantra.

Although Bhairava appears in several places as the speaker thus giving the KnT the veneer of a revealed text, these passages only frame the main body of the text. The KnT is a well laid out liturgy of the daily rite dedicated to the goddess Kubjikā. Although the KnT is a derivative work, it is a precious text. Instead of the dispersed allusive style of the revealed scriptures from which we must struggle to piece together the complete rite, here we find spelled out a basic procedure for the worship of the Kramamaṇḍala and its attendents and the teachers in the Gurumaṇḍala. As such it is an interesting and important work for those who wish to understand these liturgies. The author presents all the mantras in complete and undisguised form. He also supplies numerous details of the rite including how to draw the maṇḍala. Even so, the full procedure, that is, exactly what is done in every detail is not outlined completely. The KnT is similar to the SKh in this respect, although we may say it is a step closer to assuming the format of the standard liturgical manual (paddhati, vidhāna) which ultimately became the de facto scriptures as the fundamental sources of the cult.

The KnT was written by a certain Muktaka who tells us he did this for the benefit of those who belonged to his own clan (gotra), that is, his fellow initiates. He was the disciple of Śrīkaṇṭha[1] his father, about whom, like Muktaka, we know nothing. The teachers worshipped in Gurumaṇḍala are the basic standard sets we find in the MBT, which is a clear sign that it was written after it. The earliest extant manuscript of the KnT recovered so far was copied by a certain Ācārya Harihara for his personal use during the reign of Vijayakāmadeva (c. 1192-1200 CE) in the year NS 317 i.e. 1197 CE,[2] which thus gives us an upper limit for the date of this text.

---

[1] Muktaka, the son of the venerable Śrīkaṇṭha (herein explains) for the benefit those who belong to his own clan what is profound by means of the doctrine along with the teaching (that concerns it). (It is) the supreme teaching, at the end of the supreme beginning with the foundation and ending with what is extremely subtle. I bow to the teacher Śrīkaṇṭha who has explained (this to me) very clearly.

svagotrāṇāṁ hitārthāya [gh: hitāthāya] śrīmacchrīkaṇṭhasūnunā |
muktakena hi [gh: ki] yad gūḍhaṁ [g: gūḍha] sopadeśamatena [k, g: -japena; gh: sopadeśaṁjapena] tu ||
ādhārādisusūkṣmāntaṁ [g, gh: -śūkṣmāntaṁ] parāntaṁ [k: parānta; g: parāt] paranirṇayam [gh: -niṇṇayaṁ] |
kathitaṁ yena suspaṣṭaṁ [gh: suspastaṁ] taṁ śrīkaṇṭhaguruṁ name [k: -gurūttamaṁ; g: --gurottamaḥ] || KnT 1/9-10.

[2] This is NAK MS no. 1-1320 Śaivatantra 97; NGMPP reel no: A 26/10. The colophon reads: śrīmadvijayakāmadevasya rājye samvat 317 vaiśākhapaurṇṇamāsyāṁ ācāryaśrīhariharasya

Newar Liturgies

The Newar initiates of the Kathmandu Valley have worshipped Kubjikā for not less than a thousand years. During this time they have been engaged intensely in Kaula and other rites. For this purpose they have produced a vast number of liturgical works (paddhati). Such texts belong to a distinctive genre of their own. Despite their seeming monotony and lack of abstract intellectual content, they are exceptionally valuable bridges that span the gap between the ideal world of the scriptures and the real one of their application. Through these works, with the help of those who know how to make use of them, we may learn a great deal of the secret culture of Newar Kaulas. Then we will gain detailed knowledge of an example of the living practice of Kaula Tantric cults. By relating the rites, the initiates who perform them and the society in which they live and their history, we will be able to view a social phenomenon that is nowadays virtually unique in South Asia although unfortunately, and inevitably, it is dying out. However, in the past, particularly between the 9th and 13th century, it must have been relatively common, namely, the structuring of a complex and developed medieval society in accord with the principles, liturgical, ethical, cosmological and metaphysical of such cults.

---

nityāhnikatilakaṁ niṣpannam iti śubhaṁ ||